BRITANNIA:

OR, A

CHOROGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION

OF

THE FLOURISHING KINGDOMS OF ENGLAND,

SCOTLAND,

AND

IRELAND,

AND THE ISLANDS ADJACENT;

FROM THE EARLIEST ANTIQUITY.

By WILLIAM CAMDEN.

TRANSLATED FROM

THE EDITION PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHOR IN MDCVII.

ENLARGED BY THE LATEST DISCOVERIES,

By RICHARD GOUGH, F. A. & R. SS.

IN THREE VOLUMES,

ILLUSTRATED WITH

MAPS, AND OTHER COPPER-PLATES.

VOLUME THE SECOND.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY JOHN NICHOLS,

FOR T. RAYNE AND SON, CASTLE-STREET, ST. MARTIN'S, AND G. G. J. AND J. ROBINSON, PATER-NOSTER-ROW.

MDCCLXXXIX.

BRITANNIA:

A CHOROGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION

OF THE

MOST FLOURISHING KINGDOME OF ENGLAND,

SCOTLAND,

AND THE

ILANDS ADJACENT.

FROM THE EXACTEST ANTIQUITY

ILLUSTRATED WITH

MAPS AND OTHER COPPER-PLATES.

ENLARGED BY THE LATEST DISCOVERIES.

THE EDITION PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHOR IN 1637.

TRANSLATED FROM

THE LATIN OF WILLIAM CAMDEN.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY JOHN NICHOLS,

FOR T. PAYNE AND SON, CASTLE STREET, ST. MARTIN'S;

AND RICHARD BALDWIN, PATER-NOSTER-ROW.

MDCCLXXXIX.

CAMBDEN! the Nourice of Antiquity,
And lanthorn unto late ſucceeding age
To ſee the light of ſimple verity
Buried in ruines, through the great outrage
Of her own people, led by warlike rage.
CAMBDEN! though Time all monuments obſcure,
Yet thy juſt labours ever ſhall endure.

SPENCER, Ruines of Time.

CONTENTS of the SECOND Volume.

TRINOBANTES,	1	Middleſex -	2
		Eſſex -	41
ICENI	71	Suffolk -	72
		Norfolk -	93
		Cambridgeſhire -	123
		Huntingdonſhire -	153
CORITANI,	165*	Northamptonſhire	165*
		Leiceſterſhire -	193
		Rutlandſhire -	219
		Lincolnſhire -	223
		Nottinghamſhire -	283
		Derbyſhire -	301
CORNAVII,	327	Warwickſhire -	327
		Worceſterſhire -	351
		Staffordſhire -	375
		Shropſhire -	395*
		Cheſhire -	421
SILURES,	441	Herefordſhire -	441
		South Wales -	465
		Radnorſhire -	465
		Monmouthſhire -	477
		Glamorganſhire -	493
DIMETÆ,	504	Caermarthenſhire -	504
		Pembrokeſhire -	513
		Cardiganſhire -	524
ORDOVICES,	530	North Wales -	530
		Montgomeryſhire -	530
		Merionethſhire -	538
		Caernarvonſhire -	548
		Angleſey -	565
		Denbyſhire -	575
		Flintſhire -	588

A MAP of Middlesex from the best AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

E. Noble delin et caravit.

20 Longitude West from St. Pauls, LONDON 15 10

Scale of Statute Miles 6

WATFORD
Aldingham
Bushey Mill
Bushey
Dell Row
Botteslers Green
Cobden Hill
Bridens Hill
Medbourn
Elstree
Scotch Corner
Grims Ditch
Weald Wood
Bowling Green
Edgeworth Berry
Harrow Weald Common
Hatch End
Stanmore
Bell Mount
Hedston
Whitchurch
Edgeworth
Upper Hall
Green Hill Green
Kenton
Woodcock Hill
Hyde
Hill House
Sudbury
Forty Green
Friant
Cockman Wood
Kingsbury
Oxdalt
Apperton
Yeaden
Shirick Green
Willsdon
Willsdon Green
Horsenden Green
Stonebridge
Wood
Kilburn
Kilburn Abby
Kilburn Wood
Acton Wells
Fryers Place
Bremner
East Acton
Wormwood Common
Acton
Gunnersbury
Shepherds Bush
Paddington
Little Sutton
Chiswick
Brook Green
Hammersmith
North End
Waltham Green
Earls Shern
Putney
Broom House
Fulham
Wandsworth
Wandsworth Common
Clapham
Stockwell
Kent Lane
Loughbor House
Camberwell
Peckham
Batterſea
Lambeth
Newington Butts
Kent Street
Walworth
South Lambeth
Rotherhithe
Deptford
Greenwich
Hamptead House
Park
Nor Dyke
Chapel House
Charlton
Hanging Wood
Woolwich
Warren
Plaſtow
Tour Mills
Poplar
Blackwall Stratford
Bow
Mile End
Bethnal Green
Hackney
Humerton
Horton
Wick House
Temple Mills
Ruckholt Hou.
Leyton
Stone
Leytonſtone
Walthamſtow
Leyton
Borcha House
Maryland Point
Aldersbrook
Chobham
Kain Hall
Cuckow Hall
Manſh Side
Edmonton
Tottenham
Tottenham High Croſs
Tottenham Hale
Stamford Hill
Greens Ferry
Marſh Street
Pottash Houſe
Enfield Wash
Enfield Highway
Green Street
Durance
Scotland Green
Ireland Green
Bury Street
Southgate
Winchmore Hill
Palmers Green
Wood Green
Hornſey
Crouch End
Highgate
Hampſtead
Hampſtead Heath
Upper Holloway
Lower Holloway
Green Street
Devils House
Kentiſh Town
Maiden La.
Primroſe Hill
St Johns Wood
Mother Red Caps
St Pancras
Highbury
Kingſland
Dalſton
Shoreditch
Old Ford
Bethnal Green
Mile End Green
Bancroſts Hoſpital
Queens Mount
Rainer Hill
Womby
Cuckold Point
Deptford Yard
Greenwich Park
Hamptead House

T

To t ant name I da tract lies i ever of G and in a v had their Trinobant people in to a peop Cassibela tection to from Cass plied wit dubratius ference o
in the Br plainly in Britain, neglected
Cunobeli

His so peror Ca island ha temple o territory, to the Fa
the empe
and imm
The Trin
Roman y
the Brita to obtain Ninnius whom Se left his k
the surve

[a] B. G.
[c] The B
[d] As Br
coins one
[e] Mr. C
[g] Claud.

TRINOBANTES.

TO the Cattieuchlani adjoined the people whom Cæſar [a] calls Trinobantes, Ptolemy and Tacitus [b] Trinobantes; in the parts now known by the name of Middleſex and Eſſex. Whence they had their antient name I dare not ſo much as conjecture, unleſs from the Britiſh Tre-nant [c], a town in a valley; for this whole tract lies in a valley on the Thames. But I do not lay any ſtreſs on this conjecture. The inhabitants however of Galway in Scotland, which is full of vallies, were formerly called in Britiſh Noantes and Novantes [d], and in a valley on the Rhine called in French Le Vault antiently lived a nation called the Nantuates, who had their name from their ſituation. So that this conjecture is as plauſible as that which affects to derive the Trinobantes from Troy, q. d. New Troy. But let us leave theſe different opinions to ſupport themſelves: Theſe people in Cæſar's time formed the ſtrongeſt City in theſe parts (for he always gives the name of civitas or city to a people united under the ſame laws), and their king at that time was Imanuentius, who being murdered by Caſſibelan, Mandubratius his ſon ſaved his life by flight, and joining Cæſar in Gaul returned under his protection to Britain. At the ſame time our Trinobantes applied by deputies to Cæſar to defend Mandubratius from Caſſibelan's injuſtice, and ſend him to aſſume the chief authority in their ſtate. Their requeſt being complied with, they gave 40 hoſtages, and were the firſt of the Britans that ſubmitted to the Romans. This Mandubratius by the way is always called Androgeus by Eutropius [e], Bede [f], and later writers. Whence this difference of names ariſes I cannot account for, unleſs the conjecture communicated to me by a perſon well ſkilled in the Britiſh hiſtory and language be true, that the latter name was given him for his crimes and treachery: it plainly implies Guilt, and he is ranked (in the Triades) among the moſt infamous of the Betrayers of Britain, becauſe he firſt called in the Romans, and betrayed his country. After Mandubratius, Britain being neglected by the Romans during the rage of the civil war, and left to its own princes and laws, it appears that Cunobelin was its king, two of whoſe coins are inſerted here, though given before with others. Androgeus. See Plate XVII.

His ſon Adminius being driven out by his father went over with a ſmall party, and ſubmitted to the emperor Caligula, which ſo elated the mind of that young emperor, that he ſent letters to Rome, as if the whole iſland had ſubmitted to him, repeatedly charging the bearers not to deliver them to the Conſuls but in the temple of Mars and a full ſenate. On the death of Cunobelin, Aulus Plautius under Claudius invaded this territory, ſlew Togodumnus one of the ſons of Cunobelin, and defeated Catacratus, over whom, according to the Faſti Capitolini, he obtained the honor of an ovation with ſo much glory, that according to Suetonius [g], the emperor himſelf accompanied him, walking by his ſide, giving him the right hand to and from the capitol; and immediately tranſporting himſelf over with his legions, in a few months reduced the iſland to a province. The Trinobantes had now reſt from war, till in Nero's time they conſpired with the Iceni to ſhake off the Roman yoke: but this inſurrection Suetonius Paulinus ſoon ſuppreſſed with much bloodſhed on the ſide of the Britans, as Tacitus relates [h]. On the decline of the Roman empire in Britain, Vortigern a Britan, in order to obtain his liberty from the Saxons whoſe priſoner he was, gave up to them this territory with others, as Ninnius [i] tells us; and it was long governed by kings of its own, but ſubject to thoſe of Kent, or Mercia; of whom Sebert in 603 firſt embraced Chriſtianity, and Suthred the laſt was conquered by Egbert in 804, and left his kingdom to the Weſt Saxons. But this having been treated of more fully before, let us proceed to the ſurvey of the country.

[a] B. G. V. 20. [b] An. XIV. 31.
[c] The Britans would have ſaid Nant tre, not Tre nant: So Coventre, Braintre, Maintre, and the Durotriges. MS. n. Gale.
[d] As Bricinobantes. Νοουαντ. Νοεαντ. Νεντ. Ima Νουητ. Ανιουιηιου ακρον, The Land's end in Ptolemy. Ib. See among the Britiſh coins one inſcribed TASC. NOVANEI.
[e] Mr. Camden miſtakes Eutropius for Oroſius. See Introd. p. xxviii. n. (E). [f] Ec. Hiſt. I. 2.
[g] Claud. c. 24. [h] ubi ſup. [i] c. 35, 36.

MIDDLESEX.

MIDDLESEX takes its name from the Middle Saxons; the people inhabiting it lying between the Eaſt, Weſt, and South Saxons, and thoſe who were then called Mercians. It is divided from Buckinghamſhire on the weſt by the little river Cole[a]; from Hertfordſhire on the north by a well-known boundary; from Eſſex on the eaſt by the river Lea; from Surrey and Kent on the ſouth by the Thames. The extent is not very great; the greateſt length not exceeding twenty miles, nor the greateſt breadth twelve. The air is extremely mild, and the ſoil very good. It is adorned with a number of handſome villages and ſeats; and contains many things worthy of notice.

Cole r.

Upon the river Cole, where it firſt enters the county, we have Breakeſpear, the antient ſeat of the family of that name, from whom was deſcended Pope Hadrian IV. already mentioned[b]. Then Haresfield, antiently Herefelle, the eſtate of Richard Fitz Gilbert at the Conqueſt. Farther ſouth is Uxbridge[c] a long town of modern date, in which are many inns. Below it Draiton, rebuilt by the lords Paget; Colbam, which came from the lords L'Eſtrange to the earls of Derby; and Stanwell, the ſeat of the Windſor family from the Conqueſt to the laſt generation. Not far from hence the Cole, after forming ſome iſlands, falls with a double mouth into the Thames, of which a modern German poet[d] thus ſings:

Breakſpear. Pope Adrian. IV. Harefield. Uxbridge. Draiton. Colbam. Stanwell.

Tot campos, ſylvas, tot regia tecta, tot hortos
Artifici dextra exultos, tot vidimus arces,
Ut nunc Auſonio Tamiſis cum Tybride certet.

Such fields, ſuch woods, ſuch ſtately piles appear,
Such gardens grace the earth, ſuch turrets pierce the air,
That Thames with Roman Tyber may compare.

Stanes, in Saxon Stana, preſents itſelf firſt on the weſt bank with a wooden bridge over the Thames. It takes its name from a boundary ſtone formerly placed here to mark the juriſdiction of the city of London over the river. Near this ſtone is the famous Runningmead, commonly called Renimed, where the barons of England aſſembled in a body 1215 to demand their liberties of king John. Of which take theſe lines from the marriage of the Thame and Iſis, applied to the former river as it paſſes by this place:

Stanes. Runningmead.

Subluit hic pratum quod dixit Renimed Anglus,
Quo ſedere duces armis anniſque verendi,
Regis Joannis cuperent qui vertere ſceptrum,
Edwardi ſancti dum leges juraque vellent
Principe contempto tenebroſo è carcere duci.
Hinc ſonuere tubæ pluſquam civilia bella;
Venit & hinc refugus noſtras Lodovicus in oras.

Next on its banks fam'd Renimed appears,
Where met the chiefs renowned for arms and years
In ſolemn league t' oppoſe a tyrant's power,
And Holy Edward's ſlighted laws reſtore.
To more than civil wars their trumpets ſound;
And here the Prince of France protection found.

Thence the river paſſes by Cowy ſtakes to Lalam, where, as we before obſerved*, Cæſar croſſed the Thames, the Britans having fortified the bank and ford with ſtakes, whence the name. From hence it flows under Harrow, a high hill in this part, ſouth of which is a long tract of rich land, particularly about the village of Heſton, the excellent wheat of which has been long eſteemed by our princes for bread. Not far from this is Hanworth, where is a ſmall royal ſeat which Henry VIII. took great delight in, and made the ſcene of his pleaſures. Afterwards it paſſes the palace of Hampton-court built with admirable magnificence by Cardinal Wolſey for the diſplay of his wealth, when that otherwiſe moſt prudent prelate loſt the command of himſelf through pride. It was enlarged and finiſhed by Henry VIII. and conſiſts of five large courts built in the moſt elegant manner. Of which Leland[e]:

Cowey Stakes. Lalam. Harrow. Heſton. Hanworth. Hampton Court.

Eſt locus inſolito rerum ſplendore ſuperbus,
Alluiturque vaga Tamiſini fluminis unda;
Nomine ab antiquo jam tempore dictus Avona;
Hic rex Henricus tales Octavius ædes
Erexit, quales toto ſol aureus orbe
Non vidit ——— ———

Where father Thames his gentle ſtream rolls on,
Avona called, an antient name it bears,
Here the eighth Henry ſuch a palace rears
The ſun ne'er ſaw its peer in all his courſe.

and in the marriage of Thame and Iſis:

Alluit Hamptonam, celebris quæ laxior urbis
Mentitus formam ſpatiis: hanc condidit aulam
Purpureus pater ille gravis, gravis ille ſacerdos
Wolſæus, fortuna favos cui felle repletos
Obtulit; heu tandem fortunæ dona, dolores.

Then Thames to Hampton runs, whoſe ſtately ſpace
A city ſeems. The founder of the place
Was mitred Wolſey, great ill-fated prieſt
For whom his fate prepared a honied feaſt
Mingled with gall. Such were her treacherous gifts.

The river here takes a large turn to the north by Giſtleworth, as it was antiently called, now Thiſtleworth, where was a palace of Richard king of the Romans and earl of Cornwall burnt by the ſeditious Londoners.

Thiſtleworth.

Then we ſee Sion, a little monaſtery, called after the holy mount of that name, which Henry V. when he drove out the alien monks, built for the nuns of St. Bridget, as he did another called Bethlem on the oppoſite

Sion. Shen.

* Art. Romans in Britain, p. xxvii.

[a] which the Britans call Co. Holland.
[b] See Hertfordſhire, 1. p. 339.
[c] Antiently Woxbridge. Holland.
[d]
[e]

poſite bank for the Carthuſians. In this houſe of Sion be placed to the glory of God as many virgins, prieſts, and lay brethren, in ſeparate cells, as there were Apoſtles and Diſciples of Chriſt, and having ſecured to them a very ample revenue, enjoined them by an expreſs order to receive nothing from any other hands, and to give to the poor the ſurplus of their yearly income. But within memory the religious were turned out, and the ſite given to the duke of Somerſet, who pulled down the church, and began a houſe there. Adjoining to this is Brentford, which takes its name from the little river Brent, on which in 1016 [f], Edmund Ironſide ſo warmly attacked the Danes, whom he had forced to raiſe the ſiege of London, that they fled in diſorder, with great loſs. From hence to Staines, the tract which lies between the high road by Hounſlow and the Thames was called the Foreſt or Warren of Staines, till Henry III. as appears by his charter, diſforeſted and diſwarrened it. Next appears Fulham, Saxon Fullonham, or the houſe of fowls, to which the biſhop of London's country houſe [g] is no ſmall ornament. And Chelſey, called from the bed of ſand in the Thames, adorned with noble houſes by Henry VIII. William Powlet firſt marquis of Wincheſter, and others.

LONDON. But among all theſe LONDON, the epitome of Britain, the ſeat of the Britiſh empire, and the RESIDENCE [h] of the kings of England, rears its head like a cypreſs among the buſhes, as Virgil [i] ſays. Tacitus [k], Ptolemy, and Antoninus call it LONDINIUM and LONGIDINIUM [l]; Ammianus [m], Lundinum, and Auguſta, Stephanus [n] Λινδονιον, our Welſh neighbours Lundayn [o], our Saxon anceſtors Lonben-ceaſtep [p], Lunden-byrig, Lunden-pyc [q], foreigners Londra and Londres, the inhabitants London, fabulous writers Troja Nova, Dinas Belin, or Belin's City, and Caer Ludd from king Ludd, who they pretend built it, and called it after his own name. But theſe later names and originals, with Eraſmus's [r] conjecture deducing it from Lindus a city of Rhodes, I leave to British towns. ſuch as are fond of them. For myſelf, as Cæſar [s] and Strabo [t] expreſsly ſay that the Britans gave the name of cities or towns to woods and groves fortified by trees which they had cut down, and I am informed that groves in the Britiſh language are called Lhwn, I am almoſt inclined to think London had its name from thence, as the city by way of eminence, or the city in the grove. If I am miſtaken in this conjecture, may I be allowed, without the charge of fickleneſs, to hazard another; that it derived its name as well as its glory from its ſhips, which the Britans call Lhong, as much as to ſay the port or city of ſhips. Dinas. The Britans call a city Dinas, whence the Latin Dinum is formed. Hence it is ſometimes called Longidinum, and in the ſong of a very old Britiſh bard Lhongporth, the port of ſhips, and by the ſame name Boulogne in France, which Ptolemy calls Geſſoriacum navale, is called in a Britiſh gloſſary Bolung Lhong. Many cities took their names from ſhips, as Naupactus, Nauſtathmus, Nauplia, Navalia Auguſti; but none have a better title to ſuch name than our London; a city moſt happily ſituated with reſpect to both elements, in a rich and plenteous ſoil, on a gently riſing hill on the ſide of the Thames, that eaſy conveyor of the commerce of the world, which ſwelled by the regular tides of the ocean in its ſafe and deep channel admitting the largeſt veſſels, brings in daily ſo much wealth from the eaſt and weſt, that it may at this time claim the prize from the Chriſtian world, and affords ſo ſecure as well as convenient a ſituation for ſhips that it may be ſtyled a foreſt of maſts and a thicket of ſails.

The founder is loſt in antiquity; and indeed few cities know their founders, ſo inconſiderable their originals and gradual their riſe. But this like others lays claim to a fabulous derivation from the Trojans, and believes Brute, the great ſon of the great Æneas, to have been its founder. Whoever founded it, its fortune ſhews it to have been founded with a fortunate omen [u]; and its eminent antiquity appears from Ammianus Marcellinus [x], who calls it in his time, which is 1200 years ago, an antient city, to whom we may add Tacitus [y], who ſays it was diſtinguiſhed by its trade and the great reſort of merchants to it in Nero's time. This only was wanting to complete its glory, that it had not the title of a Municipium or Colony. Nor was it the intereſt of Rome that a mercantile city ſhould have the privileges of either. Wherefore I imagine it to have been a Præfectura, which was the name given to cities where Præfectura. fairs were held and juſtice adminiſtered; not by magiſtrates of their own, but by prefects ſent thither yearly for that purpoſe, ſubject in the articles of taxes, tributes, tolls, military ſervice, &c. to the ſenate of Rome. For this reaſon London is called only oppidum by Tacitus [z], by the panegyriſt [*], and by Marcellinus [b]. But though its rank was no higher, it was extenſive, rich, and flouriſhing during almoſt the whole of its continuance under the Roman, Saxon, and Norman government, and involved in ſcarce any calamities. In the reign of Nero when the Britans formed a deſign to recover their liberties under Boodicia, the inhabitants of London by all their intreaties and tears could not prevail on Suetonius Paulinus to continue with them; but taking the citizens to his aſſiſtance he marched off, and left the city defenceleſs to the enemy, who preſently maſtered the few whom the infirmities of ſex or age, or an attachment to the place kept there. Nor would it have ſuffered leſs from the Francs, had it not been for the ſudden interpoſition of providence. For C. Carauſius. after Allectus had treacherouſly taken off Carauſius the Menapian, who favoured by the ſtormineſs of our ocean, and the difficult wars in which Diocletian was engaged in the eaſt, and ſupported by the bravery of his ſailors, poſſeſſed himſelf of the revenues of Britain and Batavia, and bore the title of Auguſtus, as his coins frequently diſcovered here ſhew; and when Allectus himſelf three years after his uſurpation was ſlain in battle by Aſclepiodotus, the Francs who The Francs ſlain. ſurvived that action flocking to London would have plundered that city, had not the Thames, which never failed the inhabitants, opportunely brought ſome Roman ſoldiers who had been parted from the

[*] See the panegyric delivered to Conſtantius Cæſar and falſely inſcribed to Maximian.

[f] Sax. Chron. p. 149. [g] ſtanding there conveniently not far from the city albeit not ſo healthfully. Holland.
[h] Camera. [i] Ecl. I. 26. inter viburna cupreſſus
[k] An. XIII. 33. [l] Anton. MS. Neapolit. [m] XXVIII. 3. Londinium XX. 1. XXVII. 8.
[n] in voc. [o] Ninnius, Carr. Lundain. [p] Bede II. 34. 7. Londonia. Alfred's tranſl. Lundenceaſtre.
[q] Lunbene, Lunbone, Lundunes, Lunbenburh. Sax. Chron. paſſim.
[r] Adag. p. m. 623. I. [s] B. G. V. 21 [t] IV.
[u] vitali genio.—marked for life and long continuance. Holland. [x] XXVII. c. 18. [y] An. XIV. 13.
[z] Ubi ſup. [a] Eumenius to Conſtantius, c. 17. [b] XXVII. 18.

fleet at ſea in a fog; and who by putting the barbarians to the ſword not only ſaved the citizens, but gave them the pleaſing ſight of the deſtruction of their enemies. On this occaſion our chronicles ſay L. Gallus was ſlain at the brook which run almoſt through the middle of the city, and from him took the name of Nantgall in Britiſh and Walbrook in Engliſh, which name ſtill remains in the ſtreet, under which I am told is a ſewer to carry off the filth.

London ſtone, a milliary.

It is not far from the ſtone called London ſtone, which from its ſituation in the centre of the longeſt diameter of the city, I take to have been a miliary[c], like that in the forum at Rome, from whence all the diſtances were meaſured. Hitherto I do not believe our city was walled round. Soon after this our hiſtories ſay Conſtantine the Great, at the requeſt of his mother Helena*, firſt incloſed the city with a wall of hewn ſtone and Britiſh brick, about three miles in circuit, ſo as to make the form of the city a ſquare, not exactly equilateral, the ſides from eaſt to weſt being longer than thoſe from north to ſouth. That part of theſe walls which run along the river has been waſhed away. Fitz-Stephen, who lived in Henry II's time, tells us ſome traces were then to be ſeen. The reſt remains firmer towards the north, which not many years ago (1474) was repaired by Joceline, then mayor, and aſſumed as it were a ſecond youth. On the eaſt and weſt, though repaired by the barons in their wars with the materials of the Jews houſes, all is ruinous and decaying. For the Londoners, like the Lacedæmonians of old, deſpiſe fortified cities as fit only for women to live in, and think their city ſufficiently defended by men inſtead of walls. It is entered by ſeven principal gates (not to mention ſmaller ones) which on their repair had new names given them. To the weſt are two; Ludgate, from king Ludd, or Fludgate as Leland[d] thinks from the rivulet (as the porta Fluentana at Rome), lately rebuilt from the ground; and Newgate the moſt beautiful of all, ſo called from its Newneſs, formerly Chamberlain gate, which is the public gaol. To the north four: Alderſgate from its antiquity, or according to ſome from Aldric the Saxon; Creplegate, from an adjoining hoſpital for cripples; Moregate, from the neighbouring moor, now converted into a field and pleaſant walks, firſt built by Francer[e], who was mayor in 1414: Biſhopſgate, from the biſhop: this laſt gate the German merchants of the Hanſeatic league, were, as I am informed, bound to keep up, and in troubleſome times to defend. To the eaſt is only Aldgate, ſo called from its antiquity, or as ſome think Elbegate. It is thought there were two gates to the river beſides that on the bridge; Belingſgate, now a wharf, and Dourgate (vulgarly Dowgate) or the Water gate.

The Walls.

Ludgate. 1586.

Newgate.

Alderſgate. Creplegate. Moregate. Biſhopſgate. Aldgate. Belingsgate. Dowgate.

At the extremities of the wall, next the river, were two ſtrong fortreſſes, one of which at the eaſt ſtill remains, commonly called the Tower of London; in Britiſh, from its whiteneſs, Brin-gwin and Tower-gwin; a noble citadel, encompaſſed with an extenſive wall, with lofty towers, a rampart and wide ditch, a noble armoury, and ſeveral houſes like a town; and we may eaſily conceive that the two caſtles mentioned by Fitz-Stephen in this eaſt part of the city are united in this. On the weſt ſide was another fortreſs where falls into the Thames the little river Flete (whence Fleet-ſtreet) now inconſiderable, formerly, as I find in the Parliament rolls, navigable. This fortreſs Fitz Stephen calls arx palatina, and ſays it was burnt in the reign of William I. Of its ruins was built great part of St. Paul's cathedral, and on the very ſite a houſe of Dominicans (now called Blackfriars) by Robert Kilwarby, archbiſhop of Canterbury, whence one may form an idea of its extent. In this place under Henry II. were, as Gervaſe of Tilbury in his Otia Imperialia ſays, "Perga-" "ma[f], or caſtles fortified with walls and earth-works; "one the inheritance of Baynard, and the other "of the barons Montfichet." Nothing now remains of either: but ſome ſuppoſe Pembroke houſe to have been part of them, ſtill called Baynard's caſtle, from William Baynard, a nobleman, lord of Dunmow, its antient maſter, whoſe ſucceſſors the Fitz-Walters were hereditary ſtandard-bearers of London.

The Tower.

Flete river.

Baynard's caſtle.

Nor was the city only fortified at this time: but upon the removal of the Flamen, and eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity under that excellent emperor, a biſhop[g] was ſettled here. It is certain the biſhop of London aſſiſted at the council of Arles†, held in 314 under Conſtantine the Great. In the firſt volume of the councils is this ſubſcription; Ex provincia Britanniæ, civitate Londinenſi RESTITVS[h] epiſcopus, whom, with his ſucceſſors, ſome affirm to have reſided at St. Peter's, Cornhill. Afterwards London attained to ſo much dignity as to be called Auguſta, and diſtinguiſhed by that name under Valentinian. So Ammianus Marcellinus B. XXVII[i], "in his way to London, an antient city called in later times Auguſta;" and B. XXVIII[k], "he went from Auguſta, antiently called London." Hence upon the eſtabliſhment of a mint here in the time of Conſtantine the Great (on whoſe coin ſtruck in honor of his father Conſtantius, and on others, occurs P. LON. S. i. e. Pecunia Londini ſignata) the officer who had the management of it under the Comes ſacrarum largitionum is called in the Notitia Præpoſitus theſaurorum Auguſtenſium in Britannia. This name Auguſta expreſſes great dignity and majeſty: for the founders or reſtorers of cities, when they hoped or wiſhed they might prove powerful, flouriſhing, and eminent, gave them auſpicious names. And of theſe none was more glorious or auſpicious than Auguſta. For that excellent and great emperor Octavianus, with the concurrence of the moſt learned perſonages of his time, aſſumed the title of Auguſtus. "He was ſur-"named Auguſtus," ſays Dio[l], "as if he were "more than man: for the moſt honorable and more "ſacred things are called Auguſt." Nor was this name given to London without leave of the Roman emperors, a cuſtom alluded to by Virgil[m]:

Urbem appellabant, permiſſo nomine, Aceſtam.

The biſhopric

Auguſta a name of great honour.

* Coins of Helena frequently found under the walls.
† Of this council ſee Baronius.
[c] This is confirmed by the diſcovery of the Roman road after the fire 1666, running directly to this ſtone through Watling ſtreet.
[d] Com. in Cygn. Cant. v. Fluctus.
[e] Francerius Falconer. Holland. Sir Thomas Falconer. Stowe.
[f] Q. Burgennys.
[g] An archbiſhop. Godw. 169. 170. Conc. Reg. II. p. 33.
[h] Reſtitus if a real perſon was a reſpectable one, for he was not only married himſelf, but brought over a decree of that council allowing deacons to marry.
[i] c. 8. [k] c. 3. [l] LIII. c. 16. [m] En. V. 718.

But time having ſunk this honourable name has confirmed the older name of London. While it had the former, it narrowly eſcaped being pillaged by a ſeditious ſet of banditti: but Theodoſius, father of the emperor of that name, fell on them encumbered with their booty, and put them to the ſword, and entered the city juſt before involved in diſtreſs in a kind of triumph, ſays Marcellinus[n]. On his departure thence he reſcued Britain from the moſt complicated calamities with ſo much bravery, that the Romans, ſays Symmachus[o], "placed the ſtatue "of the Britiſh general on horſeback, among their "antient worthies." Not long after on the decline of the Roman power in Britain this city according to the fate of the whole iſland fell under the dominion of the Saxons, but in what manner hiſtorians do not relate. I am apt to think Vortigern gave it up to Hengiſt to procure his own liberty; it being in the territory of the Eaſt Saxons, which hiſtorians agree was ſurrendered to Hengiſt by Vortigern on that condition. At this time the church alſo ſuffered dreadful calamities, the paſtors being put to death or baniſhed, the flocks diſperſed, and all the wealth, whether ſacred or profane, carried off. Theonus, laſt Britiſh biſhop of London, concealed the reliques of the Saints, ſays my author[p], not with a ſuperſtitious view, but merely to preſerve the remembrance thereof. But though the confuſions of the Saxon age were ſuch that one might ſtrictly ſay Mars himſelf headed their armies, London was ſtill, according to Bede[q], a mart to many nations who reſorted thither by ſea or land. When the gentle gale of peace breathed on this harraſſed iſland, and the Saxons began to embrace Chriſtianity, it flouriſhed with renewed ſplendor. Æthelbert, king of Kent, (under whoſe favour Sebert reigned here) built a church in honour of St. Paul, which being afterwards rebuilt became a great and magnificent ſtructure, ſo well endowed that it ſupported beſides a biſhop, a dean, præcentor, chancellor, treaſurer, five archdeacons, 30 prebendaries, and others. The eaſt part of this church, which ſeems of later date, and in a richer ſtyle, having a beautiful vault ſerving as the church of St. Faith, was built with the materials of the Arx palatina beforementioned by biſhop Maurice, having been before deſtroyed by fire. Of it Malmſbury[r] gives this account: "Such is the beautifull magnificence of this "ſtructure that it deſerves a place among the moſt "famous: ſuch a ſpaciouſneſs of its crypt, ſuch the "extent of the upper building that it ſeems capable "of admitting the greateſt concourſe of people. "Maurice being a prelate of an enlarged ſoul[s] be"gan an elaborate and coſtly pile for poſterity to "finiſh. His ſucceſſor Richard though he appro"priated all the revenues of the ſee to the work, "maintaining himſelf and his brethren by other "means, ſeemed to have done almoſt nothing; his "whole revenue being laviſhed upon it to little "purpoſe." The weſt part as well as the tranſept is ſpacious, having a beautiful and lofty ſtone roof reſting on maſſive pillars. In the centre of the croſs riſes a lofty tower, on which was a ſpire covered with lead to an immenſe height, not leſs than 534 feet from the ground, which in 1087 attracted the lightning, and was conſumed, to the great damage of the city; but was repaired again; and being fired in the ſame manner a ſecond time, when I was a boy; 1561.
it is not yet rebuilt. I ſhall preſent the reader with the following meaſures of this magnificent pile from a very antient author[t]: Length 690 feet; breadth 130 feet; height of the nave from the ground 102 feet; of the roof of the new part from the ground 88 feet; of the ſtone tower 260 feet; of the wood work on it 274 feet, &c.

Some have imagined a temple of Diana formerly ſtood here, and their conjectures are not unſupported. The neighbouring old buildings are called in the church records Camera Dianae, and in the reign of Edward I. were dug up in the church-yard, according to our chronicles, an incredible number of ox heads, which were beheld by the multitude with aſtoniſhment as remains of heathen ſacrifices: and it is well known to the learned that Taurobolia were celebrated in honour of Diana[u]. When I was a boy I have ſeen the head of a buck fixed on a ſpear (which ſeems to agree with the ſacrifices of Diana) carried about with great pomp and blowing of horns within the church. And that buck which the family of Bawd in Eſſex uſed to give for certain lands held by them, was, as I am informed, received on the ſteps of the choir by the clergy of this church in their copes with garlands on their heads. Whether this was practiſed before that family's tenure commenced I know not: the cuſtom certainly ſavours more of the worſhip of Diana and heatheniſm than of Chriſtianity. There is no doubt that ſome heathen ceremonies were admitted and tolerated by the firſt Chriſtians, from the propenſity in mankind to ſuperſtition, or to allure the Gentiles to the true religion. Temple of Diana.

From the time this church was built it became the ſeat of the biſhops of London, of whom the firſt under the Saxons (50 years after the depoſition of Theonus the Britan) was Melitus, a Roman, conſecrated by Auſtin, archbiſhop of Canterbury, in honour of which Auſtin, contrary to the injunction of Pope Gregory, the pall and metropolitical ſee was transferred from London to Canterbury. In this church (beſides St. Erkenwald and the biſhops) is buried Sebba king of the Eaſt Saxons, who about 680 reſigned his crown to devote himſelf to the ſervice of Chriſt: Ethelred or Egelred, who "may be ſaid rather to 1016.
have oppreſſed than governed this kingdom, cruel in the beginning, miſerable in the middle, infamous in the end, of his reign; inhuman in the parricide committed by his connivance, infamous for his abdication and debauchery, and wretched in his death[x]:" Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter, Simon Burley, an illuſtrious knight[y], John de Beauchamp warden of the cinque ports, J[ohn Nevil] lord Latimer, ſir John Maſon, William Herbert earl of Pembroke, Nicholas Bacon lord keeper of the great ſeal, a perſon of profound wiſdom and experienced judgment, Philip Sidney, Francis Walſingham, illuſtrious knights, &c. and Chriſtopher Hatton high chancellor of England, to whoſe ſacred

[n] XXVII. c. 8. [o] mentis immodicus. [p] Math. Weſtm. p 199. [q] H. E. II. 3. [r] De geſt. pont. II. 134, 135. [t] Cont. Math. Weſtm. MS. pen. J. Waræum, eq. aur. Dugd. St. Paul's, p. 15.
[u] Selden refutes all this from the ox heads found here. Syned. Ebr. III. c. 14. § 9.
[x] Malmeſb. de geſt. reg. II. c. 10. p. 34. b.
[y] A right noble knight of the garter executed by encroached authority without the king's conſent. Holland.

and immortal memory William Hatton his nephew, of the antient family of Newport, which he united to his own, dutifully erected a noble monument worthy ſo great a character.

Beſides this building I know of no other Saxon work in London. For the peace had not continued long before the Weſt Saxons overthrew the Eaſt Saxon power, and London fell into the hands of the Mercians. Scarce had the inteſtine commotions ceaſed when a new ſtorm broke in from the north: I mean the Danes, who ravaged this kingdom in a miſerable manner, and gave a terrible blow to this city. They had even made themſelves maſters of it; but Alfred retook it, and having repaired it, gave it to his ſon in law Ethelred earl of Mercia. The invaders attempted more than once to retake it, eſpecially Canute, who endeavoured to turn the Thames into another channel; but they were always diſappointed and repulſed by the valour of the citizens. They occaſioned, however, no ſmall alarm to the Londoners, till they gladly received and acknowledged William the Conqueror, whom Providence ordained to the throne of England. The ſtorm was now laid, the clouds diſperſed, and a golden age began to dawn. This city experienced no remarkable calamity, and having by the favour of the ſeveral princes obtained conſiderable privileges, began to be called the King's Chamber, and its trade flouriſhed ſo much that William of Malmſbury [z] who lived near this time calls it "a noble opulent city, proud of the wealth of "its inhabitants, and reſorted to by merchants of "all nations;" and Fitz-Stephen who lived in that age, ſays, at that time London had 122 parochial and 13 conventual churches, and upon a review of the military could raiſe 40,000 foot and 20,000 horſe. The houſes then began to increaſe, and the ſuburbs to extend themſelves, eſpecially to the weſt, where they are moſt conſiderable, in which are 12 buildings called Inns, appropriated to the ſtudy of our common law, of which the four larger and handſomer belong to the courts of common law, the reſt to Chancery. In theſe ſo many young gentlemen of good family apply themſelves to the ſtudy of the law, that neither Ghent, Caen, nor Orange, can boaſt a greater number of ſtudents, if we may believe ſir John Forteſcue in his treatiſe on the laws of England. Theſe four principal ones are the Inner and Middle Temples, Gray's inn, and Lincoln's inn. The two former occupy the ſpot where formerly in the reign of Henry II. Heraclius, patriarch of Jeruſalem, dedicated a church for the Knights Templars, which they had built after the model of the church of the holy ſepulchre at Jeruſalem. For they lived in that part of the temple which joined to the ſepulchre, whence they had their name, having vowed to defend the Chriſtian religion and the pilgrims that viſited the holy ſepulchre againſt the Mahometans. On this account they were gratefully rewarded by all, and by the bounty of princes became poſſeſſors of large revenues and eſtates in all nations, and maintained a great character for piety. Many of the nobility were buried among them, whoſe ſtatues are ſtill to be ſeen in this temple croſs legged, as were all who at that time engaged in the cruſade, or as the phraſe was, took up the croſs. Of theſe were William and his ſons William and Gilbert, all marſhalls of England and earls of Pembroke. On one of the tombs I have read this inſcription [a] in letters almoſt effaced, Comes Penbrochiæ, and at the ſides,

Miles eram Martis; Mars multos vicerat armis.

But [b], in 1312, this order was accuſed of impiety, and by the Pope's authority utterly aboliſhed, and their eſtates given by parliament * to the knights hoſpitalars of St. John of Jeruſalem, that what was bequeathed to pious uſes might not be miſapplied to others contrary to the intention of the donors. It appears, however, from records, that this place after the Templars were turned out was the ſeat of Thomas earl of Lancaſter, and of Spenſer the favourite of Edward II. afterwards of Audomar de Valence earl of Pembroke, and laſtly converted into two ſocieties of lawyers. Of the others I have read nothing. It is reported one was the houſe of the lords Grey [c], the other of the earls of Lincoln [d].

Near theſe between the Old and New Temple Henry III. eſtabliſhed the Houſe of Converts, for the maintenance of thoſe who might be converted from Judaiſm to Chriſtianity. Edward III. afterwards made it a repoſitory of records, whence it is now called The Rolls. The Rolls.

This ſuburb is continued to Weſtminſter by a row of buildings and magnificent houſes of the nobility on the Thames ſide. The moſt remarkable of theſe buildings is Bridewell, where Henry VIII. built a palace to entertain the emperor Charles V. now an houſe of correction; Buckhurſt houſe [e], once the ſeat of the biſhops of Saliſbury, the houſe of Carmelites [f], the Temples abovementioned [g], Eſſex houſe, built by lord Paget, Arundel houſe [h], Somerſet houſe, built by Seymor duke of Somerſet, and to mention no more, the Savoy, ſo called from Peter earl of Savoy who lived in it, purchaſed of the brethren of Mountjoy by Eleanor, wife of Henry III. and given to her ſon Edmond earl of Lancaſter, of whoſe deſcendants it was long the ſeat till Henry VII. dedicated it to the ſervice of the poor. Durham houſe, built by Anthony Bek, biſhop of Durham and patriarch of Jeruſalem, and York houſe as now called, formerly Bath houſe. But why do I name theſe which have changed their owners as fortune has diſpoſed of them? Εισιν ολως ουδενος αλλα τυχης. Bridewell. Buckhurſt houſe. The Carmelites. The Temples. Eſſex houſe. Arundel houſe. Somerſet houſe. The Savoy. Durham houſe. York or Bath houſe.

To this ſuburb adjoins Weſtminſter, once above a mile diſtant, now joining to London ſo as to ſeem part of it, though it is a city itſelf, governed by its own magiſtrates and laws. It was antiently called Thorney from the thorns which over-run it, now Weſtminſter from its weſterly ſituation and minſter. It is emi- Weſtminſter. Thorney.

Inns of Court.

The Temple, formerly called the New Temple: the Old Temple, where now Southampton houſe is in Holborn.

Templars.

* Statute concerning the eſtates of the Templars, 17 Edward II.

[z] De geſt. Part II. 133.

[a] On William the elder's tomb I have ſome years ſince read in the upper part, Comes Pembrochiæ, and on the ſide this verſe, Miles, &c. Holland.

[b] In proceſs of time when, with inſatiable greedineſs they had hoarded great wealth by withdrawing tithes from churches, appropriating ſpiritual livings to themſelves, and other hard means, their riches turned to their ruin, for thereby their former piety was in a manner ſtifled, they fell at jar with other religious orders, their profeſſed obedience to the patriarch of Jeruſalem was rejected, envy among the common ſort was procured, which hope of gain among the better ſort ſo enkindled that, &c. Holland.

[c] of Wilton. Holland.

[d] Built by Lacy earl of Lincoln before-mentioned. The gate was rebuilt by ſir Thomas Lovel t. Henry VIII. His arms and thoſe of Lacy, earl of Lincoln, are over the gate. Stowe.

[e] or Saliſbury court. Holland.

[f] or White Friars. Ib.

[g] Without the barrs. Ib.

[h] before called Hampton place. Ib.

nently diſtinguiſhed by this church, the hall of juſtice, and the king's palace. The church is famous for being the place where the kings of England are crowned and buried. Sulcardus[i] ſays a temple of Apollo formerly ſtood there till thrown down by an earthquake in the time of Antoninus Pius; from whoſe ruins Sebert king of the Eaſt Saxons raiſed a church to St. Peter, which being ruined by the Danes was repaired, and given to a few monks by biſhop Dunſtan. Afterwards Edward the Confeſſor choſe it for his burial-place, and ſettled here a ſociety of Benedictines, whom he endowed with the tithe of all his revenue, and with eſtates in different parts throughout England. But hear a contempory hiſtorian[k]: "This devout prince dedicated to God this ſpot in "the neighbourhood of a famous and wealthy city, "pleaſant by the ſurrounding rich lands and paſ- "tures, and the vicinity of the principal river, which "brought the merchandizes of the whole world "into the adjoining city, but more eſpecially from "his regard to the chief of the apoſtles, whom he "worſhipped with a paſſionate and ſingular devotion, "he choſe there his place of burial, and commanded "to be begun with the tithe of his revenue a noble "ſtructure worthy the chief of the apoſtles, to ſecure "his interceſſion when this mortal life was ended, "both on account of his piety, and the endowment "of lands and ornaments which he deſigned to in- "rich the place with. Agreeable to the king's com- "mand the work begun ſo nobly proceeds ſucceſs- "fully, without regard to expence preſent or future, "ſo it might be rendered worthy of and acceptable "to God and St. Peter." Take the form of the antient building as then deſcribed in an old MS.[l] "The principal area or nave of the church ſtood on "lofty arches of hewn ſtone, jointed together in the "niceſt manner, and the vault was covered with a "ſtrong double arched roof of ſtone on both ſides. "The croſs which embraced the choir, and by its "tranſept ſupported a high tower in the middle, "riſes firſt with a low ſtrong arch, and then ſwells "out with ſeveral winding ſtaircaſes to the ſingle "wall up to the wooden roof, which is carefully co- "vered with lead." Henry III. 160 years after took down this fabric of Edward's, and erected a new church in a beautiful ſtyle, with a great number of marble pillars and a roof covered with lead, which was 50 years in building, and received great enlargement on the weſt from the abbots. Henry VII. added at the eaſt end for a burying-place for himſelf and family, a moſt elegant chapel, called by Leland[m] the wonder of the world, in which every ſpecies of elegance ſeemed united, and in which is his noble large tomb of ſolid braſs. When the monks were turned out this place underwent a variety of revolutions. Firſt it had a dean and prebendaries, then one ſingle biſhop Thomas Thirlby, who after he had ſpent the revenues of the church reſigned it to the dean[n]. Soon[o] after queen Mary reſtored the abbot and monks, who being again removed by act of parliament, our moſt gracious queen now on the throne made it[p] a collegiate church, or rather a ſeminary for the church; for ſhe ſettled 12 prebendaries, as many decayed knights, and 40 ſcholars, called Queen's ſcholars, to be elected from time to time to the univerſities, and thence advanced in church and ſtate: over all theſe was appointed a dean, which office was lately held with the higheſt credit by the excellent and worthy Dr. Gabriel Goodman, the kind patron of my ſtudies.

In this church, to recite them according to their rank and the time of their death, lie buried SEBERT firſt king of the Eaſt Saxons, HAROLD the Baſtard, ſon of Canute the Dane and king of England, St. EDWARD king and Confeſſor, and his wife Editha, Maud, wife of Henry I. daughter of Malcolm king of Scotland, HENRY III. and EDWARD I. his ſon. Eleanor daughter of Ferdinand III. king of Caſtile and Leon, his wife; King EDWARD III. and Philippa of Hainault his conſort; RICHARD II. and his conſort Anne, ſiſter of the emperor Wenceſlaus; HENRY V. and his wife Catharine daughter of Charles VI. king of France; Anne wife of Richard III. daughter of Richard Nevill earl of Warwick; HENRY VII. and his wife Elizabeth, and mother Margaret counteſs of Richmond; King EDWARD VI. Anne of Cleves 4th wife of Henry VIII. Queen MARY, and, not to be mentioned without expreſſions of praiſe and ſorrow, the darling of England, our moſt ſerene princeſs ELIZABETH, of ſacred memory, endowed with heroic virtues, prudence, and greatneſs of ſoul beyond her ſex, incomparable experience and learning. She is buried under a magnificent monument, piouſly erected by king James. But what is that monument for ſuch a heroine? who is her own moſt magnificent and greateſt monument. With what luſtre and admiration will be tranſmitted to poſterity theſe glorious events of her reign: the reformation of religion, the eſtabliſhment of peace, the fixing the ſtandard of the coin, the well-equipt navy and the honour of the Engliſh marine reſtored, rebellion extinguiſhed, a moſt prudent adminiſtration during 44 years, whereby England was inriched and defended, Scotland reſcued from the French, France relieved, the Netherlands ſupported, Spain humbled, Ireland reſtored to quiet, and the world more than once ſailed round[q].

Princes buried in Weſtminſter abbey.

Queen Elizabeth.

Of dukes and earls here are Edmund earl of Lancaſter, youngeſt ſon of Henry III. [1296] Aveline de Fortibus counteſs of Albemarle his wife [1293], William [1304] and Audomar [1234] de Valence of the family of Luſignan earl of Pembroke; Alphonſus, John and other children of Edward I. John of Eltham earl of Cornwall, ſon of Edward II. [1334] Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, youngeſt ſon of Edward III. [1397] with others of his children; Eleanor, daughter and heireſs of Humphry Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, his wife [1399], the infant daughters of Edward IV. and Henry VII. Henry an infant of two months old, ſon of Henry VIII. Sophia, infant daughter of king James, ſnatched away in the dawn of life [1606]; Philippa ducheſs of York [1433]; Lewis viſcount Robſert of Hainault in right of his wife lord Bourchier [1431]; Anne, daughter and heireſs of John Mowbray duke of Norfolk, betrothed to Richard duke of York, youngeſt ſon of king Edward IV. Giles Daubeney chamberlain to Henry VII. [1507], and his conſort of the family of Arundel in Cornwall [1500]; viſcount Wells [1498], Frances Brandon ducheſs of Suffolk [1560]; Mary her daughter; Margaret Douglas counteſs of Lennox, grand mother to king James, [1578] and her ſon Charles [1576]; Wineſrid Bruges, marchioneſs of Wincheſ-

[i] MS. Cotton. lib. Fauſt. A. III. Tit. A. VII. Widmore, p. 3.
[k] Mr. Widmore ſeems not to have diſcovered who this author was, nor to have believed what he ſays. Hiſt. of Weſtm. ab. p. 11.
[l] [m] [n] 1550. [o] Six years. [p] 1560.
[q] This is an abſtract of her epitaph.

ter

ter [1586], Anne Stanhop, ducheſs of Somerſet [r] [1587], and her daughter Jane [1618]; Anne Cecil, counteſs of Oxford [1588], daughter of lord Burghley lord high treaſurer of England, with her mother Mildred Burghley [1589]; Elizabeth Berkeley, counteſs of Ormond; Frances Sidney, counteſs of Suſſex [1597]; Thomas [s] Butler, viſcount Thurles, ſon and heir of the earl of Ormond. Beſides theſe, Humphry Bourchier, lord Cromwell, another Humphry Bourchier, ſon and heir of lord Berners, both ſlain in the battle of Barnet [1471]; Nicholas lord Carew [1470]; .... baroneſs Powis; Thomas lord Wentworth [1591]; Thomas lord Wharton [1572]; John lord Ruſſel [1584]; Thomas Bromley chancellor of England [1587]; Douglaſia Howard, daughter and heireſs of viſcount Bindon, wife of Arthur Gorges; Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of Edward earl of Rutland, wife of William Cecil [1591]; John Puckering, keeper of the great ſeal of England [1596]; Frances Howard, counteſs of Hertford [1598]; Henry [1596] and George [1603] Carey; father and ſon, lords Hunſdon and chamberlains to queen Elizabeth; the heart of Anne Sophia [1600], infant daughter of Chriſtopher Harley earl of Belmont, embaſſador from France, in a little golden urn on a pyramid; Charles [t] earl of Devonſhire, lord lieutenant of Ireland. We muſt not forget the prince of Engliſh poetry Geofrey Chaucer [1400], and him who came neareſt to him among his countrymen for a happy imagination and rich vein of poetry, Edmund Spenſer [1596], and others of eccleſiaſtical order, and perſons of diſtinction.

St. Stephen's. Not far from hence was another college of 12 canons, dedicated to St. Stephen, which Edward III. ſo handſomely repaired and endowed that he may be deemed the founder, after he had overrun France with his victorious army, "recollecting," ſays the charter of the foundation, "upon a devout review "the great benefits of Chriſt, preventing us ſo ſea- "ſonably with his tender mercy, delivering us un- "worthy creatures from innumerable perils, and de- "fending us by the right hand of his power againſt "the attacks of our adverſaries, crowning us with "victory and ſucceſs, and comforting us in other tri- "bulations and perplexities we are ſo often involved "in by ſhedding abroad unexpected relief." To this adjoined the palace and antient ſeat of the kings of England from Edward the Confeſſor, which in the reign of Henry VIII. was conſumed by an accidental fire. This palace was large and ſuperb, "an incomparable ſtructure for that age, having alſo a front wall and battlements [*]." The remains of it are that chamber where the king, lords, and commons, aſſemble in parliament, and the adjoining one where our anceſtors uſed to open the ſeſſions, called the painted chamber of St. Edward [u].

King's Palace.

Cateſby's Treaſon. I tremble when I recollect the bloody, horrid, atrocious, deſtructive plot, abhorred of God and man, concerted by thoſe monſters in human ſhape under the contrivance of Francis Cateſby, to deſtroy by gunpowder concealed under theſe buildings their ſovereign, their country, and the eſtates of the kingdom, by an accurſed colour of religion; and I am loſt in aſtoniſhment when I think in what inextricable darkneſs and lamentable ruin this moſt flouriſhing ſtate would have been involved in an inſtant. But to apply with grief the words of the old poet [x] on a lighter occaſion:

Excidat ille dies ævo, ne poſtera credant
Secula; nos certe taceamus, & obruta multa
Nocte tegi propriæ patiamur crimina gentis.

Periſh that day, nor let our ſons believe
What we but to relate muſt ever grieve,
And loſt in endleſs night our nation's guilt we leave.

Whiteball. To theſe adjoins White Hall, where is now the Court of Requeſts, and to that the greateſt of all halls, the Prætorium of all England. In this are Weſtminſter hall. held the law courts, viz. the King's bench, Common pleas, Chancery, and hard by, the Star Chamber, the Exchequer, Court of Wards, Duchy of Lancaſter's Court, &c. in which at certain ſeaſons of the year called Terms cauſes are heard; whereas before the time of Henry III. the ſeat of Juſtice was not fixed, and uſed to accompany the court [†]. But he in the Great Charter appointed, that the Common pleas ſhould not follow the Court, but be held in ſome certain place. Some indeed underſtand this that the Common pleas ſhould be held in their own Court, and not in the King's bench, as before. The preſent hall was built by Richard II. as appears by his arms in ſtone and on the roof, having pulled down the older one built by William Rufus; and he intended it for his own reſidence: for at the time the kings themſelves uſed to hear cauſes; and they are judges "whoſe mouth, as the royal author obſerves, "tranſgreſſeth not in judgement [‡]." But this palace was afterwards burnt down 1512, and lay in ruins, and Henry VIII. ſoon after transferred the royal reſidence to White Hall in the neighbourhood, which had then lately been the ſeat of Cardinal Wolſey. This is a truly royal ſeat, bounded on one ſide by the park which reaches to the other palace called St. James', built by Henry VIII. and on the other ſide by the Thames. A certain poet from its whiteneſs calls it Leucæum:

St. James's palace.

——— regale ſubintrant
Leucæum reges (dederant memorabile quondam Atria, quæ niveo candebant marmore, nomen)
Quod Tamiſis, prima eſt cui gloria paſcere cygnos
Ledæos, rauco pronus ſubterluit æſtu.

To the Leucæum now the princes came,
Which to its own white marble owes its name;
Where Thames, whoſe ſilver ſwans are all his pride,
Runs roaring by with an impetuous tide.

The Mews. Near the Mews, ſo called becauſe antiently appropriated to keep hawks, now the royal ſtables and a beautiful pile, is a monument erected to the memory of the pious queen Eleanor by her affectionate huſband Edward I. her piety towards whom will ſtand recorded to endleſs ages. She was daughter of Ferdinand III, king of Caſtile, and married to Edward I. king of England, whom ſhe accompanied into the Holy Land, where he being wounded by ſurprize "by a certain Moor with a poiſoned dagger, and "rather growing worſe than better by the applica- "tions of his phyſicians, ſhe adminiſtered a new and "unheard-of remedy; but full of affection and duty

An inſtance of conjugal affection.

* Fitz Stephen. † William Lambard. ‡ Prov. XVI. 10.
[r] widow of the protector. [s] James. Holland. [t] Blunt. Ib.
[u] Becauſe tradition ſays the ſaid king Edward died therein. Ib. [x]

"she daily licked the wounds, which the force of the "poison prevented from closing, and sucked out the "deadly matter, to her a most delicious liquor. By "dint of this, or, to speak more truly, by the "power of conjugal affection, she so drew out the "noxious matter, that the wounds healing, the king "perfectly recovered, and the received not the least "harm. What more extraordinary than this lady's "fidelity! what more wonderful than that the "tongue of a wife anointed with duty and conjugal "love should draw out poison from a beloved hus-"band which could not be extracted by a skillfull "physician; and what the choicest medicines could "not do, conjugal affection alone performed [y]."

So much for Westminster as connected with London, being so joined by buildings as to seem one and the same city, though, as I said before, it is a city of itself, and has a distinct jurisdiction.

To the west of the city is also a suburb of fair buildings called Holburn, or rather Oldborn, in which are some inns of law, and Ely house, a residence worthy the bishops of Ely, for which they are indebted to John Hotham bishop under Edward III. To the north has also arisen a suburb, where Jordan Briset, a man of piety and wealth, built an house for the knights of the hospital of St. John at Jerusalem, which increased to the size of a palace, and had a beautiful church with a tower carried up to such a height as to be while it stood a singular ornament to the city. These knights at their first institution [z] were so humble while they continued poor, that their chief was called Servant of the poor Servants of the hospital at Jerusalem, as the chief of the Templars, who sprung up soon after, was called the humble minister of the poor knights of the Temple. Through their piety and valour they raised themselves by the liberality of pious princes and private persons out of this low estate to the greatest affluence. They had about 1240 in Christendom 19000 lordships or manors, as the Templars had 9000, the revenues of which in England came afterwards to the hospitalers [a]. This wealth so opened their way to the highest honours that their prior ranked as the first baron in England, and lived in the greatest opulence and dignity, till Henry VIII. by the instigation of evil counsellors seized their possessions to his own use, as also those of the monasteries, which had been consecrated to God with a most pious intention for the maintenance of the clergy, the relief of the poor, the redemption of captives and repair of churches, at the disposal of the church. Near this place, where now is seen a fair range of buildings, was a rich house of Carthusians founded by Walter Many of Hainault, who served with great honour in Edward III's French war. Here was before a famous burying ground, where, in the plague of London 1349, were buried above 40000 persons, as is recorded in an inscription in brass there.

To the north-west adjoins a large suburb, and there also was formerly a watch tower or guardhouse, whence the place is called by an Arabic word Barbaca †, given by Edward III. for the residence of the Uffords, from whom by the Willoughbys it came to Peregrine Bertie, lord Willoughby of Eresby, a person endowed with every accomplishment, and a true son of Mars: Nor are the suburbs to the north and north-east smaller, in the fields of which, while I was writing this, were found many sepulchral vases, seals, and urns, containing coins of Claudius, Nero, Vespasian, &c. also glass vessels, and small earthen ones with a certain liquor in them, which I should think the libation of wine and milk used by the Romans when they burnt their dead, or those odoriferous liquors mentioned by Statius [b]:

Spital Fields.

——— Phariique liquores
Arsuram lavere comam.

The precious odours sprinkled on his hair
Prepared it for the flames.

This place was appropriated by the Romans to burning and burying their dead, whom by the law of the 12 tables they were obliged to carry out of the cities, and bury them by the public and military ways. So much for the city on the land side.

Towards the river on its south bank the extensive borough of Southwark before-mentioned * is joined to the city by a bridge, which was at first of wood, in that place where before they ferried over in a boat. Afterwards in the reign of John they erected a fine new bridge of hewn stone with 19 arches, besides the drawbridge, and built on each side handsome houses like a street, so that it may vie with all in Europe for size and beauty.

Southwark. The bridge.

The remarkables in this borough of Southwark are the noble house of Benedictines called Bermondsey, dedicated to our Saviour by Aldwin Child, citizen of London, and the magnificent house built by Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, which was pulled down after its master had enjoyed it a short time. There still subsists the hospital of St. Thomas repaired or rather founded by the city of London for the sick; the church of St. Mary's priory, which being on the other side the Thames with respect to London is called St. Mary Over Rhe, founded for [c] canons by William Ponte de l'Arche, a Norman; and the house of the bishops of Winchester built by bishop William Giffard about 1107 for his successors. From hence along the river side westward was a row of houses, where, in the memory of our fathers, were receptacles or lodgings for public prostitutes [d], suppressed by Henry VIII. when luxury and lewdness were at their height among us, which in other nations, under the specious pretence of allowance for human infirmity, are publickly tolerated. Not that I think the place had the names of Stews from this, but rather from the ponds here for fattening pike and tench, and cleansing them from their strong fenny taste. I have seen the bellies of these pike cut open to shew how fat they were, and closed up again immediately on touching tench, whose glutinous slime unites them. Among these buildings is a place like a theatre for baiting bears and bulls with dogs, and kennels of band-dogs, which are so strong and bite so hard that three of them are enough to seize a bear, and four a lion. So that the poet [e] truly said of our dogs

Bermondsey. Suffolk house. St. Thomas's hospital. Stews.

——— Taurorum fracturi colla Britanni.

The British dogs that break the necks of bulls.

† Galeotus Martius, a learned writer, library keeper to Mathias Corvinus king of Hungary in the fifteenth century. (Hofman).
* See Surrey, Vol. I. p. 170.
[y] Rodericus Toletanus I. [z] About the year 1142, and long after. Holland. [a] M. Paris, p. 615.
[b] Sylv. II. 1. 161, 162. [c] Black Canons. Holland.
[d] Which the Romans called Lupanaria, because in them the women like she wolves, or lupæ, inveigle unwary youth.
[e] Claudian. II. Cons. Stil. 301.

and as truly he[f] who repreſented them fiercer than the Arcadian ones ſaid to be got by lions.

When this borough was joined to London by the bridge, the city was not only enlarged, but excellently modelled, and the citizens formed into corporations or colleges. The city itſelf is divided into 26 wards, and the government of it veſted in as many elders, from their age called Aldermen, anſwering to the Latin Senators, each of which preſides over a ward; and whereas antiently they had a Portreve or Governor of the city, Richard I. appointed two bailiffs, inſtead of whom John granted them the privilege of electing a yearly magiſtrate or Mayor by vote out of the twelve principal companies, and two ſheriffs, one called the king's, the other the city ſheriff.

Corporations. Wards.

Mayor.

Upon this ſettlement of the government it is incredible how the city increaſed in buildings both public and private, and ſtill continues to increaſe; while the other cities of England are declining. For, not to mention the beautifull Guildhall built by Thomas Knowles, mayor, 1411, Leadenhall, a large and fair building, was erected by Simon Eyre 1445, for a public granary to keep down the price of corn: the colonade commonly called the Burſe, but by queen Elizabeth The Royal Exchange, built for the uſe of the merchants and the ornament of the city by ſir Thomas Greſham, knt. and citizen, 1567; a magnificent ſtructure, whether you conſider the ſtyle of building, the reſort of merchants, or the variety of merchandizes. The ſame knight, out of his great affection to literature, conſecrated his ſpacious houſe in the city to liberal ſtudies, inſtituting therein ſix profeſſors of the ſciences, divinity, law, phyſic, aſtronomy, geometry, and muſic, with handſome ſalaries, that London might be a magazine both of all kinds of merchandize and of the liberal arts. To paſs by the Hanſeatic Society's houſe[g], the water conveyed into every ward by pipes and cocks, and the handſome caſtellated conduits to receive them, and the new method of conveying it by which Peter Maurice a ſkillfull German by a wheel lately raiſed the Thames water, and conducted it into the greateſt part of the town by pipes diſpoſed in a proper level; the city is ſo adorned with churches and ſacred ſtructures that Religion and Piety ſeem to have fixed their reſidence here. It boaſts 121 churches (which is more than Rome herſelf), beſides hoſpitals and almſhouſes, and maintains above 600 orphans in the boy's hoſpital called Chriſt's Church, and about 1240 poor on alms, &c. It would be tedious to enter into a detail of the excellent laws and conſtitutions by which it is governed, the dignity of the aldermen, the loyalty, fidelity, and politeneſs of the citizens, the neatneſs of their houſes, the number of geniuſes it has produced, the pleaſantneſs of the gardens in the ſuburbs well furniſhed with exotic plants, the numerous and well ordered fleet, the incredible quantity of goods of all kinds (Antwerp alone taking off yearly 200,000 pieces of woollen cloths) and the abundant plenty of all things neceſſary for the wants or conveniencies of life. Juſtly ſays Hadrian Junius in his Philippeid,

Guildhall.

Leadenhall.

Royal Exchange.

Greſham college.

Chriſt's Church.

Tectis opibuſque refertum
Londinum, & ſi fas, numeroſo cive ſuperbum,
Larga ubi fœcunda rerum undat copia cornu.

Wealth, Buildings, People, London ſtill adorn,
And ſmiling plenty ſheds her bounteous horn.

and Scaliger in his Cities,

Urbs animis, numeroque potens & robore gentis.

For courage, numbers, ſtrength, is London fam'd.

Another poet has thus attempted to celebrate London, if the reader thinks worth while to read his lines †:

Londinum gemino procurrit littore longe,
Emula maternæ tollens ſua lumina Trojæ,
Clementer ſurgente jugo dum tendit in ortum.
Urbs peramœnu ſitu, cæloque, ſoloque beata,
Urbs pietate potens, numeroſo cive ſuperba,
Urbsque Britannorum quæ digna Britannia dici.
Hæc nova doctrinis Lutetia, mercibus Ormus,
Altera Roma viris, Cryſæa ſecunda metallis.

Along both ſhores extenſive London ſpread,
Rival to mother Troy uprears its head.
A gentle eaſtern ſlope its turrets grace;
Site, ſoil, and air, commend this happy place;
Religion guards her, and her numerous race.
This Britain's capital, Britannia's name,
The mighty increaſe of herſelf, may claim,
Here Paris, Ormus, Rome, and Chryſe yield,
In learning, trade, ſoldiers, and wealth excell'd.

Henry of Huntingdon in the reign of Stephen made the following:

Ibis & in noſtros, dives Londonia, verſus,
Quæ nos immemores non ſinis eſſe tui.
Quando tuas arces, tua moenia mente retracto,
Quae vidi, videor cuncta videre mihi.
Fama lequax & nata lequi, moritura ſilendo,
Laudibus erubuit fingere falſa tuis.

Thou too, rich London, ſhalt adorn my verſe,
Ambitious ſtill thy beauties to rehearſe.
Whene'er thy lofty towers, thy ſtately walls,
And all thy glories my rapt ſoul recalls,
Thy abſent glories live in fancy's eye:
While prattling fame, who would if ſilent die,
Would bluſh to feign of them the ſmalleſt lie.

and another antient poet compoſed this more ſprightly ſtrain:

Hæc urbs illa potens cui tres tria dona miniſtrant;
Bacchus, Apollo, Ceres, pocula, carmen, ador;
Hæc urbs illa potens, quam Juno, Minerva, Diana,
Mercibus, arce, feris, ditat, adornat, alit.

Here Bacchus, Ceres, and Apollo join
Their three great gifts, corn, poetry, and wine;
Juno, Minerva, Dian, each reward
London with wealth, with food, with conſtant guard.

My friend the illuſtrious John Jonſton of Aberdeen, Divinity Profeſſor in King's College at St. Andrew's, this graver one:

Urbs Auguſta, cui cælumque, ſolumque, ſalumque,
Cuique favent cunctis cuncta elementa bonis.
Mitius haud uſquam cælum eſt, uberrima tellus
Fundit inexhauſti germina læta ſoli.
Et pater Oceanus Tamiſino gurgite miſtus
Convehit immenſas totius orbis opes.
Regali cultu ſedes clariſſima regum,
Gentis præſidium, cor, anima, atque oculus.
Gens antiqua, potens virtute & robore belli,
Artium & omnigenum nobilitata opibus.
Singula contemplare animo, attentuſque tuere,
Aut orbem aut orbis dixeris eſſe caput.

† Marriage of Thames and Iſis.

[f] Caius de canibus Britannicis, p. 157. 1697.

[g] Commonly called the Stil yard or Eaſterlings yard. Holland.

Renown'd

Renown'd Auguſta, whom ſea, earth, and ſky,
And all the various elements ſupply.
No climate feels a more propitious air,
No ſoils a more abundant produce wear.
Her father Ocean join'd with Thames's tide
With wealth of nations ever has ſupplied.
Illuſtrious ſeat of Britain's far-fam'd prince,
The nation's eye, heart, ſpirit, and defence.
Her antient ſons for ſtrength and virtue fam'd,
An equal praiſe for arts and wealth have claim'd.
When all her glories thou haſt well ſurveyed,
Call her the World, or elſe the World's great head.

Theſe and ſuch like matters have been more fully treated of by John Stowe, citizen of London, that famous Annaliſt[h], in his ſurvey of London lately publiſhed. I cannot however take leave of my dear native city without obſerving that its latitude is 51° 34″[i] and its longitude 23° 25″. The Lyre[k] of the nature of Venus and Mercury is the topical ſtar, which glances on the horizon, but never ſets, and the Dragon's head is looked upon by Aſtronomers as the vertical one.

dcliffe. From London the Thames paſſes by Redcliffe, ſo called from the colour of the cliff, a pretty little town inhabited by ſailors; and then making almoſt a circle it receives the Lea, the eaſtern boundary of this county, on which is nothing remarkable in this county. No more has Ædelmton, except its name derived from Nobility[l]; nor Waltham, ſave a croſs erected in memory of the funeral proceſſion of queen Eleanor, wife of Edward I. which gives its name to it. Only the royal palace of Enfield appears here, built by Thomas Lovell knight of the garter, privy counſellor to Henry VII. as appears by the arms. To this adjoins Enfield Chace, a foreſt famous for its timber and deer, formerly the property of the Magnavilles, earls of Eſſex, afterwards of the Bohuns their ſucceſſors, now parcel of the dutchy of Lancaſter, ſince Henry IV. king of England married a daughter and coheir of the laſt Humphrey Bohun. Almoſt in the centre of this chace are ſtill to be ſeen the ruins of an old houſe reported to have been that of the Magnavilles earls of Eſſex.

Enfield Chace.

On the northern edge of Middleſex the Roman road commonly called Watling ſtreet entering this county from old Verulam leads ſtrait to London over Hamſted heath, whence is a fine proſpect of a beautiful city and cultivated country, not by the preſent road through Highgate, which was made by licence from the biſhops of London about 300 years ſince, as was before obſerved; but that antient one, as is evident from the charters of Edward the Confeſſor, paſſed near Edgeworth, a place of no very antient date, and Hendon, which archbiſhop Dunſtan, born to promote monkery, gave to the monks of St. Peter at Weſtminſter, having purchaſed it for a few golden Byzantines. Theſe were gold imperial coins ſtruck by the Greek emperors of Byzantium or Conſtantinople, of what value I know not. There were alſo ſilver coins called ſimply Bezants or Byzantines, whoſe value I have occaſionally obſerved in old writings to be about two ſhillings. But this I leave to others, and purſue my journey.

Hamſtead heath.

Highgate.

Edgeworth.

Hendon.

Byzantine coins.

There are about 73 pariſhes in this county without the city, and in the city, liberties, and ſuburbs 221.

[h] Biſhop Gibſon's miſreads Chorographus for Chronographus.
[i] or 32, as the moderns ſay. Gibſon.
[k] Fidicula.
[l] Æðeling noble, and ton town.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of MIDDLESEX does not exceed twenty-four miles in length from east to west, is hardly eighteen in breadth from north to south, and only ninety-five in circumference. It is divided into six hundreds, and two liberties, and contains two cities and five market towns.

The principal landholders in this county at the making of Domesday survey were, the king, the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop and canons of London, the abbies of Westminster and Holy Trinity at Caen, the nunnery of Berking, earls Roger and Morton, Geofrey de Manneville, Ernulf de Hesding, Walter Fitz Other, Walter de St. Walery, Richard Fitz Gilbert, Robert Gernon, Robert Fasiton, Robert Fitz Roselin, Robert Blund, Roger de Rames, William Fitz Anselulf, Edmund de Salisbury, Aubrey de Vere, Ranulf Fitz Ilger, Derman, countess Judith, and the king's almoners.

Harefield. Harefield was in Norden's time the seat of sir Edmund Anderson, lord chief justice of the common pleas. It now belongs to sir Roger Newdigate, bart. George Cook, esq; has here a house called Bellhammonds.

Uxbridge. Uxbridge, though a considerable market town of great length, is in Great Hillingdon parish, having a chapel of ease. It is remarkable for the treaty held there between Charles I. and the parliament Jan. 30, 1644, when, after a negotiation of 18 days to no purpose, the parliament demanding on the three articles of religion, the militia, and Ireland such concessions as the king could not grant without annihilating his authority, though he made some considerable concessions on his side, both parties remained as before [a]. The old brick house in which the commissioners met is standing at the west end of the town. Uxbridge gave title of earl 1714 to Henry Paget 6th in descent from sir William created lord Paget of Beaudesert in the county of Stafford 1550, 4 Edward VI. He was succeeded 1741-2 by his son Henry, who dying 1769 the earldom became extinct. The seat and burial place of Drayton. this family are at Drayton, but by which of them the house was rebuilt I have not found.

Hillingdon. In Great Hillingdon church is a monument for John lord Strange of Knockin, and his wife Jacquetta, sister of Edward IV's queen Elizabeth 1477 [b]. The late duke of Schomberg had a seat here. In the garden of Mr. Grigg close to the road is a fine cedar said to exceed that at Hendon.

Hermandsworth. At Hermandsworth was an alien Benedictine priory [c].

Hedgerly. At Hedgerly near Uxbridge is a British camp like that at Oswestry in the county of Salop [d].

Hayes. Dawley. Dawley in Hayes parish was the retreat of the celebrated viscount Bolingbroke. It now belongs to Mr Stephenson.

Colham. Colham, or Colneham, takes its name from its situation on a branch of Colne, and had a house of the earl of Derby [e].

Stanwell. Stanwell is now the seat of sir William Gibbons, bart. Mr. Holmes had and shewed the Society of Antiquaries 1725, two urns which he called Celtic found at Sunbury [f].

Ad Pontes. Stanes. AD PONTES of the Itinerary has been placed at Stanes by Stukeley [g], but by Horsley [h] at Old Windsor which see [i]. The Thames running in more streams than one near that place would require several bridges. Dr. Stukeley says Stanes was ditched round, and traces a Roman road pointing to Stanes bridge, and from it to Turnham green, at which last place was found 1731 an urn full of Roman coins. It crosses a little brook called from it Stanford bridge, comes into the Acton road at a common, so along Hyde park wall, and crosses Watling street about Tyburn. Unlaf came A. D. 999 with 93 ships to this place, and after laying waste the country about it proceeded to Sandwich and Ipswich [k]. A. D. 1009 an army of Danes after burning Oxford returned along the Thames, and hearing that an army was coming against them passed the river at this town, and after ravaging the country all the winter went into Kent about Lent to repair their ships [l].

Greenford. On Greenford common between Ashford and Lalam near Stanes is a small square double camp, with a irregular outwork on the east which Dr. Stukeley [m] ascribes to Cæsar. About 200 yards to the east on the common is something like a tumulus double trenched, and in a field to the west some faint traces of another almost levelled by the plough.

Coway Stakes. According to tradition Cowey Stakes was the place where Cæsar crossed the Thames. But not to insist on the doubt whether Cæsar's Thamesis be the present Thames, or the mistakes of the Saxon chronicle, which says the stakes driven down by the Britans actually prevented his crossing the river, or of Ninnius who makes them iron, or of Bede who covers the wood with lead, the direction of Coway Stakes across the river from south to north, and not along the Middlesex bank is decisive against their having served for any other purpose than to make a fishing wear. But the stakes mentioned by Cæsar might have answered the purpose of driving him from the ford, and so far the Saxon Chronicle may be right; for that the Romans were driven from the ford I think is implied in what Cæsar [n] says, that his foot followed the horse up to their chins in water, which can hardly be called fording [o]. Mr. Gale confirms the tradition of the place by describing a large Roman camp, double trenched, on the top of a high hill, directly south about a mile and a half from the ford and pointing to it, where he supposes Cæsar rested his troops after the passage [p]. Aubrey describes it a quarter of a mile from Shepparton near the Thames, of near 30 acres, double trenched, two parts in three ploughed up, the rest a sheep walk, the rampart single, neither high nor great. At Shepparton hard by is an en- Shepparton.
closed ground called Warr [q] Close, where have been dug up spurs [r], swords, &c. and great quantities of human bones, and at a little distance to the west is

[a] Rapin XII. 260. 283. [b] Norden.
[c] Norden. [d] Aubrey, Mon. Brit.
[e] Tan. 312.
[f] A. S. min. Stukeley's Abury, pl. xxxv. p. 49. See plate of urns, fig. 7, 8.
[g] It. Cur. I. 298. [h] P. 442. [i] I. p. 164.
[k] Sax. Chron. 127.
[l] Sax. Chron. 239. [m] It. Cur. II. 2. Pl. lix. [n] B. G. V. 18.
[o] See Mr. Barrington, Arch. II. 141. See also before, Vol. I. p. 174. [p] Archæol. I. 188. [q] Wall. Stuk.
[r] Q. if worn by Romans or Britans.

part of a Roman camp[a], engraved by Dr. Stukeley[t]. Horsley[b] places the ford at Kingston because of its depth.

Harrow on the hill in Dr. Boarde's perambulation t. Henry VIII. is called a market town. Here is a school founded t. Elizabeth as a freeschool by John Lyon, who endowed the master with £. 30. and the usher with £. 10. per annum[x]. It has been improved and in great repute in succeeding times, particularly under the late masters Sumner and Thackeray. The spire of this church was fired by lightning about 1765. On this high ground it is pretended William Bolton prior of St. Bartholomew, Smithfield, dreaming of a deluge from eclipses of the sun in watry signs[y] to happen 1524, built a house, and victualled it for two months; and others followed his example. Stowe[z] more reasonably supposes the prior, who was also vicar here, only repaired his parsonage house, and built a dove-house, not merely as Stowe adds, to maintain him with pigeons after his monastery was dissolved; for that event though he might foresee it in the signs of the times did not happen till 15 years afterwards[a], but as a necessary appendage to a parsonage house, and perhaps as an object from a distance.

"Heston, a most fertile place of wheat, yet not so much to be commended for the quantity as the quality; for the wheat is most pure, accounted the purest in many shires, and therefore queen Elizabeth hath the most part of her provision from that place for manchet for her highness's own diet as is reported[b]."

Hanworth had a royal mansion much affected by Henry VIII. Norden[c] calls it a house of her majesty's. It had two parks. It is now the seat of Vere Beauclerk, created lord Vere of Hanworth, 1750.

Hampton court is delightfully situated on the north bank of the Thames at a small distance from the village of Hampton. It is chiefly built of brick, and was begun by Wolsey 1514 soon after his advancement to the see of York. Here it is said he set up 280 silk beds for strangers only, and otherwise so richly finished it that it raised him much envy. To avoid the effects thereof he presented it 1525 when it was just finished to the king, who enlarged it to five courts now reduced to three. Hentzner t. Elizabeth describes its principal square court as having a fountain in the centre, the queen's closet in the chapel glazed with crystal, the presence chamber and private chapel richly furnished: a handsome bed in the state bed chamber, in another chamber a tester worked by Anne Boleyn, and in a third the bed in which Edward VI. was born and his mother died in childbed; and all the rooms hung with rich and lively tapestry: the hall, &c. furnished with a variety of curiosities and portraits, and the gardens extremely pleasant. Charles I. was here a prisoner at large 1647 after the army brought him from Holmby house and Newcastle, till he escaped to Tichfield house. The entrance is by a large brick gateway, the first court consisting of stables and offices: the portal built of brick by Wolsey was rebuilt about twelve years ago nearly of the same form, and leads into a large quadrangle built also by him. The great gate, over which is a beautiful astronomical clock made by Tompion, leads into another quadrangle, one side of which is the great hall built by Henry VIII. and converted by queen Caroline into a theatre, though used but eight times: the opposite side is a colonade of 14 columns in couplets built by Wren. The third side was built by William III. who much affected this palace, which, with the park and gardens, is about three miles in circumference. Here are many valuable portraits and other paintings, but the celebrated cartoons of Raphael are removed to the queen's palace at Buckingham House. The manor of Hampton was given by lady Gray to the knights hospitallers, and here seems to have been a house for some sisters of that order before they were all removed to Buckland 1180[d]. Holland says Hampton was made an honor by Henry VIII.

The earl of Cornwall's palace at Isleworth seems to have been succeeded by a royal one enumerated among Henry IV's houses in a Tower record. Here is now a mansion of the earl of Shrewsbury. The rivulet that falls into the Thames here, and turns some very large corn mills, is called in the old survey of Isleworth hundred made in the reign of James I. and preserved at Sion house, Isleworth river. Isleworth, Sion house, the seat of his grace the duke of Northumberland, was originally a convent founded by Henry V. 1414, for 85 persons, viz. 60 nuns of the order of St. Briget, 13 priests, four deacons, and eight lay brethren, at first endowed with 1000 marks per ann: afterwards with 1731£. per ann. An abbess and nuns were resident here t. Philip and Mary, but sent away 1 Elizabeth[e]. After the dissolution of the monasteries, it was granted 1 Edward VI. to the protector Edward duke of Somerset, who built a very fine palace out of the ruins; the shell of which still remains unaltered. After the fall of that great nobleman, it reverted to the crown. 7 Edward VI. it was granted to John duke of Northumberland. On his attainder James I. gave it to Henry Percy, ninth earl of Northumberland. The dukes of York and Glouceſter and princess Elizabeth were lodged here 1646 by order of parliament. It thenceforth was the residence of the earls of Northumberland, and so descended to their great heiress and representative the late dutchess, who, with her illustrious consort the present duke, soon after it came into their possession, began to improve and embellish it; and it is now one of the finest villas in Europe. Instead of the old formal garden surrounded with high walls, which intercepted all view of the river, here is a most delightful extent of pleasure ground, laid out in the finest lawns and slopes, intersected by a beautiful serpentine river, and expanding its fair bosom to the Thames, which seems only like a noble canal to divide these from Richmond gardens. This house is a perfect square, every front embattled, and ornamented in the angles with embattled turrets, His grace, who is a great patron and judge of the arts, and has a distinguished taste for Botany, has here assembled the choicest trees and plants from all quarters of the globe. Sion house.

The entrance into this magnificent villa from the great western road is through a beautiful gateway, adorned on each side with an open colonade, so as to give to passengers a view of the fine lawn which forms the approach to the house. Here, amid large clumps of stately trees, and over a continuation of the serpentine river mentioned before in the garden, the visitor is conducted to this princely mansion, and by a large flight of steps ascends into the great hall, which is a noble oblong room, ornamented with antique marble colossal statues, and particularly with a very perfect cast of the dying gladiator in bronze, which has the most happy effect from its position as you enter by the flight of marble ſteps into the veſtibule. This is a ſquare apartment, finiſhed in a very uncommon ſtyle; the floor is of ſcaglioli, and the walls in fine relief, with gilt trophies, &c. But what particularly diſtinguiſhes this room are twelve large columns and ſixteen pilaſters of verde antique, containing a greater quantity of this ſcarce and precious marble than is now perhaps to be found in any one building remaining in the world: on the columns are twelve gilt ſtatues. This leads to the dining-room, which is finiſhed with a very chaſte ſimplicity, and is ornamented with beautiful marble ſtatues and paintings in chiaro obſcuro after the antique. At each end is a circular receſs ſeparated by columns, and the cieling is in ſtucco gilt; the elegant ſimplicity of which forms a fine contraſt to that of the drawing-room, which immediately ſucceeds. The coved cieling of this fine room is divided into ſmall compartments, richly gilt, and exhibiting deſigns of all the antique paintings that have been found in Europe, admirably executed by the beſt Italian artiſts. The ſides are hung with a very rich three-coloured ſilk damaſk, being the firſt of the kind ever executed in England. The tables are two noble pieces of antique Moſaic, found in Titus's baths, and purchaſed from the Abbé Furietti's collection at Rome. The glaſſes are about 108 or 109 inches by 65, being two of the largeſt that then had ever been ſeen in England. This conducts to the great gallery, which alſo ſerves for the library and muſeum, being about 133 feet long. The book-caſes are formed in receſſes in the wall, and receive the books ſo as to make them part of the general finiſhing of the room. The whole is after the moſt beautiful ſtyle of the antique, finiſhed in a remarkably light and elegant manner, and gave the firſt inſtance of ſtucco-work finiſhed in England after the fineſt remains of antiquity. The cieling is richly adorned with paintings and ornaments anſwerable to the beautiful taſte that prevails in the other parts of this ſuperb gallery. Below the cieling runs a ſeries of large medallion paintings, exhibiting the portraits of all the earls of Northumberland in ſucceſſion, and other principal perſonages of the noble houſes of Percy and Seymour; moſt of which (eſpecially ſome of the moſt antient) are taken from genuine originals. At the weſt end of the room is a pair of folding doors into the garden, which uniformity required ſhould repreſent a book-caſe to anſwer the other end of the library. Here, by a very happy thought, his grace has exhibited the titles of the loſt Greek and Roman authors, ſo as to form a very pleaſing deception, and to give at the ſame time a curious catalogue of the authores deperditi. At each end of this gallery is a little pavillion or cloſet, finiſhed in the moſt exquiſite taſte; as is alſo a beautiful cloſet in one of the ſquare turrets riſing above the roof, which commands a moſt enchanting proſpect. From the eaſt end of the gallery are a ſuite of private apartments that are extremely convenient and elegant, and lead us back to the great hall by which we entered.

[a] Aubrey, Mon. Brit. G. [t] It. II. 2. Pl. lviii. [u] P. 15.
[x] Norden, 13. 23. [y] Hall. Speed. G. [z] Surv. 417. 419. [a] 1539.
[b] Norden 25. [c] Ib. [d] Tanner, 311. [e] Tan. 324.

Brent r. Under this houſe falls into the Thames the little river Brent, riſing near Barnet wells, and paſſing down between Hendon and Hampſtead hill, it runs on, and is reſorted to by all the ſmall rivers of theſe parts to Brent-ſtreet, an hamlet, to which it gives name, watering Hangerwood, Hanwell, Oſterley park and falling into the Thames at Brentford [f].

Twickenham. Twickenham, a pleaſant village on the river, has among other ſeats one rendered famous by the reſidence of Mr. Pope, whoſe garden remains in its original ſtate in another formed ſince by ſir William Stanhope, and now poſſeſſed with the houſe by Welbore Ellis, eſq. The houſe has alſo been augmented. Here are the ſeats of the earl of Strafford, that of the earl of Buckinghamſhire called Marblehall, the counteſs of Montrath, Mr. Hindley late the earl of Radnor's, Richard Owen Cambridge, eſq. and others. Here too is Strawberry hill, which, from a cottage has been raiſed by the hon. Horace Walpole into an elegant Muſeum of Britiſh antiquities.

Strawberry hill.

Whitton. At Whitton in this pariſh was a ſeat of the duke of Argyle ſurrounded by beautiful plantations of firs.

Brentford. Brentford, the county town, is dirty, long, and ill-built. It is a chapelry belonging, as Norden to Great Ealing, as Willis to Hanwell. In a chapel at the weſt end was founded by Henry Somerſet, chancellor of the exchequer to Henry VI. a friery, hoſpital, or fraternity of the nine orders of angels, valued at £. 40. per annum [g]. Here the Thames was antiently ſo eaſily forded (and is ſtill at Old Brentford at low water) that Edmund paſſed it twice the ſame year 1016, and drove away the Danes [h]. In 1642 Charles I. coming from Edgehill after his victory drove two of the parliament's beſt regiments out of this town with the loſs of their commander and 500 priſoners, and only 10 men on his ſide, and marched to Oatlands, and thence back to Reading and Oxford. In this action Patrick Ruthen, earl of Forth, ſo diſtinguiſhed himſelf that he was made general of the king's forces, and 20 Charles I. advanced to the dignity of earl of Brentford [i], which title expired with him 1651 [i].

Oſterley. Oſterley near Hounſlow was the ſeat of ſir Thomas Greſham, now of Mr. Child, who has entirely modernized, if not rebuilt it.

Near the Roman road which paſſes through this town over Hounſlow heath towards Stanes on a branch of the preſent road from Hounſlow to Colnbrook, lies the village of Harlington or Arlington, the ſeat of the Bennets, and particularly of ſir Henry, principal ſecretary of ſtate to Charles II. who was 17th of that reign created baron, afterwards 24 anno regni earl of Arlington and knight of the garter, and lord chamberlain 1674, and dying 1685 without iſſue male the title is extinct [k].

Arlington.

Hounſlow. At Hounſlow was a priory of Trinitarians for the redemption of captives before 3 Edward I. endowed with £. 74. per ann. [l] "Hounſlow belongeth to two pariſhes, the north ſide of the ſtreet to Heſton, the ſouth to Iſtleworth [m], being a chapel of eaſe to both."

On the north-eaſt of Hounſlow heath towards King's Arbour is a ſmall Roman camp ſingle trenched, 90 paces by 132; another about a mile from it [n]. Stukeley [o] mentions one of theſe which he gives to Cæſar, and ſays he had another, in which ſtood the [f] Norden and Holland make the Brent riſe out of a pond commonly called Browne's well for Brent well, that is, in old Engliſh, Frog-well. But they confound the riſe of this with that of another ſtream, which riſing at Brown's well runs due eaſt till it joins the water which now makes the New river, and conſequently never comes near the Brent.

[g] Tan. 326. An original deed of ſettlement for two ſecular prieſts and ſeven poor men by W. Brainford bridge, for ſupport of whom are engaged the manors of Oſterlee, Wyke and Portpole, called Gray's inn, 21 H. VIII. MS. Harl. 4640.

[h] Sax. Chron. 149. [i] G. [i] Dugd. II. 472. [k] Dugd. II. 483. and Le Neve MS. note.

[l] Tan. 317. [m] Norden.

[n] Aubrey Mon. Brit. His plan of it gives it ſeven different entrances, ſome of which are moſt probably breaches. He makes it a long ſquare, the corners rounded off. [o] It. II. 2. Pl. lx. Kingſbury camp, Pl. lxii.

church

church of Kingſbury lately rebuilt. Thus he traces his march and encampments from Cowey Stakes to Caſſibelan's oppidum at Watford and Rickmanſworth. Lord Winchelſea had ſome Celts found on Hounſlow heath [p].

In the old map of Iſleworth hundred at Sion houſe two royal camps are marked by the name of Shakesbury hills on Hounſlow heath near Cranford, at which laſt place the earl of Berkeley has a houſe.

At Chiſwick is a houſe built by the late earl of Burlington, now belonging to the duke of Devonſhire. In the village is a charity ſchool.

At Hammerſmith a houſe of the late lord Melcombe, and two charity-ſchools.

At Kenſington a royal palace, firſt built by lord chancellor Finch, afterwards earl of Nottingham, purchaſed by William III. who much affected it, and died there, and containing many good portraits, &c. by Holbein and others. Holland houſe, the property of lord Holland, as alſo Camden houſe, of the ſame age, both ſeats of the earls of Warwick, of whom Edward Henry Rich, who died 1721, has a handſome monument in the church of Kenſington.

Theſe villages, as well as thoſe of Acton, Ealing, &c. from their nearneſs to the town or court, abound with retirements of the nobility and gentry. Near Ealing is Gunnerſbury houſe, erected by Inigo Jones, the reſidence of the late Henry Furneſſe, eſq; now of the princeſs Amelia. At Weſt Acton the late lord Hatton had a houſe.

Fulham has been a manor of the biſhops of London from the Conqueſt. In the church-yard have been buried biſhops Henchman 1675, Compton 1713, Robinſon 1723, Terrick 1777. The Danes 869 wintered here till they retired to the continent [q]. At Parſons Green near this place is a houſe of the earl of Peterborough.

At Chelſea is a noble college for ſick and wounded ſoldiers, or who have ſerved twenty years, founded by Charles II. and compleated by James II. and William III. built by ſir Chriſtopher Wren, on the ſite of one intended by James I. for ſtudents in controverſial divinity, wherein Mr. CAMDEN was to have been one of the hiſtorians. The college is built in form of a ſquare, with a bronze ſtatue of Charles II. in the centre. The number of ordinary penſioners is 476 beſides officers of the houſe and 1200 out-penſioners. Every officer and ſoldier gives one day's pay once a year, and the army pays poundage to this fund. In the church is ſir Thomas More's monument, erected by himſelf, although he was not buried here. Charles Boyle earl of Orrery and baron Marſton was buried here 1676. The dukes of Beaufort and Ancaſter had houſes here, and in Norden's time the Queen and lord Dacre [r]. Sir Hans Sloane bought the duke of Beaufort's houſe, and ſold all the trees to the late Mr. Hallet of Canons: among them was an elm above 70 feet high, called queen Elizabeth's. The ſeat and gardens of the earl of Ranelagh are converted into public gardens. The biſhop of Wincheſter has here a houſe belonging to his ſee. The water works at Chelſea ſupply the village, and are managed by a ſociety incorporated 1737.

LONDON. Ptolemy places LONDINUM among the CANTII, and on the ſouth ſide of the Thames, which Dr. Gale [s] accounts for by ſuppoſing the Romans might have a ſtation there before they conquered the Trinobantes, viz. in St. George's fields, where have been found coins, teſſelated pavements and bricks, and an urn full of bones. Here alſo centered three Roman ways from Kent, Surry, and Middleſex, and near it is Kennington, an antient royal town, and therefore probably a Roman ſtation [z]. Cæſar's ſilence about this city, which was become ſo conſiderable in Nero's time, i. e. within 200 years after, is brought as a proof that he did not croſs the preſent Thames [t], though Norden by the firmiſſima civitas of the Trinobantes underſtands London [u]. Biſhop Stillingfleet fixes its foundation to the time of Claudius [x]. Kennington.

In 1774 was laid in Walbrook a new ſewer, a perfect cylinder of three feet diameter, compoſed of bricks ſet in terrace. In digging between Thames-ſtreet and Elbow-lane, 20 feet below the ſurface and ſix feet below the ſite of the pavement at the fire of London, they found the trunk of an oak 25 feet long, the bark periſhed, the ſides unhewn and no root: it was firm and black without appearance of fire. In the part of the ſewer near Budge-row, they found many piles three or four feet long, pointed and fixed in the ground 20 feet below the preſent ſurface, and a piece of oak timber 15 by 19 inches diameter laid on theſe piles. Theſe were probably placed to ſecure the foundation of the choir of St. John Baptiſt's church when enlarged by the pariſhioners 1412, on grant from the city of 21 feet N. by 17 feet. The eaſt end of the church ſtood near the middle of Dowgate-hill: many ſtones and maſſes of chalk have been dug up from its foundations. The ſide of this hill from the Temple weſtward to the Tower poſtern abounds with ſprings. Mr. Rogers paſſing a temporary bridge of planks thrown over this ſewer, obſerved that the labourers brought up wood aſhes mixed with ſoft earth and mud 22 feet below the preſent ſurface, which is much deeper than the level of London, and therefore muſt have been the effect of ſome fire long before 1666, and before the ground could be raiſed by the rubbiſh of various ſtructures or much built on; this depth being probably the natural ſoil of the city and a hard gravel. It is to be aſcribed to the deſtruction by Boadicea, this ſpot being near the centre of the then city [y].

In digging the foundations of ſome houſes in Camomile-ſtreet near Biſhopſgate-ſtreet 1711, was found a teſſelated pavement, running 60 feet from the gates under houſes not then pulled down, about 10 feet broad, terminating at about three feet and an half from the city wall. After two feet of rubbiſh the workmen came to a ſtratum of clay, in which they found at the ſame depth ſeveral urns, from the ſize of three gallons to a quart, containing aſhes and burnt bones; and with them a ſimpulum, a patera and other earthen veſſels and a glaſs lacrymatory; ſeveral beads, copper rings and a fibula, and a coin inſcribed ANTONINVS AVG. - - - - IMP. XVI. reverſe, a woman ſitting, holding in her right hand a palm, in her left a ſpear. Nearer the city wall and beyond the pavement was dug up a human ſkeleton. The city wall appeared to be compoſed from the foundation which lay eight feet below the preſent ſurface to the top near 10 feet alternately of layers of broad flat bricks, in double rows, each brick $1\frac{3}{10}$ inch thick and $17\frac{4}{10}$ by $11\frac{6}{10}$, and rag

[p] A. S. min. [q] Sax. Chron. 85. [r] Norden, 17. [s] P. 64. [z] G.
[t] Mr. Barrington Archæol. II. 158. [u] P. 11. Cæſar B. G. V 20. [x] Orig. Brit. p. 43.
[y] Mr. Rogers's and Mr. Colebrook's account of the diſcoveries in making the new ſewer from Dowgate through Walbroke 1774. Dr. Tyſon ſhewed the Royal Society two pieces of a Roman pavement found near Croſby ſquare under ground, and all made earth above it. Birch's Hiſtory of the Royal Society, IV. 214.

ſtones

ſtones in layers not quite two feet thick. This building Dr. Woodward refers to the time of Conſtantine the Great. It had been levelled on the top, and carried up of the ſame thickneſs eight or nine feet higher; the outſide of this new work was irregularly faced with coarſe ſtone; but the inſide ranged in five layers of ſquared flint and freeſtone about five inches diameter, and laid in quincunx, and over them layers of brick and hewn freeſtone alterternately to the top, ſix of brick in double courſes (except the uppermoſt which conſiſted of four) and of the modern ſhape, 11 inches by 5 and two inches and an half thick: the ſtones in five layers of five inches in thickneſs, but the higheſt and loweſt above a foot. The inſide was filled up with pieces of rubble ſtones and bricks, but not a piece of the Roman bricks before deſcribed. This was referred to the reigns of John, Henry III. or Richard II. Upon this laſt ſtructure was raiſed a wall wholly brick, with battlements coped with ſtone, built 1477, t. Edward IV. Stowe ſays the bricks were made of clay dug up in Moorfields[z]. The wall in the Minories before the building of the Creſcent exactly anſwered this deſcription of the ſecond ſtory, and I ſaw fragments of Saxon pillars and capitals worked into it. A little weſt from Biſhopſgate Dr. Stukeley obſerved, 1724, the old Roman wall within the outer caſe pulled away. It was compoſed of two layers of Roman brick on ſeveral of ſtone about four feet thick[a]. In Hounſditch is, or very lately was, a very perfect round tower projecting from the wall and built of the ſame materials.

Gates. Of the gates, Ludgate was rebuilt as Mr. Camden obſerves 1586; Newgate repaired after the fire of London 1666; Alderſgate 1670; Cripplegate 1663: Moorgate rebuilt 1674; Aldgate 1609. Biſhopſgate is firſt mentioned 1212. It was rebuilt by the Anſeatic merchants 1479, and ſince 1735. All theſe gates were entirely removed within the laſt 20 years, except Newgate, which being a priſon was not completely cleared away till 1782.

Tower. The Tower of London is believed to have been begun by the Conqueror, and compleated by Rufus, who in 1028 ſurrounded it with walls and a broad deep ditch. Succeeding princes enlarged the works, and Edward III. built the church. Since the Reſtoration it has been thoroughly repaired, and ſluices made for letting the Thames into the ditch. Here are kept the office of ordnance, the mint, the records, the jewel office and the regalia, and the ſeveral armouries. It is governed by a conſtable, lieutenant and deputy lieutenant. That it was both the treaſury and mint of the Romans appears from the ſilver ingot inſcribed ex officio Honorii, found with many gold coins of Honorius and Arcadius in the old foundations of the ordnance office there 1777[b]. That the Legio II. Auguſta was ſtationed at London appears from an inſcription dug up near Ludgate 1669, now at Oxford. See Vol. I. Pl. XVII. fig. 13.

D. M.
VIVIO. MARCI
ANO. MIL. LEG. II.
AVG. IANVARIA.
MARINA. CONIVNX
PIENTISSIMA POSV
IT MEMORIAM.[3]

Flete river. Flete river was made navigable for barges; the farther end was arched over for the market, and the hither end within theſe few years for a ſtreet leading to the new bridge at Blackfriars.

Many Roman veſſels, lamps, lacrymatories, paterae, ſome of white earth with long necks and handles, ſuppoſed for ſacrifices, with coins of Trajan and Antoninus Pius, have been found in Spital Fields ſince Mr. Camden's time, and in the foundations of Aldgate when rebuilt 1607, mentioned by Stowe: but ſince the fire, other Roman antiquities were found in the foundations of St. Paul's, and in making Fleet ditch, and in Goodman's Fields; which were collected by Mr. John Conyers, apothecary, who gave many to Dr. Woodward[c].

On the north ſide of the eaſt end of St. Paul's under where the croſs ſtood, the higheſt part of the ſound ground had been raiſed 15 or 16 feet, and two layer of corpſes, one ſix or ſeven, the other 10 or 12 feet deep; at 12 feet a white ſtratum like chips of ſtone of Lanfranc's building, and then flint pavements of citizens' yards, below which the ground from black was yellow with fragments of red pottery, inſcribed de Primari (or of the 1ſt legion)—de Parici—quintimani—victor—Recinio; coins conſumed by time; one of metal finer than bell metal of Hadrian, one reverſe a galley, others of Conſtantine and Claudius, and the wolf and twins, a glaſs veſſel emboſſed with roſe-trees, on pots of murray colour greyhounds, ſtags, and hares, cinnamon coloured urns, jugs ſix ſquare, the ſides bent in. Others in the new cut of Fleet-ditch, between Fleet-gate and Holbourn-bridge, of red earth not inferior to china, inſcribed as the two firſt; many coins of copper and two lares Ceres and Bacchus, a ſeal with a ſpread eagle, and round it Sigillum Ingelram de Prinne in Saxon capitals, and a copper croſs near it much below the foundation of an old chalk wall going towards Shoe-lane. Another Sigillum Ingelram de Remtun near Holbourn bridge, and large coins of Veſpaſian; rev. IVDAEA CAPTA. In the ſand at Fleet-bridge, ſpurrowels, keys, daggers, and a coin of Julius Cæſar.

At the eaſt end of St. Paul's, near the ſchool, 15 feet deep, were found pieces of pretty green ſerpentine or Egyptian marble and porphyry as uſed in Edward the Confeſſor's monument, hollow glaſs beads yellow or blue in ſtripes, and bone or ivory pins, breaſt imboſſments ſet with glaſs, and glaſs drops; the bottom of an old-faſhioned crucible which had glaſs melted in it: a red earthen veſſel with foliage, cornucopias, and ſnakes, harts horn ſawed in pieces, heifers' horns, abundance of boars tuſhes, pots inſcribed Claudio and Januarium.

A kiln full of the worſe pots, lamps, &c. in loamy ground 26 feet, near the place where the market-houſe ſtood in Oliver's time, under the north-eaſt part of St. Paul's church; ſeveral others made in form of a croſs in the loam hardened by burning; the floor ſupported by and cut out of the ſame and helped with Roman tile ſhards. Obſerved and deſcribed by John Conyers, apothecary, 1677[c].

Under the foundation of St. Mary Woolnoth was found 1730 a ſmall Roman earthen lamp inſcribed

ATTLV
F

On rebuilding Biſhopſgate church were dug up ſeveral urns, paterae, and other fragments of Roman antiquities, and a ſilver coin of Antoninus Pius, rev. VICT. AVG. COS. III. a large red earthen patera with much foliage on it, and a wooden croſs plated with tin and falſe ſtones, ſuppoſed to have been nailed on a coffin: they found alſo an arched vault 14 feet deep with large equilateral Roman bricks, and in it two ſkeletons perfect; ſuppoſed a Roman burial place after the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity. Dr. Stukeley ſaw there 1726 a Roman grave made of great tiles or bricks twenty-one inches long which kept the earth from the body [d].

[z] Woodward's Remarks on the antient and preſent State of London 1723. p. 12-23.
[a] Ant. Soc. min. [b] Archæol. V. 291. 295. [3] G. [4] G.
[c] Of whom ſee Woodward ubi ſup. p. 10, 11. to whom Conyers gave many of theſe things.

In the ſtreet were found a ſmall urn, and a little thigh bone in it, the bottom of a red earthen patera inſcribed MACRINUS, teeth of boars, and larger animals, ſhells, ſmall urns, and other veſſels: under ten feet in ſolid clay and two or three feet lower were other urns and teeth, a glaſs croſs enamelled, two earthen water pipes two inches and half diameter, the cavity one inch one ſeventh, length uncertain, laid eaſt and weſt [e].

In St. Martin's church in the Fields was a Roman brick arch, at the bottom laid with a ſtrong cement of unuſual compoſition. In the whole length of each wall was a duct nine inches ſquare, and ſeveral others ſide by ſide. This building was below the ſprings upon a gravel. A braſs ſeal was found in digging thereabouts with a tree and ſquirrel, and round it

IESVS ALE ON AL AL

Gibbs the architect ſaid buffaloes heads were found there [f].

Sir Hans Sloane had a glaſs vaſe ſhaped like a bell found among aſhes in a ſtone coffin taken up in digging the foundation of the portico of this church. 14 feet under ground. A large braſs Roman key was found at Marybone where many Roman coins were alſo found [g]. In the foundations of the new church Goodman's Fields among many parcels of bones were found urns. Some pillars, pavements, &c. diſcovered about 1725 in Norton Falgate were believed by Mr. Le Neve, who viewed them, the remains of the hoſpital of St. Mary where the lord mayor attended the annual Eaſter Sermons now preached at St. Brides [h].

St. Paul's church.

St. Paul's church was begun by biſhop Maurice, t. W. Rufus, and finiſhed by the contribution of the good people of England and Ireland, to whom the biſhop of London ſent circular letters with indulgences granted not only to the contributors themſelves but even to thoſe who ſolicited contributions, and to the artiſans and labourers [i]. By this means it ſeems to have been finiſhed and paved 1312. The ball on the ſpire was ſo large that it would contain 10 buſhels of corn, and the length of the croſs on it 15 feet, and the traverſe ſix. In this croſs biſhop Segrave put the reliques of divers ſaints in order by their merits to inſure the ſteeple from accidents. Notwithſtanding this precaution it was fired by lightening 1444, 22 Henry VI. and received ſo much damage that it was not repaired till 1462, 2 Edward IV. when an eagle of copper gilt, four feet long from head to tail, three feet and an half broad over the wings, and of 40lb. weight was added to it, on a croſs 15 feet and an half high, and the traverſe five feet 10 inches, made of oak, covered firſt with lead and then with copper varniſhed red, the ball being alſo of copper gilt nine feet in compaſs as appeared on taking it down for repair 1553, 1 Mar. This ſpire was again fired by the negligence of the ſexton, as he confeſſed on his death-bed [k], 1561, 3 Elizabeth, three yards from the top, which burning down to the church deſtroyed the whole roof in four hours. This damage was repaired 1566, but the ſteeple left unfiniſhed, notwithſtanding the deſigns for a new ſpire in the reign of James I. and by archbiſhop Laud, till it was deſtroyed by the dreadful fire of 1666 [l]. An exact meaſure was taken of the old church 1312, and hung up on a tablet in the north part of the choir. This Dugdale ſeems to have copied, for he differs only in the height of the ſteeple, which in a copy of the tablet in the Public Library, Cambridge, is made with the ſpire not to exceed 520 feet, whereas the two ſeparate heights of the tower and ſpire 270 and 274, make it 14 feet more, which can only be accounted for by ſuppoſing the height of the battlements to have been taken into the height of the ſpire as if it roſe from them. Stowe ſays the old church was 720 feet long [m]. From the idea of a temple of Diana on the ſite of this church, Mr. Selden would derive the name of London from Llan Dian, q. d. Templum Dianæ. Ox heads, boars teeth, bucks horns, pateræ with figures of hunting and other alluſions to this goddeſs were diſcovered here after the fire, and came into the hands of Mr. Worſley, Mr. Kemp, and Dr. Woodward; and it is not at all improbable that the principal Chriſtian church might have been founded on the ruins of ſome conſiderable heathen temple. But the Camera Dianæ is more probably ſuppoſed to have only an apartment built by Henry II. for his miſtreſs like the bower at Woodſtock. Some winding vaults of it remained in Stowe's time [n] about Paul's hill near Doctors' Commons, and a ſubterraneous paſſage from it to Baynard's Caſtle. The compoſition between the church and the family of Bawd of a buck for 22 acres parcel of their manor of Weſtley granted to ſir William Bawd for his park at Coringham, Eſſex, is not older than 3 Edward I. [o] The biſhops buried in this church were Erkenwald 685, Theodred in the middle of the 10th century, Falconbridge 1228, Niger 1240, Baſſet 1258, Wingham 1261, Sandwich 1273, Graveſend 1303, Baldoc 1313, Braybrook 1404, Clifford 1421, Fitzhugh 1435, Kemp 1489, Hill, 1496, Fitz James 1521, Stokeſley 1539, Elmer 1594, Fletcher 1596, Vaughan 1607, Ravis 1609, King 1621 [p]. In clearing the rubbiſh after the fire Braybrook's body was found intire except an accidental hole in the breaſt through which his lungs might be ſeen and handled. The ſkin was of a deep tawny colour, and the body very light and without any offenſive ſmell. After being expoſed ſome time in a coffin it was re-interred [q]. Somewhat ſimilar to this was the body of Alice, wife of Robert Hackney, ſheriff of London 1321, 15 Edward II. found in St. Mary hill church 1497, the ſkin whole, and the joints of the arms pliable: but after being expoſed to the air four days it grew offenſive and was re-interred [r]. Other bodies thus dried have been found in the vaults of Whitechapel and St. Martin in the fields in the preſent age.

What the glory of this houſe was may be ſeen in Hollar's views for Dugdale's hiſtory of it. The ſubſtantial walls that ſurvived the fire being with the utmoſt difficulty beaten down, it was rebuilt 1675 by ſir Chriſtopher Wren. The dimenſions of this

[d] Le Neve, A. S. min. [e] Ib. [f] A. S. min. 1722. [g] Ib. [h] Ib.
[i] Dugdale's Hiſtory of St. Paul's. [k] Heylin's Coſmogr. [l] G.
[m] Biſhop Gibſon's note. [n] Surv. 781. [o] Stowe, 368. G. [p] Godwin.
[q] Dugdale ubi ſup. [r] Stowe, 227.

new building taken by Mr. James for biſhop Gibſon, are from eaſt to weſt Feet.

Within - -	463
From north to ſouth -	228
Height to the top of the cupola	215
——— to the top of the croſs	344
——— to the dome -	90

The charges of building and of ſupporting it ariſe from a duty of 4*d*½. to 2*s*. per chaldron on all coals brought to London[r]. The dome is adorned with the hiſtory of St. Paul by ſir James Thornhill. After it was finiſhed, that part of the duty that had been reſerved for this purpoſe was in 1711 applied to build 50 new churches in the ſuburbs of London. It was once propoſed to have erected monuments of eminent men in this church as at Weſtminſter, and ſince to decorate it with paintings by the moſt eminent modern painters. But neither deſign took effect. Here is a good library belonging to the church[s]. The chapter-houſe on the north ſide is a modern building uſed as a dwelling houſe. Biſhop Tanner[t] begins his liſt of London biſhops with Mellitus 604. Elfſtan the third biſhop rebuilt the church about 961, and Ethelwald the fourth biſhop improved its revenues, which were valued 26 Henry VIII. at £. 1119. clear, now £. 1000, and thoſe of the chapter £. 735. There belong to it a biſhop, dean, precentor, chancellor, treaſurer, five archdeacons, 30 prebendaries, twelve petty canons, (of whom one is ſubdean, ſtyled cardinal, and one goſpeller, the other epiſtler) ſix vicars choral, ten ſinging men (five in orders, and five laymen) ten choriſters, &c.

London was ſurprized by the Danes in the reign of Ethelwolf, 839, and the citizens maſſacred. They ſacked it again 851 after totally routing the army of Beorhtulph, king of Mercia, who came to its relief. In the reign of Ethelred 872 they took it and wintered in it. In 994 after a long reſiſtance to Anlaf and Sueneking of Denmark who beſieged it, the citizens forced them to raiſe the ſiege. In 1016 it was hard preſſed by Canute, and obliged to admit him to winter, and purchaſe peace with a conſiderable ſum of money[u]. It ſuffered greatly in the inſurrections of Tyler and Straw 1381, t. Richard II. of Cade 1450 t. Henry VI. and of the baſtard of Falconbridge 1481 t. E. IV. In 983 it ſuffered much by fire[w]. In 1077, in the Conqueror's reign, it was laid in ruins in one night by ſuch a fire as had not happened, ſays the Saxon Chronicle, ſince it was founded. The greateſt part of the city with the cathedral was deſtroyed by fire 1086[x]. Again 1135, 1 Stephen, with the bridge, which was afterwards rebuilt of ſtone, but within four years after it was finiſhed, 1212, all the houſes on it were burnt. This fire happened in Southwark, and the flames communicating to the north end of the bridge, a multitude of perſons on the bridge were put between two fires, and crouding into boats on the river overſet them in the confuſion, whereby three thouſand perſons periſhed[y]. But the moſt terrible calamity of this ſort that befel this city was in 1666, when, on Sunday, Sept. 2, a fire broke out at a baker's in Pudding lane, which, in three days time, being driven by a ſtrong eaſt wind, deſtroyed 89 churches, Guildhall, the Royal Exchange, the Cuſtomhouſe, hoſpitals, ſchools, libraries, and 52 company's halls, 15 of the 26 wards, 400 ſtreets, and 12000 or 13000 houſes, out of the 15000 which then covered about 4600 acres, whereof 436 were now uncovered. The value of the houſes, rating them one with another at £. 25. per annum, which at twelve years purchaſe makes £. 300. amounted in the whole to £. 3,600,000. and the publick buildings to half that ſum, the goods to half the value of the houſes, 20 wharfs of wood and coal at £. 1000. apiece, 100,000 boats, 1000 cartloads and porters at 12*s* a load £. 150,000. In all £. 7,335,000. excluſive of the loſs of books, valued at £. 150,000.[z] Another calculation makes it £. 10,730,500; and only ſix lives loſt. It deſtroyed all on the Thames ſide from Allhallows Berking to the Temple church, and all along from the the north-eaſt wall of the city to Holborn bridge, and when all artificial helps failed, it languiſhed and went out of itſelf among the brick buildings near the Temple and Holborn bridge. In memory of this devaſtation was erected near the place where it began a fluted column 202 feet high, and hollow, whoſe baſe is charged with inſcriptions and reliefs deſcriptive of the event. In 1665 this city was deſolated by a plague, which in one week in September carried off 6988 perſons, and in four months from May to September 68,596. It recovered from theſe calamities, and roſe again in a few years with extraordinary beauty and magnificence far ſurpaſſing its former ſtate both in building and inhabitants; inſomuch that ſir William Petty in his "Political Arithmetic" computed from the number of burials and houſes that London in or about 1683 was as big as Paris and Rouen the two beſt cities of France together, and ſince his time about ſeven parts of the fifteen having been newbuilt ſince the fire, and the number of inhabitants increaſed near one half, the total amounting to near 700,000, it is become equal to Paris and Rome put together[a]. Maitland[b] reckoning ſeven to a houſe calculated the number of inhabitants of the city and ſuburbs at 725,903. Dr. Brakenridge, who perſuaded himſelf the numbers decreaſed 120,000 from 1742 to 1754, ſet them at 680,700, which Governor Burrington in his anſwer to him denies. A MS. paper in the Harleian Library[c] eſtimates the total of houſes in London, Weſtminſter, Southwark, and Middleſex within the bills of mortality 93104. The additional buildings which have run out a great way into the fields on every ſide form many noble ſquares and handſome ſtreets, and the prodigious increaſe of inhabitants in the ſuburbs has rendered the out-pariſhes immoderately large. Theſe have been divided and ſeveral new churches erected by act of parliament in the reigns of Anne and George I. and their ſucceſſors[d]. The rents in the pariſh of St. Mary le bon, which, in 1705 amounted to only £. 3000. per annum have been found 1782 to have advanced to £. 26,000. per annum.

Fire of London.

The Inns of court have been all new built ſince Mr. Camden's time, except the Middle Temple hall and the gate at Lincoln's inn; and each have their ſeveral gardens and walks. There are two other inns for Serjeants in Fleet-ſtreet and Chancery lane, both called Serjeant inns[e]. Other inns are New inn, Clement's, Clifford's, Staple, Lyon's, Barnard's, and Furnival's. To theſe we muſt add the College of Civilians, commonly called Doctors' Commons, where the courts of civil and canon law are held[f], and where the regiſter of wills for the province of Canterbury is kept.

Inns of Cou

[r] Burnet's Hiſtory of his own time, II. 568. [s] G.
[t] Higden. [u] Sax. Chron. 188.
[w] Obſervations hiſtorical and moral on the fire by Rege Sincera, 1666. 4to.
[x] N° 7017, p. 44. [y] G. [z] Not. Mon. p. 287. [a] Sax. Chron. ſub annis.
[b] G. ex Gualt. Coventr. & Lib. Dunmow MS. [c] G. [d] P. 541.
[e] G. [f] Holland. G.

The

e Rolls.

The Domus Converſorum was erected 7 Henry III. on the ſite of a Jew's houſe to him forfeited 1231, and in it all Jews and Infidels converted to the Chriſtian faith had ſufficient maintenance allowed them, were inſtructed in the doctrine of the Goſpel, and lived under a Chriſtian governor till 1290, when all the Jews were baniſhed out of the realm, and the number of converts of courſe decreaſing, the houſe was granted to William Burſtal, Cuſtos Rotulorum, by letters patent 51 Edward III. the office of maſter of the Rolls being annexed to it 1377, for keeping the rolls, which grant was ratified in parliament 1 Richard II. and by other letters patent 6 Richard II. Notwithſtanding this grant and ratification all converted Jews have ever ſince been and are to be allowed one penny halfpenny per day toward their maintenance, which allowance was paid to Peter Samuel and John Maza, two converted Jews 1615, 2 James II. as appears by the Maſter of the Rolls' account in the Hanaper, and a conſtat out of the Pell office, who were the laſt I can find that ever enjoyed this benefit [12]. In preſſes fixed againſt the ſides of the chapel are kept the records, charters, patents, &c. from Richard III. In the houſe adjoining the Maſter of the Rolls reſides and hears cauſes.

e Temple.

The Order of Brethren of the Temple of Solomon at Jeruſalem, commonly called Knights of the Temple, or Templars, began in the year 1118. They were inſtituted to take care of the pilgrims who came to the Holy Land. Their rule was that of Canons regular of St. Auſtin, and their habit white with a red croſs on the ſhoulder. They are with great probability ſuppoſed to have found their way into England early in the reign of Stephen when they had ſeveral houſes and eſtates in this kingdom. Their firſt ſeat among us was in Holborne in the Old Temple without the bars on the ſouth ſide of the ſtreet near Southampton buildings. There they continued till 1185, when they removed to a more convenient houſe at the weſt end of Fleet ſtreet called the New Temple. Here they flouriſhed in great wealth and honour under the government of a maſter, who was head of all the preceptories and houſes of theſe knights in England, but ſubject to the Grand Maſter of the Order [b]. Upon the ſuppreſſion of the Order by Pope Clement V. and Philip king of France, on account of their great wealth [c], though the oſtenſible reaſon was the debauched lives of ſome particular knights, this houſe was granted firſt by Edward II. 1313 to Aymer de Valence earl of Pembroke, and on his death uſurped by Hugh Deſpenſer, jun. and then Edward III. gave it to the Knights Hoſpitalers of St. John of Jeruſalem, who leaſed it to the ſtudents of the Common Law, whoſe property it ſtill continues to be [d].

The great hall of the Middle Temple was rebuilt anno 1572, and both the Temples themſelves, at different times, as fire or time made it neceſſary. On new paving the hall about 40 years ago was taken up a ſilver gilt enamelled box containing near 100 pair of ſmall ivory dice ſcarce more than two thirds of the modern ſize [e].

The church, built at the ſame time with the original religious houſe, was dedicated 1185 to the Virgin Mary [f] by Heraclius, Patriarch of the church of the Holy Reſurrection at Jeruſalem, by which I ſuppoſe is meant the Holy Sepulchre. In imitation of that Eaſtern church this is ſuppoſed to have been built of a round form, a form common to moſt of the churches belonging to the preceptories of this order among us, and of which we have inſtances ſtill remaining at Northampton, Cambridge, &c. The body of that at Temple Bruer, in Lincolnſhire, was lately ſtanding, of the ſame form, but the old tower was ſquare: and I am informed, one at Aſlackby in the ſame county, of the ſame form, and intire, is now made into a dwelling houſe.

The church in London had a maſter, and four ſtipendiary prieſts, with a clerk, who had in Stowe's time ſtipends allowed them out of the revenues of the hoſpital of St. John at Jeruſalem, as it had been in the reign of Edward VI. Ever ſince the reign of Henry VIII. the appointment of the maſter has been in the gift of the crown; and he is paid partly by the king, and partly by the ſociety.

From the preſent ſtyle as well as form of the weſtern part of the church, one may fairly conclude it to be of great antiquity. It is a compleat Rotonda, divided into three ſtories: the lower has ſix pointed arches reſting on pillars compoſed of four others. This ſtory has ailes with dental arches on the walls, and over them round windows correſponding with the principal arches. The middle ſtory is adorned with interlaced arches, and in the upper are ſix ſingle round arches, above which riſes a plain wall ſupporting the roof. The weſt door is richly charged with ornaments in the Saxon ſtyle, of which order are alſo its pillars and capitals, and the pillars and arches which range round under the windows. This part (as well as the eaſtern built in the reign of Henry III.) eſcaped the fire of London. About the middle of this Rotonda are now ranged on the floor two groupes of figures ſurrounded by iron rails on each ſide of the walk to the chancel; but they were within memory, or not long before, placed upright againſt the wall round about, probably after their removal on repair. They are all made of the ſame yellowiſh grit [g]. But though they lie at preſent together on one common bed the pavement, it is moſt probable they had each their ſeparate table, as was uſual with moſt of our ſepulchral effigies in the cumbent poſture. What confirms this conjecture is that Mr. Camden mentions parts of inſcriptions which he read on one of theſe tombs, and on the ſide of the ſame, which alſo renders it probable that each of theſe figures lay on its ſeparate tomb, ranging perhaps round the church as in innumerable other inſtances, and that the preſent diſpoſition of them is poſterior to the time of that great antiquary, as well as to that of Stowe [h], who mentions "eleven monuments of noblemen in the round walk of "this church; eight of them images of armed "knights, five lying croſſe-legged as men vowed to "the Holy Land againſt the infidels and unbeleeving

[12] Gibſon ex MS. in capella rot. Tan. 314.
[b] Tanner Not. Mon. p. 307. & Præf. p. xxiv. Stowe, Survey of London, p. 439. Ed. 1633.
[c] Matthew Paris ſays they had 9000 manors in Chriſtendom. p. 615, and at their ſuppreſſion they had 16000 lordſhips beſides other lands. Heylin Coſmog. B. 3. Rapin, Vol I. p. 403. fol. Mr. Newcourt I. 544. calls theſe manors houſes or convents. Paris' word is Maneria.
[d] Tanner, Newcourt, and Stowe, ib.
[e] Mr. Da Coſta ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1765 an antient die found at Sutton at Hone near Dartford in Kent belonging formerly to the Templars, but whether of their time is uncertain. It ſeemed a jaſper uncommonly large, two tenths of an inch ſquare, the angles rounded off, the numbers filled up with white. A. S. min.
[f] Ecton adds St John Baptiſt.
[g] Since this was written they have been all painted white, ſo that it is impoſſible to diſcover the original material.
[h] Survey of London, p. 440.

" Jews;

" Jews; the other three ſtraight-legged; the reſt are " coaped ſtones; all of gray marble." We have now nine figures of knights, and but one coaped ſtone. Sir William Dugdale[i] alſo mentions " eight " ſtatues in military habits, each of them having " large and deep ſhields on their left armes: of " which five are croſs legged. There are alſo, adds " he, three other graveſtones lying about five inches " above the level ground; on one of which is a " large eſcocheon with a lion rampant graved " thereon." As here are now certainly nine figures and ſix of them croſs legged, and only one graveſtone, it is not eaſy to account for the different arrangement of theſe monuments in the courſe of the laſt 100 years, or between 1671 when ſir William's book was publiſhed, and the preſent year, eſpecially as the three graveſtones laſted from Stowe to Dugdale; but that alterations have happened here in other particulars is apparent from this circumſtance that theſe figures which in ſir William's time were within " a ſpacious grate of iron," are now divided into two parcels, each parcel having its ſeparate fence. One may plainly perceive that the ſecond and third of the firſt groupe, and one or two of the other, have had ſeparate tables which riſe above the reſt.

Of theſe groupes that on the right hand or ſouth ſide of the church conſiſts of four figures and a coffin. The firſt figure repreſents a knight armed in mail with a ſurcoat, a deep round helmet flatted on the top, his head on a cuſhion placed lozenge-faſhion, his right hand on his breaſt, a long ſword at his right ſide, and on his left arm a long pointed ſhield charged with an eſcarboucle on a field fretty. He muſt paſs for croſs-legged in order to make up Stowe's number of figures in that attitude. This figure belongs, if I miſtake not, to Geffrey de Mandeville, or Magnaville, firſt earl of Eſſex, ſo created by Stephen, which honour was confirmed to him with many very conſiderable grants and privileges by the empreſs Maud. On this account the king cauſed him to be ſeized, and made him purchaſe his liberty with the Tower of London whereof he was Conſtable, and his two caſtles of Walden and Pleſhey. In reſentment for this reduction of his power and influence he committed the moſt violent ravages on the king and his party, and proceeding to ſeize and pillage Ramſey abbey, was preſently after mortally wounded at the caſtle of Burwell, which he had laid ſiege to. Juſt before his death he received a viſit from ſome of the Knights Templars, who, putting on him the habit of their order, carried his corpſe into their orchard at the Old Temple, London. But, as he died under ſentence of excommunication, they would not give him Chriſtian burial; but wrapping it up in lead[k] hung it on a crooked tree. At length the ſentence was taken off by the application of the prior of Walden to the Pope: but when the prior thought of conveying the body to his abbey, the Templars buried it obſcurely[l] in the church-yard of the New Temple in the porch before the weſt door. This great baron inherited from his anceſtors above 100 manors with the Conſtableſhip of the Tower of London. Maud made him hereditary ſheriff of Middleſex, Eſſex, and Hertfordſhire, and gave him the office and eſtates of Eudo Dapifer. He founded the abbey of Walden in Eſſex, where his poſterity were interred; and in that town remains the lower ſtory of his caſtle, a rude memorial of the fortifications of that time. The Chronicle of this abbey in the Monaſticon informs us that after he became earl of Eſſex he augmented his family arms which were Quarterly Or and Gules, with an eſcarboucle[m]. The monks have taken care to embalm the memory of their munificent founder. This haughty lord, who they acknowledge availed himſelf of the confuſions of the times to commit the greateſt outrages, was with them the braveſt and beſt of men. " Erat enim vir militaris ac Deo devotus, " cujus cordis arca virtutibus nunquam erat vacua, " ſed omni tempore repleta." He married Roiſia ſiſter of Aubrey de Vere earl of Oxford, by whom he had three ſons, Ernulph who ſeems to have died in exile, Geffrey and William both ſucceſſively earls of Eſſex. He died 16 cal. Oct. 1144, 9 Stephen[n].

The ſecond figure is a knight in mail with a ſurcoat, his helmet more compleatly rounded than the former, his neck long, and the cuſhion as in all the reſt laid more ſtrait under his head. He is drawing his ſhort dagger or broken ſword with his right hand, and on his left arm has a ſhorter pointed ſhield charged with a lion rampant. Below his knees are bands or garters, as if to ſeparate the cuiſſes from the greaves; his legs are croſſed, and under his feet is a lion couchant. The arms on the ſhield determine this figure to repreſent the famous William Mareſchall, who bore Per pale O and V. a lion rampant G. armed and langued G. He died advanced in years at his manor of Caverſham near Reading 3 Henry III. 1219. His body was carried firſt to Reading abbey, then to Weſtminſter, and laſt to this church, where it was ſolemnly interred on Aſcenſion day 27 Cal. April[o]. This epitaph, expreſſive of his character, was made for him:

Sum quem Saturnum ſibi ſenſit Hybernia, Solem
Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.

" Fuit enim," ſays Matthew Paris[p], " Hybernorum " nocivus edomitor, Anglis honor & gloria, Nor- " mannis negotiator, qui in ea multa comparavit, " Gallicis bellicoſus & miles invincibilis."

For this epitaph Camden, p. 513, cites Rudburne's Annals, but it is not in the copy printed in Wharton's Anglia Sacra. Weever[q] applies to this earl the other epitaph which Camden ſays was in his time to be read " on the ſide of his tomb."

Miles eram Martis, Mars multos vicerat armis.

The third figure, which is the moſt elegant of all, repreſents a comely young knight in mail and a flowing mantle with a kind of cowl. His hair is neatly curled at the ſides, his crown appears ſhaven, his head inclined to the right. His hands are elevated in a praying poſture, and on his left arm is a ſhort pointed ſhield with three waterbougets. He has at his left ſide a long ſword, and the armour of his legs (which are croſſed) has a ridge or ſeam up the front

[i] Orig. Jurid. 173.

[k] Canali plumbeo incluſum.

[l] Mon. Ang. I. 447. 449. ignobili ſatis tradiderunt ſepulturæ. Ib. They ſeem to conſider the whole round of this church as a porch.

[m] " Poſtquam gladio comitis accinctus erat, arma progenitorum cum Carbunculo nobilitavit." It appears by his ſhield here that the eſcarboucle took place of the family arms. It may be proper to obſerve that what I call a field fretté was the common ground of antient ſhields.

[n] There is a ſmall error of the preſs in one date of his death; in Mon. Ang. I. p. 448, tis 1144; p. 449. 1148. Le Neve MS. n. in my copy of Dugd. Bar. I. 201. 203. ſhews the laſt is right, and that the abbey could not be founded before 1146, becauſe William biſhop of Norwich who aſſiſted was not conſecrated before 1146.

[o] MS. in Bib. Bodl. cited by Dugdale.

[p] P. 304.

[q] P. 442.

continued

continued over the knee and forming a kind of garter below the knee. At his feet is a lion. The arms beſpeak this knight to be one of the family of Ros or Rous; and Weever, p. 443, has confirmed this application by the following fragment of an "inſcription inſculped upon one of theſe croſs-legged "monuments, as he found it among other collections "by one ſtudious in antiquities in ſir Robert Cotton's "voluminous library, which he proves by the pe-"digree of the ſaid lord Roſſes to have been made "to the memory of one Robert Roſſe, a Templar, "who died about the year 1245, and gave to the "Templars his manor of Ribſton."

The epitaph runs thus:

"Hic requieſcit——R——Ep—— quondam Viſi-"tator generalis ordinis milicie Templi, in Ang-"lia, & in Francia & in Italia——"

Sir William Dugdale was of the ſame opinion[t]; but biſhop Tanner ſhews that both theſe antiquaries miſtook this Robert for his nameſake and grandſon, the ſecond lord Ros, ſurnamed Furſen, who incurred the diſpleaſure of Richard I. and John, and about the 14th of the latter took upon him for a time the habit of religion. He afterwards joined the barons againſt John, but was more faithful to his ſon. At the cloſe of his life he became one of the Order of Templars, in which habit departing this life 4 Henry III. 1227, he was buried in their church here. In this habit we ſee him repreſented. He was thirteen years old at his father's death before 32 Henry II. 1186.[u] ſo that at his own death he might be about 50, though it muſt be confeſſed his effigies has a younger countenance.

The fourth figure is a knight in mail with a ſur-coat, his helmet round with a kind of round cap on it, and the mouth piece up; his hands folded on his breaſt, his ſhield long and pointed and plain, a very long ſword at his right ſide; the belt from which his ſhield hangs is ſtudded with quatrefoils, and that of his ſword with lozenges, and he is croſs-legged in the ſame manner as the firſt. This may belong to William Mareſchall, earl of Pembroke, eldeſt ſon of the foregoing William, who was among the barons who rebelled againſt John, but made his ſubmiſſions to Henry III. and dying without iſſue April 6, 1231, 15 Henry III. was buried in this church 18 cal. Maii near the grave of his father.

The laſt figure in this groupe is a ſtone coffin en dos d'ane, the ridges and angles of its cover forming a kind of croſs, whoſe top terminates in a trefoil, and the foot reſts on a bull's head, or perhaps that of a ram, referring to the holy lamb: from about the middle of the ſhaft iſſue two flourets or leaves. I ſhall ſubmit it with due deference to better antiquaries whether this may not be the monument of William Plantagenet, fifth ſon of Henry III. who died in his infancy, and was buried here[w].

The northern groupe conſiſts of five figures, whoſe illuſtration will be attended with inſuperable difficulties for want of that moſt certain criterion arms on their ſhields. One of theſe figures is aſcribed by Camden and Weever to Gilbert Marſchall, third ſon of the firſt William, who, on the death of his brothers ſucceeded to the whole of the paternal inheritance. He loſt his life at a tournament at Ware[x].

However deficient our notices are to whom theſe ſeveral antient monuments belong, we have at leaſt light enough to pronounce that they do not belong either to "Dunwallo and other Britiſh kings," as tradition reports in Weever; nor to thoſe "kings "of Denmark who reigned in England" as Hentzner miſunderſtood.

It is eaſy to conceive how magnificent muſt have been the view along the Thames, when its north bank from the Tower to Weſtminſter was lined with capital manſion houſes. A very ſmall part of the original palace of Bridewell remains. It was given by Edward VI. to the city for the maintenance and employment of vagrants and idle perſons, and of poor boys; uniting it in one corporation with Bethlehem hoſpital. Bridewell.

Whitefriars was founded by ſir Richard Gray 1241, rebuilt by Hugh Courtney earl of Devon 1350, valued at £. 26. 7. The ſite now built upon retains its name, while that of Buckingham houſe is loſt in Dorſet gardens now Dorſet and Saliſbury court. Eſſex houſe, formerly Exeter houſe, from being a ſeat of the biſhop of Exeter, afterwards occupied by the earls of Eſſex, is converted into a ſtreet, as is the biſhop of Saliſbury's houſe. The ſite of Arundel houſe, that cabinet of antient marbles and other curioſities now removed to Oxford and otherwiſe diſperſed, and many of them buried under the modern houſes, is converted into ſeveral ſtreets. Whitefriars.

Somerſet houſe was one of the firſt attempts to reſtore antient architecture in England, built by the duke of Somerſet out of the ruins of the biſhops of Cheſter and Worceſter's palaces, Strand inn of court, and St. Mary le Strand church. James I. his queen Anne, and Mary de Medici, kept their court there, and the front to the river was rebuilt by Inigo Jones; but the whole with the water gate was taken down 1770 to be rebuilt in apartments for public offices and literary ſocieties. The like fate awaits the Savoy at preſent uſed for barracks. Peter earl of Savoy built it 1245, and gave it to the foreign hoſpital of Mountjoy in Savoy. It was burnt by the inſurgents 1381 out of hatred to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter. Henry VII. made it an hoſpital, which Henry VIII. gave to the biſhop of Wincheſter. It was valued at £. 530. per ann. when Edward VI. ſuppreſſed it; Mary refounded it, but Elizabeth finally diſſolved it[z]. The ſhell of the hall and gate remained converted into a printing houſe, which was burnt 1778, and ſince taken down, and converted into barracks; the chapel belongs to the French Proteſtants. Out of the ruins of Durham houſe has ariſen a more ſhowey than uſeful or ſubſtantial range of buildings called the Adelphi, from two brothers of the name of Adam, architects: and York houſe, purchaſed by Heath, archbiſhop of York 1556, afterwards let out by John duke of Buckingham, is remembered only by the ſtairs on the river and the waterworks. Beſides theſe there were along the Strand from Temple bar to Weſtminſter many other houſes of the biſhops and nobility: the biſhops of Bath and Wells, Lichfield and Coventry, Norwich, Landaff, and Carliſle, the dukes of Buckingham and Beaufort, and the earls of Exeter, Worceſter, Bedford, Salisbury, and Rivers: now known only by the names of the buildings and ſtreets Somerſet houſe. Savoy. Durham houſe. York houſe.

[t] Bar. I. 545.
[u] Mon. Ang. I. 728. [w] Dugd. I. 545.
[x] Weever ubi ſupr. Milles, 145. Sandford, 93.
[z] About a bow ſhot from Hertford: M. Paris; who calls the ſport "fortunium, quod vulgariter appellatur." It was a name given to diſguiſe the ſport which the king had expreſsly forbidden. See ib. 572. and Du Cange in voce.
[y] Tan. 315. [z] Ib. 326.

erected on their sites, except Northumberland house, which retains its antient splendor heightened by modern elegance.

Northumberland house.

This house was anciently called Northampton house, from Henry Howard earl of Northampton, who first built it, and afterwards Suffolk house from his heir the earl of Suffolk, whose daughter was married to Algernon earl of Northumberland, lord high admiral of England in the reign of Charles I. who employed Inigo Jones to complete the quadrangular form by a set of apartments next the river, and in these he received Monk, and held the first conference about the king's Restoration. This house came to the duke of Somerset by marriage 1682 with the daughter and heiress of Joscelin earl of Northumberland, and their son and successor Algernon in 1748 began to rebuild the front next the street, which was finished by the present duke, who married his daughter. Two additional wings to the front next the Thames, and a variety of other improvements both in building and furniture, have contributed to render this house the largest and most magnificent in London. The gallery 106 feet by 26 is adorned with copies of the five paintings most admired in Italy. The antient town residence of this family was in Aldersgate street. Between this house and York buildings was the hospital and chapel of St. Mary Rouncival founded or given by William Marshall earl of Pembroke t. Henry III. to that house at Pampeluna in Spain [a]. Britain's burse so called by James I. built by Robert earl of Salisbury is now named Exeter 'change.

Religious houses.

Religious houses in London were St. Martin le grand college within Aldersgate, founded about 700 by Wihtred king of Kent, rebuilt by two Saxon noblemen about 1056. Great privileges of sanctuary, &c. were granted to this collegiate church, which consisted of a dean and secular canons. It was given by Henry VII. to Westminster abbey [b].

Trinity or Christ church within Aldgate, a house of Austin canons, founded by Henry I's queen Maud 1108; the richest priory in the city or county, the prior of which was alderman of Portsoken ward [c].

St. Giles without Old Temple bar in the fields beyond Holborn, an hospital for lepers, founded by the same queen [d].

St. Bartholomew's hospital of brethren and sisters, and sick persons, and pregnant women, founded by Rahere, who founded a priory of black canons by it, valued at £. 553. per annum. the hospital valued at £. 305. Mary placed here black friars, who began to rebuild the nave, but were soon dislodged by Elizabeth [e]. The church is a curious remain of early architecture with the tomb of the founder: the cloisters are now the Black horse stables. Henry VIII. refounded the hospital, and incorporated it for sick and infirm. It was rebuilt 1729, and lately completed in form of a quadrangle.

Grey friars founded near Newgate market by John Ewin, mercer, of London, valued at £. 32. 19*s.* 10*d.* at the dissolution, given by Henry VIII. to the city of London, and in the reign of Edward VI. it began to be repaired and furnished for the maintenance of poor fatherless children, and called Christ's hospital [f].

St Katharine's hospital near the Tower founded by Stephen's queen Maud before 1148, augmented by succeeding queens, valued at £. 315. still subsisting under the patronage of the queen of England [g].

St. Thomas of Acon's hospital built on houses belonging to Gilbert father of archbishop Becket who was born there [h]. It was founded for a new order just instituted in the Holy Land called militia hospitalis S. Thome martyris Cantuariensis de Acon, a branch of the Templars, and was valued at £. 277. per annum. It is now Mercers' chapel [i].

St. Mary's Spittle without Bishopsgate in Norton Falgate, a priory and hospital of poor brethren of the order of St. Austin, founded 1197, valued at £. 478. [k]. Part of its ruins were discovered 1723. Here the lord mayor used to hear the Spital sermons now preached at St. Bride's.

St. Helen's, a Benedictine nunnery in Bishopsgate street, founded by William Fitz Williams goldsmith 1210, valued at £. 314. [l] succeeded by Leatherseller's hall; the church remains.

The Black friars settled first near Lincoln's inn 1221, removed to Baynard castle t. Edward I. valued at £. 104. [m]

St. Anthony's alien hospital and school, founded by Henry III. 1231, on the site of a Jew's synagogue in Threadneedle street. Edward IV. gave it to Windsor college, and the school continued in great repute. It was valued at £. 55. [n]

St. Mary of Bethlehem, a priory of brethren and sisters of the order of Bethlehem, or the Star, subject to the visitation of the bishop of Bethlehem, who was to be entertained there when he came to England. It was reduced to the master alone 1403. Henry VIII. gave it to the city, who have built on the old site a noble hospital for lunatics [o].

Austin friars near Broadstreet, founded 1253 by Humphry Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, a priory for friars hermits of St. Austin, valued at £. 57. granted to William lord St. John, earl of Wiltshire and marquis of Winchester. The duke of Somerset pulled down the church, in which were buried Edmund first son to Joan mother of Richard I. Humphry Bohun the founder, Richard earl of Arundel beheaded 1397, Guiscard earl of Huntingdon, 1397, John Vere earl of Oxford beheaded 1463, and his son Aubrey, William Bourchier lord Fitz Warin, Guy de Meyric earl of St. Paul, William marquis Berkeley earl of Nottingham, 1492, Edward duke of Buckingham beheaded 1521, and many other illustrious personages. The nave was granted 1550 to John a Lasco and his Walloons, and still belongs to the Dutch [p]; the site is occupied by good houses, and still called Austin friars. The marquis of Winchester built a house here, of which the part that remains is let into lodgings. Winchester street, in which the Editor of this work boasts to have received his birth, was built on the site of the rest and of the abbey.

Friars of the Sac, or de Pœnitentia Jesu, settled 1257 in the Old Jewry, where the Jews had a synagogue. The order was dissolved in the council of Lyons 1307 [q].

St. Giles without Cripplegate, an hospital of the French order, in Whitecross street, t. Edward III. [r]

[a] Tanner, 316. [b] Ib. 296. [c] Ib. 303. [d] Ib. 304. [e] Ib. 305, 306. [f] Ib. 314. [g] Ib. 310.

[h] Hence the old seal of the city had on one side St. Paul guarding the city circumscribed Sigillum baronum Lundoniarum, and on the other St. Thomas Martyr seated over the city and surrounded by votaries circumscribed, Me qui te peperi ne cesse, Thoma, tueri.

[i] Tan. 311. [k] Ib. 312. [l] Ib. 313. [m] Ib. [n] Ib. 314. [o] Ib. 315. [p] Ib. 316. [q] Tanner, 316. [r] Ib. 317.

St.

St. James' chapel on the wall at the north corner of Monkwell ſtreet, ſince called Lamb's chapel from the grantee t. Henry VIII.

Blanch queen of Navarre, wife to Edmund earl of Lancaſter, founded 1293 in the Minories the houſe of nuns of the new order of St. Clare or Minoreſſes, valued at £. 318.[x]

Cratched friars near Tower hill founded by two private perſons afterwards friars here 1298, valued at £. 52.[y].

Elſing Spital near Criplegate, a college for a warden and four prieſts, and an hoſpital for 100 ſick perſons, founded by William Elſing, citizen and mercer 1329, but 1340 he changed the college into an Auſtin priory, valued at £.193. granted to ſir John Williams maſter of the king's jewels, and ſoon after burnt down; now ſucceeded by Sion college for the London clergy, incorporated 6 Charles I. by Dr. Thomas White, who alſo founded here almſhouſes for 20 poor perſons[a].

Poultney college, founded 1332 by Sir John Poultney, often mayor of London, for a maſter, 13 prieſts, and four choriſters, valued at £.79. per ann.[z]

William Walworth, lord mayor of London 1380, founded a college near St. Michael's church, Crooked lane[y].

St. Mary of Graces, a Ciſtertian abbey, founded by Edward III. 1349, valued at £.546. per ann. now the Victualling-office on Tower-hill[z].

Guildhall or London college, founded near Guildhall for a warden, ſeven prieſts, &c. valued at £.12. 18*s.*[a]

The college of the 12 minor canons of St. Paul's, incorporated 18 Richard II. that for ſeven prieſts, founded by Roger Holme, chancellor of St. Paul's, before 1395; and that for chantry prieſts founded by Henry IV. and the executors of John of Gaunt, were all near St. Paul's[b].

In St. Martin Outwich pariſh were ſeven almſhouſes, founded about 6 Henry IV. by the maſter and wardens of St. John Baptiſt gild, now Merchant Taylors[c]. Leadenhall had on its eaſt ſide a beautiful large chapel, founded 1419 by Simon Eyre, ſometime lord-mayor, for a maſter or warden, ſix ſecular prieſts, &c. and about 1466 a fraternity of 60 prieſts, &c. was founded here by three prieſts[d] The famous ſir Richard Whittingdon rebuilt the church of St. Michael Royal, and founded in it a college for a maſter and four fellows, and an hoſpital for 13 poor, now ſubſiſting[e].

An hoſpital for poor impotent prieſts and brethren of the Papey, founded 1430 by ſome chantry prieſts near St. Auſtin's church on the wall[f].

Some other colleges and hoſpitals of inferior note are mentioned by biſhop Tanner[g].

Widmore[h] ſets aſide Sebert for the founder of Weſtminſter abbey, and places the foundation 120 or 130 years later, viz. between A. D. 730 and 740. It was a convent before Offa's time. Dunſtan and Edgar reſtored it 958. The Confeſſor began to rebuild it 1049, and finiſhed it before 1166. It was valued at £.3307.[i]

Henry VIII. founded at Weſtminſter a biſhop's ſee, whoſe dioceſe was to be Middleſex, and a cathedral conſiſting of a dean and 12 prebends. Elizabeth 1560, made it collegiate for a dean and 12 ſecular prebends, 30 petty canons, &c. two ſchoolmaſters, 40 king's ſcholars, and 12 almſmen[k]. Henry VII's chapel was erected on the ſite of Lady chapel built by Henry III. The foundation was laid January 24th, 1502: the ſtone fetched moſtly from Huddleſton in Yorkſhire. The whole charge amounted to £.14,000 ſterling. His monument with his and his queen's figures of braſs was caſt 1519 by Peter a painter of Florence, who was paid by the king's executors for materials and workmanſhip £.1000 ſterling[l]. In this chapel was a monument of Edward VI. deſtroyed in the civil wars. In its ſide chapels are others for Edward V. and his brother Richard duke of York, whoſe bones were ſuppoſed to be found at the foot of the ſteps of the chapel of the White tower 1674, of which a few were ſent to the Aſhmolean Muſeum at Oxford[m]; JAMES I. his queen and eldeſt ſon Henry; his mother MARY queen of Scots, and his paternal grandmother Margaret Douglas counteſs of Lenox; his eldeſt daughter Elizabeth queen of Bohemia 1661, and her ſon prince Rupert, and two other daughters of James I. Henry duke of Glouceſter ſon and Mary princeſs of Orange and her ſiſter Anne daughters of Charles I. CHARLES II. ten of James IIds children and his firſt wife Anne; WILLIAM III. and MARY; queen ANNE and prince George of Denmark, with William duke of Glouceſter and ſeven others of their children; GEORGE II. and queen Caroline; Frederic prince of Wales and his conſort, and of their children Elizabeth, Louiſa, Frederick-William, and Edward duke of York; William duke of Cumberland, and his ſiſter Caroline.

Since Mr. Camden's time have been added to the liſt of worthies interred or honoured with memorials in this temple of Fame the following illuſtrious perſonages, with others not mentioned by him:

Nobility.

Philippa daughter of lord Mohun 1433.
Thomas earl of Dorſet 1608.
Talbot earl of Shrewſbury 1617.
Thomas Cecil, firſt lord Burleigh, earl of Exeter 1621.
Francis Hollis, ſon of John earl of Clare 1622.
George Villers duke of Buckingham, ſtabbed by Felton 1626.
Counteſs of Derby 1626.
Lionel Cranfield earl of Middleſex 1645, and his ſons and ſucceſſors Lionel 1674, and James 1652.
Robert earl of Eſſex 1647.
Francis lord Cottington 1652.
Lodowic, Eſme, and Charles Stuart, ſucceſſively dukes of Richmond 1623, 1661, 1672, alſo Mary wife of the latter, 1702.
George Goring earl of Norwich 1662.
Charles Berkeley Earl of Falmouth 1665.
George Monk duke of Albemarle 1669.
Edward Montague earl of Sandwich 1672.
Edward earl of Clarendon 1674.
William Cavendiſh duke of Newcaſtle 1676.
Edward lord Herbert of Cherbury 1678.
Charles marquis of Harwich his ſon 1713.
Wentworth Dillon earl of Roſcommon 1684.
James Butler duke of Ormond. 1688.
Mary counteſs of Stafford 1693.
Charles Gerard earl of Macclesfield 1694.
George Saville marquis of Halifax 1695.
Aubrey Vere earl of Oxford 1702.
Robert earl of Scarſdale 1707.

[x] Ib. [y] Ib. 323. [z] Ib. 319. [a] Ib. 318. [b] Ib. 323. [c] Ib. [d] Ib. 325. [e] Ib. 318. [f] Ib. 320. [g] Ib. 326. [h] P. 7. [i] Stow. 499. G. [k] Ib. [l] Tan. 292. [m] See the cat. of its MSS. G.

William Benunck earl of Portland 1709.
Laurence Hyde earl of Rocheſter 1711.
Viſcount Ranelagh 1711.
John Hollis duke of Newcaſtle 1711.
Edward earl of Jerſey 1711.
Sidney earl of Godolphin 1712.
Charles Mountague marquis of Halifax 1715.
George Fitzroy duke of Northumberland 1716.
Henry earl of Stafford 1719.
Meinhard duke Schomberg 1719.
John Sheffield duke of Buckingham 1720.
James earl Stanhope, 1721-2.
John Churchill duke of Marlborough 1722.
Edmund Sheffield duke of Buckingham 1736.
Lord Aubrey Beauclerk 1740.
John Campbell duke of Argyle and Greenwich 1743.
Algernon Seymour duke of Somerſet 1750, Frances his wife 1754, and George Lord Beauchamp their ſon 1744.
Geo. Auguſtus viſcount Howe 1758.
Col. Edward Townſend 1759.
John Paul Howard, earl of Stafford 1762.
William Pulteney earl of Bath 1764.
William Pitt earl of Chatham 1778.

Knights and Baronets.
Sir Bernard Brocas, beheaded 1399.
Sir John Harpedon 1457.
Sir Humphrey Stanley 1505.
Sir Richard Peckſall maſter of the buck hounds to Elizabeth.
Sir Thomas Parry, treaſurer to Elizabeth and maſter of the court of wards 1560.
Sir John Burgh 1594.
Sir Francis Vere 1608.
Sir George Hollis 1626.
Sir Thomas Richardſon, 1634.
Sir Joſeph Williamſon 1706.
Sir Francis Norris created lord Norris of Ricot.

Generals.
Joſhua Gueſt 1747.
George Wade 1748.
James Wolfe 1759.

Admirals.
Sir Edward Spragge 1673.
Sir Cloudeſly Shovel 1707.
John Baker 1716.
Sir Charles Wager 1743.
Sir John Balchen 1744.
Sir Peter Warren 1752.
Charles Watſon 1758.
Captain Cornwall 1743.

Abbots.
William of Colcheſter t. R. II.
George Flaccet 1414.
John Eaſtney 1438.
Edward Kirton 1466.
John Iſlip 1510.
In the cloiſters 3.

Archbiſhops.
Langham, Cant. 1376.
Waldby, York, 1397.
Spotſwood, St. Andrew's 1640.
Boulter, Armagh 1742.

Biſhops.
Waltham, Saliſbury, 1305.
Courtney, Norwich, 1413.
Milling, Hereford, 1492.
Ruthal, Durham, 1524.
Bilſon, Wincheſter, 1619.
Monk, Hereford 1661.
Duppa, Wincheſter, 1662.
Ferne, Cheſter, 1662.
Henchman, Londonderry, 1713.
Wetenhal, Cork and Kilmore, 1713.
Sprat, Rocheſter, 1713.
Bradford, Rocheſter, 1731.
Wilcocks, Rocheſter 1750
Pearce, Rocheſter 1777
Gabriel Goodman, firſt dean of this church, Mr. Camden's firſt patron, 1601.
Robert South, D. D. one of his ſucceſſors, 1716

Poets.
Spenſer 1598.
Beaumont 1615.
Drayton 1631.
Jonſon 1637.
Cowley 1667.
Davenant 1668.
Shadwell 1692.
Dryden 1700.
St. Evremond 1703.
Stepney 1706.
Rowe 1718.
Prior 1721.
Congreve 1728.
Gay 1732.

Cenotaphs.
Shakeſpear.
Milton.
Butler.
Philips.
Thomſon.
Gray.
Dr. Stephen Hales.
Sir John Denham, Mr. Addiſon, Bp. Atterbury, Dr. King, and Francis Beaumont the Dramatic Writer, buried without monuments.

Learned Writers.
Dr. John Redmayne 1551.
Iſaac Caſaubon 1614.
William Camden 1623.
Sir Henry Spelman 1641.
Dr. Heylin 1662.
Sir William Sanderſon 1676.
Dr. Iſaac Barrow 1677.
Mrs. Aphra Behn 1689.
Mr. Henry Wharton 1694.
Dr. Buſby 1695.
Ezekiel Spanheim 1710.
Dr. Knipe 1711.
Dr. Grabe 1711.
Sir John Chardin 1713.
Sir Iſaac Newton 1726.

Phyſicians.
Thomas Sydenham, 1689.
John Woodward 1728.
John Freind, 1728.
Richard Mead, 1754.

Muſicians, &c.
Henry Purcell 1695.
John Blow 1708.
William Croft 1727.
George Frederic Handel 1759.
Sir Godfrey Kneller 1723.
Thomas Betterton 1710.
Barton Booth.
Mrs. Pritchard.
David Garrick 1779.
Thomas Parr, aged 152, 1635.
James Craggs 1720.
Joſeph Gaſcoigne Nightingale 1752.

The figures on the Moſaic pavement of the high altar laid 1267 by abbot Ware, repreſent the time of the world's duration, or the time in which the primum mobile, according to the Ptolemaic ſyſtem, was going about, and was given in theſe rhymes formerly on it:

Si lector poſita prudenter cuncta revolvat
Hic finem primi mobilis inveniet.
Septes trina, canes & equos, hominesque ſubaddas,
Cervas & corvos, aquilas, immania cete,
Mundum, quodque ſequens pereuntes triplicat annos,
Sphæricus archetypum monſtrat globus hic microcoſmum;
Chriſti milleno, bis centeno, duodeno
Cum ſexageno ſubductis quatuor anno [1268].

Thus explained in a MS. Cotton. Cl. A. VIII.

The threefold hedge is put for three years, the time a dry hedge uſually laſts; a dog for three times that ſpace, or nine years, the uſual term of its life; a horſe for 27 years; a man 81; a hart 243; a raven 729; an eagle 2187; a whale 6561; the world 19683; the ſucceeding figures giving a term of years imagined to be the term of their continuance, three times as much as that before it [a].

Weſtminſter ſchool.

Weſtminſter ſchool, which was founded by Elizabeth 1590, for 40 boys, and has produced ſo many bright ornaments to this nation both in church and ſtate, deſerves to be particularly mentioned here as Mr. Camden was once maſter of it, and Ben Jonſon one of his ſcholars. Dr. Buſby, who was maſter upwards of 50 years, greatly contributed to keep up its reputation, formed its muſæum, and improved both the maſter's and his prebendal houſe, new paved the abbey choir, enlarged the king's hoſpital of greencoats in Tothilfields, rebuilt Willen church in Bucks where his eſtate was, built a library at Wells, repaired Lutton church, c. Lincoln, left a fund for the annual augmentation of the income of a number of poor clergy to read catechetical lectures in the irreſpective pariſhes, and founded two lectures at Chriſt church, Oxford [b]. This ſchool inſtead of one maſter and one uſher as at firſt, has now an upper and under maſter, and five uſhers, who have about 400 youth under their tuition. A plan was ſet on foot when the preſent archbiſhop of York was maſter for building a college for the uſe of the ſtudents, but this did not ſucceed.

[a] Widmore, Weſt. Ab. 72.

[b] G.

The

The chapter-house is at present used as a repository of records, among which is that curious and matchless one called Domesday book, now printing by a partial fac simile. The gate-house of the abbey close, used as a prison, was taken down 1776. In the dormitory was kept the Cotton library till its removal to the British Museum.

Westminster

Westminster hall, built by William Rufus 1097, who kept Whitsuntide there, as did Edward I. was 270 feet long, by 74 wide; and the king hearing some say it was too great, repeated it was not half big enough, and was but a chamber compared to what he intended. M. Paris says that the foundations were to be seen stretching from the river to the common causeway [7]. It was rebuilt as it appears at present 1397 by Richard II. who kept his Christmas in it 1399. It is esteemed the largest room in Europe unsupported by pillars. The front was adorned with statues of the kings of England now concealed by two coffeehouses. At the upper end on the left hand is the court of King's Bench, and on the right the court of Chancery: on the right side of the hall the court of Common Pleas. On the left hand at entering you ascend to the Exchequer, and on the right hand to the duchy of Lancaster's court. At the bottom of the steps to the former is a pillar charged with the arms of archbishop Stafford [o] chancellor of the Exchequer t. Henry VI. and of Ralph lord Boteler of Sudeley [p], treasurer of the Exchequer 21 Henry VI. also those of Edward the Confessor, and Old France and England quarterly, and the motto Dieu et mon droit, each word crowned, and E. R. for queen Elizabeth, who repaired this place, 1565, as the following inscription sets forth:

Annum millenum quingentenum numerato
Ac sexagenum, quintus & esto comes,
Quum regina sui posuit fundamina fisci,
Hoc opus incipiens Elizabetha novum.
Anno post quinto præclaræ hæc fabrica moles
Extructa est; Dominæ fausta sit illa piæ,
Sit bene fausta suis hæredibus, omine pulchro
Sit multos annos hæc stabilita domus.

On repairing these steps 1781, they found under them the figure of a knight, large as life, in armour in a close helmet, probably formerly placed on the west front of the hall [q]. To the hall adjoined the courts of Wards and Star chamber dissolved at the restoration.

Some ascribe the foundation of St. Stephen's college to king Stephen, but Widmore to Edward III. who 1347 placed here a dean, 12 secular canons, &c. at first paid out of the Exchequer, but afterwards endowed with lands to the value of £. 1085 per annum. The chapel is now the House of Commons [r].

Westminster school.

The name of the palace is retained in the old and new palace yards. The house of Lords is decorated with the history of the defeat of the Spanish Armada in tapestry. In the Sanctuary, where now is the market, was an old church or chapel of two stories with a belfrey, supposed of Edward III's time, taken down 1751 [s]. In Westminster was an hospital for lepers, founded about t. Henry III. value £. 100 per ann. on or near whose site St. James's palace is now built [t]. Within the abbey almonry Lady Margaret, mother of Henry VII. founded an almshouse for poor women, now the single mens lodgings. Henry VII. founded another on the south side of the gatehouse for 12 poor men, one of them a priest [u]. Westminster infirmary was established 1719.

The horse ferry at Westminster was perhaps one of the most frequented passages over the river Thames ever since the building London bridge and laying aside the antient ferry there. But the many accidents and inconveniences with which it was unavoidably attended occasioned the obtaining in 1736 an act for building a stone bridge; the first stone of which was laid January 29th, 173½, and including the delay by the settling of one of the piers, it was compleated in 1747. It is 1223 feet long (above 300 feet longer than London bridge) and 44 wide, and the centre arch 76 feet wide. The whole expence amounted to £. 389,500.

Whitehall, which had so many monuments of Holbein, and other antient artists, was by the carelessness of some of William III's Dutch soldiers burnt down 1697, except the Banqueting house, which had been built by Inigo Jones, and the ceiling painted by Rubens with the apotheosis of Charles II. as the sides were proposed to have been done by Verrio with the institution of the garter. Out of this room Charles I. came to execution. It is now used as a chapel. Two gates of this palace were taken down 1726 and 175 , so that the Treasury is the only remaining antient part. Jones drew a most elegant plan for rebuilding the whole in a magnificence becoming the king of England, who now resides in St. James's palace, an irregular old brick building without one single external beauty, or in the Queen's palace, which was the town residence of the duke of Buckingham, more suitable for a private nobleman than a British sovereign. St. James's park was a morass till drained by Henry VIII. enlarged by Charles II. under whom Le Nôtre laid out the mall half a mile long, and the canal 2800 feet long and 100 broad. The royal stables at Lomesbury now Bloomsbury being burnt 1537, Henry VIII. removed them to the Mews, whose north side was rebuilt by the late king 1732. Behind the east side is the church of St. Martin's in the fields, rebuilt with a Pantheon portico 1721, and in St. Martin's lane is a public school and library erected and endowed by Dr. Tennison who was many years rector of this parish in the reign of James II. at the time when a Popish school had been opened in the Savoy. He was after the Revolution advanced to the see of Lincoln, and thence translated to Canterbury, which he filled for upwards of 20 years with great honour. He founded two other charity schools at Lambeth and Croydon in his life, and left £. 1000. towards erecting two protestant bishoprics in the West Indies [x].

Whitehall.

The cross at Charing, which at the time of its erection was but a village, was demolished in the civil wars, and at the Restoration succeeded by a beautiful equestrian statue of Charles I. made by Herbert le Sœur 1633 at the expence of the Howard-Arundel family. The parliament sold it to a brazier in Holborn with strict Charing.

[7] G. [o] In a border engrailed on a chevron G. a mitre.
[p] A fess between 6 crosses patee Gu. quartering 2 bends. Sudley. Crest a greyhound.
[q] This, with the arms and pillar before-mentioned, and the busts over the door alluding to the place, were engraved in one plate with letter-press by John Carter; price 2s. 6d.
[r] Tan. 319.
[s] Stukeley in Archæol. I. 40. [t] Tan. 299. [u] Ib. 326. [x] G.

orders to break it in pieces; but he concealed it carefully under ground till the reſtoration, and it was ſet up here 1678 on a pedeſtal made by Grinlin Gibbons[x].

Mr. Tyrrel[y] obſerves that Mr. Camden is the firſt who mentions the preſervation of Edward I. by his queen, and from him Speed has tranſcribed it into his Chronicle. Both of them quote Rodericus Toletanus, but that archbiſhop, as he ſays himſelf, finiſhed his hiſtory in 1243, twenty years before this accident happened, nor could Tanner find it in his book. Hemingford, p. 591, expreſsly ſays that the Grand Maſter of the Templars immediately ſent the prince plenty of precious drugs to ſtop the progreſs of the poiſon[z], but afterwards a mortification being apprehended, an Engliſh phyſician undertook to cut out the bad fleſh in the preſence of many of the nobility and the princeſs, who, not being able to ſtand the operation, the prince ordered Edmund and John de Veſey to lead her out, who told her it was better that ſhe ſhould weep than all England. Wikes[a] only ſays he was healed by the grace of Chriſt.

Holborn. In a large room of Oldbourne hall on the left hand of Shoe lane, made a carpenter's workſhop when I ſaw it March 8, 1764, was a ſtucco ceiling in compartments with theſe arms.

England and France, Scotland and Ireland, quarterly, impaling, quarterly,

1. 3 Lions paſſant guardant among 9 creſcents.
2. a Lion rampant againſt a circular battle-ax.
3. 3 Crowns.
4. 8 Creſcents, 3. 2. 3. in chief 2 Lions paſſant.

Below a Wivern.

On a ſcutcheon of pretence,

1. 2 Lions paſſant guardant.
2.
3. a Swan gorged and chained.
4. a Griffin rampant.

On this another ſcutcheon of pretence, 3 barrs impaling a croſs patee.

England, Scotland, and Ireland, under a label of 2 points and in a garter.

In the two oppoſite corners profiles of an armed head ROMANORVM REX I. and of a lady's head LVCRESIA ROM. In the centre of the ceiling England, Scotland, and Ireland in a garter as before, and on each ſide of it I. R. At the corner of the ceiling by the door 1617 On the mantle tree in ſtone the labours of Hercules. This place is called king John's palace.

Since Mr. Camden's time Holborn has been ſo increaſed by buildings that the houſe and gardens of ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, which then took up a conſiderable part of it, are now known only by name. Ely houſe, a ſubſtantial antient pile, has been exchanged by the late biſhop of that ſee for a modern one in St. James's ſquare, and pulled down to be built into houſes except the chapel.

At St. John's, Clerkenwell was a Benedictine nunnery, valued at £. 262. per annum, founded about 1100 by the ſame Briſet who founded the houſe or hoſpital of knights hoſpitalers, valued at £. 2385; the ſite granted to John viſcount Liſle; the greateſt part of the church with the fine bell tower blown up 3 Edward VI.[b] Mary refounded it, but Elizabeth ſoon ſuppreſſed it[c]. The gate ſtill remains, being purchaſed 1781 by Mr. Henry for a private houſe.

Charter houſe. Sir Walter Manny, one of the firſt knights of the garter, bought 1349 a piece of ground for a burial ground, called the New Church Haw, with a chapel, wherein he intended about 1360 to found a college for a dean and 12 ſecular prieſts, but next year Northburgh biſhop of London joined with him in building and endowing a Carthuſian priory for double the number of monks, finiſhed about 1370, valued at £. 642. per annum. Thomas Sutton, eſq; of Camps, c. Cambridge, bought it of Henry earl of Suffolk for £. 13000. t. James I. and founded and largely endowed a magnificent hoſpital conſiſting of a maſter, preacher, head and under ſchoolmaſters, 44 boys, and 80 decayed gentlemen, merchants, or ſoldiers, under 50 years of age, with a phyſician, ſurgeon, &c. endowed with lands to the amount of £. 4493. per annum, the greateſt and moſt bountiful gift (ſays Stowe) that ever at any time was given in England, no abbey (at the firſt foundation thereof) excepted, or therewith to be compared, being the gift of one man only[d]. The men receive £. 6. 6s. 8d. per annum, beſides board, lodging, gown, and other cloaths. The boys muſt be of the age of 15, and continue at the ſchool eight years, after which 29 of them are ſent to the Univerſities with exhibitions of £. 20. per annum, for eight years, or are apprenticed with a fee of £. 40. The governors are the Royal family, the principal officers of ſtate, archbiſhops, and biſhops. The king nominates two penſioners and two boys.

In the Crown and Rolls Tavern, Chancery lane, rebuilt 176., were in 1746 over the chimney of the great room up one pair of ſtairs the arms of Carew with quarterings, ſupporters with banners and motto, and the ſame on the plaiſter fretwork of the ceiling, with an impalement[e]. Mr. Vertue ſaw in the Augmentation office Cardinal Wolſey's agreement with the prior of Clerkenwell for this old timber houſe wherein he once lived[f]. Behind was the houſe and garden of ſir Walter Raleigh.

In taking down an old building formerly the Roſe Tavern juſt without Temple-bar 1775, where now is built a court of houſes, was diſcovered on the plaiſter of the wall of one ſide of a room near 25 feet long a large painting in oil repreſenting the Converſion of St. Paul in a maſterly ſtyle. The room is ſuppoſed to have been the chapel of Thanet houſe, and this the weſt end. The ſite of theſe buildings was granted to ſome of the Tufton family by Henry VIII. Mr. Ham, linen draper, leſſee of the premiſes under the earl of Thanet, would have preſerved the wall, but the ſudden heavy rains that came on brought it down. A drawing was however taken in time for my uſe by Mr. Baſire[g]. At the ſame place were found ſome ſhillings of Elizabeth, one dated 1562, one of James I. a thin braſs medal of James II. with his head, and on the reverſe, arms and ſupporters, and ſome Nuremberg tokens and Venetian pieces.

[x] Walp. Aneed. II. 158.
[y] II. 1094.
[z] Dedit ei pretioſa quæque libere ne infuſum venenum noceret, & ne interiora aſcenderet. P. 97.
[a] And the ſtone uſed for Somerſet houſe. Stowe, 483.
[b] Tanner, 299.
[c] Tanner, 321. Hearne and Bearcroft's hiſtories of it, 1677 and 1737. 8vo.
[d] Of ſir George Carew who lived here. See Carew's Cornwall, p. 61.
[e] A. S.min.
[f] It appears by the minutes of the Society of Antiquaries that this painting had been uncovered in 1741. Mr. Vertue took a drawing of it, which, together with his obſervations on it at large, were preſented to the Society that year, and entered in their regiſter, though they are not now to be found. He ſuppoſed it repreſented ſome action between 1522 and 1530; but allowing ſome portraits of Henry VIII's time to have been introduced, the ſubject is moſt evidently the Converſion of St. Paul.
[g]

Peter

Peter de Colechurch, chaplain of St. Mary Colechurch, began London bridge 1176, 22 Henry II. Iſembert, maſter of the ſchools of Xante, who had lately built a bridge there and at Rochelle, was appointed by king John to finiſh it, which he did 1209. In the ninth pier was a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas. The lovers of antiquity muſt regret the demolition of this ſingular, perhaps, unparalleled monument, in the late alterations of the bridge. It was 65 feet by 20, and 14 feet high, divided into two ſtories; the upper in modern times ſerving for a dwelling houſe, the lower for a warehouſe. Under the ſtaircaſe was found the tomb of Peter, the architect, without braſs or inſcription. The chapel on Wakefield bridge, built about 200 years after this, like thoſe on many other bridges, is rather annexed to, than made in, a pier.

The Thames water was firſt conveyed into the city by a machine erected in an arch of the bridge by Peter Maurice, a German engineer, 1582. Bevis Bulmar, twelve years after, ſet up a large horſe-engine of four pumps at Broken wharf, Thames-ſtreet, which ſoon proved too expenſive to be worked. The works at the bridge are particularly deſcribed by Henry Beighton, in N° 417 of the Philoſophical Tranſactions.

Southwark. The borough of Southwark was purchaſed of Edward VI. by the city 1549 for £. 647. and annexed to the city, and formed into a new ward called Bridge-ward, ſubject to the lord mayor and corporation with enjoyment of the ſame laws and privileges within the borough and precinct as the citizens of London had within this city. But it was not thereby removed out of Surrey, as appears by the proviſions of the king's grant, whereby care is taken that the lord mayor ſhould do and execute all ſuch things within the borough as other juſtices might within the county of Surrey, and that he as eſcheator within the borough and precincts ſhould have power to direct precepts to the ſheriff of Surrey [h].

Bermondſey. Bermondſey priory was founded 1082 by Aylwin Child for Cluniacs from France, augmented by William Rufus, and made denizon 4 Richard II. and an abbey 1399, valued at £. 474. per annum, granted to ſir Robert Southwell [i]. The duke of Suffolk's houſe oppoſite St. George's church coming to the crown, Henry VIII. erected in it a Mint which gives name to the ſite, and was a privileged retreat for debtors till aboliſhed by parliament [k].

The Clink on the Bank ſide is a liberty with a court of record and leet and priſon for debtors belonging to the biſhop of Wincheſter [l].

St. Mary Overy is thought to have been a religious houſe before the Conqueſt. The biſhop of Bayeux held here in Domeſday unum monaſterium, which ſeems to imply ſomething more than the church: the eccleſia is mentioned beſides. Stowe ſays it was refounded for canons regular by William Pont de l'Arche and William Dauncy, Norman knights, 1106; others by Gifford biſhop of Wincheſter 1107. It was valued at £. 624. and the church made parochial for the two pariſhes of St. Margaret and St. Mary Magdalen [k]. In it are monuments for Gower the poet and Andrews biſhop of Wincheſter. The name of Overy is no more than the Saxon open, q. d. over or on the other ſide the Thames, and perhaps the termination ea, iſland or place. On the burning this houſe 1207, the convent founded an hoſpital near it, wherein they ſaid maſs till it was rebuilt 1228, when the hoſpital was removed to the other ſide the borough, and dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr. It was recited to be of the foundation of the biſhops of Wincheſter, who were patrons, and valued at £. 309. Edward VI. 1551 gave it to the city of London, and they began to repair it for ſick perſons [l]. The king 1553 incorporated it in common with Bridewell and Chriſt's hoſpitals. It ſuffered ſo much in its revenues by the great fire that in 1699 a ſubſcription was ſet on foot for its relief, by which and ſubſequent benefactions it was rebuilt as now in three courts. The three wards on the ſouth ſide of the firſt were erected at the charge of Thomas Frederic, eſq. one of the governors 1708; the three on the north ſide by Thomas Guy, ſtationer, 1707. The whole contains nineteen wards and 474 beds, which are always filled, and many out-patients relieved.

Notwithſtanding the morality of Mr. Camden's obſervation reſpecting the ſtews, it is ſtill a queſtion whether the licenſing ſuch places by authority would not tend more to preſerve the morals as well as the health of the ſubjects than the preſent unreſtrained and promiſcuous indulgence. The reſtrictions under which theſe places in Southwark were laid prove the antiquity of as well as the proviſion againſt the concomitant diſeaſe among us.

Wards. The city is divided into 26 wards. The common councilmen are 210 in number. The trading incorporated companies are 91, of which 52 have each a hall, and 12 take place of the reſt as being of greater antiquity, and of one of theſe the Lord Mayors commonly make themſelves free if not ſo before their election.

Trading Companies. The incorporated ſocieties of merchants are the Hamburgh company, incorporated by Elizabeth, but ſubſiſting under the name of merchants of the ſtaple and merchants adventurers, as early as Edward I. The Ruſſia company, 1551 by Mary. The Levant or Turkey company, by Elizabeth 1555. The Eaſt India company by the ſame queen 1601. The Royal African company 1588. The Hudſon's bay company by Charles II. The South Sea company 9 Anne. Beſides theſe the Royal Exchange and the London Inſurance companies were incorporated by George I. for the ſecurity of property, for which there are ſeveral other offices eſtabliſhed but not incorporated.

The military government of this city is by a court of lieutenancy, compoſed of the mayor and aldermen and principal citizens, who have under their command ſix regiments of trained bands.

Bank of England. Among the public civil buildings of this metropolis is the Bank of England, eſtabliſhed by act of parliament 1693, and greatly enlarged by additional buildings within the laſt twenty years. The pariſh church of St. Chriſtopher Le Stocks is going to give way to their extended wings, having been purchaſed by them for £. 4464. In digging up ſome old foundations near the new buildings for the Bank 1732 Mr. Sampſon the architect diſcovered a large old wall eight feet under ground, conſiſting of chalk and rubble next to Threadneedle-ſtreet, in which was an arch of ſtone and a buſt of a man in it on the plinth, which he carefully covered up: there was no inſcription, but he believed it Roman [m].

Chriſt's hoſpital. Henry VIII. in his laſt year gave St. Bartholomew's priory and the convent of Grey friars which adjoined thereto, for the relief of the poor, founding [h] G. ex Stowe, 442-3.

[i] Tan. 535.
[l] Ib. 542.
[k] G. [l] G. [m] S. Gale in Ant. Soc. min. [k] Tan. 536.

the

the two churches of Chriſt and Little St. Bartholomew. This deſign was completed in the reign of Edward VI. who incorporated the governors of St. Thomas, Bridewell, and Chriſt church, by the name of the mayor, commonalty and citizens of the city of London, governors of the poſſeſſions, revenues and goods of the hoſpitals of Edward VI. king of England, &c. In 1552 the Grey friars houſe was prepared for the poor children, who are at 15 years of age bound apprentices for ſeven years, or ſent to the Univerſities, where they are maintained for the like term. This hoſpital received conſiderable private donations, and Charles II. founded a mathematical ſchool to qualify forty boys for the ſea, ten of whom are yearly apprenticed to ſhip maſters and ten received in their room. The governors appoint forty more. Here are frequently 1000 children of both ſexes ſupported at a time [11], all cloathed in an uniform dreſs of the time of their foundation.

Charitable Foundations.

Among the modern charitable foundations in this great metropolis, muſt be reckoned the hoſpital for Foundlings, eſtabliſhed 1739; the London Infirmary in Whitechapel road 1740; two lying-in hoſpitals 1750-1; two for inoculation; St. Luke's for lunatics 1751, one for the reception of penitent proſtitutes 1758, the Aſylum for orphan girls 1761, St. George's Hyde park corner, 1733, the Middleſex hoſpital 1765. The Marine ſociety eſtabliſhed 1757.

Guildhall.

Guildhall was damaged by the fire 1666, but retains its antient form, being 153 feet long, and 58 high, adorned with the portraits of 18 judges, their majeſties, &c. The courts held in the adjoining apartments are the mayor's, ſheriff's, chamberlain's, orphans, and others for the government of the city. Its chapel rebuilt by Henry VI. and bought of Edward VI. was alſo repaired ſince the fire. The library formerly in it was borrowed by the protector Somerſet and never returned [12].

Leadenhall.

Leadenhall is now the warehouſe for leather, Colcheſter baize, meal and wool. Its market the largeſt in London, if not in Europe, conſiſts of five courts; the firſt entered from Leadenhall-ſtreet by a large Gothic gate [13]. Below in the ſame ſtreet is the Eaſt India houſe, built on the ſite of lord Craven's houſe 1726, with extenſive warehouſes behind. This company was firſt incorporated by Elizabeth 1601, laid open by Cromwell, united again 1657, a new one eſtabliſhed 1698, united to the old one 1702 [14].

East India Company.

Royal Exchange.

The Royal Exchange was begun 1566, and finiſhed the next year. Queen Elizabeth and her nobility dined 1570 with its founder at his houſe in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and after viewing every part of this building gave it its preſent name. It was rebuilt after the fire in its preſent form at the expence of £.80,000. It is 203 feet long, 171 broad, the area 61 perches, 56 feet high, and the turret 178. Above are ſhops and offices; below vaults; in the centre a ſtone ſtatue of Charles II. by Gibbon; round the fronts above thoſe of our other kings and queens, and below thoſe of ſir Thomas Greſham and ſir John Barnard [15]. Greſham college was the houſe of ſir Thomas Greſham, who gave it to the city and the mercers company to maintain and lodge four perſons to read lectures in divinity, aſtronomy, geometry, and muſic. Since the converting of this college into an Exciſe office, which has been built on its ſite, the lectures are read over the Royal Exchange, and the profeſſors as well as the poor who lived in almſhouſes adjoining to the houſe are otherwiſe provided for. Mr. Romſey ſhewed the Antiquary Society 1769 a ſilver denarius of Severus. Rev. Victory ſtanding before a ſhield VICTORIAE AVGG. FEL. found in its ruins [n].

Greſham college.

Royal Society.

The Royal Society, founded by Charles II. 1662, had their meetings and muſeum here till they removed to Crane-court 1715, to a houſe erected at the expence of Richard Waller, one of their ſecretaries, where they had a handſome muſeum in the garden, and a library begun by the bounty of Henry afterwards duke of Norfolk 1666 [16]. In 1780 they finally removed to the apartments built for them by royal munificence on the ſite of Somerſet houſe.

Society of Antiquaries.

They were followed thither the next year by the Society of Antiquaries, which took its riſe in the reign of Elizabeth, but being ſuppreſſed by James I. about 1604 was revived about the beginning of the preſent century, and was at length incorporated by royal charter 1751.

Steel yard.

Since the diſſolution of the Hanſeatic merchants the Steel-yard where they had their houſes and magazines is uſed as warehouſes for iron, &c. in bars, &c. [17].

College of Phyſicians.

The college of Phyſicians, incorporated 10 Henry VIII. have a houſe in Warwick-lane, built by ſir Chriſtopher Wren 1682, before which they met in Dr. Linacre's houſe in Knight-riders-ſtreet, and after in Amen corner, where Dr. Harvey built a library and hall 1652, and left them his books [18].

Herald's college.

The Herald's college, antiently Derby houſe, rebuilt 1669, is on St. Benet's hill near Doctors Commons [19].

Halls.

The ſeveral companies have their halls, many of them built and finiſhed in an elegant ſtile, and ſome furniſhed with valuable portraits. That of the Painter ſtainers in Little Trinity-lane, ſhould be mentioned in honour to our author, who preſented them with his portrait and a ſilver cup. His father was one of this company.

Conduits.

The conduits to which Mr. Camden alludes were probably thoſe in Fleetſtreet and Cheapſide. In the laſt ſtreet was alſo a croſs which ſerved this purpoſe, and eaſt of it was the ſtandard with another conduit. The foundation of the croſs in Cheapſide was diſcovered in new paving the ſtreet about 15 years ago.

Churches.

The number of churches in the city and ſuburbs in Norden's time 1593 was 113, beſides thoſe in Weſtminſter, and the new ones built by the act of queen Anne [20]. Before the fire there were 97 within the walls and 17 without. There are now but 62 pariſh churches within the city and liberties [o]. The ſteeples of St. Mary le Bow, St. Bride's, and the church of St. Stephen, Walbrook, were built by ſir Chriſtopher Wren.

British Muſeum.

The Britiſh Muſeum, formerly the manſion of the duke of Montagu, was purchaſed of his heirs by parliament, for uniting together the Royal, Cottonian, Harleian, Sloanian, and other collections of books, MSS. coins, antiquities, ſubjects in natural hiſtory, &c. &c. for the public uſe, for which it is excellently adapted. The firſt of theſe libraries contains the books and MSS. of our princes from Henry VII. to Charles II. the ſecond the MSS. collected by [11] G. [12] G. [13] G. [14] G.

[15] G. [n] Min. [16] G. [17] G. [18] G.
[19] G. [20] G. [o] Newbury VI. 100.

ſir

ſir Robert Cotton, his ſon, and grandſon ſir John, which laſt gave it to the public by act 12 and 13 William III. c. 7. The Harleian collection of MSS. was formed by Edward earl of Oxford, and purchaſed by government 1753, at the ſame time with the library, MSS. and natural curioſities of ſir Hans Sloane. The whole purchaſe, including the houſe, with its repairs and fitting up, and the ſalaries of the ſeveral officers, amounted to not leſs than £. 100,000.

Among the many eminent men natives of London, are reckoned Mr. CAMDEN; ſir Thomas More, born 1480, beheaded 1535; ſir Thomas Greſham 1519, died 1579; Edmund Spencer 1533—1599; Inigo Jones 1572—1652; ſir Thomas Brown 1605—1682; John Milton 1608—1674; Abraham Cowley 1618—1667; ſir William Temple 1628—1698; William Penn 1644—1718; Dr. William Lowth, father of the preſent biſhop of London, 1661—1732; Thomas Sherlock biſhop of Bangor, Saliſbury, and London 1678—1761; Thomas Rowe 1687—1715; Alexander Pope 1688—1744; William Hogarth 1698—1764; Sir William Blackſtone 1723—1780. In Weſtminſter were born ſir Francis Bacon lord Verulam 1561—1626; Ben Jonſon 1574—1637; Anthony Aſhley Cowper third earl of Shafteſbury 1671—1713.

Edmonton gives name to a hundred, and has an old ſeat of the Leaks called Wire hall, and at Pymmes was in Norden's time a proper little houſe of lord treaſurer Burleigh. In this pariſh, on Buſh hill, is a circular entrenchment, ſingle ditcht, ſurrounding Mr. Clayton's houſe, and called a Britiſh oppidum: but it may as well be a Roman camp pointing to Bury ſtreet in the ſame pariſh, and croſſing the Lea into Eſſex.

At Southgate, a hamlet of Edmonton, is Minchenden houſe, the ſeat of the duke of Chandos, by marriage with the heireſs of John Nichol, eſq; who built it.

The adjoining hundred of Oſſulſton gave title of baron 1682, 34 Charles II. to John Bennet whoſe ſon Charles was 1714 created earl of Tankerville [21], which titles are ſtill held by his great grandſon and nameſake. The Eleanor croſs at Waltham croſs in Cheſhunt pariſh, Herts, is ſtill entire at the turning down to the town of Waltham Holy Croſs in Eſſex.

Enfield is the ſkeleton of a market town. Norden ſays the palace was built by an earl of Worceſter. Joice, mother of John Tiptoft the learned earl of Worceſter, has a tomb here 1446; but the arms of Lovel do not appear on the palace, which is now let into tenements, having one handſome room with pannelled wainſcot, and on the chimney-piece, as well as on the outer walls of the houſe, the arms of England t. Elizabeth. In the gardens are a handſome cedar and other curious trees, planted by Mr. Uvedale, maſter of the freeſchool here in the beginning of this century. Fourtree hall in this pariſh, the ſeat of Eliab Breton, eſq. is aſcribed to I. Jones, and belonged to the Rayntons, of whom ſir Nicholas was lord mayor of London 1640, and has a monument in the church. In the ſame pariſh is the manor of Durance, ſo called from a family who came in with the Conqueror, and here was alſo a houſe of the biſhops of Lincoln, or of the other William of Wickham, biſhop of that ſee, born here. In a field on the eaſt ſide of the town is a ſquare moated area, vulgarly called Cæſar's camp or Oldbury. The chace containing 8036 acres is now parcelled out between the crown and the four adjoining pariſhes, Enfield, Edmonton, Hadley, and South Mims, which claimed right of common on it; this pariſh, in which the whole of it lay, giving up its parochial claims for an allotment of 200 acres, diſpoſed of on leaſe in aid of its land tax and poor's rate, and thus ſuffering a diſmemberment. On this chace are three lodges leaſed out by the crown. The ſite mentioned by Mr. Camden as belonging to the Magnavilles goes by the name of Camlet moat. It is ſquariſh, ſurrounded by a ſingle mote, and is now by leaſe from the crown the property of ſir Richard Jebb, M. D. who has built near it a ſingular lodge in the Italian ſtyle, calling it Trent place, in honour of the duke of Glouceſter, whom he viſited at Trent. The editor can with pleaſure from his earlieſt life review many pleaſing hours of retirement and antiquarian reſearch ſpent in this pariſh ſo happily ſituated as a centre of many curious monuments in the adjacent counties. Enfield gives title of baron to the earl of Rochford, whoſe great uncle was ſo created 1695, 7 William III.

Tottenham is a populous village, and like others on this road inhabited by the citizens. On a hill here is a brick pillar called the Croſs, ſucceeding a wooden one in Norden's time, when lord Compton had a proper antient houſe here, ſince belonging to lord Coleraine, whoſe daughter and heir married James Townſend, eſq. This is called Bruce caſtle, and formerly belonged to David Bruce king of Scotland and earl of Huntingdon. Here is alſo an almſhouſe, founded by George Henningham for eight poor widows, and two others by Balthaſar Sanchez of Xeres in Eſtremadura, the firſt confectioner in England, 1596, and Nicholas Reynoldſon 1736. At Hollicks in this pariſh were in Norden's time [d] noted the foundations of antient buildings affirmed to have been a town. An old houſe here, now a quaker ſchool, was the reſidence of ſir Abraham Reynardſon lord mayor of London 1648. Another houſe in the high road, now an ale houſe, has the name of the King's houſe. Tottenham.

At Newington was in Norden's time a very proper houſe of the earl of Oxford [e]. Newington.

Iſlington, antiently Hiſledon, an antient village, now greatly enlarged and full of houſes. Here ſtill remain parts of a royal manſion, a villa of ſir Walter Raleigh, and another of the Fowler family. Canonbury houſe, now moſtly rebuilt into houſes for citizens, was firſt built by Bolton prior of St. Bartholomew's, Smithfield, whoſe rebus, the bolt and tun, carved in ſtone, is to be ſeen in the outer wall. In the fields to the north-weſt of White Conduit houſe is a large encloſure called the Reedmote, or ſix acre field, and ſuppoſed a Roman camp; probably that of Suetonius Paulinus after his retreat from London, and from which he ſallied, and routed Boadicea; and at the ſouth-eaſt corner was the ſite of a ſquare moated manſion, commonly called Jack Straw's caſtle, ſuppoſed the praetorium of the above camp. Highbury barn in this pariſh was another moated ſite or fort, whereon Mr. Dawes, banker, has lately built himſelf a ſeat; in digging the foundations of which was found a kiln full of pipes of baked earth, of various lengths and bores from 3 feet and 3 inches to 14 and 16 inches by 1 and an half. Here is a ſchool and almſhouſe founded by lady Alice Owen, who died 1613, and now belonging to the Brewers' company. On the ſouth-weſt ſide of this village is a fine reſervoir, called the New River head, a large baſon, in which the waters of that ſtream being collected, part is conveyed by the level in pipes to London, Iſlington.

[21] G.

[d] P. 21.

[e] P. 37.

don, and part thrown up to an higher reſervoir to ſupply the higheſt parts of the city. Here is a chalybeat ſpring in a garden called New Tunbridge-wells, and near it Sadler's-wells, an houſe of theatrical entertainment during the ſummer.

Hoxton. At Hoxton is an hoſpital founded 1692 by Robert Aſke alderman of London for 20 poor men of the Haberdaſhers company, and as many poor boys, wherein Dr. Hooke, who deſigned the building, propoſed to inſtitute a mathematical ſchool for boys, which though at firſt well approved was not carried into execution.

Shoreditch. Holiwell. In Shoreditch was Holiwell, a Benedictine nunnery, founded 1127, valued at £.293.[f] A gate of it remains.

Hackney. Hackney is a populous village, three miles from London, in whoſe church are monuments for Chriſtopher Urſwick 1521, Henry earl of Northumberland 29 Henry VIII. Lady Lucy Latimer 1582. and Sir Thomas and ſir Henry Row, lord mayors of London. Here was born 1633 Dr. South, who died 1716. Brook houſe in this pariſh, now a madhouſe, was the reſidence of lord Brook. At Oldford is the gate of a royal palace.

The Green lanes as they are called, a back road running from London to Enfield Chace to the weſt of the preſent high road are ſuppoſed to have been a Roman road till the preſent high road was made.

Hampſtead. Hampſtead ſtands under a hill in a very healthful air, having London in a very pleaſant proſpect[g].

Kilborn. At Kilborn was a Benedictine nunnery, founded t. Henry I. valued at £.74. 17s.[h]

Hornſey. In Hornſey park belonging to the biſhop of London[i] is a ſquare double moated area, called Lodge hill[k], or a caſtle, where the barons are ſaid to have aſſembled in the reign of Richard II. of whoſe ruins Hornſey church is ſuppoſed to have been built.

Highgate. Highgate is ſo called of the high road or toll-gate on it, erected by the biſhops of London 400 years ago, before which the high road went through Hornſey, Colney hatch, and Friarn Barnet to Whetſton[l]. Here is a freeſchool, founded by ſir Roger Cholmeley, Lord Chief Juſtice 1564, on the ſite of an antient hermitage[m].

Muſwell. At Muſwell or Pinſenall hill was a well and chapel of our Lady, much reſorted to on account of a cure received by a king of Scots, ſucceeded by alderman Roe's houſe[n]. The well remains, as did within theſe twenty years ſome glazed tiles of the pavement of the chapel. The ſtream from this ſpring runs through Tottenham into the marſhes.

Pancras. Pancras church, ſaid to be as antient as St. Paul's[o], is now the burial place of the Catholics. In this pariſh are ſome traces of a Roman camp called the Brill, q. d. Burgh hill. Dr. Stukeley traced the vallum and ditch 40 paces from eaſt to weſt, and 500 from north to ſouth. If we believe him, it was one of thoſe made by Cæſar after he croſſed the Thames, and the prætorium, 40 paces by 50, is ſtill very plain on the foot-path overagainſt the church. Through the middle of this camp runs the river Flete, which riſes from ſeven ſprings on the ſouth ſide of the hill between Hampſtead and Highgate by Cane wood, the ſeat of earl Mansfield. North of the church-yard is another area of 60 by 40 paces, moted round, in which the doctor ſuppoſes was quartered Mandubratius, who came hither to ſolicit Cæſar's aid againſt his brother Caſſibelan[p].

Flete r.

Cane wood.

At Stratford le Bow[q], or Bromley, was a Benedictine nunnery, founded by William biſhop of London t. William the Conqueror, valued at £.108.[r] Stratford le Bow.

Stepney, in whoſe church is buried ſir Henry Colet, knight, twice lord mayor, father of Dean Colet, founder of Paul's ſchool, who had a houſe here[s], gave birth to John Strype 1643, who died 1737, and to Dr. Mead 1673, who died 1754. Stepney.

At Mile-end was a houſe of lepers, now an hoſpital, belonging to the corporation of the Trinity houſe, and an almſhouſe, erected by Francis Bancroft 1735, beſides other almſhouſes. Mile-end.

At Hendon was a houſe of ſir Edward Herbert, knt. where, in Norden's time was often reſident ſir John Forteſcue, knt. one of her majeſty's privy council, when he took the air in the country. It came afterwards to the earl of Northampton, who pulled down great part of the old houſe, and fitted it up anew, and then leaſed it to Mr. Aiſlabie, who laid out 10,000£. on the houſe and grounds, and at his death 1781, it was ſold to Mr. Peters, a Ruſſia merchant. Cloſe on the north ſide of the houſe ſtood till the ſtorm of January 1, 1779, a ſtately cedar, 70 feet high, diameter of the branches 100 feet, circumference of the trunk at 7 feet above the ground 16 feet, at 12 feet 20 feet. The limbs from 6 to 12 feet in circumference. Tradition aſcribed it to queen Elizabeth. Hendon.

Edgeworth conſiſts of one main ſtreet, the weſt ſide belonging to Little Stanmore or Whitchurch, wherein was Canons, the magnificent ſeat of James duke of Chandos, who by a profuſion of magnificence unparalelled brought his houſe to an unparalelled end; the whole, which, with the ponds, &c. coſt 250,000£. being pulled down to the ground, and ſold by piecemeal for the benefit of his creditors. The walls were 12 feet thick below, and nine above. On the ſite of the centre, with the materials, William Hallet, eſq. who purchaſed the eſtate and all the materials uncleared and forfeited by other purchaſers, built a ſmall modern houſe, and walled in the park, which before had only a pale fence. In the church are monuments of duke James before-mentioned 1744, and his two wives, and Henry, the ſecond duke, and his lady Margaret firſt wife of the preſent duke. Canons belonged to the monks of Bentley, in Norden's time to Savage, and came to the firſt duke by marriage with a daughter of ſir Thomas Lake 1696. At the ſide of Watford road to the north and weſt of Bentley are veſtiges of a conſiderable Roman camp, vulgarly called Grimeſdike. Edgworth. Whitchurch. Canons.

At Bentley in Great Stanmore, was a priory of canons[t]. The houſe was taken down and rebuilt by Mr. Duberly. A chapel belonging to it now quite gone ſtood detached on the common. In digging to plant trees on the common juſt without the pales 1781 were found near 50 gold coins of Conſtantine jun. Conſtantius, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Magnus Maximus, Theodoſius, Arcadius, and Honorius, two rings and a bracelet of the ſame metal, ſome ſmall ſilver and copper coins of Valentinian entirely corroded, and a plate or piece of ſilver inſcribed HONOR. ſet in a triangular frame of iron. The coins were as follow. Bentley.

[f] Tan. 306. [g] Nord. 20. [h] Nord. 26 Tan. 307. [i] Nord. 21. [k] Ib.
[l] Nord. 15. 21. [m] Ib. 22. [n] Ib. 36. [o] Ib. 38. Tan. 326.
[p] Stuk. It. Cur. II. 1. 16. Pl. LXI. Of the Brill in Suſſex and Buckinghamſhire, ſee before, vol. I. p. 196. and p. 319.
[q] on the Bow, i. e. on the bridge. Nord. 38. [r] Tan. 298.
[s] Nord. 39. [t] M. Par. 1248. Tan. 315.

Conſtantine jun.

FL. CL. CONSTANTINVS AVG.

VICTORIA AVGGGG. L.

The emperor ſtanding, holding a Labarum in his right, in his left Victory on a globe, and treading on a captive.

Conſtantius.

P. VAL. CONSTANTIVS PERP. AVG.

GLORIA REIPVBLICAE.

Two female figures armed holding a ſhield inſcribed VOT. X / MVLT. XX; one treads on a prow and holds a parazonium, the other ſits in a curule chair.

Valentinian.

D. N. VALENTINIANVS P. F. AVG.

VICTORIA AVGG. TROB. Γ.

Two emperors ſitting crowned by a winged Victory.

Another TR. at ſides N. D.

Another CON. at ſides A. D.

RESTITVTOR REIPVBLICAE. ANT. Γ.

The emperor holding the labarum and Victory on a globe. The monogram ☧, and on another a croſs:

CONCORDIA AVGGG. S. CONOB. Rome ſeated.

Valens.

D. N. VALENS.

VICTORIA AVGG. TROB.

Two emperors ſitting crowned by a winged Victory.

GLORIA ROMANORVM. ANOBZ.

Two armed females holding a ſhield inſcribed VOT. X. / MVLT. XX; one treads on a prow and holds a lance; the other ſeated as before.

RESTITVTOR REIPVBLICAE.

The Emperor ſtanding holding the labarum and globe with Victory, behind him the croſs. Another without the croſs.

Gratian.

D. N. GRATIANVS. P. F. AVG.

VICTORIA AVG. CON.

Another. TROBT.

Two emperors ſeated crowned by a winged Victory.

Magnus Maximus.

D. N. MAG. MAXIMVS P. F. AVG.

RESTITVTOR REIPVBLICAE * SMTR.

The emperor holding a labarum and globe with a Victory.

VICTORIA AVGGG. TROB.

Two emperors ſitting crowned by a Victory.

Theodoſius.

D. N. THEODOSIVS P. F. AVG.

VICTORIA AVGGG. ⊖ CON.

Two emperors ſitting crowned by Victory.

Another with TR.

CONCORDIA AVGGG. B.

Rome ſitting.

Arcadius.

D. N. ARCADIVS P. F. AVG.

VICTORIA AVGGG. M. D.

The emperor with the labarum and Victory on a globe: a captive at his feet.

Honorius.

D. N. HONORIVS P. F. AVG.

VICTORIA AVGGG. M. D. CONOB.

The ſame as the preceding.

Another. B. V.

One of the rings had cut in gold two youthful heads face to face: the other on a blue ſtone an eagle tearing a hare; on her back two eaglets.

Hadley.

At Hadley, commonly called Monkton from belonging to Walden abbey, was an hermitage, founded by Edward IV. for the ſouls of the ſlain in Barnet field 1471. The battle is ſaid to have been fought on Monkey mead (i. e. Monk mead) plain. Over the ſteeple door is the date 1494 between a roſe and wing[u], which emblems being alſo carved alternately under the upper windows of the nave of Enfield church which belonged likewiſe to Walden abbey, I conceive to be badges of that abbey. An old houſe here, now a ſchool, is imagined to have belonged to the monks: and on the ſteeple is a fire-pan for a beacon, the ſituation being very high.

Friarn Barnet.

In Friarn Barnet, where ſir John Popham, Lord Chief Juſtice, had a houſe[x], are certain almſhouſes, founded by ſir John Swinnerton, mayor of London 1612.

Finchley.

In Finchley church were monuments of the Frowicks, of whom ſir Thomas was Lord Chief Juſtice t. Henry VII. and his father owned Gunnerſbury houſe[y] in Acton beforementioned, and his eldeſt daughter was mother of the learned antiquary ſir Henry Spelman.

South Mims.

At South Mims is Derham the ſeat of lord Albemarle (but in Norden's time of one Lacye[z]), and Wrotham that of George Byng, eſq. built by the late admiral, his uncle.

Earls of Middleſex.

Sir Lionel Cranfield, knight, merchant of London, Maſter firſt of the Requeſts, then of the great Wardrobe, afterwards of the Wards, and at laſt Privy Counſellor, was created 19 James I. lord Cranford of Cranford in the county of Bedford, and Lord High Treaſurer, and next year earl of Middleſex. By his ſecond wife, daughter of James Bret of Howbey in the county of Leiceſter, he had four ſons, of whom James and Lionel firſt and third, ſucceeded him, but both dying without iſſue the title deſcended to his eldeſt daughter Frances, married to Richard earl of Dorſet and their iſſue, and was enjoyed 1675 by their ſon Charles ſixth earl of Dorſet and Middleſex, lord chamberlain of the houſhold to Charles II. and by his deſcendants the dukes of Dorſet.

[u] See Vol. I. p. 350. and Pl. xvi. fig. 11. [x] Nord. 20. [y] Ib. [z] Ib. 18.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Middleſex.

Achillea Ptarmica. Sneeze-wort, or Gooſe-tongue; in a field near Highgate plentifully, and elſewhere near London.

Acorus Calamus. Sweet-ſmelling Flag, or Calamus; in muddy rivers: on Hounſlow heath; at Uxbridge; about Fulham moat, and in ponds near Harefield church.

Adonis autumnalis. Adonis flower, Pheaſant's Eye, Red Maithes, or Red Morocco; in the corn-fields about Acton.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel; among the buſhes near the wood on the top of Hamſtead hill, at Highbury barn near Iſlington; by the ſide of the brook at Maiden bridge, Enfield, in a lane near Tottenham high Croſs, in old Park wood, and in ſeveral other places about Harefield.

Ægopodium Podagraria. Gout-weed, Herb-Gerard, or Aſhweed; in the walk from Baker ſtreet Enfield to the church; at Limehouſe near the Horſe-Ferry.

Agaricus alneus. Adder Agaric: on trunks of trees; in Biſhop's wood near Hampſtead.

——— bulboſus. Bulbous Agaric; in meadows and paſtures: near Newington.

——— campanulatus. Bell Agaric: in meadows paſtures and woods: at Pancras.

——— cinnamomeus. Brown Agaric: in Chelſea woods.

——— clavus. Dwarf Agaric: in woods and hedges: near Pancras church, and on Hampſtead heath.

——— clypeatus. Long-ſtalked Agaric: in Biſhop's wood near Hampſtead.

——— equeſtris. Starry Agaric: on Hampſtead heath, and in Hyde Park near London.

——— extinctorius. Conic Agaric: in the meadows at Tottenham.

——— fimetarius. Egg Agaric: in Cripplegate church-yard, and in other places about London.

——— fragilis. Brittle Agaric: in woods and hedges among dead leaves and moſs: at Paddington, Pancras, Hornſey wood, and Chelſea.

——— glutinoſus. Slimy Muſhroom. (Curt. Fl. Lon.) in a paſture near Hornſey wood.

——— procerus. Ruffled Agaric: about Hornſey wood, at the Spaniards Hampſtead heath.

——— integer. White Agaric; in woods and woody places: at Paddington.

——— mammoſus. Grey Agaric: in woods and woody places: at Chelſea.

——— muſcarius. Reddiſh Agaric: in woods and hedges of a ſandy ſoil; on Enfield chace, in Biſhop's wood and between Hampſtead and Highgate.

——— ſeparatus. Blackiſh Agaric: in meadows and paſtures, at Paddington.

——— violaceus. Violet Agaric; in woods and hedges; at Chelſea, and in meadows about Newington.

——— viſcidus. Clammy Agaric, in woods and woody places: near the Neat houſes at Chelſea, at Paddington, and in Hornſey wood.

Agaricus umbelliferus. Wood Agaric: in Saint James's park, Weſtminſter, and in the little nurſery juſt below Breakſpears.

Agroſtis polymorpha, ſylvatica. Wood Bent Graſs: in Hornſey wood, and Biſhops wood near Hampſtead.

Aira aquatica. Water hair Graſs; on the bank of the New river behind Iſlington, and in many muddy ponds about London.

—— præcox. Early Hair Graſs; on Harefield common.

Aliſma Damaſonium. Star headed water Plantain: in ditches and ſtagnant waters: on a bog on Harefield common, and at Uxbridge toward Denham.

—— ranunculoides. Leſſer Water Plantain; on the bank of the upper pond near the brick-kiln at Harefield, plentifully.

—— ranunculoides β. A variety of the laſt, in the bogs on Iver heath near Uxbridge.

Allium urſinum. Ramſons; in woods and hedges: at Kentiſh town, at Hendon place near the church, and in a meadow at Gulchwell.

Alopecurus agreſtis β. A variety of field Fox tail Graſs; in a field near Harefield town, plentifully.

Althæa officinalis. Marſh Mallow: by the ſide of Chelſea waterworks.

Anemone apennina. Mountain Wood Anemone: in woods and woody places: near Harrow on the Hill.

Angelica Archangelica. Garden Angelica; on the walls of the Tower, London.

Anthemis nobilis. Sweet ſcented Camomile: on Harefield common, on Hounſlow heath, and in Tothill-fields, Weſtminſter.

Antirrhinum Cymbalaria. Ivy-leaved Toad-flax: on the walls of the Botanic garden at Chelſea, and on the walls of the Thames from Chelſea to Weſtminſter, plentifully, on the wall of the Temple gardens, and elſewhere in London.

Anthoceros punctatus. Spotted Anthoceros: on Hounſlow heath.

Aquilegia vulgaris. Common Columbines: in woods and buſhy places; about Harefield.

Arabis thaliana β. A variety of codded Mouſe-ear: on ſome walls about Harefield.

Atabis Turrita. Tower wall creſs; on ditch banks at Slough.

Arctium Lappa. A variety of this called Roſe Burdock was obſerved by Mr. Ray near the Thames between Weſtminſter and Chelſea.

Arenaria rubra. Purple flowered Chickweed or Spurrey; in Hyde park, and on Hampſtead heath.

——— trinervia. Plantain leaved Chickweed; in moiſt places of the woods about Highgate and Hampſtead.

Arundo Calamagroſtis. Branched Reed Graſs; in damp woods and hedges; between Hornſey and Newington, and in a wood againſt the boarded river.

Aſperula

Aſperula odorata. Woodroof: in the wood near Hampſtead.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Black Maiden hair: on old walls and in ſhady places: in a lane near Finchley church, and in a lane going to Kickmansworth from Harefield.

——— Ruta muraria. White Maiden-hair, Wall Rue or Tent-wort: on Pinner church, on Brentbridge near Hanwell, on an old ſtone conduit between Iſlington and Highbury barn, on Finchley church, and on the walls in Fulham church-yard.

——— Scolopendrium. Harts-tongue: in ſhady ſtoney places: on a bank oppoſite the Hyde field in the road leading from Edmonton to Buſhhill: in ſhady ditches on Hampſtead heath, at Highgate; on Finchley church, and in the orchard at Harefield place.

——— Scolopendrium (fol. multifidis). A variety of the laſt called fingered Harts-tongue; in a lane at Tanners end, Edmonton.

——— Trichomanes. Common Maiden-hair; on ſtoney ſhady places and old walls; on the walls of Chelſea hoſpital next the Thames, plentifully, in the orchard of Harefield place, and at Breakſpears.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale; in a ſhady gravel pit near Old Park wood at Harefield.

Avena pubeſcens. Rough Oatgraſs; in the paſtures about the earl of Cadogan's at Twickenham.

Berberis vulgaris. Barberry or Pipperidge buſh; on Hampſtead heath.

Betula alba. Birch tree; } in Biſhop's wood ——- alnus. Common Alder tree; } near Hampſtead.

Blaſia puſilla. Dwarf Blaſia; on the ſides of ditches and rivers, and in wet ſhady ſandy places; on Hounſlow heath.

Boletus albus. White Boletus; on the ſtump of a dead tree in the path from Hummerton to Lea bridge.

——— bovinus. Brown Boletus; in woods, at Highgate.

——— igniarius. Hard Boletus, Touchwood, or Spunk; on trunks of trees: in Hyde Park, and on the willows near Tottenham mills.

——— ſquamoſus. Scaly Boletus; at Clapton, in the lane leading from Hackney to Clapton, and elſewhere.

——— ſuberoſus. Cork Boletus; on a Willow tree in London fields near the Cat and Shoulder of Mutton, Hackney.

Braſſica muralis. Wild Rocket: on old walls about London, frequently, as on London Wall between Cripplegate and Biſhopſgate, and on the walls of the Charter-houſe and Tower.

Bromus giganteus. Tall Brome graſs; about Fulham moat.

——— hirſutus. Hairy ſtalked Brome Graſs. (Curtis Flora Lond.) in hedges, particularly about Hampſtead.

——— muralis, madritenſis. Wall Brome graſs; on old walls; about London.

Bryum fontanum. Marſh Bryum: on Iver heath near Uxbridge.

——— glaucum. White Bryum; on Iver heath, and on Hampſtead heath.

——— heteromallum. Heath Bryum; on heaths; at Pancras, and on a ditch bank leading from Mother Huff's towards Hampſtead.

——— hygrometricum. Yellow Bryum; on ſome walls about Chelſea, and in ſeveral gardens about London.

Bryum pomiforme. Round headed Bryum; on Hampſtead heath, and on a ditch bank leading from Mother Huff's towards Hampſtead.

Byſſus botryoides. Green Byſſus, on the bark of trees, on walls and ſhady places; on Hampſtead heath, and elſewhere.

——— ſeptica β. Mouſe-ſkin Byſſus; in moiſt vaults ſticking to wine caſks.

Bufonia tenuifolia. Baſtard Chickweed; on Hounſlow heath.

Bupleurum rotundifolium. Thorowwax; in a corn field near the mill at Harefield.

Butomus umbellatus. Flowering Ruſh or Water Gladiole: in the marſhes at Blackwall plentifully, and elſewhere.

Campanula hybrida. Leſſer Venus-Looking-glaſs, or codded Corn Violet; in a corn field adjoining to the chalk-pit near the Paper mills at Harefield.

——— trachelium. Great Throat-wort, or Canterbury bells; in Old Park wood, Harefield.

Carduus helenoides. Melancholy Thiſtle; on Hounſlow heath.

——— pratenſis. Meadow Thiſtle; on Hounſlow heath, near the end of Tuddington town, but ſparingly.

——— marianus β. Milk Thiſtle without white veins: on the bank of the New River between the two roads from London to Iſlington, in the brick field near the Cat and Shoulder of Mutton Hackney; and on the banks of the road near Shoreditch.

Cardamine amara. Bitter creſſes or Ladies ſmock; on the banks of the Thames between Peterborough houſe and Chelſea; by the river ſide at Harefield, in the brook at Scarlet Spring, and about Uxbridge.

——— hirſuta. Hairy ladies ſmock; in Scarlet Spring, and Gutter's Dean wood near Harefield, in many places on the New River banks between Canonbury houſe and Newington, and in the lane oppoſite Mother Red Cap's, on the left hand of the road from London to Hampſtead.

——— impatiens. Impatient Ladies Smock: on the ſide of the Thames near the Botanic gardens at Chelſea, and on the ſides of Fulham moat.

Carex leporina. Naked Carex; in a wood near the Boarded river, plentifully.

——— muricata. Prickley Carex; in the dry parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

——— palleſcens. Pale Carex; in a wood near the boarded river.

——— paniculata. Panicled Carex; in Hampſtead wood, and on the heath.

——— pendula. Pendulous Carex; in wet woods and hedges; between Hampſtead and Highgate, between Mary-le-bone and Kilbourn, and at Maidenbridge, Enfield.

——— pilulifera. Round headed Carex; on Harefield common.

——— pilulifera β. A variety of the laſt: in a ditch near Hampſtead heath.

——— Pſeudo Cyperus. Baſtard Cyperus; in a ditch between the Boarded river and Iſlington road.

——— pulicaris. Flea Carex; on turfy ſlimey bogs; on Hampſtead heath, and on Harefield moor, plentifully.

——— ſylvatica. Wood Carex: in a wood near the boarded river.

——— vulpina. Great Carex; in Biſhop's wood Hampſtead.

Carum Carvi. Carraways; in meadows and paſtures about London.

Centaurea Calcitrapa. Star Thiſtle; in ſome barren fields near Whitechapel.

Centunculus minimus. Baſtard Pimpernel; on the marſhy ground near the powdermills on Hounſlow heath, and near Hampton Court.

Ceraſtium ſemidecandrium. Leaſt Mouſe-ear Chickweed; on walls and paſtures about London.

Chara flexilis. Smooth Chara; in ditches and ponds near Hornſey.

Chenopodium glaucum. Spear leaved Orach; in Whitechapel fields.

——— vulvaria. Stinking Orach; common about London on dunghills and waſte places.

Chryſoſplenium oppoſitifolium. Common Golden Saxifrage; in wet ſhady places: on Hampſtead heath, and by the ſide of a ditch, in a meadow juſt below Coney farm at Harefield.

Cicuta viroſa. Long leaved Water Hemlock; in a ſhallow pool of water on Hounſlow heath by the road ſide near the town; in ſome pools of water at Iſtleworth; on the banks of the river at Uxbridge, in the river Coln near Colnbrooke, and in one of the pools near the road at Hayes.

Clavaria Hypoxilon β. A variety of Flat-horned Clavaria: found on an old elm ſtump in a ſmith's cellar in the Haymarket, Weſtminſter.

——— muſcoides. Pointed Clavaria; in a field adjoining to the road at Newington.

Clematis Vitalba. Great Climber, or Traveller's joy; in hedges and woody places; in the way from Chelſea to Fulham.

Cochlearia Anglica. Engliſh or common Sea Scurvygraſs; in the Iſle of Dogs.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinquefoil; at the head of the leſſer bog on Hampſtead heath.

Conferva capillaris. Thread Conferva; in the river at Uxbridge.

——— gelatinoſa β. A variety of Frogſpawn Conferva; in a rivulet on Enfield Chaſe.

——— fontinalis. Spring Conferva; in the New River by Hornſey.

——— furcata. Forked Conferva; in ſlow flowing ſtreams; on Hampſtead heath.

——— reticulata. Net Conferva: in a rivulet on Hounſlow heath, in ditches and ponds about Hounſlow, and in the ditches about Weſtminſter.

——— rigida. Rough Conferva; in the river which runs through Hounſlow heath.

——— ſericea. Silk Conferva; in the New River near London, and on Hounſlow heath.

Convallaria maialis. Lilly Convally, or May Lilly; in the dryer parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate, as in Biſhop's wood and on Hampſtead heath.

Conyza ſquarroſa. Plowman's Spikenard: in the old chalk pit near the mill at Harefield.

Cotyledon Umbilicus Veneris. Navel-wort, Kidney-wort, or Wall Pennywort; in an old gravel pit at Highbury barn near Iſlington.

Cratægus Aria. White Beamtree; in Biſhop's wood near Hampſtead, in the Chalk pit near the Papermills at Harefield, and againſt the Warren houſe on Uxbridge common.

——— Torminalis. Common Wild Service or Sorb tree; in Biſhop's wood, and in the dryer parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

Crepis foetida. Stinking Hawkweed; in dry meadows and paſtures about Chelſea.

Cynogloſſum officinale β. A variety of Common Hound's tongue; in an hedge beſide the road on Stamford hill.

Daphne Laureola. Spurge Laurel; in woods and hedges at Kentiſh-town.

Dentaria bulbifera. Coral-wort; in Old Park wood, Harefield, abundantly.

Dianthus Armeria. Deptford Pink; by the ſide of the road leading from Harefield to Chalfont St. Peters, and in a little wood on the right hand of the road a little beyond the bottom of Highgate hill.

——— Deltoides. Maiden Pink; on Hampſted heath.

——— glaucus. Mountain Pink; in the park at Hampton-court.

Dipſacus piloſus. Small wild Teaſel, or Shepherd's rod; about Fulham Moat, between the Biſhop's Palace and Fulham field, in a little coppice at Harefield, by the road ſide at Finchley and in the lane from Edmonton leading to the Hyde field, plentifully.

Droſera longifolia. Long-leaved Sun Dew, or Roſa ſolis; in the bogs on Iver heath near Uxbridge.

——— rotundifolia. Round-leaved Sun Dew; on the bogs on Hampſtead heath, at Battleſwell, and on the bogs on Iver heath.

Epilobium anguſtifolium. Roſe-bay Willow herb; in Canewood near Hampſtead and by the ſide of a wood about the midway between Beaconsfield and Uxbridge, plentifully.

——— tetragonum. Square-ſtalked Willow-herb; in the lane leading from Newington field to Hornſey wood, and elſewhere.

Equiſetum hyemale δ. A variety of Rough Horſetail or Shave graſs; in a bog on Hounſlow heath.

——— limoſum. Smooth Horſetail; in the Warren pond at Breakſpears.

——— ſylvaticum. Wood Horſetail; in the moiſt parts of the woods about Highgate and Hampſtead.

Erica cinerea. Fine-leaved Heath; on Hampſtead heath, and on the common at Harefield.

—— tetralix Croſs-leaved Heath; on the common at Harefield.

Erigeron Canadenſe. Canada Fleabane; in many barren places about London.

Eriophorum polyſtachion. Cotton Graſs; on a bog on Hampſtead heath.

Euphorbia exigua. Dwarf Spurge; in many places about Harefield.

——— platyphyllus. Broad-leaved Spurge; in the corn fields leading from Harefield common to Battleſwell.

Feſtuca decumbens. Small Feſcue Graſs; in a ſhady field near Battleſwell, near Harefield, and on Harefield common.

——— elatior. Tall Feſcue Graſs; on the banks of the river Thames between London and Chelſea.

Fontinalis antipyretica. Greater Water-moſs; in Harefield river plentifully, and on walls of the Thames at Chelſea.

——— minor. Leſſer Water-moſs; on the banks of the Thames about London.

——— ſquamoſa. Scaly Water-moſs; on old planks in the Thames at Fulham.

Fritillaria Meleagris. Common Chequered Daffodil, or Fritillary; in meadows and paſtures in Maude fields near Riſlip common, and near Enfield.

Galeobdolon luteum. Yellow Nettle Hemp; in a thicket thicket near the lower end of Pond ſtreet Hampſtead, and in the thickets at Harefield.

Gallium anglicum. The leaſt Gooſe-graſs; on a wall at Hackney.

——— uliginoſum. Marſh Gooſe-graſs; on Hampſtead heath.

Gentiana Amarella. Autumnal Gentian, or Fellwort; in the old chalk pit near the mill at Harefield.

Geranium columbinum. Longſtalked Dove's-foot Crane's-bill; in a gravel pit in a field near Harefield common.

——— lucidum. Shining Dove's-foot Crane's-bill; in a lane leading to the mill at Harefield.

——— pyrenaicum. Perennial Dove's-foot Cranesbill; in meadows and paſtures; at Enfield, particularly in the church-yard; between Hyde Park and Little Chelſea, and about Brompton and Chelſea.

——— robertianum (flore albo). Herb Robert with a white flower; in an hedge by the road ſide near Riſlip town.

——— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Crane's bill; on a bank by the road ſide which leads from the back of Iſlington to Canonbury houſe.

Gnaphalium ſylvaticum. Upright Cudweed: in a ſhady field near Battleswell plentifully, in the woods at Harefield, on Hampſtead heath, and between Highgate and Muſwell hill.

Hedypnois hiſpidum β, hirtum. Dwarf Rough ſtone Hawkweed, with bitter roots; in the gardens at Breakſpears, and thereabouts not uncommon.

Hedyſarum Onobrychis. Saint Foin or Cockshead; in the meadows near the chalk pit at Harefield.

Heracleum Spondylium β, anguſtifolium. Jagged Cow Parſnep; in ſeveral places near Harefield.

Herniaria hirſuta. Rough Rupture-wort; in meadows near Colneyhatch near Barnet.

Hieracium murorum. French or Golden Lung-wort; on a wall over-againſt Hillingdon church.

——— ſubaudum. Broad-leaved Buſhy Hawkweed; in the Old Park at Harefield, and in the dryer parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

——— umbellatum. Narrow leaved Buſhy Hawkweed; in the dryer parts of the woods about Highgate and Hampſtead.

Hippuris vulgaris. Mares-tail; in bogs; near Hornſey, in the river at Harefield, and in a bog on Uxbridge Moor.

Hydnum imbricatum. Common Hydnum; in a wood at Tottenham.

Hyoſeris minima. Small Swine's Succory or Hawkweed; in Tuddington field near Hampton court.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan or Park Leaves; in a thicket near Harefield church, on Bacher heath near Harefield, by the ſide of the road from Highgate to Muſwell hill, and in the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

——— elodes. Marſh St. Peterſwort; in the great bog on Hampſtead heath, and on bogs on Iver heath.

——— pulchrum. Upright St. Johnwort; in Old Park wood and other woods about Harefield, plentifully, on Hampſtead heath, and in the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate, and elſewhere.

Hypnum alopecurum. Fox-tail Hypnum; in Biſhop's and Cane wood Hampſtead.

——— brioides. Fern Hypnum; on Hampſtead heath.

Hypnum compreſſum. Compreſſed Hypnum: in a wood near, and in the meadows at, Tottenham.

——— complanatum. Flat Hypnum: in the woods at Hampſtead.

——— lucens. Shining Hypnum: on the bogs on Hampſtead heath, and in Biſhop's wood.

——— myoſuroides. Mouſe tail Hypnum: in Biſhop's wood, Hampſtead.

——— ornithopoides. Bird's-foot Hypnum: on beech trees on Enfield Chace.

——— riparium. Water Hypnum: in the river Thames at London, and in the river at Hackney.

——— ſericeum β plumoſum. Winged Hypnum: on trunks of trees on Enfield Chace, and on walls at Newington.

——— ſquarroſum. Common Hypnum: on Hampſtead heath.

——— velutinum. Velvet Hypnum: on branches of trees, ſhady places and hedges: in Hornſey wood.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſſe; in gravelly places and barren heaths: near Hampton-court.

Jacione montana. Hairy Sheep's Scabious: in a lane leading from Denham to Iver heath, and in Hackney common field.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane: in a meadow called Gantlets at Breakſpears, and in a cloſe adjoining to Harefield common.

Iris fœtidiſſima. Stinking Gladdon or Gladwyn; in woods and hedges: at Hornſey, Kentiſh town, near Highbury barn, Iſlington, and in an hedge at Muſwell-hill, Highgate.

Juncus bufonius β. A variety of the Common Toad Ruſh: on moiſt hills at Highgate.

—— campeſtris β. Small Hairy Wood Ruſh: in a wood by the road from Backer heath to Harefield common.

—— ſylvaticus. Great Hairy Wood Ruſh: in Biſhop's wood, in the ditch of a cloſe adjoining to Hampſtead, in the woods about Highgate and Hampſtead, in Hornſey wood, and in ſeveral places about Harefield.

—— ſquarroſus. Moſs Ruſh, or Gooſe Corn: on Harefield common, plentifully.

Jungermannia ciliaris. Fern Jungermannia: in a ſmall current which runs through Old fall wood between Muſwell-hill and Highgate.

——— dilitata. Scaly Jungermannia; on trunks of trees: at Harrow.

——— epiphylla. Broad-leaved Jungermannia: in the brook in Gutter's Dean wood near Harefield common, plentifully, and in the bogs on Hampſtead heath.

——— multifida. Dwarf Jungermannia; in wet woods and ſhady places: about Hampſtead, plentifully.

——— puſilla. Shining Jungermannia: in Biſhop's wood near Hampſtead.

——— reptans. Creeping Jungermannia: in ſhady places at Hampſtead.

——— varia. Upright Jungermannia: in the brook at Gutter's Dean wood near Harefield.

Juniperus communis. Common Juniper: on Finchley common, on Hampſtead heath, and on Harefield common, plentifully.

Lactuca ſaligna. Leaſt wild Lettuce: in a lane over-againſt Pancras church near London, and on the banks of ſome fields between Pancras and Hampſtead.

Lathræa

Lathræa ſquamaria. Tooth-Wort: in a ſhady lane leading from Hareſield to the river.

Lathyrus Aphaca. Yellow Vetchling: in the old camp called Oldbury field near Enfield.

——— Nyſſolia. Crimſon Graſs Vetch; on the ſides of fields: over againſt Edmonton church, in a meadow near Tottenham high Croſs, near Pancras church, and near Hareſield church, and elſewhere.

Lichen caninus. Aſh-coloured Ground Liver-wort: on Hampſtead heath, and in many other places about London.

——— ericetorum. Heath Liverwort; on turfy heaths; near the Neat's houſe, Chelſea.

——— flavo rubeſcens. Orange Liverwort; on trunks of trees, rocks, and ſtones: on Enfield chace and between Hampſtead and Highgate.

——— horizontalis. Flat Shield Liverwort; on roots of trees, wet ſtones and rocks: on Enfield chace.

——— olivaceus. Olive Liverwort; on ſtones and trunks of trees: at Harrow.

——— pyxidatus α, cornucopoides. Radiated Liverwort: } on Hampſtead heath.

——— pyxidatus ϖ, gracilis. Tall Liverwort: } on Hampſtead heath.

——— rangiferinus, alopeſtris. Rhen-deer Liverwort; on heathy mountainous paſtures and in woods: at Harrow.

——— ſaxatilis. Stone Liverwort; on ſtones, rocks and ſtumps of trees: on Hampſtead heath.

——— ſubfuſcus. Browniſh Liverwort; on the bark of trees and on walls: at Fulham.

——— ſabulatus. Horned Liverwort: } on Hampſtead heath.

——— tremelloides. Fringed Liverwort: } on Hampſtead heath.

Limoſella aquatica. Baſtard Plantain: by the ſide of the Warren pond at Breakſpears near Hareſield common, plentifully, and in a lane near the Devil's houſe going to Hornſey.

Linum radiola. Leaſt Rupture wort, or Allſeed: on Hounſlow heath.

Lithoſpermum officinale. Gromwell, Gromel, or Graymill; in dry ſandy places: in the Iſle of Dogs.

Littorella lacuſtris. Graſs-leaved Plantain: on Hounſlow heath near Witton, and in ſome of the bogs on Hareſield common.

Lonicera Periclymenum β. A variety of the common Honeyſuckle or Woodbine, with leaves like an oak: in Whitcheath wood near Hareſield.

Lycoperdon cervinum. Branny Puffball: in Cain wood, Hampſtead.

——— pedunculatum. Stalked Puffball: on a wall in Baker ſtreet, Enfield.

——— ſtellatum. Star Puffball; on a bank in the lane leading from Hackney to Clapton.

Lycopodium annotinum. Vetch Club Moſs: on Iver and Hounſlow heaths.

——— clavatum. Common Club Moſs: on Hounſlow heath.

——— inundatum. Marſh Club moſs: on Iver and Hounſlow heaths.

Lyſimachia nemorum. Yellow Pimpernel of the Woods: in the ditches on Hampſtead heath, in Cane wood, and at Scarlet Spring near Hareſield.

——— tenella. Purple Moneywort: on the bogs on Hampſtead heath, and on Hareſield moor, plentifully.

——— vulgaris. Yellow Willow herb or Looſeſtrife: in the meadows about Uxbridge moor, and in ſome places near Hareſield.

Lythrum hyſſopifolia. Graſs Poly ſmall Hedge Hyſſop; in watery places and where water has been ſtagnated in the winter: on Hounſlow heath, and in a marſhy field between Stains and Lalam.

——— ſalicaria β. A variety of Purple-ſpiked Looſeſtrife or Willow-herb: by the ſide of the canals at Chelſea water-works.

Marchantia polymorpha β. A variety of Common Marchantia: on a wall at Hoxton near London.

Marrubium vulgare. White Horehound: on Finchley common; on Hampſtead heath, and on Uxbridge moor, abundantly.

Matricaria Chamomilla. Corn Feverfew: a variety of this with a naked flower is ſaid to be found in Tothillfields.

Meliſſa Calamintha. Common Calamint: in Hareſield ſtreet.

Mentha aquatica β, hirſuta. Round-headed Mint: } in watery places and on banks of rivers: between Hornſey and Newington & elſewhere.

——— piperata. Pepper-mint: } in watery places and on banks of rivers: between Hornſey and Newington & elſewhere.

——— Pulegium. Pennyroyal or Pudding Graſs: on ſeveral parts of Hareſield common.

——— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Horſe Mint: in Hareſield and Hornſey church-yards, plentifully.

——— ſativa. Curled Mint: by a pond ſide in a lane below Breakſpears abundantly, in Hackney river near the Ferry-houſe.

——— ſylveſtris. Horſe Mint; in marſhes and watery places: at Hackney.

Menyanthes trefoliata. Marſh Trefoil or Buck-beans: on the bog on Hampſtead heath, and on Hareſield, abundantly.

Mercurialis annua. French Mercury; on rubbiſh and cultivated places about London, frequent: at Humerton near Hackney and near Paddington church.

Mnium androgynum. Upright Mnium; in woods, heaths, and walls: at Hampſtead and at Paddington.

——— paluſtre. Marſh Mnium; on turfy bogs and wet heaths: at Hampſtead.

Montia Fontana. Water Chickweed; near ſprings and running waters: on Hareſield common.

Myoſotis ſcorpioides, arvenſis. Mouſe-ear Scorpion Graſs, in Gutter's Dean wood, and in Old Park wood near Hareſield.

Myoſurus minimus. Mouſe tail: in corn-fields, meadows and paſtures of a gravelly ſoil: between Kentiſh town and Hampſtead, and elſewhere in this county.

Myriophyllum ſpicatum. Spiked water Milfoil: in the canal at Hampton court, in a gravel-pit in a field called Innins adjoining to Hareſield common, and in a ſlow rivulet at Poplar near London.

Nardus ſtricta. Mat Graſs: Hanwell heath and on Hareſield common.

Narciſſus Poeticus. Pale Narciſſus or Daffodil; in meadows and woods: in ſeveral places near Hareſield.

——— Pſeudonarciſſus. Wild Engliſh Daffodil; in woods and hedges: in ſeveral places about Hareſield, and in the orchard at Breakſpears.

Nepeta Cataria. Nep or Cat-mint: in a meadow near Hareſield mill.

Nymphæa alba. White Water Lily: in the moat, at Fulham

Fulham and Uxbridge, in the rivulet at Brentbridge in the Uxbridge road and in Harefield river, abundantly.

——— lutea. Yellow Water Lily: in the moat at Fulham near the garden gate, on Uxbridge moor, in the little rivulet at Brentbridge, and in Harefield river.

Oenanthe crocata. Hemlock Water Drop-wort. In the Thames near London.

— —— fistulosa β. A variety of Water Drop-wort: in Harefield river near the Paper-mills, plentifully.

Ophioglossum vulgatum. Adder's Tongue: on Hampstead heath, in Hackney marsh, in moist meadows near Harefield, and in a meadow just beyond Cowley church.

Ophrys apifera. Bee Orchis: in the chalk-pit near the paper-mill at Harefield.

—— monorchis. Yellow or Musk Orchis; in barren pastures of a chalky soil: near Enfield.

—— muscifera. Fly Orchis; in the chalk-pit near the paper-mills at Harefield, but sparingly.

—— Nidus avis. Bird's-nest: in White heath wood near Harefield.

—— ovata. Common Twayblade: in White heath wood and at Scarlet Spring near Harefield, and in the moist parts of the woods about Hampstead and Highgate.

—— spiralis. Triple Ladies Traces: on Enfield chace.

Orobanche major. Broom rape: on Hampstead and Iver heaths.

Orchis Gonopsea. Red handed Orchis:
—— militaris. Man Orchis:
—— militaris β, purpurea. Purple Man Orchis:
—— pyramidalis. Purple late flowering Orchis:
—— ustulata. Little Purple flowered Orchis: but very rarely.
} in the chalk pit near the paper-mills at Harefield.

Ornithopus perpusillus. Bird's-foot: on Hampstead heath, plentifully.

Orobus tuberosus. Wood Pea or Heath Pea: in the dryer parts of the woods about Hampstead and Highgate, and elsewhere.

Osmunda regalis. Flowering Fern or Osmund Royal: towards the north side of Hampstead heath.

——— spicans. Rough Spleenwort: on Hampstead heath, abundantly, and on Harefield common.

Panicum Crusgalli. Loose Panic Grass: about Fulham moat.

——— sanguinale. Cock's foot Panic grass:
——— verticillatum. Rough Panic-grass:
———viride β. Green Panic grass:
} upon the banks of the Thames about the Neat's-houses Chelsea.

Papaver Argemone. Long rough-headed Poppy.
———hybridum. Round rough-headed Poppy:
———dubium. Long smooth-headed Poppy:
} in corn fields about Chelsea and elsewhere.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, True love or One berry: in Old Park wood, in the hanging woods, and elsewhere about Harefield, and in a wood not far from Hampstead.

Parnassia palustris. Grass of Parnassus, in moist meadows: near Harefield mill, plentifully.

Pedicularis palustris. Marsh Louse-wort; in moist meadows and pastures: about Harefield, plentifully.

Peziza acetabulum. Cup Peziza; on rotten wood in woods and hedges: between Hampstead and Highgate.

—— cornucopoides. Cornucopia Peziza; in woods: in Hornsey wood and elsewhere there abouts.

——— lentifera. Seeding Cup Mushroom: on a bank in one of the fields called London fields, leading from Hackney to London near the Cat and Shoulder of Mutton.

Phallus impudicus. Stinking Morel; in woods and hedges: at Hackney, and in a fir wood near the Spaniards, Hampstead.

———— caninus. Red-headed Morel: in Cane wood very sparingly, and in a small Pine wood near the Spaniards, Hampstead heath.

Phascum repens. Creeping Phascum; on trunks of trees: at Acton.

Phellandrium aquaticum. Water Hemlock: in the ponds at the entrance of Hornsey wood and in Harefield river, plentifully.

Pilularia globulifera. Pepper Grass; on Hampstead heath: on the boggy ground near the Powder-mills on Hounslow heath.

Pimpinella Saxifraga. Lesser Pimpinel or Burnet Saxifrage: in the meadows about Highgate and Hampstead, abundantly.

Plantago Coronopus. Buck's horn Plantain, Star of the Earth: on Hampstead heath and Uxbridge common, plentifully.

——— lanceolatus β. A variety of Ribwort Plantain or Ribwort:
——— major β. A variety of Greater Plantain or way-bread:
} on Hounslow heath.

——— major γ. Besome Plantain: by the path between the fords of the two rivers in Enfield marsh.

——— media. Hoary Plantain: on the grass plots in the British Museum garden, in great plenty.

Poa compressa. Creeping Meadow Grass:
— pratense. Great Meadow Grass:
— trivialis γ, setacea. Hair-leaved Meadow Grass:
} in meadows near Mary-le-bon.

Polygala vulgaris. A variety of common Milk-wort: on heaths; near Highwood hill beyond Hendon.

Polygonum amphibium. Perennial Arsmart: in the river at Hackney, in watery places at Harefield, and on Uxbridge moor.

———— Bistorta. Greater Bistort or Snakeweed: in the meadows by the river side at Uxbridge, and in a meadow by the side of Bishop's wood near Hampstead.

——— Hydropiper β. A variety of Water Pepper or Arsmart: in Tothillfields, and in the meadows just beyond Peterborough house, Westminster.

Polypodium aculeatum. Prickly auriculate Male Fern: in Old Park wood near Harefield, in the woods about Hampstead and Highgate, and elsewhere.

——— cristatum. Crested Polypody: on Hampstead heath, in the woods about Hampstead and Highgate, and at Battleswell.

——— Filix fœmina. Female Polypody: in the woods about Hampstead and Highgate.

——— vulgare β. A variety of common Polypody; on shady old walls and roots of trees: between Edmonton and Winchmore-hill.

Polytrichum commune. Common Polytrichum or greater Golden Maiden Hair: on the bogs on Hampſtead heath and Hareſield common, plentifully.

Potamogeton compreſſum. Small branched Pond weed: in ſlow flowing rivers and ditches: about Stanes, plentifully.

——— lucens. Long-leaved Pond weed: in many places in the Thames between Fulham and Hampton court.

——— perfoliatum. Perfoliate Pond weed: } in the New river head plentifully.

——— puſillum. Small graſs-leaved Pond weed. } in the New river head plentifully.

——— pectinatum. Fennel-leaved Pondweed: in the Serpentine river in Hyde-park.

Potentilla argentea. Tormentil Cinquefoil: in a field near Hareſield common.

——— reptans β. Creeping Tormentil: in a ditch between the boarded river and the Iſlington road.

Poterium ſanguiſorba. Burnet: in Hareſield chalk-pits, and in the beech woods in the road from thence to Chalſont.

Prenanthes muralis. Ivy-leaved Wild Lettuce: in the lane leading from Hareſield to Riſlip, and elſewhere.

Prunus Ceraſus. Common Wild Cherry: in Biſhop's wood, Hampſtead.

Pteris aquilina β. A variety of Female Fern or Brakes: on many old walls in and about London, as on the wall of the Savoy, Gray's Inn, Weſtminſter Royal Gardens, &c.

Ranunculus aquatilis β. Various leaved Water Crowfoot: in the river at Hareſield, and on the bogs on Uxbridge moor.

——— lingua. Greater Spearwort: in the bogs on Iver heath, and near Uxbridge.

——— parviflorus. Small flowered Crowfoot: in a lane near Iſleworth, in ſeveral places near Hareſield, in Kentiſh Town, and about Hackney.

Rhamnus catharticus. Buckthorn or Purging Thorn; in woods and hedges: in ſome places near Hareſield, and in the hedges between Uxbridge and Beaconsfield, plentifully.

——— frangula. Blackberry-bearing Alder: in woods about Hampſtead, as in Biſhop's wood, in Hornſey wood, in a wood adjoining to the boarded river, and in White heath wood near Hareſield.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants or Squinancy berries: in a meadow near the Warren pond at Breakſpear's, plentifully.

—— rubrum. Red Currants: in ſome coppices near Hareſield.

Roſa arvenſis β. A variety of White flowered Dog-roſe: in Biſhop's wood.

—— villoſa β. A variety of Apple-roſe: about London every where.

Rubus Idæus. Raſpberries, Framboiſe or Hindberries: in a lane near Hareſield moor, but ſparingly.

Rumex pulcher. Fiddle Dock: in Bunhill and Moorfields, and elſewhere about London plentifully.

—— ſanguineus. Bloodwort: in the woods about Hampſtead, as in Biſhop's wood, and in an orchard by the road ſide in the lane leading from Hareſield to Riſlip.

Ruſcus aculeatus. Knee holly, Butcher's Broom: in the little grove at Breakſpear's, in ſome thickets on Hareſield and Bacher heaths, and on Hampſtead heath.

Sagina erecta. Leaſt Stitchwort: on Hampſtead heath, about Highwood hill, and on Uxbridge and Hareſield commons, abundantly.

Sagittaria ſagittifolia β. A variety of Arrow Head: in the Thames between Peterborough houſe and the Horſe ferry, Weſtminſter.

Salix pentandria. Sweet Willow; in woods and hedges: in the way from Chelſea to Fulham, and among the willows near the brick kiln at Hareſield.

—— repens β. A variety of Creeping Willow: on Hampſtead heath.

—— repens δ, fuſca. Common creeping Dwarf Willow: on Hampſtead heath, and near the bogs on Hareſield common, plentifully.

—— rubra. Red Willow: } among the willows on the Thames ſide between Weſtminſter and Chelſea.

—— triandria. Smooth Willow: } among the willows on the Thames ſide between Weſtminſter and Chelſea.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder, Wallwort, Danewort: in a meadow at Breakſpear's, and on Uxbridge moor.

Sanicula Europæa. Sanicle: in Cane wood near Hampſtead, in the woods about Highwood hill beyond Hendon, and about Hareſield, plentifully.

Saponaria officinalis. Soapwort: in an hedge near Uxbridge church-yard.

Scandix anthriſcus. Small Hemlock: on banks of rubbiſh about London every where.

Scirpus acicularis. Leaſt Upright Clubruſh: on Hounſlow heath towards Hampton.

——— ceſpitoſus. Dwarf Club-ruſh: on Hareſield moor, plentifully.

——— fluitans. Floating Clubruſh: on the bogs on Hareſield common, and on Hounſlow heath.

——— maritimus. Round headed baſtard Cyperus; on banks of rivers: in the Iſle of Dogs.

——— maritimus β. A variety of the laſt: in the Thames between Peterborough houſe, and the Horſe ferry, Weſtminſter.

——— mucronatus. Pointed Bullruſh: on the banks of the Thames above and below London.

——— ſetaceus. Leaſt Ruſh: in the dryer parts of the woods about Highgate and Hampſtead, and on Hareſield moor, abundantly.

——— ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus Graſs; in a pond on the left ſide of the road from London to Highgate, and in the moiſt parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

Scutellaria galericulata. Hooded Willow herb: by the ſide of the New river at Enfield, between Newington and Iſlington, and in Roſamond's pond in St. James's Park.

——— minor. Leſſer hooded Willow herb: in the great bog on Hampſtead heath, and on the moiſt parts of Hareſield common.

Sedum album. White Stone crop: on a wall juſt beyond the chapel at Kentiſh town, and on a wall near Bromley hall.

—— daſyphyllum. Round leaved Stone Crop: on the wall of the Botanic Gardens at Chelſea, and on walls near Hammerſmith.

Siſon inundatum. Leaſt Water Parſnep: on the bogs on Hampſtead heath between Hornſey and Newington, in the boggy places on Hareſield common, and in ſeveral places on Hounſlow heath.

—— ſegetum. Corn Parſley or Honewort: about Hampſtead heath, Hyde-park, and Tothilfields.

Siſymbrium Irio. Broad leaved Rocket or Hedge Muſtard.

Muſtard: on rubbiſh and old walls about London frequent; and on walls and elſewhere about Chelſea.

——— ſylveſtre. Water Rocket: in the ditches about Tothillfields, Weſtminſter, plentifully, on the banks of the Thames, and in a ditch in the road between Whitechapel and Mile end.

Sium latifolium. Great Water Parſnep; in rivers and marſhes: in the brick field near Tyburn turnpike, and in ſeveral parts of the river at Harefield.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders: in the fields near Cowley.

Solidago virgaurea. Common Golden Rod: on Hampſtead heath, and in the woods thereabouts, and in Hornſey wood.

——— virgarea β. A variety of Common Golden Rod: on Hampſtead heath and Biſhop's wood.

Sonchus paluſtris. Marſh Sowthiſtle: on the banks of the Thames about Blackwall.

Sorbus aucuparia. Quicken tree or Mountain aſh: in the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate as in Biſhop's and Cane woods.

Spergula nodoſa. Knotted Spurrey or Engliſh Marſh Saxifrage: on Hampſtead heath and Harefield moor.

Sphagnum arboreum. Creeping Bogmoſs: on trunks of trees on Enfield chace.

——— paluſtre. Grey Bogmoſs: in the bogs on Hampſtead heath and Harefield common.

Stellaria graminea β. A variety of leſſer Stitchwort: in the moiſt parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate.

Tanacetum vulgare. Common Tanſy: in a meadow near Harefield church, and in the watery lane at Edmonton.

Thymus ſerpyllum γ. A variety of Mother of Thyme; on hilly places and heaths: between Hampton-court and Tuddington.

——— ſerpyllum η. Hoary Thyme: on Oliver's mount in Uxbridge moor, plentifully.

Tragopogon porrifolium. Purple Goat's beard: in ſome meadows near Edmonton, and at Bromley near Bow.

Tremella auricula. Eared Tremella or Jews Ear: on rotten wood near the Neat's houſe, Chelſea.

——— purpurea. Purple Tremella, on dying and dead branches of trees:
——— granulata. Granulated Tremella:
} on the ſide of ditches, rivers and wet ſandy fields: about Hackney and Newington.

Trifolium filiforme. Small Trefoil: on Harefield common.

——— fragiferum. Strawberry Trefoil; in the lanes about Hornſey, and elſewhere.

——— ornithopoides. Bird's foot Trefoil: in Tothilfields, Weſtminſter.

——— ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil: on Oliver's mount in Uxbridge moor, plentifully; once found on a bank in the firſt field from Southampton-row in the road to Hampſtead.

——— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil; on barren paſtures and heaths: about London frequently, as in Tothilfields, Weſtminſter, and on Harefield and Uxbridge commons, plentifully.

Triglochin paluſtre. Arrow-headed graſs: in marſhy grounds at Harefield.

Turritis glabra. Great Tower Muſtard: in a lane near Iſtleworth, and on a bank at Slough.

Tuſſilago Petaſitis. Common Butterbur: by the river ſide near Harefield mill, abundantly, alſo about Chelſea water-works.

Typha anguſtifolia. Narrow-leaved Cat's tail; in ditches and ponds: on Hounſlow heath and elſewhere.

Ulmus campeſtris δ. Wych Haſel or broad-leaved Elm; in hedges: at Hoxton near London.

Ulva lactuca β. A variety of Green Laver or Oyſter Green: in ditches behind Newington.

——— lactuca γ. Another variety of the ſame; in ſhady, ſandy and moiſt places: on walls about London, common.

Utricularia minor. Leſſer hooded Milfoil: in the river at Uxbridge.

——— vulgare. Common hooded Milfoil: in ſtagnated waters at Hornſey.

Vaccinium Myrtillus. Black Whorts, Whortle berries or Bilberries: in the dryer parts of the woods about Hampſtead and Highgate, as in Cane wood and on the heath in great plenty, and on Iver heath near Uxbridge.

Verbaſcum Blattaria. Yellow Moth Mullein: in a chalk pit near the mill at Harefield.

——— nigrum. Sage-leaved black Mullein: about Harefield.

Veronica montana. Stalked Speedwell: in the grove near Breakſpear's and in Old Park wood near Harefield.

——— ſcutellata. Narrow-leaved Water Speedwell: in the bogs on Hampſtead heath, and on Harefield common.

Vinca major. Greater Periwinckle; in woods and hedges: at Harefield.

——— minor. Periwinckle: in a little grove near Breakſpear's, plentifully, in the lane leading from Uxbridge moor to Iver heath, at Highbury barn near Iſlington.

Viola canina η. A variety of Dog's Violet: on Harefield and Uxbridge commons.

——— hirta. Hairy Violet: in the chalky field near the Paper-mills, and by the ſide of Old Park wood, Harefield.

——— paluſtre. Marſh Violet: on Hampſtead heath.

Viſcum album. White Miſſel, or Miſſeltoe: on ſome trees at Clarendon houſe, St. James's.

Xanthium Strumarium. Leſſer Burdock; on dunghills and rich grounds: at Stanes and near the footway in the fields which lead from Goſwell ſtreet to the New river.

Zannichellia paluſtris. Horned Pondweed: in ditches and ponds near Pancras church.

ESSEX.

Fig. 2. p. 44.

Fig. 4. p. 49.

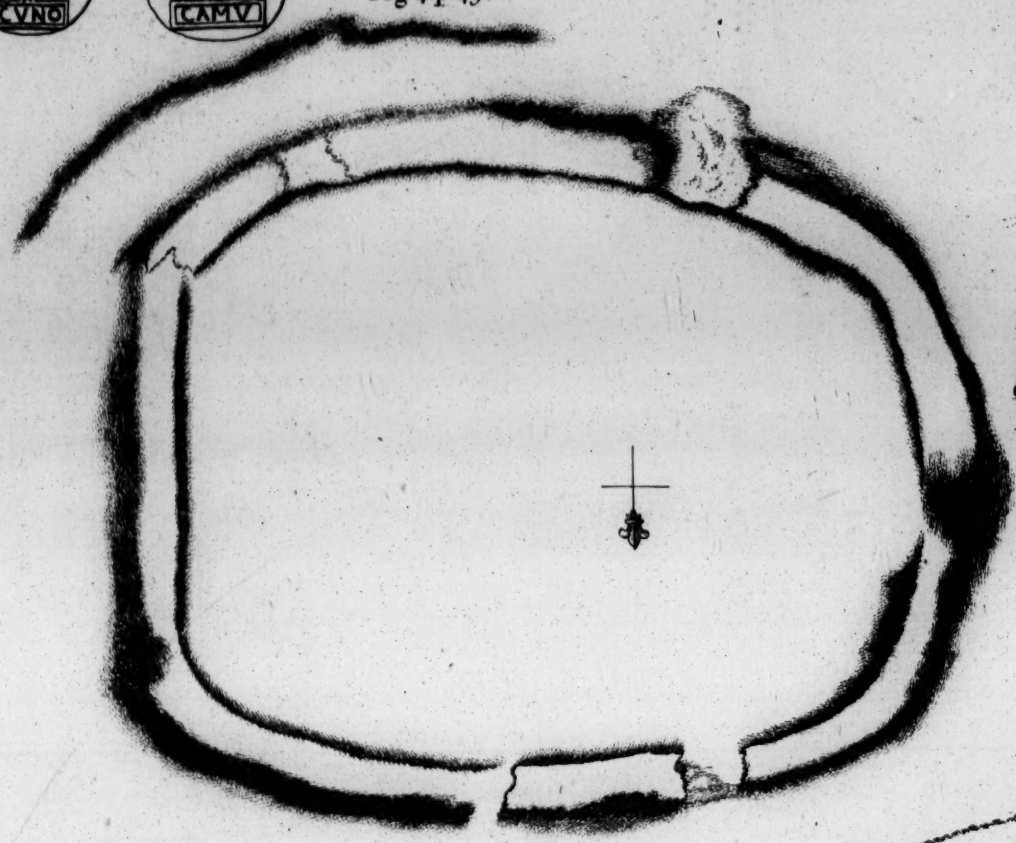

Fig. 1. p. 41.

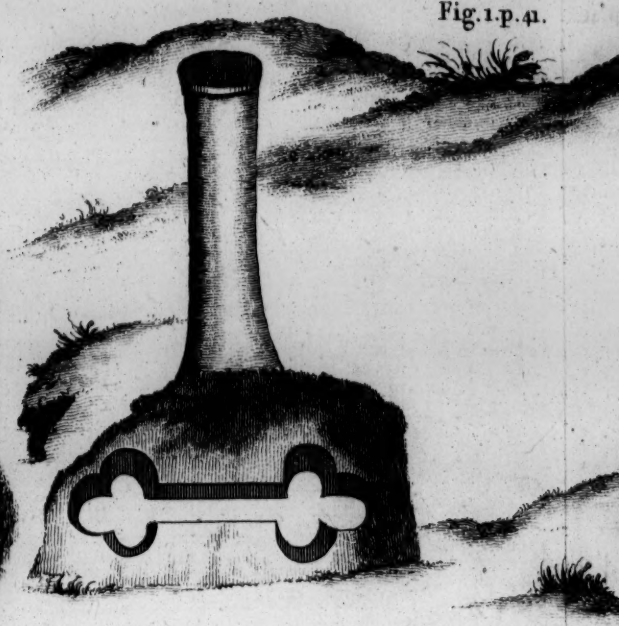

Fig. 8. p. 55.

Fig. 18. p. 62.

Fig. 6. p. 53.

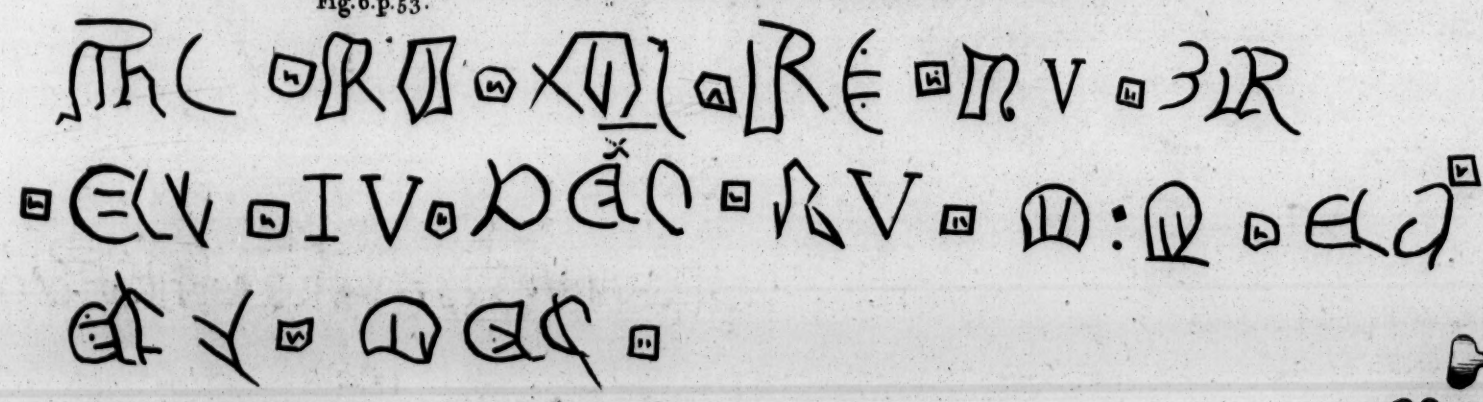

Fig. 7. p. 55.

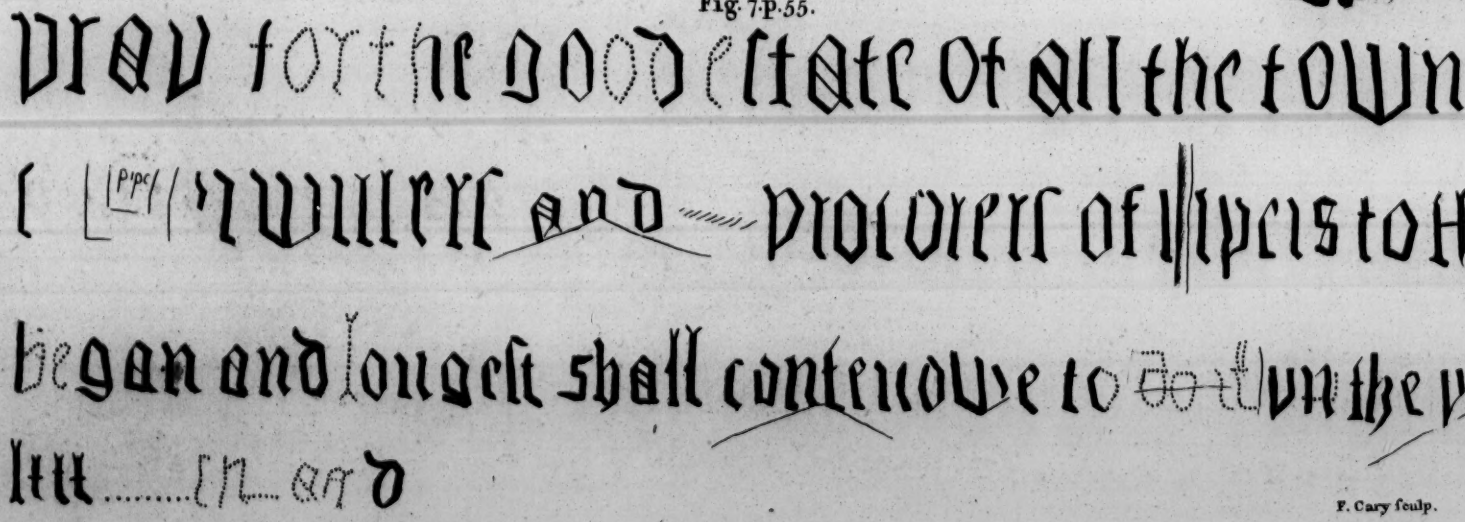

F. Cary sculp.

Fig. 1. p. 41.

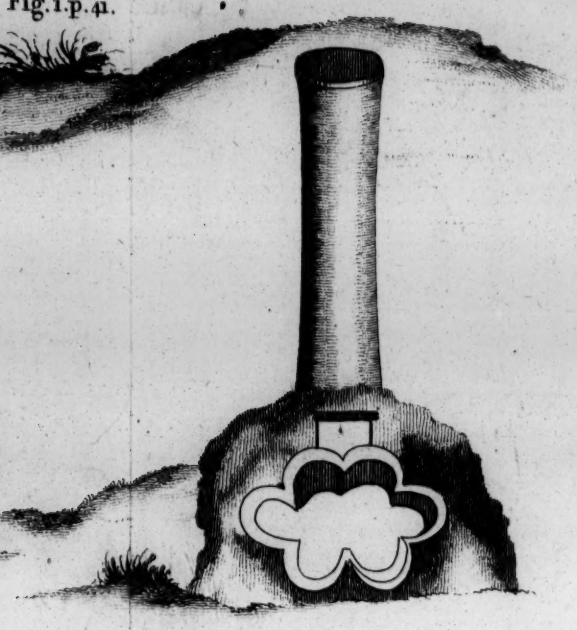

Fig. 5. p. 51.

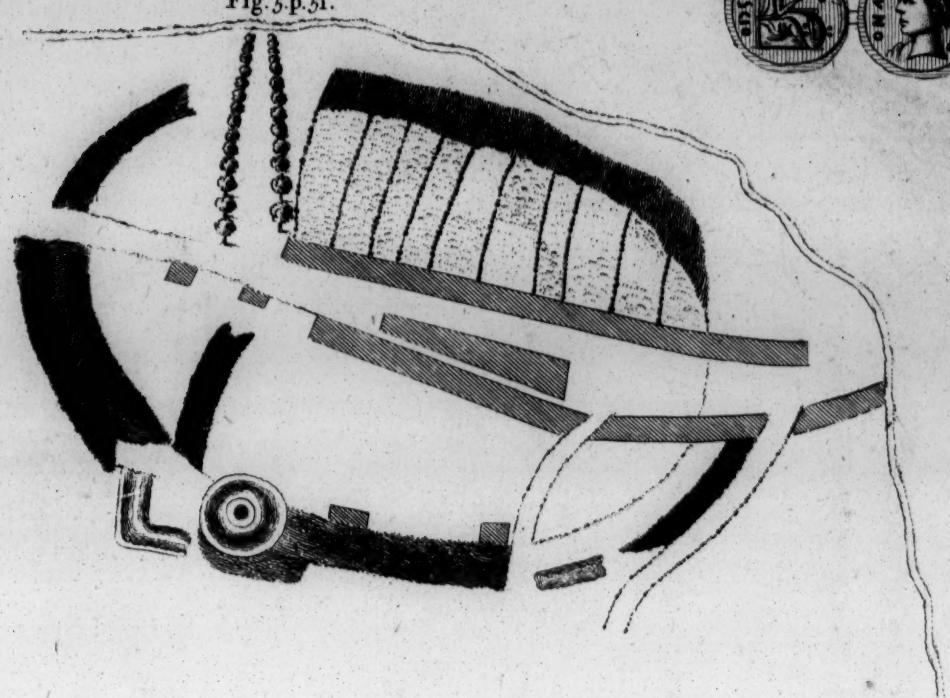

Fig. 3. p. 44.

Fig. 8. p. 55.

Fig. 12. p. 56.

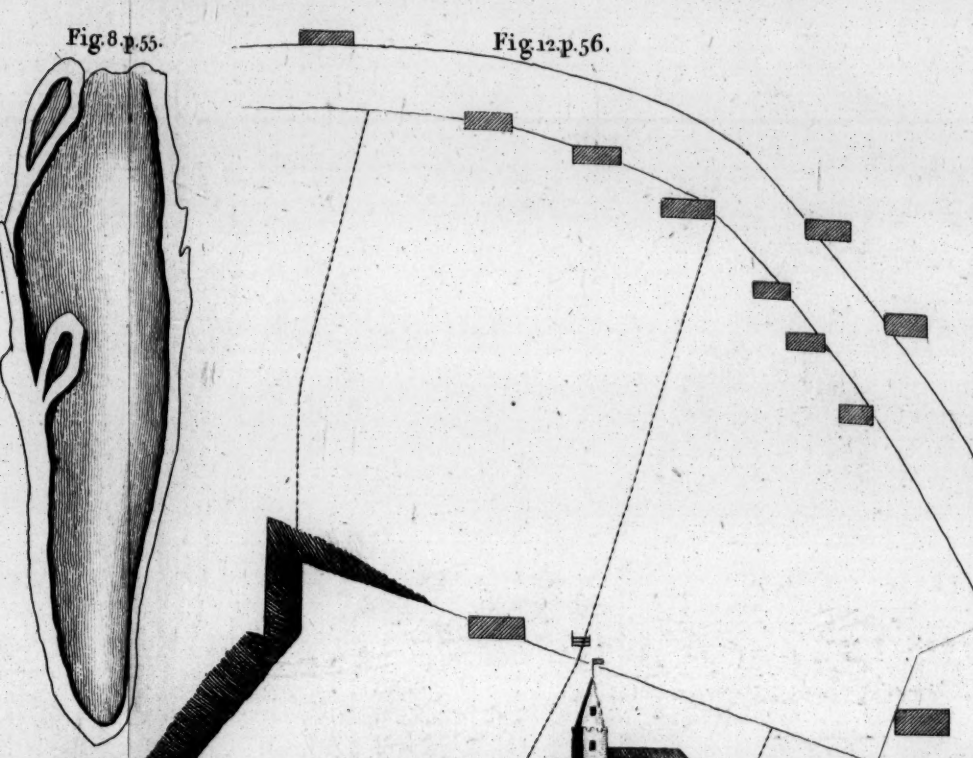

Fig. 9. p. 55.

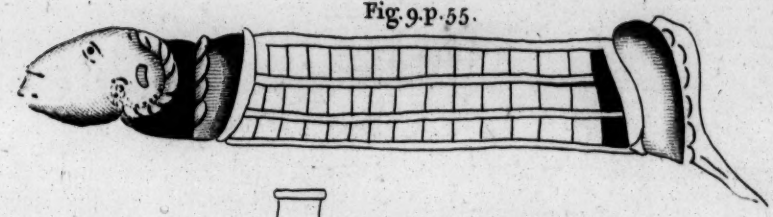

Fig. 10. p. 55.

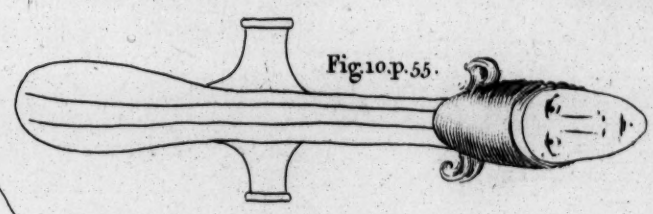

Fig. 11. p. 55.

Fig. 13. p. 62.

Fig. 14. p. 62.

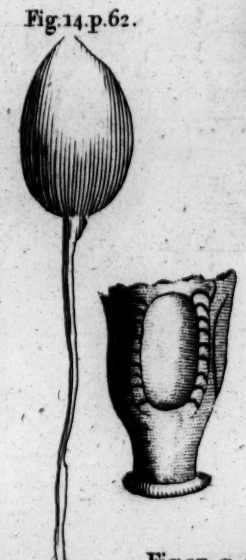

Fig. 16. p. 62.

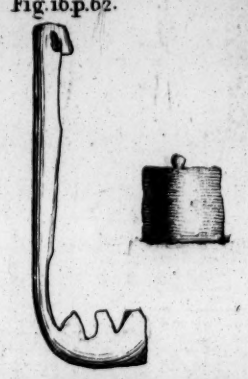

Fig. 15. p. 62.

Fig. 17. p. 62.

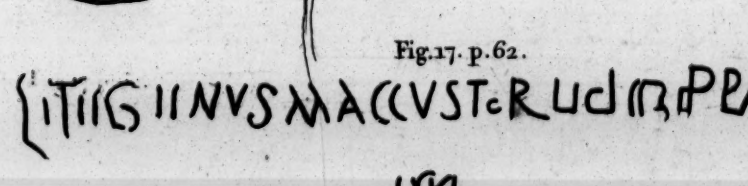

Fig. 6. p. 52.

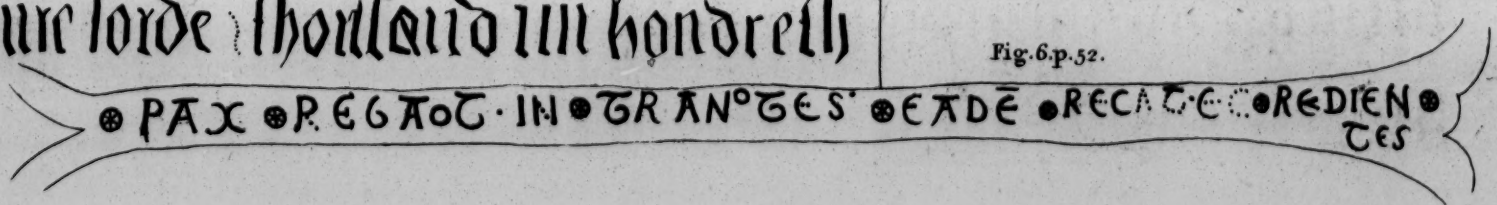

CAMBRIDGE SHIRE

HARTFORD SHIRE

ESSEX

KENT

LINTON

SAFFRON WALDEN

DUNMOW

BILLERICAY

CHELMSF

EPPING

WALTHAM HOLY CROSS or ABBEY

ROMFORD

INGATESTONE

Lat. 51°

Haverhill
Bartlow
Hadstock
Ickleton
Lit. Chesterford
Great Chesterford
Castle Camps
Kedington
Barley
Heydon
Great Chishall
Lit. Chishall
Elmdon
Strethall
Christhall
Littlebury
Wenden Lofts
Wenden
Arkesden
Clavering
Langley
Hobs Hart
Wicken
Donhim
Quendon
Rickling
Newport
Widdington
Henham on the Hill
Manuden
Bendish End
Elsenham
Stansted
Mountfichet
Birchanger
Takeley
Hockerill
Bishops Stortford
Twyford
Hatfield
Broad Oak Sabridgeworth
Stansted Abbot
Eastwick
Hadham
Matchin
Much Hadham
Little Hadham
Broxbourn
Nasing
Waltham Abbey
Epping
Newardstone
Lambourn
Dagenham
Ilford
Leyton
Stratford le Bow
Limehouse
Isle of Dogs
Greenwich
Observatory
Erith
Part of Kent
Rainham
Wennington
Aveley
Purfleet
West Thurrock
Grays Thurrock
Chadwell
Orset
Stifford
Okenden
North Okenden
Cranham
Upminster
Hornchurch
Rumford
Havering Bower
South Weald
Brentwood
Hutton
Ingrave
Burstead
Lit. Burstead
East Horndon
Dumton
Warley
Lit. Warley
Gr. Warley
Bulvan
Vange
Basildon
Stanford
Mucking
Fobbing
Lit. Thurrock
Grays
Tilbury
Tilty
Broxted
Chrishall
Elmdon
Strethall
Littlebury
Wenden Lofts
Saffron Walden
Audley End
Sewards Stone
Walden Abbey
Bartlow
Castle Camps
Kedington
Haverhill
Stoke
Wixoe
Sturmer
Birdbrook
Steeple Bumpstead
Helions Bumpstead
Hempstead
Sambourn
Radwinter
Wimbish
Thaxted
Lindsell
Great or Much Easton
Little Easton
Dunmow
Felsted
Braintree
Bocking
Finchingfield
Great Sampford
Lit. Sampford
Bardfield
Lit. Bardfield
Great Bardfield
Shalford
Stebbing
Lit. Leigh
Great Leighs
Broomfield
Chelmsford
Writtle
Widford
Springfield
Moulsham
Danbury
Woodham Walter
Purleigh
Maldon
Burnham
Althorne
Latchingdon
Mayland
Tillingham
Dengie
Bradwell
Southminster
Rochford
Hockley
Hawkwell
Hullbridge
Canewdon
Ashingdon
Prittlewell
Southend
Shoebury
Foulness
Great Wakering
Little Wakering
Barling
Paglesham
Rochford
Hockley
Hawkwell
Hullbridge
Canewdon
Ashingdon
Prittlewell
Southend
Shoebury
Foulness
Great Wakering
Little Wakering
Barling
Paglesham

A MAP OF ESSEX

from the best AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Cary.

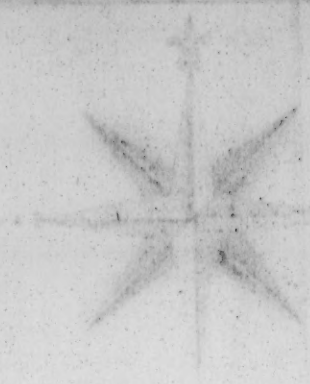
REFERENCES TO THE HUNDREDS

1. Uttlesford	11. Winstree
2. Clavering	12. Waltham
3. Freshwell	13. Ongar
4. Hinckford	14. Chelmsford
5. Lexden	15. Dangey
6. Tendring	16. Becontree
7. Harlow	17. Havering Liberty
8. Dunmow	18. Chafford
9. Witham	19. Barstable
10. Thurstable	20. Rocheford

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

1° East Longitude from St Pauls London



ESSEX.

THE other territory of the Trinobantes, from its eaſtern ſituation and the Saxons inhabiting it called in Saxon Eaſt Seaxa, in Norman Exſſeſa, and now commonly ESSEX, is a very extenſive fruitful tract, productive of ſaffron, well wooded, and wealthy; encircled as it were by the ocean, and many rivers well furniſhed with fiſh, and abundantly ſupplying all its wants. On the north the river Stour divides it from Suffolk; the ſea waſhes it on the ſouth; the Thames, now become a large river, ſeparates it from Kent on the eaſt; as does the little river Ley on the weſt from Middleſex, and the Stort or leſſer Stour, which runs into it, from Hertfordſhire. In deſcribing this county, according to my plan, I ſhall begin with the remarkable places on the Ley and Thames, proceeding to thoſe more inland and on the ſea.

From the Ley (in Saxon Lizea) extends for a conſiderable length and breadth, a foreſt appropriated to hunting, and ſtocked with exceeding large and fat deer: formerly by way of eminence called the Foreſt of Eſſex, now Waltham foreſt, from the adjacent town of Waltham, Saxon Wealð-ham, q. d. a manſion in a foreſt. This town ſtands on the Ley here parted by iſlands into two channels, and is of no great antiquity. For towards the decline of the Saxon monarchy, one Tovi, a man of wealth and influence, and, according to the private hiſtory of the place, Stalhere or ſtandard bearer to the king, "firſt founded it on account of the plenty of game "hereabouts, and ſettled 66 inhabitants here." On his death his ſon Athelſtan preſently ſpent his eſtate, and Edward the Confeſſor gave this place to Harold, ſon of earl Godwin. A monaſtery was ſoon founded here, which became the burying place of its founder Harold. For, being raiſed to the throne by the infatuation of a party and his own ambition, he founded this houſe in honor of the holy croſs, and offered up his prayers in it for ſucceſs againſt the Norman invaders, and being ſlain in battle by them was buried here by his mother, who, by her humble ſupplications, obtained his body of the Conqueror. The preſent poſſeſſor is ſir Edward Deny, created baron by king James.

On a hill above this is Copthall, ſeen at a great diſtance round, formerly the ſeat of Fitz Aucher, lately of ſir Thomas Heneage, knight of the Garter, who fitted it up in a moſt elegant manner.

Upon this river undoubtedly was Durolitum, an antient town mentioned by the emperor Antoninus, but the preciſe ſituation I cannot fix. For I muſt obſerve once for all that the antient places in this county are involved in ſuch obſcurity, that whatever diſcoveries I may have made in other counties, in this I am totally at a loſs. If I might hazard a conjecture, I ſhould ſuppoſe Durolitum to have been where ſome traces of the antient name are retained at Leyton, q. d. the town on the Ley, as Durolitum in Britiſh ſignifies the water of Ley. This is a ſcattered village, five miles from London; for which, by the inaccuracy of tranſcribers, 15 has got into Antoninus. That here was formerly a ford ſeems probable from a place in the neighbourhood called Old ford, in which Matilda Henry I's queen having narrowly eſcaped drowning cauſed a bridge to be erected over the river a little below at Stratford. Thereabouts the river dividing into three ſtreams ſurrounds very pleaſant meads, where are to be ſeen the remains of a little monaſtery founded by William de Montfitchet a famous Norman baron, A. D. 1140. The Ley afterwards uniting empties itſelf gently into the Thames at a place called Leymouth.

Leyton. Old ford. Stratford.

The Thames enlarged by the confluence of many rivers which I can only juſt mention paſſes by Barking, or as Bede[a] calls it Berecing, a nunnery founded by Erkenwald biſhop of London[b]. Here falls into the Thames the Roding, which gives name to ſeveral villages it paſſes by, as High Roding, Eythorp Roding, Leaden Roding, &c. and the two firſt were given to the church of Ely by Leofwin a nobleman to atone for the horrid murder of his mother[c]. Thence it paſſes by Angre or Ongar, where on a high hill are remains of a caſtle built by Richard Lucy, chief juſtice of England under Henry II. one of the heireſſes of whoſe family king John married to Richard de Ripariis or Rivers, who lived at Stanford Rivers in this neighbourhood.

Barking. Roding r. Rodings. Ongar.

From the mouth of the Roding through low grounds in many places overflowed and exhaling unwholeſome vapours, the Thames proceeds to Tilbury: near which in a chalk hill are certain caverns, ten yards[d] deep, very narrow at the mouth, and very artfully built of ſtone in the form here given from a drawing communicated to me by a perſon who went into them. Of theſe I meet with no further account than what I before gave in Kent[e]. Tilbury, or as Bede[f] calls it, Tillaburgh, conſiſts of a few cottages by the Thames' ſide, though formerly it was the ſeat of biſhop Ceada, when about A. D. 630 he baptized the Eaſt Saxons.

Tilbury. See Pl. I. fig. 1.

The river paſſing through other low and unhealthy grounds, having now received a tide, ſeparates from the ſhore an iſland called CONVENNOS and by Ptolemy COUNOS, and ſtill retaining the name of Canvey, five miles in length, extending from Hole haven to Leigh on the coaſt of Eſſex. Part of it formerly belonged to the collegiate church of Weſtminſter. It is ſo low as to be frequently intirely under water, except a few eminences to which ſheep retreat. It feeds near 4000 ſheep of a delicate flavour, which I have ſeen milked Canvey iſland.

[a] Eccl. Hiſt. IV. 6.
[b] A. D. 675.
[c] Vol. I. p. 214.
[d] fathoms. Holland. G.
[e] But the Conqueror took them away.
[f] Eccl. Hiſt. III. c. 22.

by boys inſtead of women on little ſtools, who alſo make cheeſes of the milk in the cheeſe ſheds called there Wiches [g].

Beamſlete. Oppoſite to this iſland is firſt Beamſlete, with its deep and wide ditches deſcribed by Matthew of Weſtminſter [h], and a caſtle fortified by Haſting or Hadleigh. Haſten a Dane, and forced by Alfred [i]. Then Hadleigh, a caſtle now in ruins once belonging to Hubert de Burgh, afterwards to Thomas of Woodſtock. Leigh. Next Leigh, a pretty town full of excellent ſeaman, and Prittlewell. near it Prittlewell, where Swane of Eſſex founded a cell for monks. The land runs out here into a point Black tail point. called Black-tail point and Shoberry Neſs, from the Shoberry neſs. village of Shobery on it, formerly a city called Shobery. Sceobipiz. Our old annals ſay, that "the Danes "being driven from Beamfleot retired to the city "called Sceobirig among the Eaſt Saxons, and for- "tified it ſtrongly [k]." The Thames here diſembogues itſelf into the Ocean with a wide mouth, which Ptolomy calls ÆSTUARIUM TAMESÆ, in ſome copies corruptly IAMESÆ, and we Thames mouth.

Rochford. More inland is Rochford, which gives name to the hundred, now the property of the barons Rich, antiently of antient nobles of its own name, whoſe eſtate came to Butler earl of Ormond and Wiltſhire, and from them to Thomas Bollen, whom Henry VIII. created viſcount Rochford, and afterwards earl of Wiltſhire, from whom deſcended Queen Elizabeth and the lords Hunſdon.

Proceeding from weſt to eaſt from the Thames inland we have theſe following places of note. Ha- Havering. vering, an antient retreat of our Saxon kings, ſo called from a ring which a pilgrim ſent by St. John Hornchurch. gave to Edward the Confeſſor. Hornchurch, q. d. the horned monaſtery from leaden horns faſtened over Rumford. the eaſt part of the church. Rumford, remarkable Giddy hall for its hog market, and Giddy-hall in its neighbourhood the ſeat of Thomas Cook, mayor of London, whoſe great wealth brought him into great danger. For being charged with high treaſon, of which he was entirely innocent, and acquitted by the integrity of judge Markham in very oppreſſive times, he was notwithſtanding ſtripped of almoſt all his fortune. Brentwood. Brentwood and Engherſton (antiently Engheaſton) Ingateſton. are remarkable for nothing but markets and inns.

Here I am at loſs, and doubtful whether I ſhall propoſe a conjecture I have formed in my mind. Cæſaromagus. Somewhere hereabouts was the city Cæſaromagus, of conſiderable eminence in the Roman times, as the name alone ſhews, ſignifying Cæſar's city, as Druſomagus is the city of Druſus. It ſeems to have been built in honour of Auguſtus; for Suetonius [l] writes that all the princes in alliance with that emperor built cities in their dominions which had the name of Cæſar annexed to them. If I ſhould place this Cæſaromagus near Brentwood I ſhould make my readers ſmile at my conceit, which can certainly receive no ſupport from the diſtance: the numbers in Antoninus being abſolutely corrupt, though exact enough from Colonia and Canonium. I cannot call in a Roman military way to my aſſiſtance, no ſuch thing appearing in this county. Nor is there more than the fainteſt trace of the name of Cæſar in that of the hundred, formerly called Ceasford [m], now Cheafford. As the antient names of antient towns are very little changed in ſome inſtances, and totally in others, ſo there are others in which ſome ſingle ſyllable only remains. Thus Cæſaraugusta in Spain is now changed to Saragoſſa, Cæſaromagus in France has quite loſt its name, and is called Beauvois, and Cæſarea in Normandy, Cherburg, retaining only one ſyllable. But to triſle no longer; If Cæſaromagus is not in this neighbourhood let others trace it out. My penetration cannot diſcover it after the moſt accurate inquiry and view.

Below theſe we find S. Okendon, where formerly re- S. Okendon. ſided the Bruins, a very conſiderable family in theſe parts, from the two heireſſes of which by ſeveral re-marriages Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, the Tirells, Berners, Harleſtons, Haveninghams, and others are deſcended. The male line of this family ſtill ſubſiſts in Hampſhire. Thorndon, where ſir John Thorndon. Petre, knight of the garter, now baron Petre of Writtle, built a handſome houſe. It was formerly the reſidence of the famous family of Fitz Lewis, of whom the laſt, according to report, periſhed with the houſe in an accidental fire at his wedding. Burghſted, Burghſted. by contraction Burſted, q. d. the place of the Burg or town, a name given to many places by our anceſtors. This I once ſuſpected was Cæſaromagus. Whatever it formerly was, it is now only a country village near Billericay, a conſiderable market town. Billericay. Aſhdown, formerly Aſſandon, which Marianus tranſ- Aſhdown. lates the Mount of Aſſes, where was fought that fatal battle in which Edmund Ironſide firſt beat the Danes [n], but afterwards by a ſudden turn of fortune through treachery was ſo routed by them as to loſe many of the Engliſh nobility. In memory of this battle we read that Canute the Dane afterwards built a church on the ſpot; it being his practice to erect chapels whereever he had fought a battle by way of atonement for the blood he had ſhed.

Not far from hence is Raleigh, no diſagreeable Raleigh. town, which ſeems the Raganeia of Domeſday book, which mentions the caſtle built here by Swene, where, adds that record, "is a park, and ſix arpenni "of vineyard, yielding in a good ſeaſon 20 modii of "wine." I mention this both for the uſe of the French word Arpent, and for the wine made in this iſland. Swene was an eminent nobleman, ſon of Robert Fitz Wimaerc [o], and father of Robert de Eſſex, whoſe ſon Henry de Eſſex, hereditary ſtandard-bearer royal, having loſt both his courage and ſtandard in a ſkirmiſh with the Welch, was accuſed of treaſon, worſted in ſingle combat, and being thrown into priſon, had his eſtate confiſcated to Henry II. The barony continued a long time in the hands of our kings till Hubert de Burgh obtained it of king John.

The ſhore curving in a little to the north here ad- Crouch. mits the ſea into two bays, one called Crouch, the Blackwater. other Blackwater, formerly Pant. In Crouch are four pleaſant green iſlands, but rendered marſhy by the tide: the principal of theſe are Wallot and Foul- Wallot and Foulneſs iſlands. neſs, q. d. Bird Cape, which has a church, and may be come at on horſeback when the tide is out. Between Dengy Hundred. theſe is the hundred of Dengy, formerly Dauncing, abounding in paſturage and cattle, but both the ſoil and air unhealthy, whence the chief manufacture is cheeſe, and the men, inſtead of the women, milk the ſheep. They makes cheeſes of uncommon ſize, Eſſex cheeſe. which are ſent not only over England but abroad for

[g] From the Saxon Pic a manſion or houſe.
[h] ad A. D. 895.
[i] Chron. Sax. 93, 94.
[k] Sax. Chron. p. 94. A. D. 894.
[l] Aug c. 60. Eutrop. VII. 8.
[m] I know not where Camden found this. In Domeſday it is Cefford, but has no s in it.
[n] A. D. 1016.
[o] Ralph de Diceto. Domeſday in Theydon. Morant I. 155. (H.)

the

the uſe of the peaſants and labourers. The chief town of this hundred which takes its name from it is Dengy, ſuppoſed by the inhabitants to take its name from the Danes. Near it is Tillingham, given by Ethelbert the firſt Chriſtian Saxon king to the church of St. Paul London. Higher up on the north ſhore was antiently a conſiderable city called Ithanceſtre. Radulphus Niger after Bede[p] writes that "biſhop "Ceada baptiſed the Eaſt Saxons near Maldon in "the city Ithanceſter on the banks of the Pant "which runs by Maldon in the province of Dengy; "but now that city is overflowed by the Pant." The exact place I cannot point out; but I have no doubts that the preſent river Froſhwell was formerly called Pant, one of its ſources being ſtill called Pantſwell, and the monk of Cogeſhall has ſaid the ſame. Some will have it that Ithanceſter was in the extremity of this hundred where now is St. Peter's upon the wall or bank: the ſhore hereabouts being with difficulty fenced againſt the incroachments of the ſea by banks. However I am apt to think that this Ithanceſter was OTHONA, where the Numerus Fortenſium with their commander was ſtationed in the decline of the Roman empire under the Comes Littoris Saxonici, or Count of the Saxon ſhore againſt the Saxon pirates. The alteration from Othona to Ithana is eaſy, and its ſituation on a bay where many rivers empty themſelves was very proper for this purpoſe. We may add here that the charge of this hundred was committed by the Confeſſor to Ranulph Peperkin by a ſhort charter, which I the more willingly inſert here that we who have gone through all the refinements of the Law may ſee the frankneſs and ſimplicity of that age. The original is in the Exchequer records, but the language ſoftened by being frequently tranſcribed *.

Ich Edward Koning,
Have yeven of my foreſt the keeping
Of the hundred of Chelmer and Dancing
To Randolf Peperking and his kindling,
With heorte and hinde, doe and bocke,
Hare and foxe, catt and brocke,
Wilde fowell with his flocke,
Partrich, feſant hen and feſant cock,
With greene and wilde ſtob and ſtock;
To kepen and to yemen by all her might Both by day and eke by night,
And hounds for to holde
Good and ſwift and bolde,
Fower grehouns and ſix racches
For hare and fox and wild cattes.
And therefore ich made him my booke:
Witnes the biſhop Wolſton,
And booke ylered many on,
And Sweyne of Eſſex our brother,
And teken him many other,
And our ſtiward Howelin
That byſought me for him.

Such was the unſuſpecting honour and ſimplicity of that age which founded all its ſecurity in a few lines and a few golden croſſes. "For before the Normans "came in, ſays Ingulphus[q], deeds were confirmed "by golden croſſes and other ſignatures: but the "Normans introduced the cuſtom of authenticating "them by a number of ſeals in wax before three or "four witneſſes. Formerly many eſtates were con-"veyed by word of mouth without writing or deed, "only with the Lord's ſword or helmet, a horn or "cup, and many tenements with a ſpur, a curry "comb, a bow, and ſome with an arrow."

Into Blackwater bay, which I have ſaid bounds the north ſide of this hundred, and abounds with excellent oyſters which we call Walfleot, run two rivers, which waſh the greater part of the hundred, Chelmer and Froſhwell. The Chelmer comes from the woods inland paſſing through Thaxted a little market town pleaſantly ſituated on a hill, and Tiltey, where Maurice Fitz Gilbert founded a little monaſtery, to Eſtanes ad Turrim now Eſton, inhabited by the lords of Lovain, deſcendants of Godfrey brother of Henry VI. of the name, duke of Brabant, who were ſent hither to "maintain the honour of Eye," and ranked as barons to the ſixth deſcent. But under Edward III. for want of iſſue male the eſtate and title paſſed with a daughter to William Bourgchier, whoſe poſterity were for a ſhort time earls of Eſſex. Thence to Dunmow, formerly Dunmawg, in Domeſday Dunmaw[r], a town pleaſantly ſituated on a gentle riſe, where one Juga founded a priory, A. D. 1111. "But William Baynard, of whom Juga held the "town of Little Dunmaw," (ſays the hiſtory of the houſe), "loſt his barony by felony, and Henry I. "gave it to Robert ſon of Richard ſon of Gilbert "earl of Clare and his heirs, with the honour of "Baynard caſtle in London, which Robert was then "cupbearer[s] to king Henry." Theſe are the writer's words, which I do not think myſelf at liberty to alter, though they contain an anachroniſm common to the beſt hiſtorians. The earl of Clare was not yet ſprung from that family.

Chelmer r. Thaxted. Tiltey. Eaſton. Lords of Lovain. Dunmow.

To leave the river a little: not far hence is Plaiſy, ſo called from the French plaiſir, formerly Eſtre, the ſeat of the conſtables of England in the later Saxon times, and according to the Book of Ely, afterwards. At this place two noblemen of great power, Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, and earl of Eſſex[t], and John Holland earl of Huntingdon own brother to Richard II. who was ſtripped of the title of duke of Exeter, unable to keep the middle way between unbridled inſolence and mean ſubmiſſion, met their deaths. The former for his ill-timed oppoſition to government was hurried hence to Calais, and there ſmothered; the latter beheaded in this very place by Henry IV. for ſeditious practices, and thus ſeemed to make ſatisfaction to the manes of Woodſtock, whoſe death he was ſuppoſed to have occaſioned. Thence the Chelmer flows not far from Lees a little priory founded by the Gernons[u], now the ſeat of the barons Rich, who owe their rank to the prudence of Richard Rich, chancellor of England under Edward VI. A little lower is Hatfield Peverell † ſo called from its owner Ranulph Peperell, who married the greateſt beauty of her time daughter of Ingelric a Saxon nobleman. She founded a college here now almoſt deſtroyed, and lies buried in a window[x] of the church, of which but a very ſmall part remains. She had by her huſband William Peverell, Caſtellan of Dover, Payne Peverell lord of Brun in Cambridgeſhire, and by the Conqueror whoſe concubine ſhe was, William Peverell, lord of Not-

Pleſhy. Lees. Hatfield Peverell.

* Record. Hilar. term. 17 Ed. 2. pen. Theſ. Camerar. & Scaccarii.
† alias Peperking. Liber S. Martini London.
[p] Hiſt. Ec. III. c. 22. [q] Edit. Ox. p. 70. [r] Dommauna.
[s] Dugd. Bar. I. 209. Steward. Robert here mentioned was earl of Brionne, and died 34 Henry I. See Brooke's Detection, p. 43. The firſt earl of Clare of this family was not born till four deſcents after.
[t] Uncle to Richard II. [u] about 1230. t. Henry III.
[x] Her effigy lies in the window, and ſhe was probably buried below, in the wall.

tingham,

tingham. To return to the Chelmer, which we have brought to Chelmesford, vulgarly Chemsford, where by the diſtance from Camalodunum, CANONIUM ſeems to have been. This is a large town in the heart of the county at the conflux of two rivers, the Chelmer on the eaſt and another on the ſouth, which if called Can[y], as ſome think, is a deciſive reaſon for placing Canonium here. Within memory this town was famous for a little priory founded by Malcolm king of Scotland, now only for the aſſizes held here twice a year. It recovered itſelf when Maurice biſhop of London, lord of it, built a bridge here t. Henry I. and turned hither the road which before paſſed through Writtle, remarkable for the extent of its pariſh, which Henry III. gave to Robert Bruce, lord of Anandale in Scotland, whoſe wife was one of the heireſſes of John laſt earl of Cheſter, becauſe he would not have the earldom of Cheſter parcelled out among women, and Edward II. on forfeiture by the deſcendants of Bruce for treaſon gave it to Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex. King James, among the many new creation at the beginning of his reign, created ſir John Petre a knight of diſtinction baron of Writtle. His father William Petre was a man of great prudence and learning, as memorable for the great offices he held in the ſtate, having been privy counſellor to Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary and Elizabeth, and frequently embaſſador to foreign princes, as for his literary merit at Oxford where he received his education, and his charity to his poor netghbours at Engerſtone.

Chelmsford. CANONIVM. Writtle.

The river Froſhwell (more properly Pant, afterwards called Blackwater) riſes from a ſmall ſource at Radwinter, which belonged[z] to the barons Cobham, and having paſſed for a long courſe by no other places than Bocking a rich living, Coggeſhall a Cluniac abbey founded by king Stephen, and Whittam built by Edward the elder, A. D. 914, and ſaid to be the honour of Euſtace earl of Bologne, meets the Chelmer, which coming down a large ſtream not far from Danbury on a very high hill long the ſeat of the illuſtrious family of the Darcies, runs by Woodham Walters, the antient reſidence of the lords Fitz Walters, in whom with the greateſt antiquity was united a rank deduced from Robert younger ſon of Richard ſon of earl Gilbert, but in the laſt century carried by a daughter into the family of the Ratcliffes, who, being now advanced to the title of earls of Suſſex, reſide at New hall, a magnificent manſion not far hence, formerly belonging to the Butlers earls of Ormond, after to Thomas Bollen earl of Wiltſhire, of whom Henry VIII. purchaſed it by exchange, and making coſtly additions to it gave it the name of Beau Lieu, which, however, never prevailed among the generality.

Froſhwell r. Radwinter. Bocking. Coggſhall. Witham. Danbury. Woodham Walters. New hall. Beau Lieu.

The Chelmer, enlarged by other ſtreams, and divided by a river iſland, and changing its name to Blackwater, or Pant, viſits the antient Roman Colony of CAMALODUNUM, which has made this ſhore famous. Ptolomy calls it CAMUDOLANUM, Antoninus CAMULODUNUM and CAMOLUDUNUM, but Pliny, Dio, and an antient marble proves its true name to be CAMALODUNUM[a]. In tracing this city how have ſome writers betrayed their ignorance: when its name diſcovers it to the blindeſt obſerver. Many have ſought for it in the weſtern[b] part of the iſland, as that good man who thought he had all the light of antiquity in his hands; others as far as Scotland[c]; others on the authority of Leland, at Cotchester; when, with ſcarce any alteration in the name, it is now called Maldon, Saxon Maledune and Mealdune, the greateſt part of the name ſtill remaining. Nor is the name alone a reaſon; the diſtance aſſigned to it from Mona by Pliny, and its ſituation in an old itinerary table, are demonſtrative proofs. I know not whether I may venture to derive its name Camulodunum from the God Camulus. That Mars was worſhiped under that name, an antient inſcription in the Colloti palace at Rome, and altars that have been found inſcribed CAMVLO DEO SANCTO ET FORTISSIMO plainly prove, and in a coin of Cunobeline, whoſe royal reſidence we have before obſerved this was, I have ſeen the figure with a helmet and ſpear, characters of Mars[d], and the legend CAMV. But as this coin is not at hand we preſent the reader with others of the ſame prince which ſeem to relate to this place. Cunobeline was ſovereign of this eaſtern part of the iſland in the reign of Tiberius, and ſeems to have had three ſons, Adminius, Togadumnus, and Catacratus[e]. Adminius was driven out by his father, and recalled by Caligula when he came with that ridiculous parade to Batavia to ſpread an alarm in Britain from thence. Togodumnus was defeated and ſlain in a pitched battle by A. Plautius, who obtained the honour of an ovation for this, and for routing Catacratus. This was that Plautius, who, at the inſtigation of C. Bericus a Britiſh exile (as pretences for war are never wanting) firſt after Julius Cæſar made a deſcent on Britain in the reign of Claudius, the emperor himſelf ſoon following him with his legions, and the whole force of the empire and elephants (whoſe bones accidentally dug up have led many perſons into great miſtakes) croſſed the Thames, routed the Britans on the oppoſite bank, and eaſily made himſelf maſter of this place, for which having given his ſon the name of BRITANNICUS, and received himſelf the title of Imperator repeatedly, he returned to Rome ſix months after his landing here. But of this I have already diſcourſed at large. Camulodunum being thus reduced, Claudius placed in it a powerful colony of veterans, and in memory of this event ſtruck money inſcribed COL. CAMALODVN[f], from which we fix it to the twelfth year of his reign, A. D. 52, and upon account of the veterans of the 14th Legion Gemina Martia Victrix, whom Tacitus calls the Conquerors of Britain, placed here, it has the name of Colonia Victricenſis in the annexed inſcription:

Maldon. The God Camulus. See the plate of British Coins. fig. 2, 3. Pl. I. i.

CN. MVNATIVS. M. F. PAL.
AVRELIVS BASSVS.
PROC. AVG.
PRAEF. FABR. PRAEF. COH. III.
SAGITTARIORVM. PRAEF. COH. II.
ASTVRVM. CENSITOR. CIVIVM.
ROMANORVM COLONIAE.
VICTRICENSIS.
QVAE. EST. IN. BRITANNIA.
CAMALODVNI.
CVRATOR. VIAE. NOMENTANAE.
PATRONVS. EIVSDEM. MVNICIPII.
FLAMEN PERPETVVS. DVVMVIRALI.
POTESTATE. AEDILIS. DEDICATOR. IIII.

[y] as in Bowen's Map. Canfield
[z] See Selden in Eutychii Orig. p. 118. &c. n. 6.
[a] Mr. Pegge thinks this figure rather repreſents Cunobelin. A figure on another coin like Mars he ſuppoſes Hercules. Eſſay on Cunobeline's Coins, p. 64. 68. Better copies of Mr. Camden's two coins may be ſeen in Pl. I. fig. 2, 3.
[b] Cheſhire.
[c] Lluyd.
[d] During the 15th and 16th centuries.
[e] Caractacus.
[f] Whence Mr. Camden had this coin I know not. It is not in Mezzabarba, who mentions all he had ſeen or heard of. See the article of Roman Coins. Vol. I. p. lxx. (D.)

A colony, if it be neceſſary to explain it, is a body of people ſettled in a certain fortified place, under certain privileges *. Theſe were chiefly veterans, who were thus provided for at the ſame time that they defended the place againſt rebels, and inſtructed the allies in the Roman laws and cuſtoms. Colonies being ſmall repreſentations of Rome itſelf were bodies of great dignity. They had their own magiſtrates both ſuperior and inferior. But as others have treated largely of this ſubject, I need not dwell any longer on it. In this firſt Roman colony in Britain was a temple to Claudius, called by Tacitus the altar of eternal dominion [a], and mentioned by Seneca in his ſatire on that prince. "'Tis "but a ſmall matter," ſays he, "that Claudius has "a temple in Britain, and is worſhiped by the bar- "barians, and addreſſed as a deity." Sodales Auguſtales, an order of prieſts, were appointed to his ſervice, who under pretence of religion extorted the wealth of the natives. Ten years after the ſcene was changed, and this colony ruined. The veterans placed in this conquered territory harraſſing the miſerable people in a violent manner, the flame of war, which ſeemed to have been extinguiſhed, broke out with greater violence. The Britans under Bunduica or Boodicia broke into this town which was not fortified, ſet it on fire, and in two days forced the temple to which the ſoldiers had retired. The 9th legion coming to its relief was routed, and in a word, no leſs than 70,000 † Romans and allies were ſlain. This calamity had been foretold by various prodigies. The ſtatue of Victory in this city turned backwards and fell down; cries of barbarians were heard in the forum, and the theatre echoed with ſhrieks; buildings were ſeen under water in the Thames; the tide rolled bloody into the bay, now called, for what reaſon I know not, Blackwater, as by Ptolemy Idumanus [b], which ſignifies the ſame, Ydu being black in Britiſh. The Romans, however, raiſed it out of its aſhes; and Antoninus mentions it many years after. Under the Saxons it is ſcarce ſpoken of, only that Marianus ſays, Edward, ſon of Alfred, repaired Maldun, which had been deſtroyed by the Danes, and fortified it with a caſtle. William the Conqueror had, as appears by his ſurvey, 180 houſes here held by burghers and 18 ruined houſes. At preſent its wealth and extent entitle it to a place among the chief towns of Eſſex, and it is called by our lawyers the Burrough of Maldon. It is a very convenient ſtation, and for its ſize well peopled, conſiſting only of a ſingle ſtreet near a mile in length.

ANSAM. Six miles from Camalodunum Antoninus fixes a place which he calls AD ANSAM. I once imagined this might be ſome boundary of the colony of Camalodunum reſembling an Anſa or handle: for I had read in Siculus Flaccus [c], that "fields adjoining "to colonies were marked out by various bounda- "ries; ſometimes by little ſtatues of Hermes, ſome- "times by a wine jar, ſometimes by a branch of "palm, ſometimes by a rhomb or wheel, and ſome- "times, according to Vitalis and Arcadius, the boun- "dary marks were flaggons and jars." Why not then Anſæ or Handles for ſuch purpoſes: eſpecially as Antoninus ſays Ad Anſam, not Anſæ, as is uſual with him. With how many religious ceremonies theſe boundaries were placed we learn from the ſame author [d]. "In ſetting theſe boundaries they put the "ſtones upon the ground near the ſpot where they "were to be fixed in holes dug for that purpoſe, "anointing and crowning them with garlands and "veils. In the holes where they were to be placed, "they offered a ſacrifice, and killing a ſpotleſs victim "and ſetting lighted torches in the holes, they let "the blood run in, and threw into them incenſe and "corn; alſo honey and wine, and whatever elſe was "the uſual offering on theſe occaſions; and after the "fire had conſumed all theſe things, they put down "the ſtone on the burning reliques, and to make it "faſter they trod in pieces of ſtone round it." Wherever this Ad Anſam was, I am for adhering to the primary uſe of the word, that it was ſome boundary mark, or ſtation, or inn upon the road with ſome ſuch ſign; and that on account of the diſtance from Coggeſhall. Nor were thoſe places any more than boundary marks or inns, which we find the Romans expreſſing in the ſame way, Ad Columnam, Ad Fines, Ad tres Tabernas, Ad Rotam, Ad 7 fratres, Ad Aquilam minorem, Ad Herculem, &c. and to enter into a more minute diſcuſſion would be fruitleſs.

The ſhore retiring here receives the ſea in a ſpacious and delightful bay, abounding with thoſe excellent oyſters which we call Wallfleet. And for the honour of our ſhores we will ſuppoſe them to be thoſe, which, according to Pliny [e], ſupplied the Roman kitchens. Mucian gives the Britiſh oyſters the third rank after the Cyzicenian, which he ſays "are larger than the "Lucrine and ſweeter than the Britiſh." But neither then nor afterwards when Sergius Orata extolled the Lucrine, "were the Britiſh ſhores," to uſe his own words, "ſubject to the Romans;" ſo that he ſeems to have given the preference to the Britiſh oyſters. I take theſe to be what Auſonius calls wonderful in that line to Paulinus [f].

Oyſters.

Mira Caledonius nonnunquam detegit æſtus.

But of theſe oyſters and their beds here let thoſe treat whoſe practiſe in the art of good eating qualifies them to hit the taſte of the ſeveral kitchens.

Into this bay, among other rivers, runs the Coln, which riſing from ſeveral ſources in the north part of the county, paſſes by Hedningham or Hengham, commonly called Heningham, once an elegant caſtle, and the antient ſeat of the earls of Oxford. On the oppoſite bank is Sible Heningham, the birth-place, as I am informed, of John Hawkwood, whoſe name the Italians miſ-ſpel Aucuth, who was held in ſuch eſteem by that nation for his valour that the ſenate of Florence for his great merit honoured him with an equeſtrian ſtatue and a cenotaph in memory of his gallantry and fidelity. His character is well known in Italy, and P. Jovius celebrates him in his Elogia. I ſhall content myſelf with inſerting this tetraſtich of Feroldus:

Coln r.

Caſtle Hedingham.

Sible Hedingham.

Hawkwood, Anglorum decus, & decus addite genti
Italice, Italico præſidiumque ſolo.
Ut tumuli quondam Florentia, ſic ſimulachri
Virtutem Jovius donat honore tuam.

Glory of Britain and of Italy,
Who grateful her deliverer's zeal repays,

* Servius. See Tacitus of this colony, Ann. XIII. 31.

† Dio has 80000.

[a] Tacitus does not call it ſo; but only ſays the Britans conſidered the temple of Claudius here as implying that the Romans would keep laſting poſſeſſion here. Critics would ſubſtitute arra and arn to ara; but it is certainly a ſtronger and more elegant expreſſion, as if the Romans raiſed an altar to eternal empire.

[b] Σιδυμανος, ed. Argent.

[c] Ed. Goeſii Amſt. 1674. p. 5.

[d] N. H. IX. 54.

[e] This line is in one of his epiſtles to Paulus not Paulinus, Ep. IX. I. 27. in which he enumerates all the various ſorts of oyſters, and places the Britiſh laſt but two from Byzantium and the Propontis. Auſonius ſeems to have been particularly fond of oyſters, another of his epiſtles being addreſſed to one Theon who had made him a preſent of 30 very large ones.

The tomb at Florence guards his memory,
While Jovio's lines resound her Hawkwood's praise.

Hawsted. Hence the Coln runs through Hawsted, which was the seat of the Bourchier family, of which Robert Bourchier was chancellor of England t. Edward III. and from him descended a most respectable line of Earls Coln. earls and barons. Thence passing by Earls Coln, so called from being the burying place of the earls of Oxford, where Aubrey de Vere founded a priory, and took the habit, it comes to

COLONIA. COLONIA, mentioned by Antoninus as distinct from Col. Camalodunum. Whether the name is to be derived from the Colony settled here or from the river Coln let better judgements determine. I should rather derive it from the river, since so many towns on it have the name of Colne, as Earls Colne, Wakes Colne, Colne Engain, Whites Colne, denominated from their several Lords. This

Colchester. town the Britans called Caer Colin, the Saxons Colecearten, we Colchester. It is a handsome, populous, pleasant place, spreading up the side of an hill from west to east, surrounded with walls, adorned with 15 churches, besides that large abbey which Eudo Dapifer or Sewer to Henry I. dedicated to St. John, now made a private house. In the middle of the city

1105. is a castle decaying with age, which historians[g] say was built by Edward son of Alfred, when he repaired Colchester after the ravage of war. The flourishing state of this city under the Romans appears from the quantity of their coins every day discovered there. I have seen none earlier than Gallienus; the rest were those of the Tetrici, Victorini, Postumus, Carausius,

Helena, the mother of Constantine. Constantine, and succeeding emperors. The inhabitants claim for their townswoman Helena the mother of Constantine the Great, daughter of king Coël, and in memory of the cross discovered by her bear for their arms a cross ragulè between four crowns. Whence our countryman Necham sings thus of her and this town in verses none of the best:

Effulsit sydus vitæ, Colcestria lumen,
Septem climatibus lux radiosa dedit.
Sidus erat Constantinus, decus imperiale.
Servitit huic flexo poplite Roma potens.

A Star of life in Colchester appear'd,
Whose radiant light sev'n different climates chear'd,
Illustrious Constantine, the world's great lord,
Whom mighty Rome with servile dread ador'd.

She was certainly a woman of the purest morals and unshaken constancy in propagating the Christian faith, whence in antient inscriptions she was styled PIISIMA ET VENERABILIS AVGVSTA.

Below this, where the Coln falls into the sea, is the little town of St. Osith, whose antient name of St. Osith, or Chich. Chich[h] was sunk by that royal virgin Osith, who, having devoted herself to God, was there murdered by the Danes, and canonized by our ancestors. Richard, bishop of London, erected a religious house to her memory about 1120, filling it with regular canons. It is now the chief seat of the right honourable the lords Darcy of Chich, who were raised to that dignity by Edward VI.

Nesse Hence the shore runs out a great way to the Ness, called by the Saxons Eadulpher-nerre. What was found here take in the words and on the credit of Ralph of Coggeshalle, who wrote about 350 years ago. "In the time of king Richard on the sea "shore in a village called Eadulfiness were found two "teeth of a giant so large that they would make 200 "teeth of the present species of men. We have seen "and handled them with astonishment at Coggeshale." Giants and their bones. Something gigantic was dug up near this place in the beginning of queen Elizabeth's reign by the noble Richard Candish. I do not deny that there were men of amazing size and strength; whom God, as St. Austin observes, created to shew that beauty and extraordinary stature are not to be considered as blessings, being bestowed indifferently on the good and wicked. One may, however, suspect what Suetonius[i] says that the monstrous limbs of huge animals found in other countries as well as in this were commonly reputed and called Giants' bones.

From this point the shore winds up a little to the mouth of the river Stour famous for a sea fight between the English and Danes, A. D. 884, where now stands Harwich, a very safe port, whence the name: Harwich. haperic in Saxon signifying the station or port of the army. This river divides Essex and Suffolk, and on this side washes nothing but rich fields. But not far from its source is Bumsted, the barony of the Helion Bumsted. Helion. family; and on the edge of the county next to Cambridgeshire is Barklow, remarkable for four artificial Barklow. hills, such as were antiently thrown up for soldiers slain in battle, whose remains, as some think, could not be found. But upon digging down a 5th and 6th some time since, I am informed they found three stone coffins with broken human bones in them. The country people say they were cast up a battle with the Danes: for the dwarf elder which grows plentifully hereabouts with blood-coloured berries goes by the name of Danes blood, in memory of the numbers of that nation slain here.

Walden, called from the Saffron Saffron Walden, is a Walden. market town a little lower, surrounded with fields enamelled with the beautiful crocus, famous formerly for the castle of the Magnavilles now almost gone, and the adjacent priory, where its founders the Magnavilles * were buried. Geoffrey Magnaville first gave life to this Newport. place. The empress Matilda gave him Newport, a considerable town in the neighbourhood, "for as much "money (says the grant) as he used to pay at the "time of my father king Henry's death, and to re"move the market of Newport to his castle of "Walden, with all the customs which formerly be"longed to the said market, for toll, passage, and other "customs, and that the roads from Newport by the "waterside be turned according to custom to Walden "over the land forfeited to me; the market at Walden "to be held on Sunday and Thursday, and a fair to be "there held likewise to begin on the eve of Pentecost "and last the whole Whitson week." From this market the place is now called Cheping Walden. In the register of Walden abbey "he constitutes Walden the head "of his honor and earldom, and the seat of himself "and his posterity. The spot where the monastery "was built was well supplied with water, of which "there was a spring that never dried. The beams of "the rising sun are late before they reach it, but it "enjoys the benefit of its setting the longer, being "surrounded with hills on every side." The place is now called Audley Inn from Thomas Audley lord chan- Audley Inn cellor, who converted the monastery into a seat for himself. He was created baron Audley of Walden Baron Audley of Walden by Henry VIII. and left one daughter and heiress, Margaret, second wife of Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk, by whom she had Thomas, William, Elizabeth,

* Commonly called Mandevilles.

[g] Norden, but q. who else.
[h] Sax. Lice.
[i] Aug. c. 72.

zabeth, and Margaret. Thomas, eminent for his naval knowledge, was called up to parliament by queen Elizabeth 1587 by the title of lord Howard of Walden: and king James lately created him earl of Suffolk and lord chamberlain. At Cheſterford near his ſeat was a much older little city by Icaldune [k] on the edge of the county, now called by the country people from the antient burgh, Burrow bank. There remain only traces of an extinct city and the plain track of the walls. I ſhall not take upon me to affirm that this is the Villa Fauſtini, which Antoninus places hereabouts, and though

Ingrata læti ſpatia detinet campi,
Et rure vero, barbaroque lætatur.

Not among groves by art confin'd
But each ſpontaneous in his kind.

I dare not even think it was that villa of Fauſtinus ſo prettily deſcribed by Martial in theſe and other lines of his epigrams [l]. The fields, as I before obſerved, are decked with ſaffron ſown annually. For in July every third year when the bulbous roots are taken up, and 20 days after put into the ground again, about the end of September they put out their blue flower, in the middle of which are three chives which are gathered early before ſun-riſe, and after they are taken from the flower, are dried before a ſlow fire. The produce is ſo great that an acre will yield 80 or 100 pounds of moiſt ſaffron, which in drying ſhrinks to 20 pounds. And which is more extraordinary, the ſoil after bearing ſaffron three years together will without dunging produce barley for eighteen more, and then be as fit for ſaffron as before.

More to the ſouth is Clavering, which Henry II. gave with the title of baron to Robert Fitz Roger, from whom the family of Euers are deſcended. His poſterity having for a long time borne the paternal Chriſtian name according to the antient cuſtom, as John Fitz Robert, Robert Fitz John, by order of Edward I. aſſumed the name of Clavering. But of them more in Northumberland. Here alſo appears Stanſted Montfichet, which I cannot paſs by unnoticed, being the antient ſeat or barony of the family of Montfichet who bear three Chevrons, Or. in a field Gules, and are accounted of high nobility. There were only five deſcents of them, and then the eſtate came to three ſiſters, Margaret wife of Hugh Bolebec, Aveline wife of William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle, and Philippa wife of Hugh Playz. The deſcendants of this laſt remained within the memory of the laſt generation, and ended in a daughter married to ſir John Howard, knight, from whoſe daughter by George Vere [m] ſprung the barons Latimer and Wingfield.

A little lower is Haſlingbury, the ſeat of the barons Morley, of whom more in Norfolk. Contiguous to this is an antient fortification called Walbery, and more to the eaſt Barrington hall, where lives the illuſtrious family of Barrington, which, in the reign of Stephen, received an acceſſion from the eſtates of the barons Montfichet, and in the memory of our fathers new honour by intermarriage with the daughter and heireſs of Henry Pole, lord Montacute, ſon and heir of Magaret counteſs of Saliſbury of the blood royal.

Earls of Eſſex.

After the coming of the Normans the empreſs Matilda, Lady of England, as ſhe ſtyled herſelf, created Geofrey Magnaville, or Mandeville (ſon of William by Margaret heireſs of Eudo Dapifer) firſt earl of Eſſex, to attach this potent and brave man to her intereſt. He loſt his turbulent life in the field in the confuſions under Stephen. An old writer of the Regiſter of Walden abbey ſays that "his many "crimes [n] drew upon him the ſentence of excommu- "nication, under which he received a mortal wound "in the head before Burwell caſtle. As he lay at "the point of death, ſome templars happened to "come in, who put on him their habit marked with "a croſs, and after his death carried away his body, "and hung it in a leaden pipe or trough on a tree in "their orchard at the Old Temple at London [o]." His two ſons Geofrey [p] and William [q], who ſucceeded him, died without iſſue. King John for a great ſum of money raiſed to this honour Geofrey Fitz Petre, or Fitz Piers, of Ludgerſhall, chief Juſtice of England, a prudent diſcreet man [r]. He had married Beatrix, eldeſt daughter of William Say, ſon of a ſiſter of Geofrey Magnaville firſt earl of Eſſex, "a man (according to an "antient author [s]) of great wealth and property; "who applied himſelf to the biſhop of Ely, chief "juſtice of the King's bench, with a great ſum of "money to ſupport his claim to that earldom, in "right of his wife, daughter of William, elder bro- "ther of Geofrey de Say; the biſhop having given "him full ſeiſin of it demanded the money, which he "recovered in a ſhort time to the full amount on "articles to pay the whole ſum into the king's trea- "ſury. Being thus admitted, and thus confirmed by "the king's letters, he held, poſſeſſed, and received "the homage of the knights of this barony." This Geofrey Fitz Piers' two ſons Geofrey and William aſſumed the name of Magnaville, and held this honour. The former was killed in a tournament in the prime of life [t]; the latter ſided with Lewis of France againſt king John, and died without iſſue [u]. Neither of them leaving iſſue, Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and conſtable of England, came to the earldom. So writes the Walden annaliſt [x]: "A. D. 1228 6 Id. Janu. died William de Man- "deville earl of Eſſex, &c. the ſame year Humphry "de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Conſtable of "England, married Matilda daughter of Geofrey "earl of Eſſex, and ſo ſucceeded." From records, however, it appears that Henry de Bohun, father [y] of this Humphry, married that heireſs. But the miſtake was eaſy: ſurnames in the writings of that age being only expreſſed by initials; ſo that H. ſtood for Henry or Humphrey, G. for Gilbert or Geofrey, &c. His iſſue male were earls of Hereford and Eſſex for many years; whom, as they aſſumed both titles, we have ſpoken of in Herefordſhire. Eleanor, eldeſt daughter of the laſt Bohun, married Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, to whom ſhe transferred the title, and had by him a daughter Anne, firſt

See the earls of Hereford.

[k] In Cambridgeſhire.
[l] and expreſsly ſaid by him to be at Baiæ; Baiana noſtri villa Fauſtini. Epig. L. III. 58.
[m] i. e. George Vere, ſon of John Vere earl of Oxford, and Elizabeth daughter of Sir John Howard, had two daughters married to ſir John Wingfield, and Nevil lord Latimer.
[n] He was a very partizan or marauder, extorting all the wealth he could get intelligence of both from individuals and religious houſes; his laſt exploit was ſurprizing and plundering Ramſey abbey. Dugd. Bar. I. 203.
[o] See his figure in the Temple church.
[p] He died 1167, buried at Walden. Dugd. I. 204.
[q] He died 1190, buried at Walden. Ib. 206.
[r] died t. John, buried at Shouldham abbey, Norfolk. Ib. 705.
[s] Hiſtory of Walden abbey, Mon. Ang. I. 446.
[t] 1216. buried in Trinity priory Lond. Dugd. Ib. 706.
[u] He died 1227, buried at Shouldham. Ib.
[x] Ubi ſup. 446.
[y] Dugdale calls him Henry. Bar. I. 180. but Walden reg. ub. ſup. 446. Humphry.

married to Edmund earl of Stafford, anceſtor of the dukes of Buckingham, and ſecondly to William Bourchier, to whom Henry V. gave the earldom of Eu in Normandy [z]. He had by her Henry Bourchier, whom Edward IV. created earl of Eſſex [a]. He was ſucceeded by his grandſon Henry, who was killed by a fall from his horſe in his old age [b], and left an only daughter Anne [c]. Without regard to her, Henry VIII. to confer the greater honour on Thomas Cromwell, who had done him ſuch ſingular ſervice in ſubverting the papal power, created him earl of Eſſex [d], great chamberlain of England, and knight of the garter, having before for his abilities made him Maſter of the Rolls, Secretary of State, baron Cromwell of Okeham, his vicar general in ſpirituals, and keeper of the privy ſeal: and all this within five years. But within five months after his advancement to this earldom he ended this pageantry of life, like many other aſſociates in government, at the block. The ſame king conferred the title of earl of Eſſex on William Parr, to whom he had married Anne the heireſs of Henry Bourchier. Laſtly on the death of Parr without iſſue, Walter Devereux, viſcount Hereford, whoſe great grandmother was Cecily Bourchier ſiſter of the laſt-mentioned Henry Bourchier, by favour of queen Elizabeth [e] obtained this honor, and left it to his ſon Robert, who being endowed with great natural accompliſhments proceeded by the royal favour ſo rapidly in his carrier of honour that the nation hoped to ſee him equal if not ſurpaſs his anceſtors. But alas! his popularity carrying him beyond his proſpects, proved his overthrow, like many others who prefer præmature ruin to certainty delayed [f]. His infant ſon Robert was compleatly reſtored to his honours by James I. in parliament.

In this county are 415 pariſhes.

[z] He died 8 Henry V. buried at Lantony near Gloceſter. Dugd. II. 129.
[a] He died 23 Edward IV. and was buried at Bilegh with his lady Iſabel. Ib. 130. though Sandford, p. 385. buries them both at Eaſton.
[b] at his manor of the Baſe, c. Herts. 22 Henry VIII. buried at Eaſton. Dugd. Ib.
[c] married to ſir William Parr, lord Parr of Kendall, afterwards earl of Eſſex, and Marquis of Northampton. Their children were baſtardized 34 Henry VIII. and the marriage was diſannulled by parliament 5 Edward VI. Ib. Yet he was created earl of Eſſex 35 Henry VIII. who had married his ſiſter. He died 1571, buried at Warwick. Ib. 381, 382.
[d] 31 Henry VIII. Dugd. II. 372.
[e] 14 Elizabeth. He died 1567. Dugd. II. 178.
[f] He was beheaded 1599.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of ESSEX, with Middleſex and Hertfordſhire, formed the kingdom of the Eaſt Saxons. Its circumference is about 225 miles. Its greateſt length from eaſt to weſt 61 miles, and its greateſt breadth from north to ſouth 50 miles. The ſurface is in general level but diverſified with hills and fruitful vales. The ſoil may be divided into clay, chalk, and marſh land [a].

It is divided into 20 hundreds, and contains 24 market towns, 208,800 inhabitants, and 415 pariſhes.

The principal landholders in this county at the making of Domeſday Book, were, beſides the king, the church of Canterbury, the biſhops of London, Durham, Hereford, and Bayeux, canons of St. Paul and St. Martin, London, abbies of Weſtminſter, Berking, Waltham, Ely, St. Edmund's Bury, Battle, St. Waleric, Trinity, and St. Stephen at Caen, and St. Ouen; earls Euſtace and Alan; William Warren, Richard ſon of earl Gilbert, Suene of Eſſex, Eudo Dapifer, Roger de Otburville, Hugh de Montfort, Hamo Dapiter, Henry de Ferrars, Geofrey de Magnaville, the earl of Ou, Robert Greno, Ralph Baignard, Ralph Peverel, Aubrey de Vere, Peter de Valoignes, Ranulf brother of Ilger, Tihell Brito, Roger de Ramis, John Fitz Waleran, Robert Fitz Corbution, Roger Bigot, Robert Malet, William de Scohies, Roger Pictavienſis, Hugh de Gurnai, William Peverell, Ralph de Limeſey, Robert and Ralph de Todeney, Walter de Doai, Counteſs of Albemarle, Counteſs Judith, Hugh de St. Quintin, Roger Mareſhal, &c.

The foreſt of Eſſex comprehended almoſt the whole county. A record 12 Henry III. marks its bounds from Stratford bridge to Cattawad bridge in length, and from the Thames to Stane ſtreet in breadth. The office of Foreſter was in the family of Aucher of Copt hall ſo late as Edward I. and the ſtewardſhip of the whole foreſt in that of the Veres earls of Oxford to Henry VII. with a little interruption under Edward IV. At preſent only the half hundred of Waltham, with ſome parts of Becontree and Ongar hundreds, are within the foreſt [b]. It ſeems formerly to have reached from the Thames to Hatfield Broad Oak, and from the Lea to Brentwood and Ongar. Hainault foreſt, whatever is the etymology of that name, was part of it.

The town of Waltham is conſiderable at preſent only for its market, and the manufactury of gunpowder carried on near it. Its church reduced to the nave which its ſtyle beſpeaks to be of the time of its foundation, is the only remain of the antient magnificence of this mitred abbey, valued at £. 900. per annum. The tomb of the founder was ſuppoſed to be diſcovered in the garden of the abbey houſe about the end of queen Elizabeth's reign, but it was more probably that of ſome abbot. All that how remains of the abbey houſe is part of a cloiſter of crypt and the gate and poſtern, on which are the arms of England in the time of Henry III. who viſited this houſe. The manſion built on the ſite of the abbey by ſir Edward Denny at the end of queen Elizabeth's reign, and modernized by Charles Wake Jones, eſq; was entirely pulled down in 1770. In the gardens is a large tulip tree by its ſize probably the firſt introduced in this kingdom. I have a braſs coin of Licinius found at Waltham abbey, 1779.

IMP. C. VAL. LICIN. LICINIVS P. F. AVG.
IOVI CONSERVATORI AVG. SMET. B.

Jupiter with a lance and victory on a globe; an eagle with a label over his head.

Copt hall appears to have been held of the abbots of Waltham, who made it their reſidence about the reign of Edward III. and the laſt of them ſurrendering it to the crown, queen Elizabeth gave it to ſir Thomas Heneage. The magnificent old houſe fitted up by him was taken down 1753 by the late proprietor John Conyers, eſq; who erected another ſomewhat eaſt of it. Juſt without the park on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the London road is an oval camp called Ambreſbury banks, and probably Britiſh. See a plan of it in Pl. I. fig. 4. "This intrenchment is now "entirely over-grown with old oaks and hornbeams. "It was formerly in the very heart of the foreſt, and "no road near it, till the preſent turnpike road from "London to Epping was made almoſt within the "memory of man, which now runs within a hun-"dred yards of it, but the intrenchment cannot be "perceived from thence by reaſon of the wood that "covers it. It is of an irregular figure, rather longeſt "from eaſt to weſt, and on a gentle declivity to the "ſouth-eaſt. It contains near 12 acres, and is ſur-"rounded by a ditch, and high bank much worn "down by time, though where there are angles they "are ſtill very bold and high. There are no re-"gular openings like gateways or entrances, only two "places where the bank has been cut through, and "the ditch filled up very lately in order to make a "ſtrait road from Debden green to Epping market. "The boundary between the pariſhes of Waltham "and Epping runs exactly through the middle of this "intrenchment, whether carried ſo caſually by the "firſt ſetters out of thoſe boundaries, or on purpoſe, "as it was then a remarkable ſpot of ground, I leave "to better judgements to conjecture. As I can find "no reaſon to attribute this intrenchment either to "the Romans, Saxons, or Danes, I cannot help con-"cluding it to have been a Britiſh Oppidum, and per-"haps it had ſome relation to other remains of that "people which are diſcoverable in our foreſt. It is "diſtant from Fifield where the Celts and forge were "lately diſcovered about ten miles, and about eight "from Copt hall.

Ambreſbury banks.

[a] Morant.

[b] Morant, p. 4.

"from Naveſtoke common where we viſited the "Templum Alatum[c]."

Leyton. Leyton pariſh being called Leyton ſtone authorizes Mr. Camden's ſuppoſition, but more eſpecially the Roman urns and other antiquities found hereabouts, and the pavements, urns, bones, coins, walls and gates at Wanſted, 1715, by the ſide of the old road from Eſſex through Oldford to London, now called Blind Lane. At leaſt here might have been ſome family burying place[d].

In 1718 Mr. Ganſell having occaſion to enlarge his gardens, digging up about two acres of land found under the whole very large and ſtrong foundations in one place all ſtone with conſiderable arches, an arched door way with ſteps down to it, but quite filled up with gravel; in many of the foundations were a great quantity of Roman tile and bricks mixed with more modern materials, and ſeveral rough and broken pieces of hard ſtone, one part whereof poliſhed proved to be Egyptian granite: two large deep wells covered over with ſtone: and in digging a pond, after they had ſunk through a bed of clay about ten feet, they found a great quantity of oak timber, eight and ten inches ſquare, mortized together like a floor, grown very hard and black, but uncertain how far it reached. Several Roman coins ſilver and braſs conſular and imperial to Julian were ſcattered about; the faireſt remained in Mr. Ganſell's poſſeſſion; alſo ſome ſilver coins with Saxon characters, which not being underſtood were loſt. This land joins to the churchyard; where ſome time before was found a large urn of coarſe red earth, long in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Strype the miniſter, but ſince loſt. It is probable this garden was made on the extent of the town to the ſouth-eaſt: for no ſuch remains appeared in digging the foundation of the houſe and walls round near two acres. The church-yard is exactly on the ſouth ſide; how far the foundations reach is unknown to the weſt and north, it being all ploughed fields[e].

A Roman pavement was found here 1735. The occaſion of this diſcovery was the digging holes for an avenue of trees from the gardens. Mr. Adam Holt the gardener perceiving ſeveral of the teſſeræ thrown up, ſoon conjectured what he was upon, and earneſtly endeavoured, though in vain, to obtain leave to lay it quite open: however he examined it ſo far, as to find that its extent from north to ſouth was about 20 feet, and from eaſt to weſt about 16; that it was compoſed of ſmall ſquare brick teſſeræ of different ſizes and colours, as black, white, red, &c. that there went round it a border about a foot broad, compoſed of red dice, about three quarters of an inch ſquare, within which were ſeveral ornaments, and in the middle, the figure of a man riding upon ſome beaſt, and holding ſomething in his hand; but as he opened it only in a hurry, and in different places, he was able to give no better account of it.

There was then found a ſilver coin, but of what emperor was not known, and one of the ſmall braſs of Valens DN. VALENS P. F. AVG. Rev. SECVRITAS REIPVB Exerg. LVG. P. came into Mr. Lethieullier's poſſeſſion, which were all the coins or other antiquities that were ever found at this place, at leaſt to his knowledge. He frequently viſited it, and found not only many of the aforeſaid teſſeræ, but ſeveral pieces of large Roman brick, ſome hollowed, probably for gutters. This pavement was ſituated on a gentle gravelly aſcent towards the north, and at a ſmall diſtance from the ſouth end of it Mr. Lethieullier remembered a well of exceeding fine water, now abſorbed in a great pond. From this well the ground riſes likewiſe toward the ſouth till it comes to a plain, which extends a conſiderable way, and is now his warren, but by tradition was once covered with wood. On the brink of this very plain, and about 300 yards due ſouth from the ſaid well and pavement, there were in his memory, the ruins of foundations to be ſeen, though now deſtroyed by planting trees round the park pales, the mounds about them having been ſince levelled has raiſed the ground very much.

The place where this antiquity was diſcovered is a part of earl Tylney's park, which lies on the ſouth ſide of his gardens, and is bounded to the ſouth by Mr. Lethieullier's eſtate at Alderſbrook, a part of which it was, till king Henry VIII. encloſed it within his new made park, as the words in his grant expreſs.

As it both is, and probably ever was a retired corner, no veſtigia of camps, roads, or other Roman antiquities near it, this pavement can hardly be preſumed to have been the floor of a prætorium, or Roman general's tent, as many of them doubtleſs were. Will it bear the face of a tolerable conjecture therefore, that the aforeſaid ruins were the foundation of a Roman villa, the retirement perhaps of ſome inhabitant of Londinum, which is ſcarce ſix miles diſtant; or of Durolitum, which is hardly three, if Low Leighton be allowed to have been that ſtation? The ſoil thereabouts is dry and inviting, the opening to the ſouth, and directly oppoſite to Shooter's hill in Kent, very agreeable and pleaſing. The aforementioned ſpring or well might perhaps induce the owner to make a walk or garden down to it, and the pavement be of the banquetting houſe or room for entertainments, which terminated his view[f].

Here was born about 1580 ſir Thomas Roe, firſt Engliſh embaſſador to Eaſtern princes, who died 1644.

Goring houſe, or the Foreſt houſe, belonged to the abbey of Waltham. Ruckholt houſe built by ſir Henry Hickes[g], was in Elizabeth's time a houſe of Robert earl of Leiceſter. To this pariſh adjoins Wanſted, where is an elegant houſe built by ſir Richard, ſon to that eminent merchant ſir Joſiah Child, and created viſcount Caſtlemaine, 1718, and earl of Tylney, 1731-2. His deſcendants aſſumed the name of Tylney in right of their mother, and his ſecond ſon John at preſent enjoys this eſtate and honour. Wanſted.

Stratford abbey, called alſo Ham from its being in Weſt Ham pariſh, was not founded till about 1134 by William Montfichet. The gate and the weſt front of a chapel are all the remains. It was valued at £. 511. 16s. 3d.[h] Stratford.

By a late improvement in the channel of the river Lea its courſe has been ſhortened ſeveral miles particularly at its mouth, and by the many new locks erected on it, its navigation was propoſed to be rendered more Lea r.

[c] MS. letter from Mr. Lethieullier, pen. Ed.
[d] Gibſon's additions. Morant I. 32. 28. Mr. Lethieullier's letter in the Archaeologia, I. p. 73.
[e] Account of ſome Roman antiquities and coins found at Low Leyton, ſent to Smart Lethieullier, eſq.
[f] Letter from Mr. Lethieullier to Mr. Roger Gale. Ant. Soc. Min. [g] Morant. [h] Tanner, 126.

certain

certain and expeditious: but the tolls have not anſwered the expence of the improvement.

Near the road leading from Ilford to Berking on the north weſt ſide of the brook that croſſes it are remains of an antient entrenchment, whence the latter town undoubtedly had its name, Berg-ing, q. d. the fortification in the meadows. The north ſide of it is pretty intire; the ſide parallel with the road has been ploughed down. The gateway to the nunnery is ſtill remaining, and here were dug up two ſtones with inſcriptions commemorating Thomas Beaufort duke of Exeter, earl of Dorſet, &c. third ſon of John of Gaunt, and his only ſon Henry, or, as Mr. Vertue ſuppoſed, his brother Henry Beaufort biſhop of Wincheſter, their ſiſter being abbeſs here. It was valued at £. 862 [i].

John Thurloe, ſecretary of ſtate to Oliver Cromwell, was ſon of the rector of Abbots Roding, born 1616, died 1678.

On the ſteeple at Theydon Gernon church, ſo called from Robert de Gernon, who held it at the Conqueſt, is this inſcription:

The grocers arms. A chevron between nine billets.

> [a razure]. Syr Jhon > Croſbi knyght, alderma > and grocer of London and > dame Anne and Annes his wyffs, of > whos godys was gevyn toward > the erectyng of thys ſtepell MCVVI
> ano dni ıhꝛꝛ [k]

Sir John Crosby was buried in St. Helen's church Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, where is a fair alabaſter monument for him and one of his wives. The hall of his houſe remains as a meeting houſe at Crosby ſquare.

Cooperſale in this pariſh has been the ſeat of the Archers ever ſince the reign of Henry V. Their monuments are in the church.

At Chigwell are two freeſchools, one called the Engliſh, the other the grammar ſchool, founded 1629 by archbiſhop Harſnet of York, once vicar here, and buried here 1631.

In Lamborne church is a monument for Thomas Winniffe biſhop of Lincoln 1654, and at his feet was laid May 1780 a friend, to whoſe pencil and taſte theſe ſheets would have been much indebted had he not been cut off in the early enjoyment of all his wiſhes. Biſhop's Moat in this pariſh was the reſidence of Spencer, the warlike biſhop of Norwich, who ſuppreſſed Ket's rebellion. The moat is about 200 yards ſquare, and at one end is a ſquare hollow paved. Sir John Forteſcue Aland, one of the judges of the King's Bench, built a houſe at Knowle, ſince pulled down.

The caſtle at Ongar ſeems to have been formed out of ſome more antient and extenſive work. If there was not a Roman ſtation here, as a coffin of hewn ſtone with a ridged lid, others compoſed of tiles, like thoſe at Bootham bar [l], and at York [m], with fragments of urns, and many ſkeletons found 1767 in a field called Stockling between Ongar and Fyfield, would lead one to ſuſpect; it is probable here were large Saxon works prior to the Norman ones altered by them; keeps being of Norman introduction. Large works may be traced round the town and many Roman bricks are worked into the church [n].

The church of Greenſted, a mile from Ongar, is a very uncommon antient building; the walls formed of trunks of oak ſplit in two and let into a ſill and plate; they are perfectly ſmooth, and the inſide flat. On the ſouth ſide are 16 and 2 door poſts; on the north 21 and 2 vacancies filled up with plaiſter: the weſt end is built againſt by a boarded tower, and the eaſt by a chancel of brick, and on the ſouth ſide is a wooden porch, and both ſides ſtrengthened by brick buttreſſes; the roof is of later date and tiled. The dimenſions of the wooden church are 29 feet nine by 14, and five feet high. The tradition of the place is that a dead king reſted in it. In a MS. life of St. Edmund we are told that the corpſe of that Saint in a Daniſh invaſion, A. D. 1010 in the 30th year of the reign of king Ethelred, was removed from St. Edmund's Bury to London, and brought back again three years after by abbot Ailwin: It follows "Quidam "apud Stapleford recepit corpus ejus in redeundo de "Londonia," and the Regiſter of Bury abbey in the Monaſticon [o] ſays, "Idem apud Aungre hoſpitabatur, "ubi in ejus memoria lignea capella permanet uſque "hodie." The antient road from Bury to London lay through Oldford, Abridge, Stapleford Abbot (ſo called from being given to this abbey by the martyr's grateful hoſt, who was cured by this viſit), Greenſted, Dunmow, and Clare. This fabric might be reared as a ſort of ſhrine for the reception of the martyr's body, and in proceſs of time might with proper additions be converted into a pariſh church. Richard de Lucy lord of Ongar t. Henry II. is ſuppoſed by Mr. Newcourt to have ſeparated this pariſh from Ongar, to which it was again united 1548, t. Edward VI. but ſeparated again 1544, t. Mary, as it ſtill continues, being a rectory annexed to the curacy of St. Botolph Aldgate [p]. The charters of Witlaf and Beorred, kings of Mercia, to Croyland abbey, mention at Spalding a wooden chapel called Stokkyn, and a ſtone one called Stonyng. Pauſanias has a remarkable account of a building in the forum at Elis, whoſe roof was ſupported by pillars of oak; it was low, and ſaid to be the ſepulchral monument of Oxylus, who conducted the Dorians into Peloponneſus, for which they gave him Elis [q].

Greenſted.

At Fyfield by Ongar in 1749 were found a great number of celts, with a large quantity of metal for caſting them, 50lb. of which, with ſeveral of the inſtruments, the late earl Tilney gave to Mr. Lethieullier [r]. One Glaſcock, a farmer and horſeleech of ſome eminence, bought the celts all together of the labourer that found them for five ſhillings fancying them gold, and by his idle talk about them ſoon betrayed them to the lord of the manor, who claimed and had them all.

Fyfield.

In the pariſh of High Laver is Otes, the ſeat of the lords Maſham, ſo created 1711, extinct by the death of Samuel the late lord 1776, and the retreat of that great philoſopher John Locke, who died 1704 and was buried there under a plain altar tomb in the churchyard with an epitaph of his own writing. The eſtate and houſe belong now by purchaſe to Mr. Palmer.

At Naveſtock is the ſeat of the earl of Waldegrave deſcended from the family of that name ſeated in Naveſtock.

[i] Tanner, 118. [k] 1420. [l] Thoreſby's Leeds, p. 562, 563. [m] Archaeol. II. 177.
[n] See a plan of the caſtle and works ſurrounding the town pl. I. fig. 5. [o] I. 263.
[p] Morant, 153. See a print of this church by Vertue for the Society of Antiquaries, 1748. [q] Eliac. I. 4.
[r] Borl. Cornw. 272. firſt Ed. Lethieullier's letter, ubi ſup.

Suffolk,

Suffolk, and enobled by James II. On a common here ſince incloſed Dr. Stukeley imagined he had found a druid temple, of the kind which he called Alate [s]. In the year 1555, the vicarage and rectory of this pariſh were ſettled by ſir Thomas Pope on Trinity college Oxford, as parcel of endowment of that his foundation, and which he appears to have purchaſed of ſir Edward Waldgrave.

Chadwell. The caverns placed by Mr. Camden in Tilbury are in fact in Chadwell pariſh. Dr. Derham meaſured three of the moſt conſiderable, and found one of them 50, another 70, and a third 80 feet deep. The bottom a ſoft ſand, over the top an arch of 200 feet of chalk. They lie within the compaſs of ſix acres near the highway leading from Stifford to Chadwell, and in Eaſt Tilbury in a field called Cave field is a horizontal paſſage to the cavern. Theſe have been ſuppoſed granaries of the antient Britans, retreats of the Daniſh ravagers, and even king Cunobeline's gold mines [t].

West Tilbury. At Weſt Tilbury, the pariſh mentioned by Camden, are ſome traces of the camp formed by queen Elizabeth on the Spaniſh invaſion. Here is now a ſtrong regular fort, erected t. Charles II. with a garriſon. Within the manor was diſcovered 1727 a medicinal water, the only alterative water of its kind in this part of England [u]. Wharton in his account of the biſhops of London takes no notice of Tillabirig being Cedda's ſee, nor do Bede's words imply that he built a monaſtery here [x].

East Tilbury. In Eaſt Tilbury pariſh was the antient ferry over the Thames, the famous Higham Cauſeway from Rocheſter by Higham yet viſible, pointing to the place of the old ferry. This is ſuppoſed to be the place where Claudius croſſed the Thames in purſuit of the Britans [y].

Canveyiſland. Canvey iſland, a marſhy tract, contains 3600 acres, and has a chapel and fair, and about 50 dwellings [z]. Mr. Pownall miſ-places Ptolemy's Κωνος at the mouth of the Thames [a].

Hadleigh. Hubert de Burg built Hadleigh Caſtle [b], of which ſome ruins ſtill remain.

Leigh. Prittlewell. At Leigh, by the fall of a cliff after rains, a quantity of Roman coins came to light 176 . Prittlewell may have taken its name from its fine ſpring, accounted the beſt in the hundred of Rochford. The priory was founded by Robert ſon of Swane as a cell to Lewes in Suſſex t. Henry II. valued at £.155. 11ſ. 2d. [c] Only ſome out offices now remain [d].

Shoebury At Shoebury, or Seabirig, q. d. the fortification of the ſea, large traces of the Daniſh works ſtill remain, and many urns have been found hereabouts, as if the Romans had been here. Mr. Camden does theſe earthworks too much honour to call them a city; but he is in general very laviſh of that appellation, not conſidering that in England it is confined to the ſee of a biſhop, and that even many of the Roman ſtations on which he beſtows it have only his authority for it. ȝepeopc popht̃up [e]---Caſtellum fecit, is the expreſſion in the Saxon Chronicle and Huntingdon [f], but Florence of Worceſter ſays, "urbem quæ lingua "Anglorum Sceobyrig in Eaſt Saxonia ſitam adeunt, "firmamque ſibi munitionem ibidem conſtruunt." p. 596. 1691.

Rochford. Rochford is remarkable for its lawleſs court held on the Wedneſday morning after Michaelmas on a hill called King's Hill in the open air by twilight, where all the buſineſs is tranſacted in whiſpers, and a coal ſupplies the place of pen and ink. Abſentees forfeit double their rent for every hour's abſence [g]. It is now the eſtate of the Briſtows, but gives title of earl to William Henry Naſſau de Zuleſtein deſcended from the princes of Orange, whoſe great grandfather Henry was ſo created 1695, 7 William III. and his two ſons ſucceſſively enjoyed the title; the laſt of them dying 1781, was ſucceeded by his nephew the preſent earl. In this town is an almſhouſe founded by lord Rich.

Eaſtwood. On the hinge of the church door at Eaſtwood by Rochford is the inſcription, Pl. I. fig. 6.

Pax regat intrantes, eadem regat egredientes.

Upminſter. Upminſter was the property of the Engaines as early as the conqueſt, and they had a chapel and burial place adjoining to the chancel, rebuilt by ſir James Eſdaile lord of the ſaid manor. Upminſter hall was a manſion of the abbot of Waltham, and has ſtill a chapelry. Dr. William Derham was rector here from 1689 to 1735, an eminent naturaliſt and writer, educated at Trinity college Oxford, his eldeſt ſon and nameſake being preſident of St. John's college there.

Dagenham breach. In the winter 1707 the violence of the tide made in the levels of Dagenham and Havering a breach of 100 yards wide and 20 feet deep, whereby 1000 acres of rich land were overflowed, and near 120 acres of land waſhed into the Thames, forming a ſand bank near a mile in length half acroſs it. After an unſucceſsful attempt by one Boſwell, Captain Perry with prodigious expence and difficulty (his works being three times nearly deſtroyed) completed a wall, behind which ſtill remains a pool of 40 or 50 acres whence the earth had been waſhed away. In the marſhes upon the Thames about Thurrock, Dagenham, &c. were then diſcovered four feet under the ſurface great numbers of ſubterraneous trees with roots, boughs, and ſome part of the bark, probably thrown down and buried by ſtorms or floods. They were principally bruſhwood, willows, and yew, and ſome oak or horn beam; large quantities of hazel nuts have alſo been found, and a little above the vein of Moorlog, as this kind of timber is called, ſtag's horns were taken up [h].

Havering Bowre. At Havering Bowre, q. d. Havering bouſe, are ſtill to be ſeen ſome rude traces of the royal manſion. It is a large liberty though but one pariſh, which had the name of Hornchurch about the reign of Henry III. who founded an hoſpital here ſubordinate to the great hoſpital of St. Bernard de Montjou in Savoy [i] ad faciendum ſibi ignem pro pauperibus. Romford which was bought by Wykeham for his new college at Oxford, a chapelry under Havering, ſituate on the old military way, whoſe name is ſtill preſerved here in Hare ſtreet [k], q. d. heje ſtpet, may have been ſo called from the Romans. Giddy hall was begun by ſir Thomas Cooke, and finiſhed by his great grandſon ſir Anthony, one of king Edward VI's præceptors. A view of the old houſe may be ſeen on La Serre's Entree de Marie de Medicis. Sir John Eyles, bart. built a modern houſe here, now the property of Mr. Benyon. At Steward near Rumford was born 1592 Francis Quarles the poet.

Pirgo. Pirgo, the ſeat of the noble family of Grey, afterwards of the Chekes, and laſt of lord Archer, was

[s] See his Abury, p. 96.
[t] Morant I. 229.
[u] See Dr. Andree's treatiſe on it, 1740. 8vo.
[x] Tan. 117.
[y] Morant I. 236.
[z] Ib. I. 266.
[a] Archaeol. V. 286.
[b] Pat. 15 H. III. m. 6.
[c] Tan. 130.
[d] Morant I. 297.
[e] ȝepé ꝛic, opus, arx, Lye.
[f] 201. 1596, 351. 1601.
[g] Morant I. 272.
[h] Morant I. 11. Dr. Derham in Phil. Tranſ. 335. Boſwell's and Perry's accounts of ſtopping the breach.
[i] Tan. 131.
[k] Morant I. 7.

pulled

pulled down about 1770. It appears to have been a royal jointure houſe, and here died Joan widow of Henry IV. 1497 [l]. In its chapel were buried ſeveral of the Greys and Chekes [m].

Ingatſtone (in records Yng, and in Paul IV's bill of diſſolution Ging Abbatiſſe, or Ging ad petram) which Mr. Camden ſtrangely miſpels, ſeems to have taken its name from a Roman milliary (which ſome have conjectured ſtands yet in a rude form at the corner of the Red Lion inn there) to diſtinguiſh it from the other Ings which ſurround it. Here is an old ſeat of the Petre family, the firſt of whom, ſir William, received the manor from Henry VIII. who created his ſon John baron Petre of Writtle. He erected a noble houſe at Weſt Horndon or Thorndon, and died in it. His 7th lineal deſcendant lord Robert Edward has lately rebuilt it. At Ingatſtone is an almſhouſe founded by ſir William Petre who is buried in the church [n].

In Alveley pariſh is Bellhouſe, the ſeat of lord Dacre, as formerly of his anceſtors the Lennards and Barrets [o].

Near Ingateſtone ſtood Thobie and Blackmore priories, founded the one t. Stephen by Michael Capra, valued at £. 75. per ann. [p] the other by the Samfords, t. John, valued at £. 85. 9*s*. 7*d*. [q] both ſuppreſſed by Wolſey.

At Mountneyſing, vulgarly Munnaſing, in which pariſh Thobie priory ſtands, is a remarkable inſcription on the hinge of the church door [r]; thus explained:

Jeſus Nazarenus Rex noſter et Judeorum miſere-
re meorum

On the north porch of Runwell church in this neighbourhood is another curious inſcription commemorating ſome founder or benefactor 150... Over the porch of Great Warley church is cut on a piece of timber,

INTVS· IACET
IOHES: FABIAN.

At Shenfield between Brentwood and Chelmsford were found in a field two braſs lares well preſerved, and ſeveral fine pateræ and other earthen veſſels [s].

Mr. Talbot conjectured that CÆSAROMAGUS was Chelmsford, and Dr. Stukeley was ſo poſitive of it, that he fixed the temple of Auguſtus to the ſite of the preſent church. Biſhop Gibſon by a more unnatural change of the name argues as ſtrongly for Dunmow, from the diſtance from Colcheſter, and the road called The Street in Raine pariſh. Mr. Drake from gold coins of Honorius and braſs of Commodus and the lower empire fixes it there [t]. As the Peutinger tables read Baromagus (probably a corruption for Saromagus), Dr. Gale puts it at Witham, near which is a rivulet called Bar. Certain it is there is a circular entrenchment at the laſt place, the Ad Anſam of others. Mr. Camden might have taken courage to place it near Brentwood had he known of the circular camp at South Weald. He afterwards fixed it to Burghſted, where at Blunt's walls are a ditch and rampart incloſing about four acres, and within them ſeveral mounts. Urns are very frequenly found near Billirica [u].

Nothing is more ſurprizing than the error all Antiquaries have hitherto lain under with reſpect to the ſcene of the battle between Edmund Ironſide and the Danes. Though they had the authority of Mr. Camden againſt them they have carried it quite acroſs the country to the northern extremity as far from the ſea as poſſible, and in defiance of every circumſtance that could fix it here. In a marſh in Woodham Mortimer pariſh on the Chelmsford ſide of the river Burnham or Crowch are 24 barrows grouped in pairs, and moſt of them ſurrounded by a ditch. At Canewdon, which Weever was for rendering Canuti domus, is the Daniſh camp. Hocklie on the hill, on the other ſide of the river, has the memorial of ſlaughter in its name from Daccan, cædere; the church is ſupported by the antient maſſive round pillars, and in the pariſh is a very large ſingle barrow. Battle bridge, four miles lower down, may have taken its name from this action, though Hull bridge (now only a ford and ferry, the piles remaining in the river), is cloſe to the marſh where the barrows are. The Danes had been hovering about this neighbourhood for 20 years before [x]. They probably landed at Bradwell, How much more obvious the reſemblance between Aſſandune and Aſſingdon than between Aſſandune and Aſhdown; not to mention that Simeon Dunelmenſis expreſsly ſays Cnute and Turkill built the church in monte quæ Aſſandune dicitur. This is the exact ſituation of Hocklie church, but is it ſo of that at Bartlow?

Woodham Mortimer.

Canewdon.

Hocklie.

At Raleigh are ſtill remaining the ſtupendous earthworks of Swene's caſtle. Dugdale [y] makes him father of Henry, omitting Robert. Raleigh was an honour which came to the crown 1280 from the Burghs [z].

Raleigh.

Mr. Gale in his MS. notes on Camden places Ithanceſter (which he ſuppoſes a correction of Idumanceſter, q. d. Idumana civitas) at Toltſbury. It is certain Roman pavements have been found on a hill above Tolleſhunt Knights, near the church of which is a place called Manyfield Wic [a]. Simon Dunelmenſis expreſsly places Ithanceſtre on the Pant [b]. At the end of Heybridge cauſeway is an encloſure called the Stone, where, on making a ditch ſome years ſince were found a conſiderable quantity of Roman coins and an incredible number of rude ſhaped urns. They lay about three or four feet under the ſurface, and evidently ſhewed that all the parts contiguous to the ditch were equally filled with them. In ſupport of Mr. Camden's opinion that Ithanceſter was near Bradwell we muſt obſerve that the Domeſday name of this place is Effeceſtra. Holland tells us there yet remaineth a large ruin of a thick wall whereby many Roman coins have been found.

Ithanceſter.

Mr. Salmon [c] obſerves the Confeſſor's charter calls the hundred Daneing, as if named from the Danes. He has printed it from original records, but other authors give it Dancing. The name of this hundred in Domeſday is Whitbricteſhorne, out of which was taken the half hundred of Maldon, both comprehended in the name of Dengy t. Henry II. The name of Witbricteſhorne may be derived from the bridge now at Heybridge, which place was antiently called Tildwaldtune, and appears to have been conſiderable. Perhaps the cauſeway before mentioned, or the bridge, may have been raiſed of white ſtone, and thence took the name of Witbricteſhorne, q. d. Whitebridge point. At leaſt under the little aſſiſt-

Dengey.

[l] Stowe An. 376.
[m] Salmon's Eſſex, 245 6.
[n] Morant, I. 212.
[o] Morant, I. 78.
[p] Tanner, 128.
[q] Ib. 132.
[r] See Pl. I. fig. 6*.
[s] Salm. 264.
[t] Arch. V. 137—142.
[u] Morant, I. 196.
[x] See Sax. Chron. p. 126. 128.
[y] Bar. I. 463.
[z] Morant, I. 274.
[a] Ib. I. 393, 394.
[b] Inter X Script. Salmon, 394.
[c] P. 393.

ance to be had here from authors ſuch a conjecture may be hazarded. The two Stanbridges in Rochford hundred had their name from a ſtone bridge over a leſs conſiderable ſtream. Dengey may have the ſame etymology with Dengemarſh and Dengeneſs in Kent, being alike low and marſhy.

Walfleet oyſters. The Wallfleet oyſters have their name from a wall of earth five miles long thrown up againſt the ſea. This wall gives name to the ſhore [1].

Thaxted. Thaxted was incorporated by Philip and Mary, has a market, and is remarkable for its fine church, built t. Henry III. the older parts by Elizabeth lady Clare, the nave by her ſon William de Burgh before 1340, the ſouth porch by his ſon-in-law Lionel duke of Clarence about 1362, the north aile by Mortimer earl of March about 1380, the chancel by Edward III. and the tower and lofty ſpire by Edmund laſt earl of March [d]. Here was born 1577 the rev. Samuel Purchas, compiler of the voyages, who died 1628.

Little Eaſton. Little Eaſton had the name of ad turrim from the tower of the church: that at Great Eaſton, or Eaſton ad montem, having none [e]. Charles I. beſtowed the title of baron Eſtain on ſir William Maynard, to whoſe anceſtors queen Elizabeth had granted the eſtate. He was ſucceeded 1639 by his ſon William, he 1692 by his ſon Banaſter, and he by his ſons Henry, Grey, and Charles; the latter was created viſcount Maynard 1766, and ſucceeded 1775 by Charles 7th and preſent baron and ſecond viſcount.

Tiltey. Tiltey abbey was founded for White monks by Robert Ferrers earl of Derby, and Maurice Fitz Geoffrey about 1152, valued at £. 167. 2s. 6d. [f] The abbey ſtands in a beautiful vale ſurrounded by trees. Its only remains are the ſtrangers' chapel, and part of a cloiſter, wherein are round arches.

Little Dunmow. The foundreſs of Dunmow priory was ſiſter to Ralph Baynard, and great aunt to William Baynard. Her tomb of grey marble coffin-faſhioned with a croſs flory in relief is ſhewn in the ſouth wall of the chancel. In the church, which is only the ſouth aile and five arches of the nave of the priory church, are the monuments of Walter Fitz Walter, who died 1198, 10 Richard I. and his ſecond wife Margaret de Bohun, and Matilda his grandaughter ſaid to have been poiſoned by king John for refuſing to liſten to his ſolicitations. The priory was founded 1104, valued at £. 150. 3s. 4d. [g] Here is obſerved a cuſtom ſimilar to that at Whichenor in Staffordſhire. The convent, and, ſince the diſſolution, the lord of the manor is to deliver to every couple that could ſwear they had no cauſe of complaint againſt each other a gammon of bacon, which in Staffordſhire was alſo given to religious perſons who had finiſhed their year's probation, and had no complaint againſt their new ſpouſe the church. This might have been the original intention of the ceremony in both places, which is now aboliſhed here for the abuſe of it in theſe looſe-principled times.

Great Dunmow. Great Dunmow is a conſiderable market town with a handſome church containing the monuments of the Bourchiers and Maynards: and here we have ſeen Mr. Drake places CÆSAROMAGUS: others VILLA FAUSTINI. At Merks-hill, a farm and manor about two miles ſouth-weſt of this place, were found in a layer of black earth and among rubbiſh of buildings in a gravel pit 1760 near a dozen ſmall urns, the largeſt of a pint ſize, and the three ſmalleſt equal to a ſmall tea cup. They were ranged in regular order, and one of them had its ſides pannelled and ſunk in like that found at Coggeſhall engraved in Burton's Antoninus, p. 231. See the plate of urns. With them were ſome ſmall pieces of braſs, and copper coins of Trajan and Antoninus, rev. LIBER...

Pleſhey. Pleſhy is ſtill reſpectable for the ſtupendous keep and earthworks of its caſtle, which, like many others in this and the neighbouring counties, appear to have been new modelled by the Normans, there being without the whole evident traces of a ditch and bank perhaps made in the Roman times. Certain it is that urns and pavements have been found by the ſide of one of the four roads that run through this more antient fortification. The entrance to the keep is from the weſt over a venerable brick bridge of one lofty pointed arch, probably a work of the 16th century. The fine collegiate church built there by Thomas of Woodſtock, as well as the monuments of the founder, his rival the duke of Exeter, and Henry Stafford ſon to the duke of Buckingham, and ſecond huſband to Margaret counteſs of Richmond, were ſo compleatly ſpoiled by ſir John Gates, to whom Henry VIII. granted it at the diſſolution, that little more than an arch or two of the chancel remains. The college was valued at £. 26. 5s. 8d. [h]

Hatfield Broad Oak. Not far from Dunmow is Hatfield Broadoak [i], or Regis, ſo called of ſome ſpreading oak like that now known thereabouts by the name of Doodle Oak [k], and from being before the Conqueſt royal demeſne. Here was a priory of Black Monks founded about 1135 by Aubrey de Vere father of the firſt earl of Oxford of that name, who enfeoffed the Convent with all his tithes in the pariſh by a grant to which was affixed by a harp ſtring a ſhort black hafted knife inſtead of a ſeal. The ſtone figure of his grandſon Robert, third earl of Oxford, buried here 1221, lies now in the chancel with a mutilated inſcription. This houſe was valued at £. 122. 13s. 2d. [l]

Barrington hall. Barrington hall in Hatfield Broadoak pariſh has continued in the family of the preſent poſſeſſor ever ſince the time of Henry I. till Thomas Barrington, eſq; t. Elizabeth purchaſing Hatfield priory, made that the place of his reſidence; but, upon its being taken down in the beginning of this century, John Barrington Shales, eſq; began a handſome houſe north of the ſite of the priory. From a younger branch of this family is deſcended the preſent lord viſcount Barrington.

Tremhale. Takeley. North of Hatfield are the priories of Tremhale and Takeley: the former founded by Gilbert de Montfichet, valued at £. 60. 18s. 7d. [m], the latter a cell to St. Valery's in Normandy, to whom the Conqueror gave the manor [n]. Both are intirely vaniſhed. An antient ring of a ſubſtance like jet or canal coal found in the ruins of the firſt was ſhewn at the Society of Antiquaries, 1752.

Canfield. A little further is Canfield, formerly an eſtate of the Veres, who probably built the caſtle, whoſe keep remains. Some have fancied it the Roman ſtation Canonium, from its ſtanding not far from the little river Can.

Harlow. South-weſt of Hatfield we find Harlow, which gives name to a half hundred, and belonged to St. Edmund's Bury abbey. Its market is diſuſed.

Latton. Contiguous to it is Latton, where was a priory, whoſe founder and date

[1] G. [d] See in Morant II. 545, a ſurvey of this church by R. Heckford, eſq; ſuch as one could wiſh for all churches.
[e] Salm. 200—202. [f] Tanner, 129. [g] Ib. 123. [h] Ib. 136.
[i] Weever quotes Camden for this place: but he has not mentioned it. [k] Salmon, 83. [l] Tanner, 128.
[m] Tanner, 121. [n] Ib. 125.

of

of foundation are totally unknown, though prior to Edward I.[o] It had, however, a magnificent church whoſe eaſt end, with two tranſepts, is now a barn. Parndon, whence the Præmonſtratenſian canons were removed to Bilegh near Maldon[p]. Roydon, where at Netherhall the ſeat of the Colt family is a fine brick gateway of the age of Henry VII. or VIII. great part now demoliſhed by ſtripping it of its roof and floors to repair farmhouſes. Epping, a conſiderable market town giving name to the adjoining foreſt, antiently called from Waltham. On this foreſt was found a ſmall earthen figure of a child by Mr. Francis Bird ſhewn at the Society of Antiquaries, 1721.

What Mr. Camden diſcreetly terms Prudence in chancellor Rich, others would more juſtly have called the art of accommodating himſelf to the times, and improving every method of riſing in the world. His grandſon Robert was by James I. created earl of Warwick, which title ended in his family in 1673. Leigh and the reſt of the eſtate went by marriage to the Montagues earls of Mancheſter, who ſold the priory to Edmund Sheffield duke of Buckingham, of whoſe half brother and heir the governors of Guy's hoſpital ſince purchaſed it. Great part of the brick houſe built here round a quadrangle by ſome of the Richs, one ſide of which was a long gallery, where queen Elizabeth was confined during her ſiſter's reign, has been pulled down: the fine gateway and banqueting-houſe remain. The priory was valued at £.114. 1s. 4d.[q]

The vicarage and rectorial tythes of Much-Waltham, with a manor there, were given, in 1557, to Trinity college Oxford, by ſir Thomas Pope their founder. And by deed, dated December 24th, 1550, ſir Thomas Pope, for the health of his ſoul, founded a dirge, to be annually celebrated on Jeſus-day, in the church of Much-Waltham, with a penſion of 26s. 8d. and a diſtribution of alms to the poor.

Much of the old priory-houſe at Hatfield Peverel remained till within theſe few years: it is now ſucceeded by a handſome modern manſion, built by Mr. Wright, an eminent coach maker. It was valued at £.60. 14s. 11d.[r]

There ſeems to be no reaſon for placing a Roman ſtation at Chelmsford. On the contrary, every circumſtance is againſt aſſigning ſuch antiquity to this town. Though it now is the county town, and has a market and freeſchool, there was not even a road near it till Henry I's time, when Maurice, biſhop of London (to whoſe ſee it had always belonged till Bonner's time), built a bridge over the Chelmer. His ſucceſſor William obtained a market and fair of king John. From this time the road, which before run through Writtle, came through Chelmsford. It ſhould not be forgotten here that the induſtrious tranſlator Philemon Holland, who beſtowed ſo much pains on the work before us, was born and educated here[s]. Alſo ſir William Mildmay founder of Emanuel college, Cambridge, who died 1589. On the north faſcia of the church is the inſcription engraved Pl. I. fig. 7.

Pray for the good eſtate of all the townesheps of Chelmysford that hath been liberall willers *and procorers of helpe*is *to thy*s werke and on them that firſt began and longeſt ſhall continue to do it, in the yere of our Lorde 1 thouſand 1111 hondreth 1111.

The words in Roman characters have been cut out to fix in leaden pipes.

The priory here could not poſſibly have been founded by Malcolm, the laſt king of Scotland of that name, he being dead long before the Black or Dominican friars placed in it came into England[t]. It was valued only at £.9. 6r. Morant ſays its kitchen had a roof like that of the theatre of Oxford.

There appear no evidences of Writtle being a Roman ſtation. The ſquare piece of ground, about an acre, incloſed by a deep moat, may have been the ſeat of the palace which Stowe[u] ſays king John built here, or more probably ſome manſion-houſe. Mr. Drake removes Canonium to Coggeſhall[x]. Writtle gave birth 1593 to John Baſtwick, whoſe ſufferings in the laſt century more than his merit have made him remarkable. Writtle.

At Bromfield, a pleaſant village ſouth of Chelmsford, was found in a well a Roman ſandal (Pl. I. fig. 8.) and a braſs veſſel. Some fragments of pottery have been found in the low grounds in Boreham; but theſe amount to no poſitive proof of a Roman ſtation being here. Bromfield.

Richard Badow, firſt founder of Clare-hall, Cambridge, was of a family ſeated at Great Badow. Great Badow.

Somewhat eaſt of the river is Hemſted, a chapelry, the eſtate and burial-place 1657 of Dr. William Harvey, who diſcovered the circulation of the blood in the laſt age[y]. Hemſted.

Biſhop Gibſon ſays Finchingfield was held of Edward III. by John Compes [Kempe] by the ſervice of turning the ſpit at his coronation; but Mr. Morant has nothing of it. Finchingfield.

Bocking is the head of the archbiſhop of Canterbury's four peculiars in this county, the manor having been given by two noble Saxons in the Confeſſor's time to Chriſt Church priory at Canterbury. Theſe peculiars (with three in Suffolk and their appendages) are ſubject to the archbiſhop's commiſſary who is called Dean of Bocking. Here was an hoſpital founded by John Dorward 16 Henry VI.[z] ſtill ſubſiſting as an almſhouſe for 7 poor people. Bocking.

Braintree, comprehended in Domeſday book under the name of Raines, had a palace of the biſhops of London till biſhop Ridley alienated their manor. It owes its populouſneſs and clothing trade to the Netherlanders driven out by the duke d'Alva's cruelty. Near it was born ſir William Dawes, archbiſhop of York 1671, who died 1724. Braintree. Raines.

A little to the ſouth-weſt of this town is Pantfield, which Waleran Fitz-Ralph gave to the abbey of Caen in Normandy, by whom a ſmall priory was afterwards founded here[a]. Pantfield.

To the north-weſt is Black Notley, where that great naturaliſt Mr. Ray was born 1628, and buried 1706, and William Bedell biſhop of Kilmore 1570, who died 1641. At Black Notley, in digging gravel in a field of Mr. Raymond's 1752, about ten rods under ground and three feet and an half under the common ſoil, were found the fragments of antiquity engraved Pl. I. fig. 9, 10, 11. Fig. 9. is of copper, like a fluted column, terminated with a ram's head at one end, at the other with a piece of metal graved on the outſide with a tool, and within it appeared ſome white metal as if intended to ſolder it on to ſomething. C. Caylus gives juſt ſuch an one (I. xcii. 4.) for a knife handle. Fig. 11. is a copper veſſel with a handle broken and compreſt by the pickax. Fig. 10. was found with it, as were alſo an oblong blue glaſs veſſel with a band of white running circularly from top to bottom Black Notley.

[o] Tanner, 134. [p] Ib. 130. [q] Ib. 133. [r] Ib. 121. [s] Ath. Ox. I. 130.
[t] Tan. 134. [u] Annals, p. 168. [x] Arch. V. 137—142. [y] Morant, II. 530.
[z] Tanner, 136. [a] Ib. 120.

at unequal diſtances, a fragment of another blue glaſs veſſel, ſix pieces of a red glazed earthen veſſel or urn, and two others of aſh-coloured clay glazed brown[b].

Coggeſhall. If we ſuppoſe a patera would be dedicated or appropriated to the uſe of the manes, we might accept the Roman etymology of Coggeſhall[c]. But unfortunately COCCILLI M. is only the potter's mark, and not peculiar to the veſſels found here, ſince it occurs on others in England, and elſewhere. The Roman remains diſcovered here in the laſt age, and during the exiſtence of the abbey[d] (which was of the Ciſtertian order) founded by king Stephen 1142, valued at £.251 2s.[e] are by Mr. Drake thought ſufficient to fix here CANONIUM[f]. A ſilver coin of Domitian, found in a wall where Roman bricks had been uſed at Falkborn, had led others to fix Ad Anſam in this laſt village, where is an antient gateway to the manorhouſe. Coggeſhall was the habitation of antient knights thence ſurnamed de Coggeſhall, from whoſe heir general married to the old family of the Tirrels, there branched forth a fair propagation of the Tirrels in this ſhire and elſewhere[g].

Falkborn.

Witham. At Witham are conſiderable remains of a circular camp on Cheping hill near the ſouth ſide of the church, defended by a double vallum almoſt levelled within on the ſouth ſide, but very plain on the ſouth-weſt, where the preſent road runs along the outer bank: the river defending it on the weſt the works are lower. A road runs through it from north to ſouth, and ſo on with a little deflection to Falkborn. In the church, eſpecially the ſteeple, are great quantities of Roman bricks. Theſe circumſtances may ſeem to argue ſtrongly in favour of CANONIUM being here. Witham was the honour of the earl of Boulogne, who married the Confeſſor's ſiſter, and it was given by king Stephen and his ſon Euſtace earl of Boulogne to the Templars[h]. At Creſſing near Witham was a preceptory of knights templars, founded about 1150[i].

Creſſing.

Tiptre. In Great Braxted pariſh was Tiptre priory of black canons, diſſolved by Wolſey[k].

Danbury. Danbury was held by the St. Cleres from the Conqueſt to Edward I. Three old wooden figures in the church probably belong to this family. A circular entrenchment encloſes the church and parſonage-houſe, and the whole top of the hill ſuppoſed the higheſt in the county. See the plan of it Pl. I. fig. 12. Aubrey ſays of it[l], near Malden in Eſſex a camp called Danbury quaſi Danes bury. The plant called Danes blood grows here. In this and Woodham Ferrars pariſh ſtood Bicknacre, a priory of black canons, founded by Maurice Jeffery, ſheriff of Eſſex, t. Henry II. and annexed to St. Mary Spittle, London, t. Henry VII.[m] Some lofty arches remain.

Bicknacre.

Sandon. At Sandon near Danbury, the celebrated editor of the Polyglot Bible Brian Walton was rector from 1635 to 1641, and again 1660, when he was promoted to the ſee of Cheſter.

New hall. New hall is now only the eaſt ſide of the houſe enlarged and embelliſhed by Henry VIII. and queen Elizabeth as appears by the inſcriptions commemorating both theſe princes. It was the ſecond houſe in this county after Audley inn which it ſurpaſſed in the extent and diſpoſition of the grounds about it. The beautiful window in St. Margaret's church, Weſtminſter, formerly in the chapel at Copt hall, was ſince placed in the magnificent chapel here pulled down about forty years ago.

Boreham. In the neighbouring church of Boreham lie the bodies of Robert Ratcliffe, viſcount Fitzwalter, earl of Suſſex, his firſt wife, his ſon Henry and his wife with their ſons Thomas and Henry; the former of whom erected the chapel here with a ſumptuous monument having his own effigies with that of his father and grandfather, whoſe bodies he removed hither with the reſt of his anceſtors. The eſtate being ſold out of the family, the burial-place has been neglected, and the vault falling in uncovered twelve bodies wrapt in lead like mummies. On the breaſt of one of them, I ſaw 1760 this inſcription in raiſed capitals:

Thomas Comes Suſſex Vicecomes Fitzwalter
Dominus de Egremond et Burnel, etc.
Obiit ix Junii anno dni 1583. æt. s. 57.

Another dated 1593 for Henry, brother to Thomas and father to Robert the laſt earl. On the death of earl Robert without iſſue 1629, the title of baron Fitz-Walter was claimed by ſir Henry Mildmay in right of his wife, only daughter of Henry Ratcliffe, couſin and heir of the half blood to Robert; but it was not adjudged till 1669 by parliament to Benjamin ſon of the ſaid ſir Henry. By the death of his ſon Benjamin 1756 the title is extinct.

Malden. Mr. Horſley is the only one that agrees with Mr. Camden in fixing CAMULODUNUM at Malden. Dr. Gale had transferred it to Walden, where there is nothing to countenance him but part of a large ſquare fortification; but he derives it from the river Cam riſing thereabouts[n]. Dr. Salmon's wild conjectures carry it to Caſtle Camps in Cambridgeſhire; Mr. Morant to Colcheſter, perhaps with greater probability, though all his arguments are not equally well founded particularly his ſituation of the intermediate ſtations from London. All circumſtances concur to fix it on this coaſt; the difficulty is to determine whether here or at Colcheſter, or in other words, whether Colonia and Camulodunum are the ſame or diſtinct places. Dio Caſſius who firſt mentions Camulodunum[o] expreſsly calls it the royal reſidence of Cunobeline, and that prince's coins with the word CAMV. on the reverſe are frequently found at Colcheſter, whereas only a ſingle Roman coin of Nero and Agrippina capita jugata on one ſide, and on the other the ſame perſons in a car, has been ever found at Maldon. Tacitus mentions the temple of Claudius at Camulodunum, and the title of the local deity Mars Camulus[p] might be given to that emperor by the refinement of flattery. There are certainly ſtronger evidences of the Colony being at Colcheſter than at Maldon, if we regard coins and other antiquities continually found in the former. The deſtruction by the Britons was not ſo complete as to [b] Ant Soc. min. [c] Weever, 618. Caſaub. in Anton. 34.

[d] Theſe diſcoveries, as Holland in his additions makes Mr. Camden ſay from the hiſtory of the abbey, conſiſted of a great braſs pot, the mouth cloſed with paſte or clay hard as burnt brick, incloſing an earthen pot and that a ſmaller alſo of the quantity of a gallon, covered with a ſubſtance like velvet, and faſtened at the mouth with a ſilk lace; within this laſt pot were ſome whole bones and pieces of bones wrapt up in fine ſilk of freſh colour which the abbot who firſt ſhewed them to ſir Clement Harleſton laid up in his veſtry as reliques of ſome Saint. The ſpot where they were found was called Weſtfield three quarters of a mile from Coggeſhall.

[e] Tan. 128. [f] Arch. V. 137—142.

[g] Holland. [h] See the grant in Morant II. 106. [i] Tan. 129. [k] Ib. 134.

[l] Mon. Brit. [m] Tan. 129. Morant, II. 55. [n] MS. n. in my Camden. [o] LX. p. 779.

[p] Camulus ſeems to have been a Gauliſh deity. Cæſar B. G. VII. 57. 62. mentions a commander in chief of that nation named Camulogenus Aulercus, q. d. Aulercus, ſon of Camulus or Mars, advanced to that poſt, "propter ſingularem ſcientiam rei militaris;" we need not therefore adopt Sammes's definition of Camalodunum. Mr. Wiſe (Num. Cat. Bodl. p. 225.) thinks Camulus an Etruſcan deity.

leave no traces of the Roman town, ſince Verulam, only a municipium, and inferior to a colony, was ruined at the ſame time, yet ſtill ſhews greater remains than Maldon. The inſcription given by Camden and copied by Gruter[q], places Colonia Victricenſis at Camalodunum in Britain, and what is called Colonia in one Iter of Antonine is called Camalodunum in another with the difference of only four miles in the two diſtances from Cæſaromagus[r]. If we carry the Roman road along the preſent high road from London, Malden is out of the line; but if by Burghſted, &c. to the eaſt of the preſent road, it will paſs through it. Suppoſing Colonia and Cæſaromagus different places, there muſt be the ſame difference in the diſtance between them and London formerly as now; but the diſtance between them and London in the Itinerary is the ſame, viz. fifty-two miles, whereas Malden is ſixteen miles nearer London than Colcheſter; either, therefore, the numbers muſt be wrong, or the two names belong to the ſame place. As to the appearances in the æſtuary of the Thames and circumſtances of the tide rolling bloody into Blackwater bay or Idumanus ſinus, Ptolemy carries the æſtuary of the Thames ſo high that we may as well ſuppoſe he continued it to the mouth of the Colne as of the Pant, not to mention the changes which the ſea has made in this coaſt. The bloody tide of the neighbouring bay or æſtuary is an improvement of Camden's. Tacitus ſpeaks of the main ſea; Oceanum aſpecto cruento.

Camulodunum ſeems to have recovered from this calamity. Pliny[s] thought it conſiderable enough to tell us the diſtance from Angleſey to it was two hundred miles. He wrote in the reign of Veſpaſian, above ten years after this event; and if the two names in Antoninus belong to the ſame place, it continued a colony probably as long as the Romans had any footing in Britain, at leaſt till the reign of Theodoſius the younger, when the Notitia was compiled in which it is not to be found.

Malden.

As no traces of a caſtle appear at Maldon, it is not improbable that ſaid by Marianus to have been built by Edward the elder in 920, was only the oblong camp, incloſing about twenty-two acres on the weſt ſide of the town, or this may have been his camp when here ſeven years before. The defaced tumuli, called Borough-hills before-mentioned, about two miles below Malden, near fifty in number, ſeem to have been raiſed over the Danes ſlain in ſome of their invaſions at this time. At Malden was a Carmelite priory, founded 1292 by Richard Graveſend biſhop of London, valued at £.1. 6s 6d.[t] The town gave title of viſcount to Arthur Capel earl of Eſſex 1661.

land.

The adjoining village of Mayland gave birth 1695 to Dr. John Gauden biſhop of Exeter and Worceſter, and ſuppoſed author of Eikon Baſilike; who died 1662.

In Little Malden ſtood Bilegh abbey, founded by Robert Mantell 1180, for Præmonſtratenſes, removed from Parndon in this county. Henry Bourchier earl of Eſſex, and his wife Iſabel, were buried in its chapel, which with the hall makes a farm-houſe. It was valued at £.157 16s 11d.[u] Here was alſo an hoſpital for lepers of royal foundation, before Edward II.[x]

At Staneſgate in Steeple pariſh was a Cluniac priory, ſubject to Lewes, valued at £.45. 8s.[y] Staneſgate.

Ad Ansam.

Ad Ansam ſeems to be the moſt undetermined ſtation of any in the county. Mr. Burton declines fixing it, only tells us that Mr. Talbot in ſome copies ſet it at Catwade bridge, where the Stour makes an iſland. One would think he had read it ad inſulam; and thereabouts or at Stretford Dr. Stukeley places it, as does Richard of Cirenceſter, changing its name to Ad Sturium amnem. Mr. Horſley by the fifteen miles between Combretonium and Ad Anſam is induced to carry the laſt to Merſey iſland, where are great remains of the Romans. Afterwards ſuppoſing the military ways to have met at Colcheſter, and coincided for four or five miles, he carries it to Caſterford, called in Dr. Stukeley's map Cheſterford and Canonium, but unfortunately the Dr. miſtook Eaſterford or Kelvedon for Caſterford, elſe we had had a Roman ſtation beyond controverſy. Mr. Horſley, in his table, p. 443. makes the road take a courſe perfectly anſwerable to his friend Ward's idea of Anſa, a curve, carrying it by Witham, Maldon, Fambridge, Chelmsford, Leiton, to London, which is in the form of an inverted z. If we allow Camulodunum to be Colcheſter, Ad Anſam is to be ſought for on the Suffolk edge of the county, and then Richard of Cirenceſter's Ad Sturium has the faireſt claim, ſuppoſing Anſa to be another word for the flexures of that river.

Caſtle Hedingham.

At Caſtle Hedingham was ploughed up a gold ring, which weighed near an ounce. On the outſide, though much defaced by the plough, appeared ſome neat flowered work, and on the inſide are the following characters, which are very plain, and the enamel as black as poſſible, and ſcarce any part of it worn out.

✠ ЄΥ. ЌЏΡЄ · ʎoiall

en kure [cœur] loiall.

The principal tower[z] of Hedingham caſtle ſtill remaining, 110 feet high, ſhews within a vaſt Saxon arch 30 feet diameter, and the windows are of the ſame ſtyle. It is ſuppoſed to have been built by the ſecond Aubrey de Vere earl of Oxford t. Stephen, whoſe queen Maud died in it. Here was alſo a nunnery founded by the firſt earl and his wife Lucia, who was firſt prioreſs, and ſo much regretted at her death that the convent beſought and obtained the prayers of above fifty churches and religious ſocieties in England. It was valued at £.29. 12s. 10d.[a] In the pariſh church, which is in the Saxon ſtyle, is a monument of black marble, with the figures of John de Vere 15th earl of Oxford, who died 1539, and his wife Elizabeth Truſſel, their four ſons and four[b] daughters kneeling at the ſides. In that of Sible Hedingham, built by ſome of the Hawkwood family t. Edward III. is an honorary monument to ſir John Hawkwood. This famous adventurer, whoſe father was a tanner, was put apprentice to a taylor, but engaging in Edward III's French wars, obtained the honour of knighthood. Upon the concluſion of the peace between France and England, he turned parti-

Sible Hedingham.

[q] ccccxxxix. 5. ap. Horſl. 446.
[r] This difference is the leſs material as the ſame Iters make a difference of three miles between London and Cæſaromagus wherever that ſtation is to be placed.
[s] N. H. II. 75.
[t] Tanner, 135. [u] Ib. 130. [x] Ib. 135. [y] Ib. 131.
[z] Mr. Morant ſeems to think there were four ſuch towers; but by the view he gives of it, taken 1665, the year before it was ruined, there appears to have been only this and a large gateway with towers at the corners.
[a] Tanner, 131. [b] This is one more than I find in any of the pedigrees.

zan, and after committing great depredations in France and Italy, and changing ſides as ſuited his intereſt, died in the ſervice of the Florentines, which he had before quitted for that of their inveterate enemies the Piſans. He married the duke of Milan's brother's natural daughter, and died 1394. Camden calls his tomb at Florence a cenotaph; Weever ſays he was buried there. But it ſeems moſt probable the monument at Sible Hedingham contained his body. A chantry was founded there for him. The Italian manner of ſpelling his name comes much nearer truth than the French in Froiſſart, who writes it Hatton. The ſeal to two of his letters in the Britiſh Muſeum is a hawk percht, and on the church tower are two hawks percht in rondeaux let into the wall. The manor of Hawkwood's here does not take name from this ſir John, one Stephen Hawkwood having held it before him. This Stephen might have been a relation or elder branch, but ſir James's father's name was Gilbert.

Halſted. At Halſted chancellor Bourchier began a college, endowed with only £.26. 5s. 8d.[c] This town has a market. Thomas Bourchier, ſon of the firſt earl of Eſſex of the name, archbiſhop of Canterbury 1454, and chancellor of England, was born here, and died 1486.

Great Maplested. The church of Great Mapleſted has a circular eaſt end.

Wethersfield. At Wethersfield was the ſeat of the Neviles, its antient lords. There ſtill remains at Blackmore end a large moat, ſurrounded by grounds ſtill called the park[d]. In this pariſh were found ſeveral Roman urns, glaſs, and other veſſels, communicated to the ſociety of Antiquaries by Dr. Barnard.

Earls Coln. Of the thirteen earls of Oxford buried at Earls Colne there remained in Weever's time eight monuments; there are at preſent only three, removed from the priory at the diſſolution into the pariſh church, ſuppoſed to belong to Robert the fifth earl, who died 24 Edward I. Thomas, eighth earl, who died 45 Edward III. and Richard eleventh earl, who died 1417, and his wife Alice Serjeaux. Over the front of the preſent ſteeple are the arms of the famous Robert de Vere[e], duke of Ireland, and minion to Richard II. over the back the date 1582, and 25 Henry VIII. The priory church ſtood at the bottom of the hill: its ſite is occupied by the offices of the priory houſe, which was inhabited and modernized in this century. The priory was founded for black monks from Abingdon by Aubrey de Vere firſt of the name t. Henry I. and valued at £.156. 12s. 4d.[f]

Colcheſter. CAMALODUNUM. Whether Colcheſter was the antient Camalodunum or not it has too many evidences to let us doubt of its having been a conſiderable Roman ſtation. Though Mr. Camden had ſeen no coins older than Gallienus[g], they have found of the firſt emperors and of the Britiſh time: alſo urns, braſs penates, ſeals, ſeveral curious pavements, and in 176 . . . the following inſcription to a new topical deity:

NVMINIB.
AVG.
ET MERCV. DEO
ANDESCOCI
VOV COMI
LICO-AESVRI
LINI LIBERTVS
ARAM OPERE
MARONIO
D. S. D.

Innumerable quantities of Roman bricks appear in all the public buildings[h]. In the wall of St. Giles's church I meaſured an intire one ſeventeeen inches ſquare and two inches thick. Part of the Queen's-Head inn was Roman work, and the laſt diſcovered pavement lay in the yard. The church of St. Botolph's priory ruined in the ſiege during the civil war is a ſingular inſtance of a Saxon building intirely of Roman bricks: if not the oldeſt piece of entire brick work in Britain. Edward the elder who repaired the town walls may have done ſomething to the caſtle; but the preſent ſtructure ſeems of Norman origin, and is ſuppoſed to have occupied part of the ſcite of king's Coël's palace. All that has been advanced about this Coel reſts on ſuch weak authorities[i], that it can hardly paſs for truth in any degree; otherwiſe one might ſuſpect that if ſuch a perſon exiſted, his true name was Cælius, and that he was a Roman: for allowing Helena to be his daughter, which is by no means clear, how ſhould the daughter of a Briton have a Greek name. As to Conſtantine the Great being born in Britain, this alſo reſts only on the teſtimonies of Britiſh writers; the continental ones all fixing the place of his nativity in other places, or paſſing it over in ſilence. Under theſe doubts Colcheſter has little reaſon to make that boaſt of it to which certainty is ſo eſſential a baſis. If it be alledged that it is the Pagan writers who caſt a reflection on Helena's character and extraction, it ſhould be obſerved that Bede (who as Lipſius juſtly obſerved to Camden[k] ſhould favour the glory of his nation) concurs with them all that ſhe was a concubine[l], and declines any mention of her family. Whatever might have been Helena's character at the beginning of her connection with Conſtantius, there are ſufficient evidences of their ſubſequent marriage. Her zeal for Chriſtianity makes the principal part of her hiſtory, and of the reſpect paid to her memory in this iſland.

Of the fifteen or rather ſixteen churches mentioned in Colcheſter by Mr. Camden only eight are within the walls. St. John's abbey, founded about 1096, valued at £.523. 17s.[m] converted, at the diſſolution, into a manſion-houſe, and belonging to the Lucas family, was blown up during the ſiege. St. Botolph's priory was founded by Ernulph, in the ſame reign, and was the firſt houſe of Auſtin canons in England, and valued at £.113. 12s. 8d.[n] Here was alſo the firſt convent of Crouched friars, valued at £.7. 7s. 2d. and another of Grey friars, founded by Robert Fitz-Walter, valued at £.1. 1s. 8d.[o] Among the houſes in High-ſtreet almoſt overagainſt the Moot-hall was an old ſtone houſe, in which on a window ſill was this date 1590 ſuppoſed an irrefragable proof of the introduction of Arabic

[c] Tan. 136. [d] Mor. II. 372.
[e] Dr. Stukeley derives their arms from the reſemblance of the Latin word Verres a boar to Vere. Palæog. Brit. II. 132.
[f] Tan. p. 132.
[g] Not more of Carauſius than any other emperor, though Morant thinks he was much converſant here. There is hardly a Roman ſtation where his coins are not turned up.
[h] Its name is juſtly derived by Norden from the Roman Colne, and Ceaſter, the Saxon term for Roman ſtations.
[i] Aldhelm de laud. Virginit. Higden, p. 216, 217. Colcheſter Chronicle MS. Geff. Monmouth. See others in Uſher, Ant. Brit. Ecc. c. 8. Two antient writers of as good authority at leaſt; Steph. Byz. and Conſtantinus Porphyrog. See alſo Mr. Gale's argument againſt it in Morant's Hiſt. of Colcheſter, p. 30. 2d ed.
[k] Camd. Epiſt. p. 67. [l] So does Aldhelm, the firſt broacher of his Britiſh extraction.
[m] Tan 121. [n] Ib. 123. [o] Ib. 134, 135.

numerals

numerals into England before the 13th century, but moſt probably only 1490, or, as Mr. Morant imagines, 1440. On the north ſide of the town remains one of the forts thrown up by the parliament's forces, who under general Fairfax beſieged this town 1648. Another called Fort Eſſex was levelled 1742. Marks of the ſhot are ſtill viſible in an old timber houſe at the bottom of Eaſt ſtreet. In St. Giles's church are buried ſir Charles Lucas and ſir George Liſle, ſhot by order of general Fairfax on the ſurrender of the town. Over them is an inſcription cut uncommonly deep by order as reported of Charles II. Near this church Aubrey[p] places a very great barrow. Great part of the town walls were demoliſhed after this ſiege[q], but ſtill ſhew conſiderable remains with two or three round towers on the ſouth ſide. The trade of Colcheſter conſiſts in bays and ſays, the manufacture of which was introduced by the Dutch and Flemings under queen Elizabeth. King James I. conferred the title of viſcount Colcheſter on Thomas baron Darcy of Chich 1621, in whoſe great grandſon Richard Savage it expired 1712. Whether this town was a biſhop's ſee in the early ſtate of Chriſtianity in Britain is not eaſy to determine: Henry VIII. made it the ſeat of a ſuffragan biſhop, and there were two ſucceſſive biſhops actually conſecrated. William Gilbert, phyſician to Elizabeth and James I. was born here 1540, and died 1603. It alſo gave birth to Samuel Harſnet biſhop of Chicheſter and Norwich, and archbiſhop of York, 1561, who died 1631.

Lexden. On Lexden heath are certain ſtupenduous irregular works, whoſe utmoſt extent ſeems not to have been fully traced. From the name Grymes dyche[r] given them in a perambulation of the town liberties ſo late as Charles I. they ſeem Roman fortifications[s]. Dr. Stukeley, who engraved ſix plates of them, affirmed them a Britiſh circus, &c. and the pit at the ſouth-weſt corner, called King Coël's kitchen, to be an amphitheatre. This laſt conjecture is juſtified by the Dorcheſter amphitheatre, and the diſpoſition of the banks having the ditch ſometimes within and ſometimes without, and running in ſome parts triple in a parallel direction. The Doctor ſuppoſed a circular entrenchment at Bergholt, exactly anſwering Cæſar's account of the Britiſh oppida, to have been the palace of Cunobeline, whoſe tumulus he found eaſt of the circus within the principal banks, and ſtill more eaſt that of Praſutagus.

Mesditch. Bergholt.

Morant ſuppoſes theſe the Roman caſtra and caſtella forced by Boadicia, who he thinks was defeated near Epping. Q. if Battleſwic, the farm near Colcheſter, was not the place. He ſays it had its name from a family of Battaile. Might not the family rather have their name from the works?

Stanway. In Stanway pariſh, on the ſouth ſide of the London road, were found 1764 a number of large bones, vertebræ and tibiæ with their joints, lying in a ſtratum of ſea ſand, and ſmall ſhells, ſuch as are frequent about Woodbridge in Suffolk, where, as well as here, they are uſed for manure. This bed was above a yard thick, and above it another of ooze or river mud of three inches in thickneſs, over which were ſeveral veins of yellow ſand, gravel, and mould: the tibiæ were much corroded, but the others perfectly well poliſhed. They probably belonged to the ſame kind of animals with thoſe found at the Neſs, t. Richard II. and much later at Wrabneſs near Harwich[t] 1701; and another among Roman antiquities within Felixtow caſtle, Suffolk. They might be ſome of the elephants brought over by Claudius A. D. 43. Neſs.

The Neſs or Eadulfsneſs, now called Thorpe, q. d. the village, by way of eminence, gave its name in Domeſday to the diſtrict of three pariſhes, Thorp, Walton, and Kirkby, known by the name of the Sokens, peculiars of the Dean and Chapter of London till queen Mary ſubjected them to the biſhop. The ſeal of the Dean's Commiſſary, a biſhop in pontificalibus, with this inſcription: was ſhewn by Mr. Holman to the Society of Antiquaries 1722. In this liberty none might be arreſted but by the bailiff of the liberty, and the conſent of the lord firſt obtained, nor did the ſheriff's power extend hither.

S. Wilmi Duddley Decani[u] . . . . . .

St. Oſith. St. Oſith was daughter of Redoald[x] king of the Eaſt Angles, and born at Quarendon near Ayleſbury. Upon her renouncing her huſband Sighere a Chriſtian, king of the Eaſt Angles, ſhe built a church and nunnery at Chic, which the Danes Ingvar and Hubba plundered after beheading the foundreſs. The remains of biſhop Richard de Belmeis' foundation, valued at £. 677.[y] is now the ſeat of the earl of Rochford, whoſe grandfather by marriage acquired the eſtate of the lords Darcy of Chich. The quadrangle is almoſt intire, except part of the north ſide occupied by ſome modern apartments. The entrance is by a beautiful gateway of hewn ſtone with compartments of flint, having two towers and two poſterns: the ſtables and offices that form the eaſt and weſt ſides of the court have great marks of antiquity, eſpecially the former. To the eaſt are three towers, one larger and loftier than the reſt commanding an extenſive proſpect. Among the ivy-grown ruins in the gardens is a pier with this modern inſcription in capitals, expreſſing the antient magnificence of the place. Chich.

Vetus hæc
quam cernis maceries conſervata eſt
ad Auguſtiniani cœnobii limites deſignandos.
Tu vero
inter hujus loci amœnitates gratulare ablegata jam iſta ſuperſtitione quæ
Domicilium tam ſuperbum
Segnitiei conſecravit et Socordiæ
A. D. CIↃIↃCCLX.

In the church are monuments for Thomas, created baron Darcy of Chich by Edward VI. and his wife daughter of John Vere of Oxford, his ſon John and his wife, and of John Darcy "ſerjeant at law, kinſman and friend to Thomas lord Darcy earl Rivers."

[p] Morant, 73. n. P. [q] Mon. Brit. [r] See this name given to a Roman camp in Middleſex, p. 30.
[s] Morant, 95. 133. Baxter thought them Roman. Gloſſ. v. Camulodunum.
[t] Phil. Tranſ. N° 274.
[u] He was dean of Windſor and the chapel royal, and died biſhop of Durham 1483, Edw. IV. Newcourt, I. 81.
[x] Leſ. de Script. Brit. [y] Tan. 124.

Biſhop Belmeis was alſo buried here[z]. The abbey was ſurrendered 1539, and in 1545 St. Oſithe's was erected into an honour.

Merſey. On the oppoſite ſide, and at the mouth of the river Colne, lies Merſey, an iſland five miles from eaſt to weſt, containing two[a] pariſhes of its own name, in the weſtern of which was diſcovered a beautiful teſſelated pavement 21 feet and an half by 18 and an half, reaching with others over the whole church yard. Dr. Mortimer took a drawing of it, which is not now to be recovered. Other Roman antiquities have been found in the ſame pariſh and on the ſea ſhore[b]; there are ſeveral tumuli in the iſland, and a hill in the road from hence to Colcheſter has the name of Roman hill. It appears to have been the landing-place and retreat of the invaders of Britain. It is at preſent well furniſhed with oaks, which were formerly more numerous; thoſe on the coaſt are much checkt by the ſea breezes, which occaſion them to grow one under another on the ſlope of the hill. On this ſide is a bold ſhore, and an extenſive beach of gravel and fine ſand, at the weſt part of which Dr. Mortimer found many curious marine productions. The farms which occupy the principal parts of the iſland are beautifully diſpoſed, and the ſoil capable of producing moſt kinds of grain. The road from the main land to Merſey is acroſs Pyefleet Creek (antiently called Deramys Flete, and producing the Pyefleet oyſters) over a cauſeway called the Strode, q. d. Le Eſt Rode or L'Eſtrode, covered by the ſea at high water. Near the eaſt end of Weſt Merſey church was a priory, which ſeems to have been founded before the Conqueſt, for Ethelfleda in 962 bequeaths lands to S. Peter's church [cyncan] at Merſey[c].

Layer Marney. Returning into Winſtree hundred we find Layer Marney, from the time of Henry II. the property of the Marney family, of whom Henry was created lord Marney by Henry VIII. and built the noble manſion here, of which only the brick gate now remains. In the church are monuments of ſir William Marney, ſheriff of Suffolk and Eſſex, who died 1414, 2 Henry V. Henry 1ſt lord Marney, John 2d lord, and divers of their anceſtors[d].

Birch. North weſt of this is Birch, where is the keep of a ſmall caſtle, whether built by Ralph Gernon founder of Leighs priory, or part of Lexden works, is uncertain; and adjoining to it Meſſing, the eaſt window of whoſe plain pariſh church is adorned with handſome paintings of the ſix Chriſtian charities, &c. ſuppoſed to be the gift of the Chibbornes, lords here t. James I. In the north wall lies a wooden figure of a knight templar, called ſir William de Meſſing, and founder of the church.

Meſſing.

Bures ad Montem. Further north on the Stour is Bures ad Montem, ſo called from a high keep near the church, probably belonging to a caſtle of ſome of the noble family of Sackville early ſettled here. More inland we have Little Horkſley, where was a Cluniac priory, founded 1 Henry I. valued at £.277. 11ſ.[e] On the Stour Dedham, with a handſome and ſpacious church. At Clackton in Tendring hundred the biſhops of London had a palace and park long ſince loſt.

Little Horkſley.

Clackton.

The mouth of the river Stour is ſuppoſed by biſhop Gibſon to be the Arwe of the Saxon Chronicle, and the Arewe of Hoveden, where the Danes came up into Mercia 1016. It has been generally thought the Arrow in Warwickſhire, and unleſs we could ſubſtitute Mepɼc the Marſhland, for Mýncean Mercia, I do not ſee how the biſhop's conjecture can be ſupported. It muſt require a longer march than theſe pirates uſually made to get from Orwell mouth to the heart of the kingdom.

Harwich. Mr. Morant probably enough ſuppoſes the name of Harwich implies that the Saxons as the Romans before kept an army here to oppoſe the invaders. It may mean the ſtation of either the invading or the defending army. Part of a Roman camp and a tumulus ſtill remain here: and coins, bricks, and pavements, have been found. It is but a hamlet to Dover Court, a manor of the Veres, whoſe church was famous for its miraculous rood. The harbour of Harwich is both ſafe and capacious, provided with a convenient dock for men of war, which, till within the laſt century, uſed to lye in Coln water adjoining. The town is not large, but well peopled, fortified both by art and nature, and made more fencible by queen Elizabeth. From hence is the ſhorteſt and ſafeſt paſſage to Holland, and four packet boats are kept here. 7 Anne this place was fortified. The cliff, 50 feet high, compoſed of blueiſh clay and ſtone, yields great variety of foſſil ſhells and other petrifactions. The walls of the town are chiefly built, and the ſtreets paved with maſſes of this clay, which fall down and harden in the air. This has copperas ſtones ſticking in it; but the ſhells, which are of the bivalve and turbinate kind, lie in the ſtratum of ſtone and in layers of ſand and gravel nearer the ſurface. Over all is a covering of about two feet of common ſandy earth, in which are ſometimes to be ſeen veins of a white friable ſubſtance reſembling Iſinglaſs [Q. Talc] but more tender than that from Germany[f]. Dr. Grew produced to the Royal Society 1683, ſome cryſtals of talc, found at Dedham in deep wells of a blackiſh loam. The ſame are found on the cliffs at Walton in the Naſe in the ſame earth. The water purges on firſt opening the ground where they are found[g]. At Languard fort in the ſands are found little fruſta of amber, clear chryſtalline pebbles, the beſt to make counterfeit diamonds, and ſome ſmall ſparks of rubies. Capt. Silas Taylor gave ſome ſamples of each ſort to the Royal Society 1669[h]. From the ſide of Harwich cliff above the level of the ſea iſſues a ſpring of freſh water, but not petrifying as ſome have imagined[i]. King William III. conferred the title of marquis of Harwich on Frederic count Schomberg 1689. Benjamin Mildmay, eſq. was created viſcount Harwich 1733, as was William Hill earl of Hilſborough lord Harwich 1756.

Dover Court.

Landguard fort, oppoſite to this town, though now in Suffolk, ſeems to have ſtood antiently in this county, and is ſo placed in the office of Ordinance books. Orwell harbour ſeems to have extended as low as Walton, from which pariſh large tracts of land have been carried off by the ſea, together with a caſtle of the Bigods, probably of Roman origin, and the town of Orwell, formerly ſituate where are now the Weſt rocks, five miles out at ſea. This town gives title to the river Orwell, which probably run to the north of Landguard fort, which was built on the land

Landguard fort.

Orwell.

Walton.

[z] Newcourt. [a] I cannot find what led biſhop Gibſon to ſay it contained eight. [b] See Arch. V. 230, 231.
[c] Tan. 118. n. [d] Dugd. Bar. II. 301. [e] Tan. 125.
[f] Morant. I. 500. [g] Birch's Hiſt. of the Roy. Soc. IV. 238. [h] Mon. Brit.
[i] Morant, ib. The ſaltwater ſo ereeketh about the town that it almoſt inſulateth it; but thereby maketh the ſprings ſo brackiſh that there is a defect of freſh water which they fetch ſome good way off. Holland.

formed by the alteration of this river's courſe, Felixtow or Walton Caſtle being the extremity of Suffolk in the Roman times [k]. Sir Harbotle Grimſton, Maſter of the Rolls, was born at Bradfield 1594, died 1683. His daughter lady Luckyn's ſon Sir William ſucceeded to his eſtate and name, and was created viſcount Grimſton of Ireland 1712, and died 1756, as did his ſon James 1773, whoſe third ſon Harbotle is the third and preſent viſcount.

The river Stour was made navigable from Maningtree in this county to Sudbury in Suffolk 8 Anne. Mr. Camden paſſing to its ſource finds Bumſted, ſurnamed Helion from the barons of that family, who held it from Henry II. to 1449, when the laſt heir male died. He places Barklow, or Bartlow, in this county by miſtake, it being in Cambridgeſhire, and only the hills in Eſſex. Thoſe who make theſe hills memorials of the battle between Edmund Ironſide and the Danes, aware that Aſhdon church cannot be that built by Canute four years after, make it Bartlow church, in which they think themſelves authorized by the round ſteeple ſuppoſed to be the Daniſh ſtyle. But as well might we ſuppoſe the tower of Bromfield church near Chelmsford which is of this form a work of the Danes, who never appear to have been nearer this part of the county than Maldon. This further argument may be added to thoſe before-mentioned for removing the ſcene of this battle to a more proper place; and ſince tradition is for fixing ſome battle with the Danes here, it muſt be left to happier conjectures and bettter evidence. Holinſhed ſays they found in one ſtone coffin two bodies, one lying with the head towards the feet of the other [l]. We do not find the uſe of ſtone coffins among the northern nations in their pagan ſtate, and the Danes were not converted till long after this.

The town of Walden, incorporated by Edward VI. with a treaſurer, two chamberlains, and the commonalty [g], is pleaſantly ſituate on the eaſt ſlope of a hill, on whoſe top are the ſmall ruins of Magnaville's caſtle, built in the rude magnificence of that age, a ſolid maſs of flints and cement. On the green behind the caſtle is a ſingular work called the Maze conſiſting of a number of concentric circles with four outworks iſſuing from the four ſides, all cut in the chalk, ſuppoſed by Dr. Stukeley to be a Britiſh curſus or place of exerciſe for the ſoldiery. At the ſouth ſide of the town below the hill are two ſides of an oblong camp, called Peddle ditches, the banks and ditches extremely bold and well preſerved. The ſouth bank 730 feet long, 20 high, and 50 broad at the baſe, and ſix or eight on the top, the weſt 588 feet long.

Dr. Stukeley gives the following account of this town [m]. "It is the moſt beautiful ſituation I ever "beheld: a narrow tongue of land ſhoots itſelf out "like a promontory encompaſſed with a valley in "form of a horſe ſhoe incloſed by diſtant and moſt "delightful hills. On the bottom of the tongue "ſtand the ruins of a caſtle, on the tip or extre-"mity the church like St. Mary's at Cambridge. "Round the church on the ſide of the hill and in "the valley is the town built, ſo that the bottom of "the church is as high as the town, and ſeen above "the tops of the houſes. I could willingly enough "fancy this Camulodunum, perhaps Camulo-Camwallo-dun, whence very eaſily Walden, or from Camulus "the famous God of the Celts, who might have a "temple here where now ſtands the church, and "where the temple of Claudius might have ſtood "upon certainly one of the moſt noble and majeſtic "ſituations in the world, which, without much for-"tification, might have enabled the Romans to have "held out two days againſt the enraged Britans under "Boadicea: nor does it diſſuade my aſſent that there "are no Roman antiquities found hereabouts, becauſe "they were ſettled at this colony but a ſhort time, "nor any ſigns of walls and ditches, and that is ex-"preſsly mentioned by Tacitus. Might not the name "have ſome relation to the river Cam on which it "ſtands as the Camboritum down lower; and the "modern Cambridge, ſeeing in Ptolomy it is written "Camulodunum, if I remember right. Nothing ſtag-"gers my belief but Tacitus ſaying it was on the ſea, "which is applicable to no place ſo well as Malden. "However betwixt it and Audley inn park are two "ſides of a ſquare camp at right angles called "Paigle dikes."

To this Mr. Gale returned this anſwer, July 14, 1719.

"You miſſed Starberry hill, juſt above the London "road by Audley inn, and on it viſible remains of a "ſquare work, where the author of ſir T. Smith's "life, p. 130. ſays Roman coins have been found, "particularly a gold Claudius; and Holinſhed, p. 218 "mentions a great antique ſilver cup [n] found there. "The pleaſantneſs of the country ſuits Tacitus' de-"ſcription of Camulodunum. The diſtance from Cano-"nium Antonini (Canfield) its ſituation on the road "to Villa Fauſtini (St. Edmund's Bury) perſuade me "to fix Camulodunum hereabouts, not at Walden, "becauſe no antiquities have been found there. "Galgacus deſcribes it as an open town, and Tacitus "in Agricola the ſame: the colony itſelf unwalled, "and the country around full of forts, as Sterberry, "Littlebury, Great and Little Cheſterford, at the "paſſage of the river Shady and Caſtle Camps, the "five laſt towards the Iceni muſt be previouſly forced. "I derive it from Cam Gwlad dun, q. d. Civitas re-"gionis vel provinciæ Camenſis. Tacitus' appari-"tions in the eſtuary of the Thames forebode the "deſtruction of London ſituate on it. To account "for two Roman towns ſo near one another as Wal-"den and Cheſterford I ſuppoſed Camulodunum "being deſtroyed by Boadicea was removed lower "down the river. An undated inſcription in Gru-"ter cut later than Nero mentions this ſecond Ca-"mulodunum, and it exiſted in Antonine's Itinerary. "Barklow hills may as well be Roman as Daniſh, "and two of them being formerly opened, ſome "ſtone cheſts with bones were taken up, which "was ſometimes a Roman mode of ſepulture. Mr. "Thomſon of Trumpington, has a great many "vaſes, ſome of metal curiouſly caſt, and others of "various earths, all found between his town of re-"ſidence, and Cambridge. Lord Harley offered him "£. 30. for them and was refuſed [o]."

In the beautiful light church are monuments of the lord chancellor Audley who built the chancel, and of John Lech vicar 1489, who is ſaid to have built the church. Here is alſo preſerved very freſh the atchievement of Frances the memorable counteſs of Eſſex and Somerſet [p]. In the church of the priory founded 1136, valued at £. 406. 15*s*. 11*d*. [q] were buried Geoffrey ſon of the founder, Humphry de [k] Morant, 502.

[l] Chron. B. VII. c. 8. Morant, II. 539.
[g] Of 20 ounces weight. Deſcription of England II. c. 14.
[p] Walp. Cat. of Engr. p. 101, n.
[m] Letter to Roger Gale, eſq. July 12, 1779. Gale's Letters, p. 112.
[o] Gale's Letters, ubi ſup.
[q] Tanner, 127.

Bohun 5th earl of Eſſex, his ſon Humphry the 6th earl's wife with three of her ſons and a daughter, alſo the wife of John 7th earl, Humphry 9th earl and his wife; and Humphry ſon of Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, and his wife; and in the chapter-houſe the hearts of the founder's ſecond ſon, of William 4th earl, and the body of Beatrix de Say, the founder's ſiſter[r].

All theſe noble remains, with their reſting place, gave way to the magnificent pile erected by Thomas Howard earl of Suffolk, grandſon to lord chancellor Audley, to whom Henry VIII. had granted the ſite, and large poſſeſſions thereof. From him his grandſon gave his houſe the name of Audley Inn. It is ſaid to have coſt £. 190,000. the model alone made in Italy coſt £. 500. It conſiſted of two courts; but was intirely taken down about 60 years ago by Henry earl of Suffolk and Bindon, except the hall which formed the center of the two courts, and is now the ſeat of ſir John Griffin Griffin, who has rebuilt the ſtone bridge on the high road to Walden on the original plan of the laſt century. Mr. Winſtanley, who lived at Littlebury in the neighbourhood, had the good fortune to tranſmit to poſterity in plates taken and engraved by him this ſpacious monument of the magnificence of the nobility of the 16th century juſt before it was taken down[s]. Sir Thomas Smith ſecretary of ſtate to Edward VI. and Elizabeth, was born at Walden 1512, died 1577.

Audley inn.

Saffron. Saffron is ſaid to have been firſt brought into England in Edward IIId's reign, and that which grows in this and the adjoining county of Cambridge is accounted the beſt in the world. The fitteſt ſoil for it is the dry brown mould that covers chalk. The ground is ploughed in cloſe deep furrows in April, and, after being well dunged, next month the ploughing is repeated, and again a third time about Midſummer, a broad furrow or trench being left between every pole in breadth. The roots are planted in July three inches aſunder in trenches. The plantation laſts but three years. An acre may produce at a medium 2lb. of dried ſaffron the firſt year, and 24lb. the two others. About 5lb. of wet ſaffron go to 1lb. of dry[t].

Newport. At Newport was an hoſpital founded by Richard de Newport t. John, valued at £. 23. 10*s.* 8*d.*[u]

Shortgrove. Shortgrove in this pariſh is the ſeat of the earl of Thomond, who enlarged the houſe built by Mr. Dent, 1684.[x]

CAMBORITUM. Chesterford. Later Antiquaries have agreed to place CAMBORITUM of Antoninus at Cheſterford[y], where the foundations of the walls, incloſing about 50 acres, were till very lately viſible all round, of an oblong form[z]. The Roman bricks here are pale, ſixteen inches and a half by eleven, and one and a half thick: theſe dimenſions are leſs than thoſe at Colcheſter. Roman coins of the early as well as the later emperors have been found here; and, 1769, in digging down the walls to mend the road a large parcel of very fine ones was found in a pot. Here have been alſo found a bronze buſt, fibulæ, and other braſs utenſils, ſeveral gold inſtruments reſembling a fetterlock or ſtaple; one weight 8lb. was found under a thick rude piece of bronze about ſeven years by a miller who immediately ſold it. About 60 years ago many urns and intire ſkeletons were dug up, and a ſmall urn of red earth containing ſeveral written ſcrolls of parchment but diſperſed before any account or explanation could be obtained. The inſtruments Pl. I. fig. 13, 14, 15, 16. and the inſcription fig. 17. lightly hatched on a brick were in the hands of Mr. Shepherd a farmer near the church who had a large collection of coins, &c. found here. A ſtone trough, the only one of the kind perhaps in England diſcovered here, and ſometime uſed for water at a ſmith's forge, was in the hands of the late Dr. Gower of Chelmsford, who ſuppoſed it a receptacle of aſhes of the kind called by Montfaucon and others Quietorium. It is a half octagon with a flat back, about three feet long, and about a foot or eighteen inches deep. In four compartments are reliefs of human figures down to the waiſt in tolerable preſervation. That in the middle which ſeems older than the others has nothing in its hands: that to the right holds a kind of patera with a handle; one to the left in a paludamentum has a ſingular weapon like a trident with a bar acroſs the top, or perhaps a vexillum, the other but half a figure holds a ſpear. Theſe may repreſent one perſon in different characters, or a family[a]. Beſides the large camp or city a ſmaller may be traced by the church. The name of Burrough field comprehends the adjacent grounds, particularly all between the great camp and the river, in which is ſuppoſed to have been an amphitheatre, the corn growing thin in a circle of eight yards wide, including a ſpace of 100 yards diameter. Another camp, half a mile from the great one, is called Hingeſton barrows; a fourth on the Ickleton and Duxford ſide of the river; a 5th probably in Burton wood two miles off. Ringhill oppoſite to Audley inn makes a 6th. The ruined hunting tower in this camp was a warren houſe or belvedere to Audley inn. The many Roman roads that ſtill retain their name or ridge about this antient ſtation deſerve to be accurately traced. "Juſt "by Cheſterford are Ickleton and Streethall. The great "road runs between them by its walls. Icknall or "Icknild ſtreet parts the county of Eſſex, Herts, and "Cambridge, all the way, and at Royſton is croſſed "by the Ermine ſtreet. Another Roman road runs "from Ickleton towards Newmarket; it is the Lon-"don road almoſt as far as Hogmagog hills, upon an "eminence a little beyond which it is croſſed the "ditch called Fleamſdike, where is a ſmall ſquare "fort, and in the middle thereof ruins of a building. "It may have been a Caſtrum Exploratorum."

See it Pl. fig. 18.

[r] Hiſt. of Walden abbey in the Monaſticon. I. 445.
At Trinity College, Oxford, is preſerved an Exemplification of all the Property belonging to the Abbey of Walden, moſt amply and curiouſly written in ſeveral ſkins of vellom, tranſmitted by the Duke of Norfolk in 1561, to the ſaid college, which has ſome of the eſtates of that monaſtery, by the donation of ſir Thomas Pope. And in the Burſary of the ſame college, are many antient original charters of the abbey of Walden.

[s] The baluſtrades on the two ſides of the firſt court expreſſed in Roman capitals the motto of the Garter and that of the founder.
Prudentis eſt in conciliis fortunam ſemper habere.
So at Trentham hall, c. Stafford, the balluſtrades of the firſt court had Carolo Britanniæ Regi Richardus Leveſon eques balnei ædes haſce hic fieri voluit.

[t] Ray's Hiſt. Plant. Phil. Tranſ. 138. 380. 404. [u] Tan. 133.

[x] Salmon, 112. Mr. Walpole ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries a golden bracelet quite perfect and bright found 1761 in a meadow belonging to the earl of Thomond here. It was compoſed of chain work, the locket part of red enamel or glaſs ornamented with gold, and rivetted by a ſmall gold pin ſo as not to be opened. On different but not oppoſite ſides were two ſmall rings. As Shortgrove is but two miles from Audley inn, it probably belonged to ſome of the Suffolk family or their royal viſitors. Such bracelets are ſaid to be worn in Turkey.

[y] Hortley, Stukeley. [z] Near Cheſterford river, Eſſex, on the border of Cambridgſhire, a camp. Aubrey Mon. Brit.

[a] This trough is wretchedly engraved in Horſley Brit. Rom. Eſſex.

"A little eaſt of Wandlebury, or Hogmagog hills, "is plainly to be ſeen the Roman road to Grandcheſter "an elevated ridge for 200 yards together ſtrait to the "river above Cambridge, the other courſe of it to "Colcheſter; two barrows cloſe by it[b]." It is pleaſant to ſee how Dr. Gale in his Comment on the Itinerary, p. 111, confounds things hereabouts. He calls Ring hill Sterbury hill, a name I believe never heard of thereabouts; he adds the Saxons called it Waldenburgh; another name unknown. In this inconſiderable place he fixes CAMVLODVNVM, and its Caſtella at Caſtle and Shady Camps[c], deriving the laſt ſurname from Sidius Geta an officer under Claudius, whoſe name however was Hoſidius[d]. In all this biſhop Gibſon implicitly follows him.

The church of Littlebury ſtands within a ſmall camp.

The family of Clavering ended t. Edward III. The keep and moat of their caſtle remain at Clavering; as are at Stanſted Montfichet thoſe of another built by Robert Gernon a Norman, who came over with the Conqueror, and probably formed it out of an older, if not a Roman one, as the name of the place and its ſituation on the Stane Street, or cauſeway from Stortford to Colcheſter, imply. Robert's ſon William took the name of Monte fixo or Montfitchet, but Robert muſt be reckoned to make Mr. Camden's five deſcents. A label of three points Az. is added to their arms by ſome.

Near Clavering at Berden was a priory of Auſtin cannons founded t. Henry III. valued at £. 29. 6s. 4d.[e] Here was born 1586, the learned Joſeph Mede, who died 1638.

What Mr. Camden calls Haſtingbury is now Great Hallingbury, called alſo Hallingbury Morley from the lords of that name, deſcended from an antient family of Morley in Norfolk barons t. Edward I.[f] The title paſſed by marriage to the Lovels and Parkers; one of the laſt united to it that of Montegle, and to him was ſent the letter that diſcovered the Powder Plot. He, his ſon, and grandſon were buried here. The eſtate belongs now by purchaſe to the Houblons.

Walbury, which gives name to a manor in this pariſh, and was antiently termed Walla, perhaps from Villa (as earthworks in many parts of the kingdom are ſtill called The Walls), is an irregular oval[g] camp on a ſteep hill, incloſing about 30 acres, with a bold double bank, and on the north ſome additional work on the brow of the hill. A road enters it on the eaſt ſide, but does not appear to have been continued to the weſt, where the Stort at the diſtance of two or three meads defends it. Here is however a gap in the inner vallum, and the ditch is filled up on this ſide, but the outer bank is very ſteep. Another road croſſes it from north to ſouth, which may lead to Pleſhey, and a ſeries of ſtations beyond it. Juſt within the weſt bank ſtands a farm-houſe of the ſame name; the ſouth part of which, particularly the cellar, is built of rough work ſtrongly cemented together, with ſome Gothic arches; but no Roman brick intermixed. The area was a rabbit warren till ploughed up about 60 years ago. It is now divided into ſeveral fields, and rented by one farmer of Mr. Houblon. Mr. Salmon, who fancies this place the Alauna of Ravennas, did not reflect that that writer was deſcribing the ſouth coaſt of Britain, and that all his ſtations anſwer to places in Devon and Dorſet: accordingly Baxter places it at Woodbury hill in the latter county. Mr. Morant totally omits this conjecture. Walbury.

Robert earl of Eſſex came to an untimely end by the intrigue of his wife with ſir Robert Carr, whom ſhe married after her divorce from the earl of Eſſex, who died not without ſuſpicion of poiſon 1646, and his family retained only the title of Hereford[h]. Charles II. conferred the title of viſcount Malden and earl of Eſſex 1661 on Arthur Capel who came to an unfair and untimely end in the Tower 1683. His ſon Algernon ſucceeding and dying 1709-10, was ſucceeded by his ſon William, and he in 1742-3 by his ſon William Anne Holles, the 4th and preſent earl. Earls of Eſſex.

In this county are 415 pariſhes.

[b] Stukeley's Letter to Gale ubi ſub.
[c] Q. If the true name be not Comps.
[d] See Dio. lx. c. 20. & n. Reimar.
[e] Tanner, 133.
[f] Dugd. Bar. II. 26. 307.
[g] Morant makes it ſexangular.
[h] Dugd. Bar. II. 182.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Eſſex.

Acorus Calamus. The ſweet-ſmelling Flag or Calamus; in the Gravel-pit-pond oppoſite Harts, Woodford Row; in a pond in a lane leading from the Ongar road to Chigwell Row, and elſewhere.

Actea ſpicata. Herb Chriſtopher or Baneberries; in a thick wood two miles from Thorndon.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel, or Muſkwood Crowfoot; under hedges in a field leading from Woodſtreet to Chapel End, Walthamſtow.

Agaricus aurantius. Little Orange coloured Agaric; in a field at Walthamſtow.

——— campanulatus. Bell Agaric; in hedges at Walthamſtow.

——— Chanterellus. Yellow Agaric, or Chanterelle; ——— integer. Equal-gilled Agaric; } in the woody part of Epping foreſt near Walthamſtow.

——— lateralis. Short-ſtalked Agaric; on trunks of felled trees in Clayſtreet, Walthamſtow.

——— verrucoſus. Warty Agaric; in the woody part of Epping foreſt.

——— umbelliferus. Little delicate Umbrella, or Wood Agaric; on dead ſticks in hedges at Walthamſtow.

Aliſma Damaſonium. Star-headed Water-Plantain; in a pond at the town's end at Rumford towards London, in a pond near Ilford, and in many ponds on Epping foreſt, near Walthamſtow.

Allium oleraceum. Wild Garlick, with an herbaceous ſtriated flower; in a cornfield called Weſtfield belonging to Black Notley hall, adjoining to Leez lane, plentifully.

——— urſinum. Ramſons; in a wood near the lane leading from Walthamſtow to Chingford and on The Hawk's-eye hill on Epping foreſt.

——— vineale. Crow Garlick; in the marſh, near the foot path leading from Walthamſtow to Lea bridge.

Alopecurus ariſtatus Monſpelienſis. Bearded Fox-tail graſs; in moiſt ditches near the river Thames.

——— ariſtatus β paniceus. Bearded Dog-tail graſs; over againſt the mill at Purfleet, towards Raynham, on the other ſide the great ditch.

——— ventricoſus. Red Bent graſs; in the corn fields about Thorndon.

Anethum Foeniculum. Finckle or Fennel; on the ſhore of the Thames, in the chalkpit at Purfleet, and on the bank between Harwich and the Cliff.

Antirrhinum orontium. The Leaſt Snapdragon, or Calf's Snout; in cornfields of a ſandy ſoil; at Woodford.

Apium graveolens. Smallage; in the marſhes below Eaſtham and Plaiſtow, plentifully.

Arenaria peploides. Sea Chickweed; on the ſandy ſhores at Harwich.

Arenaria rubra γ marina. Sea Spurrey; in the ſalt marſhes at Harwich.

Ariſtolochia Clematitis. Climbing Birthwort; in a wood two miles from Thorndon.

Artemiſia maritima α & β. Engliſh Sea Wormwood, and a variety of it; on the marſh bank on the weſt ſide of Harwich.

——— maritima δ. French Sea Wormwood; on ſea ſhores: in Merſey Iſland and about Harwich.

Arundo arenaria. Sea Reed-Graſs, Engliſh Sea Matweed, Martram, or Helm; on the ſandy banks by the ſea at Harwich.

Aſparagus officinalis. Sparagus or Sperage; in meadows and on rocks: about Harwich.

Aſperugo procumbens. Small wild Bugloſs, Great Gooſe-graſs, or German Madwort; on rich rubbiſh: at Purfleet.

Aſperula odorata. Woodroof; in ſhady parts of Epping foreſt near Woodford.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Common black Maidenhair; on the buttreſſes on the north ſide of Loughton church.

——— Ceterach. Spleenwort or Miltwaſt; on an old tomb in Eaſt Horndon churchyard.

Aſplenium Ruta muraria. White Maidenhair, Wall-rue or Tentwort; on Widford bridge near Chelmsford, and on the eaſt wall of the Foreſt houſe garden near Leighton.

——— Scolopendrium. Hart's tongue; in lanes at Chipping Ongar, againſt the North ſide of Loughton church, and elſewhere.

——— Trichomanes. Engliſh black Maidenhair; in a ſhady lane between Ongar and Kelvedon, on a wall in Wood ſtreet near Whips Croſs, Walthamſtow, and on a wall in a garden at Low Leyton.

Aſter Tripolium. Sea Starwort; in the marſh ditches at Harwich, plentifully.

Aſtragalus Glyciphyllos. Wild Liquorice, or Liquorice Vetch; in the cornfield between the wood and the Thames at Purfleet.

Atriplex laciniata. Jagged Sea Orache; on the ſandy ſhores in Merſey Iſland, in Little Holland, between the town of Harwich and the Cliff and elſewhere.

——— portulacoides. Common Sea Purſlane; on the marſh banks at Harwich, plentifully.

——— ſerrata. Indented Sea Orache; by the river and on the banks of the marſhes at Maldon, plentifully, and on the ſea banks on the weſt ſide of Harwich.

Berberis vulgaris. Berberry or Pipperidge buſh; in woods and hedges: at Littlebury, Saffron Walden, and elſewhere.

Beta maritima. Sea Beet; in the ſea marſhes on the weſt of Harwich, plentifully.

Betula alba. The Birch tree; on Epping foreſt between Highbeech and Golder's hill, in the pariſh of Loughton.

Betula Alnus. The Alder tree; on the banks of the river Rhodon between Chigwell and Loughton, plentifully, and elſewhere.

Boletus albus. White Boletus; on ſtumps of trees, ——— coriaceus. Tough Boletus; on trees,
} about Walthamſtow.

——— hepaticus. Liver Boletus; on trunks of trees: about Walthamſtow, and elſewhere, on Fairlop, in Henault foreſt.

——— ſquamoſus. Scaly Boletus; on Elm trees,
——— villoſus. Hairy or Spongy Boletus; on Apple and other trees,
} about Walthamſtow, and elſewhere.

Braſſica campeſtris. Field Cabbage; in corn fields and cliffs of rocks near Harwich.

Briza media. Middle Quaking graſs. Cowquakes or Ladies-hair; in fields, meadows, and paſtures; Bromus giganteus. Tall Brome-graſs; in moiſt woods and hedges;
——— nemoralis. Wood Brome-graſs; in woods and hedges:
Bryum pellucidum. Pellucid Bryum; in marſhes and wet ſhady places;
} at Walthamſtow.

——— ſerpyllum ζ undulatum. A variety of Thyme-leaved Bryum; in moiſt woods and heaths: at Lambourn parſonage, and elſewhere.

Bunias Cakile. Sea Rocket; on the ſhore in Canvey Iſland, and between the town of Harwich and the Cliff.

Bupleurum rotundifolium. Throw-wax; among the corn at Notley, and elſewhere.

——— tenuiſſimum. The leaſt Hare's ear; by the road ſide near Thorndon, and in the marſhes by the river ſide at Maldon, plentifully.

Butomus umbellatus. The flowering Ruſh, or Water Gladiole; in many parts of the river Rhodon, and elſewhere.

Campanula hybrida. The Leſſer Venus-Looking-Glaſs, or codded Corn-Violet; in a corn field between Ribton lane and Woodford Bridge, and between the Thames and the Wood at Purfleet.

——— glomerata. Little or leſſer Throatwort or Canterbury Bells; in a field near Muncombe near Woodford.

Cardamine amara. Bitter Creſſes, or Ladies-ſmock; in moiſt meadows and paſtures; at Braintree.

Carduus nutans. Muſk Thiſtle; in the chalkpits at Purfleet.

Carex arenaria. Sea Carex; on the ſandy ſhores at Harwich.

——— diſtans. Looſe Carex; in a meadow at Panfield and by Machin's mill at Witham.

——— diviſa. Marſh Carex; in the meadows near the Hithe at Colcheſter.

——— pendula. Pendulous Carex; in moiſt woods and hedges: at Braintree and in the ditches in Walthamſtow marſh near Lea-bridge.

——— pulicaris. Flea Carex; in a ditch near Chapel End, Walthamſtow.

——— ſtrigoſa. Looſe Carex; in a lane at Black Notley.

——— veſicaria. Greater Bladder Carex; in the marſh-ditches near Lea-bridge.

Carex veſicaria β. A variety of the laſt; in the river near the Redbridge.

Centaurea Calcitrapa. Star Thiſtle; by the wayſide in the marſhes below Plaiſtow and Eaſtham, and elſewhere.

Chara tomentoſa. Brittle Chara; on a bog near Smith's Hall, Blakemoor.

Chelidonium Glaucium. Yellow horned Poppy; on ſandy ſea ſhores: at Landguard fort and Harwich.

Chenopodium hybridum. Maple-leaved Blite; on rich rubbiſh, on dunghills, and in corn fields: at Colcheſter and Woodford.

——— maritimum. Sea Blite or White Glaſs-wort; on ſea ſhores: at Harwich.

——— murale β. A variety of Common Gooſe-foot or Sowbane; on dunghills and rubbiſh: at Bocking.

Clavaria digitata. Fingered Clavaria; at the bottom of a poſt in Woodſtreet, and elſewhere at Walthamſtow.

——— Hypoxylon. Flat-horned Clavaria; a curious variety was found on an Elm log in a cellar at Waltham Abbey.

——— piſtillaris. Simple Clavaria; in woods and on heaths; at Bocking.

Clematis Vitalba. Great Wild Climber, Traveller's Joy or Bethwyne; in hedges and woody places.

Clinopodium vulgare. Great Wild Baſil; under hedges overgrown with brambles at Woodford.

Cochlearia Anglica. Engliſh or Common Sea Scurvy-graſs; in the marſhes near Maldon and Harwich.

Cochlearia Danica. Daniſh Scurvy-graſs; on a bank by the ſea-ſide about two miles from Manningtree.

Conferva bulloſa. Silken Wrack; ——— littoralis. Green hairy Sea Weed;
} in the marſh ditches near Harwich.

——— rupeſtris. Fine Green hairy Sea Weed; on the ſtones before Harwich Cliff.

——— ſetacea. Setaceous Conferva; upon the ſhores which are overflowed by the tide near Harwich.

Convallaria majalis. Lily Convally, or May Lily; on Epping Foreſt near The King's Oak oppoſite Highbeech.

Crambe maritima. Sea Colewort; on the ſandy ſhore between the town of Harwich and the Cliff.

Crataegus Oxycantha. Hawthorn or White Thorn; a variety of this without thorns and with a large leaf, found in a hedge, by the ſide of the Rhodon between Wray-houſe and Luxborough-houſe.

——— torminalis. The common wild Service-tree or Sorb; in woods and hedges.

Crepis foetida. Stinking Hawkweed; in a field called Stanfield belonging to Black Notley Hall.

Crocus ſativus. Saffron; planted and cultivated at Walden, plentifully, thence called Saffron Walden.

Cuſcuta Europæa. Dodder Hell-weed, or Devil's Gut; on Epping Foreſt near Snareſbrook pond, and near Walthamſtow windmill climbing about the Erica vulgaris, &c.

Cynogloſſum officinale β. A variety of Hound's tongue with green leaves; on rubbiſh and on wayſides; frequent.

Datura Stramonium. Thorn Apple; on dunghills and rich ſoils near Woodford.

Dianthus Armeria. Deptford Pink; in the upper end of Snake's lane, Woodford, in a field between the end of Horn lane and Woodford bridge, and in the lane leading from Chingford Hatch to Fryday hill.

Dipſacus piloſus. Sheperds Rod or Small wild Teaſel; in the lane leading from Fryday hill houſe to Chingford Church and elſewhere.

Droſera rotundifolia. Roſa ſolis, or Round-leaved Sun-dew; on a boggy part of Epping Foreſt, a little way in the wood oppoſite the Bald-faced Stag, and on a bog on the right hand of the road from Leytonſtone to Snareſbrook.

Epilobium anguſtifolium. Roſebay Willow-herb; in a meadow near the river Rhodon not far from Luxborough houſe near Chigwell.

Erica cinerea. Fine leaved heath;
—— Tetralix. Croſs leaved heath;
} on Epping Foreſt, near Snareſbrook pond, and elſewhere.

Erigeron acre. Blue-flowered Fleabane; in a field near Warley Common.

Eryngium maritimum. Common Eryngo, or Sea Holly; on ſandy ſea ſhores.

Eupatorium Cannabinum. Common Hemp Agrimony or Dutch Agrimony; on the ſides of the river Rhodon.

Euphorbia exigua. Small annual Spurge; in corn-fields: between the lower end of Ribton lane and Woodford bridge, and elſewhere.

—— paralias. Sea Spurge; on the ſandy ſhores between the town of Harwich and the Cliff.

—— platyphyllos. Broad-leaved Spurge; in corn fields: at Black Notley, and in fields between Woodford row and Woodford bridge.

Euphorbia verrucoſa. Rough fruited Spurge; in corn-fields.

Fagus Caſtanea. The Cheſnut Tree; in Stour Wood near Harwich.

Fontinalis antepyretica. Greater Water Moſs; on rotten wood in a pond at Walthamſtow.

Frankenia laevis. Smooth Sea Heath; in ſea marſhes of a clay ſoil; frequent.

Fucus cartilagineus. Scarlet Fucus; on rocks and ſtones: in Canvey Iſland, and in Maldon river overagainſt Tolleſbury.

—— ceranoides. Buck's-horn Fucus; caſt up by the ſea
—— digitatus. Sea-Girdle, or Hangers; on the ſhore
—— faſtigiatus. Forked Fucus; on the ſandy ſhores
—— Filum. Sea Laces; near the dock gates of the King's Yard
—— furcellatus. Long-forked Fucus; on the ſandy ſhores
—— loreus. Sea-Thongs; on ſtones below the Cliff —— nodoſus. Knotted Fucus; on ſtones before the Cliff, frequent —— pinnatifidus. Jagged Fucus; on ſea rocks and ſtones;
—— plicatus. Matted Fucus; on the ſandy ſhores
} at Harwich.

Fucus ſaccharinus. Sea Belts; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones
—— ſerratus. Sea Wrack; on the ſtones before the Cliff
—— ſiliquoſus. Podded Fucus; upon the ſtones before the Cliff
} at Harwich.

—— ſpiralis. Twiſted Fucus; on the ſhore, frequent.

—— tomentoſus. Wooly Fucus; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones —— veſiculoſus. Sea Oak; on ſea rocks and ſtones; floating in the Thames, and
} at Harwich.

Fumaria claviculata. Climbing Fumitory; in a wood called Little Shrubbuſh at Snaresbrook near Wanſtead, plentifully.

Galeopſis Tetrahit δ. Fair-flowered Nettle Hemp, or Hemp-leaved Dead Nettle with a parti-coloured flower; in a corn field at the bottom of Ribton-lane near Woodford.

Geniſta tinctorea. Woodwaxen, Dyer's-weed, or Green-wood; in meadows and fields about Woodford.

Gentiana Centaureum. Leſſer Centaury; in dry barren paſture land about Woodford.

Geranium molle β. Small flowered Dove's foot Crane's bill; on a bank near Low Leyton.

—— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Crane's bill; on walls, roofs, and paſtures of a ſandy ſoil: near Temple Mills near Layton.

Geum rivale. Water Avens; in a bog about a mile from Sudbury.

Glaux maritima. Sea Milkwort or Black Saltwort; in the ſalt marſhes at Harwich.

Gnaphalium Gallicum. Corn Cudweed; among corn in ſandy grounds about Caſtle Heningham.

—— margaritaceum. American Cudweed; in a meadow near Bocking.

Hedyſarum Onobrychis. Medick Vetchling, Cock's head or St. Foin; in meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil, at Purfleet, and in a field near Muncombe near Woodford.

Helleborus foetidus. Great Baſtard black Hellebore, Bear's-foot, or Setterwort; in meadows, woody places, and hedges: oppoſite a farm houſe at Muncombe near Woodford, and in a lane near High Laver church.

Hieracium umbellatum. Narrow-leaved buſhy Hawkweed; on Epping Foreſt near the ſouth ſide of Snaresbrook pond.

Hippophae Rhamnoides. Sallow Thorn or Sea Buckthorn; on ſandy ſea ſhores; near Canvey Iſland.

Hordium marinum. Marſh Rie-graſs; on the marſh banks at Harwich, plentifully.

Hydrocharis Morſus Ranæ. Frogbit; in the marſh ditches near Lea bridge, near Walthamſtow.

Hyoſeris minima. Small Swines Succory; in Mark's houſe common field at Walthamſtow.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan or Parkleaves; in Sake's lane Woodford, and in the woody part of Epping foreſt.

—— elodes. Marſh St. Peter's Wort; on Epping foreſt.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſs, or Leſſer Sheperd's Purſe; in a gravel pit about half a mile on the left hand from Great Ilford.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in many marſhy grounds.

Inula

Inula crithmoides. Golden Sampire; on the bank of the river juſt above Fulbridge at Malden.

Iris foeditiſſimus. Stinking Gladdon or Gladwyn; in woods and hedges: at Black Notley, Walthamſtow, Purfleet, and elſewhere.

Jaſione montana. Hairy Sheep's Scabious; in Higham Hill common field, at Walthamſtow.

Juncus acutus β. A variety of Sea hard Ruſh; in the marſhy grounds about Maldon, plentifully.

Juniperus communis. Common Juniper; on Epping Foreſt between Waltham Abby and Epping.

Lathyrus hirſutus. Rough-codded Chickling Vetch; among brambles at Hockerel, in the fields about Hockley and Raleigh, and elſewhere.

——— Niſſolia. Crimſon Graſs Vetch; near a well in Higham hill common field, Walthamſtow, near Milkwell field between the end of Hornlane and Woodford bridge road, in a field near Chingford church, and elſewhere.

Lepidium latifolium. Dittander or Pepperwort; in the marſhes near Grays, on the cauſey leading to the Hithe bridge at Colcheſter, by the water-ſide at Heybridge near Maldon, plentifully, and at the lime-kiln near Fulbridge.

——— ruderale. Narrow-leaved Creſs or Dittander; on rubbiſh near the ſea: near South Benfleet, at Maldon, and on the weſt ſide of Harwich near the river.

Lichen pyxidatus ι cocciferis. Red Liverwort; — pyxidatus κ cornucopides. Radiated Liverwort; } on heaths, hilly paſtures, and in woods.

——— pyxidatus μ deformis. Serrated Liverwort; on heaths, hilly paſtures and woods: at Thorndon.

——— olivaceus. Olive Liverwort; on trees and pales about Walthamſtow, and elſewhere.

——— tartareus. Welſh Liverwort; on trees; — uncialis. Short Liverwort; } on Epping foreſt.

Linum catharticum. Purging or wild dwarf Flax or Mill-Mountain; on a bank near Muncombe near Woodford, and elſewhere.

——— Radiola. The leaſt Rupture-wort or All-ſeed; on a boggy ſoil on Epping foreſt, a little way in the wood oppoſite the Bald fac'd Stag.

Lithoſpermum officinale. Gromwel, Gromill, or Graymill; in the chalk-pits at Purfleet.

Lyſimachia tenella. Purple Moneywort; on wet heaths and meadows and on bogs: on Epping foreſt.

Medicago polymorpha arabica. Heart Trefoil or Claver; on the bank between the town of Harwich and the Cliff.

——— polymorpha β. The ſmalleſt Hedgehog Trefoil; on the ſandy ſhore at Harwich.

Mentha piperata. Pepper Mint; in the lane leading from Woodford to the Windmill.

——— Pulegium. Penny-royal or Pudding-graſs; in wet heaths and paſtures and on bogs; on Epping forceſt.

——— rotundifolia. Round-leaved Horſe-mint; by the road ſide between Thorndon and Canvey iſland, in a meadow adjoining to Faulkburn hall, and in a meadow behind the Alms-houſe at Great Yeldam.

——— rubra. Red Mint; in the Hop grounds at Bocking and by the road ſide between Bocking and Goſfield.

Mentha ſylveſtris. Long-leaved Horſe-mint; in marſhes and wet places: at Eaſt Horndon, and in a meadow behind the Alms-houſes at Great Yeldam.

——— ſylveſtris β. A variety of the laſt; on the river ſide a little above the Fulling Mill, and in a ditch near the Corn Mill at Bocking.

——— villoſa. Spear mint; in watry places, and on banks of rivers: about Bocking and by the ſide of a pond in a field two miles from Thorndon.

——— villoſa β. A variety of the laſt; in a meadow on the right hand of the way from the Fulling mill to Harries mill at Bocking.

——— villoſa γ. Another variety; in a meadow on the right hand at Bocking.

Menyanthes Nymphoides. The Leſſer yellow Water Lily, with a fringed flower; in the river Rhodon almoſt oppoſite the eight mile ſtone in the Woodford bridge road near the bridge, and between that and Luxborough-houſe. This was planted by Mr. Warner.

——— Trifoliata. Buck Bean or Marſh Trefoil; in a bog on Epping foreſt on the right hand of the road from Laytonſtone to Snareſbrook.

Mercurialis annua. French Mercury, the Male and Female; on rubbiſh and cultivated land about Woodford.

Myoſotis ſcorpoides β. A variety of Mouſe-ear Scorpion Graſs; by the road ſide from Ridgewell to Batham End.

Narciſſus Pſeudo-Narciſſus. Wild Engliſh Daffodil; in fields and orchards.

Nardus ſtricta. Mat Graſs; on Epping foreſt between Wanſtead and Walthamſtow.

Nepeta Cataria. Nep or Cat Mint; in paſtures and hedges of a chalky ſoil: in the chalk pits at Purfleet and near Abridge.

Nymphæa alba. White Water Lily; in the river Rhodon and in the caſtle ditch at Chipping Ongar.

——— lutea. Water Lily with a yellow flower; in the river Rhodon.

Oenanthe crocata. Hemlock Water Dropwort; on the banks of the river Thames near Plaiſtow, and of the river Rhodon near Luxborough-houſe near Chigwell.

——— pimpinelloides. Pimpernel Dropwort; in Bulvan fen.

Origanum Onites. Pot Marjoram; on the left hand of the road from Braintree to Raine beyond the bridge.

——— vulgare. Wild Marjoram; in the chalk pits at Purfleet plentifully, and in the fields under hedges, and in buſhy places at Woodford.

Ophioglоſſum vulgatum. Adder's tongue; in a field at Woodford.

Ophrys aranifera. Humble Bee Satyrion with green wings or Spider Ophrys; — anthropohora. Green Man Orchis. } in an old gravel-pit at Balington, and on the borders of ſome corn fields at Belchamp St. Paul towards Ovington.

——— Monorchis. Yellow Sweet or Muſk Orchis; in a field called Wairfield belonging to Black Notley hall.

——— muſcifera. Fly Orchis; in meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil.

——— Nidus Avis. Bird's neſt; found once on Epping ping foreſt near a gate of a wood called The Sale near Hale End, Walthamſtow.

——— ovata. Twayblade; on Epping foreſt between Woodford row and Chingford hatch and elſewhere near Woodford.

——— ſpiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; on Epping foreſt near the Bald fac'd Stag on the right hand of the road not far from the ten mile ſtone, and near a bog not far from Salter's Buildings, Walthamſtow.

Orchis bifolia. The Leſſer Butterfly Orchis; on Epping foreſt between Laytonſtone and Walthamſtow wind-mill, and in moiſt meadows about Woodford.

——— latifolia. Male handed Orchis or Male handed Satyrion Royal; in moiſt meadows and on boggy ground about Woodford.

——— pyramidalis. Purple late-flowering Orchis; at the chalk pits at Purfleet.

Orobanche major. Broom-rape; on roots of the Common Broom in Hale-brinks near Walthamſtow and on Epping foreſt and elſewhere.

Oſmunda Spicant. Rough Spleenwort; in a little running ſtream between Woodford and Woodford-bridge, and in a lane near Warley Common.

Oxalis Acetoſella. Wood Sorrel; in woody parts of Epping foreſt.

Papaver dubium. Long ſmooth-headed Poppy in cornfields: at Bocking.

Pellitoria officinalis. Pellitory of the Wall; on a wall belonging to Tony hall in Shernal-ſtreet, Walthamſtow, on the town wall at Harwich, and elſewhere.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, True Love or One-berry; in woods and ſhady places: in a little wood called Lampit Grove belonging to Black Notley hall, in Chalkney wood, ſeven miles from Colcheſter, and at Saffron Walden.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; in woods and ſhady places: between High and Chipping Ongar, and in a marſhy meadow at Chipping Ongar.

Paſtinaca ſativa. Wild Parſnip; near the river Lea by Lea bridge near Walthamſtow, and in the chalk-pits at Purfleet.

Pedicularis paluſtris. Great Marſh Red Rattled Coxcomb or Louſewort; in marſhes and moiſt meadows at Woodford.

Peplis Portulaca. Water Purſlane; in marſhy and wet places: on Epping foreſt.

Peucedanum officinale. Hogs Fennel, Sulphurwort or Hareſtrong; in the marſh ditches at Walton not far from Harwich, and in a wood belonging to Walton at the Naſe.

Peziza Cyathoides. Smooth Peziza; on rotten wood: at Walthamſtow.

——— lentifera. Seeding Cup Muſhroom; in woods, fields, and on garden borders and rotten wood: at Braintree.

——— ſcutellata. Hairy Peziza; on cow dung at Walthamſtow.

Phellandrium aquaticum. Water Hemlock; in the river Rhoden and elſewhere.

Plantago maritima β lœflingia. Sea Plantain; on the ſides of the marſh banks at Harwich, plentifully.

Poa maritima. Sea Meadow graſs; in the ſea marſhes at Harwich.

Polygonum amphibium. Perennial Willow-leaved Arſmart; on the banks of ditches and rivers often floating on their waters, ſometimes in dry fields about Woodford.

Polypodium aculeatum. Prickly Auriculate Male Fern or Female Polypody; in woods and ſhady places: about Black Notley, Braintree, Woodford and elſewhere, common.

——— aculeatum β. A variety of the laſt; in woods and ſhady places: at Black Notley.

——— criſtatum. Great branched Fern with indented leaves or creſted Polypody; in moiſt woods and ſhady places: about Black Notley, Braintree, and near Woodford.

——— Filix fœmina. Male Fern with thin-ſet deeply-indented leaves, or Female Polypody; in marſhy and ſhady places: at Black Notley and Braintree.

——— Filix mas. Common Male Fern; in woods, heaths, and ſtony places: about Black Notley, Braintree, Woodford, and elſewhere.

——— fragile. Fine-cut Stone Fern with ſlender and brittle ſtalks, or Brittle Polypody; on a wall in the lane leading from the Lea-bridge road to Leyton church.

Potamogeton pectinatum. Fine Fennel-leaved Pondweed; ——— perfoliatum. Perfoliated Pondweed; } in the river Rhodon.

Potentilla reptans β. Creeping Tormentil; in ſome paſtures at Braintree.

Poterium Sanguiſorba. Burnet; in a field at Purfleet, and in Royden church-yard.

Primula vulgaris β. Great Cowſlips or Oxlips; in a field leading from Woodſtreet to Chapel End, Walthamſtow, and in a field leading from Lamborn parſonage to the church, and elſewhere.

Prunus communis inſititia β. A variety of the Bullace-tree; in ſome hedges.

——— Padus. Wild Cluſter Cherry or Bird Cherry; in the lane leading to Temple Mills near Leyton, and between the London road and Weſtham abby turning off near the three mile ſtone.

Quercus Robur. The Oak-tree; a variety with acorns on ſhort footſtalks on Epping foreſt between the Bald fac'd Stag and Muncombe.

Ranunculus parviflorus. Small-flowered Crowfoot; in a lane leading from Clayſtreet to Higham-hill field, and in Shernal-ſtreet under the wall belonging to Tony hall at Walthamſtow.

Reſeda lutea β. A variety of Baſe Rocket; in Broad Oaks meadows near Thaxted.

Rhamnus catharticus. Buckthorn or Common Purging Thorn; in a hedge by the ſide of the river Rhodon not far from Luxborough houſe near Chigwell, in Hagger-lane, Walthamſtow, and elſewhere.

——— Frangula. Black berry-bearing Alder; on Epping foreſt near Snareſbrook.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants or Squinancy berries; by the river ſide near the Hoppet bridge near Braintree.

Roſa Eglanteria. The Sweet Briar or Eglantine; in a lane which leads from Chigwell to Chigwell-row and elſewhere.

Ruppia maritima. Sea-graſs; in the marſh ditches and on the ſide of the way from Maldon to Goldhanger.

Ruſcus aculeatus. Knee Holly or Butcher's Broom; in in bushy places and on heaths: at Black Notley, and in the woody part of Epping foreſt, plentifully.

Salicornia Europæa. Jointed Glaſſwort or Marſh Sampire; in the marſhes at Harwich, plentifully.

Salix triandria. Smooth Willow; in an oſier holt at Black Notley near the houſe in which Mr. Ray the Naturaliſt lived.

Salſola fruticoſa. Shrub Stonecrop or Blite; on the marſh bank at Harwich, plentifully.

—— Kali. Prickly Graſſwort; on the ſandy ſhore going to Harwich cliff.

Salvia pratenſis. Meadow Clary. Bobart in Hort. Ox. III. 393, mentions this plant to grow in Septo Cobhamiano, in Eſſex, D. Watſio obſervata, Syn. 23.

—— verbenacea. Common Engliſh wild Clary; in Woodford church-yard, at Purfleet, and on the earth-works at Stanſted Montfitchet.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder, Wallwort, Danewort, or Dane's blood; by the road ſide near Upton houſe, in a lane between Sewardſtone and Waltham abby, and about Barklow. See p.

Samolus valerandi. Round-leaved Water Pimpernel; on a little bog two miles from Eaſt Horndon church, and on the bank of the river Rhodon near the eight mile ſtone on the Woodford bridge road.

Saponaria officinalis. Sopewort or Bruizewort; on Laindon hills, and elſewhere.

Satyrium viride. Frog Satyrion or Orchis; in Broad Oaks meadows near Thaxted.

Saxifraga granulata. White Saxifrage; in meadows and dry paſtures: on the earth works at Stanſted Montfitchet, and on Pleſhy mount.

Scirpus lacuſtris. Bull Ruſh; in the river Rhodon near Woodford bridge.

—— lacuſtris β. A variety of the laſt; in ponds, rivers, and lakes: at Brickſley and in Merſey iſland.

—— maritimus β. A variety of Round-rooted Baſtard Cyperus; on banks of rivers and on ſea-ſhores: about Maldon, plentifully.

—— ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus-graſs; by the river Blackwater at a mill below Bocking.

Sedum album. White flowered Stonecrop; on a wall at Barking, Plaiſtow, and elſewhere.

—— Telephium, Orpine or Livelong; in a field near Woodſtreet at Walthamſtow, in Biſhop's-hall lane at Lamborn, on the ſide of a field between Muncombe and Luxborough houſe near Chigwell, and elſewhere.

Senecio ſarracenicus. Broad-leaved Ragwort; in the warren at Smith's hall, Blakemoor.

—— latifolia γ. Broad-leaved Baſtard Hellebore; by the great fiſh-pond at Heron houſe near Thorndon.

Sherardia arvenſis. Little Field Madder; in a corn-field between the wood and the Thames at Purfleet.

Silene Anglica. Small Corn Catchfly or Campion; in the corn-fields near Colcheſter.

Siſon inundatum. The leaſt Water Parſnep; in gravel-pits and ponds on Epping foreſt.

Siſymbrium Irio. Broad-leaved Rocket or Hedge Muſtard; on rubbiſh and old walls: at Faulkbourn.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; upon the bank leading from the town of Harwich to the Cliff and on the right hand of the road from Dovercourt.

Solidago Virgaurea. Common Golden Rod; in the wood at Purfleet, and in a hedge near Warley Common.

Spiræa Filipendula. Common Dropwort; in a hilly field near Chingford church.

Statice Armeria. Thrift or Sea July-flower; in the marſhes at Harwich.

—— Limonium. Sea Lavender; on ſea ſhores: at Colcheſter, and in the marſh ditches at Harwich.

—— Limonium β. A variety of the laſt; at Harwich.

Stellaria graminea β. A variety of the Leſſer Stitchwort; in marſhy places: near Luxborough houſe near Chigwell.

—— graminea γ. Long-leaved Water Chickweed; on a bog between Snareſbrook and the Woodford bridge road.

Taxus baccata. The Eugh or Yew tree; on Epping foreſt between the King's Oak and Epping near the fourteen mile ſtone.

Teucrium Chamæpytis. Ground pine; in the corn-field between the wood and the Thames at Purfleet.

Tilia Europæa β. Small-leaved Lime or Linden-tree, Baſte or Pry; in the hedges frequent.

Tremella Auricula. Jew's Ear; on ſtumps of dead trees

—— granulata. Bladder Tremella; in moiſt ditches

—— Juniperina. Yellow Tremella; on rotten ſticks

—— Noſtoc. Jelly Tremella; on a bog on Epping foreſt near Salter's row

—— purpurea. Purple Tremella; on dead ſticks very common

} at Walthamſtow.

Trifolium arvenſe β. Small or Sea Hares foot Trefoil; on the ſandy ſhore between the town of Harwich and the Cliff.

—— fragiferum. Strawberry Trefoil; in fields and moiſt woods about Woodford.

—— ochroleucum. Yellow flowered Trefoil; in a cloſe near the great fiſh pond at Herons near Thorndon.

—— ornithopoides. Bird's-foot Trefoil; on ſandy banks by the ſea ſide at Tolleſbury, plentifully.

—— repens β hybridum. White Trefoil with a codded umbel; in the road from London to Woodford bridge. between the ſeven and eight mile ſtones.

—— ſcabrum. Oval headed Trefoil; in Broad-Oaks meadows near Saffron Walden.

—— ſtellatum. Teaſel-headed Trefoil; in ſea meadows and paſtures: on the ſhore in Canvey iſland, by the water ſide at Leigh, at Little Holland, and at Tilbury-fort.

Trifolium ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil; on Laindon hills.

—— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil; in the road between Brentwood and Brookſtreet, plentifully.

Triglochin maritimum. Sea ſpiked Graſs; in the ſalt marſhes at Harwich, plentifully.

Triticum junceum γ. Sea Wheat Graſs; on the ſhore in Merſey iſland near Colcheſter.

—— repens γ. Sea Dog's graſs; on the ſandy banks at Harwich.

Turritis glabra. Great Tower Muſtard; on the banks by the highway ſide up the hill from Lexden towards Colcheſter, and in fields and on a dry bank in the lane which leads from High Beech to Waltham abby.

Valeriana diocia. Small wild or marſh Valerian; on the ſides of the marſh in the Lea bridge road.

Valeriana diocia β. The other ſmall wild or marſh Valerian; in moiſt meadows about Woodford.

——— officinalis. Great wild Valerian; in moiſt places and near water: ſometimes in woods and buſhy places about Woodford and elſewhere.

Verbaſcum nigrum. Sage leaved black Mullein; in gravelly places and on way-ſides: at Audley Inn and in a lane leading from Chigwell to Chigwell-row.

Viburnum Lantana. The Pliant Mealy-tree or the Wayfaring-tree; in the woods at Purfleet.

——— Opulus. Water Elder or Cherrywood; in moiſt places in the woody part of Epping foreſt near Woodford, on the bank of the Rhodon near the Red bridge near Wanſtead and elſewhere.

Vinca major. The Greater Periwinckle; in woods and hedges: near Colcheſter, under a hedge in Ribton-lane, Woodford, and elſewhere.

—— minor. Periwinckle; in the hedges and among buſhes in ſome fields by the road ſide leading from Witham to Kelvedon, in one of the woods called the Larks near Chingford, and elſewhere.

Viola hirta. Violet with Throatwort leaves or Hairy Violet; in woody places and hedges of a chalky ſoil: in ſeveral places.

Viſcum album. Miſſel or Miſſeltoe; on ſeveral trees on Epping foreſt, in an orchard in Loughton, and elſewhere.

Ulmus campeſtris γ. The Wych Haſel or Broad-leaved Elm; in hedges in the lane leading from Ilford to Bentry heath.

Ulva diaphana. Sea-Wragged-Staff;
—— inteſtinalis. Sea Chitterling or Gut Laver;
—— Lactuca. Oyſter-green, or Green Laver; } caſt upon the Harwich ſhore.

—— pavonia. Turkey Feather; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones: at Harwich.

—— umbilicalis. Navel Laver; on ſubmarine ſtones and rocks: in Canvey iſland.

Urtica pilulifera. Roman Nettle; on rubbiſh: in ſeveral parts of Canvey iſland and at Harwich.

Utricularia vulgaris. Hooded Water Milfoil; in the great fiſh-pond at Herons near Thorndon.

Zoſtera marina. Graſs Wrack: caſt up at Harwich, and on all ſhores.

——— marina γ. The Leſſer Graſs Wrack; on the Harwich ſhore.

N O R

CAMBRIDGES.

E S

Little Ouse River

Lidleport Brl

Whelp Moor

Burnt Fen

Mildenhall Fen

Mildenhall Common

Lakenham Town Moor

Lakenham

Eriswell Hall

Eriswell

Back Row

Holywell Row

West Row

MILDENHALL

Worlington

Ickingham St. James

Tuddenham

Cavenham

Kentford

NEWMARKET

Barton

Barrow

Great Thurlow

Denham

Oasden

Lidgate

Cooling

Thirlow Parva

Thirlow Magna

Bradley Parva

Bradley Magna

Haverhill

Withersfield

Castle Camps

Clare

Stoke

Baythorn Park

Downham

BRANDON

Wangford

Elveden

Elveden Lodge

Wordwell Lodge

Wordwell

Lackford

Kisby

Formham All Saints

Hawstead

Whepstead

Brockley

Shimpling

Glemsford

Cavendish

Rushford

Barningham

Honington

Ampton

Falkenham

Thetford Lodge

THETFORD

Thurston

Hepworth

Hawkedon

Newton

Bradfield George

Bradfield Clare

Gedding

Lawshall

Alpheton

Acton

Waldingfield Parva

Waldingfield Magna

Chilton

Edwardston

Groton

Newton

Cornard Magna

Cornard Parva

Assington

Bures

Wiston

NEWLAND

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

A MAP OF SUFFOLK

FROM THE BEST AUTHORITIES

Engraved by I.Cary.

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS &c.

1 Lackford	13 Thredling
2 Blackbourn	14 Carlford
3 Thingoe	15 Colneis
4 Risbridge	16 Wilford
5 Thedwastre	17 Loes
6 Babergh	18 Plomesgate
7 Samford	19 Blithing
8 Liberty of Ipswich	20 Wangford
9 Basmere & Claydon d°	21 Mutford
10 Stow d°	22 Lothingland
11 Hartmere Hund.	23 Cosford
12 Hoxne

1° Longitude East 5 from London 10 15 20 25 30 35 40

I C E N I.

THE country bordering on the Trinobantes was afterwards called Eaſt Anglia, and comprehending the counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge, and Huntingdon, was antiently inhabited by the ICENI, called improperly in ſome copies TIGENI, and more corruptly by Ptolemy SIMENI [a], whom I have long conjectured to have been included by Cæſar in the confuſed name of Cenimagni, to which opinion I was led by the near reſemblance of Iceni and Ceni-magni to each other, and the concurrence of Tacitus and Cæſar. The latter ſays the Cenimagni ſubmitted to the Romans, which Tacitus ſays the Iceni did "of themſelves acceding to "our alliance." But what is moſt material, in a MS. for Cenimagni we have Ceni, Agni [b], two ſeparate words, for which if it were an allowable liberty I ſhould ſubſtitute Iceni, Regni. You will not find the Cenimagni anywhere elſe in Britain, if you divide them from the Regni and Iceni. There are many traces of the Iceni in this tract, as Ikenſworthe [c], Ikenthorpe, Ikborrow, Iken, Ikſning, Icklingham, Eike, &c. and the conſular way leading hence is in the old chronicles called Ickenild-ſtreet, q. d. the ſtreet of the Iceni. The etymology of the name I profeſs myſelf unable to gueſs at, unleſs one ſhould derive it from the wedge-like form of the country, and ſay that it abutts on the ocean in that ſhape. The Britans call a wedge in their language Iken: a place in Wales on the lake Llintegyd is called from that ſhape Llan-Iken: and in the ſame ſenſe a little tract in Spain approaching leſs to its ſhape than ours was called Sphen or Wedge, according to Strabo [d].

Icknild ſtreet.

Sphen.

This nation is repreſented by Tacitus [e] as brave, and after they had caſt themſelves on the protection of the Romans, they remained undiſturbed by war to the time of Claudius. Then the proprætor Oſtorius fortifying the rivers, and diſarming the Britans, they aſſembled their forces to oppoſe him. But the Romans forcing their intrenchments they were defeated with great loſs. The latter ſignalized themſelves very much in this battle, and M. Oſtorius, ſon of the commander, had the honour of ſaving a citizen. This war thus terminated, in thirteen years time a freſh ſtorm aroſe on the following account. Praſutagus, king of the Iceni, to avert the ruin of his nation though to his own diſadvantage, appointed the emperor Nero his heir, thinking by ſuch ſubmiſſion (to uſe the words of Tacitus [f]) that he ſhould ſecure his kingdom and family from injury: but it happened otherwiſe; his kingdom was pillaged by centurions, and his houſe by ſlaves as if it had been taken in war. His wife Boodicia, called alſo Bunduica, was ſcourged, and his daughters violated: the principal men of the kingdom, as if the whole had been given away, were ſtript of their eſtates, and the royal family treated as the emperor's ſlaves. Provoked at this diſgrace and the fear of worſe if the nation ſhould be reduced to a province, they took up arms, and engaging in their rebellion the Trinobantes and other nations not yet accuſtomed to ſlavery, they formed a private league among themſelves to recover their liberty, being fired by their inveterate hatred to the Roman veterans. This occaſioned a moſt fatal war, which was ſtill further inflamed by the avarice of Seneca, who had at that time 400 Seſterces or 300,000*l.* out at the moſt exorbitant intereſt here. In this war, to be as general as I can, Boodicia, whom Gildas ſeems to call the artful Lioneſs [g], wife of Praſutagus, cut off 80,000 Romans and allies, and deſtroyed the colony of Camalodunum and the municipium of Verolam; routed the IXth legion, and defeated Catus Decianus the procurator: but was at length defeated in a pitched battle by Suetonius Paulinus, and with unbroken ſpirit put an end to her life by poiſon, according to Tacitus [h], but, according to Dio [i], ſhe died of illneſs. During this war Xiphilin [k] after Dio writes that the Britans worſhipped in an eſpecial manner Victory under the name of Andate, whom the Greek copy in another place calls Andraſtè, and in a grove ſacred to her ſlaughtered their priſoners in the moſt cruel manner. The Britans do not at preſent call Victory by this name, nor do I underſtand the meaning of it, unleſs as the Latins derive Victoria a vincendo, the Sabines Vacuna ab evacuando, and the Greeks Νικη απο τ̃ μὴ εικειν, i. e. not yielding, ſo the Britans may have called her Anarbaith, from a word in their language ſignifying deadly overthrow. But this by the way. From this time there is a profound ſilence in authors about the Iceni; all I have met with is that the Romans, on the decline of their empire, appointed a new officer for this and other coaſts, to check the ravages of the Saxons here and elſewhere, whom they called Count of the Saxon ſhore throughout Britain, as has been before obſerved *.

Praſutagus.

Boodicia.

Seneca's uſury in Britain.

Andate or Andraſte goddeſs of Victory.

When the Saxon heptarchy was eſtabliſhed in this iſland, this province formed the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles, and from its eaſtern ſituation had the name of Eaꝛt Anꝛle-ꝓyc, or the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles. Uffa was their firſt king, whence his ſucceſſors were long called Uffkines, and were ſubject ſometimes to the Mercians, and ſometimes to the kings of Kent. Their iſſue failing with St. Edmund, the Danes over-run the kingdom and miſerably harraſſed it for near 50 years, till Edward the elder having ſubdued them annexed it to his own kingdom of Weſſex. From that time it had governors of its own; which honour was firſt enjoyed in the Norman times by one Radulphus of Bretagne, a faithleſs wretch, who at a nuptial feaſt formed a deſign, with many others, to cut off William the Conqueror; but a deſign to which ſo many were privy could not be concealed: upon the diſcovery of it he was ſtripped of his poſſeſſions, and proſcribed, and others were beheaded. But this belonging to the hiſtorian's province, I proceed to the deſcription of the country, which

East Angle.

Uffkines.

* In Kent.

[a] See Lipſius on Tacitus. So Simomagus is a contraction for Simenomagus: Idan [Ithan]ceſter for Idumanceſter: As the Cenomagni and Cenomanenſes in Gaul. MS. n. Gale.

[b] Lipſius reads Iceni, Cangi. The Iceni are the inhabitants of Oxfordſhire from Ychen, the Ouſe: with theſe Cæſar joins the Ancalites, inhabitants of Henley hundred. The Iceni alſo in Norfolk were ſo called from a river there of the ſame name of Ychen or Ouſe. The Britiſh names of rivers Cunio, Cynio, Cenet, and Can, are all ſynonymous with Ychen. MS. n. Gale.

[c] Ikworth. [d] III. p. 137. [e] Ann. XII. 31.

[f] Ann. XIV. 31. V. Agric. 15, 16. [g] Leana doloſa. [h] XIV. 37. [i] LXII. 1011.

[k] LXII. 1008.

is mine. A general idea of the face of it we have from Abbo Floriacenſis *, who wrote in the year of Chriſt 970[1]. "This part called Eaſt Angle, is diſtinguiſhed among other circumſtances for being almoſt ſurrounded "with water. On the ſouth-eaſt and eaſt ſides it is waſhed by the ocean, on the north incloſed with an im- "menſe tract of moraſs, which riſing near the centre of Britain, during a courſe of more than 100 miles, falls "from the level of the countrv in great rivers into the ſea. On the weſt the province joins to the reſt of the "iſland on that ſide and is acceſſible: but to ſecure it from invaſion it is fortified with a bank of earth like a wall, "and a ditch†. The ſoil of the inland parts is very rich, pleaſantly diverſified with gardens and woods agree- "able for paſture and feeding great numbers of ſheep and cattle: not to mention the rivers ſtored with fiſh, "it having as I ſaid before the ſea on one ſide, and in its marſhes many lakes of two or three miles in width, "furniſhing favourite retirement to numerous ſocieties of monks, in which retreats even hermits do not want "ſolitude." Thus Abbo.

* Life of St. Edmund. † Reche Ditch or Devil's Ditch.

[1] One of this name wrote an account of the ſiege of Paris in the year 891. Another was abbot of Fleury, wrote lives of Popes, and died 1003. Voſſ. Hiſt. Lat. II. 38. 41. Hoffman. He wrote the Life and Paſſion of St. Edmund. Batteley p. 27. MS. Jeſus c. Ox. Tan. Not. Mon.

S U F F O L K.

SUFFOLK, the firſt in order to be deſcribed, called by the Saxons Suð-polc, or the Southern people with reſpect to Norfolk, has on the weſt Cambridgeſhire: on the ſouth the Stour dividing it from Eſſex; on the eaſt the German ocean; on the north it is ſeparated from Norfolk by the two ſmall rivers Little Ouſe and Waveney, which riſe from the ſame head, and take different courſes. It is a tract of conſiderable extent, furniſhed with good harbours, and except towards the eaſt has a rich ſoil, conſiſting of clay and marle, making fertile fields every where and rich paſtures for fattening cattle, and producing plenty Cheeſe. of cheeſe which is ſent all over the kingdom to the great profit of the inhabitants, and even into Germany, France, and Italy, if we may believe the phyſician Dr. Pantaleon [a], who ſcruples not to compare this with that of Placentia for colour and flavour: but he was not one of the nice ſcholars of Apicius. Woods are not wanting, and there are many parks ſtocked with deer adjoining to the ſeats of the nobility.

The political diviſion of the county is threefold; the Geldable which pays taxes: St. Edmund's Liberty which was the property of that abbey, and St. Ethelred's Liberty which belonged to Ely abbey, to which our kings formerly gave certain eſtates "with Sach "and Soch," as the Ely regiſter has it, "without any "reſerve of eccleſiaſtical or civil juriſdiction." But we ſhall go over the county chorographically, and take a view of the principal places, beginning from the weſt.

Ixning. On this ſide next to Cambridgeſhire, on the edge of the county, is Ixning, a place of greater note antiently than now, diſtinguiſhed for the birth of Etheldreda the virgin, daughter of king Anna, who was canonized; for the conſpiracy of Radulphus earl of Eaſt Anglia againſt the Conqueror; and alſo for the road from hence to Ely made by Hervæus firſt biſhop of that ſee. Now it begins to decline by the Newmarket. nearneſs to Newmarket, to which goods are uſually brought. The name ſhews this laſt place to be of later date: but it is ſo ſituated that the ſouth part is in Cambridgeſhire, the north in Suffolk, and each has its ſmall church, that of the latter ſubject to Ixning, the other to Dichton or Ditton. Of this place I have met with no particulars, except that under Henry III. Robert de Inſula or Liſle, gave this part of it in frank marriage with his daughter Caſſandra to Richard d'Argenton, from whom the Alingtons are deſcended.

Here the plain called from the town Newmarket heath extends itſelf all round, ſandy and barren, yet covered with verdure, in which is that extraordinary ditch which the vulgar aſcribing to the Devil, called Devil's dike, though it certainly was one of thoſe mentioned by Abbo, and made againſt the invaſions of enemies, as I ſhall ſhew more at large when I come to Cambridgeſhire. I ſhall juſt obſerve here that the leaſt of theſe ditches is to be ſeen two miles from hence between Snailwell and Moulton.

Farther inland is the very famous town of St. Edmund, called in the Saxon times Bedericſ-ȝueorðe, and in the Britiſh, as it ſeems, VILLA FAUSTINI, mentioned by Antoninus. This is the opinion of Talbot a learned antiquary well acquainted with this part of England [b]. The diſtance alſo both from Iciani and Colonia in Antoninus agrees very well, and as Villa among the Romans ſignified an houſe upon the eſtate of ſome perſon of diſtinction, ſo did ȝueorð, among the Saxons, and Abbo tranſlates Bedericsgueord, Bederici cortis, q. d. Bederic's houſe. The Saxons ſeem alſo to have taken the full force of the name into their language; for as Fauſtinus in Latin implies Proſperity, ſo does Bederic in German, according to the learned H. Junius, who interprets the name of Betorix (whom Strabo makes ſon of Melo the Sicambrian) full of happineſs and favour. Whether Fauſtinus and Bedericus were different men or who they were I am totally ignorant. Certain I am that this villa of Fauſtinus was not that deſcribed by Martial in his third book of Epigrams. And if I ſhould ſay it belonged to Bericus, who according to Dio [c], being obliged to quit his country, adviſed Claudius to a war

Newmarket Heath. Devil's dike. St. Edmund's Bury. VILLA FAUSTINI. Gueorð Forth. Beric the Britan.

[a] A celebrated phyſician and hiſtorian, born at Baſil 1522, died 1595. wrote the lives of the illuſtrious men of Germany, &c. Hoffm. Lex.
[b] As being a prebendary of Norwich (G.) for he was a Northamptonſhire man (Tan.)
[c] lix.

war with Britain, I ſhould not believe myſelf. Whatever it was, if it be not the Villa Fauſtini, it was nevertheleſs very famous, ſince upon the introduction of Chriſtianity in theſe parts king Sigebert built a church here, and Abbo calls it a royal vill. But when the people brought hither the body of that moſt Chriſtian prince Edmund, whom the Danes had put to death with horrible torments, and in honour of him erected "a large and wonderful wooden church[d]," it began to be called the Burgh of Edmund, vulgarly St. Edmondſbury, and by contraction Bury, and flouriſhed in an extraordinary manner, particularly after king Canute, to expiate his father's ſacriligeous violence to this church, rebuilt it and endowed it with great wealth, and offering his crown to the Martyr, ſettled there monks and an abbot, and endowed it with large poſſeſſions, and among others with the whole town, over which the monks appointed their ſeneſchal for the adminiſtration of juſtice. Whence Joſceline de Branklond[e], monk of the place, ſays, "the men both without and within the town are our ſubjects, and all within the Banna Leuca[f] injoy the ſame privileges." Afterwards abbot Hervey[g], a Norman, ſurrounded it with a wall, of which ſome little now remains[h]. The popes granted it great privileges, and amongſt others exemption from all epiſcopal juriſdiction in every thing, and to be ſubject only to the archbiſhop in lawful matters: which is ſtill obſerved. And now the monks abounding with wealth, built a magnificent new church, which they enlarged continually with new buildings. In laying the foundations of a new chapel t. Edward I. Everſden[i], monk of this houſe, tells us, "they found the walls of an antient church ſo built that the altar was in the centre, and we believed (continues he) that it was that which was firſt built for St. Edmund." What this town was, and how large the abbey while ſtanding, take from Leland[k] who ſaw it. "The ſun never beheld a town in a finer ſituation, on ſuch a gentle hill "with a rivulet to the eaſt, or a nobler abbey, whether "in regard of its endowments, extent, or unparalleled "magnificence. You would think the abbey itſelf "was a town, ſo many gates (ſome of them braſs), ſo "many towers, and a church exceeded in magnificence "by none, in whoſe neighbourhood are three* others "of excellent workmanſhip in the ſame church-yard." If you aſk what were the revenues, it is not eaſy to ſay how many gifts were hung up at the ſingle ſhrine of Edmund, and the yearly income of its eſtates and rents exceeded 1560*£*. If I were to enter into a detail of the continual quarrels between the townſmen and the monks who governed them by their ſeneſchal, and with what fury they ſought each other's deſtruction, I ſhould ſcarce be believed. This work which had been ſo long riſing, and its wealth which had been ſo many years increaſing, received their period from Henry VIII. when he diſſolved the religious houſes by the perſuaſion of thoſe who preferred private reaſons and their own fortune to their king and country, nay and to the glory of God under the ſpecious pretence of reforming religion. It ſtill however ſhews no unſightly carcaſe of its antient ſplendor, a noble ruin, which excites at once the pity and wonder of the beholders. In this place, to mention it by the way, England ſuffered the greateſt loſs that could be felt of any one man. That true father of his country Humphry, duke of Glouceſter, a man of inflexible integrity, and who had improved his noble mind by liberal ſtudies, having governed the realm 25 years under Henry VI. with a reputation that left no room for the beſt to complain or the worſt to calumniate, was taken off here by the envy of Margaret of Lorrain, who, finding her huſband Henry VI. to be a prince of a narrow ſoul in order to get the power into her own hands contrived this execrable deed, but to her own and the kingdom's infinite hurt. For Normandy and Aquitaine were ſoon loſt, and a moſt fatal civil war kindled in England.

Humphry duke of Glouceſter.

Near Edmunds Bury is Ruſhbrook, the ſeat of the famous and knightly family of the Jermyns, and not far from it Ikeſworth, where was an antient priory founded by Gilbert Blund, a perſon of great rank, lord of Ikeſworth, whoſe iſſue male in the right line ended in William ſlain at the battle of Lewes, t. Henry III. who left two ſiſters coheireſſes, Agnes married to William de Creketot, and Roiſia to Robert de Valoines.

Ruſhbrook.

Ikeſworth.

More north is Fernham St. Genovieve, memorable for the taking of Robert earl of Leiceſter in pitched battle by Richard Lucy chief juſtice of England, and the ſlaughter of above 10,000 Flemings brought over by him for the deſtruction of his country. In this neighbourhood I obſerved two very handſome houſes, one belonging to the Kitſons knights at Hengrave, formerly the eſtate of Edmund de Hengrave a famous lawyer under Edward III. the other at Culfurth, lately built by ſir Nicholas Bacon, ſon of Nicholas keeper of the Great Seal, who, for his ſingular prudence and ſolid judgement, was deſervedly reckoned one of the two pillars[l] of this realm in his time. Not far from hence is Lidgate, a little village by no means to be paſſed by unnoticed, for giving birth to John Lidgate the monk, whoſe genius ſeems to have been formed by the Muſes themſelves, ſo many graces and beauties appear in his Engliſh poems.

Fernham St. Genovieve.

1173.

Hengrave.

Culfurth.

N. Bacon.

Lidgate.

John Lidgate.

Theſe are the moſt remarkable places in the weſtern part of Suffolk.

On the ſouth the river Stour at its riſe ſtagnates in a great fen called Stour meer, but preſently confining itſelf within its banks firſt paſſes by Clare, a noble village, which beſides a ruined caſtle that it ſhews, gave name to the very noble family of Clare, deſcended from Gilbert a Norman earl, and the title of duke to Lionel third ſon of Edward III. who, marrying into this family, had the title of duke of Clarence conferred on him by his father. For he was called duke of Clarence from this place, as the deſcendants of the firſt earl Gilbert were earls of Clare. He died at Alba Pompeia[m] in Italy, having taken for his ſecond wife a daughter of Galeazzo Viſconti of Milan, and is buried in this collegiate church; as alſo Joan of Acres, daughter of Edward I. wife of Stour r.

Stour meer.

Stoke Clare.

Earls of Clare.

* Now only two.

[d] permaximam miro ligneo tabulatu eccleſiam: not a word of a cover as Gibſon tranſlates it. Camden had it from Bury regiſter (Batteley, 27.) This wooden church was not, as Batteley, p. 8. ſeems to underſtand, the ſame which Sigebert built, but one built on purpoſe for the martyr's body, and pulled down by Canute. Yet we afterwards read of a wooden church taken down and rebuilt of ſtone from Bernac by abbot Baldwin 1065—97. (Bat. 49.) He built St. Stephen's chapel of oak. (Ib. 50)

[e] He wrote a Chronicle of this abbey to 1273. MS. Cott. Vit. D. xv. 2. (Tan. B. B.)

[f] Baunus, ſacer limes eccleſiarum. Du Cange in v.

[g] A learned perſon, well verſed in the antiquities of this place [probably Mr. Batteley], affirms that there never was any ſuch abbot as Hervey. In abbot Anſelm's time there was a ſacriſt of that name in this monaſtery, of whom ſee Mon. Angl. I. 300. G.

[h] Abbot Newport in like manner walled the abbey. Holland. Malmſb. de pontif. II. 137.

[i] Cellarer of this abbey, who flouriſhed about the beginning of the 14th century, and wrote a chronicle to 1336, MS. in the Herald's office. (Tan. B. B.)

[k] Comm. in Cyg. Cant. in Curia.

[l] Deſtina, a pillar. Vitr. V. c. ult.

[m] Alba. Longueville. G.

Gilbert de Clare, ſecond of the name earl of Glouceſter [m]. It may perhaps here be expected that I ſhould give ſome account of the earls of Clare and dukes of Clarence, who have ever held ſo honourable a rank in this realm; I ſhall therefore preſent my readers with the following brief detail. Richard ſon of Gilbert [n] earl of Ewe [o] in Normandy ſerved under king William when he came into England *, and received from him the towns of Clare and Tunbridge. He had four [p] ſons; Gilbert [q], Roger, Walter, and Robert, from which laſt were deſcended the Fitz Walters. Gilbert by a daughter of the earl of Claremont had Richard who ſucceeded him, Gilbert, whoſe ſon was Richard earl of Pembroke, conqueror of Ireland, and Walter [r]. Richard [s] his eldeſt ſon † being ſlain by the Welſh left two ſons Gilbert and Roger: Gilbert [t] was earl of Hertford under Stephen, but he and his ſucceſſors are commonly called and wrote themſelves earl of Clare from this their principal ſeat. He dying without iſſue was ſucceeded by his brother Roger [u], whoſe ſon Richard [x] married Amicia daughter and coheireſs of William earl of Glouceſter, in right of whom his poſterity became earls of Glouceſter. Their male iſſue at length failing [y], Lionel 3d ſon of Edward III. (who married Elizabeth daughter and ſole heireſs of William de Burgh, earl of Ulſter by Elizabeth Clare) had the new title of duke of Clarence conferred on him by his father [z]. Having only one daughter Philippa married to Edmund Mortimer earl of March, Henry IV. created his youngeſt ſon Thomas duke of Clarence [a], who being governor of Normandy [b], was ſlain in a rencounter of the French and Scots at Andes [c] leaving no iſſue. Long after this Edward I. conferred this honour on his brother George, whom he took into favour after the moſt bitter quarrels and inveterate enmity, but afterwards, as report ſays, ſmothered in a but of Malmeſey in priſon [d]. So natural is it for men ever to hate thoſe whom they fear, and with whom they ſtrive with ſuch violence though they are brethren.

Dukes of Clarence.

Long Melford. From Clare the Stour paſſes through Long Melford, which has a fair hoſpital founded by that good man ſir William Cordall late Maſter of the Rolls, to Sudbury, q. d. Southburgh, which it almoſt ſurrounds. Some think this was once the chief town of this county, and called ſo with reſpect to Norwich, q. d. North town. Nor muſt it at this day be conſidered as inferior to any of its neighbours, being populous and wealthy from its clothing trade, and governed by a mayor choſen yearly out of ſeven aldermen. Not far from hence is Edwardeſton, of no great eminence now, but formerly inhabited by the honourable lords Montchenſy, of whom Warin married the daughter and heireſs of that moſt potent William Marſhall earl of Pembroke, and had by her a daughter Joan, who, by marrying William de Valence of the family of Luſignan in France, brought the title of Pembroke into the family. This Warin de Montchenſy was a man of eminent rank and fortune being accounted the Craſſus of England at that time, leaving by will upwards of 200,000 marks [e].

Sudbury.

Edwardeſton.

Barons Montchenſy.

A few miles hence the Stour receives the little river Breton, which in its ſhort courſe runs by two towns of antient fame. At its head is Bretenham a mean town, where ſcarce remain any traces of that city, which both from the ſound and the ſignification of its name is proved to be COMBRETONIUM placed hereabouts by Antoninus. For as Bretenham ſignifies in Engliſh a houſe or manſion on the Breton, ſo Combretonium in Britiſh ſignifies a valley or low ground on the Breton. This is corruptly called in Peutinger's table COMVETRONUM and AD COVECIN. A little weſt of this is Nettleſted, whence came the Wentworths dignified with the title of barons by Henry VIII. [f] and near it Offton, i. e. the town of Offa, king of Mercia, where on a clayey hill are ruins of a caſtle ſaid to have been built by Offa after he had baſely murdered Ethelbert king of the Eaſt Angles, and ſeized on his kingdom. Below this is Hadley, Saxon Headleze, famous at preſent for the clothing trade, formerly mentioned by our hiſtorians as the burial place of Guthrum or Gormo the Dane. For Alfred having prevailed on him to receive Chriſtianity and be baptized, gave him this country of Eaſt Anglia, that (to uſe the words of my author [g]), "by his ſtate of fealty "to the king he might govern by hereditary right "thoſe whom he had before overrun with violence "and rapine."

Bretons. Bretenham. Combretonium. Nettleſted. Barons Wentworth. Offton. Hadley. Guthrum. Gormo the Dane.

From hence the Breton makes towards the Stour, and after joining it flowing not far from Bentley, where the family of Talmach of diſtinguiſhed fame and rank have long flouriſhed, after a few miles paſſes near Arverton, formerly the ſeat of the famous family of the Bacons, now of the Parkers, deſcended by the father's ſide from the barons Morley, by the mother's from the Calthrops a very eminent family; then it falls into the ſea: and at the ſame mouth the river Irwell, or Gipping, empties itſelf. This laſt river riſes in the heart of the county from two ſprings, one near Wulpett, the other at the little town of Gipping. Wulpet is a market town, in Latin Luporum foſſa, if we believe Neubrigenſis, who has invented as pleaſant a ſtory about this place as Lucian's true hiſtory: that two green boys of the Satyr kind [h] after travelling a long way under ground from the other world, or the Antipodes and St. Martin's land, came up here. Thoſe who would read more about them may conſult the author himſelf, who will furniſh matter for laughter to all who are diſpoſed to laugh. I know not whether I need mention here to how little purpoſe a credulous avarice led Henry VIII. to dig for gold at Norton in this neighbourhood: let the places where he dug ſpeak for themſelves. Between Gipping and Wulpett on a high hill as the remains of the old caſtle of Hawghlee incloſing about two acres. Some affirm this to be Hagoneth caſtle, which belonged to Ralph de Broc, and was taken and deſtroyed by Robert earl of Leiceſter in 1173.

Bentley. Arverton. Irwell, Gipping. Wulpet. Norton. Hawghlee.

* G. Gemeticenſis VII. 37. † Robert Montenſis.

[m] Surnamed the Red, great grandſon of Gilbert laſt mentioned here note [x]. Dugd. I. 207. [n] ſurnamed Criſpin. Ib.
[o] Augy, Camden. Brion, Dugd. [p] Dugdale 5, making Richard monk of Bec the 4th.
[q] ſurnamed de Tonebrige. Ib. 207. [r] Dugdale adds Baldwin.
[s] Founder of Stoke and Tunbridge priories, and firſt earl of Hertford. Dugd. I. 210. [t] He died 1151, buried at Clare. Ib.
[u] died 1173. Ib. 211. [x] died 1206, buried at Clare. Ib.
[y] In the fifth deſcent from Richard laſt mentioned. [z] Dugd. II. 167. [a] Ib. 196.
[b] Lord High Steward, and earl of Albemarle. Holland. Dugd. Ib. [c] 9 Henry V. buried at Canterbury. Dugd. Ib.
[d] Dugd. II. 162. ex Pol. Virg.
[e] Mat. Paris Hiſt. Minor. p. 908. He died 1255, 38 Henry III. The title ended with his ſon who was killed in Wales 1289. Dugd. I. 561.
[f] In the perſon of St. Thomas Wentworth. H. See Yorkſhire.
[g] Malmeſb. de geſt. regum II. 23. b. Flor. Wig. 318. See Aſſer 34. M. Weſt. 331.
[h] Two children a boy and girl (not a word of the Satyr kind) in Neubrigenſis I. 27. They were both baptiſed and taught Engliſh; the boy died ſoon, but the girl grew up and married at Lynne, and was living near the author's time.

On the ſame river are the little market towns of Stow and Needham, and not far from the bank Hemingſtone, where Baldwin le Pettour (obſerve the name) held lands by ſerjeantry (I ſpeak from an old record) "for which he was to make on Chriſtmas "day yearly before the king of England, one caper, "one puff, and one rouſing fart[i]," it is elſewhere expreſſed "by a caper, a puff, and a fart[k]." Such was the frank and undiſguiſed jollity of thoſe times. Obſerve likewiſe that the manor of Langhall belonged to this fee. Near the mouth of the river is Ipſwich, anciently Gippeſwich[l], a little town ſtanding low, and as it were the eye of this county, with a convenient harbour antiently defended by a ditch and bank; a place of conſiderable trade, very populous, adorned with 14 churches, and with large handſome houſes. I paſs by four religious houſes now diſſolved, and the magnificent college begun by Cardinal Wolſey, ſon of a butcher here, whoſe great mind ſoared too high. The corporation conſiſts, as I am informed, of 12 burgeſſes called Portmen, out of whom are choſen yearly two chief magiſtrates or bailiffs, and as many juſtices out of 24 others. As to the antiquities of the place, as far as I can find it was not known before the invaſion of the Danes, by which it ſuffered. A. D. 991, the Danes ravaged this place and all the coaſt ſo cruelly that Siric archbiſhop of Canterbury and the nobility of England thought it adviſeable to purchaſe peace of them with £. 10,0006. Notwithſtanding this in leſs than nine years they plundered this town again, and ſoon met with a warm reception from the Engliſh, but, by the cowardly flight of Turketill, as Huntingdon[m] relates (the events of war depending on the ſlighteſt terms), our people were routed, and loſt the victory. In the Confeſſor's time, according to Domeſday[n], "Queen Edeva had "two parts here, and earl Gwert a third, and there "were 800 burgeſſes paying cuſtom to the king." When the Normans conquered England they built a caſtle here, which Hugh Bigod held out ſome time againſt Stephen the uſurping king of England, but at laſt ſurrendered it. It is now ſo totally in ruins that not the leaſt remains are to be ſeen. Some will have it to have been in the neighbouring pariſh of Weſtfield, where are ruins of a caſtle, and where old Gippwic is ſaid to have ſtood. I am apt to think it was demoliſhed when Henry II. razed the neighbouring caſtle of Waleton, a retreat for robbers, near which landed 3000 Flemings invited over by the Engliſh barons to oppoſe him when he had imprudently declared his ſon Henry king with authority equal to his own; a young prince who ſaw no difference between the ſummit and precipice of power, and burning with a rage for empire, carried on an unnatural war againſt his father. Though this caſtle has diſappeared, the ſhore is ſufficiently defended by a vaſt ridge called Langerſton, running, as one ſays, full two miles into the ſea, to the great danger of ſeamen, but of uſe to fiſhermen to dry their fiſh on, and in ſome meaſure guarding the port of Orwell.

So much for the ſouth part of the county.

Hence the winding ſhore (the whole eaſt ſide lying on the ſea) runs out to the north, till it lets out the little river Deben *, which riſes near Mendleſham, for which place its lord Henry Fitz Otho or ſon of Otho the Mintmaſter[o] procured a market and fair of Edward I. His deſcendants tranſmitted a conſiderable eſtate here to the Boutetorts lords of Wily in Worceſterſhire, and they t. R. II. to the Frevills[p], Burnells, and others. Here the river Deben firſt waſhes and gives name to the market town of Debenham, more properly called as others Depenham, from the depth and impracticability of the roads all round it by the clayey moiſt nature of the ſoil. It paſſes thence by Ufford, once the ſeat of Robert de Ufford earl of Suffolk, and on the oppoſite bank Rendleſham, which Bede[q] tranſlates Rendili manſio, Rendil's manſion, where Redwald king of the Eaſt Angles reſided much. He was the firſt of his nation that received baptiſm: but being afterwards ſeduced by his wife, "he had in the ſame temple "at the ſame time an altar," to uſe Bede's words[r], "for his devotion to Chriſt, and a little altar for his "ſacrifices to the Devil." Swithelm king of the Eaſt Angles was afterwards baptiſed at the ſame place, by biſhop Cedda[s].

Debenham. Ufford. Rendleſham.

Hence the Deben runs down to Woodbridge, a little well-built town, where the courts for St. Etheldred's liberty are held, and in a few miles more it falls into the ſea at Bawdſey.

Woodbridge. Bawdſey.

The ſhore now turns gradually eaſt to the mouth of the Ore, which is near Framlingham, formerly an antient caſtle of the Bigods, and preſently after forms a kind of lake on its weſt ſide. This is a moſt beautiful caſtle, fortified with a rampart, ditch, and very thick wall, in which are 13 towers, and furniſhed with very convenient apartments within. From this place in 1173 when the rebellious ſon of Henry II. took up arms againſt his father, Robert earl of Lincoln with the Flemiſh mercenaries ravaged the country all around. From it alſo in 1554 queen Mary began her reign, notwithſtanding the violent meaſures of Dudley duke of Northumberland againſt the daughter of Henry VIII. The river comes next to Parham, a little town, whoſe lord William Willoughby was raiſed to the rank of baron by Edward VI. and afterwards paſſing by Glemham, which gives name to an antient and famous family[t], diſcharges itſelf into the ſea at Oreford. This was a large and populous town, defended by a caſtle of red ſtone formerly belonging to the Valoines, afterwards to the Willoughbys, but now ſuffering from the retreat of the ſea, which has gradually retired itſelf, and ſeems to envy it the advantage of its harbour. I have nothing more to ſay of this place, unleſs the reader think it worth while to run over this paſſage from Radulphus de Coggeſhale. "In the time of king Henry I. "when Barth. de Glanville was warden of Oreford "caſtle, the fiſhermen took in their nets a wild man, "having the human ſhape complete, with hair on his "head, a long and picked[u] beard, and a great deal of "ſhaggy hair on his breaſts, but he ſtole away to ſea "privately, and was never ſeen afterwards." This verifies the common obſervation, that every production of nature on the land has its counterpart in the ſea; and may ſerve to prove that what Pliny[x] relates of a Triton on the coaſt of of Luſitania and a Sea man in the ſtraits of Gades was not mere invention.

Ore r. by others called Winchell. Framlingham caſtle. Parham. Glemham. Orford. Tritons and Sea Monſters.

* By others called Thredling.

[i] Saltus, ſufflatus, et bumbulus. [k] Saltus, ſuffius & pettus. [l] Sax. Gypeypic. G.
[m] Hoveden I. 247. [n] Fol. 290. a. bxxxviii burgeſſes.
[o] So Gibſon, ſed q. Sculptor cuneorum, q. Cutter of dies for the mint; Monetarius being the technical term for Mintmaſter.
[p] Holland adds Barkleys of Stoke. [q] III. 22. [r] II. 15. [s] Bede III. 22.
[t] Deſcended from the Bacons and Brandons. H. [u] picata. [x] N. H. ix. 5.

Not

Slaughden-vale. Aldburgh.

Not much higher, in a ſafe and very pleaſant bay within Slaughden vale, where the ſea beats in from the eaſt, and the river on the weſt, lies Aldburgh, q. d. the old burgh, or as others the burgh on the Ald, a very convenient ſtation for ſailors and fiſhermen and much frequented by them; the ſea, which has proved a bad neighbour to other towns on this coaſt, being very favourable to this. The corn throughout the kingdom having been blighted by an unfavourable ſeaſon in 1555, the inhabitants of this part about the beginning of autumn were ſupplied by a crop of peaſe which in a very extraordinary manner ſprung up among the bare rocks without any earth among them. More ſenſible people ſuppoſe them to have been thrown there by ſome wreck, which takes off from the wonder. But I have before obſerved the ſame ſpontaneous growth of pulſe among the ſtones on the Kentiſh coaſt.

Peaſe ſpringing up among the rocks.

Dunwich.

Ten miles from hence along the ſhore we come to Dunwich, Saxon Dunmoc, mentioned by Bede[y], where Fœlix the Burgundian, who recovered the E. Angles to the Chriſtian faith, which they were on the point of renouncing, fixed his ſee in 630 and his ſucceſſors were long time biſhops of Eaſt Anglia. Biſus the 4th from Fœlix being by age and ſickneſs rendered unequal to ſuch an extenſive charge as the care of ſo large a province divided it into two ſees, one of which continued here, the other was ſettled by him at the little town of N. Elmham. In the reign of William the Conqueror it had "236 bur-"geſſes, 100 poor, was valued at £. 50. and a free "gift of 900,000 herrings[z]," as we find in the ſurvey[a]. In former ages it was populous, and famous for its mint; and under Henry II. as William of Newburgh calls it, "a famous and wealthy village[b]. At that time when the kingdom was embroiled in new troubles it was ſo well fortified as to be a terror to Robert earl of Leiceſter, who ravaged theſe parts. Now by the peculiar envy of Nature which ſets no bounds to the encroachment of the ſea, the greateſt part has been waſhed away by the waves, and the biſhops having long before transferred their ſee to another place, it is almoſt deſolate. A little higher up the river Blith empties itſelf into the ſea, on whoſe bank is the little town of Blithborow, famous only for the burial of the Chriſtian king Anna ſlain in a pitched battle by Penda. It was honoured with a church of canons by Henry I. who granted it to the canons of St. Oſith. It owes its market to John lord Clavering, to whom Edward II. granted this privilege with that of a fair *. This lord had a pretty eſtate in theſe parts, being deſcended from a daughter and heireſs of William de Caſineto or Cheney, who held the barony of Horsford in Norfolk, and built a ſmall religious houſe at Sibton.

Blithborow.

Sibton.

Eaſton neſſe. Extenſio prom.

Here runs out into the Ocean a point of land called Eaſton-neſſe, accounted the eaſternmoſt point of Britain, called by Ptolemy ΕΞΟΧΗ or Extenſio. And to put it out of doubt that it is the ſame we call Eaſton it is to be obſerved that Eyſteney ſignifies the ſame in Britiſh as Εξοχη in Greek, or Extenſio in Latin, though the name in our language may be with as much probability derived from its eaſtern ſituation.

Southwold.

On the ſouth ſide of this point lies Southwold, in a plain open to the ſea, much reſorted to on account of its port form'd by the mouth of the Blith, and at high water ſurrounded in ſuch a manner as to look like an iſland, ſo that one would wonder the water does not cover it. So that it reminds me of Cicero's obſervation[c], "What but Providence forms the tides "on the coaſts of Spain and Britain, and cauſes "their regular flux and reflux?" the ſame Providence that has ordained bounds to the waves themſelves. Further inland is Wingfield with its half ruined caſtle, which gave name to, and was the reſidence of a numerous family in theſe parts diſtinguiſhed by the honour of knighthood and antient nobility; and Dunnington, which boaſts its own lord John Phelipps, father of William, who married the daughter and heireſs of baron Bardolph, and whoſe daughter and heireſs was married to John viſcount Beaumont. At preſent it is the ſeat of the antient family of Rous. Not far from hence is Huntingfield, which had a lord of the ſame name t. Edward III. and near it Heveningham, the ſeat of the knightly family of Heveningham, which boaſt a very antient extraction, and near this, Haleſworth, antiently Healſworda, an old town of the Argentons, now of the Alingtons, for which Richard Argenton procured the grant of a market from Henry III.

Wingfield. Dunnington. Huntingfield. Heveningham. Haleſworth.

On the north, as I have already mentioned, the two rivers, the little Ouſe and Waveney, ſeparate this county from Norfolk, riſing from two not very diſtant ſources in a marſh at Lophamford, and flowing different ways over many ſhallow fords. The Ouſe which takes its courſe weſtward has nothing remarkable on it hereabouts. On the Waveney which runs eaſt is firſt Hoxon, antiently Hegilſdon, famous for the martyrdom of king Edmund. For there the ſavage Danes when that moſt Chriſtian prince would not renounce Chriſtianity "bound him to a tree (to uſe "the words of Abbo), and pierced his body with "arrows, multiplying the pain of his torments by "the number of their ſhafts, and giving wound after "wound as long as there was room for darts." And as a poet of the intermediate age ſings, Hoxon. Martyrdom of king Edmund.

Jam loca vulneribus deſunt, nec dum furioſis
Tela, ſed hyberna grandine plura volunt.

No place for wounds remain'd, the ſavage crew,
As thick as winter hail their arrows threw.

In this place was a handſome houſe of the biſhops of Norwich till they exchanged it for the monaſtery of St. Benedict. At Brome in this neighbourhood has long dwelt the knightly family of Cornwalleys, of whom John was ſteward of the houſhold to Edward VI. and his ſon Thomas for his prudence was made privy counſellor to queen Mary, and comptroller of her houſehold. Lower is Eay, or the iſland, ſo called from its being ſurrounded with water, where are ſtill to be ſeen remains and tottering walls of a monaſtery dedicated to St. Peter, and an old caſtle formerly belonging to Robert Mallet a Norman baron. Upon forfeiture of his honor under Henry I. for ſiding with Robert duke of Normandy againſt the king, the king beſtowed it on Stephen earl of Bologne, afterwards the uſurping king of England, who left it to his ſon William earl of Warren †. He dying in the expedition to Toulouſe, it reverted to the crown till Richard I. gave it to Henry 3th of the name duke of Brabant and Lorrain, with a grandaughter of king Stephen by his daughter who had been a nun.

Brome. Cornwalleys family. Eay.

* Reg. de Sibton mon.

† Liber Inquiſitionum,

[y] II. 15. [z] Allectium for halecum.
[a] Fol. 311. where the original has pauperes homines c. quat. viginti 11 min.
[b] De Nat. Deor. III. c. 10. [c] Vicus inſignis maritimus variis opibus refertus, II. c. 30.

Long

Long time after reverting to the crown Edward III. as I have heard granted it to Robert de Ufford earl of Suffolk. Nor muſt I omit Bedingfield in this neighbourhood, which gave name to a famous antient family that derived much of its renown from a heir of the family of Tudenham. Thence through Flixton or Felixton, called like many other places in this county from Fœlix the firſt biſhop, the Waveney runs down to, and in a manner ſurrounds Bungey, where Hugh Bigod fortified a caſtle both by natural and artificial works when the ſeditious barons involved England in rebellion. Of the impregnability of this caſtle he uſed this boaſt,

Were I in my caſtle of Bungey
Upon the river of Waveney
I would not care for the king of Cockeney.

But he was glad to redeem it from deſtruction by a large ſum of money and hoſtages given to Henry II. Not far from the bank is Mettingham, where on a plain was built a ſquare caſtle with a college by John ſurnamed de Norwich lord of the place, whoſe daughter afterwards heireſs of the family married Robert Ufford, earl of Suffolk, to whom ſhe brought a fair eſtate.

The Waveney approaching the ſea after in vain attempting to make itſelf two ways to it, one with the river Yare, the other through Luthing lake, forms a conſiderable peninſula called by ſome Loving land, by others more properly Luthingland, from the extenſive lake of Luthing, which beginning at the coaſt empties itſelf into the Yare. On the entrance of this is Leſtoffe a narrow town overhanging the ſea; and at its egreſs Gorlſton, where I ſaw the tower of a ruined monaſtery, ſerving as a ſea mark. Further in on the Yare is Somerley antiently the ſeat, as I was told, of Fitz Oſbert, from whom deſcended the famous and knightly family of the Fernegans. Higher up where the Yare and Waveney join is Cnobersburg, which Bede[c] tranſlates Cnober's city, now called Burgh Caſtle. Bede ſays the neighbouring woods and ſea made it a moſt pleaſant caſtle in which was a monaſtery built by Furſæus a Scot, by whoſe advice Sigibert king of the Eaſt Angles embraced a religious life, and abdicated the crown; but being afterwards dragged out of this houſe againſt his will to encourage his ſoldiers againſt the Mercians, he was ſlain with his men. Now there remain only ragged walls of a ſquare form built of flint and Britiſh bricks, and overrun with buſhes and brambles, among which Roman coins are now and then found: ſo that theſe fortifications ſeem to have been raiſed by the Romans on the river Garienis to repel the Saxon pirates, or rather to have been GARIANONUM itſelf, where the Stableſian horſe were ſtationed.

Suffolk has had earls and dukes of ſeveral families. Some late writers ſay the Glanvilles were antiently diſtinguiſhed by this title, but as they have no authority for this, and as the error is obvious, and I have found nothing of it in the public records, I ſhall, till better informed, ſuſpend my aſſent. I acknowledge, however, the Glanville family was of great note in theſe parts. But I have not yet found good evidence for any earl of this county before the time of Edward III. That prince created earl of Suffolk Robert Ufford[d], a man of great name both in the cabinet and field, ſon of Robert Ufford[e], ſteward of the houſehold[f] under Edward II. by Cecily de Valoines, lady of Orford. He was ſucceeded by his ſon William, whoſe four ſons dying before him, and himſelf ſuddenly[g] in the parliament houſe while he was reporting a reſolution of the Commons, Robert Willughby, Roger Lord Scales, and Henry Ferrars of Groby, his next of kin, divided his eſtate. Richard II. advanced to this title and the chancellorſhip of England Michael de la Pole * a merchant, who, "following his father's pro-" feſſion applied himſelf more to trade than military " affairs," if we believe Thomas Walſingham †. He was[h] ſon of William de la Pole, who was firſt mayor of Kingſton upon Hull ‡, and on account of his wealth created a banneret by Edward III. But being unequal to his ſudden proſperity was forced to fly his country, and died abroad[i]. We are not, however, to conſider trade as derogatory to nobility: for who does not know that the ſons of noblemen have applied themſelves to merchandize? nor muſt it be denied that he though a merchant was nobly deſcended. His ſon Michael was reſtored[k] and had a ſon Michael ſlain at Agincourt[l], and William, whom Henry VI. from earl made firſt marquis of Suffolk[m], conferring the title on "him and the heirs male " of his body, with licence to him and them to bear " a golden rod having on its top a dove at the co-" ronation of the kings of England, and a like ivory " rod at the coronation of the Queens." Afterwards for his merit he created him duke of Suffolk. He was certainly an eminent and worthy man; for when his father and three brothers loſt their lives in the ſervice of their country in the French war, he, as the Parliament Rolls 28 Henry VI. ſet forth, ſerved full 34 years in the ſaid war, for 17 of which he never quitted the ſervice to come home, and being made priſoner while only a knight gave £. 20000 ſterling for his ranſom, was 15 years privy counſellor, and 30 years companion of the Order of the Garter. His credit with his ſovereign drew on him the envy of the people[n], and being baniſhed the kingdom for trifling charges not at all made out, was overtaken by his enemies at ſea, and beheaded[o]. He left a ſon John who married[p] the ſiſter of Edward IV. and by her had John earl of Lincoln, who, being declared heir to the crown by Richard III. could not curb his ambition from breaking out againſt Henry VI. to his own ruin, being cut off in a civil war[q], and occaſioned his father's death[r] through exceſs of grief, and the utter extinction of his whole

* Lel. Com. in Cyg. Cant. † p. 358. Chron. mon. de Melſa. ‡ See Hull in Yorkſhire.

[c] III. 19. [d] He died 43 E. III. Dugd. Bar. II. 47. [e] He died 10 Edward II.

[f] This circumſtance has eſcaped Dugdale II. 47. [g] 1382. 5 R. 22. Ib. 49. Inq. 5 R. II.

[h] Dugd. II. 18. Brook's Cat. 499. and Diſcov. p. 36. 57, 58, 59.

[i] 12 R. II. [k] and died at the ſiege of Harfleur 1419. H. Dugd. ex Walſingh.

[l] within a month, and buried at Ewelme. Ib. 186. [m] and earl of Pembroke. H. 21 H. VI. Dugd. 187, 188.

[n] Michael De la Pole being vehemently accuſed of treaſon and miſpriſion, and on that account ſummoned to appear before the king and lords in parliament aſſembled, after having anſwered the articles objected he referred himſelf to the king's order. Whereupon the Chancellor by his Majeſty's ſpecial command pronounced, that whereas the duke did not put himſelf on his peers, the king (as for what related to the articles of treaſon), would remain doubtful; and with reſpect to thoſe of miſpriſion, not as a judge by advice of the lords, but as a perſon to whoſe order the duke had voluntarily ſubmitted himſelf, did ba..iſh him from the realm and all other his dominions for ever. Holland.

[o] 1448, buried at Wingfield. His wife Alice, daughter of Geoffrey Chaucer, died 1475, and was buried at Ewelme. Ib.

[p] Elizabeth. Ib. [q] Slain at the battle of Stoke 1487. Ib. [r] 1491. Ib.

family at once. For his brother Edmund, who took the title of earl of Suffolk, and fled into Flanders, forming new deſigns againſt Henry VII. (who oftener contented himſelf with ſubmiſſion than puniſhment, and had forgiven him the greateſt crimes), and ſoon after, contrary to the right of hoſpitality as was then pretended, was by Philip of Auſtria duke of Burgundy put into the hands of that prince, who promiſed in the moſt ſolemn manner to ſpare his life, but confined him in priſon. Henry VIII. not thinking himſelf bound by his father's word in his firſt deſigns upon France put him to death. His younger brother Richard, an exile in France, aſſumed the title of duke of Suffolk, being the laſt male heir that I know of this family, and fell bravely fighting among the thickeſt of the enemy at the battle of Pavia, in which Francis I. king of France was taken 1524. The duke of Bourbon, though his enemy honoured him for his valor with a ſumptuous funeral, aſſiſting at it himſelf in mourning. Afterwards[s] Henry VIII. conferred the title of duke of Suffolk on Charles Brandon, to whom he had given to wife his own ſiſter Mary widow of Lewis XII. king of France[t]. He was ſucceeded by his infant ſon Henry, and he by his brother Charles, who both dying of the ſweating ſickneſs[u] 1551. Edward VI.[x] created Henry Grey marquis of Dorcheſter duke of Suffolk, who had married their ſiſter. He did not long enjoy the title, being beheaded by queen Mary for his daughter's aſpiring to the crown, and was the laſt duke of Suffolk. The title lay dormant till lately king James, in the firſt year of his reign, created earl of Suffolk Thomas lord Howard of Walden ſecond ſon of Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk, whom, for his known fidelity and valor he had made a lord of his bed-chamber.

This county contains 575 pariſhes.

[s] 5 Henry. VIII. Dugd. II. 299. He died 1545, buried at Windſor. Ib.
[t] and granted him all honor and manors forfeited by Edmund earl of Suffolk. H. Dugd. Ib.
[u] on one day. Ib.
[x] 5 Edward VI. Dugd. I. 721.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

MR. Horſley obſerves, that according to Cæſar and Tacitus the Trinobantes, Iceni, and Brigantes poſſeſſed the whole eaſt part of England, at leaſt they mention no more. He is much of opinion that Cæſar's Cenimagni[a] ſhould be read Iceni, Cangi, or rather Iceni, Regni, for the Cangi ſeem to have been too diſtant to have ſubmitted to Cæſar on this occaſion, and as the Regni according to Ptolemy joined to Cantium, this is more probable[b]. Lipſius on Tacitus Ann. XII. 32. pays Cæſar the compliment of adopting Iceni, Cangi. The Cangi ſeem to have lain weſt or north-weſt from the Iceni; for the Romans, under Oſtorius, after defeating the latter, marched through the country of the former, croſſing the iſland more northward to the coaſt oppoſite Ireland[c]. The intermediate tract might be ſubject to the Iceni. If they extended farther weſt than is uſually ſuppoſed, as Dr. Plot[d] would have them, the Cangi might reach to Cheſhire or the borders of Wales: but I cannot think the Iceni reached ſo far. Some except to the derivation of the name from the form of the country, which the maps make rather ſquare, and ſir Henry Spelman deduces it from the famous river Iſe, eſpecially if the Britans called it Ichen; and the change of ſ into c may be eaſily juſtified, if it be true that in Britiſh inſtead of the Greek σ they uſe ch; ſo Ichen for Ισην, Soch for Συς, Buch for Βυς, &c. Then he goes on to derive Iſe from the goddeſs Iſis, the ſame with Ceres and Proſerpine, two infernal deities worſhipped by the Britans according to Strabo[e]. Baxter ſays the Iceni, whom Bede calls Huiccia, are derived from Uic or Uicon, giants or brave men according to Tacitus's idea of valida gens; and he takes the Icenimagni for a part of this nation whom he ſpreads quite to Lincolnſhire. The Iceni he adds were ranked in the Provincia Flavia in the time of Conſtantine; but afterwards in the Britania ſecunda as in the Notitia[f]. Salmon is for retaining the etymology from Iken, and confines the Iceni to Norfolk and Suffolk[g].

The county of Suffolk extends from eaſt to weſt 52 miles, but the general breadth does not exceed 20 miles, except on the eaſt ſide, where it runs out in a corner towards Yarmouth. It is 196 miles in compaſs, contains 29 market towns, 22 hundreds, and 575 pariſhes[h]. The preſent general diviſion is into the franchiſe or liberty of St. Edmund and the Geldable; the firſt contains the weſtern, the other the eaſtern part of the county, each furniſhing a diſtinct grand jury at the aſſizes[i]. The inhabitants divide it alſo into High and Low Suffolk[i]. As to eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction that was not granted in thoſe antient times by the kings but by popes, and there appear not the leaſt traces or pretences of exemption from the ordinary juriſdiction of the biſhop of Norwich, many of the churches or eſtates in this county belonging to the church of Ely[k].

The principal landholders in Suffolk at the Domeſday ſurvey were, beſides the king, the earls Mortaigne, Euſtace, Hugh, Robert Malet, Roger Bigot, Roger of Poictou, W. de Scoies, Hermer de Ferrars, Ralph de Bellofago, Frodo the abbot's brother, Godric and Eudo Dapifer, the abbots of Bury, Ramſey, Ely, Bernay, Ceterith; the archbiſhop of L ; the biſhops of Bayeux, Thetford, Rouen, Evreux; Richard ſon of earl Gilbert, William de Warren, Suene of Eſſex, Roger de Otburvill and his brother William, Hugh de Montfort, Geofrey de Magnaville, Ralph Baynard, Ranulph Peverell, Aubry de Vere, Robert Greno, Peter de Valoignes, Roger de Raines, Ranulph Fitz-Ilger, Robert Fitz Corbucion, Ralph de Limeſey, Robert Todeney, Walter Gifart, the counteſs of Albemarle, William de Archis, Drogo de Beureria, Hugh de Grenteſmeſnil, Ralph de Felgers, Walter de St. Walery, Eudo Fitz Spirvic, W. de Watevill, John Fitz Waleran, Humphrey Fitz Aubrey, Hugh de Monchenſi, &c. &c.

The ſoil is rich, abounding in corn and graſs, but along the coaſt for five or ſix miles into the land it is heathy and full of bleak hills which yield plenty of rye, peaſe, and hemp, and feed many ſheep; the moſt inland part, commonly called High Suffolk, or the woodlands, is clay ground. The S. parts towards Cambridgeſhire and Eſſex are of the ſame nature; but the parts about Bury to the north-weſt are open, and abound with all ſorts of good corn.

Ixning.

Ixning in Edward I's time gave name to a half hundred which took in the north part of Newmarket. This part is in Ixning pariſh, as rightly obſerved by Mr. Camden, though corrected by biſhop Gibſon; the other has a church of its own, which as well as Ixning church belonged to Battel abbey[k]. Newmarket has alſo a chapel in Wood Ditton pariſh, ſubject to its church[l]. Newmarket gave birth to Thomas Merks or de Novo Mercatu, biſhop of Carliſle, famous for his ſteady adherence to Richard II. for which he was degraded to be titular biſhop of Samos and vicar of Sturminſter Marſhall Dorſet. He died 1409[m].

Villa Fauſtini.

Mr. Ward removes VILLA FAUSTINI to Dunmow, which anſwers to the diſtance of 25 miles from Colonia[n]. Baxter keeps it to St. Edmund's Bury, but not admitting it to be the name of a particular perſon's ſeat, reads it Fauſtina, q. d. a happy, pleaſant, or fruitful town, anſwering to the Saxon Beopic, though all the monkiſh writes and regiſters give it to Beodric, and make him give it to king Edmund[o]. St. Ethelbert, king of the Eaſt Angles, wrought his miracles A. D. 793, 60 years after Sigebert founded the monaſtery here[p]. After king Edmund was buried here, ſeveral ſecular prieſts, from ſeven to nineteen, ſettling in the town, built a new church to his honour, and had a college founded by Athelſtan about 925[q]. They continued here till Canute refounding the monaſtery introduced Benedictine monks from Hulme in Norfolk. They were endowed with ſo many eſtates, royalties, and immunities, by him and ſucceeding kings of England, that this abbey was inferior to none as to ſituation, buildings, eccleſiaſtical exemptions, or civil franchiſes and liberties, and its annual income was £.1660. Canute's church was begun 1021, finiſhed 1032[r]. The ditch which Canute is ſaid to have drawn round St. Edmund's Bury was confined to the abbey precinct, and

St. Edmund's Bury.

[a] B. G. V. 21. [b] P. 17. [c] Horſl. p. 31. Tac. Ann. XII. 32.
[d] Staff. x. c. 3. [e] Spelman Icenia, princ. [f] Gloſſ. in v. [g] New ſurvey, 155. [h] Mag. Brit. V. 171.
[i] G. [i] Mag. Brit. [k] G. [k] See Ecton. 325. [l] Ib. 324.
[m] Hutchins' Dorſet II. 133. [n] Horſley Brit. Rom. p. 428. [o] Batteley Antiq. St. Edm. Burgi. p. 5.
[p] Batteley, Ib. 11. [q] Batt. 28, 29. and aut. ib. cit. app. p. 225. Tan. 504. [r] Bat. 7. 35, 36.

is ſtill to be diſcerned without the ſouth gate of the town towards the almonry barn, the other parts being defended by a wall or marſhes [s]. The old wooden church was pulled down; and a new one built 1065. Hervey the ſacriſt (not abbot as Camden miſtakes) about 1130 ſurrounded both the church and the town with a wall, and laid out much money in buildings [t]. Biſhop Gibſon ſays, ever ſince the Reformation this place has been under the juriſdiction of the ſee of Norwich. This juriſdiction is not now, nor ſeems ever to have been allowed. The abbot and monaſtery were exempt from it: and the ſecond charter of James I. confirms to the corporation the privileges which the abbot had enjoyed in this and other reſpects, and it may be queſtioned whether the juriſdiction of the archbiſhop was provided for as Camden ſays, when that of the biſhop was given away ſo long before the Reformation, ſeeing the bulls of exemption of this abbey are as much againſt the archbiſhop's as the biſhop's juriſdiction, and it appears that when ſome of the archbiſhops as legates made attempts on their privileges, the monks obtained other reſcripts, reſtraining the archbiſhops, even under that character, and ſubjecting the abbey immediately to the court of Rome [u]. Malmeſbury ſays this privilege was obtained by abbot Leofſtan, but the author of Bury regiſter acknowledges if this was ever obtained it was totally forgotten [v]. It was a mitred abbey. The great church was 500 feet long and 183 broad, and had two round octagon towers at the weſt front as well as a ſquare one in the middle: the tranſepts 212 feet long, and the weſt front 240 feet wide, having two large chapels of St. Faith and St. Catharine on each ſide. At the eaſt end, which was circular, was St. Edmund's ſhrine, richly adorned with gold and jewels: and beyond that a little chapel of the Virgin Mary. On the north ſide of the choir was the Lady chapel, 80 feet long and 42 broad, and under it that of St. Mary in Cryptis, 100 feet by 80, ſupported by twenty-four pillars. Beſides the centre tower there was a lofty weſt tower, and it is not improbable Ely minſter was built on the ſame model, biſhop Hugh Norwold who built it having been abbot here [x]. The walls were of flint and boulder, immenſely thick, caſed with hewn ſtone from Bernak quarries in Northamptonſhire. The weſt front with the doors and windows, part of St. Catharine's chapel, and one of the octagon towers, and the pillars of the centre tower remain. The foundations were uncovered about 1772, and the whole area traceable. Here were buried Alan earl of Bretagne; Richard, the Conqueror's nephew; Thomas Brotherton earl of Norfolk, 5th ſon of Edward I; Thomas Beaufort duke of Exeter ſon of John of Gaunt, and half brother to Henry IV; William earl of Stafford, and Lydgate the poet. Beaufort's body was ſuppoſed to be diſcovered 1772 in clearing the foundations incloſed in a caſe of lead exactly fitted to the body, and wrapt in cerecloths, retaining the exact maſk of the face in perfect preſervation, and was depoſited there again [y]; yet there is good reaſon to doubt whether it was actually his body [z]. Here alſo was interred Mary, third daughter of Henry VII. firſt married to Louis XII. and afterwards to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. She died at her manor of Weſthorpe in this neighbourhood 1533. At the diſſolution of the abbey her corpſe was removed into St. Mary's church adjoining, where it now lies under a plain altar tomb on the north ſide of the communion table. Some years ago this tomb was opened, when her leaden coffin was found thus inſcribed, "Mary queen 1533 of France, Edmund H." In 1759 when the coffin of the French queen was accurately examined, "Edmund H." was not obſerved upon it. A ſtone with the name of Lydgate was found in the abbey ruins 1774 [a]. The monaſtery conſiſted of an abbot, 80 monks, and 15 chaplains, a decanus chriſtianitatis, and an archdeacon, who was ſacriſt, and above 40 clergy officiating in the church and chapels in the town which amounted to above 40. Wills were proved in the abbot's court, and in moſt places he acted as epiſcopus loci: a bull 1172 gave him epiſcopal power a mile round the town every way. The revenues were 52¾ knights fees, with temporal juriſdiction in eight hundreds and an half. The high ſteward and ſeneſchallus libertatis, and all other officers, judges, juſtices, &c. were made by the abbot. He had alſo the nomination of the alderman or ſeneſchal, who with the other magiſtrates, bailiffs, &c. of the town, took an oath of obedience and fealty to him. St. Mary's and St. James's churches two very handſome ſtructures in the abbey church-yard were built, the firſt by abbot Anſelm 1121-1148, rebuilt t. Edward VI. the other 1121, rebuilt 1430. The yard is entered by a noble Saxon gate, now uſed as a ſteeple to St. James's church. Another gate of later and more elegant workmanſhip opens into the abbey precinct. Within are a few remains of the monaſtic buildings. Of the innumerable chapels ſcattered all over the town there are remains in every ſtreet. The Grey friars had a houſe here 1257, afterwards removed out of the town [b], and here were four hoſpitals, all ſuppreſſed. One of them for aged perſons and lepers, built by abbot Anſelm out of Riſby gate, valued at £. 10. 18s. ſubſiſting 1551 [c]; St. Saviour's out of the north gate about 1181, valued at 153 marks [d]. The parliament that condemned Duke Humphrey met in it [e]. A third, dedicated to St. Nicholas, out of the weſt gate, valued at £.6. 19s. 11d. [f] and a fourth called St. John's hoſpital or Domus Dei out of the ſouth gate [g]. Another was founded by Dr. Clopton 1730, for ſix poor men and women, and a freeſchool by Edward VI. The Bridewell was the Jews ſynagogue, and the workhouſe Jeſus college. The town is pleaſantly ſituated and much reſorted to by the neighbouring gentry; and an act paſſed 11-12 William III. to make the river Lark navigable to it [h]. All the gates were taken down 1761. Bury gave birth to Richard Aungervylle biſhop of Durham 1284, who died 1345; to Stephen Gardner 1483 biſhop of Wincheſter, who died 1555; and to William Clagget 1646, who died 1688.

Within the bounds of Bury, John Symonds, LL.D. Profeſſor of modern Hiſtory and Languages in the univerſity of Cambridge, built in 1773 a very elegant ſeat from a plan of Mr. Adam; he has called it St. Edmund's Hill, from the beautiful eminence on which it ſtands. Few ſpots in Suffolk command ſo extenſive and pleaſing a proſpect.

Barton. Near this on the north is Barton, formerly belonging to ſir Thomas Hanmer, ſpeaker of the Houſe of [s] Bat. Ib. 41.

[t] Bat. 68. app. 147. ex Monaſt. Ang. I. 300.
[u] G. [v] Batteley, 43. [x] Willis I. 84. Green's deſc. of Bury, 42. Mr. King's plan and account, Archæol. III. 311.
[y] Phil. Tranſ. LXII. art. 33. Archæol. III. p. 313. [z] See Royal and Noble Wills, p. 265.
[a] Archæol. IV. 130. [b] Tan. 527. [c] Ib. 515. See a print and account of it, Antiq. Rep. IV. p. 57.
[d] Ib. 521. The ſhell of its chapel was remaining till lately.
[e] Sandford, p. 317. [f] Tan. 525. [g] Ib. 529. [h] G.

Commons, in right of his ſecond lady, the heireſs of Thomas Folkes, eſq. Sir Charles Bunbury, bart. reſides here in a good houſe, much improved by himſelf and his father, who inherited this and other conſiderable eſtates from his uncle ſir Thomas abovementioned.

On the ſouth-weſt ſtands Hardwick houſe, on a pleaſant extraparochial ſpot, juſt without the bounds of Bury. It was formerly one of the country houſes of the abbot, and granted after the diſſolution of the abbey to the antient and opulent family of the Druries. It was purchaſed above a century ago by ſir Thomas Cullum, bart. and is now the reſidence of his deſcendant the reverend ſir John Cullum, bart. to whom I am indebted for much information reſpecting this county. The family of Drury (which ſignifies in old Engliſh a precious jewel), hath been of great reputation at Thurſton, at Halſted and Rougham, and elſewhere, more eſpecially ſince they were married with the heireſs of Freſil of Saxham [h].

At Great Welnetham near Bury were found in the beginning of this century abundance of potſherds and pateræ, ſome with inſcriptions, coals, bones of ſheep and oxen, and horns, a ſacrificing knife, urns, and aſhes [s]. Sir Richard Gipps, a gentleman of an antient and reſpectable family in this county, and well verſed in its antiquities, reſided here. He died in the maner-houſe December 21, 1708, and was buried in the church without an epitaph.

In the chapel of St. Thomas the Martyr here were placed before 2 Edward I. a prior and convent of Crouched Friars ſubordinate to the head houſe of that order near the tower of London [i].

The family of the Jermyns were ſeated at Ruſhbrook as early as the beginning of the 13th century having obtained it by marriage with a daughter of Ruſhbrook of this place, an anceſtor of the preſent Barham Ruſhbrook of Mildenhall, eſq. Henry was created lord Jermyn of St. Edmund's Bury in 1643, and earl of St. Alban's in 1660. He was maſter of the horſe to Henrietta Maria, and probably married to her [k]. He died without iſſue 1683, and the barony deſcended to his eldeſt nephew Thomas, whoſe only ſon was killed by the maſt of a ſhip in 1692, at the age of 15; upon which the eſtate here came to ſir Robert Davers, bart. who married Mary the eldeſt of his five daughters, and it is now enjoyed by his grandſon ſir Charles. Henry, the earl of St. Alban's' younger nephew, was created baron Dover in 1685, and died without iſſue at Chevely in Cambridgeſhire 1708; ſo that no leſs than three peerages, an earldom, and two baronies, became extinct in this family in the ſpace of 25 years; and as the preſent poſſeſſor of the noble manſion and the eſtate is the laſt heir male of his family, if he dies without iſſue they will deſcend to the iſſue of his ſiſter the preſent counteſs of Briſtol.

Ixworth is a neat thoroughfare town, remarkable for ſome excellent walls made of flint ſtones that are dug up plentifully in the neighbouring chalk-pits. The priory was founded for black canons by Gilbert de Blund, who came in with the Conqueror, and was valued at £.168. 19*s*. per ann. [l] The ſcite of it ſeems to have been moated round.

About Icklingham alſo the ſame ſort of flints is diſcovered; and it is ſaid that in digging through the Devil's ditch on Newmarket heath near Ixning, they met with ſome antient pieces which Batteley was told [m] were coins of Roman emperors. Mr. Martin had ſome Roman coins and fibulæ found here 1720 [n]. At Icklingham Mr. Ward [o] places CAMBORITUM. The road from Ad Anſam croſſes a great bank and ditch half a mile from the ford. Kentfield is corrupted from Campfield; there is alſo Rampart field; coins are found in plenty, and a leaden ciſtern containing 16 gallons ornamented as with hoops [p]. Weſt of the camp on Warren hill are three ditcht barrows. There are two contiguous pariſhes of the name of Ixning. The church of the one is dedicated to All Saints; of the other to St. James. In the former, within the rails of the communion table and about the chancel is a conſiderable quantity of Roman bricks or tiles, which were ſome years ago ploughed up in a neighbouring field, and placed as a pavement here for their preſervation. They are of different ſhapes, ſlightly traced with the figures of animals, flowers, human faces, &c. Some few of them are vitrified. Roman coins are ſtill ploughed up in the ſandy fields about theſe villages, one of which gave birth to John Michell lord mayor of London, 3 Henry VI. At Temple bridge here, Spencer, the gallant biſhop of Norwich, apprehended and executed three ringleaders of the inſurrection 1381.

Stow Langtoft.

At Stow Langtoft on the Thet near Ixworth was Stow Hall the ſeat of ſir Symonds D'Ewes, that great antiquary, who died 18 April, 1650, and is ſaid to have been buried here, though no memorial of him is extant in the church, and the regiſter of that time has not been preſerved. Part of his manſion-houſe, which t. Edward III. belonged to the Peches, was pulled down ſeveral years ago; but the remainder in 1782 received great additions and improvements from the preſent proprietor ſir Walter Rawlinſon, knight, who inherits it from his father ſir Thomas, lord mayor of London in 1754, by whom the whole pariſh was purchaſed in 1760. In the houſe was formerly this diſtich

Quingenis annis Stowlangtoft quinque tenerunt [q]
Stirpes; poſtremæ det Deus uſque frui.

The five families were Luvell, Langtoft, Peche, Davy alias Aſhfield, D'Ewes. The latter name poſſeſſed the eſtate from 1612 to 1731, when the title of baronet and the name became extinct. The Nortons owned it for ſome years before ſir Thomas Rawlinſon bought it. The church, which is a handſome building, ſtands within a double trenched camp; and in a field half a mile below was found in 1764 a pot full of Roman coins of the lower empire. A fine teſſelated pavement was diſcovered in the adjoining pariſh of Pakenham, in a farm called Red Caſtle.

Aſhfield.

Near Stow Langtoft is Aſhfield, that gives the title of baron to lord Thurlow, who there inherits a ſmall patrimony from his mother, whoſe name was Smith, a name long known and well reſpected in theſe parts.

Ickworth.

South-weſt from hence is Ickworth. This is reckoned before among the places that ſtill retain the name of the Iceni, and the antiquity of this place is confirmed by archdeacon Batteley's account of a large pot of Roman money found there. It is the ſeat of Frederick Hervey earl of Briſtol, and biſhop of Derry, whoſe family have been ſeated here ever ſince the reign of Henry VII. by marriage with the heireſs of Henry Drury. John Hervey was created baron of Ickworth 1703, and earl of Briſtol 1 Geo. I. The park is eleven miles in circuit, well wooded, and contains 1800 acres.

Great Saxham.

Contiguous to Ickworth are the two pariſhes of Great and Little Saxham. The former for ſeveral deſcents belonged to the family of Eldred, one of whom John, a merchant and great traveller, and alderman of London, built the houſe (long known by the name of Nutmeg Hall) in the reign of James I. His ſon Revett

[h] Holland. [s] G. [i] Tan. 533. [k] Sir John Rereſby's Memoirs. [l] Tan. 511.
[m] P. 41. [n] Ant. Soc. Min. [o] Horſl. Brit. Rom. p. 430. [p] Salm. 160. [q] for tenuerunt.

Eldred was created baronet in 1641. It continued in this family till about 1750, when it was purchaſed by Hutchinſon Mure, eſq. the preſent proprietor, who has greatly improved and embelliſhed his domains. The old houſe was accidentally burnt down in 1779, and a new one begun north-weſt of it the year after, from a plan of Mr. Adam.

Little Saxham. Little Saxham was long the reſidence of the antient family of Lucas, which was ſucceeded by that of Crofts as early as the reign of Elizabeth, and the eſtate is ſtill veſted in Richard Crofts, eſq. of Herling in Norfolk. The old houſe (to which lord Crofts had added a grand apartment for the reception of Charles II.) was pulled down in 1771. It was of brick, built probably in the reign of Henry VII. and as found at its deſtruction as at its erection. The church is remarkable for its handſome round ſteeple, and for a well-executed monument for lord Crofts, created by Charles II. at Breda 1658 baron Crofts of Saxham. The painted glaſs in the eaſt window of the chancel was brought from the old hall.

Barrow. In the pariſh church of Barrow, which with its excellent and well ſituated parſonage are agreeably viewed from the turnpike road from Newmarket to Bury, between the 69 and 70 mile ſtones from London, is the monument of Sir Clement Higham, the laſt Roman catholic ſpeaker of the Houſe of Commons in the time of queen Mary. Here too the turnpike road is, unfortunately for the repoſe of ſome brave warriors, carried through a tumulus or barrow, in which human bones may at any time with very little trouble be diſcovered.

Dalham. In Dalham pariſh, on one of the higheſt ſpots in the county, Simon Patrick biſhop of Ely built a good houſe, from which he had a view of his cathedral church. Soon after his death it became the property of the Affleck family, and is now poſſeſſed by Gilbert Affleck, eſq. who was ſeveral times elected member for the county.

Cowling. At Cowlinge, contiguous to Dalham, —— Dickens, eſq. reſides in a good houſe, which commands a fine view of the venerable remains of Kirtling in Cambridgeſhire, the antient ſeat of the North family.

Fornham St. Martin. At Fornham St. Martin ſome tumuli are ſtill to be ſeen in a meadow about a quarter of a mile ſouth of the church. In this pariſh the reverend Mr. Ord has a pleaſant ſeat. Contiguous to this are two other pariſhes of the ſame name, diſtinguiſhed by the names of the ſaints to whom their churches are dedicated, All Saints and St. Genovieve. In the former William Moſeley, eſq. has lately much enlarged his houſe. In the latter ſir Charles Kent, bart. has greatly embelliſhed his reſidence and its environs under the auſpices of Mr. Brown.

Mildenhall. Four miles from Icklingham is Mildenhall, a large market town with a handſome church.

Hengrave. Hengrave came from the Kitſons by marriage to the Warines earl of Bath, and now belongs to ſir Thomas Gage, bart. The houſe was built in 1538 by ſir Thomas Kitſon, who had been ſheriff of London. It is of brick and ſtone, and the gateway of ſuch ſingular beauty and in ſuch high preſervation, that perhaps a more elegant ſpecimen of the architecture of that age can ſcarcely be ſeen. The founder's portrait (with ſeveral other curious ones) is ſtill preſerved in the hall. Thomas lord Darcy of Chich, afterwards viſcount Colcheſter, and in 1626 earl Rivers, married a granddaughter of the founder, and his daughter the lady Penelope married ſir John Gage of Firle in Suſſex, and gave this ſeat and eſtate to her ſecond ſon Edward Gage, who was created a baronet in 1662, had five wives, and died in 1707, aged 90. The preſent poſſeſſor Thomas is only ſon of ſir Thomas Rookwood Gage, bart. the deſcendant of ſir Edward. From the lady Penelope's eldeſt ſon the preſent lord Gage is deſcended. The ſmall adjoining church is crowded with monuments for the Kitſons, for John Bourchier earl of Bath, who married one of their widows, for his ſon John lord Fitz-Warren, who married one of his mother-in-law's daughters, for earl Rivers's ſon Thomas, and for ſeveral of the Gages.

Culford Culford belongs to, and is the chief country reſidence of earl Cornwallis; the widow of one of whoſe anceſtors married ſir Nathaniel Bacon half brother to ſir Francis. It is a neat comfortable houſe, and agreeably ſituated in a park. It was built in 1591 by ſir Nicholas Bacon, the firſt baronet of England, eldeſt ſon of the lord keeper, and half brother to the lord chancellor, and was given by him to his ſeventh ſon Nathaniel, with an eſtate of £.1000 a year. Nathaniel was created Knight of the Bath at the coronation of Charles I. He married Jane Meautys, widow of ſir William Cornwallis, knight of the Bath[r], by whom he had a ſon who died without iſſue; and a daughter married firſt to ſir Thomas Meautys, knight, and afterwards to ſir Harbottle Grimſton, bart. Sir Nathaniel was an eminent painter, and an uncommon ornament of his profeſſion: ſome ſpecimens of his art ſtill remaining at Gorhambury. He is buried in the church here, where is a very good marble buſt of him, with an epitaph, which informs us, that he was well ſkilled in the hiſtory of plants, and in delineating them with his pencil. His lady is alſo buried here, with an inſcription, giving her a great character, as having ſupported and ſaved from ruin in times of great diſtreſs two antient families into which ſhe had been married. The Cornwallis family have certainly obligations to her; for this houſe and eſtate could not have deſcended to them by inheritance. The ſmall neat church was built by ſir Stephen Fox, whoſe daughter was the wife of the third lord Cornwallis.

Lidgate Lidgate church is ſituated on a hill remarkably bold for this part of the country, and ſtrongly intrenched with a deep ditch. Here was undoubtedly a caſtle, of which hiſtory has preſerved no account. The inhabitants call it, as uſual, King John's Caſtle. Its ruins are to this day dug up to repair the roads in its dirty neighbourhood.

Lydgate poet. Lydgate, our ſecond poet after Chaucer, was educated at Oxford, and a monk of Bury. As he took orders 1388, he was probably born about 1367. He ſtudied in the univerſities of France and Italy, and at his return had ſeveral noble pupils. He formed himſelf on the models of Dante, Boccacio, and Alain Chartier, whoſe works he tranſlated. He was prior of Hatfield Broad-oak 1423, and died 1440 or 1446, æt. 60[s]. He was buried in Bury abbey, with this epitaph:

Mortuus ſeclo ſuperis ſuperſtes
Hic jacet Lydgate tumulatus urna,
Cui fuit quondam celebris Britanniæ
Fama poeſis.

His numerous writings ſcattered about our libraries have never yet been collected into a volume. Only his ſiege of Thebes was publiſhed among Chaucer's works and his deſtruction of Troy, London, 1513, fol.[t]

[r] Mr. Walpole is miſtaken in ſaying he married a daughter of ſir Thomas Greſham; it was his uncle.
[s] Tanner B. B. or 80 according to my computation.
[t] Warton's Hiſt. of Eng. Poetry, II. 52.

Clare is a ſmall market town, having the ruins of a ſtrong caſtle, and a Benedictine priory, founded 1090 by Gilbert de Clare, whoſe ſon Richard removed it to Stoke by Clare 1124 [u], and Edmund Mortimer earl of March 1415, changed it into a college for ſecular prieſts, under a dean, ſix prebends, &c. valued at £.334. per ann. Archbiſhop Parker was the laſt dean at its diſſolution 1545 [x]. At Clare was alſo an Auſtin priory, founded 1248, probably by Richard de Clare, who firſt brought that order into England. The houſe is ſtill intire, and occupied by a farmer, and the chapel a barn [y]. Clare church is a large handſome building, ſaid to have been erected by an abbot of Bury [z]. In the priory church were buried beſides Joan of Acres and Lionel duke of Clarence and his wife, Edward Monthermer earl of Glouceſter and Hereford, ſon of Joan of Acres, Richard earl of Clare the founder, &c. The title of earl of Clare was revived in favour of ſir John Holles, lord Houghton of Houghton c. Nottingham, 22 James I. He was ſucceeded 1637 by his ſon John, and he 1665 by his ſon Gilbert, who died 1688, and whoſe eldeſt ſon John was created marquis of Clare and duke of Newcaſtle 1694, 6 William III. in which titles he was ſucceeded 1717 by his nephew Thomas Holles Pelham, who dying 1688, they are now extinct [a]. There is a very large barrow in a field juſt out of the town to the eaſt.

Cavendiſh gives birth and name to the family of the preſent duke of Devonſhire, of whom ſir John, lord chief juſtice, was beheaded by Straw's rebels. William the faithful ſervant of Wolſey was knighted by Henry VIII. and his ſecond ſon William was created firſt earl of Devonſhire by James I.

Haverill, ſix miles weſt of Clare, is a market town, partly within this county partly in Eſſex.

At Hundon or Honedon near Clare, were found 1687, in a grave, a conſiderable number of Saxon coins of Athelſtan, Eadred and Edmund, with different mint-maſters [b], which Dr. Wotton for want of attending to the names and places of coining, has given ſome very forced explanations of. In a building attached to the church is a noble pyramid of marble, erected to the memory of Arethuſa, wife of James Vernon, eſq. and daughter of lord Clifford, heir apparent of Richard earl of Burlington. She was the mother of the preſent earl of Shipbrooke, and died in 1728.

Contiguous to Hundon are the two pariſhes of Great and Little Thurlow. At the former the late Henry Vernon, eſq. elder brother of lord Shipbrooke, reſided in a good ſeat built by his father. The eſtate is now inherited by his ſon, a minor. At the latter ſir Stephen Soame, who had been lord mayor of London, built a noble houſe in the reign of Elizabeth, ſtill inherited by his deſcendant the reverend Henry Soame. Sir Stephen founded here a free-ſchool and an almſhouſe, and dying in 1619 was buried in the church under a ſumptuous monument. Here was a hoſpital dedicated to St. James t. Richard II. ſubject to the foreign hoſpital of Haurpas [c], Long Melford, ſo called from its great length, is a village moſt agreeably ſituated, and remarkable for a very beautiful church, the eaſt end of which was rebuilt in 1496 by the Cloptons and others, as appears by this inſcription on the battlements: "Pray for the ſoules of John Clopton and Richard Boteler, of whoſe goddys this chappell was built [d]." The clereſtory windows of the church contain the matches of the Cordalls and Cloptons. Near it is an hoſpital for twelve old men, founded and endowed with lands belonging to that of St. Saviour's by Bury, by ſir William Cordell, who was maſter of the Rolls in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth. He lies buried in the church under a ſumptuous monument, with a long poetical epitaph in Latin. His noble manſion built in the ſtyle of the Elizabethan age, with four ſmall round towers in front, ſtands near the road, and has not ſuffered any external alteration, though it has had various owners, ſince his death. It was the property of the late ſir Cordel Firebrace, bart. who dying without iſſue left it to his widow, who afterwards married the honourable William Campbell, uncle of the preſent duke of Argyle, of Leiſton-hall in Eſſex, and died 1782 upwards of 80 years old. On the north ſide of the pariſh is Kentwell hall, another noble houſe, formerly inhabited by the Cloptons, who were very antient inhabitants here, and of a very conſiderable family in this county. It is now the reſidence of Richard Moore, eſq. whoſe anceſtor purchaſed it about a century ago of the Robinſons, barts. of Beecles. At the ſouth end of the pariſh towards Sudbury is the old ſeat of the Martyns, barts. called Melford Place. The laſt of that family who reſided in it was ſir Roger, who died in 1762. It is now veſted in the name of Oliver.

Sudbury is a large market and borough town, Sudbury. where Edward III. firſt placed the foreign woollen manufactory. Simon Theobald, biſhop of London 1364, archbiſhop of Canterbury 1375, cruelly murdered 1381 in Wat Tyler's inſurrection, was born and buried here. His head is ſtill ſhewn in St. Gregory's church, the ſkin tanned, and the ears intire. It is not however clear whether it was not buried with his body at Canterbury, or whether his monument there be not rather as Weever thinks [e] a cenotaph, and the real place of his interment the north aile of St. Gregory's church here, at whoſe eaſt end is ſtill a long blue marble ſlab with a braſs croſs on it. He converted his family houſe juſt by this church into a college for ſecular prieſts, valued at £.122. per ann. [f] of which the walls and gate remain. He has the character of an amiable, prudent, and learned prelate [g]. Here was alſo a Benedictine priory [h], a houſe of black friars, now a private houſe [i], and an hoſpital [k], all diſſolved. The priory, of which Kirby has given a print, was pulled down in 1779. Sudbury gives name to one of the two archdeacons of this county. 4 An. an act paſſed to make the Stour navigable from Manningtree in Eſſex to this town [l].

Upon the ſame river Stour is Buers, where king Buers. Edmund was crowned, as we learn from Jeffery de Fontibus, in his hiſtory of that prince's infancy. "He was received with loud acclamations, and brought "on mens' ſhoulders into Suffolk, and declared king at "the town of Burum (ad villam Burum), the venera- "ble prelate Humbert anointing and conſecrating "him. This Burum is a town of old belonging to the "crown, the known boundary of Eſſex and Suf- "folk, ſituated on the Sture, a river equally rapid "in ſummer and winter." This paſſage explains the Burva mentioned by Aſſer [m] and the Buram of Florence of Worceſter, as a royal vill and reſidence, and the ſcene of this coronation which Bromton places at Bury [n], and Mr. Camden deceived by reſem-

[u] Tan. 509. [x] Ib. 514. Hiſt. of C. C. C. p. 80. [y] Tan. 527. Kirby's print. [z] Mag. Brit. 332.
[a] Dugd. II. 432. Mag. Brit. 239. [b] Phil. Tranſ. N° 189. 203. G. Mag. Brit. 343. 333. [c] Tan. 532.
[d] Mag. Brit. 184. 32[illegible]. [e] P. 743. [f] Tan. 509. [g] Godwin 117.
[h] Tan. 521. [i] Kirby's print. Tan. 524. [k] Ib. 529. [l] G.
[m] MS. Pub. Lib. Camb. and Bodl. Tan. 304. Of what age uncertain. [m] v. Alfr. p. 14. [n] P. 745.

blance

blance of names at Burne in Lincolnſhire, as if he had read Aſſer Burna. Mathew of Weſtminſter ad A. 855, moſt correctly of all expreſsly names it Bures by its preſent name [o]. It is a neat town on the Sture with a handſome church, in which lie buried ſeveral of the Waldegraves, whoſe antient ſeat at Smallbridge adjoining is now almoſt pulled down.

Neyland. Neyland is a ſmall market town in a village on the Stour having a manufacture of bays and ſays [p], and a handſome bridge over the Stour into Eſſex.

Stoke by Neyland. Stoke juxta Nayland is a ſmall village with a fair church, where are buried ſeveral of the Peytons of Boxford, the Mannocks, and the two wives of John Howard duke of Norfolk ſlain at Boſworth; and the ſteeple ſerves as a ſea mark. It gave birth to ſir William Capel a rich draper, and mayor of London 1503, who lent Henry VII. great ſums of money, and like the Fuſchers of Augſburg burnt the bonds. Here was a monaſtery in the 10th century, of which we hear only in earl Alfgar's daughter's will [q]. Tendring hall in this pariſh was the ſeat of the Howards and Windſors [r], now of the Rowleys.

COMBRETONIUM. Baxter [s] tranſlates COMBRETONIUM Camva ret tav, the bend of the river. Mr. Ward attached to the diſtances in Antoninus, though unwilling to remove it from the Breton, fixes it at Stretford near the conflux of the Breton and Stour, which Dr. Stukeley carries to AD ANSAM the next ſtation [t]. The only copy of Peutinger reads it Convetoris. Whence Mr. Camden got his Ad Covecin does not appear. There is a camp about a quarter of a mile ſouth-weſt of it.

Stratford. Stratford on the road from Colcheſter to Ipſwich, has a handſome church, on whoſe water table is inlaid in capitals this inſcription, moſt of it overgrown with moſs.

Praye for the ſoulis of Edward Mors and Alys hys wyf ——ultey rowlys anno domini)ꝛ730

Nettleſted. Thomas Wentworth of Nettleſted, was by Henry VIII. ſummoned to parliament, where ſat alſo his ſon Thomas, who was governor of Calais when taken by the French 5 Mar. 1558, for which he was attainted, but his ſentence reverſed in the following reign. His ſon Henry was created lord Wentworth of Nettleſted and earl of Cleveland 8 James I. [u]

Bretenham. Bretenham is now a ſmall village of no note. The family of the Wenyeves have reſided here for near two centuries, and a gentleman of that name ſtill inhabits a good houſe here, ſurrounded with a park.

Lavenham. On the banks of another brook that joins the Breton ſtands Lavenham or Laneham, an indifferent market and clothing town near Long Melford, whoſe church, ſituated on a hill, is juſtly accounted the fineſt in the county. It was built by the Veres earls of Oxford in conjunction with the Springs a rich clothing family about the cloſe of the 15th century, and the pews of theſe families are finiſhed pieces of Gothic wood work, though the Oxford pew is much defaced. The porch adorned with the Vere quarterings and erected by John 14th earl before 1529, is an elegant building, as is the ſteeple 141 feet high, on which are the arms of his predeceſſor, &c. and in it a very good ring of bells. The church is 156 feet long, and 68 feet wide, and the windows adorned with coats of arms [x].

Burnt Ely. Near this is the manor of Burnt Ely, to which Henry III. granted a market at the requeſt of its lord Henry Shelton, whoſe poſterity flouriſhed here a long time [y].

Higham. The Breton runs ſwiftly by Higham, whence a family takes its name [z].

Hadleigh. Hadleigh is a large market and corporation town with a handſome church, in which they pretend to ſhew the tomb of Guthrum the Dane; but there is only a long arch with a bouquet on its point in the ſouth wall of much later date. Before the rectory houſe ſtands a venerable brick gate with two hexangular towers, built with the houſe by William Pikyngham dean of Stoke college, and rector here about 1490 [a]. He alſo founded 12 almſhouſes for 24 aged poor with a chapel, which ſtill ſubſiſt [b]. Dr. Rowland Taylor, rector here in Mary's reign, ſuffered martyrdom on the common with the ſpirit of a primitive confeſſor. On a ſtone lying on a common eaſt of the town is this inſcription anno 1555.

D. Taylor in defending what was good,
Upon this plas he left his blood.

The charter was ſurrendered by quo warranto to James II. and they have had none ſince.

Bentley. Lionel lineal deſcendant of ſir Hugh Talmaſh of Bentley by marriage of his father with the heireſs of the earl of Dyſart, obtained at the Union the title which is enjoyed by his great grandſon Lionel 4th and preſent earl [c].

Edwardſt. Kerſey. Near Hadleigh was Edwardſtone, a cell to Abingdon, removed to Colne [d], and Kerſey, an Auſtin priory, founded before Henry III. [e]

Arwerton. Arwerton hall is remarkable for its ſingular gateway, probably built in the reigns of Elizabeth or James I. when a whimſical and unnatural jumble of Gothic and Grecian architecture was the prevailing taſte [f] The Bacon family held a manor here and at Brome by ſervice of leading all the footmen of Norfolk and Suffolk from St. Edmund's dyke in the Welſh wars [g]. In the church are four antient monuments, one of which ſeems to be of the Calthorps, antient lords here, as are now the Parkers [h].

Wulpit. From Camden's derivation of Wulpitt and the ſynonymous Britiſh Cidium, Dr. Gale inclines to place Sitomagus here rather than at Thetford, becauſe the numbers agree better, and becauſe of certain large and deep ditches which he ſuppoſes Roman, and Roman coins are frequent here. It is an old town, and the diſtance ſeems to anſwer and other circumſtances of names concur [i]. In a cloſe near the eaſt end of the church is a ſpring which is ſtill called our Lady's ſpring; the inhabitants have a traditional report that there was a ſhrine to the Virgin Mary in the church, to which pilgrims reſorted, and that there was a chapel near the ſpring; but there are no remains of it. The ſpring is ſquare and bricked, and ſupplies a large moat with very clear water.

Wulpit has for ſome years been famous for a manufacture of white bricks, equal in beauty to ſtone. This has been a fortunate circumſtance for the neighbouring gentry of the preſent time, who in their buildings have availed themſelves of theſe elegant materials unknown to their forefathers.

Drinkſt. Contiguous to Wulpit is Drinkſton, where Joſhua Grigby, eſq; reſides in a good houſe built by him about the year 1760, and ſurrounded by handſome plantations. About the ſame time, the rector, Mr. Richard Moſeley, built one of the beſt parſonages in the county.

[o] G. Batt. p. 14, 15. [p] Mag. Brit. 179. [q] Tan. 508 ex Hickes. [r] Mag. Brit. 185. 327.
[s] v. Camboritum. [t] Horſley, 444.
[u] Dugd. II. 310. Mag. Brit. 202. [x] Mag. Brit. 176. Kirby's account of his prints, p. 68. [y] Holland. [z] Ib.
[a] Hiſt. of C. C. C. Appx. N° 22. p. 39. [b] Tan. 533. [c] Douglas' Peer. of Scot. 225 ex Scot's Compend. 1752.
[d] Tan. 513. [e] Ib. 524. [f] Groſe's account under his view of it. [g] Holland. [h] Mag. Brit. 245.
[i] Ward in Horſl. 444.

Haughley

Haughley or Haghele caſtle belonged to the Uffords and Delappoles earls of Suffolk [k]. It does not ſeem to have been Hagenet caſtle, taken by the earl of Leiceſter 1173, when he landed at Walton; for his progreſs was from Walton, where he was repulſed, to Hagenet caſtle, and thence in return to Framlingham, and thence to Bury, near which at Fornham he was defeated [l]. Haughley has a Norman caſtle added to a Roman intrenchment. Richard Ray, eſq. now reſides here.

Stow market is a conſiderable market town in the centre of the county, for which reaſon all county meetings are holden here. It is famous for its manufactory of tammies and ſtuffs, and a large handſome church [m].

At Creting St. Olaves and St. Mary's were two Benedictine alien priories, ſuppreſſed by Edward III. and Henry VI. [n] the firſt a cell to Bernay, the other to Greſtein in Normandy.

Whatever character Needham may formerly have deſerved, it is now a market town as much improved as any in the county [o].

Briſet near Needham had an Auguſtine priory founded 1110 [p].

Bildeſtone, ſeven miles ſouth of Stow market, is a mean dirty market town.

Ipſwich is a large market and borough town, divided into four wards and 12 pariſhes, but thinly inhabited, the buildings antient and the ſtreets dirty. It has ſtill twelve churches, and St. George's chapel, now a barn, and the ruins of ſeven more parochial or conventual. The latter were, two priories for black canons, founded 1177 in Trinity pariſh, valued at £.88. 6s. 6d. now the ſeat of Mr. Fonnereau [q], and the other founded t. Henry II. or Richard I. diſſolved by Wolſey, who began his college on its ſite [r]; Blackfriars, founded t. Henry III. now occupied by Chriſt's hoſpital and the freeſchool [s]: the cloiſter remains, and the refectory is the ſchool; the remainder converted into an hoſpital by Henry Tooley 1551 [t]. White friars, founded about 1279, but now pulled down and ſucceeded by the gaol and ſeſſions-houſe [u], Grey friars, founded t. Edward I. near St. Nicholas' church, now the bowling-green-houſe [x]. Here was alſo an hoſpital [y]; and an almſhouſe, founded 1515, and ſtill ſubſiſting [z]. The college begun by Cardinal Wolſey was intended for a dean, twelve ſecular canons, eight clerks, and eight choriſters, with a grammar-ſchool, deſigned as a nurſery to his great college in Oxford; but this noble foundation was ſcarce brought to perfection before the diſgrace of that prelate, and the ſite converted into a malt-houſe [a], and only its gateway remains [b], built like that at White-hall, and now leads to a private houſe, in the rooms of which are ſome coats of arms. The foundation ſtone laid by Longland, biſhop of Lincoln 1528, is now fixed in one of the malt-houſes, formerly a room of it, with this inſcription [c]:

An. ct . . . . . ti m.
DXXV III. et regni Henrici
Octavi regis
Angliæ xx. menſis vero Junii xv poſitum
p. Johñm. eꝑm Liꝺem.

Robert Wolſey the cardinal's father lived in St. Nicholas's pariſh and ſtreet on the left hand going down at the left corner of a little avenue leading to the church-yard, the front new built, but the back and outhouſes have marks of antiquity. Other houſes, his property, run up to Creighton the printer's.

Lord Curſon's houſe and its ſtately porch demoliſhed 1760, once called the King's Hoſpital, becauſe in the Dutch wars uſed ſo for ſeamen; ſince the Elephant and Caſtle. The archdeacon of Suffolk has a good houſe in Brook-ſtreet near St. Margaret's gate, built by William Pikenham archdeacon t. Henry VIII. [d]

At the lower end of St. Clement's church, near the two roads to the heath overagainſt Caldwell hall, is a famous holy ſpring [e].

In the firſt room fronting the door in the Tankard inn the battle of Boſworth is carved over the chimney; Leiceſter town in one corner, ſeveral warriors in the middle, ſir Charles William Brandon who is ſuppoſed to have lived here, father to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, and ſtandard-bearer to the earl of Richmond, lies dead by his horſe, and on the other ſide the ſtandard: at a diſtance ſeems to be the earl with the crown placed on his head by ſir William Stanley, in another is Leiceſter abbey, the abbot coming out of the porch to compliment the earl. There are other pieces of carving in different rooms of this houſe though all much injured. Lady Jane Grey was born here; and Rowe's tragedy of her often acted here, when from a Popiſh chapel for judge Milton t. James II. part of it became a dancing-ſchool and playhouſe.

Three of the four gates of the town remain; the weſt gate is a gaol, and near it was the famous image of the Virgin Mary, much reſorted to by pilgrims [f]. Here are a freeſchool, five charity-ſchools, two hoſpitals, and ſeveral almſhouſes. The trade of Ipſwich by ſea hath in this and the laſt age received ſo much loſs by the decay of the coal branch that the number of their ſhips is very conſiderably diminiſhed.

A braſs ring near an inch and a half diameter, with a plain enameled ſurface, and ſerving as a fibula, was ploughed up at Claydon near Ipſwich 1727, and in the hands of Mr. Sparrow apothecary at Ipſwich.

Walton. At Walton remains a caſtle, the foundations 187 yards long and nine feet thick; plenty of Roman coins and other antiquities are found here. The market is diſuſed.

Walton. At Walton or Felixtow was a Benedictine priory from Rocheſter ſuppreſſed for Wolſey [g].

Trimley. At Trimley St. Martin was born Thomas Cavendiſh, eſq. the firſt Engliſhman who ſailed round the world.

Mendleſham. At Mendleſham was found in the end of the laſt century, an antient ſilver crown, weight 60 oz. thought to belong to Redwald or ſome other king of the Eaſt Angles [h].

At Battisford was an hoſpital or preceptory of knights of St. John of Jeruſalem as old as the reign of Henry II. valued at £. 53. 10s. and granted to ſir Thomas Greſham [i].

Debenham. Debenham though ſeated in a dirty country is a clean market town. Here was Crows hall the ſeat of the Gaudies, an antient and knightly family from whom it paſſed by ſale to the Pitts [g]. It has a freeſchool founded by ſir Robert Hitcham.

[k] Mag. Brit. 248. [l] Mat. Par. 128. [m] Mag. Brit. 247.
[n] Tan. 511. [o] Mag. Brit. 200. ſays it is decayed to a proverb. [p] Tan. 512.
[q] Tan. 518. Grove's Dialogue between Woolſey and Ximenes 1761, 8vo. 135. [r] Tan. 520. Grove, 135.
[s] Tan. 528. Grove, 136. [t] Kirby's account and plan of it. [u] Tan. 529. Grove, 136.
[x] Tan. 530. Grove, 136. [y] Tan. 522. [z] Ib. 533. [a] Tan. 520. Grove 103. 119.
[b] Groſe's account under his print of it. [c] Grove, p. 107. [d] Ib. p. 134, 135. [e] Ib. p. 137.
[f] Grove's Dialogue, p. 117. Groſe's account under his print of it.
[g] Tan. 512. [h] Mag. Brit. 210. [i] Tan. 522. [g] G.

Lethering-ham.

Hence the river paſſes through Letheringham by a ſmall priory of black canons founded by William de Boyville, valued at £. 26. per annum [k]. It is the ſeat of the Nauntons, who came over with the Conqueror and gave name to Naunton hall a manor in the neighbourhood. In the priory, now neglected parochial church, were many monuments of this family and the Boyvils and Wingfields their ſucceſſors[l], and in the windows many portraits and matches, but the roof is now fallen in, and has cruſhed all. The priory houſe, well ſituated, was converted into a good manſion by ſir Robert Naunton, into whoſe family the eſtate came by marriage with Wingfield; and it continued to be inhabited by his male deſcendants till within theſe thirty years. Upon the death of the widow of the laſt of them, ſoon after 1760, the eſtate devolved to William Leman, eſq; who was forced to maintain his right by a tedious and expenſive law-ſuit againſt claimants who pretended deſcent from ſome Nauntons that had migrated into Normandy about eighty years before. The handſome old houſe was pulled down about the year 1770: and the fine collection of portraits which it contained are now probably in the poſſeſſion of the Leman family. About the ſame time, the adjoining church was ſuffered to run to ruin; and all its antient and curious monuments of various kinds for the Boyviles, Wingfields, and Nauntons (among which was a moſt ſumptuous one for the famous ſir Robert Naunton and his lady; and one for ſir Anthony Wingfield, whoſe epitaph was thought of conſequence in the late conteſt for the great chamberlainſhip of England) were effaced and deſtroyed. Mere neglect and expoſure to the weather for a few years could not have reduced them to that ſtate of compleat deſolation in which they appeared in autumn 1780. In 1768 (and perhaps later) they were in a good, though not in ſo clean a condition as they deſerved. Perhaps it was for the intereſt of ſome of the parties who lately diſputed the eſtate to deſtroy every record preſerved in this place; but how the dilapidation of this ſacred edifice came to be permitted by the higher eccleſiaſtical powers is a queſtion not eaſily reſolved.

Wickham.

The river runs next to Wickham, antiently a market town, ſtill a large town, in which are holden the ſpiritual courts for the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and its church is a ſea mark. It belonged to the Sackvilles, Uffords, and Ereſbys [m].

Ufford.

Ufford came by a daughter of William Ufford ſecond earl of Suffolk of that name 5 Richard II. to the Willoughbies, and from them to the Berties. The church is very neat, and according to the tradition of the place all the Uffords earls of Suffolk were buried in it, or rather all the family, for the two earls were buried at Campeſs abbey in this county [n]. Here are ſome good monuments for the Woods of Loudham adjoining. The arms of Ufford, O a croſs engrailed S. with an annulet in the firſt quarter, are in the eaſt window of the S. aiſle, and on the font, over which is ſuſpended a cover of Gothic woodwork elaborately executed, and diminiſhing pyramidically to the very roof. It is ſuperior to that at Worlingworth, in this county, of which there is an engraving by Vertue. Weever [o] and Staveley [p] both mention it as an object of curioſity: and it has had the good fate to be ſtill preſerved.

Worlingworth.

Rendleſham.

At Rendleſham Suidhelm king of the Eaſt Angles was baptized by Cedda [q]: but Bede no where ſays that Redwald kept his court here.

Woodbridge.

Woodbridge is a neat market town ſix miles from the ſea, conſiſting of one principal ſtreet, and had a handſome church and ſpire built by John lord Segrave. It has four or five docks and a freeſchool, and had a priory of Black monks founded by Ernald Ruffus at the end of the 12th century, valued at £. 50 3ſ. 5d. [r] Thomas Seckford, maſter of the rolls t. Elizabeth, the patron of Chriſtopher Saxton, was born here. He had the ſite of the priory, and founded 1587 an almſhouſe for 13 poor men and women, and his family were here in the laſt age. In this pariſh and that of Levington on the Ore are found beds of ſea ſhells which are uſed for manure [s].

Levington.

At Alneſborne, a place now depopulated between Ipſwich and Nacton, ſeems to have been about 1466 a ſmall priory of Auſtin canons joined and appropriated to the monaſtery of Woodbridge [t].

Bawdſey.

Bawdſey was a market town in the time of the Uffords t. Edward I. [u]

Felixtow.

At Felixtow on the oppoſite ſhore have been found ſeveral ſmall Roman coins and pieces of melted metal, 1749 [x].

Nacton.

At Nacton on the north-eaſt bank of the Orwell, the late Admiral Vernon poſſeſſed a very pleaſant houſe and park called Orwell park. They are now the property of Francis his nephew, who was created baron Orwell in 1762, viſcount Orwell in 1776, and earl Shipbrooke in 1777. Here is alſo a handſome manſion, the reſidence of Philip Bowes Broke, eſq; of a family that has long had poſſeſſions in this and ſome neighbouring pariſhes.

Woolver

On the oppoſite bank, at Woolverſton, William Berners, eſq; (the proprietor of the ſtreet of the ſame name in London), built in 1776 a very good houſe, which commands one of the fineſt views in the county. Mr. Berners's park may juſtly be ſaid to be the fineſt ſpot in the Eaſt part of England.

Framlingham.

The town of Framlingham is large and pleaſantly ſituated, and has a market. The caſtle, in which king Edmund was beſieged, and eſcaping thence met his death, was given by Henry I. to Roger Bigod, whoſe family made it their ſeat. Hugh his grandſon, created earl of Norfolk by Stephen, invited hither the earl of Leiceſter 1173; but Roger the laſt of this family, and more turbulent than any of his predeceſſors, was forced to reſign the caſtle to Edward I. Edward II. gave it to his half brother Thomas Brotherton, from whom it deſcended to the Uffords and Mowbrays, and from them to the Howards dukes of Norfolk, who generally reſided here. James I. granted it to Thomas Howard earl of Suffolk, who making Audley inn his reſidence, this caſtle was neglected, and his ſon Theophilus earl of Suffolk ſold it 1635 to ſir Robert Hitcham, knt. who deviſed it with other conſiderable eſtates here and in Saxted to the maſter and fellows of Pembroke hall for charitable uſes [10]. It contains above an acre of ground within its walls now ſtanding 44 feet high and eight thick, with 13 ſquare towers 14 feet above the walls and moſt of their wreathed chimnies ſtanding, ſurrounded by a double ditch. The ruins of the hall, chapel, &c. remain, and one of the towers is converted into a workhouſe. A deep well was juſt within the entrance, to which leads a ſtone bridge of one arch, and over the gate are the quarterings of the dukes of Norfolk. It had a fine park now ploughed up, and the meer on the weſt ſide once navigable is now almoſt filled up [y]. The church ſup-

[k] Tan. 526. [l] G. Mag. Brit. 226. [m] G. Mag. Brit. 268.
[n] Dugd. II. 47. Mag. Brit. 269. [o] P. 753. [p] P. 220. [q] Bede III. 22. [r] Tan. 522. Mag. Brit. 225.
[s] Phil. Tranſ. N° 474. [t] Tan. 526 [u] Mag. Brit. 265. [x] A. S. min. [10] G.
[y] G. Mag. Brit. 221. Groſe's account under his view of it. Dr. Sampſon's Hiſtory of it in Leland's Collectanea, 1770. Vol. I. p. 1. p. 681.

poſed

poſed to have been built by the Mowbrays, whoſe arms are on the ſteeple, which is 100 feet high, contains handſome well-preſerved monuments of Thomas Howard ſecond duke of Norfolk (who narrowly eſcaped with his life by the death of Henry VIII. and began the chancel) and one of his wives, of his ſon Henry Howard earl of Surrey beheaded 1546, and removed hither from the Tower chapel 1614, the two wives of Thomas his eldeſt ſon duke of Norfolk beheaded by queen Elizabeth 1572, and buried here with them, though he has no ſtatue; and Henry Fitzroy duke of Richmond and Somerſet, natural ſon of Henry VIII. who married a daughter of Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk, and died 1536. Sir Robert Hitcham by will founded here an almſhouſe for 12 poor people, and died 1636. Here is another founded by Thomas Milles about 1703 for eight more [z].

Soham. Earls Soham, ſo called from the earl of Norfolk, had once a market. Soham lodge an antient brick building is the original ſeat of the Cornwallis family, to whom the church belongs.

Parham had alſo its Chriſtmas-flowering Thorn as Glaſtonbury, and Quainton in Bucks. It is mentioned in the firſt edition of the Suffolk Traveller, printed in 1735, and in the Ipſwich Journal 13 Jan. 1753, is a letter from Framlingham, affirming that it budded eleven days ſooner than it uſed to do, conforming itſelf to the new ſtile, which it ſeems that at Quainton would not do. Notwithſtanding the poſitive manner with which the letter writer delivers himſelf, Creighton, the ſenſible publiſher of the Ipſwich Journal at that time, ſays, that he had received a quite different account of the Parham thorn.

Parham belonged to the Uffords, till a daughter of William brought it to the Willoughbies lords of Ereſby. Their deſcendant William was created baron of this place by Edward VI. and his lineal deſcendant Hugh 15th lord died 1765, Preſident of the Society of Antiquaries, and Henry 16th lord 1775; ſo that the title is now extinct.

Of this place was ſir John Warner, who with his wife, daughter of ——— Hanmer in North Wales, renounced the Proteſtant religion and the world, and took the habit abroad [a].

The family which took the name of Glemham in the reign of Edward III. produced Dr. Glemham biſhop of St. Aſaph, and his brother ſir Thomas who gallantly defended Carliſle and Oxford againſt the parliament forces, and ſurrendered both on moſt honourable terms [b].

Orford is ſtill a market town and borough, and was the head of a barony. It gave birth to Herbert de Loſinga biſhop of Norwich, and title of earl to admiral Ruſſel ſo created 1697, which title was revived in the perſon of ſir Robert Walpole 1741, who, dying 1745-6, and his ſon Robert 1751, it is ſtill enjoyed by his ſon George, third and preſent earl. Here was a priory of Auſtin friars 23 Edward I. and an hoſpital t. Edward II. [c]. At Orford neſs is a lighthouſe [d]. Of the caſtle remains only the keep flanked by three ſquare towers, and double ditched. It belongs now to lord Hertford, and is a conſiderable ſea mark [e].

Orford chapel by the wreathed pillars of its chancel now ruined was of great antiquity. The font has an inſcription to John and Katherine Cockerel, who made it [f]. Here was an hoſpital t. Edward II. [g]

Butley. Oppoſite to Orford ſtands Butley, where Ranulph Glanville the famous lawyer and chief juſtice of England t. Henry II. founded 1171 a priory of black canons of St. Auſtin, valued at £. 318. per annum [h], in which Michael de la Pole earl of Suffolk ſlain at Agincourt was buried. All that remains is the gateway covered with coats of arms and made into a dwelling houſe.

Campſey. Campſey, or Campeſſe, or Campſey Aſh, had a nunnery founded by Theobald de Valoines before 7 Richard I. valued at £. 182. per annum, of which there are ſome inconſiderable remains [i]. Maud, counteſs of Ulſter, founded there a college of ſeculars 21 Edward III. removed to Bruſyerd ſeven years after, and ſuppreſſed for a nunnery 40 Edward III. valued at £. 56. 2s. [k]

Snape. Snape had a Benedictine priory founded by William Martel as a cell to St. John's abbey at Colcheſter, 1155 made conventual 1400, and ſuppreſſed for Wolſey, valued at £. 99. per annum [l]. On the road between Ipſwich and Eye is Stonewalls, a bank incloſing above ten acres, and at the north-weſt corner cloſe to the road is a high woody hill called Beacon hill. Three pariſhes hereabouts have the name of Stoneham. In Stonham Stonham. Aſpoll church is an old monument of one of the family who gave name to it.

Aldborough. Aldborough is a corporate, borough, and market town, conſiſting of three parallel ſtreets, one ſwallowed by the ſea, with a key and a battery of 20 guns [m].

The peaſe and coleworts mentioned as growing at the ſouth part of the Meer Shingles here are found in ſeveral ſimilar ſituations. The former is the Piſum marinum. It bears a purple bloſſom in June, and is a proſtrate plant, perennial, with a very deep root. It is ſaid to have made its firſt appearance in theſe parts during a famine in the reign of queen Mary, and ſo to have miraculouſly ſaved the lives of the neighbouring poor. Diſtreſs probably then made it firſt attended to. Of coleworts, or cabbages, there are two or three ſpecies that grow wild near the ſea, in different parts of the kingdom.

Leyſton. Leyſton near Aldborough on the ſea had a Premonſtratenſian abbey, founded by Ralph de Glanville 1182, rebuilt more inland by Robert Ufford earl of Suffolk 1363, valued at £. 181. per annum. Great part of the church, the crypts and offices of the abbey, remain converted into barns and ſtables. The church was adorned with ſquare flints intermixed with freeſtone and ſome large bricks. Near the weſt end is a tower built intirely of brick ſeemingly about the time of Henry VII. The walls of the antient chapel of the firſt monaſtery near the ſea are ſtill ſtanding [n].

Dunwich. Dunwich was of the earlieſt note of any town in the county. It is the ſame which the Saxon Chronicle [o] calls Domuc, and Bede Dommoc and Dunmoc, and his tranſlator Alfred Dommocceaſtep. Alfun who is ſaid to have been buried there 799 is reported to have died at Suddepi. The Roman coins found here make it probable that they had a ſtation here. On the eaſt and weſt ſides it was fortified with a rampart and ditch, of which a ſmall part remains [p]. On Weſtleton heath not two miles off are remains of the barons fortifications and tumuli. They could not take the town [q]. John granted it a mayor [r], altered by Edward II. to two bailiffs as now [s]. Though on its decline t. Edward I. it maintained 11 ſhips of war, 16 others, &c. [t]

[a] Mag. Brit. 221.
[b] Mag. Brit. 235.
[c] Tan. 530.
[d] Mag. Brit. 332.
[e] Groſe's account under his view of the chapel.
[f] Groſe's account under his print of it.
[g] Tanner, 530.
[h] Tan. 517.
[i] Tan. 522. Mag. Br. 286.
[k] Tan. 531.
[l] Tan. 516.
[m] Mag. Brit. 237.
[n] See her life, printed at London 1692. Pennant's Wales, I. 219.
[o] Gardner's Hiſt. of Dunwich, 4.
[p] Ib.
[q] Ib. 7.
[r] Ib. 8.
[s] Ib. 14.
[t] Ib. 9.

Its

Its port was removed nearer Southwold t. Elizabeth [u], which being incorporated by Henry VII. compleated its ruin [x]. It has ſtill a fair and market [y]. Its foreſt and woods have long ſince been ſwallowed up by the ſea [z]. It had 11 biſhops before its union with North Elmham A. D. 955. It is now a deanry [a]. It had three churches in Domeſday, and afterwards 8 [b], now reduced to one [c]. Here was a priory of Black friars before Richard II. and of Grey ones t. Henry III. The preciné wall and gates of the latter remain, and part ſerves for a town hall [d]. An hoſpital for lepers as early as Richard I. [e] and another t. Henry III. both ſubſiſting with reduced revenues [f], and a preceptory of Templars [g]. Henry VI. eſtabliſhed a mint here [h].

Cove. Cove, a ſmall village near Dunwich, gave birth 1495 to John Bale the biographer, biſhop of Oſſory, who died 1563.

Barham. Adjoining to Hemingſton is Barham, where a houſe of induſtry for the employment of the poor of two hundreds was built in 1766, and has anſwered the moſt ſanguine expectations of the projectors. Edward third ſon of the lord keeper Bacon became ſeated here by marriage with the heireſs of Little. One of his deſcendants Nicholas Bacon has lately built a new houſe, in a very pleaſant park, in which are the fineſt Spaniſh cheſnut trees in the county. The old ſeat, at a ſmall diſtance, was called Shrubland hall. In the church is a magnificent monument ſent over from Limerick in Ireland, in 1640, to the memory of John Southwell, eſq; of Barham, and Margaret his wife.

Blithburgh. Blithburgh, now a ſmall village, ſeems to have been known to the Romans, whoſe coins and urns have been found here 1678, and its having the gaol for the diviſion of Beccles is an evidence of the ſeſſions having been kept here [i]. The church is curious and antient engraved by Kirby, but the tombs aſcribed to Anna and his ſon Ferminus, both whoſe bodies were removed to Bury, are of much later date, and belong to other perſons. They are engraved in Kirby's account of his prints [k]. The priory of black canons was probably founded by the abbey of St. Oſyth after Henry I. gave them the church, and valued at £. 48. per annum [l]. The Clavering family ſo called from Clavering in Eſſex, ſubſiſted till 5 Edward III. [m]

Sibton. Sibton abbey founded for Carthuſians 1149 by William Cheney, was valued at £. 250,15 [n].

Mr. Ward inclines to place Ptolomy's ΕΞΟΧΗ about Gunfleet or the Elbow on the coaſt of Eſſex [o].

Eaſton-neſſe. Eaſton. On the fartheſt part of Eaſton-neſſe ſtands Eaſton, a village of fiſhermen, almoſt intirely ſwallowed up by the ſea, and on the ſouth ſide thereof Southwold [p].

Southwold. Southwold is a ſea port and market town incorporated by Henry VI. pleaſantly ſeated on a hill, and tolerably well built, and fortified with two batteries. Ruins of an antient camp perhaps Daniſh are to be ſeen on a neighbouring hill. The ſea has gained on the land here ſince the Conqueror's ſurvey above a mile. The haven was cleanſed by act of parliament 1747 [q]. The bay, vulgarly called Solebay, is remarkable for the famous fight 1666 between the Engliſh fleet of 114 men of war and frigates, and the Dutch fleet of 103 men of war, in which the latter were defeated with the loſs of near 70 ſhips and two admirals and 6000 men, while the Engliſh loſt only one ſhip and ſome gallant officers. This fight was off the bay to the north, but that in 1672 was in the bay between the Dutch fleet of 91 men of war, and the combined fleets of England and France of 101, commanded by the duke of York afterwards James II. the iſſue of which day was rather uncertain. The French being remiſs in their duty, we loſt four ſhips, the earl of Sandwich, and ſeveral other officers of note, and the Dutch three.

Walderſ. Walderſwick near Southwold antiently more populous had a handſome church rebuilt 1473, but almoſt pulled down 1696.

Wangf. Raydon, or Wangford, another adjoining village which gave name to an hundred, had a wharf, and a Cluniac priory cell to Thetford, founded 1160, valued at £ 30.9. [r]

Wingfield. Wingfield, which came to the family of that name early in the reign of Edward I. by marriage with Catharine daughter and heir of ſir John Wingfield came to Michael de la Pole firſt earl of Suffolk of that name, who, with his poſterity was buried here. The church, built of various coloured flints and ſtones, makes a very beautiful and uncommon appearance, and in the chancel, which is of a rich ſtyle of architecture, are ſome noble monuments of the Wingfields and De la Poles, that are well worth the attention of the antiquary, particularly the monuments of Michael de la Pole abovementioned who died 12 Richard II. and his lady; his grandſon William de la Pole, duke of Suffolk, a brave and diſtinguiſhed commander in France t. Henry V. and VI. who died 1459; John de la Pole, ſon of the latter, who died 1491, and his lady: beſides ſeveral braſſes for other branches of this family, whoſe arms adorn the font and eaſt window. The college founded by the will of ſir John Wingfield 1362 for a provoſt and nine prieſts, valued at £. 50. per annum [s], ſtood on the ſouth ſide of the church, the weſt ſide of its quadrangle making a farm houſe. About a quarter of a mile north-weſt of the church in a plain ſurrounded by woods and moated round, ſtands the caſtle built by Michael de la Pole firſt earl of Suffolk t. Richard II. whoſe arms with thoſe of Wingfield remain cut in ſtone on each ſide of the entrance. It is ſituated low, without any earth-works for its defence, except a deep and dirty country may be called ſuch. Though repreſented by Mr. Camden as ruined, it ſtill exhibits the ſouth front or principal entrance entire; and the weſt ſide is a farm houſe. It was the property and reſidence of the late Robert Leman, D. D. rector of Pakefield in this county, who died here in 1779, and lies buried in the chancel.

Freſſ. Freſſingfield adjoining was the birth-place of archbiſhop Sancroft, whoſe family had held it for above 300 years. Hither he had retired at the Revolution, and three months after his retirement died here Nov. 24, 1691, and was buried in the churchyard in a ſpot of his own chooſing 16 years before, when on his promotion he viſited his relations here. He augmented the vicarage and gave the perpetual advowſon to Emanuel college Cambridge, and founded a ſchool here.

Dunn. In Dunnington, or Dennington church, is a handſome monument of William lord Bardolf and his wife Joan daughter of Thomas the laſt lord Bardolf, in whoſe right William took the name, though he was never ſummoned to parliament, and died 1439 [t].

[u] Ib. 41. [x] Ib. 9. 16. [y] Ib. 37. [z] Ib. 39. [a] Ib. 44. 46.
[b] Ib. not 50 as the inhabitants from tradition told Spelman. G. [c] Gard. 46. 59. [d] Tan. 528. 530.
[e] Tan. 522. [f] Ib. 527. Gard. 62. 66. [g] Gard. 54. Tan. 526. [h] Leake, 149.
[i] G. Gardiner Hiſt. of Dunwich, 119. [k] Gard. 122. 124. [l] Gard. 228. Tan. 513. Mag. Brit. 193.
[m] Dugd. I. 106. [n] Tan. 515. [o] Horſley 370. [p] Holland. [q] Gard. 187. 190.
[r] Tan. 517. [s] Tan. 531. [t] Dugd. I. 683. It is engraved by Kirby.

Others for ſir William and ſir Robert Wingfield 1348 and 1409 [u]. John viſcount Beaumont was ſlain in the battle of Northampton 38 Henry VI. and the title ended with his ſon William 34 Henry VII. [x].

At Huntingfield queen Elizabeth is ſaid to have had a palace, whither ſhe came occaſionally. Her favourite and relation Henry lord Hundſdon had this eſtate, and it is probable her majeſty might ſometimes viſit him here.

Of the Huntingfield family were William, governor of Dover caſtle t. John. William, who ſided with the barons at the battle of Eveſham, with whoſe 4th deſcendant and nameſake the title ended 50 Edward III. [y]

The family of Heveningham, which it is pretended have never proſpered ſince one of them was on the jury that condemned Charles I. is now extinct and the eſtate ſold to another [12].

Heveningham hall was purchaſed by the late ſir Joſhua Vanneck, bart. He died in 1777, and was ſuppoſed to poſſeſs £. 6000. a year in the county. Sir Gerard his ſon is laying out very conſiderable ſums of money in improving both the houſe and grounds under the direction of Mr. Browne. This houſe, with its extenſive and beautiful grounds, promiſes, when the whole is completed, to be one of the firſt manſions in the county.

On the Ouſe is Euſton, formerly belonging to a family of the ſame name, and for many years to the Rookwoods, one of whom, in the reign of Elizabeth, built here one of the largeſt houſes in the county; afterwards to George Fielding, earl of Deſmond, who was buried here in 1665. Henry earl of Arlington then became poſſeſſor, and rebuilt the houſe, called Euſton hall; and in 1676, the church, his daughter the dutcheſs of Grafton laying one of the ſtones, that ſtill bears her name. It gave title to Henry Fitz Roy, created baron Sudbury, viſcount Ipſwich, and earl of Euſton in 1672, upon his marriage with the earl of Arlington's only child, and in 1675, duke of Grafton; which titles are now enjoyed by his grandſon Auguſtus Henry the third and preſent duke. The houſe is a plain good manſion, ſeated on the banks of a pretty ſtream: it was much improved by the late duke, who uſed to ſay he had made it too good for his ſucceſſor to be tempted to rebuild it on another ſpot. The preſent poſſeſſor has embelliſhed the ſcenery about it, making it his autumn and winter reſidence. The park is large, and adorned with extenſive plantations, and is a remarkable inſtance of the power of art and expence to produce beauties denied by nature. The ſurrounding county is light and champain, well calculated for the ſports of the field.

On the ſame river is Downham, a village which has ſuffered greatly in the laſt century by the ſands, which have overſpread the neighbourhood and almoſt the whole hundred of Lackford, to the great damage of the country [z].

Near it is Brandon, a village in the two counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, which gave title of baron to Charles Gerrard 21 Charles I. [a] created earl of Macclesfield Charles II. whoſe family being extinct, queen Anne created duke Hamilton an Engliſh peer by the title of duke of Brandon 1711, which his great grandſon James George now enjoys, and by this title was ſummoned to parliament by writ as a peer of England 1782. Here alſo was born Simon Eyre lord mayor of London, who built Leadenhall, and died 1459 [b].

There was a hermitage upon Brandon bridge in 1406 belonging to the biſhop of Ely, who granted a pardon of 40 days to all that would aſſiſt to repair the ſaid bridge, and to William Buſsheby hermit a pardon for three years.

In a field at Downham Brickley near Brandon called Dead head land, in 1680, the bodies of two men were dug up.

Near Downham and Brandon is Elveden, ſeated in a like dreary waſte of ſand. It has juſt given the title of viſcount to admiral Auguſtus Keppel, who purchaſed the eſtate of ſir John Tyrrell, bart. whoſe lady the heireſs of Criſpe brought this lordſhip to him. Elveden.

Haleſworth is a populous market town, where much linnen yarn is ſpun. The manor has been long out of the Allingtons. Haleſworth.

Between Southwold and Haleſworth, near Wangford, at the 100th mileſtone from London is Henham Park, in which ſtood a manſion houſe that had been from the time of Henry VIII. the reſidence of the family of Rous. The late ſir John Rous, bart. had greatly improved it; but it was unfortunately conſumed by fire May 8, 1773. The preſent ſir John, his only ſon, who, as well as his father was, is one of the members for the county, reſides at Darſham in this county. Henham.

Near it is Romborough priory founded from Hulme about the conqueſt, ſuppreſſed by Wolſey [c]. Romborough.

Hoxne priory of Benedictines was founded by Maurice of Windſor 1730, valued at £. 18. per annum [d]. The lordſhip of Hoxne belonging to the biſhop of Norwich t. Henry VIII. now rebuilt as a ſeat for Mr. Maynard. The family of the Thruſtons reſided here till the beginning of this century, ſoon after which the houſe and eſtate came into the poſſeſſion of the Maynards. The late lord Maynard greatly improved the houſe, and reſided in it part of the year. He left it with proper revenues to Thomas one of the younger ſons of his nephew ſir Arthur Heſilrige, bart. Mr. Heſilrige has taken the name of Maynard, and now reſides here. Hoxne.

The family of Cornwallis have been ſeated in this county ever ſince the end of the 14th century. Sir Thomas here mentioned rebuilt Brome hall t. Elizabeth. It is a large venerable manſion, ſtill continuing in its original ſtate. His grandſon Frederick was created lord Cornwallis 1661, and his lineal deſcendant Charles viſcount Broome earl Cornwallis 1753, which titles are enjoyed by his ſon and nameſake, ſixth lord and ſecond earl, and his uncle Frederick is archbiſhop of Canterbury. In the church are monuments for the two perſons mentioned by Mr. Camden. The family take the title of baron from their ſeat near Eye, which was an honour held with 120 manors by Robert Mallet great chamberlain of England, who founded here a Benedictine priory, valued at £. 161. per annum [e]. Edward III. gave this manor to Robert de Ufford 11 anno regni, and afterwards to the Delapoles his ſucceſſors. The town is mean and ill built, was a borough before the reign of John, and has a market and corporation. The caſtle hill remains covered with wood. The church is a large handſome building [f]. The monks of Eye had the ſite of the epiſcopal ſee at Dunwich till ſwallowed up Brome. Eye.

[u] Mag. Brit. 214. Weev. 759.
[x] Dugd. II. 54, 55.
[y] Ib. II. 7.
[12] G.
[z] Phil. Tranſ. N° 37. G. Mag. Brit. 219.
[a] Dugd. II. 418.
[b] Mag. Brit. 219.
[c] Tan. 510.
[d] Tan. 508.
[e] Tan. 510.
[f] Mag. Brit. 209.

by the ſea, and brought from thence St. Felix's book of the Goſpels which Leland ſaw written in great Lombard letters, and of high antiquity, and called the Red book of Eye, which the common people uſed to ſwear by. Abbo deſcribes this town as ſtanding in a fen, the river formerly navigable from Cromar to it, but then only to Burſtan 12 miles from it, and the caſtle deſtroyed by the Conqueror [g].

In the ſummer of 1781 were found at Eye in a leaden caſe in a ſand-pit ſeveral hundred gold coins of Valentiman ſen. & jun. Gratian, Theodoſius, Arcadius & Honorius in the fineſt preſervation.

Redlingfield. Redling field near Eye had a Benedictine nunnery founded by Manaſſes earl of Ghiſnes 1120, valued at £. 67. per annum [h].

Sylham. Juſt by Wingfield is Sylham, a little village in a fine woody country. It had a famous wood of oaks called Sylham Heart, (f. Hurſt,) now for the moſt part cut down; and in the low grounds are the ignes fatui, commonly called Sylham lamps, the terror and deſtruction of travellers and even of the inhabitants, who are frequently miſled by them.

Mendham. On the oppoſite ſide of the river to Harleſton at Mendham was a Cluniac priory founded in the iſland of Hurſt by William de Huntingfield t. Stephen [i].

Flixton. At Flixton was an Auguſtine nunnery founded 1258, valued at £. 23. per annum [k]. The noble old ſeat, built by the Talburghs, and conſpicuous for a long way on the road between Harleſton and Bungay is now the property of William Adair, eſq;

Uſura vorax, et multis utile bellum.

Bungay. Bungay is a market town with two churches, and the ruins of a Benedictine nunnery founded t. Henry II. by Roger de Glanville and his wife the counteſs Gundreda probably a Bigod, and valued at £. 60. per annum [l], and of Bigod's caſtle deſtroyed t. Henry III. and ſucceeded by an embattled houſe of the ſame family t. Edward I. whoſe gate towers are now converted into a houſe for poor people [m].

Near the abbey was found 1733 a braſs ſeal inſcribed SIGILL. MARIE D'DVNTINGEPEN. [n].

Mettingham. Mettingham came to the Uffords by Margaret daughter of Walter de Norwich and wife of Robert firſt earl of Suffolk [o]. The college was founded by the will of ſir John ſon of ſir Water de Norwich, and admiral of England t. Richard III. valued at £. 202. per annum [p].

Loweſtoffe. Loweſtoffe is a little market town cloſe to the ſea, and was the eſtate of the Delapoles earls of Suffolk [q].

In a barrow on Bloodmore hill near Pakefield or Loweſtoff was found 1758 a ſkeleton, round whoſe neck hung a gold medal, and an onyx ſet in gold. The legend round the medal was D. N. T. AVITVS. AV. a rude head helmeted, a croſs on the ſhoulder. Rev. VICTORIA AVGGG; exergue CONOB. a rude figure of Victory. On the onyx a man ſtanding by a horſe, whoſe rein he holds with a haſta pura in his right hand, and a ſtar on his helmet. Avitus was father-in-law of Sidonius Apollinaris, ſet up by Theodoric king of the Goths, defeated and depoſed by Ricimer, A. D. 455, after a reign of 14 months, made biſhop of Placentia, and died ſhortly after [r].

Gorleſton. At Gorleſton, or Little Yarmouth, was a houſe of Auſtin friars, founded t. Edward I. or II. and an hoſpital for lepers exiſting 1372 [s].

The family of Jerneghan is of great antiquity. The elder branch ſeated at Somerley by the marriage of ſir Walter Jerneghan of Horham, Kent, with the daughter of ſir Peter Fitz Oſbert in the 14th century, became extinct in the 17th, and the heireſs married into the younger branch ſeated at Coſſey, Norfolk, which had been given by queen Mary to her favourite ſir Henry, whoſe grandſon Henry was created baronet 1621, and his heirs enjoy it [t]. Near it at Herringfleet was a priory of black canons founded t. Henry III. valued at £. 49. [u] Somerley. Heringfl

Gervaſe of Canterbury, Capgrave, Alford, and other hiſtorians antient and modern, have with Camden confounded the monaſtery where Furſeus lived with another founded by the ſame king Sigibert, wherein he turned monk, and from which he was fetched to the battle in which he loſt his life; whereas the Ely hiſtorian expreſsly ſays he was fetched out of Betricheſworth, and Bede [x] ſays the monaſtery which he founded for Furſæus was in a wood near the ſea and in a caſtle called Cnoberſburgh [y]. They have a tradition that the monaſtery here was afterwards inhabited by Jews, and the old way leading to the entrance called the Jews way may ſerve to give it ſome colour of truth [14]. But I take this with Mr. Ward [z] to be another name for a Roman way. Burgh caſtle is an irregular parallelogram, the principal or eaſt wall, where the entrance is, 14 feet high, 214 yards long, and nine feet broad, the north and ſouth walls of the ſame height, but only half the length; the weſt ſide having no traces of walls was probably defended by the ſea. In the eaſt wall are four ſolid round towers, one in the north, and one thrown down in the ſouth. Theſe towers were added after the walls were built as ſentry towers, are about 14 feet diameter, and have each in the top a round hole two feet deep, and as many in diameter. The ſouth-weſt corner forms the prætorium raiſed by the earth taken out of the vallum which ſurrounds it, and which is eight feet below the area. Near this ſtood the ſouth tower, which being undermined by rains has ſunk on one ſide. The north hath done the ſame, and drawn down part of the wall with it The whole area is ſomewhat leſs than four acres and three quarters. Both the wall and towers conſiſt of flints with ſtrata of bricks [a]. Theſe bricks are near 18 inches by 12, and agree pretty well with the meaſures aſſigned by Vitruvius and Pliny [15]. Numbers of urns, bones of cattle, coals, burnt wheat, coins of the lower empire, a ſilver ſpoon, rings, keys, fibulæ, ſpear heads, have been found in a field eaſt of the caſtle [b]. Robert de Burgh, Gilbert de Weſeham, Bromholm priory Norfolk, and William Roberts have ſucceſſively held this caſtle and manor, which now belong to Joſhua Smith, eſq. A little to the north of it are the remains of Furſæus' monaſtery [c]. Burgh cast

Boteſdale or Buddeſdale is a long mean market town on the river with a grammar ſchool founded by ſir Nicholas Bacon for ſcholars for Corpus Chriſti college Cambridge [d]. Boteſdale

At Weſtthorpe, within a few miles of Boteſdale, was a ſtately manſion of Charles Brandon, duke of Weſtthorpe

[g] Lel. Coll. III. 26. [h] Tan. 513. Mag. Brit. 291. [i] Tan. 508. [k] Tan. 528. Mag. Brit. 229.
[l] Tan. 319. [m] Mag. Brit. 263. Kirby's account and print. [n] A. S. min.
[o] Dugd. II. 48. [p] Tan. 532. Dugd. II. 90.
[q] Mag. Brit. 228. [r] Le Beau Hiſt. du Bas Emp. VII. 391—408.
[s] Tan. 530. 532. [t] Blomefield I. 660. [u] Tan. 524. [x] III. 19.
[y] G. Mon. Ang. I. 291. Act. Bened. II. 239 Caii Ant. p. 74. Batteley 9. Tan. 503. note f. [14] G.
[z] ut ſupra. [a] Ives's Garioneuum, p. 22. 24. Groſe's account under his view of it. [15] G.
[b] Ives. ubi ſup. [c] Groſe. [d] Mag. Brit. 210. 331. Hiſt. C. C. C. 203.

Suffolk, who ſometimes reſided here with his third wife Mary the French queen, ſiſter of Henry VIII. who died here, and was buried in the abbey at Bury as before mentioned. The original furniture remained, and the cloyſter and chapel with its painted windows were kept up till within theſe few years, when it was entirely pulled down; and during its demolition was viſited by the late Mr. Thomas Martyn, who in a MS. note ſays with grief and indignation, "Mr. Sheppard Frere and I went to ſee "the diſmal ruins of Weſtthorpe hall formerly the "ſeat of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. The "workmen are now pulling it down as faſt as may "be, in a very careleſs and injudicious manner. The "coping bricks, battlements, and many other orna-"mental pieces are made of earth and burnt hard, "and are as freſh as when firſt built; and might have "been taken down whole, if care had been taken. "But all the fine chimnies and ornaments were pulled "down with ropes, and cruſhed to pieces in a ſhame-"ful manner. There was a monſtrous figure of Her-"cules ſitting croſs-legged, with a club and lyon by "him, but all ſhattered to pieces; and the painted "glaſs is like to ſhare the ſame fate. The timber is "freſh and ſound, and the building, which was very "lofty, ſtood as erect as when firſt built. It is pity "but ſome care was taken to preſerve ſome few of "our antient fabricks, as they do at Rome, but to "demoliſh every piece of old architecture is quite "barbarous."

Rare. Contiguous to Boteſdale is Redgrave, antiently one of the lordſhips of the abbot of Bury, and where he had his faireſt country ſeat. Some years after the diſſolution, it became the property of the lord keeper Bacon, who made it his reſidence. It continued in that family till one of them ſold it to lord chief juſtice Holt, whoſe deſcendant Rowland Holt now inherits it. This gentleman, about the year 1770, began to improve this place, which he has now made one of the fineſt in the county. The old gloomy houſe gave way to a cheerful Grecian edifice: the ruſhy ditch that ran before it aſſumed the form of a wide ſerpentine river; the long viſto of trees, through which the houſe could not be ſeen, was broken and diſpoſed into agreeable clumps, and all the ſurrounding grounds planted and laid out in the moſt beautiful ſtyle; the whole under the direction of Mr. L. Brown. In the evidence room are ſaid to be many antient records relative to Bury abbey.

The handſome pariſh church was one of the early pieces of preferment of Cardinal Wolſey. In it, among others, is a noble monument for ſir Nicholas Bacon, the firſt baronet of England. The figures of him and his lady were executed by Nicholas Stone, and coſt £. 200. They are ſtill in the higheſt beauty and preſervation. Here is alſo a magnificent monument for lord chief juſtice Holt, which is ſaid to have coſt £. 1500.

To his account of William duke of Suffolk Mr. Camden has added in MS. in his copy in the Bodleian library, the following character from the continuation of the annals of Croyland[e]: "He was a man of ſingular cunning, deeply verſt in all the arts of deceit, by which talent he could, with the greateſt eaſe, bring over the populace to his meaſures. By his great influence with king Henry [VI.] he ſo practiſed on his weakneſs that it was generally believed the whole buſineſs of government was conducted by him. He diſpoſed of biſhoprics and benefices in the king's gift for money, thruſting out and putting in whom he pleaſed, and in many inſtances violating juſtice by his abſolute authority. He came at laſt to ſuch a pitch of preſumption by his arts and inſinuations as to diſmiſs from the royal preſence all the king's kindred, friends, and relations, both biſhops, clergy, and laity. He brought a falſe charge of treaſon againſt the illuſtrious prince Humphry duke of Glouceſter, the king's uncle, who had held the adminiſtration of the kingdom 24 years with the moſt approved fidelity. A parliament was called on this account at the inſtigation of the ſaid earl at Bury in Suffolk, in the winter of 1447, in which the ſaid duke who came there ſuſpecting no harm was ſeparated from his friends and committed to the cuſtody of ſome of the king's friends, and preſently after, without being allowed a hearing or a trial, though being in perfect health in the evening before, was the next morning expoſed to public view dead."

Earls of Suffolk. Thomas Howard, firſt earl of Suffolk, built Audley inn, and dying 1626, 2 Charles I. was ſucceeded by his ſon Theophilus, and he 1640 by his ſon James[f]. He 1688 by his brothers George 1691 and Henry. Henry the ſon of the latter created earl of Bindon and baron Cheſterford in the life-time of his father, became alſo earl of Suffolk 1709, and was ſucceeded 1718 by his ſon Charles[15]. He 1721 by his uncle Edward ſon of Henry earl of Suffolk, and he 1731 by his brother Charles, who died 1733. His ſon Henry ſucceeded, and dying 1745 at Audley inn, this title devolved to Henry Bowes Howard earl of Berkſhire 5th in lineal deſcent from the firſt earl of Suffolk of the name of Howard, and he dying 1757 was ſucceeded by his grandſon Henry 12th earl of Suffolk of this noble family.

[e] Ed. Gale, 521.

[f] Dugd. II. 279.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Suffolk.

Anemone pulſatilla. Paſque flower; on a bank on Icklingham heath.

Arenaria peploides. Sea Sandwort: on ſea ſhores; at Southwold.

Artemiſia campeſtris. Wild Southernwood, or fine leaved Mugwort: on the banks of corn fields, by the way ſides near Elveden, on the way towards Lynn, at Barton mills, and elſewhere.

——— maritima. Sea Wormwood: on ſea ſhores; at Orford.

Ariſtolochia clematitis. Climbing Birthwort; in woods and hedges at Bungay.

Aſplenium ruta muraria. White Maiden Hair, Wall Rue or Tent wort; on Long Melford church, and elſewhere.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale, in a ditch in the abbey garden at Bury.

Bunias Cakile. Sea Rocket; on ſea ſhores: at Southwold.

Braſſica campeſtris. Field Cabbage; on cliffs about Bardſey near Orford.

Carduus acaulis. Dwarf Carline Thiſtle; in the road from Bury to Long Melford.

——— eriophorus. Woolly headed Thiſtle; in hilly meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil: near Clare, plentifully.

Chara flexilis. Smooth Chara; in the ponds about Henley and Ipſwich.

Chelidonium glaucium. Yellow horned Poppy; on ſandy ſea ſhores: at Orford.

Ceraſtium umbellatum. Umbellated Ceraſtium; on walls about Bury.

Coriandrium ſativum. Coriander; in corn fields about Ipſwich.

Cucubalus otites. Spaniſh Catchfly; in and about the gravel-pits on the north ſide of Newmarket town, alſo by the way ſides from Barton Mills to Thetford.

Cicuta viroſa. Long leaved Water Hemlock; about the great lake at Lothingland.

Eryſimum chieranthoides. Treacle Hedge Muſtard or Wormſeed; in the corn fields about Elveden.

Fritillaria Meleagris. Common Fritillary, Checquered Daffodil or Snake's head; in meadows and paſtures; about Bury.

Frankenia lævis. Smooth Frankenia or Sea Heath; in Lothingland juſt over the water at Yarmouth.

Fucus ſiliquoſus. Podded Fucus; on ſea rocks and ſtones: at Orford.

Geniſta piloſa. Hairy Dyers Broom; on dry heaths: about Lackford and Culford four or five miles from St. Edmund's Bury.

Gentiana campeſtris. Field Gentian; on a bank on Icklingham heath.

Inula crithmoides. Golden flowered Samphire; on the ſea coaſt.

Ilex aquifolium (baccis luteis). Common Holly with a yellow berry; at Wiſton not far from Buers.

Leonurus Cardiaca. Mother wort; on the hill going from the friery at Fornham All Saints to Bury heath.

Marchantia hemiſphærica. Hemiſphæric Marchantia; on banks of rivers, wet ditches and rocks: at Sudbury.

Medicago Polymorpha γ. A variety of Heart Clover or Trefoil; on the ſea bank and by the key at Orford.

Oenanthe Pimpinelloides. Parſley water drop; at Weſtley bottom near Bury.

Ophrys Nidus-avis. Bird's neſt; in woods and ſhady places: at Aldborough.

Orobanche ramoſa. Branched Broom rape; in corn-fields and dry paſtures; at Beccles.

Panicum ſanguinale. Cock's foot Panic graſs; in the ploughed fields about Elveden, plentifully.

Piſum maritimum. Sea Peas; on the ſtone beach on the end next to Orford running from Alburgh, called Shingles, abundantly. See p. 87.

Riccia natans. Fringed Riccia; in the ponds near Henley.

Sedum anglicum. Engliſh Stone crop; on the barren ground between Yarmouth and Dunwich.

Scleranthus perennis. Perennial Knawel; in ſandy corn fields: about Elveden.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder or Danewort; in the hedges juſt before you enter Long Melford from London, plentifully.

Silene noctiflora. Night flowering Catchfly; amongſt corn about Saxmundham, and between the two windmills and the warren lodge at Mewell.

Scrophularia vernalis. Yellow Figwort; in hedges about Bury.

Stratiotes Aloides. Common Water Aloe or Freſh Water Soldier; in the lake in Lothingland.

Trifolium glomeratum. Round-headed Trefoil; in gravelly places about Saxmundham.

——— ſcabrum. Knotted Trefoil with oblong heads; at Newmarket where the Cucubalus otites grows.

Tillæa muſcoſa. Procumbent Tillæa; on ſandy heaths: about Bury.

Veronica triphyllos. Trifid Speedwell; at Methwold between the two wind mills and the warren lodge, in the gravel pits two miles beyond Barton-mills; on the ridge of a hill where a ſmall cart-way croſſes the road to Lynn and elſewhere in the graſs thereabouts, alſo on the ſandy fallow fields half a mile to the eaſt of Icklingham.

——— verna. Spring Veronica or Speedwell; in ſandy corn fields near Bury. This was firſt found to be indigenous in England by ſir John Cullum.

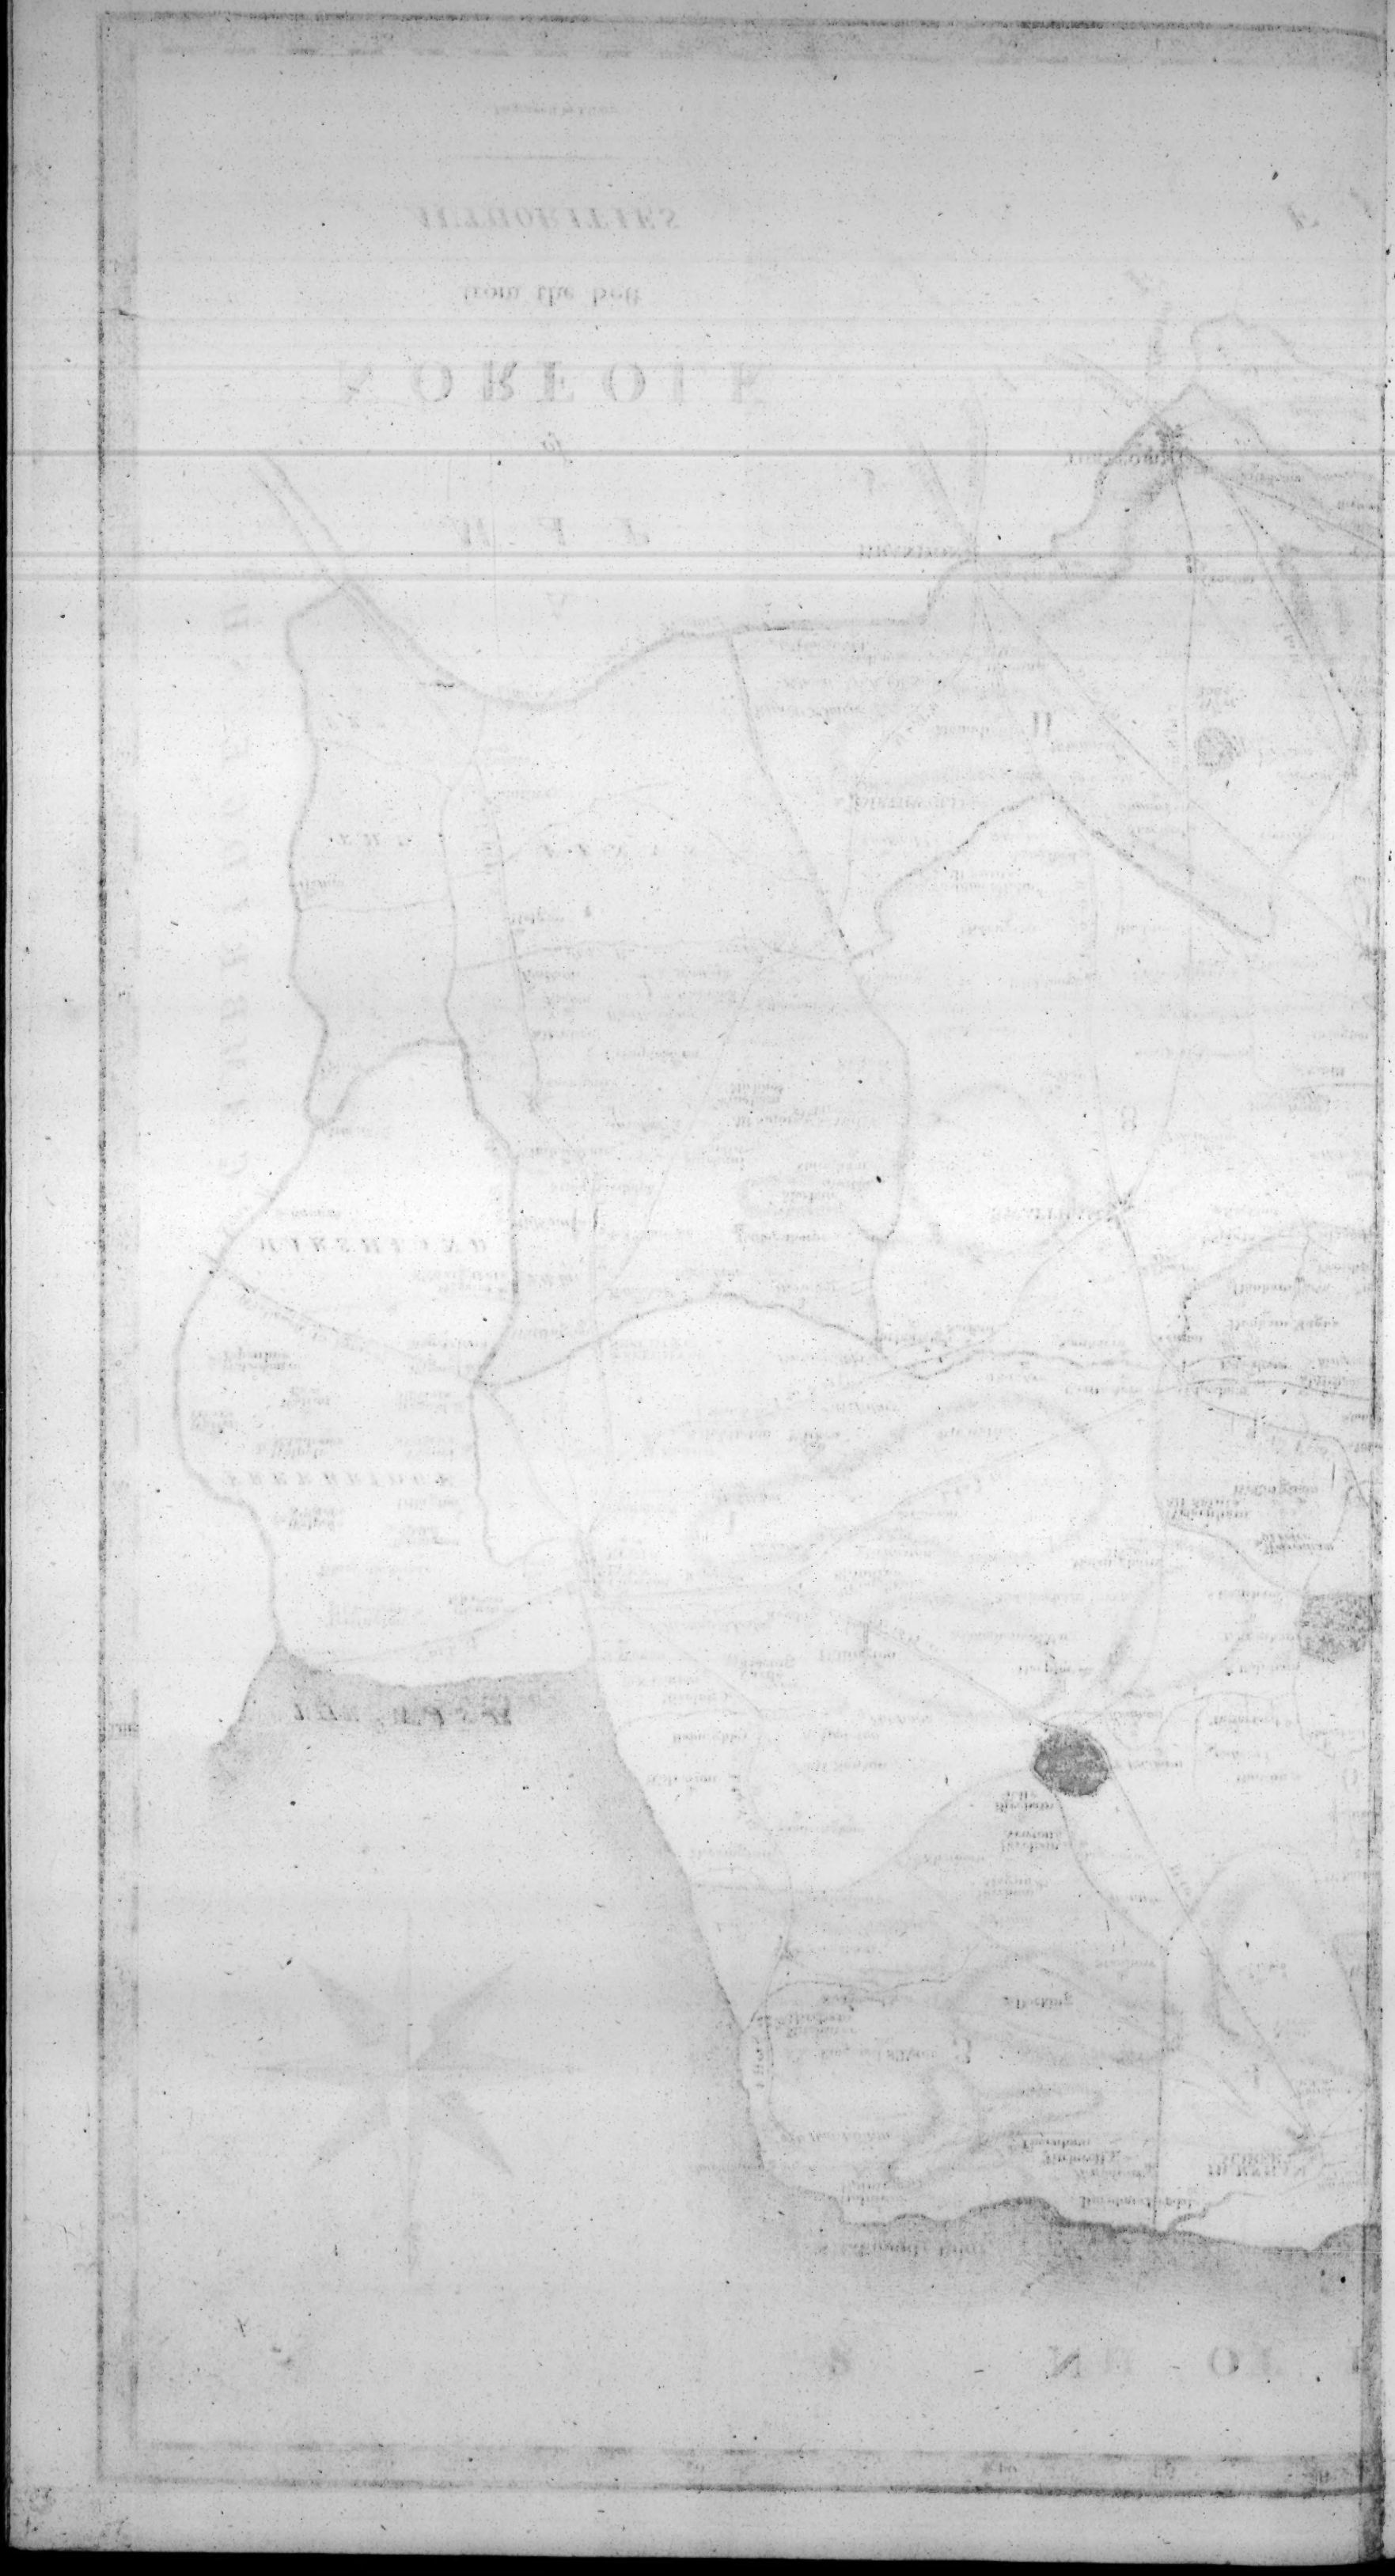
Urtica pilulifera. Roman Nettle; about Aldborough and elſewhere on the coaſt, plentifully.



A MAP of NORFOLK

from the best AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Cary

R T H S E A

F O L K

S U F F O L K

REFERENCES TO THE HUNDREDS

1. Frebridge
2. Clackclose
3. Smethdon
4. Brothercrofs
5. North Greenhoe
6. Gallow
7. Launditch
8. South Greenhoe
9. Mitford
10. Wayland
11. Grimshoe
12. Shropeham
13. Gileerofse
14. Difs
15. Depwade
16. Hembleyard
17. Forehoe
18. Eynsford
19. Holt
20. Tunsted
21. North Erpingham
22. South Erpingham
23. Taverham
24. Happing
25. West Flegg
26. East Flegg
27. Walsham
28. Henstead
29. Part of Clavering
30. Loddon
31. Clavering
32. Earsham
34. Blowfield

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12

NORFOLK.

NORFOLK, commonly called Northfolk, q. d. the Northern people, adjoins to Suffolk on the north and is ſeparated from it by the two little rivers before-mentioned, the leſſer Ouſe and Waveney, running different ways. On the eaſt and north ſides the German ocean, abounding with fiſh, beats with a ſtrong tide upon its coaſt: on the weſt the greater Ouſe, ſporting in meanders, parts it from Cambridgeſhire. It is a large county, almoſt everywhere level, except here and there a gentle hill, very wealthy, ſtocked with flocks of ſheep, remarkably productive of rabbits, and beſpread with many populous villages, having beſides twenty-ſeven market towns, 625 leſſer towns and villages. It is well watered, and not ill wooded. The ſoil differs in different places; in ſome fat, luxuriant and moiſt as in Marſhland and Flegg; in others, particularly towards the weſt ſhore light and ſandy; in others again clayey and chalkey. But the goodneſs of the ſoil may be inferred according to Varro's method from the clear complexions of the inhabitants, not to mention the brightneſs of their wits, and their proficiency in the laws of their country; ſo that it has formerly produced many eminent lawyers, and is reckoned to do ſo ſtill: and even amongſt the meaner ſort, many, as one ſays, if they have nothing to go to law about, will raiſe a ſuit from the quibbles of the law itſelf. But not to enlarge here, I paſs from this ſubject to the ſituation of the country, beginning from the ſouth, and ſhall give a ſhort account of the principal and moſt antient places.

On the leſſer Ouſe where the little river Thet enters from Suffolk, in a low ſituation, ſtands that old city, called by Antoninus SITOMAGUS, corruptly in the Peutinger tables, Simomagus and Sinomagus, now Thetford, by the Saxons Ðeotford, the firſt part of its old name remaining with a German termination ſignifying a ford. For as Sitomagus in Britiſh means a city on the river Sit now Thet (Pliny obſerving that Magus ſignifies a city): ſo Thetford in Engliſh ſignifies the Ford of Thet; and Sit and Thet ſound not unlike. It is at preſent but thinly inhabited though a large town, was formerly very populous and famous, and beſides other monuments of antiquity ſhews an immenſe artificial hill, fortified with a double rampart, and formerly, as is reported, with walls. This is ſuppoſed by ſome a Roman work, by others the work of the Saxon kings under whom it long flouriſhed. By the fury of Suene the Dane it was burnt 1004, and ſix years after pillaged by a new army of Danes, which overthrew all its ſplendor. In order to reſtore it biſhop Arfaſt tranſlated hither the epiſcopal ſee from Elmham: and his ſucceſſor William ſpared no expence to adorn it; ſo that in the Confeſſor's time there were found 947 burgeſſes, and in the Conqueror's 722 (manſuræ) houſes, of which 224 were empty, and the chief magiſtrate was ſtyled Conſul Herbert ſurnamed Lozinga, q. d. a conſummate flatterer[a], who procured himſelf by his artifices and money to be made third biſhop of this ſee, removed the ſeat to Norwich[b], whereby this place received a fatal ſtroke, nor could the loſs of its biſhop be ſupplied by the abbey of Cluniac monks founded here through his means by Hugh Bigod. The words of the charter run thus, "I Hugh Bigod, ſewer to king Henry by his licence; "and by advice of Herbert biſhop of Norwich, have "ſettled monks of Clugni in the church of St. Ma"ry, which was the epiſcopal church of Thetford, "which I have given to them, and have ſince built "another more convenient for them without the "town." At that time the greateſt part of the town on the hither ſide of the river gradually fell to decay; the other, though it greatly decreaſed, had till within theſe two laſt centuries ſeven churches, beſides three ſmall religious houſes, one of which is ſaid to have been built in memory of the Engliſh and Danes ſlain here. For our hiſtorians relate that in this neighbourhood the devout king Edmund, a little before his death, fought above ſeven hours with the Danes with dreadful ſlaughter, and equal ſucceſs on both ſides: ſo much did the varying chance of war take away the ſenſe of its miſeries.

On the Waveney, the other boundary river which runs eaſtward, not far from its ſource are Buckenham and Keninghall. The latter, which ſeems to retain the name of the Iceni, is the ſeat of the honourable family of the Howards, whoſe reputation is too great to be hurt by the envy of Buchanan. The former I believe takes its name from the beech trees, called by the Saxons Bucken, and is a very fair and ſtrong caſtle, built by William d'Aubigny or Albiny, the Norman, to whom the Conqueror gave it, and conveyed by his deſcendants who were earls of Arundel, to the Tatſalls, and from them by the Calys and Cliftons to the Knevetts. This laſt is a very antient family, and has ſpread itſelf by many branches from John Knevet, chancellor of England under Edward III. with great renown and many honourable matches. For beſides thoſe of Buckenkam, from hence are deſcended the illuſtrious knights Henry Knevet of Wiltſhire and Thomas Knevet of Aſhellwellthorp, a little town in this neighbourhood, which paſſed by inheritance from the Thorpes, antient knights, by the Tilneys and lords Bourchiers of Berners to this Thomas Knevet. Buckenham is held on condition that the lords ſhall be Cupbearers at the coronation of the king of England; as, it may not be amiſs to mention, in the adjoining village of Carleton Radulphus de Carleton, and every other "held lands by the ſervice of car"rying 100 pies of the firſt herrings[c] to the king "wherever he was in England." This river paſſes from hence to Diſce, now Dis, a town of note given Buckenham.

Keninghall.
Aſhellwellthorp.
Carleton.
Diſs.

[a] from Lærung a lie. G.
[b] 1094.
[c] paſtillos halecum.

by Henry I. to Richard de Lucy, who immediately conveyed it with his daughter to Walter Fitz Robert, one of whoſe deſcendants Robert Fitz Walter obtained a market here of Edward I. Though the Waveney is covered[d] as it were with towns all the way from hence, not one of them is eminent for its antiquity except Shelton more inland, which gave name to the antient family of Sheltons. But before the river gets to the ſea it joins the Garienis, called by the Britans Guerne, by the Engliſh Gerne and Iere; doubtleſs named from the alders that overhang it, and are ſo called in Britiſh. It riſes in the heart of the county not far from Gernſton, a little village to which it gives name: and near it is Hengham which had barons of its own, called alſo de Rhia, deſcendants from John Marſhall (ſon of the brother of William Marſhall earl of Pembroke), to whom king John gave the lands of the traitor Hugh de Gournay with the daughter and coheireſs of Hubert lord of Rhia. From the Marſhalls it came to the Morleys, and from them by a Lovell to the Parkers now lords Morley. Skulton, otherwiſe called Burdos[e], is not far from hence, held on condition that the lord ſhould be firſt Lardiner as they call him at the king's coronation. And more to the eaſt is Wimundham, now by contraction Windham, famous for the burial-place of the Albineys earl of Arundel, whoſe anceſtor William de Albiney, cup-bearer to Henry I. built the church here, and gave it as a cell to St. Alban's. On its lofty ſteeple, one of the two incendiaries of the Norfolk inſurrections, William Kett was hanged in 1549. Nor muſt I omit to mention that five miles from hence is Attilborough the ſeat of the antient family of the Mortimers, who being diſtinct from that other at Wigmore bear O. ſemee of fleurs de lis S. and founded here a collegiate church, which is now utterly gone. Their eſtate paſſed by marriage with the Ratcliffes, now earls of Suſſex, and to the family of Fitz Ranulph and Ralph Bigot.

Shelton.

GARIENIS fl.

Gernſton.

Hengham.

Barons Rhie or Hengham.

Skulton.

Wimundham.

Attilborough.

Mortimers.

The Yare runs not far to the eaſt before it receives the little river Wentſum, or as others call it Wentfar, flowing from the ſouth. Near the ſource of this laſt is a ſquare fortification at Taieſborrough, containing 24 acres. It ſeems a Roman camp, if it be not indeed that which in the old table publiſhed by Velſer is called AD TAUM. Higher up on the ſame river was VENTA ICENORUM, formerly a moſt flouriſhing little city of this nation. It has loſt its antient name, and is now called Caſter. Nor is it to be wondered that this alone of the three Ventas in Britain has loſt its name; ſince it has almoſt loſt its exiſtence. For nothing remains except the walls, which incloſe a ſquare of about 30 acres, and the traces of houſes, and a few Roman coins every now and then turned up in digging. Out of this in later ages roſe Norwich, three miles from it near the conflux of the Garien, and an anonymous river (by ſome called Bariden) which after a long winding courſe paſſes to the Yare through Attilbridge, leaving to the north Horſford, where is a caſtle overgrown with buſhes, built by William de Cheney, a principal baron under Henry II.

Taſborough.

AD TAUM.

VENTA ICENORUM.

Caſtor.

Attilbridge.

Horſford.

The famous city of NORWICH, called by the Saxons Nopopic, q. d. the North bay, if Wic as Rhenanus ſays ſignifies a bay, ſuch as the river forms here by its windings; or the North ſtation, if with H. Junius we take Wic for a ſecure cloſe-built ſtation; or North caſtle, if our Saxon Alfric be right in his aſſertion that Wic ſignifies a caſtle[f]. If I ſhould ſuppoſe Norwich derived from Venta as ſome do, I ſhould depart from the truth. It can have no other claim to the name of Venta, than Baſil to Auguſta, or Baldach[g] to that of Babylon; for as both roſe out the ruins of the others, ſo did our Norwich from thoſe of old Venta, as appears from its antient name Caer Gunt, in which as in the river Wentſum or Wentfar, the name of Venta plainly diſcovers itſelf. I have no where met with the name of Norwich before the Daniſh invaſion; ſo far from its being founded by Cæſar or Guiteline the Britan, as is pretended by thoſe who embrace every ſtory without weighing it. Now it may rank among the principal cities of Britain for wealth, populouſneſs, beauty, and number of buildings (having no leſs than thirty pariſhes) and for the induſtry, loyalty, and hoſpitality of its citizens. It ſtands pleaſantly on the ſlope of a hill in latitude 52° 40″, longitude 24° 55″, being a long ſquare one mile and an half from north to ſouth, and about half as much in breadth, contracting itſelf into a conic figure gradually towards the ſouth. It is ſurrounded with ſtrong walls (in which are a number of towers and eleven gates) except to the eaſt, where the river having waſhed the north part of the city winding under four bridges, defends it with its deep bed and ſteep banks. In the infancy as I may ſay of this city in the reign of the weak ill-adviſed Etheldred, Suene the Dane, who had over-run England with a great army, firſt plundered, and afterwards burnt it. It recovered itſelf, however, and as appears by the Conqueror's ſurvey, had in the Confeſſor's time "1320 "burgeſſes, and paid £.20 to the king and £.10 "to the earl, alſo 20*s.* and four prebendaries[h], and "ſix ſextaries of honey and a bear and ſix dogs to "bait him. Now it pays £.70 by weight to the "king, and 100*s.* as a fine to the queen, and an "ambling nag, and twenty white pounds to the earl "and 20*s.* fine by tale." Under William the Conqueror the rebellion kindled by Radulphus earl of Eaſt Anglia ſpread hither. Upon his retreat his wife with the Bretons ſuſtained here a long ſiege, till by want of proviſions ſhe was at length obliged to quit the kingdom, and this city was ſo ruined that ſcarce 560 burgeſſes were left, as we read in Domeſday book. Of this ſurrender Lanfranc, archbiſhop of Canterbury, writes thus to the king. "Your "realm is cleared of the infection of the Bretons, "the caſtle of Norwich yielded with the Bretons "therein and their lands in England, their lives and "limbs being granted them on condition that they "quit the kingdom within forty days, and return "no more without your licence." It began by degrees to recover from that deluge of calamities, and biſhop Herbert, whoſe name will ever be held in deteſtation for his ſimoniacal practices, transferred the ſee from Thetford hither, and built a beautiful cathedral in the eaſt or lower part of the city, in a place before called Cowholm near the caſtle, laying the firſt ſtone in the reign of William Rufus A. D. 1096, with this inſcription: Dominus Herebertus poſuit primum lapidem in nomine patris, filii & ſpiritus

NORWICH.

[d] redimitus. [e] or Burdales. Holland.

[f] Sic has all theſe ſignifications, but Mr. Lye inclines to render Norwich the North town, ſc. of the Eaſt Angles. Biſhop Gibſon derives it from its ſituation in reſpect to Caſtor. [g] q. Bagdat.

[h] The record ſays 21 ſol. & 1111 & prebendarios, &c. II. fol. 117. a. By the laſt word Blomfield, on the authority of Spelman's Gloſſary, underſtands Provender for the king's horſes. See alſo Du Cange.

ſancti. Amen. "Lord Herbert laid the firſt ſtone "in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. "Amen." He afterwards obtained of Pope Paſchal that it ſhould be ordained and confirmed the mother church of Norfolk and Suffolk, and endowed it with large poſſeſſions for the maintenance of ſixty monks, who had a moſt beautiful cloyſter. Upon their being turned out, a dean, ſix prebendaries, &c. were placed here. When the church was thus built, and the epiſcopal ſee ſettled here, "the town," ſays Malmeſbury[i], "was famous for its trade and inhabi-"tants." In the 17th of Stephen, as I find in old records, Norwich was new-built, was a populous town, and became a corporation: and the public records prove that Stephen gave it to his ſon William as an appendage, as it is called, or an inheritance. Henry II. preſently wreſted it from him and kept for himſelf, though his ſon Henry, called the young king, aſpiring to the crown, promiſed it in the moſt advantageous manner to Hugh Bigod earl of Norfolk, whom he had drawn over to his party. Bigod following the ſtandard of the young king, who could not keep his aſpiring hopes of the crown within the bounds of juſtice and right; miſerably oppreſſed this city, and is ſuppoſed to have repaired the caſtle in the city on the top of the hill near the church, which by its immenſe ditch ſeemed at that time impregnable. Yet Lewis of France, to whom the rebellious barons transferred their allegiance againſt John, eaſily took it upon terms. My reaſon for ſuppoſing Bigod to have repaired this caſtle is the lions rampant carved in ſtone in it, which were the old arms of the Bigods on their ſeals, though one of them bore a croſs for his ſeal. Such was the ſtate of Norwich in its earlieſt age.

In the enſuing age it greatly increaſed, and its citizens acquired great wealth. They preſented to Edward I. a petition in parliament for leave to fortify their city with walls, which they afterwards did to the great ſecurity and ornament of it. They obtained leave of Henry IV. in 1403, to chooſe annually a mayor inſtead of their antient bailiffs; and built a handſome town-houſe in the middle of the city near the market, which on ſet days is well ſupplied with all kinds of proviſion. It owes not a little to the people of the Netherlands who came over here in great numbers to avoid the tyranny of the duke of Alva and the deſigns of the bloody inquiſition, and firſt introduced a manufacture of ſlight ſtuffs[k]. But I need not dwell long on theſe things, which are all with the hiſtory of its biſhops, liſt of its mayors, and what it ſuffered from that abandoned rebel Kett, ſo well deſcribed by the learned Alexander Neville, who was born here. I ſhall juſt add however that in 1583 the citizens by an engine raiſed the water of the river in pipes to the higheſt part of the town. I might here cite Polydore Vergil the Italian and Angelo Capell of France before the tribunal of venerable antiquity, for ſaying that our Ordovices, who lie in quite another climate, inhabited Norwich. I might bring the ſame charge againſt our countryman Caius, were I not ſenſible that partiality to his native country miſled that good and learned old man. I have nothing more to ſay of this city unleſs the reader chuſes to run over theſe lines of Johnſton the Scotiſh poet upon it:

Urbs ſpecioſa ſitu, nitidis pulcherrima tectis,
Grata peregrinis, delicioſa ſuis:
Bellorum ſedes, trepido turbante tumultu;
Triſtia Neuſtriaco ſub duce damna tulit.
Victis diſſidiis poſtquam caput ardua cælo
Extulit immenſis crevit opima opibus.
Cultus vincit opes, & cultum gratia rerum;
Quam bene! ſi luxus non comitetur opes:
Omnia ſic adeo ſola hæc ſibi ſufficit, ut ſi
Fors regno deſit, hæc caput eſſe queat.

This city's comely form and pleaſant ſite
Her ſons and foreigners alike delight.
Dire ſeat of war, diſtracted with alarms,
She felt the horrors of the Norman arms.
But ſince eſtabliſh'd in the lap of peace
She ſaw with trade and wealth each grace increaſe.
How bleſt if luxury with her baleful reign
Were not attendant on this happy train:
This city ſelf-ſupply'd, ſhould England need
A capital, might fairly take the lead.

From Norwich the Gare having received ſeveral other ſtreams purſues its winding courſe, nouriſhing plenty of the fiſh called Ruff, which Dr. Caius * from its nature as well as Engliſh name, calls in Latin Aſpredo. Its whole body is rough, and its fins prickley; it loves ſandy places, is about the ſize and ſhape of a perch, the back dark brown, the belly pale yellow, has two ſemicircular rows of teeth[l], the upper half of the eye brown, the lower yellow, the pupil black; a remarkable line runs the whole length of its back as if faſtened by a croſs thread to the body[m]: the tail and fins are ſpotted with black; it ſets up its fins when angry, and lowers them when compoſed. Its fleſh is eſteemed equal to that of the perch for criſpneſs and wholeſomeneſs. A Ruffe.

This Gare having paſſed Claxton, where is a round caſtle, repaired by ſir Thomas Gawdy, knight, chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, in its courſe towards the ſea turns ſouthward to fall with the more gentle current into the ſea, and forms a promontory, one ſide of which is waſhed by this river, the other by the ſea. On this promontory and an open ſhore ſtands Yarmouth, Saxon Ȝap-muð and ȝep-muð, q. d. the mouth of the Gare, a handſome town and harbour, fortified both by nature and art. Though almoſt ſurrounded with water, to the weſt by the river, over which is a draw-bridge, and on the other ſides by the ſea except the north where it joins to the land, yet it has very ſtout walls, which, with the river, form a long ſquare, in which beſides the towers on the eaſt is a mount or fort with a battery of large cannon commanding the ſea, which is ſcarce half a mile from it. It has but one church, which is a large one with a lofty ſpire, erected near the north gate by Herbert biſhop of Norwich: the noble large foundations laid below this for its enlargement are ſtill to be ſeen. I do not with certainty pronounce this place to have been the antient GARIONENUM, where the Stableſian horſe were quartered againſt the barbarians; nor the neighbouring village of Caſtor, antiently the ſeat of the famous ſir John Faſtolf famous for its antiquity among the inhabitants, though the Gare is ſaid to have had another mouth below it. But as I am convinced that Garianonum was at Burgh caſtle in Suffolk, ſcarce two miles from Claxton. Yarmouth. Garienis oſtium. GARIONENUM. Caſtor.

* De rariorum animalium hiſtoria Lond. 1570.

[i] De geſt. pont. II. p. 136.
[k] levidenſes panni.
[l] duplici per maxillas ſemicirculorum ordine notatus. q. along the jaws it is marked with a ſemicircular double line.
[m] linea veluti filo tranſverſo corpori affixa.

hence

hence on the oppoſite bank, I can eaſily conceive that Yarmouth roſe out of its ruins, and that that Caſter was one of the Roman camps to guard the mouth of the Gar, now filled up. For as the north-weſt wind [n] ſets in ſtrongly on the oppoſite coaſt of Holland, and fills up the middle mouth of the Rhine with ſand; ſo the north-eaſt wind prevails on our coaſt, and ſeems to have filled up this mouth in the ſame manner. Nor ſhall I do amiſs if I ſuppoſe our Yarmouth, ſo nearly united to the antient Garianonum, went under the ſame name, ſince the Garienis, which gave it its name, has altered its courſe, and empties itſelf into the ocean below this town to which it gives name. I muſt however confeſs this town to be of later date: for on the decay of old Garianonum the ſhore being left without defence, Cerdic, a warlike Saxon, landed here (whence the place is called by the inhabitants Cerdick's ſand, and by hiſtorians Cerdic's ſhore) and waging a fierce war with the Iceni, ſet ſail from hence weſtward, where he founded the kingdom of the Weſt Saxons. Not long after in the room of Garionenum the Saxons built a new town in that marſhy ground on the weſt ſide of the river, which they called Yarmouth, but the ſituation being unhealthy they removed to the oppoſite ſhore then called Cerdikſand, from the above-mentioned prince, and founded this new town, where in the Confeſſor's time were ſeventy burgeſſes according to Domeſday book [o]. The walls were built about A. D. 1340 [*], and in a little time the inhabitants became ſo rich and powerful as frequently to attack their neighbours of Leoſtoffe and the Cinque ports at ſea with great loſs on both ſides. They had probably a pique againſt them becauſe they themſelves were not allowed the privilege of the Cinque ports, which old Garianonum and their anceſtors enjoyed under the Count of the Saxon ſhore. The royal authority at laſt put a check to this inſolence, or as others think they were humbled by that dreadful plague which carried off 7000 people in this town in one year, according to an old table hung up in the church, which alſo mentions their wars with the Cinque ports and the people of Leoſtoffe. Their ſpirit being lowered and their wealth declining they were forced to apply themſelves to trade and the herring fiſhery, of which fiſh, called by the learned Chaleides and Leucomænides, large ſhoals are found on this coaſt. It is incredible what a great fair is held here at Michaelmas, and what quantities of herrings and other fiſh are ſold. At this time the Cinque ports, by an antient cuſtom, appoint their bailiffs or commiſſioners, and ſend them hither, who, according to the words of their warrant or commiſſion, "govern jointly with "the town magiſtrates during the time of the free "fair, and hold the fair court, adminiſtering juſtice "and keeping the king's peace." The harbour below is very convenient for the inhabitants and thoſe of Norwich: but it requires great expence to prevent the ſea from choaking it up. That element, to keep up the balance and return here what it had taken away in other places, formed lately a ſmall iſland with the ſoil which it threw up.

Cerdic's ſand and ſhore.

Herrings.

At this mouth another river, called by ſome the Thirn, empties itſelf jointly with the Gar, which paſſing by Holt, (ſo called from its wood, and remarkable for its market) keeps pace with it near five miles by Blickling, now the ſeat of the antient and noble family of Clere, formerly ſettled at Ormeſby; and Attleſham, a conſiderable market town, where formerly the earl of Athol in Scotland had lands, and then by the ruined monaſtery of St. Benet in the Holme, q. d. in the river iſland, built by Canute the Dane, and afterwards fortified by the monks with ſtout walls, ſo that it looked more like a caſtle than a cloyſter: and the Conqueror could not take it till a monk betrayed it on condition he ſhould be made abbot; which was complied with, but the new abbot was immediately hanged for a traitor by the king's order, as the people there tell. The ground in this iſland is ſo marſhy, that on cutting the fibres and roots of the trees and ſhrubs growing thereon it floats on the water, and may be towed about at will. Some from the ſhells frequently dug up there think the ſea once broke in. The river runs thence by Ludham, the palace of the biſhops of Norwich, and Clipſby, which gave name to an antient family, famous in theſe parts, and immediately unites its waters with the Gar.

Thirn r. Holt.

Blickling. Ormeſby. Attleſham. St. Benet in the Holme. Ludham. Clipſby.

From the mouth of this laſt river the ſhore at Winterton ſhoots out a promontory due north, well known to ſeamen, and called, I imagine, from its winterly ſituation. It lies open to the ocean, the cauſe of winds and cold, which beats violently againſt the banks oppoſed to it. Yet the neighbouring tract is in the opinion of many the richeſt and looſeſt ſoil in England, requiring leaſt labour, and yielding the greateſt increaſe; for it may be turned up as Pliny [p] alſo reports of Bizacium in Africa [after rain] with any poor horſe and an old woman guiding the plough [q].

Winterton.

From Winterton the coaſt turns itſelf to the weſt without any projection for a long level tract to Eccles, almoſt ſwallowed up by the ſea. Thence the ſhore riſing by Bromholme, formerly a little monaſtery, endowed by the Glanvilles, ſituate on a high hill, whoſe croſs was held in great veneration by our anceſtors: not far from Ginningham, which with other maners John earl of Warren and Surrey formerly gave to Thomas earl of Lancaſter; and by Cromer, where the neighbours have often in vain attempted to raiſe a pier, at great expence, the ſea waſhing it away, it runs out at Wauburnehope, a bay not long ſince fortified, ſo named from the little town of Wauburn, to which at the requeſt of Oliver de Bourdeaux Edward II. granted a market and fair. Near this is Clay, and on the other ſide of the river Blakeney, called by our countryman Bale Nigeria, a famous college of Carmelites in the laſt century, founded by Robert de Roos, Robert Bacon and John Brett, which produced John Baconthorp, named from his native town (now the ſeat of the knightly family of the Heydons) a man of ſuch extenſive and abſtruſe learning for that age as to be the admiration of the Italians, and to be commonly called the Reſolute Doctor. Whence Paul Panſa ſays of him, "If you wanted to ſearch into the nature of the "Almighty, nobody has more clearly written about "his eſſence If you would know the cauſes of "things, the effects of nature, the motions of the "heavens, and the contrary qualities of the ele-"ments, he is ready to let them into the ſtorehouſe "of knowledge. This Reſolute Doctor alone fur-"niſhes us with the ſtrongeſt arms in defence of Eccles. Bromh. Ginnin. Cromer. Waub. Clay. Blakeney. John Baconthorp. The Doctor.

[n] See Somner's Port. Ice. I. 53. G.
[p] N. H. VII. 6.
[q] a parte altera jugi vomere unu trahente, an old woman on one ſide of the yoke drawing the plough. Holland. an old woman drawing againſt him. G.
[*] William of Worceſter.
[o] Fol. 118. a.

"the Chriſtian religion againſt the Jews, &c." From Wanburn the ſhore is lower to St. Edmund's point, and interſected and divided by many rivulets, with difficulty defended from the incroachments of the ſea by ſand banks called Meales [k].

Further inland, about four miles hence, is Walſingham, which from its nearneſs to the ſea Eraſmus calls Parathalaſia. This little town is now famous for its ſaffron, formerly all over England for the pilgrimages to the Bleſſed Virgin, whoever had not viſited and made his offering to her being held impious in the laſt age. Let Eraſmus[l] who ſaw her give a deſcription of her. "About four miles from the ſea is a town ſupported by ſcarce any thing elſe but the reſort of pilgrims. It is a college of canons called by the Latins regular, an intermediate order between monks and ſecular canons. This houſe depends chiefly on the Virgin for ſupport. For the greater offerings only are laid up, but if money or things of ſmall value are offered they are applied to the maintenance of the convent, and their ſuperior whom they call their prior. The church is neat and elegant; but the Virgin dwells not in it. This place as out of reſpect, ſhe has reſigned to her ſon. She has her temple ſo placed as to be at her ſon's right hand. Nor does ſhe dwell even there; the building is not finiſhed, and the wind comes in at the doors and windows; for the ocean, father of winds, is juſt by. In the unfiniſhed church is a narrow wooden chapel into which the worſhipers are admitted by a narrow door on each ſide. It has but little light and that only from wax tapers, which give a very agreeable ſmell. If you look in, you would ſay it was the manſion of the gods, it glitters ſo with jewels, gold, and ſilver." But all this vaniſhed in the laſt age, when Henry VIII. ſet his eyes and heart on the wealth and eſtates of the church. I have nothing to add about this town but that the knightly family of the Walſinghams took their riſe and name from it according to genealogiſts. Of this was the moſt illuſtrious ſir Francis Walſingham, ſecretary to queen Elizabeth, a man of ſingular experience and induſtry in the moſt weighty affairs of ſtate. In the neighbourhood at Houghton once flouriſhed the famous family of the Neirfords, who were greatly enriched by marriage with Petronilla de Vallibus, who had a fine eſtate about Holt, Cley, and elſewhere. But to return to the coaſt.

Near Walſingham to the weſt on the coaſt was the antient BRANNODVNUM, where, when the Saxons firſt infeſted Britain, was a garriſon of Dalmatian horſe under the Count of the Saxon ſhore. At preſent it is a country village, retaining nought but its name, and exhibiting a rampart called by the neighbourhood a caſtle, incloſing about eight acres, and named Brancaſter, where Roman coins are often found. This place was very convenient for a garriſon: for the ſhore turns to the ſouth at St. Edmund's chapel in the neighbourhood, and at Hunſtanton built by S. Edmund, and makes a bay of ſome extent much expoſed to pirates, into which ſeveral rivers empty themſelves. I muſt not omit Hunſtanton were it only for this reaſon, that it was the reſidence of the famous and knightly family of Le Strange, of whom t. Edward II. John baron Le Strange of Knockin gave it to his younger brother Hamo.

I purpoſely paſs by the taking of hawks, the plentiful fiſhery, and the frequent finding of jet and amber on this coaſt, as things common in other places along it. Sharnborn, however, on this ſhore deſerves mention, both for the ſecond Chriſtian church in this province built here by Fælix the Burgundian who converted the Eaſt Angles, and brought them the bleſſings of eternal life (for the firſt is ſaid to have been built at Babingley where he landed), and for the common report on the authority of antient records that the Engliſh lord of this place before the coming of the Normans by appeal to the Conqueror himſelf recovered this eſtate from Warren, to whom the Conqueror had given it: which is alleged by thoſe who contend that William poſſeſſed himſelf of England by agreement and not by conqueſt. Sharnborn. Babingley.

The bay, which we call The Waſhes, Ptolemy calls ÆSTUARIUM METARIS[m], perhaps for Maltraith, a name given to other ſuch Æſtuaries by the Britans, and meaning nothing more than a body of water where the tides are uncertain. On this where the Ouſe falls into the ocean ſtands Linne, named perhaps from the ſpreading waters, for ſo the Britiſh word Lhyn ſignifies. This is a large town almoſt ſurrounded by a deep ditch and wals, and divided by two little rivulets, over which are about 15 bridges. And though it is more modern, and not long ago called Biſhop's Linne, having belonged to the biſhops of Norwich to the time of Henry VIII. (for it roſe out of the ruins of an older town oppoſite to it in Marſhland now called Old Lynne and Lynne Regis) yet for the ſafe entrance of its harbour, the reſort of merchants, the beauty of the buildings, and the wealth of the inhabitants, it may claim the chief rank after Norwich among the Iceni. It enjoys very conſiderable privileges purchaſed of king John by the blood of its inhabitants ſpilt in ſupport of his cauſe. He granted them a mayor, and gave them his own ſword to be born before him, and a ſilver cup gilt, which they ſtill keep. They recovered their loſt liberties with ſome bloodſhed from Henry III. when in his cauſe they loſt a battle againſt the proſcribed barons in the iſle of Ely, as the book of Ely and Mathew Paris teſtify. The Waſhes. METARIS ESTUARIUM. Lynn.

Overagainſt Lynne, on the other ſide of the river, is Marſhland, a marſhy tract as its name expreſſes, divided by dykes and ſluices to drain and carry off the water, a very rich ſoil, and producing plenty of cattle; ſo that in the place called Tilney ſmeeth about 30,000 ſheep are fed. But the ſea by its beating, waſhing, overflowing, and tearing, is ſometimes ſo outrageous as not to be kept in by banks. The moſt remarkable places in it are Walpole given by its lord to the church of Ely with his ſon, whom he made a monk there: Wigenhall, the eſtate of J. Howard under Edward I. whoſe deſcendants have ſpread themſelves into an honourable and illuſtrious family: Tilney before mentioned, which gave name to the antient knightly race of the Tilneys, and St. Mary the ſeat of the antien: family of the Carvilles. Marſhland. Tilney Smeeth. Walpole. Wigenhall. Tilney. St. Mary.

We have now ſurveyed all the coaſt inland. There are ſeveral towns on the weſt ſide of the county, but being of later date I ſhall ſay but little of them. Near Lynne is Riſing Caſtle on a high hill rivalling Norwich caſtle, formerly belonging to the Albineys, Riſing caſtle.

[k] Spelman derives this word from the Swediſh and German Mul, duſt. (G.) MHAA Gothic Mould.

[l] The Saxon name of Malden in Eſſex is Mœlðun. MS. n. Gale. In his dialogue intituled, Peregrinatio religionis erga.

[m] Μιτάρις, Ptol. ed. Argent. perhaps from Mearſh or Merarſh Anglicè Mearrs, Mijars. Metaurus, Metarus. Lexic. Geogr. Lat. ex Ptol. Mearis, Meris, Mearſland: Waſhes, Gauſen, Guas. Waſe, Met-Wet-ars. Snetſham, Senitſham, Go-ſenits, Go-ſennit. So Bannium in Ravennas is Gobannium in Antoninus. MS. n. Gale.

afterwards to Robert de Montalt, who married the ſiſter and coheireſs of Hugh de Albiney earl of Arundel, and afterwards of the Mowbrays, deſcended as I am informed from the ſame family as the Albineys; but at preſent almoſt expiring with age.

Caſtle Acre. Lower is Caſtle Acre, where antiently the earls of Warren lived in a caſtle now half ruined on the Godwic. river. This nameleſs ſtream riſes not far from Godwic, a name of good omen, where is a ſmall houſe which boaſts a great ornament in its owner the illuſtrious ſir Edward Cooke, a perſon of rare natural endowments, and not more ſtudious than learned in the common law of England, as the whole nation can teſtify both while he was many years attorney general and now when he pronounces his moſt learned deciſions as Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas[n]: nor has he given leſs proof of his abilities in the Commentaries he has publiſhed on our laws, by which he has merited ſo well both of his contemporaries and poſterity. This rivulet flows gently weſtward toward Lynne by Neirford which gave name to the an-

Newford. Neirborough. tient family of the Neirfords; and Neirborrough, where near the houſe of the knightly family of Spelman may be ſeen on a high hill a ſtrong antient fortifica-

Pentney. tion well calculated for the defence of the adjacent country. Next on the ſame rivulet follows Pentney, a little monaſtery formerly the common burial place of the nobility in theſe parts.

Wormegay. Near this lies Wormegay, commonly called Wrongay, which Reginald de Warren brother of William de Warren ſecond earl of Surrey, had with his wife who was, as I have read, of the donation or maritage of that earl [o], according to the ſtyle of that age, by whoſe ſon's daughter it was ſoon transferred Barons Bardolph. to the Bardolphs moſt noble barons who long flouriſhed, and bear Az. three cinqfoils, Or. The greateſt part of their eſtate, with the title, devolved to William Phellips, and with his daughter

Swaffham. to viſcount Beaumont More eaſt is Swaffham, a famous market town, once the eſtate of the earl of Aſhele. Richmond. Aſhele manor, in right of which the Haſtings and Greys lords of Ruthin, were table deckers, or took clarge of the napery to the kings

N. Elmham. of England at their coronation. N. Elmham, where the biſhops ſat when this province was divided into

Dereham. two dioceſes. Derham, the burial place of Withburga daughter of king Anna, who, for her temperance and ſanctity was accounted a ſaint by our Greſſenhall. anceſtors. Next to this is Greſſenhall, and next to

Elſing. that Elſing, formerly eſtates of the Folliots, a family of great rank, which paſt in dower with a daughter of Richard Folliotto Hugh de Haſtings of the family of Abergavenny, and at length by the daughters and coheireſſes of the laſt Hugh Haſtings Greſſenhall came to Hamo L'Eſtrange of Hunſtanton, and Elſing to William Brown brother of Anthony Brown

Icborough. firſt viſcount Mortacute. Hereabouts is Icborough, which Talbot thinks the ICIANI of Antoninus. I need not dwell longer on theſe places: nor does there remain any thing more than to recite the earls and dukes of Norfolk [p], before we proceed to Cambridgeſhire.

William the Conqueror appointed one Radulph [q] earl of the Eaſt Angles, i. e. of the counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, and Cambridge, who, for his rebellious deſigns, was, as I obſerved before [in Norwich] ſoon diſplaced. Some years after under Stephen Hugh Bigod [r] was earl of Norfolk: for in the peace between Stephen and Henry of Anjou afterwards king Henry II. * it was expreſsly provided that Stephen's ſon William ſhould have the intire earldom of Norfolk, except among other things the third penny which belonged to Hugh Bigod as earl, whom notwithſtanding king Henry II. afterwards made earl with the third penny of Norfolk and Norwich. To him ſucceeded his ſon Roger [s], who, for ſome reaſon or other, obtained of Richard I. a new charter of creation, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Hugh [t], who married Matilda eldeſt daughter and coheireſs of William Marſhal earl of Pembrook. By her he had Roger earl of Norfolk and marſhal of England, who diſlocated his limbs [u] in a tournament, and died without iſſue; and Hugh Bigod, chief juſtice of England, ſlain in the battle [x] of Lewes, whoſe ſon Roger [y] ſucceeded his uncle as earl of Norfolk and marſhal. He having provoked Edward I. by his inſolence was forced to ſurrender his honors and the greateſt part of his eſtate to the king in favour of Thomas Brotherton the king's ſon by Margaret ſiſter of Philip the Fair king of France. So we have it in a chronicle in St. Auſtin's Library at Canterbury. "A. D. 1301 Roger Bigod earl of Norfolk made king E. his heir and ſurrendered the marſhal's ſtaff into his hands on condition that if his wife had children the king ſhould reſtore the whole as he received it without diſpute, and he ſhould hold it peaceably: and the king gave him £. 1000, and 1000 librates of land for life [z], with the office of marſhal and the earldom." He dying without iſſue, Edward II. conferred both theſe honours on his brother Thomas [a] by virtue of the ſurrender abovementioned †, but his daughter Margaret who had the title of lady marſhal and counteſs of Norfolk, and was married to John lord Seagrave, was by Richard II. created dutcheſs of Norfolk [b] for her life, and at the ſame time Thomas Mowbray earl of Nottingham, Margaret's daughter's ſon, firſt duke of Norfolk to him and his heirs male, having before granted him the dignity and ſtyle of earl marſhal of England. This is he who challenged Henry of Lancaſter duke of Hereford before the king for diſreſpectful words by him ſpoken againſt the king; and when they were on the point of deciding it by ſingle combat, the herald at the barrier pronounced by the king's order this ſentence, that they ſhould both quit the realm, Lancaſter for ten years, Mowbray for ever, who afterwards died at Venice [c], leaving two ſons in England. Of theſe Thomas earl marſhal and earl of Nottingham (for he had no other title), forming treaſonable deſigns, was beheaded by Henry of Lancaſter then king Henry IV. His brother and heir John [d], by favour of Henry V. was reſtored, and for ſome years was only earl marſhal and earl of Nottingham; but in the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. by Earls and dukes of Norfolk.

* Roger Montenſis. See art. Earls.

† Parl. 21 R. II.

[n] He was afterwards lord chief juſtice of the King's Bench, and died 1634.

[o] de donatione ſive maritagio.

[p] Of the earls of the Eaſt Angles, See Dugd. I. 16—18.

[q] Waber. Dugd. I. 67.

[r] He died 1178, buried at Thetford.

[s] He died 5 Henry III. buried at Thetford.

[t] died 1225, buried ib.

[u] luxatis corporis articulis.

[x] 47 H. III. buried at Thetford.

[y] He died 35 Edward I. buried at Thetford.

[z] M. Paris 995. 50. Dugd. I. 135. does not mention his death, but only his flight.

[a] Dugd. I. 135. ſays £. 1000. in preſent and £. 1000. per annum for life.

[b] She died 21 R. II. buried in the Friars Minors in London. Ib.

[c] He died 7 Henry VI. and ordered his body to be buried in Axholme charter houſe, and his father to be brought from Venice thither. Dugd. Ib. 130.

of the plague 1 Henry IV. Dugd. Bar. I. 129.

authority

authority of parliament in vertue of the grant of Richard II. "as ſon of Thomas duke of Norfolk his "father and heir of his brother Thomas was declared "duke of Norfolk*." He was ſucceeded by John[e] his ſon, who died 1 Edward IV. and he by his ſon John[f], created earl of Surrey and Warren in his father's life by Henry VI.† His only daughter Anne was married to Richard duke of York, infant ſon of king Edward IV. who with her took the titles of Norfolk, earl marſhal, Warren, and Nottingham, from her father. He and his wife dying in their infancy[g], Richard III. king of England conferred this title of duke of Norfolk and the rank of earl marſhal on John Howard, who was found to be "couſin and one of the "heirs" of Anne ducheſs of York and Norfolk beforementioned, his mother being one of the daughters of the firſt Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolk, and himſelf advanced to the rank of baron by Edward IV. This John fell in the battle of Boſworth[h] fighting valiantly for Richard III. againſt Henry VII. His ſon Thomas, who, by Richard III's creation was earl of Surrey, was reſtored to his father's title of Norfolk by Henry VIII. for beating the Scotiſh forces at Floddon, where James IV. their king was ſlain: in memory of which victory the Howard family was permitted to bear in the middle of the bend Argent in their arms an eſcocheon Or, with a demi lion Gules, his mouth pierced with an arrow, within a double treſſure of lilies of the ſame, which nearly reſembles the arms of the king of Scots[i]. His ſon Thomas ſucceeded him, whom this age has ſeen toſſed by the viciſſitudes of fortune[k], whoſe ſon Henry's[l] ſon Thomas (the firſt of the Engliſh nobility that added the luſtre of literature to his other honours) convicted of high treaſon for intending to marry Mary queen of Scots, and beheaded 1572, was the laſt duke of Norfolk. From that time his family remained as it were extinct, but is revived again under the enlivening influences of king James.

In this county are about 660 pariſh churches.

* Rot. Parl. 3 H. VI.

† Parl. 27 E. IV.

e buried at Thetford, Dugd. 131.

f he died 1475 15 Edward IV. buried at Thetford. Dugd. Ib.

g

h 1485, buried at Thetford.

i He died 1524, buried at Thetford.

k and eſcaping death only by the death of Henry VIII. died 1554. Dugd. Bar. II. 274.

l Earl of Surrey, beheaded in his father's life 1546, buried at Framlingham. Ib. 275.

ADDITIONS

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Norfolk is large and populous, extending from eaſt to weſt 66 miles, from north to ſouth 40, and above 140 miles in circumference; containing 1148000 acres, 33 hundreds, 32 market towns, including thoſe in diſuſe, and 729 well inhabited villages as appears by the poll books of 1768, and more pariſh churches than any county in the three kingdoms; many of which exhibit curious ſpecimens of the ſtyle of church architecture of different ages; and in ſeveral of them the antiquary will find fair and curious antient monuments, monumental braſſes well preſerved, and the remains of many curiouſly painted windows. No leſs than 77 religious houſes fell at the general diſſolution, beſides alien priories diſſolved before. The county has its name from its ſituation in reſpect of the Eaſt Angles[1].

The ſoil may be divided into the ſandland, the wood land, the marſh land, and the fielding. Of the former ſort is a conſiderable tract in the neighbourhood of Norwich, Swaffham, Thetford, and Brandon; in the neighbourhood of Norwich are ſeveral lands inclining to this, and at Rougham is a piece of drift. The woods are not extenſive, though much increaſed of late by planting in almoſt every part of the county. What is called the wood land is generally dirty, but rich and fruitful. The marſh land, beſides the tract comprehended in the Bedford Level, and in Freebridge Marſh lands, extends from Yarmouth up the rivers Bure, Waveney, and Yare, to Coltſhall, Bungay, and Norwich, and alſo up the Thurn and Ant. Both ſalt and freſh marſhes are to be met with on the coaſt, particularly between Hunſtanton and Blakeney, and from Snetteſham to Walpole. They are generally fruitful, feed large quantities of oxen and ſheep, and when ploughed yield greater crops of corn than other land. The fielding though daily decreaſing is ſtill very great both in ſheepwalks and arable. The heath and marſh land may reaſonably be computed at 100,000 acres. There are ſome rich lands unincloſed, but they are chiefly graſs and common among the woodlands. The farmers here have been long accounted the beſt in the kingdom for management. Bills of encloſure are paſſed in parliament almoſt every ſeſſion, by which the heaths, commons, warrens, ſheep-walks, and open fields, are (under the direction of commiſſioners) properly allotted to and divided amongſt the ſeveral proprietors, and by them encloſed and improved; ſo that in a few years it is probable the whole county will be in a ſtate of cultivation.

Norfolk has been formerly, in common language, divided into woodlands and field-lands; the former never abounded ſo much in woods as many other counties, but has heretofore had plenty of oak timber, growing in antient paſtures, and the hedge-rows of very ſmall incloſures. It ſtill retains the diſpoſition to run to wood, chiefly oak, but for want of protection for the young trees, and through the neceſſity and negligence of landlords, the quantity of oak timber has been leſſening for many years, but that part called the woodland is the larger half of the county. This being the caſe it may be worth while to endeavour to account for the popular opinion ſo generally prevailing in the other parts of the kingdom, that Norfolk is an open country, and almoſt all of it even a ſandy ſoil, fitted by nature for little elſe but rabbits. It ſeems probable from hiſtory, as well as from private evidences, that almoſt all the arable lands of Norfolk, and indeed of moſt of the other counties in England, lay in open common fields in the reign of Henry VII. and great part of that of Henry VIII. The language of our law books, the acts of parliament, and the events of the reign of Edward VI. particularly Ket's rebellion in Norfolk, prove, that in the reigns of Henry VIII. and of his ſon Edward, many incloſures were made, and during thoſe reigns, and in the times ſhortly ſucceeding them, moſt of the arable lands, in the parts now called the woodlands, were probably incloſed, though timber might abound in them before in parks and antient paſtures. From thoſe times, therefore, we are to date the growth of the greateſt part of the hedge-row timber in that tract of Norfolk we are ſpeaking of, which in many parts of the county has been ſo large, and has grown ſo cloſe together, as, viewed from a little diſtance, to appear like a thick wood. Hence we are to account for the reputation this county has long had among all who have not ſeen it, as well as among many who have ſeen the parts moſt uſually viſited, of being an open champain country, for as ſuch it is repreſented by Camden and Speed and by old Tuſſer, a Georgic poet of the reign of Edward VI. Tuſſer compares Norfolk with Eſſex, which laſt, together with Suffolk and Kent, ſeems to have been incloſed before the times mentioned, and the tranſcribers of thoſe authors again frequently tranſcribing themſelves, have perpetuated the belief of a fact, originally founded in truth, though it has long ceaſed to be true. The courſe of travelling too purſued by thoſe who viſit the county, has accidentally tended to confirm this belief: Norwich, Holkham, and Houghton, being in dry parts of the county, recently incloſed, Rainham, Blickling and Lynn in the neighbourhood of ſuch, and Yarmouth in a country that may be called open.

The great public roads leading to Norwich have many of them turnpikes, and by a proper exertion of the power given to the magiſtrates by the preſent highway laws, the roads in general are receiving laſting improvements.

The general honeſty and good diſpoſition of the inhabitants towards the laws of their country may be in a great

[1] G.

a great meaſure aſcertained by the few priſoners uſually tried for capital crimes or felonies at the aſſizes, and that ſpirit of litigation for which this country was formerly proverbial now no longer exiſts; the counſel on the circuit oftentimes not receiving fees ſufficient to defray their neceſſary expences.

This county has many noblemen's ſeats, and abounds with thoſe of the gentry; many of which are fair and venerable ancient manſions, formerly adorned with painted windows enriched with armorial enſigns emblazoning the pedigrees of their poſſeſſors, but (ſorry I am to ſay it) moſt of theſe curious ſpecimens of art and diſtinctions of families are now to be traced only by their ſmall and imperfect remains. Others are ſuperb edifices, the works of modern architects, adorned with plantations, woods, waters, lawns, planned, planted, and laid out by the hands of a Browne and a Richmond, &c.

The clergy are numerous, reſpectable, and in general poſſeſs neat parſonages, much improved of late years, and ſtill improving.

The principal rivers are the Wentſum, Yare, Ant, Bure, Thurne, Waveney, Great and Little Ouſe, Nene, Thet, Stoke, Nar, Wisbech, Thur, Creak, Cley, Mundeſley, Greſham, Taiis, Loddon, Brome, Greſſinhall, Eyne and Tud. Of theſe are in part navigable the Yare, Bure, Waveney, both Ouſes, Nene and Nar. There are 11 conſiderable lakes called Broads.

The river Ouſe, with thoſe which it receives in its courſe from Brackley in Northamptonſhire, uſed to fall into the ſea at Wisbech. When that outfall decayed, a canal was cut by the commiſſioners of ſewers from Littleport to Brand river, to give its waters courſe through Lynne outfall into the ſea; the deſcent of the fens being all that way. The freſh water and the tides together wore the river Ouſe deeper and wider: but ſluices and bridges obſtructing its depth and breadth, the fens continue hurtfully ſurrounded, and will ever be ſo till the Ouſe is enlarged. The great object of the Board of Adventurers, by cutting new channels and drains, multiplying or repairing ſluices and bridges, is a plan pregnant with dangers that human experience cannot foreſee, nor human art perhaps be able to reſiſt, when a removal of the obſtructions of the preſent channel will anſwer the end of drainage. The erection of Denver ſluice 1651, on the river 17 miles above Lynne, has rendered the navigation of Lynne channel extremely difficult and dangerous by the continual ſhifting of the ſands in the harbour's mouth. Notwithſtanding this, the imports to Lynne are immenſe, its exports very conſiderable, and its foreign trade ſo great that it is thought to import more wine than any town in England except London; and its export of corn is alſo very conſiderable as it communicates with ſo many different counties by means of the navigable rivers that connect with them through the gteat Ouſe.

The landholders at the Norman ſurvey, beſides the king, were the biſhop of Bayeux, earls Mortaigne, Alan, Euſtace, Hugh; Robert Malet, William Warren, Roger Bigod, William biſhop of Oſbert biſhop of , the abbots of Bury, Ely, Ramſey, Hulme, St. Stephen's at Caen. William de Eſcois, Ralph de Bellofago, Rainald Fitz Ivo, Ralph Todeni, Hugh Montfort, Eudo Dapifer, Walter Gifford, Roger de Poitou, Ivo Taillebois, Ralph de Limeſi, Eudo Fitz Spiruwic, Drogo de Buraria, Ralph Bainard, Ranulph Peverel, Robert Gernon, Peter de Valoignes, Robert Fitz Corbucion, Ranulph brother of Ilger, Tehell Brito, Robert de Verli, Humphry Fitz Aubrey, Humphry de Bohun, Ralph de Felgeres, Gilbert Fitz Richer, Roger de Ramis, &c.

Among the lawyers which this county produced biſhop Gibſon mentions ſir Henry Spelman, a moſt zealous and ſucceſsful advocate of the rights of the church and clergy, born 1562 at Congham, and died 1641. He furniſhed Speed with his deſcription of Norfolk, and drew up a complete ſurvey of his native county, out of which biſhop Gibſon had large extracts, and afterwards publiſhed it among ſir Henry's poſthumous pieces. A ſtatute was made 33 Henry VI. to reſtrain the number of attornies in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Norwich, to ſix in each county, and two in the city.

SITOMAGUS. Dr. Gale and Dr. Ward place SITOMAGUS at Wulpit in Suffolk, of which there. Baxter erred unaccountably when he corrected it Ritomagus and placed it at Hemingford Abbots by St. Ives[a]. Dr. Plot reading it Sinomagus or Senomagus deduces it from the Senones of Gaul, or Sitomagus, from the Sitones a people of Germany bordering on the Sinones there[b]. If we ſuppoſe Simomagus to be the right reading, Ptolomy's Simeni, (for ſo he names the people of theſe parts,) will favor it, and Sinomagus comes nearer the name Iceni, if we ſuppoſe the I caſt away, as Spain for Hiſpain; and Cæſar's calling this people Cenimagni confirms this reading[c]. Amidſt the variety of conjectures I cannot help adopting Mr. Camden's which is warranted both by Antoninus and Peutinger; and that it was of Roman antiquity the coins found here evince. Biſhop Gibſon ſays the Saxon name is more correctly written Ðeoðropð, q. d. the ford of the people[c]. It was a ſeat of the kings of the Eaſt Angles. The Danes are generally ſuppoſed to have caſt up the great hill here about 865 when they wintered on it oppoſite to that on which king Edmund's army lay, on the extremity of which are many tumuli (particularly one called the Tut hill) where were buried the ſlain in the battle between him and them. They ſacked this city 870 the year in which they martyred king Edmund. This caſtle hill is made principally of chalk, and ſaid to be larger than that at Marlborough, has on its top a cavity capable of concealing twenty or thirty men, and was ſurrounded by a uniform fortification of three ramparts, with large ditches all round except where the Barbican interferes on the eaſt. Theſe works on the ſouth and eaſt ſides have been levelled for buildings, but no traces of walls were ever found[d]. The Danes kept poſſeſſion here above 50 years till the reign of Edmund, and returned again 1004, when they a ſecond time deſtroyed this place, and a third time 1009[e]. In the Confeſſor's time it was ſo recovered as to become a hundred of itſelf. From the decreaſe of the burgeſſes between the Confeſſor's and Conqueror's time, from 943 to 720, Mr. Blomfield inclines to underſtand the Manſuræ ruined houſes[f] as if Mazures: he adds that he does not find the chief magiſtrate was called Conſul, as the Atlas, p. 338, and he ſhould have added, Camden. But in Domeſday we read that the king had two parts, and the Conſulate one third. The town was valued in the Confeſ-

[a] Gloſſar. p. 203.
[b] Tac. de M. G. c. 45. Plot's Letter to lord Arlington in Hearne's Leland. [2] G.
[c] See alſo Lye. [d] Blomfield's Hiſt. of Norfolk I. 390. [e] Ib. 395. [f] Ib. 402.

ſor's time at £. 20. ad numerum & ad opus conſul. £. 10. ad numerum. Blomfield tranſlates him Earl, though conſulatus and comitatus are plainly diſtinguiſhed.

Herfaſt the Conqueror's chaplain removed the ſee from Elmham hither 1075, and rebuilt the church, of which the foundations and breadth are ſtill traceable [g]. The removal of the ſee to Norwich by Herbert de Loſinga 1094, was the ruin of this town. Blomfield ſays here were 13 churches in the Confeſſor's time [h], and 20 ſince, now reduced to 3 [i]. Here was antiently a houſe of Black Friars, and Roger (not Hugh) Bigod purchaſed the cathedral church, and began a houſe of Cluniacs, which he ſoon removed out of the town for the convenience of water. It was finiſhed 1114 [k], and valued at £. 312. per annum [l]. The Bigods, Mowbrays, and Howards, earls of Norfolk, were buried here, and ſeveral of the latter dukes of Norfolk ſince removed to Framlingham [m]. The ſite of the monaſtery with the manor thereto belonging, belongs now to lord Petre, who married a daughter of Philip Howard of Buckenham houſe in this county, and brother to the late duke of Norfolk. The abbey gate and ſome remains of the eaſt end of the church are ſtill extant; but the ruins of this laſt building are every day haſtening towards a total diſſolution by the deſtroying hands of rapacious tenants. The original ſite of this priory was occupied two centuries after by Henry earl of Lancaſter 1327 [n] by a houſe of friars preachers. John of Gaunt founded an houſe of Auſtin friars t. Richard II. [o]. The nunnery was founded by Hugh prior of St. Edmondsbury between 1160 and 1180, and valued at £. 40. per annum, having before been a priory of St. George. It remained entire till 1737, and the church is now a barn [p]. Here was alſo a priory of canons regular founded by William third earl of Warren 1109 t. Stephen, valued at £. 39. the church now a barn [q]: four hoſpitals [r], and a gild or college of St. Mary [s]; and here is now a freeſchool and almſhouſe founded by ſir Richard Fulmerſton 1566, confirmed by act of parliament 7 James I. [t] Here was a mint from Canute to Henry II. [u] Caius was told here was a ſtudium of 600 ſcholars, but the earlieſt account of a ſchool here is 1328 [x]. Richard I. made Thetford a corporation, governed by a bailiff, coroner, and mayor [y]. Elizabeth 1573 fixed its government to a mayor, confirmed by Charles II. [z] whoſe principal ſecretary ſir Joſeph Williamſon built the council houſe 1680. Thetford had a royal palace, and gave birth to that eminent antiquary Thomas Martin, who was born 1696-7, and died 1771.

"The ſite of the monaſtery of Thetford, with the manor thereto belonging, was granted by Henry VIII. after the diſſolution to Thomas duke of Norfolk, and hath ever ſince attended the fate of that family, it being parcel of the poſſeſſions this year 1693 of his grace Henry duke of Norfolk; but the other manor was always belonging to the earls Warren and Surrey. From them in the beginning of the reign of Richard I. it came to Hamelyne Plantagenet baſe ſon of Jeffrey earl of Anjou, who married Iſabel daughter and heir of William third earl Warren, and continued with that family except when Ralph de Cobham, knight, died ſeized of the manor of Thetford held in capite 20 Edward III. being parcel of the attainted earl of Lancaſter's lands, which were preſently after enjoyed by the heirs of that earl, and then came to the earls and dukes of Lancaſter, and upon their eſtates falling to heirs female 35 Edward III. with other manors, advowſons, &c. it was aſſigned as the part of Maud, daughter and coheir of Henry duke of Lancaſter, married to William duke of Zealand, and hath ever ſince continued parcel of the duchy of Lancaſter. The winter aſſizes are moſt commonly kept here, and the town houſe being old and rotten, ſir Joſeph Williamſon, knight, one of the principal ſecretaries of ſtate in the time of king Charles II. rebuilt the antient ſhire houſe, and gave to the corporation a lovely mace and fair ſword. The market is on Saturdays, and the company of Thetford muſicians have been always famous in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk [a]." The gaol was handſomely rebuilt in 1781.

The Ouſe is navigable hither from Lynne. Here is a mineral ſpring.

Mr. Martin ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1730 an antient piece of fine braſs found at Long Stratton, which Mr. Maurice Johnſon ſuppoſed part of a lock to the keep of the caſtle, he having ſuch an one.

Mr. Blomefield [b] inclines to derive the name of Buckenham from the bucks in the neighbouring foreſt rather than from the beech trees, which Spelman ſays are not now to be found hereabouts. But however they may have failed, it is at leaſt as probable an etymology for this place as for Buckinghamſhire. "The manor belonged intirely to the Albinis, and came by Mabel the eldeſt of the four coheireſſes of William de Albini 5th earl of Arundel to Robert de Tateſhall t. Henry III. but upon the death of the laſt Robert de Tateſhalle Emma married to Adam de Cailli, Joan to Robert de Driby, and Iſabel to John de Orreby, had ſeveral intereſts here. What became of Orreby's intereſt I cannot find, but ſuppoſe ſhe died without iſſue; but for Driby's it continued in that family but one generation, when Alice, ſiſter and heir of John de Driby, and daughter of Joan and Robert being married to ſir William Bernake, knt. whoſe granddaughter Maud, being heir to her brother William, was married to ſir Ralph lord Cromwell, that part came at laſt to the Cliftons, by ſir John de Clifton of Buckenham marrying the third aunt and coheireſs of Ralph laſt lord Cromwell of Tatſhall, whoſe granddaughter Elizabeth was married to ſir John de Knevet lord of Buckenham, grandſon of the chancellor, in his wife's right 19 Richard II. where it continued till ſir Philip Knevet, bart. ſold it to Hugh Audley of London, gent. ſon of John Audley of Sutton in Kent, who dying without iſſue, ſettled it on William Harvey ſon of Robert Harvey of London (who married Sarah one of the ſiſters and coheireſſes of the ſaid Hugh), who with Ambroſe Holbech, gent. were the proprietors thereof 1693. Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolk obtained a grant of Bukenham manor of Richard II. not allowed [c]." The priory ſtood on the ſite of the old caſtle: the new one built by Albini contains three acres and three hills ſurrounded by a deep moat; the keep is 63 yards round, and the walls ten feet thick. No other buildings except part of the gatehouſe remain. The Knevets lived here till it was [g] Blomfield, Ib. 404. Martin's Hiſt. of Thetford, p. 173.

[h] Blomf. Ib. 404. 411. I make out but eight from Domeſday.
[i] Ib. 412. 422.
[k] Martin, 112. 115.
[l] Bl. I. 427. 439. Tan. 334.
[m] Bl. I. 455.
[n] Bl. 427. Tan. 366. Mart. 139.
[o] Bl. 429. Mart. 195. Tan. 369.
[p] Bl. 433. Tan. 349. Mart. 98. 111.
[q] Bl. 455. Tan. 348. Mart. 174.
[r] Bl. 419, 420. 423, 424. Mart. 91. 98.
[s] Bl. 425. Mart. 203. Tan. 370.
[t] Bl. 457. Mart. 228, 229.
[u] Bl. 459. Mart. 279.
[x] Mart. 227.
[y] Ib. 234.
[z] Mart. 237. 243.
[a] Peter Le Neve's MS. pen. edit.
[b] I. 251.
[c] MS. P. Le Neve

demoliſhed

demoliſhed and ſold by ſir Philip 1649 to the Audleys. The priory was founded before 1156 by William Albini firſt earl of Suſſex, who married Henry I's widow. It was valued at £. 108. and the ſite may juſt be traced. New Bukenham adjoining took its riſe from the new caſtle [d].

Kenninghall. "Kenninghall is of Saxon original, and I am apt to think ſo called from the kings of the Iceni having a palace here; for it is called in Domeſday Kenninghala, and I am ſure by that book it appears to have been Edward the Confeſſor's demeſne, and was then William the Conqueror's. It afterwards I ſuppoſe by the match of William de Albini firſt earl of Arundel with Adeliza widow of king Henry I. and daughter of Godfrey duke of Lorrain, came to the Albinies earls of Arundel, and was aſſigned as parcel of her dower to Iſabella widow of Hugh the laſt earl of Arundel of that name [e]; but upon the diviſion of their eſtate after her death, it came to Roger de Montalt, whoſe grandſon Robert held it at the time of his death [f], and ſettled it with his other lands on the crown, but immediately after, by what conveyance I know not, I find Richard Fitz Alan, who was attainted 21 Richard II. poſſeſſed of it, and then Thomas de Mowbray duke of Norfolk obtained a grant of the reverſion of it from that king, and died ſeized thereof 1 Henry IV [g]. from which family it came to the preſent poſſeſſor 1693 Henry duke of Norfolk. The antient noble ſeat ſtood in the park eaſtward of the town, but was pulled down and diſparked within the memory of perſons alive 1693 [h]."

Kenninghall, q. d. Kyning hall, though in Domeſday it is written Cheninkehala, is ſaid to have had a caſtle of the Eaſt Saxon kings, pulled down by Thomas the great duke of Norfolk when he built his palace here in the middle of a large park, which on his attainder was ſettled by Henry VIII. on princeſs Mary, who made it her reſidence, and reſtored it to the family on her acceſſion. Queen Elizabeth alſo reſided there. It continued in the Norfolk family as their capital ſeat, till about 120 years ago it was pulled down, and the materials ſold for a trifle. It is now the property of William Pawlett, eſq. The office of chief butler at the coronation was firſt claimed in right of this manor, and was fixed 1 Edward III. to the lords of it, Bokenham and Sneteſham [i].

"Aſhwell was called Thorpe in Aſhwell from ſir John de Thorp lord thereof t. Henry III. where that family continued for five deſcents, till Iſabella daughter and at length ſole heir of ſir Edmund Thorpe the younger being married to Philip Tylney of Boſton, in the county of Lincoln, eſq; brought this manor to that family, whoſe ſon ſir Frederick Tylney of Boſton having but one daughter and heir firſt married to Humphry Bouchier lord Berners, and after to Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk, brought it to the family of the Bourchiers, but his ſon John leaving one only daughter and ſole heir Joan married to Edmund Knevet ſecond ſon of Edmund Knevet of Bokenham caſtle fixed it in that branch of the Knevets in which it continued 1693 in the perſon of Thomas Knevet, eſq; who had a juſt title to the barony of Berners from his ſaid anceſtors. He died 1693 without iſſue, and it became the inheritance of his ſiſters and coheirs [k]."

The heireſs of the Knevets of Aſhwellthorpe claimed 1720 the barony of Berners, which was allowed, and ſhe died 1743 [l]. The eſtate belongs now to Henry William Wilſon, eſq. of Didlington in this county, who is deſcended from the Knevets of Aſhwellthorp, and has an intereſt in the barony of Berners, which is now in abeyance.

Hapton. At Hapton was found the plate engraved Pl. II. f. 13. ſuppoſed a taliſman. It was in the hands of Mr. Robert Chaplin, jun. of that place.

Carleton. The herring pies which the lord of the manor of Carleton is bound to carry to court are the fee farm rents of the city of Norwich before it was incorporated, when it was a great place of fiſhing before Yarmouth was founded; the city having purchaſed the manor of Carleton, the ſheriffs ſupply the place of the lord. One hundred, reckoning by the great hundred, or ſix ſcore herrings, are required in 24 pies well ſeaſoned and baked [m]. The town of Yarmouth is by charter bound to ſend to the ſheriffs of Norwich theſe herrings, which are to be baked in pies and delivered to the lord of the manor of Carleton to carry to the king. This is duly obſerved, and an indenture is drawn up purporting that upon delivery of theſe pies to the lord of the manor, he ſhall acknowledge the receipt, and be obliged to convey them to the king [n]. The manor of Carleton belongs now to Mr. Acourt Dodd.

"Carleton is ſo called, and alſo Carlton Rode from an ancient owner thereof in the time of Henry III. whoſe name was Walter de Rode, as may be ſeen amongſt the inquiſitions of thoſe who held knights fees at that time, and paid towards the aid for marrying that king's ſiſter Iſabel to the Roman emperor. The words of the record concerning the ſerjeantry of carrying the paſties as found in the record called Lovel Book in the cuſtody of the king's remembrancer of the Exchequer at Weſtminſter are as follows: "Willus Curzon tenet de Rege in capite unum meſua-
"gium cum viginti quatuor acris terræ arabilis cum
"pertinentijs in Eaſt Carleton per ſervitium trium par-
"tium magnæ ſerjeantiæ, videlicet quod ipſe ſimul cum
"tenemento quondam Robti de Welhelme, qui tertiam
"partem predicte ſerjeantiæ tenet in eadem villâ, cen-
"tum haleces recentes in viginti quatuor paſtellis ſump-
"tibus ſuis propriis de villâ Norwici de redditu civium
"Norwici uſque ad Dominum Regem ubicunque fuerit in
"Anglia ducet:" which is ſtill performed by indenture between the ſheriffs of Norwich and the lord of the manor, or a perſon authorized by him, one of which indentures follows in theſe words:
"Hæc Indentura facta apud Norwic in Guildhalda
"ibidem 29no die Septembris hora undecima ante meridiem
"ejuſdem diei anno regni domini noſtri Caroli ſecundi
"Dei gratia Angliæ, &c. 33do annoque Domini 1680,
"inter Jacobum Brockden et Thomam Seaman viceco-
"mites civitatis predictae ex una parte, et Samuel Verdon
"generoſum tenentem terrarum et tenementorum Petri
"Clayton generoſi domini manerij de Eaſt Carleton ex
"altera parte, Teſtatur quod predicti Vicecomites, &c.
"deliberaver. prefato S. V. 100 Haleces de primis Halec'

[d] Bl. I. 251. 267. Tan. 347.
[e] Clauſ. 27 H. III.
[f] Cart. 11. E. III.
[g] Eſc. H. IV. n. 71.
[h] P. Le-Neve MS.
[i] Bl. I. 141. 145.
[k] Le Neve MS.
[l] Bl. III. 104.
[m] Bl. II. 264. III. 67.
[n] G. "recent.

" recent. &c. per magnum centum in 24 paſtellis bene " firmatis, &c [n]."

Diſs. Diſs, olim Dice, from the mere on the ſouth ſide of it, is a market town giving name to a hundred. The maner was antient demeſne, and in the king's hands till king Henry I. gave it to Richard de Lucy, when it was divided by him between his two daughters by his ſecond wife; for with Dionyſia married to .... de Mounteny, anceſtor of ſir Robert de Mounteney, who lived 9 Edward I. he gave the third part of the hundred, manor, and market of Diſs; and the other two parts of them to ſir Walter Fitz Robert with Maud his other daughter, whoſe ſon Robert Fitz Walter gave the moiety of theſe two parts with the third part of the hundred and market to ſir Gilbert Peche, knt. in free marriage with Alice his ſiſter; but the Fitz Walters had all along the chief maner, and held in capite the whole hundred, town, and appurtenances. With them it continued for eight deſcents in the male line, till Anne daughter and ſole heir of Walter Fitz Walter, who died 11 Henry VI. tranſlated this town and a vaſt eſtate in this county and others to her huſband Thomas Ratcliffe, eſq. and it was enjoyed by ſir John Ratcliffe, knt. and his deſcendants ſucceſſively earls of Suſſex [o]." Robert Fitz Walter, who died 1325, probably built the church. The manor was ſold by the Ratcliffes earls of Suſſex. John Skelton the poet laureat was rector here 1504—1511 [p].

Oſmundeſton or Scole. Oſmundeſton, alias Scole, joins to the eaſt part of Diſs [q]. Here was a very good inn, remarkable for the extravagance and folly of its ſign (the White Hart) on which the builder of the houſe, John Peck, merchant at Norwich 1655, expended £. 1057 in unmeaning decorations, and which has been long ſince decayed [r].

Shelton. At Shelton was a noble manſion houſe built by ſir Ralph Shelton, who died 1568, round a quadrangle in a moat, with an imbattled outer wall and turrets at each corner, and a grand gate with a turret at each corner. In the windows and ceiling were the matches of the family; but the whole is now ruinated. The ſame ſir Ralph built the church of brick, in whoſe windows were all the family arms [s]. The eſtate continued in the family it gave name to till 1694 [t]. It belongs now to Edmund Bacon, eſq.

Gare or Yare [v]. Baxter derives the Gare, or Yare, from Garii üi eneu, q. d. the mouth of the rough water.

Redenhall Redenhall church, rebuilt of freeſtone in the beginning of the 14th century by Thomas Brotherton earl of Norfolk, and the chancel by William Newport, rector, 1311-1326, has a noble ſquare tower, large and lofty, begun 1460 and finiſhed 1520, ſplit from top to bottom by a ſtorm 1616, but ſo ironed together as not to affect its ſhape or beauty [u].

Heir or Garr. The river Heir, or Gar, riſes at a village called Garveſton in Mitford hundred [x].

Hingham. Hingham was reputed the head of the barony of Rhie ever ſince its grant to Henry ſon of Hubert de Rhie who came in with the Conqueror, but the manor belonged to the Gourneys and Marſhalls, and by marriage it came to the Morleys, Lovels, and Parkers, who all ſucceſſively bore the title of lord Morley [a]. " It was before the fifth year of king John parcel of the poſſeſſions of Cardo de Freſhanvil with the hundred of Hengham, now Fairhow hundred, when in the 15th of king John, Cardo being againſt king John with his rebellious barons, John Le Mareſchal had a grant of them. He was ſon of John Mareſchal, ſon of Gilbert Mareſchal grand-father of William firſt earl of Pembroke, and his mother was daughter and heir of Hubert de Rya, by which marriage he was entitled to the barony of Rye. They flouriſhed here for ſix generations till John de Mareſchal, who died without iſſue in the 10th year of Edward II. left Hawis his ſiſter and heir married to Robert de Morle, called ſo from a town juſt by, by which marriage they poſſeſſed all the Mareſchals eſtate, and were Mareſchals of Ireland in fee. After many ſucceſſions they determined in an heir female, Eleanor, in the time of king Edward IV. married to William, younger ſon of William lord Lovell of Tichmerſh, who had one ſon called Henry Lovell lord Morley, ſlain at Dixmuid in Flanders in the 4th year of king Henry VII. without iſſue, and a daughter Alice, heir to her brother, married to ſir William Parker, knt. who brought this manor with a great eſtate to him. Their ſon Henry was ſummoned to parliament by the title of lord Morley, with whom and his deſcendants it continued till Edward lord Morley ſold it to ſir Thomas Hunt of London, knt. who bought a great eſtate in this county, and whoſe poſterity continue ſtill at Salle in Eynsford hundred. Afterwards ..... Tipper and .... Dawe purchaſed it of Hunt. I ſuppoſe they procured a licence of alienation of it in the 34th of queen Elizabeth. It after became the inheritance of .... Southall, and was mortgaged to .... Long of Reymerſton, of whom it was purchaſed about 1620 by ſir Thomas Wodehouſe of Kimberley, bart. to which family the inheritance belongeth. This town was famous for being the birth place of the famous Juſtice itinerant in the time of Edward I. who was named of this town Ralph de Hengham [y]." Hengham is alſo head of a deanry, and a market town. It was burnt in the beginning of the preſent century, but has been ſince rebuilt [z]. The church has a handſome tower, and in the chancel is a curious and noble Gothic monument of ſtone, enriched with images, arms, tracery work, &c. for Thomas lord Morley, who died t. H. VI.

Depeh. At Depeham near Aſhwelthorp grew a very large female broad leaf lime tree, called by Mr. Evelyn [a] Tilia Coloſſea Depemenſis. At two yards from the ground it was eight yards and a half round. About the root nigh the earth 16 yards, and at half a yard above that near 12 yards; 30 yards high to the boughs. It was taken down about 70 years ſince [b]. At its foot was a petrefying ſpring.

Sculton. Sculton, by what I find, was called Burdos and Burdeleys, from a family of that name lords thereof; for Hugh de Burdeleys held in capite one hundred ſhillings land in Scoulton by the ſervice of the larder [c]. " Sir Edward Chamberlain, knt. was lord of the manor in the 32d year of Henry VIII. and levied a fine thereof in that year to Edward Gourney and others, it being in the year 1685 parcel of the inheritance of the right honourable George Nevill baron of Abergaveny who then put in his claim at the coronation of king James II. to do that ſervice of Lardiner, Larderer, or Larder, and it was allowed to him."

[n] MS. P. Le Neve. [o] Le Neve MS. [p] Bl. II. 1—25. [q] Ib. 86.
[r] Bl. I. 86. [s] Bl. III. 181. [t] Le Neve MS. [u] Bl. III. 244. [x] Bl. V. 1193. [a] G.
[y] Le Neve MS. [z] Bl. I. 666. [a] Sylva, p. 82. [b] Bl. III. 717. G.
[c] Plac. Corone 34 Hen. III. Rot. 5 Dorſ. Bl. I. 609.

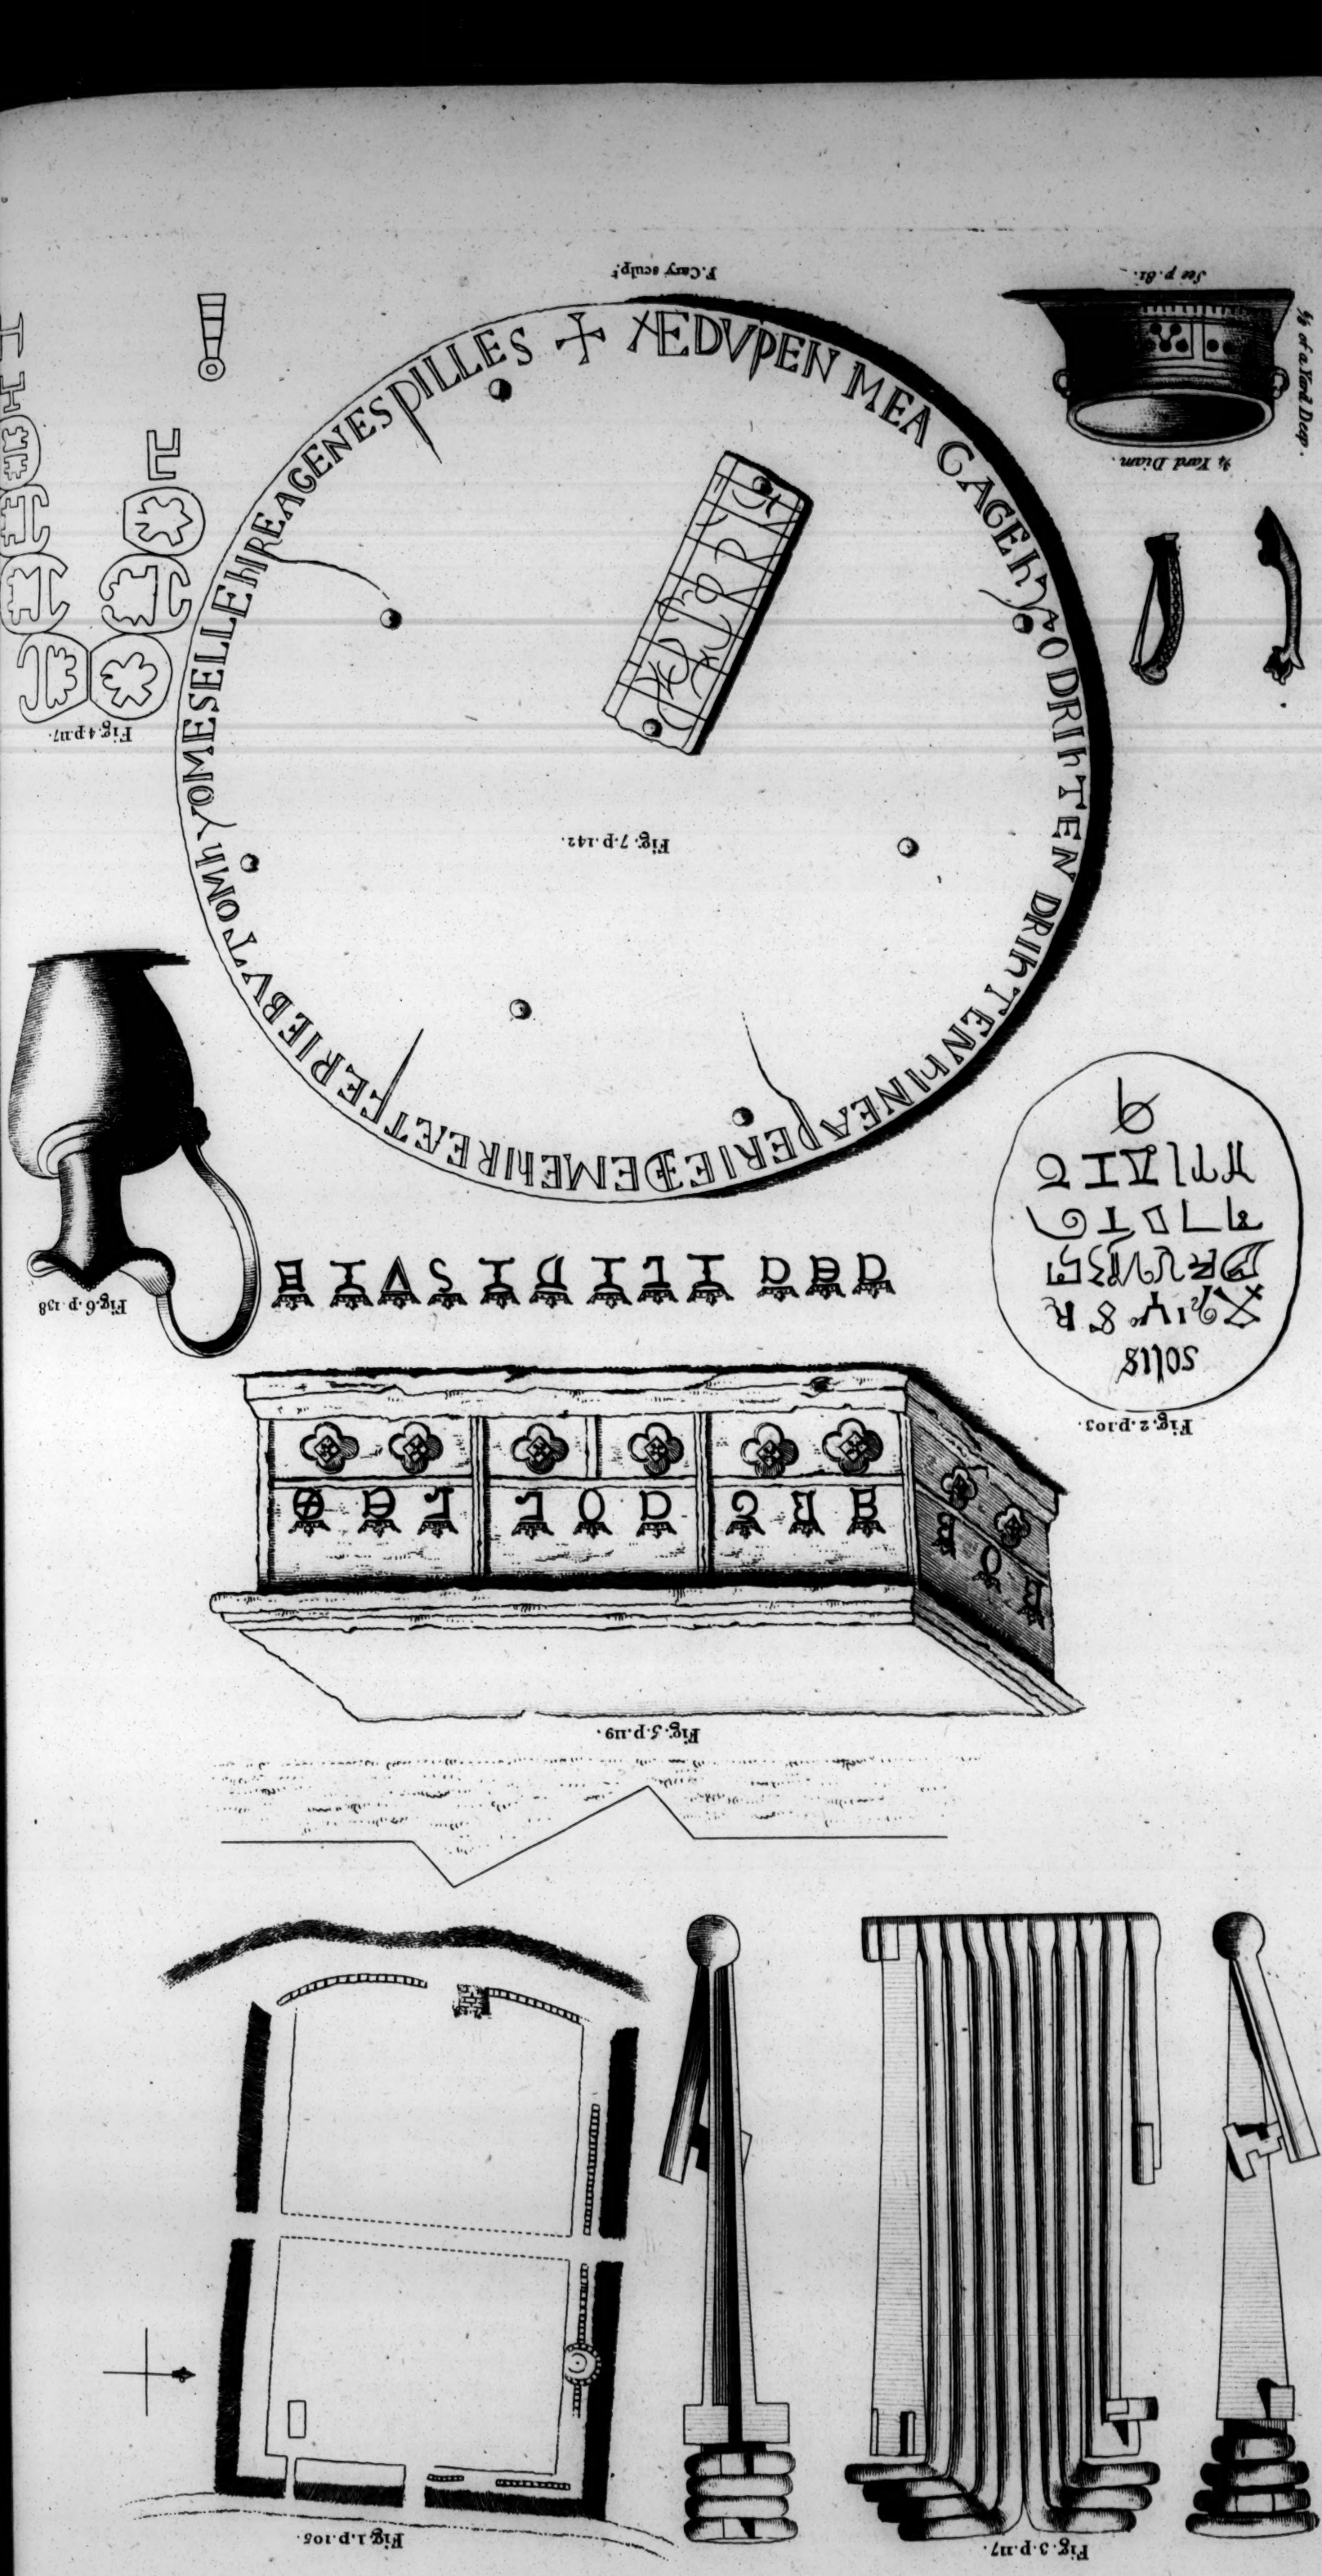

Fig. 7. p. 142.
Fig. 4. p. 117.
Fig. 6. p. 138
Fig. 5. p. 119.
Fig. 2. p. 103.
Fig. 1. p. 105.
Fig. 3. p. 117.
Vol. III. Pl. II. p. 105
F. Carey sculp.t
¼ Yard Diam.
¼ of a Yard Deep.
See p. 81.

Watton is a market town 12 miles from Thetford. On one side of it at Carsbrook was a nunnery, succeeded by a preceptory, valued at £. 65. 2s. 9d.[d] and on the other side at Tompson a college, valued at £. 52. 5s.[e] The manor belongs to sir William Fleming, bart. whose sister married the brave captain Farmer.

Not far from hence is Woodrising, the seat of the Southwells, of whom sir Robert was Master of the Rolls, and his brother sir Richard privy counsellor to Edward VI. chancellor of the garter, who first brought the Mortlake tapestry into England. It was sold 1649 to sir Francis Crane, knt. chancellor of the garter, whose family sold it to Robert Bedel, esq. whose son and namesake held it 1693[f]. It belongs now to John Weyland, esq. The Southwells, of which family was sir Robert, principal secretary of state for Ireland, and president of the Royal Society, and employed in several negotiations by Charles II. are now seated at King's Weston, Gloucestershire[g], of whom Edmund was created lord Clifford of Clifford in that county, 1776, and succeeded 1777 by his son and namesake.

In the hundred of Forehoe, so called from the four hills or barrows where the hundred court used to be kept, is Wymondham, a pleasant market town and extensive parish, antiently given by the Conqueror to William de Albini, who founded the abbey here 1. Henry I. for black monks from St. Albans, valued at £. 211. The choir now ruined was the burial place of his family. The east part of the nave at the dissolution was converted into a parish church, and still remains with the middle and west tower, which last was built by the inhabitants 1410[h]. On the bridge is Wefewade chapel, an hermitage, cell to Burton Lazars, now ruined. Queen Elizabeth founded a school in St. Thomas' chapel 1559. This town gave birth and name to the flourishing family of the Windhams, as well as to the Ketts, of which last some remained in the beginning of this century. "That flourishing family of the Wyndhams lately spread into several branches; for sir Hugh Windham of Pilsdon court in Dorsetshire had issue sir William Wyndham of Orchard Wyndham in Somersetshire, sir Francis Wyndham of Trent in that county, baronet, William Wyndham of Felbridge in this county, Thomas Wyndham of Salisbury in Wiltshire, and several others: but the chief manor of Wymondham continued with the possessors of Buckenham castle, till . . . Knevet sold it to sir Henry Hobart, knt. lord chief justice of the common pleas in the time of king James I.[i]" The town was wilfully burnt 1615 by gipsies. The principal manors were sold by sir Philip Knevet to Henry Hobart, to whose family it now belongs[k].

In this parish is Deerham-hall, the present residence of the Wodehouses, a noble seat, situated in the midst of a park remarkable for its fine and spreading oaks, &c. The first seat of this family was the antient one of the Falconers at Kimberley, rebuilt by sir John Wodehouse, in the reign of H. VI. They continued in it 1639, when sir Philip Wodehouse pulled it down and removed to Downham hall.

Ivo de Grene, monk of Thetford, in his MS. history extant in Benet college [lib. I. X. 175. would persuade us that Aileborough was the metropolis of Norfolk built by king Atlinge against Rond king of Thetford. It rather took its name from being near some antient burgh or fortification, q. d. Atle burgh: and other histories call it an old city. The earthworks here were very considerable. Here was a college founded by sir Robert de Mortimer before 1387, "whose ancestor had this manor from the Conqueror. Sir Robert's three granddaughters conveyed it to their husbands, Bigot, Fitz Randulph, and Ratcliffe, in which last the whole centered and continued after they were created earls of Sussex, till given to a younger branch of that family, when sir Alexander Ratcliff of this place, or his son, sold it about the year 1657 to sir Francis Bickley of London, baronet, whose descendants made it their seat; sir Francis Bickley, baronet, his grandson, living there 1693[l]." His heirs sold it to the Ashs present lords[m]. The market here is on Thursdays, and every Thursday fortnight it is furnished with fat bullocks and sheep. Aylsborough.

East Harling has a weekly market on Tuesday, for linens, the manufacture of this and other parts of the county[n]. Of late years it has had a pretty considerable corn market, much frequented by the Ipswich merchants when the Dutch markets are open for the corn trade. East Harling.

At Rushford, or worth, sir Edmund Gonville, rector, founder of Gonville college, Cambridge, founded a college of secular priests, 1342, value £. 85. 15s.[o] Rushford.

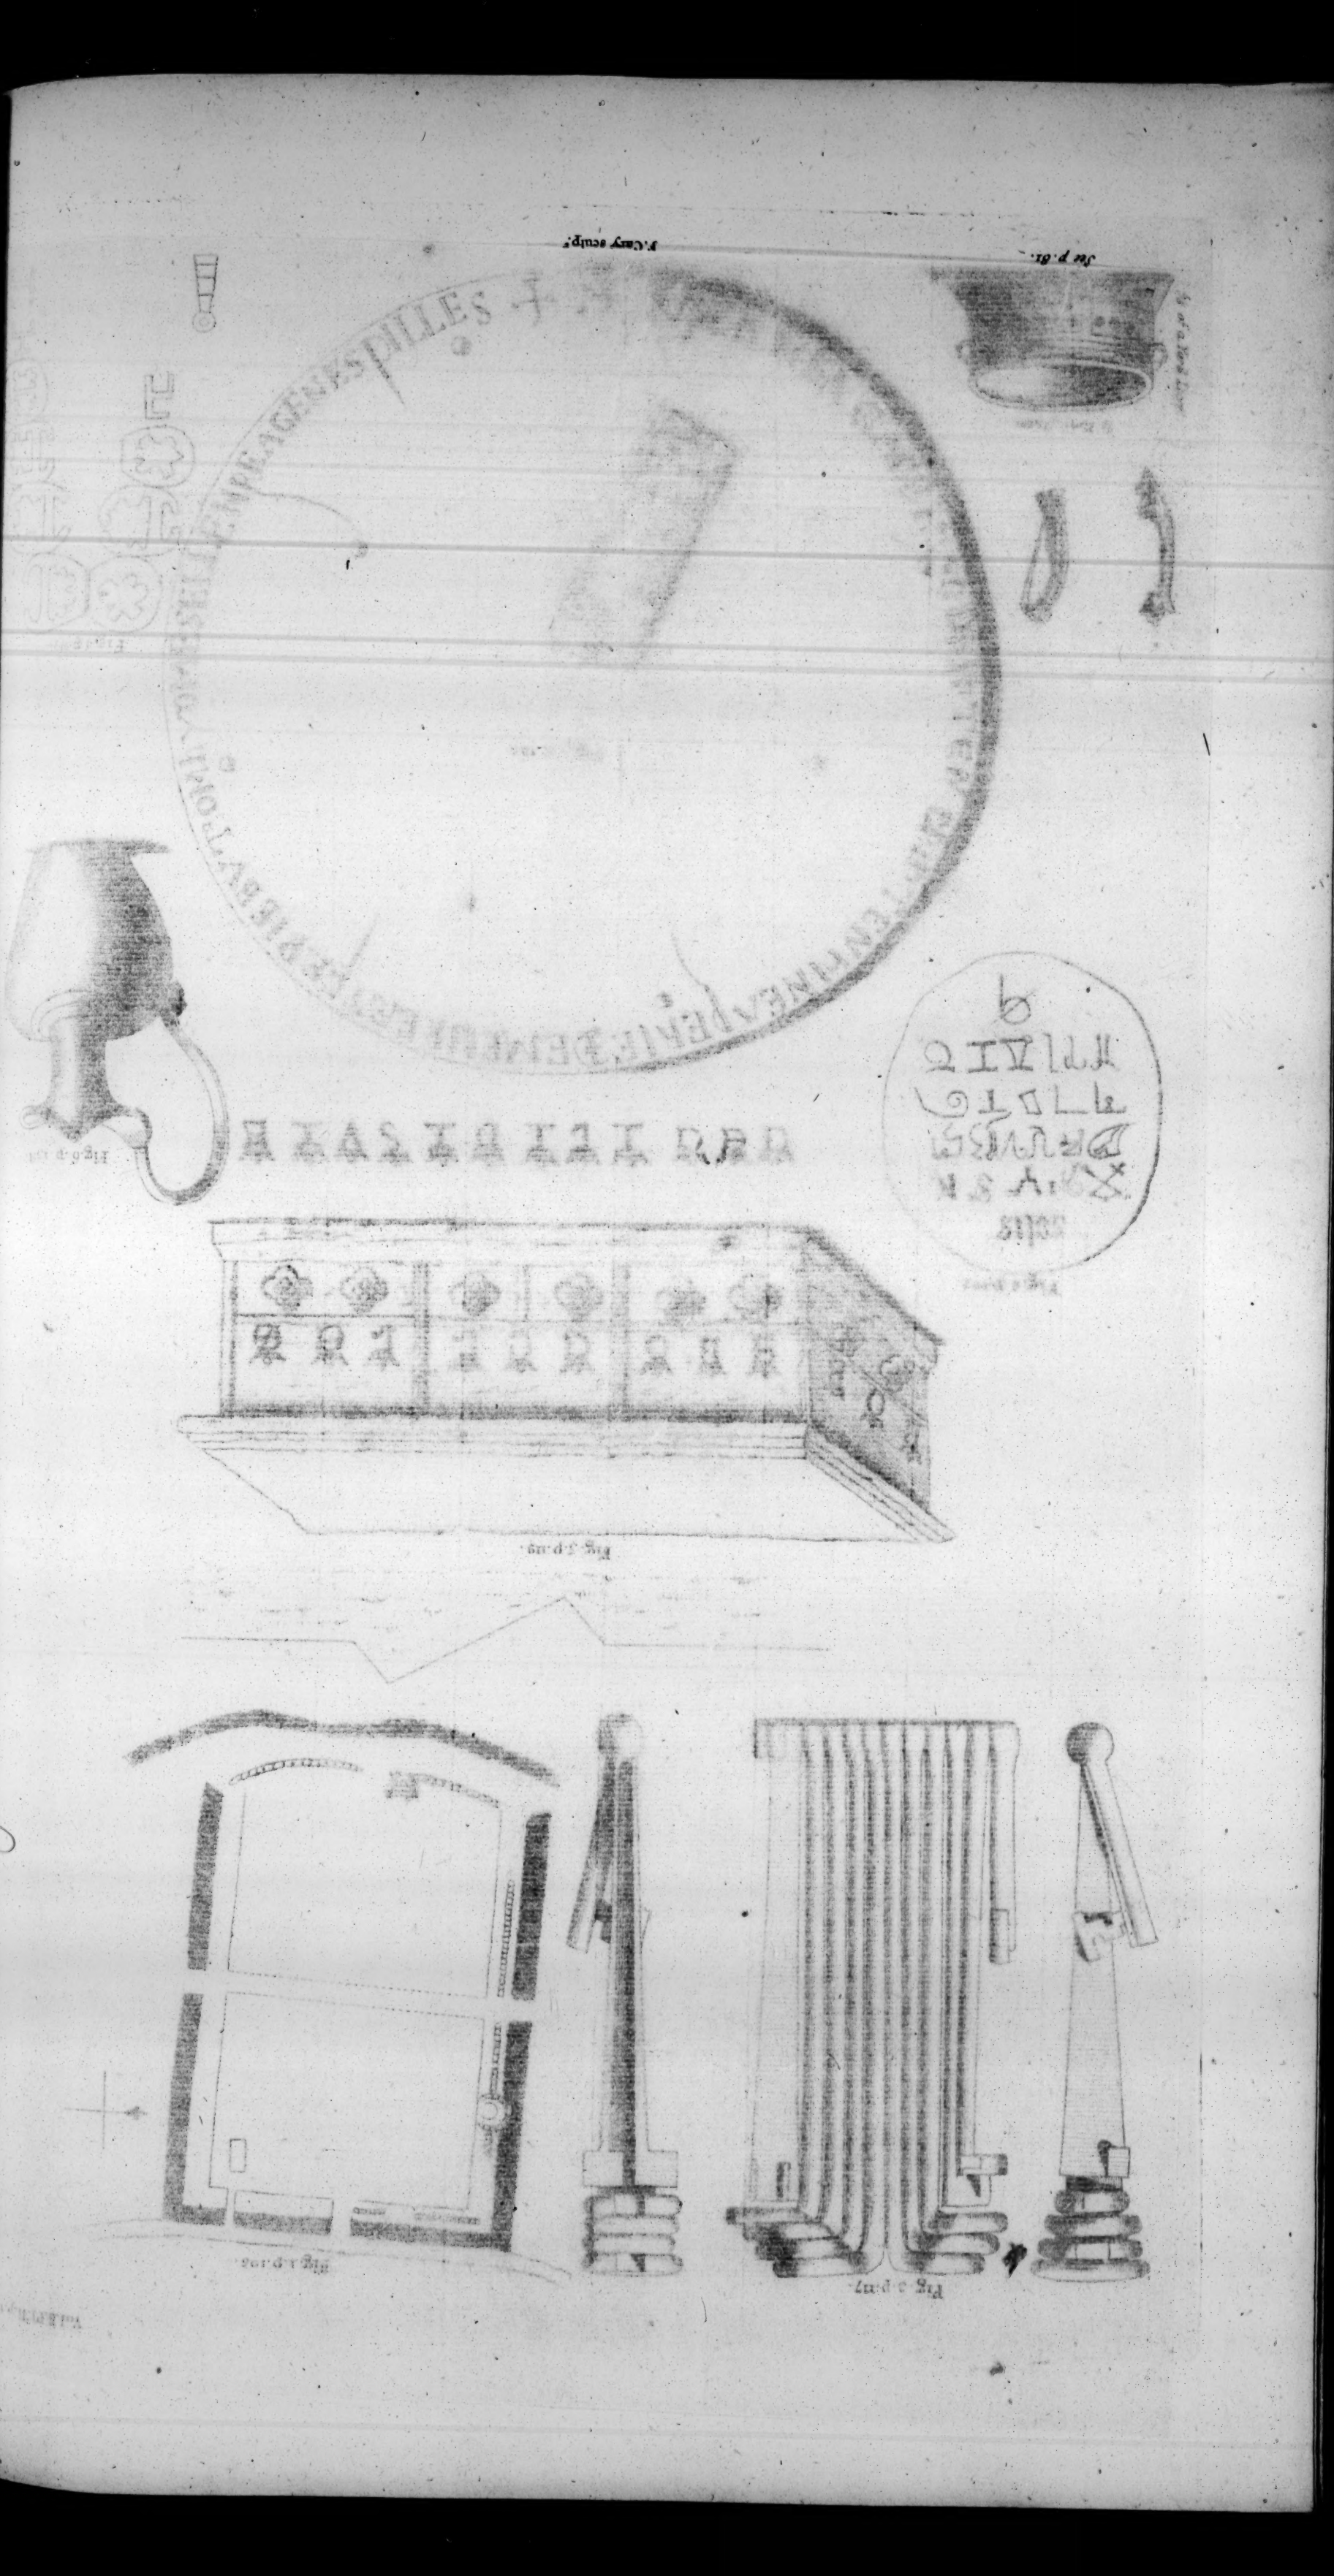
Taesburg bespeaks itself the AD TAUM of the Peutinger table, and is so placed by Gale on Antoninus[p], though Baxter puts it at Cambridge. As Venta Icenorum takes its place in Antoninus, Ward supposes it was neglected for it[q]. Gale mentions coins found here inscribed IC. DVRO. T.[r] The church stands in the fortification, which contains about 24 acres, and is square. The river on which it stands is really the Tese: the Wentsum, or Wentfar, q. d. passage to Venta, being the river on which Norwich stands[s]. Taesburgh.

At Therston adioining were found about 20 years since several coins of the lower empire[t]. Therston.

Caster is certainly the most considerable Roman station in these parts. It is a parallelogram[u] of 440 by 360 yards, consisting of a single vallum and ditch surrounded with a strong wall of flints and bricks, 16 and a half by 12 and a half thick. The principal entrance is in the middle of the east side, at each corner of which were mounts or watch towers, and on the west side by the river Tese a water gate and round tower[x]. The foundations of another tower are on the north bank. Many Roman coins have been found here from Nero to the Bas Empire, and two urns at Dunston hill on the other side of the river not a mile from the camp. The whole site includes about 30 acres. South east of the church, which is built within the camp of materials from the walls, is a spring of clear cold water at the bottom of the trench[y]. Caster.

The late Mr. Henry Baker had from Caster a bronze Satyr of uncommonly fine workmanship, about eight inches high, sitting, his legs crossed, the right more gathered up than the other, holding in his right hand a shell, in his left a kind of horn

[d] Tan. 359. [e] Tan. 367. [f] Le Neve MS. [g] H. Bund. G. See before V. I. p. 173.
[h] N. I. 218. Tan. 344. [i] Le Neve. [k] Bl. I. 750. G.
[l] Le Neve MS. [m] Bl. I. 540. [n] Tan. 366.
[o] Hollis, 1393. [p] Bl. III. 137. [q] B. II. 2, 3.
[r] Lancaster's make it square.
[s] See the plan Pl. II. fig. from that in Mr. Anderson's account in Phil. Trans. No. 493. A different plan in the Bio history of Nor-
[t] III. 289. Phil. Trans. No. 443.



Watton is a market town 12 miles from Thetford. On one ſide of it at Carsbrook was a nunnery, ſucceeded by a preceptory, valued at £. 65. 2s. 9d.[d] and on the other ſide at Tompſon a college, valued at £. 52. 5s.[e] The manor belongs to ſir William Fleming, bart. whoſe ſiſter married the brave captain Farmer.

Not far from hence is Woodriſing, the ſeat of the Southwells, of whom ſir Robert was Maſter of the Rolls, and his brother ſir Richard privy counſellor to Edward VI. chancellor of the garter, who firſt brought the Mortlake tapeſtry into England. It was ſold 1649 to ſir Francis Crane, knt. chancellor of the garter, whoſe family ſold it to Robert Bedel, eſq. whoſe ſon and nameſake held it 1693[f]. It belongs now to John Weyland, eſq; The Southwells, of which family was ſir Robert, principal ſecretary of ſtate for Ireland, and preſident of the Royal Society, and employed in ſeveral negotiations by Charles II. are now ſeated at King's Weſton, Glouceſterſhire[g], of whom Edmund was created lord Clifford of Clifford in that county, 1776, and ſucceeded 1777 by his ſon and nameſake.

In the hundred of Foreboe, ſo called from the four hills or barrows where the hundred court uſed to be kept, is Wymondham, a pleaſant market town and extenſive pariſh, antiently given by the Conqueror to William de Albini, who founded the abbey here t. Henry I. for black monks from St. Albans, valued at £. 211. The choir now ruined was the burial place of his family. The eaſt part of the nave at the diſſolution was converted into a pariſh church, and ſtill remains with the middle and weſt tower, which laſt was built by the inhabitants 1410[h]. On the bridge is Weſtwade chapel, an hermitage, cell to Burton Lazars, now ruined. Queen Elizabeth founded a ſchool in St. Thomas' chapel 1559. This town gave birth and name to the flouriſhing family of the Windhams, as well as to the Ketts, of which laſt ſome remained in the beginning of this century. "That flouriſhing family of the Wyndhams lately ſpread into ſeveral branches; for ſir Hugh Windham of Pilleſdon court in Dorſetſhire had iſſue ſir William Windham of Orchard Wyndham in Somerſetſhire, ſir Francis Wyndham of Trent in that county, baronets, William Wyndham of Felbridge in this county, Thomas Wyndham of Salisbury in Wiltſhire, and ſeveral others: but the chief manor of Wymondham continued with the poſſeſſors of Bukenham caſtle, till .... Knevet ſold it to ſir Henry Hobart, knt. lord chief juſtice of the common pleas in the time of king James I.[i]" The town was wilfully burnt 1615 by gipſies. The principal manors were ſold by ſir Philip Knevet to Henry Hobart, to whoſe family it now belongs[k].

In this pariſh is Downham hall, the preſent reſidence of the Wodehouſes, a noble ſeat, ſituated in the midſt of a park venerable for its fine and ſpreading oaks, &c. The firſt ſeat of this family was the antient one of the Faſtolfs at Kimberley, rebuilt by ſir John Wodehouſe, in the reign of H. VI. They continued in it till 1659, when ſir Philip Wodehouſe pulled it down and removed to Downham hall.

John Brame, monk of Thetford, in his MS. hiſtory extant in Benet college Lib. I. X. 175. would perſuade us that Atleborough was the metropolis of Norfolk built by king Atlinge againſt Rond king of Thetford. It rather took its name from being near ſome antient burgh or fortification, q. d. Atle burgh: and other hiſtories call it an old city. The earthworks here were very conſiderable. Here was a college founded by ſir Robert de Mortimer before 1387, "whoſe anceſtor had this manor from the Conqueror. Sir Robert's three granddaughters conveyed it to their huſbands, Bigot, Fitz Ranulph, and Ratcliffe, in which laſt the whole centered and continued after they were created earls of Suſſex, till given to a younger branch of that family, when ſir Alexander Ratcliff of this place, or his ſon, ſold it about the year 1657 to ſir Francis Bickley of London, baronet, whoſe deſcendants made it their ſeat; ſir Francis Bickley, baronet, his grandſon, living there 1693[l]." His heirs ſold it to the Aſhs preſent lords[m]. The market here is on Thurſdays, and every Thurſday fortnight it is furniſhed with fat bullocks and ſheep. Attleborough.

Eaſt Harling has a weekly market on Tueſday, for linens, the manufacture of this and other parts of the county[n]. Of late years it has had a pretty conſiderable corn market, much frequented by the Ipſwich merchants when the Dutch markets are open for the corn trade. Eaſt Harling.

At Ruſhford, or worth, ſir Edmund Gonville, rector, founder of Gonville college, Cambridge, founded a college of ſecular prieſts, 1342, value £. 85. 15s.[o] Ruſhford.

Taesburg beſpeaks itſelf the AD TAUM of the Peutinger table, and is ſo placed by Gale on Antoninus[p], though Baxter puts it at Cambridge. As Venta Icenorum takes its place in Antoninus, Ward ſuppoſes it was neglected for it[q]. Gale mentions coins found here inſcribed IC. DVRO. T.[r] The church ſtands in the fortification, which contains about 24 acres, and is ſquare. The river on which it ſtands is really the Teſe: the Wentſum, or Wentfar, q. d. paſſage to Venta, being the river on which Norwich ſtands[s]. Taeſburgh.

At Therſton adjoining were found about 20 years ſince ſeveral coins of the lower empire[t]. Therſton.

Caſtor is certainly the moſt conſiderable Roman ſtation in theſe parts. It is a parallelogram[u] of 440 by 36 yards, conſiſting of a ſingle vallum and ditch ſurrounded with a ſtrong wall of flints and bricks, 16 and a half by 12 and a half thick. The principal entrance is in the middle of the eaſt ſide, at each corner of which were mounts or watch towers, and on the weſt ſide by the river Teſe a water gate and round tower[u]. The foundations of another tower are on the north bank. Many Roman coins have been found here from Nero to the Bas Empire, and two urns at Dunſton hill on the other ſide of the river not a mile from the camp. The whole ſite includes about 30 acres. South-eaſt of the church, which is built within the camp of materials from the walls, is a ſpring of clear cold water at the bottom of the trench[x]. Caſter.

The late Mr. Henry Baker had from Caſter a bronze Satyr of uncommonly fine workmanſhip, about eight inches high, ſitting, his legs croſſed, the right leg more gathered up than the other, holding in his right hand a ſhell, in his left a kind of horn

[d] Tan. 350. [e] Tan. 367. [f] Le Neve MS. [g] Holland. G. See before V. I. p. 273.
[h] Bl. I. 718. Tan. 344. [i] MS. Le Neve. [k] Bl I. 720. G.
[l] Le Neve MS. [m] Bl. I. 340. [n] Le Neve MS. [o] Tan. 366.
[p] P. 109. [q] Horſley, 515. [r] Bl. III. 138. [s] B. II. 2, 3.
[t] G. [u] Later ſurveys make it ſquare.
[u] See the plan Pl. II. fig. 1. from that in Mr. Arderon's account in Phil. Tranſ. No. 493. A different plan in the 8vo hiſtory of Norfolk VII. 22.
[x] Bl. III. 289. Phil. Tranſ. No. 493.

ſomewhat imperfect. The figure was hollow, with a hole through the fundament to the head intended for a lamp. Another bronze lamp of good workmanſhip, but the poliſh ſcoured off, in form of a foot with a ſandal faſtened on by ſtraps like the leathers of a ſpur, going round the heel and faſtened on the inſtep; the match came out of the great toe, and the oil was poured in at the top of the inſtep, which had a cover with a hinge, and over the heel a handle. There was found in digging a ditch in a cloſe near St. Auſtin's gate Norwich a third bronze lamp in form of a ſprawling frog, one hole in the belly, the other in the head. Theſe three pieces of Roman antiquity are now the property of the Editor, who purchaſed them at the ſale of Mr. Baker's curioſities, and had frequently ſeen them in his hands, and heard him ſay they were found as above. They may without vanity be ranked among ſome of the fineſt monuments of Roman work diſcovered in Britain.

Camden miſtakes in placing Norwich on Baraden river for which he had not better authority than Nevil's Norvicus, p. 94. It really ſtands on the Wentſum [y].

Fakenham. Bariden runs by Fakenham, a neat market town with a handſome church, in which was "a light for "good king Herry," i. e. Henry VI. [z] "The manor being antient demeſn, Henry I. gave it to Hugh Capel, and king John afterwards to the earl of Arundel, with whom it continued not long; for Henry III. granted it about the latter end of his reign to the counteſs of Provence. After her deceaſe it belonged to his queen Eleanor as parcel of her jointure, and was ſo 9 Edward I. Edward II. in the third year of his reign granted it to Gilbert de Clare the laſt earl of Glouceſter, who dying without iſſue, it devolved again to the crown, and 58 Edward III. it was granted in fee tail with other manors, to Robert de Ufford earl of Suffolk, but he dying without iſſue 33 Edward III. Iſabel queen dowager of Edward II. had it as parcel of her jointure. 42 Edward III. Robert Knowles held it in capite, and 3 Henry V. it was granted to Henry Chicheley archbiſhop of Canterbury and others. Henry VIII. granted it with the advowſon to Trinity College, Cambridge, with which it ſtill continues. In Fakenham was half a ſaltpit [a] at the Conqueſt belonging to the king. It was about ſix miles from the ſea [b]." Spelman is ſurprized at this circumſtance, but it is to be obſerved that this ſalt pit lay in ſome place on the ſea belonging to Harold before and after he was king. Thus Nection, a town above twelve miles from the neareſt part of the ſea had a Salina which lay at Lynne [c].

Attlebridge. Attlebridge was t. Henry III. held with Swanningtон the next town, by Robert Fourneaux of the earl of Brittany and Richmond, who held Coſteſi manor hard by. Michael Maloyſell held it t. Edward III. having nothing worth commending it more than the name which it took from being built near the bridge over the river which runs to Norwich in the great road between that and Lynne [d].

Rainham. Not far from the head of Wentſum is Rainham, the ſeat of the Townſend family ever ſince 1543, of whom Horace was created baron Townſend of King's Lynne, 1661, and viſcount Townſend of Rainham, 1682, and is ſucceeded by his great grandſon George, fourth and preſent viſcount. The houſe was built in the beginning of the laſt century by Inigo Jones for ſir Roger Townſend father of the firſt lord [e]. Here is the celebrated picture of Beliſarius by Salvator Roſa, a preſent from the late king of Pruſſia to Charles lord viſcount Townſend ſecretary of ſtate, and two rooms filled with 20 whole length portraits by Mierevelt, of captains who fought under ſir Horace Vere in the low countries t. Elizabeth, with their names and titles.

In South Rainham was a little Cluniac priory called Normansburg, founded 1160, cell to Caſtle Acre [f]. S. Rainh.

Horsford caſtle in Taverham hundred was built by Walter Malet baron of Eye in Suffolk, whoſe ſon married Iſabel de Cheyney. The circular earthworks and keep remain: the chaſe or foreſt is now a naked heath of 900 acres [g]. Horsford

"It was given by Robert Malet lord of the manor of Eye in Suffolk 1066 to Walter de Cadomo or Caineto who came over along with him at the Conqueſt, by the name of the barony of Horsford, to be held of the ſaid honor. His ſon Robert de Cadomo had three ſons, Roger, John, and William; the two laſt ſucceeded in their father's eſtate. William's daughter and heir Margaret was firſt married to Hugh de Creſſi, and after to Robert Fitz Roger lord of Warkworth in Northumberland; but the barony after failure of the line of Creſſi came to the deſcendants of that of Robert Fitz Roger ſurnamed de Clavering, and by Eva his daughter having married to her ſecond huſband Ralf de Ufford, brother of Robert firſt earl of Suffolk, it came to his ſon Edmund, who had ſir Robert de Ufford, knt. who left three daughters; but the youngeſt Joane became his heir and was married to William Bowes, eſq. whoſe daughter and heir Elizabeth married to ſir Thomas ſon and heir of William lord Dacre, had by him Joan married to ſir Richard Fienes lord Dacre of the South; ſhe dying ſeiſed of this honor 3 Henry VII. it continued with her iſſue lords Dacre of the South. 34 Henry VIII. Thomas Fienes, eſq. levied a fine of it to Thomas Franklyn, eſq. and others [h]."

Without going back into fabulous antiquity, or to the ideas of Polydore Vergil and thoſe who fancy they find the name of Norvicus in that of the Ordovices, who never exiſted here, one may fairly trace the Romans hereabouts by their many marks, though the city probably had not a being till they left the iſland. Spelman ſays Anna king of the Eaſt Angles made it his royal ſeat; and Alfred and ſucceeding kings ſtruck coins here. "It is conjectured by moſt judicious perſons of this country, that Wic in relation to this city ſignified a northern caſtle; and that it ſhould ſeem was Camden's opinion too as being laſt quoted by him, though his modeſty would not let him declare which he thought moſt probable; for the caſtle was much more ancient than the Norman Conqueſt, and perhaps than the city itſelf. The preſent ditch ſhould ſeem by the round form, largeneſs, and depth thereof, to be the work either of the Danes or Normans; and by this inſtance the being of a caſtle anciently may be gueſſed out of the Book of Ely; for Henry the firſt in his charter to Hervey the firſt biſhop of Ely did diſcharge the lands of that church from the ſervice of Caſtle guard to Norwich caſtle, and for as much as the lands of that church were not in the inheritance of the kings or biſhops of the Eaſt Angles ſince the time that Audrey wife of Egfrid king of the Northumbers founded the Norw

[y] Bl. I. 2. III. 289.
[z] Holland.
[a] dimid. ſalina. Domeſd. II. fol. 111.
[b] MS. P. Le Neve.
[c] Bl. III. 788.
[d] Le Neve, MS.
[e] Spelman. Bl. III. 808.
[f] Bl. 862. Tan. 350.
[g] Bl. V. 1355.
[h] MS. Le Neve.

firſt

first monaſtery of nuns there, and ſo brought it to be for ever after church land, and conſequently free from thoſe ſecular ſervices, it muſt needs follow that the caſtle muſt be built before that monaſtery, and Tombert prince of the Southern Gervij gave that part of the iſle where Audrey built her nunnery to her in dower, being her firſt husband, he then as it ſhould ſeem held it by Caſtle guard of Norwich, as a ſubject to the king of the East Angles[i]."

The firſt mention of Norwich in hiſtory is in the Saxon chronicle, A. D. 1004, when Swene and his Danes deſtroyed it, and left it in ruins for ſeven years, when they returned and took poſſeſſion of the country, and probably refortified the caſtle, the works of which are circular in their manner[6]. Under them it flouriſhed ſo much as to make a conſiderable figure in the Confeſſor's time, being an hundred within itſelf, and ſecond to no city but York. It had then 25 churches, in the Conqueror's time 43, afterwards 50, and now 36 in uſe. Mat. Weſtminſter ſub a. 1215 calls it ſimply Wich. The Conqueror gave it to Ralph Waher, who afterwards rebelled againſt him, for which his poſſeſſions here were given to Ralph Bigot. Stephen took it from that family, and gave it to his natural ſon William, from whom though Henry I. took it, he kept it for himſelf. In the reign of Henry II. Thomas, brother of Hubert de Burgh, in vain defended it againſt Lewis. The caſtle, now the gaol, is of great antiquity, but what Camden took for the arms of Bigod are ſince found to be thoſe of Thomas Brotherton, who held it t. Edward II.[k]. The workmen in ſinking a well within the walls of the caſtle about four or five years ago, when they came to the level of the ground without the ditches, found a regular and beaten foot-path uſed before the hill was thrown up. The arch of the ſtone bridge is much admired for its ſize and ſtructure. It was rather repaired than built by the Bigods, for here was a caſtle in the Saxon times held by Waher earl of Norwich againſt the Conqueror; but he was at laſt obliged to quit the realm and went to Jeruſalem with his wife. "This caſtle is part of the county of Norfolk, and not of the city, and had all along governors thereof. It has been antiently and ſtill is the gaol for the county, and the aſſizes, &c. are held there. A record concerning this will not be unfit to be here mentioned: that Richard II. a. r. 15[l] granted to John de Cray the cuſtody of the caſtle of Norwich with the fee of £. 20. and formerly allowed to the ſheriff of the county, therefore Edward II. a. r. 19[m] granted that his juſtices and all his miniſters, juſtices of aſſize and gaol delivery, &c. ſhould hold their ſeſſions in the ſhire houſe and not elſewhere within the liberty of the ſaid city[n].

3 Edward I. the king granted the city to his good men of the town of Norwich to be holden by them during pleaſure under the blank farm of £. 108. 22 Edward IV. two fairs called free markets were granted to them. The liberties[o] being forfeited into the king's hands, he conſtituted John Welles, citizen and alderman of London, cuſtos thereof 15 Henry VI. They were reſtored 18 a. r. and ſeized again, a. r. 21.[p]

The biſhop's ſee and poſſeſſions, viz. about 30 manors, being fixed by biſhop Herbert continued with his ſucceſſors till 27 Henry VIII. when Richard Nix then biſhop falling under a præmunire, to regain the king's favour ſurrendered all the lands of his biſhopric into the king's hands, who granted with the conſent of parliament ſome time after to him and his ſucceſſors the ſite and poſſeſſions of the abbey of St. Benet in the Holme[q].

Mr. Blomfield[r] is of opinion that the manufacture of Worſted ſtuffs was introduced by the Flemings ſo early as Henry I. firſt at Worſted in this county, whence its name. The citizens of Norwich, however, obtained of Richard II. that the worſted made there might be tranſported[s], and by act of Parliament 11 Henry IV. it was enacted that the mayor of Norwich ſhould have the meaſuring and ſealing of the worſteds[t]. This falling to decay, the city invited in 1563 a number of manufacturers from the Low Countries, who came over to the number of 300, and ſoon after amounted to as many as 1000[u]. They ſet up the making of bayes, ſayes, arras, and mochades[x], caungeantries, tufted mochades, currelles, and all other works mingled with ſilk, ſaietrie, and linen yarn[y]; and they firſt made bombaſins 1575[z]. Theſe have been ſo much improved of late years in making damaſks, camlets, black and white crapes, &c. that it is computed that ſtuffs to the amount of £. 700,000. have ſometimes been manufactured here in a year[7]. The art of printing was introduced here at this time by Anthony Solmpne one of theſe ſtrangers.

The cathedral built by Herbert de Loſinga 1096, (whoſe ſtatue is over the north tranſept door[a], and his tomb below the high altar modernized in repairing) was damaged by fire 1171, and repaired and compleated 1180 by biſhop John of Oxford. The Lady chapel at the end now entirely gone, was built by biſhop Suffield between 1243 and 1257; the tower rebuilt by biſhop Walpole about 1297, who alſo began the beautiful cloiſter finiſhed by his architect and ſucceſſor biſhop Salmon, and by biſhop Wakerying in the cloſe of the 14th century, and biſhop Alnwick in the beginning of the 15th, having been 130 years about. Biſhop Alnwick rebuilt the weſt front of the church (or, as appeared by ſome late repairs 1773, inſerted the fine large window into the old Norman work[b]), and the north gate of the biſhop's palace. Biſhop Percy built the preſent ſpire 1361, which exceeds all in England except Salisbury, being 105 yards two feet from the point to the floor including the tower. The preſent nave with its beautiful ſtone roof charged with ſcripture hiſtories was the work of biſhop Lyherſt 1463, and his ſucceſſor Goldwell put a like roof on the choir. The tranſepts being damaged by fire 1509 were repaired and roofed in the ſame ſtyle by biſhop Nix. The church is 400 feet from eaſt to weſt, and the tranſepts from north to ſouth 180. St. Mary's chapel at the eaſt end was 70 feet by 30, and being decayed was pulled down between 1573 and 1589 by dean Gardiner, who committed great dilapidations on the other buildings. The choir has been refitted in a Gothic ſtile, under the direction of the preſent Dean Dr. Lloyd; and his lady has, with her own hand, painted the eaſt window with the Transfiguration

[6] G. [i] MS. Le Neve. [6] G. [k] Bl. II. 56.
[l] Clauſ. 5 R. II. m. 35. [m] Clauſ. 19 E. II. & Pat. ejuſd. anni m. 5. MS. Le Neve.
[n] Le Neve MS.
[o] Ib. Concerning the limits and circuit of the city, the incorporation thereof, and that it was a county of itſelf, ſee the pleadings in Chancery t. Henry VI. between the mayor of Norwich and the prior of Holy Trinity. Ib.
[p] Ib. [q] Ib. [r] II. 6. [s] Holland. [t] MS. Le Neve. [u] Bl. II. 201.
[x] Ib. 203. [y] Ib. 205. [z] Ib. 207. [7] G. [a] Bl. II. 386. [b] Ex inform. E. King, eſq.

from

from Raphael. This work, accompliſhed with infinite labour, fatigue, and attention, ſhe finiſhed in 1781. The only monuments here are a plain altar tomb for the founder in the choir, another in the nave for ſir James Hobart Attorney General to Henry VII. and on the choir floor one for ſir William Bolein great grandfather to queen Elizabeth. The preſent library and chapter-houſe are made out of the apartments of the ſtranger's hall. The preſent palace was built by biſhop Salmon: the great hall 110 feet by 60 was pulled down after 1656, and the whole palace repaired at the reſtoration. Here was a room fitted up with wainſcot from Holme abbey [d]. Four gates of the cloſe remain; the great one for the biſhop's regiſtrary, Erpingham's, and two more [e]. The free-ſchool was a charnel houſe founded by biſhop Salmon [f]. This city had no leſs than 54 churches, of which 15 are deſtroyed. Of the remaining the moſt conſiderable for ſtyle and ornament and painted windows is that of St. Peter's Mancroft. St. Laurence's ſtands on the old herring key before the ſea retreated [g]. St. Julian's founded before the Conqueſt has a round ſteeple and is thatched, as are St. John's and All Saints in part [h]. Religious houſes were Auſtin Friars, founded before 18 Edward I. had a fine church, now deſtroyed [i].

Grey Friars founded 1226, pulled down [k].

White Friars, or Carmelites [l], founded 1256; the hall and kitchen are the Anabaptiſt meeting [m].

St. Mary college in the fields founded before 1250 for 10 prebends now a private houſe [n].

Cooke's hoſpital for 10 poor women 1677 [o].

St. Giles's hoſpital founded for 50 old men, and as many old women by biſhop Suffield 1249 [p].

St. Stephen's houſe for lepers [q].

Friars of the Sac 1250 [r] ſucceeded by the Black friars 1307 [s]. The nave of the church built by ſir Thomas Erpingham is now St. Andrew's or the common hall. The choir is the Dutch church, and the room over the ſouth porch the city library. The ſpire built 1462 fell down 1712 [t].

The palace of the earls of the Eaſt Angles ſtood on Tombland [u].

The croſs built by John Rightwiſe, mayor, 1501, was taken down 1732 [w].

Surrey houſe belonging to the earl of Surrey t. Henry VIII. is now private property [x].

The Guildhall or Toll booth t. Edward III. was at firſt thatched, till rebuilt t. Henry IV. 1407. Its beautiful painted windows are now much injured [y].

The palace begun by Henry duke of Norfolk 1602, and on ſome affront from the city pulled down by himſelf is now a workhouſe [z].

The Bridewell is built of black flints curiouſly ſquared [a]. Such appear in the tower and yard of St. Peter Hungate, and I have ſeen the like at Lewes, and elſewhere.

Doughty's hoſpital for 24 men and eight women, was founded 1587.

The boys' hoſpital was founded 1611, the girls' 1649. Here are 12 charity ſchools, and four hoſpitals, and three weekly markets.

St. Leonard's priory, on the Yarmouth road, founded by biſhop Herbert, had a miraculous image of Henry VI. Henry earl of Surrey built a houſe on its ſite [b]. In a valley under the hill out of Biſhop's gate the Lollards were burnt [c]. A ſimilar ſpot out of Forres in Scotland was the place for witch-burning.

Dugdale [d] mentions one Walter de Norwich who had ſummons to parliament 8 Edward II. and no more. Edward Lord Denney of Waltham was created earl of Norwich 2 Charles I. 1526, but died without iſſue [e]. The title was next conferred on George lord Goring 20 Charles I. with whoſe ſon it became extinct 1672 [f]. This city is honoured with giving one of the titles to the duke of Norfolk. Henry, ſixth duke, being created by Charles II. 1672, a. r. 24 earl of Norwich, with entail on the heirs male [g].

Norwich gave birth to William Bateman biſhop of Norwich, 1343, founder of Trinity-hall in Cambridge, who died and was buried at Avignon 1354. Mathew Parker 1504, archbiſhop of Canterbury, who died 1575. Dr. John Kaye 1510, who died 1573. John Coſin 1594 biſhop of Durham 1660, who died 1672. Dr. Samuel Clarke 1675, who died 1729.

Carhow. Juſt by Norwich is Carhow, where was a nunnery founded by king Stephen, valued at £. 64. per ann. The parlor and hall were fitted up for a dwelling houſe by ſir John Shelton, to whom it was granted at the diſſolution, and in the hall windows is a fine ſucceſſion of the matches of that family [h].

Higham. In the church of Higham near Norwich is a plain monument to that primitive and excellent man biſhop Hall, who died there under the perſecution of the parliament 1656, aged 82.

The ruffe. The ruffe is found in ſeveral of the Engliſh ſtreams, aſſembling in large ſhoals, and keeping in the deepeſt water. It is much ſlenderer than the perch, and ſeldom exceeds ſix inches in length. The teeth are very ſmall and diſpoſed in rows. It has only one dorſal fin extending along the greateſt part of the back; the firſt rays like thoſe of the perch are ſtrong, ſharp, and ſpiney, the others ſoft. The pectoral fins conſiſt of 15 rays, the ventral of ſix, the anal of eight; the two firſt ſtrong and ſpiney, the tail a little bifurcated. The body is covered with rough compact ſcales. The back and ſides are of a dirty green, the laſt inclining to yellow, but both ſpotted with black. The dorſal fin is ſpotted with black: the tail marked with tranſverſe bars [i].

Mulber. At Mulberton, where his father was miniſter, was born ſir Thomas Richardſon, chief juſtice of the Common Pleas 1626, buried in Weſtminſter abbey about 1634.

Claxto. Claxton came from the Kerdeſtons and Delapoles to Thomas Gawdy, afterwards knighted and a judge. It now belongs to the Bedingfields [k].

Redeh. Redeham, a ſmall village on the ſame river, ſo called from the reeds growing in its marſhes, was the place where Lodbrog the Daniſh nobleman landed, being by a ſudden ſtorm driven from his own coaſt while hawking. Finding entertainment in king Edmund's court at Caſtre he lived there till he was mur-

[a] Bl. II. 521.
[b] Ib. 544.
[c] Ib. 526.
[d] Bl. Ib. 794.
[e] Bl. Ib. 605.
[f] Ib. 527.
[g] Ib. 671.
[h] Bl. Ib. 564.
[i] Bl. Ib. 573. Tan. 361.
[k] Bl. Ib. 548. Tan. 365.
[l] Ib. 607—617. Tan. 361.
[m] Bl. 559.
[n] Ib. 753. Tan. 360.
[o] Ib. 725. Tan. 362.
[p] Ib. 725—731. Tan. 359.
[q] Ib. 130.
[r] Ib. 606.
[s] Ib. 649, 650.
[t] Ib. 698.
[u] Bl. Ib. 797. 798. Tan. 341.
[w] Ib. 194.
[x] Ib. 419.
[y] Ib. 278.
[z] Ib. 461.
[a] Bl. IV. 1113.
[b] Bl. II. 862. Tan. 347.
[c] Pennant III. 315.

dred

dered in a fit of jealouſy by the king's huntſman. His ſons Hingar and Hubba were no ſooner informed of his death than they reſolved to revenge it; though the murderer had received his puniſhment. They landed with 20,000 men A. D. 870, ravaged the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles, and murdered the king. By this account Redeham muſt be older than Yarmouth; for had the latter been then built Lodbrog had doubtleſs ſtopt there[g].

Yare receives a brook which paſſes by Hales hall, the ſeat of ſir James Hobart attorney general and of the privy council to Henry VII. who knighted him at the creation of his ſon Henry prince of Wales. He rebuilt his pariſh church at Loddon, St. Olave's bridge over Waveney between the two counties with the cauſey, and planted three families of his own name, from the ſecond whereof deſcended ſir Henry his grandſon, attorney general to James I. whoſe ſon ſettled at Blickling in this county and became the anceſtor of the earls of Buckinghamſhire[l].

At the rev. Mr. Hugh James's houſe at Upwell, was, 173$\frac{6}{7}$, a picture of the monument of ſir James Hobart, founder of Loddon church and St. Olyfe's bridge, with his lady and their arms: a knight kneeling in armour, having the Hobart arms on his ſurcoat; and on the mantle of the lady who was alſo kneeling, the ſame arms impaling S. 3 martlets or alerions A. Between them Hobart, and over it France and England crowned. This was taken 1614 out of the eaſt window of Loddon church. On the right above was a ſketch of the church and ſteeple, and under it in gold letters Loddon church: on the left a ſtone bridge of four arches, and under it St. Oylif's bridge. Under all in black letters

Orate pro aia Jac^{i} Hobart milit. & attornati dui regis, qui Hanc eccliam a primis fundamentis condidit in tribus annis cum ſuis propriis
Bonis, anno regis henrici ſeptimi undecimo.

The bridge by accounts extant coſt almoſt as much as the church, which is a very ſumptuous ſtone building with a large tower ſteeple within three or four miles of Beccles[m].

Spelman places GARIONENUM at Caiſter near Yarmouth as Camden did in his firſt edition; Ward at Yarmouth, making Ptolemy's ΓΑΡΡΟΥΙΗΝΟΝ the river Yare, and of this opinion was Baxter. What Ethelward calls Cerdic ſhore Bromton names Yarmouth, which ſeems to be of Saxon original. Domeſday mentions here a church of St. Benedict, unnoticed by any other writer. It is a well-built neat town, having now only one church and a chapel, and a very handſome and commodious quay. The walls were built 10 Edward III. for then they had leave to lay an impoſition on certain commodities ſold within the town for the ſpace of five years to help to build them[n]; and 16 Richard II. had licence to build a key near their town within the liberty thereof, at a place called Horſeferry, containing 100 perches in length and 40 in breadth[o].

Kirkby Roode was annexed to the port of Yarmouth 46 Edward III.[p] and 5 Henry V. they had licence to make a bridge over the river[q].

Its firſt magiſtrates ſeem to have been deputed by the Cinque ports. Henry I. granted it a præpoſitus; John made it a free burgh, and Henry III. gave it four bailiffs, which in the reign of Anne were changed to a mayor[r]. Charles II. by charter 1684 made it a mayor town, but by the proclamation for reſtoring corporations it was for a time governed by a mayor, who is choſen every year, and acts as ſuch[s]. In the cloſe rolls 4 Edward III. is expreſſed the manner how the barons of the Cinque ports ſhall do juſtice with the bailiffs or præpoſiti of the town during the forty days fair[t]. Their differences with the Cinque ports were ended by the king and his council 10 Edward III.[u] but thoſe with Leoſtoffe continued till 2 Henry IV.[x] 2 Richard II. the liberties and privileges were reſtored and confirmed to them by act of parliament[y]. Here were no leſs than ſix havens cut and filled up by the ſands between 20 E. III. and 1670[z]. The iſland which was formerly made by the ſea has been long ſince ſwept away by the ſame rage of the billows which formerly were the occaſion of aggeſting it[a]. Biſhop Herbert placed near the church a priory of black monks, ſince united to the ſee of Norwich[b]. Here were alſo black, white, and grey friars, and an hoſpital now a grammar ſchool[c]. This town gave title of viſcount and earl to ſir Robert Paſton of Paſton in this county 1673, 1680, 25 and 32 Charles II. which titles expired with his ſon William 1733. It was revived in Madame Amelia Sophia Walmoden, created counteſs of Yarmouth 17$\frac{39}{40}$, 13 Geo. II. and expired with her 1765. The herring fiſhery which employs 150 veſſels, beſides between 40 and 50 in the exportation alone, begins at Michaelmas, and laſts all the month of October, during which time all the veſſels that come to fiſh for the merchants from any part of England are allowed to come to ſell their fiſh duty free, and 50,000 barrels of herrings are generally taken and cured in a year.

Yarmouth gave birth 1596 to Arthur Wilſon the hiſtorian of James I. who died 1652.

The family of Paſton originated from Paſton in Tunſtede hundred, where they were ſettled in the reign of Edward II. William was a judge of the Common Pleas t. Henry VI. and died 1444, and was buried in Bromholm abbey. His eldeſt ſon John was one of the executors to ſir John Faſtolf. His great grandſon Clement, a brave officer both by ſea and land under Henry VIII. reſided at and built Oxnead hall. William, 4th in deſcent from Eraſmus, elder brother of Clement, was created a baronet 1642, and his ſon Robert viſcount 1673, and earl of Yarmouth 1679, which titles expired in his ſon William 1719[d]. Paſton.

At Herringby on the Thyrn near Yarmouth, Hugh Attefen founded an hoſpital 1475, valued at £.23. 6*s.* 3*d. per ann.*[e] Herringby.

At Raveningham ſir John de Norwich, 17 Edward III. founded a college of eight ſecular prieſts, ſoon after removed to Norton Soupecors, and 17 Richard II. to Mettingham, Suffolk[f]. Raveningham.

Aldby church being given to the ſee of Norwich t. Henry I. a priory of black monks was founded Aldby.

[g] G. [l] Holland. [m] Minutes of Spalding Society. [n] Par. 10 E. III. p. 22. m. 18.
[o] Par. 16 R. II. m. 9 and 10. [p] Eſch. 46 E. III. n. 61. Le Neve MS.
[q] Pat. 5 H. V. m. 19. [r] Swinden's Hiſt. of Yarmouth, I. 14. 23. 779. [s] Le Neve MS.
[t] Dorſ. Clauſ. 4 E. III. m. 4. Le Neve MS.
[u] Dorſ. Clauſ. 10 E. III. m. 1. Concerning the privileges and liberties of this town and the proceedings before the king's council between the townſmen of Great Yarmouth and the inhabitants of Little Yarmouth and Gorlſton, ſee Rot. Clauſ. 19 E. II. m. 11. cedula.
[x] Le Neve MS. [y] Pat. 2. R. II. p. 1. n. 10. Le Neve MS.
[z] Swinden, 373. 476. 496 [a] Le Neve MS. [b] Tan. 343. [c] Ib. 363, 364.
[d] Blomf. IV. 689—699. [e] Tan. 369. Bl. V. 1561. [f] Ib. 365. Ib. IV. 260—266.

there[g]. This village is now quite deſtroyed, and the lands included in Aldburgh[h].

Holt. Holt is intitled to its name from its ſituation in what was formerly the moſt woody part of the county. It has a good market, and a freeſchool founded 1556 by ſir John Greſham, born here, and ſheriff and mayor of London 1537-46, who appointed the fiſhmongers in company London truſtees[i]. It is a clean and neatly built town, and the country about it is the moſt diverſifiedby hill and dale of any in this county.

Blickling. Blickling was the ſeat of the Dagworths t. Richard II. afterwards of the Boleyns, anceſtors of queen Elizabeth, whoſe great great grandfather purchaſed it of ſir John Faſtolf; her mother was born here, and her great uncle died ſeiſed of it. It paſſed by marriage to the Cleres of Ormeſby, of whom ſir Edward by his high living was obliged to ſell it to ſir Henry Hobart, attorney general 1606, who died 1625. His eldeſt ſon John ſoon after built this houſe of brick round a quadrangle of two courts, with a fine library and park. His great great grandſon John was created baron Hobart of Blickling 1728, and earl of Buckinghamſhire 1746, and dying 1756 was ſucceeded by his ſon John ſecond and preſent earl[k].

Ayleſham. This place and Ayleſham ſtand on the Bure as the river Thyrn is here called. The latter town is the head of the duchy of Lancaſter in this county, and famous for the linen manufactory t. Edward II. and III. now for weaving. It is a neat little market town of about 120 families, much frequented in ſummer for the vitriolic purgative ſpa. It has a freeſchool, founded 1507, and a county bridewell built 1543[l]. I do not find any property of the earl of Athol here.

Bure r. The river Bure was made navigable from Coltiſhall to Aylſham bridge 1779.

Cawſton. Near Ayleſham is Cawſton, a ſmall declining market town in antient demeſne and part of the duchy of Lancaſter, whereof it is held in free ſocage, in token whereof a mace ſurmounted by a brazen hand or gauntlet holding a plowſhare, and another by a bearded arrow, is carried before the lord of the manor or his ſteward. The church built by Michael de la Pole, earl of Suffolk, lord and patron between 1385 and 1414, is a noble freeſtone pile with a ſtrong and beautiful ſquare tower 120 feet high[m].

Oxnead. At Oxnead, ſouth-eaſt of Ayleſham, was found 1667, a piece of brick work ſeveral yards ſquare, containing many veſſels in holes and different rooms, ſome of them containing liquor and its ſediment; alſo ſilver coins of Vitellius, Veſpaſian, Trajan, Adrian, Pertinax. It was the ſeat of the Paſtons from the beginning of the 15th century to the death of William earl of Yarmouth 1719, when it was pulled down and ſold to pay debts to George lord Anſon, whoſe repreſentative enjoys it[n].

Horning. In Horning pariſh ſtood the abbey of St. Benet in the Holme, founded, according to tradition, in the Holme abbey. 9th century. It was firſt an hermitage A. D. 800, which being deſtroyed by the Danes 870, Canute founded here a monaſtery of black monks of St. Benedict before 1020. It was fortified with ſtrong walls, and had a magnificent church, of which ſir John Faſtolf rebuilt the ſouth aile, and added to the north ſide of the choir the Lady chapel wherein he was buried. It was a mitred abbey, and the barony and reverſion transferred by act of parliament 1535 to the ſee of Norwich; in virtue whereof the biſhop of Norwich has his ſeat in parliament, the barony of the ſee being in the crown. It was valued at £.583. 17*s.* per annum[o]. The walls are now ſaid to incloſe forty acres: the foundations of the church built of flints with ſtone coins remain for the moſt part all round about a yard high. The gatehouſe adorned with the arms of benefactors, &c. engraved by the Antiquary Society, ſupports a windmill, but much has been taken down for fear of its giving way, and what now remains is falling faſt to ruin[p].

Ludham Ludham belonged to Holm abbey, being built by abbot Martin 1450, till the diſſolution, when it was exchanged by Henry VIII. with the biſhop of Norwich, whoſe country houſe it became[q]. Greateſt part of it was burnt 1611 in biſhop Jegon's time. Biſhop Freake built a brick chapel[r], which in 1762 was converted into a barn: biſhop Redman procured a market here. In front of a cottage near the church is a very curious horizontal dial 12 feet diameter, cut in box, the hours and diviſions neatly executed.

Ingham Ingham has a neat church, in which are ſeveral curious monumental braſs effigies for the family of Stapleton, and two very antient ſtone monuments, the one for ſir Roger de Boys and Dame Margaret his wife; the other for ſir Oliver de Ingham[s].

Flegg Near its mouth the Yare (in conjunction with a ſtream from a pool or broad) forms a peninſula called Flegg, divided into eaſt and weſt. The ſoil is fruitful, and bears corn well. Here the Danes ſeem to have made their firſt ſettlement, being neareſt their landing, and well fortified by nature and ſurrounded by water. Hence in this ſmall tract we find thirteen villages ending in by, a Daniſh word for a village or dwelling-place, whence the Daniſh Bilagines and our Bye Laws mean laws peculiar to each town or village[t].

Caſtor Caſtor caſtle, three miles north from Yarmouth, ſeems to have been rather a caſtellated manſion, built of brick about the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. when ſir John Faſtolfe, whoſe anceſtor purchaſed it of ſir Henry Ingham 9 Edward II. had licence to "build Caſtor houſe as ſtrong as himſelf "could deviſe." Tradition ſays it was built at the expence of the duke d'Alencon, whom Faſtolfe took priſoner at the battle of Agincourt, on the plan of his own caſtle in France[u]. The court forms a rectangular parallelogram, having at the north-weſt angle a round tower upwards of 100 feet high, to which ad-

[g] Ib. 345. Ib. IV. 229. [h] Bl. Ib. 232.
[i] Bl. IV. 926. [k] Ib. III. 626. G. [l] Ib. 547. [m] Ib. III. 538.
[n] Bl. III. 688. [o] Tan. 332. Bl. V. 1427—34. [p] Willis mit. ab. II. 148. [q] Blomf. IV. 877.
[r] G. [s] Blomf. 867. 872. [t] Ib. V. 1500.

[u] The following extract from an original letter in ſir John Faſtolf's own hand writing, and addreſſed to his couſin John Paſton, now in the poſſeſſion of John Fenn, eſq. and dated 5th February 34 H. VI. (1455) will elucidate this affair.

"Item, I deſyre to know who ben the reſidew the remenent of the executors of the Lord Wyllughbye, now the Lord Cromewell ys "deceſed, for thys cauſe; hyt was ſo, that there was dew to the Lord Wyllughbye and to me x m. marcs for a reward to be payd of my "Lord Bedfordys godes, for the takyng of the Duc of Allaunſon, and the ſeyd Lord Wyllughbye had but one thowſand marcs, payd, and I "m. marc; ſoe viij m. levyth yhyt to pay."

Robert lord Willoughby commanded under the duke of Bedford at Verneuil in 1424, where he and ſir John Faſtolf had the honour of taking the duke of Alenſon priſoner, and not at the batle of Agincourt.

This letter is one of a large collection of original letters, written during the reigns of H. VI. E. IV. by men of eminence in the ſtate, &c. now in Mr. Fenn's collection.

gram,

joined a dining-room, whoſe great fire-place remains. On the right hand at entering this court was the hall 49 feet by 28. Eaſt of this court and joined to it by a drawbridge was another larger, having two round towers at its ſouth-eaſt and north-eaſt angles, ſurrounded on three ſides by buildings, wherein ſir John intended to have founded a college for a maſter, ſeven prieſts, and ſeven poor men; but this intention was never carried into effect. Only the eaſt and ſouth ſides of the manſion with the tower remain: the remains of the college are converted into barns and ſtables. On an arch of a window within the ruins were the arms[u] of ſir John Faſtolfe in a garter carved in ſtone, now taken away[x].

Sir J. Faſtolfe was deſcended of an antient family in this county, ſettled hereabouts in the reign of Edward III. He was born 1380, and bred from his youth to arms, and being a knight attended Henry VI. to the ſiege of Harfleur, of which he was appointed governor. He was created a banneret at the battle of Verneuil, and died 1459, and was buried in the Lady chapel built by himſelf on the north ſide of the preſbytery of the abbey of St. Benet in the Holme. He married Milicent ſecond daughter and coheir of Robert Tibetot, and relict of ſir Stephen Scroop, who died before him without iſſue. He was a great benefactor to the ſchools at Cambridge, to Magdalen college Oxford, and to Holme abbey[y]. By the diſagreement of his executors, particularly ſir William Yelverton the judge and John Paſton, eſq. his property was much injured: the latter's ſon defended this caſtellated manſion when it was after the death of its owner twice beſieged in form in the reign of Edward IV. by the duke of Norfolk and lord Scales, with 300 men and artillery, the duke pretending to have purchaſed it of Yelverton, and on the ſecond attack took it and kept poſſeſſion of it ſome time[z]. In the Paſton family it continued till 1661, when it was the property of the Crows, and now of their deſcendants the Bedingfields[a].

There is ſuppoſed to be a Roman fortification by the light-houſe at Caſtre[b].

Winterton was the lordſhip of Robert Ufford, admiral of Edward III's fleet. The market has declined on the growth of Yarmouth, which is but eight miles diſtant, and by the depredation of the ſea. Here are two light-houſes, one a tower light burnt with coals, the other with oil. In 1665 the tide waſhing down the cliffs diſcovered ſeveral large bones: one brought to Yarmouth weighed 57lb. was two feet three inches long, and was affirmed to be the leg and bone of a man[c]. The town is principally inhabited by rude boors, who live in ſandy cottages on the produce of their labours at ſea and on the coaſt. The church is a handſome pile with a lofty tower, a ſea mark. The lands are rich and fruitful, requiring little ploughing.

Bromeholm priory was founded for Cluniacs by William Glanville 1113, valued at £.100. per ann.[d] The croſs was made of the true croſs which uſed to be carried before the Greek emperor in battle by an Engliſh prieſt, who on the emperor's death brought it hither. It wrought many miracles[e]. Here are conſiderable ruins of the priory converted into a farm houſe, and the gate.

Eccles was reduced in 1605 from eighty to fourteen houſes, and from 1300 acres of land to 300, the reſt with the church being ſwallowed up by the ſea, and in Charles I's time only 100 acres remained[f]. The coaſt here, and indeed all the way from Winterton to Happiſborough, is defended by a ridge of ſand hills thrown up by the winds and waves which ſeem at firſt view to be a ſufficient barrier to any future encroachment of the ſea. Eccles.

Of Gimmingham ſir Henry Spelman obſerves, that the antient cuſtom of ſocage was then kept up there; the tenant not paying his rent in money but in ſo many days work. The manor was in the crown t. Charles I. and afterwards ſold to the city of London[10]. Here was an old large hall on pillars, which were ſo many ſtations for the tenants, ſocmen, &c. who were not to go beyond their reſpective one[g]. Gimmingham.

In Beeſton Regis near the ſea was a ſmall Auſtin priory, founded t. John or Henry III. by lady Iſabel de Creſſy, valued at £.43.[h] There are conſiderable remains of its church, which is near the great German ocean[i]. Beeſton Regis.

Cromer, where the beſt lobſters on this coaſt are taken, was formerly part of Shipden, whoſe church and many houſes was ſwallowed up by the ſea. The firſt attempt for a pier was t. Richard II. It is ſtill a tolerable fiſhing town[k], has a fair, and the nave and tower of a handſome church; and a mile to the eaſt is a light-houſe. To the ſouth is the ſeat of George Windham, eſq. Bartholomew Rede, goldſmith and lord mayor of London 1502, was born at Cromer. His gold ring weighing 9oz. 3dwts. was found at Girton c. Cambridge, and is now in Mr. Cole's hands. Within is this inſcription, Orate pro a'i'a Bartolomei Red militis. On the top a figure of St. Bartholomew, neatly engraved, but too ſlightly to be uſed as a ſeal. Cromer. Shipden.

At N. Reppes was born William Rugg alias Reppes, abbot of St. Benet's in the Holme 1530, 33d biſhop of Norwich 1535, which he reſigned, and died 1550. On his appointment to this ſee the king ſevered the antient barony and revenues from it, and annexed the priory of Hickling and the barony and revenues of Holme abbey to it, in right of which barony the biſhop of Norwich ſits in the Houſe of Lords as abbot of Holme, the barony being in the king's hands, and the monaſtery being never diſſolved only transferred by this ſtatute before the general diſſolution. The biſhop of Norwich is the only abbot at this day in England[l]. N. Reppes.

At Sheringham was a houſe of black canons, cell to Nutley abbey, Bucks[m]. Sheringham.

Greſham, a ſmall village adjoining, gave name to a family, of which was ſir Thomas the founder of the Royal Exchange and Greſham college, whoſe uncle John founded Holt freeſchool, and died 1556. Sir Richard his father was an eminent merchant of Holt, ſheriff of London 1431, mayor 1537, and firſt projector of the Royal Exchange, and died 1548. Sir Thomas was born at London 1519, and died 1579[n]. Here was a caſtle, falſely ſuppoſed the manſion of the Greſhams, but rather that which ſir Edmund Bacon obtained licence of Edward II. to embattle. It was a large ſquare building, each front 150 feet long, and a round turret at each corner 36 feet diameter[o]. Greſham.

[u] See it in Anſtis's Hiſt. of the Garter.
[x] Groſe's account under his view.
[y] William of Worceſter, p. 321.
[z] Biog. Brit. Faſtolfe. Bl. V. 1550—53.
[a] Bl. ib. 1553.
[b] MS. Le Neve.
[c] Gazette Nov. 20, 1665.
[d] Tan. 345.
[e] Bl V. 1405—9.
[f] Bl. IV. 845.
[10] G.
[g] Bl. IV. 318.
[h] Tan. 357.
[i] Bl. IV. 294.
[k] Ib. 304.
[l] Ib. II. 386—388.
[m] Tan. 350. Bl. V. 345—7.
[n] G. Ward's Greſham profeſſors, p. 1.
[o] Hiſt. of Norf. III. 61.

Mundeſley. West of this is Mundeſley close to the sea, which is bounded by exceeding high rocks, where some years ago at a cliff were taken up large petrified bones of elephants (not monsters as bishop Gibson) supposed coæval with the deluge, as the horns of moose deer found at Baber near Norwich[p]. Mr. Henry Baker had the grinder of the left jaw of an elephant 15 inches long, seven wide, three thick and 39 in circumference, and weighing upwards of 11 pounds. Other monstrous bones were found with it, particularly thigh bones six feet long and as thick as those of a man. John Tenison, father of the archbishop, was rector of Mundesley, ejected 1640.

Gunton. Gunton is the seat of sir Harbord Harbord, bart. whose family bought it 1710. Sir William rebuilt the church with a Doric portico[q].

Wayburne. Wayburne passed from the Trussels by marriage to Oliver de Burdeaux, and now belongs to the Hobarts. The priory of black canons was founded by sir Ralph Meyngaryn, knt. t. Henry II. valued at £.24.[r] At the Hope is a fortification. The shore is stoney, and the sea so deep that ships may ride here and lye against it. The Danes are said to have landed here on their invasion[s]. Fullers earth is said to be found here[t].

Cley. Cley is a small market town, with a large handsome church[u]. The haven is now become exceeding bad, scarce any merchants residing here, and not half a dozen ships belonging to them all; no ship of any tolerable bulk having depth of water enough to get safely up to the town to unload. The fishermen of this place accidentally falling in with James son and heir of Robert Bruce king of Scotland, who was going to France for education with a bishop and the earl of Orkney, made them prisoners and sent them to Henry IV. who lodged them in the tower, which broke his father's heart[x]. He was released seventeen years after 1473, and succeeded to the crown of Scotland. Buchanan says he was taken off Flamborough head either driven in by stress of weather or sea sickness[y].

Field Dawling. At Field Dawling was a cell of Cistertians from Savigny in Normandy, founded by Maud de Harscolye t. Henry II.[z]

Blakeney. Blakeney, or as it was called till Henry III. Snitterley, was antiently a famous sea-port, much frequented by the German merchants. It has got almost the whole of the trade now, and is at present a very thriving place, carrying on a considerable trade for deals, coals, &c. The friary was founded 1321, and the friars were to acknowledge William de Roos, lord of the town, for their founder, those mentioned by Mr. Camden being only benefactors[a]. What he alludes to from Pansa about Baconthorp is thus given by Leland:

Noscere vis rerum causas, ipsumque Tonantem,
Et Sophiæ omne genus, sume Baconis opus.

A few of his numerous works remain in MS. and some were printed in the two last centuries[b]. He died about 1346 1 Edward III. and was buried at London or here.

Sufkey. Mr. Cobb had a patent 1769 to supply Norwich with fish from hence, which failed for want of unanimity in the proprietors.

Stifkey house was built by sir Nicholas Bacon lord keeper, whose arms are on the gate 1609. It belongs to lord viscount Townsend. West of the village on Wayborough or Warborough hill is a circular camp, and on the east of it Camping hill unintrenched, both commanding a tract of salt marsh. The sea has thrown up a sand bank called the Meals, covered with a benty grass, and inhabited by rabbits.

Cockthr. At Cockthorp, between Cley and Stiffkey, were born the admirals sir Cloudesley Shovel, sir John Narborough, and sir Christopher Mynnes; and at Docki. Docking the late lord Hawke's father was buried.

Baconth. Baconthorpe belonged to the Bacons (from whence it took its name) from the 13th to the 18th century, and to the Heydons till 1617, about which time it was sold to the Langs, who pulled down great part of the house built by the Heydons[c]; of which only the gatehouse[d] now remains for the present mansion, belonging with the estate to Mr. Girdlestone.

St. Edm. Cape. St. Edmund's Cape is so called from king Edmund, who being by Offa adopted heir of the kingdom of the East Angles, landed with a great retinue from Germany, in some port not far from hence called Maiden bowre, But where this is is uncertain. Hecham is too little and obscure: nor does Burnham seem large enough to receive so large a navy; though it must be confessed the ships in those times were but small. Lynne seems to lay the best claim to it both as the most eminent port, and as it really is Maidenboure; St. Margaret the Virgin being as it were the tutelar Saint of the place, in honour of whom the town bears three dragons heads wounded with a cross, and she is said to have conquered a dragon. Their public seal has also her figure wounding a dragon with the cross, and treading him under foot, and this inscription, Stat Margareta, draco fugit, in cruce læta[e]. The argument however from St. Margaret I fear is of no weight, *Maiden*boure here as in other counties rather means some fortification, or if a port a fortified one.

Walſ. The famous chapel at Walsingham, dedicated to the annunciation of our lady, was built 1061 by the widow of Richoldis de Favarches, in imitation of that at Nazareth. Her son Geffrey placed here a priory and convent of Black canons t. William I. valued at £.391. besides the offerings to our Lady[e]. The abbey church was 120 paces from east to west; the Lady chapel, which by Erasmus's account must have been on the north side, was eight yards long and 13 feet wide, besides which Mr. Blomfield mentions a building which he says was probably at the east end of the choir, 16 yards by 10. The present remains are a handsome west gate, a lofty beautiful arch, forming the east end of the chapel, built t. Henry VII. The refectory intire, now a barn, 78 feet by 27 and 26 high, with a handsome east window and stone pulpit, twelve arches of the old cloister, the abbey wall a mile in circuit; a stone bath, and two uncovered wells described by Erasmus. Henry III. Edward I. and II. David Bruce king of Scotland, and even Henry VIII. in his second year paid their visit in person to this English Loretto. Sir Henry Spelman says it was reported that the latter king walked barefoot from Basham, an adjoining village, to the chapel of our lady, and presented her with a necklace of great value. The Galaxy was pretended to point to this place, and thence called Walsingham way. Erasmus mentions a miraculous escape of a certain Norfolk knight [sir Ralph Boutetourt, on horseback, 1314] through a narrow wicket, which would hardly admit a man on foot. This famous image of our Lady was brought by Cromwell to Chelsea and burnt.

[p] G. Phil. Trans. 475. 481.
[q] Hist. of Norf. III. 65. 67.
[r] Tan. 349.
[s] Bl. IV. 966.
[t] Hist. of Norf. VII. 117.
[u] Bl. IV. 911.
[x] G. Walf. Ypod. Neust. 560.
[y] XV. 13, &c.
[z] Tan. 352. Bl. V. 795.
[a] Tan. 364.
[b] Ib. Bib. Brit. 59.
[c] Bl. IV. 706.
[d] Engraved in the 8vo. History of Norf. III.
[e] G.
[f] Tan. 534.

burnt. Over the door of a houſe in a row of others which ſerved as inns and cooks ſhops for the pilgrims in a ſtreet oppoſite the weſt gate of the abbey is to be ſeen a wooden can. The ſite was granted to Thomas Sidney, whoſe ſon Thomas married Barbara, ſiſter of ſir Francis Walſingham, and whoſe grandſon ſir Henry is buried here, and left it to Robert Sidney earl of Leiceſter, of whom it was purchaſed by Dr. Warner biſhop of Rocheſter, whoſe heir and nameſake Henry Lee Warner, eſq. now inherits it; his manſion-houſe was part of the abbey houſe. New Walſingham where the abbey ſtands is a market town, and has a handſome church and freeſchool. The bridewell was antiently a ſpittal, of which Thomas Sidney was maſter. Here was alſo a houſe of Grey friars, founded 1346 by Elizabeth counteſs of Clare, foundreſs of Clare hall, of which the cloiſter and hall remain[f]. This town gave title of counteſs 8 George I. 1722 to Meloſina Schulemburgh married 1733 to Philip Stanhope late earl of Cheſterfield. Great or Old Walſingham adjoining had two pariſh churches.

Sir Francis Walſingham, ſecretary of ſtate to queen Elizabeth, was deſcended from a family ſeated at and named from this town ſo early as Henry III. afterwards by marriage removed into Kent[g].

In the village of Eaſt Baſham, is an antient family ſeat, originally built by the Fermors, from whom by marriage it became a part of the poſſeſſions of the Calthropes. The brick work of the whole building is curious, and that of the chimnies remarkably neat and diverſified. In a window in this houſe were formerly the armorial pedigree and alliances of the family of Calthrope, from the Conqueſt to the middle of the laſt century, contained in between fifty and ſixty diamond-ſhaped panes of painted glaſs neatly executed. They are now moſt of them entire, and are placed in a bow-window in the library of John Fenn, eſq. at Eaſt Dereham, who married a lady deſcended from this family.

Houghton mentioned by Mr. Camden is Houghton in the dale or hole, belonging alſo to Mr. Warner[h], but formerly to the Fenns, whoſe only poſſeſſion there now is a burial vault. In this pariſh by the road ſide are the remains of the weſt end of a neat chapel, by which the pilgrims uſed to paſs on their way to our lady of Walſingham.

The other Houghton belonged as early as Henry I. to the Walpoles; before them to the Houghtons, Belets, &c. The firſt of theſe families was enobled in the perſon of ſir Robert, chancellor of the Exchequer and prime miniſter to George I. and II. created earl and viſcount Orford 1742. He built here on the ſite of the old houſe 1722, a magnificent manſion, furniſhed with a capital collection of pictures[i]. Theſe have been engraved at the expence of Mr. Boydell, from drawings by the two Farringdons, and are now ſold to the empreſs of Ruſſia. The eſtate is enjoyed with the titles, &c. by his grandſon George third earl of Orford.

There is a third Houghton called Houghton on the hill near Swaffham.

At Snoring or Creke, whereof his father was rector, was born 1612, John Pearſon, biſhop of Cheſter, who died 1636.

Warham was the ſeat of ſir John Turner, bart. and now belongs to his two daughters and coheirs Mrs. Hales and Lady Folkes, whoſe beautiful plantations reach to Holkham. South of the town near the river are remains of a large Daniſh camp treble trencht, the ramparts 30 feet high: the entrance from the eaſt; nine acres of land about it are called The Burroughs. The windmill ſouth of it in Wighton pariſh ſtands on the corner of a like entrenchment, much defaced, and oppoſite to it where Crabs caſtle a farm houſe now ſtands was a third of the ſame form and extent[k]. All that Mr. Parkin[l] ſays is, "On the heath belonging to this town, called the "Rayfield, is a ſquare fortification with a double "ditch, aſcribed to the Danes after their landing at "Weyburn."

Near Fakenham was Hempton priory of Auſtin canons t. Henry I. valued at £.32. 14*s*. 8*d*.[m] and at E. Rudham was a priory of the ſame order, removed to Cokersford, valued at £.121. 18*s*.[n] Hempton. E. Rudham.

All plans to render navigable the river Wentſum, which flows through Fakenham meadows, have proved abortive.

Nearer the ſea is Wells, once by force of its population rather than by charter a market, now a poor fiſhing town with a good harbour and deep channel, but difficult of acceſs. It drives a conſiderable trade with the Dutch in pottery and gingerbread during the herring fiſhery ſeaſon. Sir Cloudeſley Shovel bought a manor here. Wells has been of late a ſea port of conſiderable conſequence for its exportation of corn, and particularly for its trade with Holland in malt whilſt that trade was open. Its harbour has of late gone much to decay by the ſhifting of the ſands in its channel. The ſtate and cauſes of this decay have been lately litigated between the heirs of the late ſir John Turner, bart. and the town of Wells. The different reports by their reſpective engineers are publiſhed with a map of the channel and its adjoining creeks in ſupport of their reſpective claims. This was a cauſe of much curioſity in general, and of great conſequence to the coaſt of Norfolk in particular. Wells.

Not far from hence is Holkham, the ſeat from the reign of Charles I. of the family of Coke, which Camden derives from Dodington or Didlington in this county. John, fourth ſon of ſir Edward Coke, lord chief juſtice, ſettled here, and his younger brother's deſcendant Thomas, created baron Lovel of Holkham 1728, and viſcount Coke and earl of Leiceſter 1744, began here a moſt magnificent houſe above 330 feet in front, which after his death 1759 without iſſue (his only ſon Edward dying 1753 without iſſue) was finiſhed by his widow 1764 at the expence of £.11,000, excluſive of furniture which coſt £.3000 more. She alſo endowed ſix almſhouſes 1763, and 1767 repaired the church, which is a noted ſea mark, ſituate on a hill, near which is a tumulus called Hoe hill[o]. At the ſide of a hill at Holkham were found 1721 ſeveral corpſes, with pierced beads of different ſizes of green and white glaſs, iron ſpear heads, pieces of braſs, &c.[p] Holkham.

Somewhat weſt of this are ſeven villages of the name of Burnham, giving name to a ſmall deanry. The principal of them takes its name from its market. In Burnham Norton was a Carmelite priory, founded about 1241, of which Robert Bale Burnham.

[f] Tan. 367. Bl. IV. 829.
[g] Bl. Ib. 831.
[h] Bl. IV. 813.
[i] Ib. III. 796.
[k] Hiſt. of Norf. 8vo. VI. 103.
[l] V. 827.
[m] Tan. 346.
[n] Ib. 348.
[o] Bl. IV. 803. G.
[p] Ant. Society's minutes.

the famous hiſtorian of his order was prior, and died there 1503[q]. A beautiful gate of this houſe built of ſtone intermixed with flints ſtill remains.

In the church of Burnham Thorpe is a very large fine and perfect braſs plate, with the effigies of ſir William Calthorpe, knt, adorned with arms, Gothic work, &c. He died in 1420.

North Creyk. At North Creyk adjoining was a priory of canons regular founded 1226, being firſt an hoſpital, and uſually ſtiled Abbatia Sᵉ Mariæ de pratis inter Creyk & Burnham. The ſhell of the choir is ſtill intire, and other remains of the church[r].

All along the coaſt are a number of little hills, the burying-places of Danes and Saxons after their battles hereabouts. In the fields near Creyk is a large Saxon fortification, and the way leading from it is to this day called Bloodgate[12], gate being equivalent to road in many parts of England. Hereabouts is alſo plenty of Ebulum or Dane blood, which the vulgar ſuppoſe to grow where Daniſh blood has been ſpilt[13].

Brancaſter. Brancaſter takes its name from the river Brane not far off, called alſo Brun and Burn as Burnham. Dr. Ward has no doubt of placing BRANNODUNUM at Brancaſter, and GARIENUM mentioned with it in the Notitia at Yarmouth, near which Mr. Gale told him of the Jews way, probably Roman[s]. The camp is regular, and ſeems intended as a ſtation on that north ſhore againſt the inſurrections of the Saxons. The name ſeems derived from the Britiſh Bran a rivulet, and dunum a town or fortification. Baxter reads it Bran na üog dun, q. d. the fort fronting the ſea. Spelman had ſome of the coins found here in two little braſs pots[14]. Parkin mentions coins of Claudius. Here is a freeſchool, and a very large malt-houſe, built by one of the Thurlow family. Mr. Baker had two knives and two ſtyles found at Brancaſter in urns, which are common there. The knives were of the ſize of pocket claſpt knives: one of them had a reticulated handle of ſhining wood, the holes filled with amber; one ſtyle had a flat lozenge head, the other a round one. Brandon in Suffolk is another Brannodunum, q. d. Crows hill[t]. So in Fifeſhire is Ravins hench, q. d. Crow Crag.

From this place runs almoſt in a ſtrait line to Caſtleacre the road called Pedder's road, either from a family of that name here in the laſt century, or from Pedders who carried fiſh in peds up the country. It is fabulouſly ſaid to paſs in the ſame direction through England without entering a town or village[u].

Hunſtanton. Hunſtanton was originally a tower, built by king Edmund, who retired here for a whole year to get the Pſalms in Saxon by heart, and his book was religiouſly preſerved at St. Edmund's Bury till the diſſolution[15]. It afterwards became a village. Alfric, biſhop of Elmham in the reign of Canute, by will gave lands here to that abbey, but they were taken away at the Conqueſt, and given to the Albinies, who granted it in fee to the barons L'Eſtrange to be held of them by caſtle guard to find 206 ſoldiers for the defence of Riſing Caſtle, and in 1693 it was the property of ſir Nicholas L'Eſtrange, bart. knight of the ſhire in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. having married Anne daughter of ſir Thomas Wodehouſe, knt. ſon and heir of ſir Philip Wodehouſe of Kimberley hall in this county, knt. and bart[x]. In the chancel is a very fine raiſed tomb for ſir Roger L'Eſtrange, who died in 1506, having his effigies in braſs on it, and on each ſide in Gothic niches four portraitures of others of his anceſtors. Of this family was the famous ſir Roger L'Eſtrange[y], born 1616, died 1704, brother to Nicholas L'Eſtrange, who was created a baronet 1629, and the family ended in Henry the fourth baronet 1760. His ſiſter's ſon Mr. Styleman is preſent lord. Hunſtanton hall the beautiful family manſion finiſhed in the reign of Henry VII. remains intire, with a handſome church, whoſe tower ſerves as a ſea mark. The country around is much improved by Mr. Styleman. On a hill were lately dug up a number of braſs celts. On the cliff by the ſea ſtand ſome remains of St. Edmund's chapel[z], erected 1272, and near it ſtood a light-houſe whoſe light reflected from a lamp of oil againſt a combination of glaſſes is ſeen ſeven leagues out at ſea.

Snetſham. Snetſham, or Neteſham, is a ſmall but pretty market town, not far from Hunſtanton on the river Ingolſthorp, which gives name to Ingolſthorp a village, where Roman coins have been found[a]. Canute gave Sneteſham to Edwyn the Dane, but William de Albiney the Norman took it from him, in whoſe poſterity earls of Arundel it continued till the diviſion thereof among heireſſes, when it was part of the portion of Cecily ſecond ſiſter and coheireſs of William de Albini earl of Arundel. She was married to Roger de Montalt of Montalt in Flintſhire, in which family it continued for three or four generations, when Robert de Montalt and Emma his wife ſettled this manor and ſeveral others in this county on them and the iſſue of their body, and for default on Iſabel queen of England, wife of king Edward II. for life; after to John of Eltham and his heirs; after to king Edward III. who all enjoyed them, and it was afterwards united to the dutchy of Lancaſter as it now remains[b].

Sharnb. Sharnborn belonged at the landing of Felix to one Thoke, who became one of his firſt converts, and built a ſmall church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, of wood, for which reaſon it was called Stock chapel (from Stocca truncus, probably like that at Grenſted, Eſſex) and this may be what Felix is ſaid to have built[16]. This apoſtle of the Eaſt Angles built the church at Babingley, dedicated to him. Some remains of the event may be traced in the hills called Chriſtian hills; and in Flitcham, explained by Flitcha. ſome Felix' barn or Felix' dwelling, but rather to be derived from fleot the creeks or ſprings with which it abounds[c], was a priory of the order of St. Auſtin, cell to Walſingham, founded t. Henry III. by Robert d'Aiguillon, valued at £.55. 5s. 6d.[d] The old walls and offices remain; and here is a hill with a ſquare acre ditcht round, where the hundred court was held in the reign of William Rufus[e]. In Sharnborn church are perfect braſs effigies of Thomas Sharnborne and Iemona his wife, about the middle of the 15th ceutury.

The heireſs of Thoke married Edwin a Dane, who came over with Canute 1014, who gave him Snetſham, &c. and confirmed Sharnborn to him. His [q] Tan. Not. Mon. 360. Bib. Brit. 71. Bl. III. 735.

[12] G. [13] G. [s] Horſl. 488.
[14] G. [t] Lel. Cyg. Cant. p. 14. [u] Hiſt. of Norf. IX. 15, [15] G. [x] Le Neve MS.
[y] Bl. V. 1272. [z] Ib. 1274. 1275. [a] Mag. Brit. V. 1286. [b] Le Neve MS. [16] G.
[c] Spelm. Bl. IV. 524. [d] Tan. 354. [e] Bl. IV. 530, 531. [r] Tan. 356. Bl. Ib. 774.

plea

plea againſt Warren was, as appears by a MS. quoted by Spelman, "that he had not been aiding or aſſiſting againſt the king directly or indirectly, either before, at, or after the Conqueſt; but all that while kept himſelf out of arms, and this he was ready to prove whenever the king pleaſed [17]." But Mr. Parkin [f] has clearly proved that Edwin had no property in either place, and conſequently that the ſtory is the invention of the compiler of the Sharnburn pedigree t. Henry VIII. from which MS. among Dugdale's now in the Aſhmolean muſeum Spelman took it [g].

Baxter reads Ptolemy's ΜΕΤΑΡΙΣ Mentaris, Ment ar iſc the mouth of the Iſc, i. e. Ouſe. Ward places it at Boſton deep between Norfolk and Lincolnſhire [h]. The Strasburgh edition of Ptolemy reads Μεσαρις, perhaps from Mearſh or Meiarſh, Engliſh Mears, Mijars [i].

Spelman contends that Lynne is to be derived from the Saxon Læn or Lean, which he ſays ſignifies a farm or tenure in fee: as Fanelhen among the Germans is the tenure of a baron, and hence Len Epiſcopi: but Hickes mentions this ſenſe as not frequent [k], and it is not likely this tenure ſhould be more particularized in this place than elſewhere. Its ſituation among waſhes and marſhes favours Camden's etymology; and as to Spelman's ſecond idea that Len is Saxon for Church lands, whence Terllen in Welch Church land, we muſt give it up, and not ſo blend the two languages Britiſh and Saxon. As little foundation is there for its name of Maidenburgh before-mentioned. The burgh belonged at the Conqueſt to Ailmar biſhop of Elmham, and Stigand archbiſhop of Canterbury; and it was then a place of trade, and had a fair granted by Henry I. Biſhop Oxford built a houſe here t. Richard II. and his ſucceſſor Grey (who built a palace at Gaywood a mile from Lynne), obtained of king John a grant to make this town a free burgh, and in his time it had a mint. That unfortunate prince had pawned his regalia to this prelate, and moſt of his prime miniſters were natives of this county. Sir Henry Spelman indeed denies that he granted Lynne a mayor, which he ſays they obtained of Henry III. But though the charter of John's ſixth year does not name ſuch an officer, the patent rolls of his 18th year do. What particular ſervices the people of this town did him does not appear. The gift of his ſword is denied by ſir Henry Spelman on better ground. In a looſe paper of his, dated September 15th, 1630, produced by biſhop Gibſon, he ſays that he was then aſſured by the town-clerk of Lynne, that the ſword-bearer about 50 years before came to the ſchool-maſter of the town and deſired of him an inſcription for the hilt of the town ſword, purporting that king John gave the ſword to the town; whereupon he cauſed the informant, who was then his ſcholar, to write Enſis hic fuit donum regis Johannis a ſuo ipſius latere datum, which the ſword-bearer carried to a goldſmith, and cauſed him to engrave it. Sir Henry adds that Lynne was an epiſcopal and not a royal burgh; and there ſeems to be proof that no ſuch inſignia belonged to it in Henry IV's time, but were a grant from Henry V. [l] Mr. Mackerel, the Lynne antiquary, has endeavoured to confute this: but his beſt argument is drawn from the picture of the ſword in the window of St. Nicholas' chapel, whoſe foundation is fixed by him [m] to the reign of Edward III. for as to the authentic records of its being uſed from Henry III's time, he cites none, and the inſcription without being a forgery may be founded on a miſtake [n].

Henry VIII. exchanging the monaſtery of St. Benet in the Holme and other lands for the revenues of the ſee of Norwich, this among the reſt came into his hands, and took the name of Lynne Regis [18]. St. Margaret's church, built by biſhop Herbert, belonged to a Benedictine priory of his foundation here [o], and had a lofty ſpire 133 feet high, with the tower 275 [p], but the ſpire was blown down in 1741. In this church are moſt curiouſly engraved braſs plates, containing the effigies of Robert Braunche and his two wives, highly and elegantly ornamented with Gothic work, images, figures, &c. &c. Other religious foundations were, St. Mary Magdalen's hoſpital, under a prior, founded 1145, refounded by James I. and now ſubſiſting for eleven poor widows [q]. Another of S. John Baptiſt t. Edward I. valued at £.7. 7s. per ann. [r] and a college of twelve prieſts, founded 1500 [s]. Grey friars founded t. Henry III. whoſe tower is now a ſea mark [t]. Black friars, founded t. Edward I. [u] Auſtin friars about the ſame time [x]. Friars of the Sac about the ſame time [y]. Weſt Lynne took the the name of Old Lynne about t. Edward IV. being antiently as South and North Lynne comprehended under the general name of Lena. Theſe three have now their ſeparate churches [z]. There was a houſe of White friars in South Lynne t. Henry III. [a] An hoſpital for ten poor men was founded by Mr. Seaman 1714 [b]. Weſt Lynne.

Lynne has no freſh ſprings, but is ſupplied by a river from Gaywood, whoſe water is raiſed by engines into conduits, and by pipes from Middleton two miles and Mintling three miles diſtant [19]. It is chiefly ſurrounded by a wall and ditch, and runs along the eaſt ſide of the Ouſe, which riſes 20 feet perpendicular on a ſpring tide. It is divided by four rivulets, and the north point towards the ſea is defended by St. Anne's fort, which commands the harbour [c]. The town held out 1643 above three weeks, for Charles I. againſt an army of 18000 men. Sir Horatio Townſend was created lord Townſend of King's Lynne 1661, and his ſon ſir Roger 1682 viſcount Townſend of Rainham [d]. Among other writers born here were William Watts, editor of Matthew Paris, who died 1649 [e], and Nicholas a Carmelite friar and aſtronomer, who is reported to have ſailed to the north pole [f]. Henry III. granted licence to foreign merchants to trade here. In the laſt century Yarmouth ſo much increaſed in trade [g] as to have double the number of ſhips, merchants, and inhabitants [20]. Lynne ſtill drives a conſiderable trade both at home and abroad.

At Tirrington was born William Tirrington, LL.D. Tirrington.

[17] G.

[f] Parkin's impartial account of the invaſion of William duke of Normandy 4° 1756. p. 30. and Norf. V. 1295. Though Parkin may be ſaid to have proved his point, there remains ſomewhat to be ſaid on the ſide of ſir H. Spelman; perhaps Parkin only proves that Edwin had no intereſt in Sharnborn at the time of taking Domeſday ſurvey. But ſee Mr. Brooke, Archæol. VI. p. 51. & aut. ibi cit.

[g] Gloſſ. v. Drenches. [h] Horſl. 372.

[i] MS. n. Gale, p. 100, where ſee more. [k] Epiſt. Diſſ. p. 584. d. See alſo Lye in v.

[l] Bl. IV. 574. 584. [m] Hiſt. of Lynne, p. 91. [n] P. 185. [18] G.

[o] Bl. 587. Tan. 342. [p] Mack. 8. [q] Bl. 607. Tan. 347. [r] Tan. 364.

[s] Ib. 370. [t] Bl. 613. Tan. 362. [u] Tan. 365. Bl. 614. [x] Bl. 615. Tan. 365.

[y] Ib. 614. Ib. 364. [z] Bl. 610—629. [a] Tan. 362. [b] Mack. 270. [19] G.

[c] Mack. 2. [d] Ib. 187. [e] Ib. 193. [f] Hakluyt t. I. 121. Tan. B. 546. [g] Bl. 584. [20] G.

a celebrated writer, and John Colton, firſt maſter of Gonville college and archbiſhop of Armagh, where he died 1404 [h].

Marſhland. Marſhland is a peninſula, almoſt ſurrounded by navigable rivers and an arm of the ſea; the whole in the wideſt part but ten miles over. It contains 30000 acres, and has over its many cuts and canals not leſs than 111 bridges. It contains ſeven villages, all whoſe cattle it feeds beſides the ſheep. Theſe are Emneth, Terrington, Tilney, Walpole, Walſoken, Walton, and Wiggenhall, which intercommon on Tilney Smeeth. The level ſurface of this tract and other circumſtances ſeem to argue its having been recovered from the ſea. Spelman tells us there were within his memory two general overflowings, one of ſalt, the other of freſh water. By the latter, as appeared before the commiſſioners, of whom he was one, the inhabitants ſuſtained damage to the amount of £.42,000, the water not breaking down but overflowing the bank to the height of at leaſt a foot. The preſent mode of banking by a ſubſtantial brick wall, fenced with earth, hath been found moſt effectual to reſiſt the tides, whereas the value of the eſtates was almoſt yearly laid out in the old way of embanking [21]. Great improvements have been made on the coaſt by embanking: capt. Bentinck recovered 800 acres of ſaltmarſh, now arable.

Walpole. Walpole takes its name from the great wall or ſea bank raiſed to defend it from the ſea by the Romans, and from a great pool of water near that bank. A tenant of Mr. Cony's, who lived under the bank, digging three feet deep in his garden found many Roman bricks and an aquæduct made of earthen pipes: twenty-ſix were taken up moſtly whole, though as tender as the earth itſelf. Sir A. Fountaine pronounced them Roman, made of the ſame earth as the urns, and turned. They were made of paliſh earth, and hardened again in the air. They were twenty inches long 3 three quarters bore, half an inch thick, and one end diminiſhing to be inſerted into the other. Mr. Cony ſent ſome to Mr. Gale, Dr. Maſſey, Mr. Ellis, Lord Colrane, Dr. Stukeley, and Maurice Johnſon [i]. Oſwi, a noble Saxon, gave Walpole to Ely with his ſon Alwyn, who from a monk there became biſhop of Norwich, and it remained with the church of Ely till t. Elizabeth, when it came to the crown. This place gave name to a family, of whom before in Houghton. Its church is one of the moſt beautiful parochial churches in England, built t. Henry VI. and has much painting in the windows [k].

Modney. At Modney in Helgay pariſh was a ſmall priory of black monks, cell to Ramſey abbey [l].

Walſoken. Walton. Walſoken, which as well as the Waltons, had name from its ſituation on the ſea wall three miles long, belonged to Ramſay abbey, and had an hoſpital or guild founded in the 15th century [m]. It gave birth 1693, to Thomas Herring, biſhop of Bangor and archbiſhop of York and Canterbury, who died 1757.

Tilney. Tilney gives name to Tilney Smeeth the great common beforementioned, one mile broad and three long [n], probably from its level ſurface, Saxon Smeðe, ſmooth. It feeds upwards of 30,000 large ſheep and the great cattle of ſeven towns.

Middleton. Middleton, on the other ſide of Lynne, was the ſeat of the lords Scales, whoſe gatehouſe built t. Henry VI. ſtill remains, and in the town a high mount as of a caſtle [o]. In this pariſh this family founded Blackborough priory for religious of both ſexes t. Henry II. changed ſoon after to a Benedictine nunnery, and valued at £.42. 6s. 7d. per annum [p]. Its ſmall remains are turned into a dove houſe. Blackb

Pentney priory was founded for black canons by Robert de Vaux in the reign of the Conqueror, valued at £.170. per annum, the gatehouſe ſtill remaining [q]. Pentney

Sechey, though only a hamlet to N. Rungton, has a market every fortnight for fat cattle [r]. Sechey

At Geyton well, near Gayton, and now included in the town, was a Benedictine priory founded by William de Scohies t. William the Conqueror [s]. Gayton

Near Lynne is Downham, ſo called from its ſituation on a hill (Dun), and in old records Downham port, from the river on which it ſtands. Spelman ſays its market is as old as the Confeſſor [t]. Here is a famous market for butter, and in ſpring and ſummer it is ſaid from good authority 90,000 firkins have gone from hence by water to Cambridge, and thence to London, and ſo been miſcalled Cambridge butter. Great part of the Norfolk butter goes now by way of Swaffham. Downh

A little more northward is Stow Bardolph, ſo called from the lords Bardolph, but ſince t. Henry VIII. the ſeat of the Hares, of whom Nicholas built here 1589, at the expence of £.40,000, a ſtately houſe, now falling faſt to ruin. His brother Hugh greatly improved the eſtate, and left it to two nephews, one of whoſe ſons was created baron Colrane 1625. It lately belonged to Dr. Moore and ſir Thomas Harris, of Finchley, knt. who married coheireſſes of the family [u], and died 1782. Stow B dolph.

Weſt Derebam, a market town, is famous for the birth of Hubert Walter, biſhop of Salisbury, archbiſhop of Canterbury, lord chancellor under Richard I. Legate to Pope Celeſtine IV. and chief juſtice of England, who, when only dean of York, built here 1188, an abbey for Præmonſtratenſian canons from Welbeck, valued at £.228. per annum, and it was the 12th abbey of that order in England. The founder ordered they ſhould pray here for the ſoul of his great patron Ralph de Glanvile lord chief juſtice, under whom he was brought up. It came afterwards to the Derhams, an antient family here, of whom ſir Thomas, envoy to the duke of Tuſcany, built here 1697 a noble houſe in the Italian ſtyle forming a wing on each ſide of the old abbey gate, with a quadrangle ſome cloiſter on the ſouth ſide containing many hand- and apartments. It belonged to the late ſir Simeon Stuart, bart. of Hants, in right of his mother, who was a Derham. The church has a weſt round tower [x]. W. D

At Wearham near Downham was a Benedictine priory, t. Richard I. or John, cell to Munſtrell, in the dioceſe of Amiens dedicated to St. Winvaloe, and given to W. Dereham abbey; valued at £.716. [y] Its remains are a freeſtone building, now a farm houſe, 35 feet by 30, ſuppoſed the chapel. Here is an annual cattle fair on St. Winwallo's day, March 3. The ſtorms at this time are commonly called Whinwall ſtorms, and this old rhyme obtains in the neighbourhood; Wear

[h] Bl. IV. 701.
[k] Bl. IV. 706.
[o] Bl. IV. 653.
[r] Bl. IV. 680.
[t] Bl. IV. 168.
[21] G.
[l] Tanner, 358.
[p] Bl. IV. 655. Tanner, 351.
[s] Tanner, 336. Bl. IV. 537.
[x] Bl. IV. 8. Tanner, 352.
[i] Cony's letter to R. Gale, Nov. 8. 1727.
[m] Bl. IV. 723. Tanner, 370.
[n] Bl. IV. 685.
[q] Tanner, 336. Bl. IV. 660.
[u] G. Bl. IV. 93.
[y] Tanner, 355.

First comes David, next comes Chad,
Then comes Whinwall as if he was mad.

A little weſt of the church is St. Margaret's well, formerly much reſorted to.

On the other ſide of Lynne is Caſtle Riſing, the ſeat of the Albinies till Henry III. afterwards of the Montalts till Edward III. whoſe mother queen Iſabel next held it, and was confined in it in her widowhood, and died here. Richard II. gave it to Montfort duke of Bretagne; Henry VIII. to the duke of Norfolk, from whoſe family it came to the earl of Suffolk, preſent proprietor. The duke of Norfolk has the title of lord Howard of Caſtle Riſing, Henry Howard of this place, heir of that family, being ſo created 21 Charles II. Spelman, who was born at Congham adjoining, ſays it had been a famous port till choaked by ſands; and a very antient burgh. The ſalt-water in ſpring tide ſtill overflows the banks between it and Babbingley. He had a coin of Conſtantine dug up in the neighbourhood. It is a corporation with a mayor and two aldermen, and ſends members to parliament. The caſtle was built by the Albinies in the ſtyle of Norwich caſtle, conſiſting of a keep, whoſe walls are three feet thick, encompaſſed with a great circular ditch and rampart of earth, whereon are walls and towers. The entrance is by a ſtone bridge of one ruined arch with a gatehouſe. Mr. King, who has examined the ſtructure of our antient caſtles with particular attention, and has lately inſpected this, is of opinion that it was one of Alfred's great caſtles altered and improved in the reign of Henry I. arches characteriſtic of whoſe reign are remaining, he ſays, in a moſt beautiful manner on the great ſtaircaſe and elſewhere. He pronounces it a true original Norman ſtructure of the firſt kind. Here is an hoſpital built by Henry Howard earl of Northampton 13 James I. for 13 poor women[z]. On the weſt ſide of the caſtle hill is a ſquare mount of above an acre, much lower, ſurrounded by a ditch on all ſides except next the caſtle hill. Oppoſite the caſtle to the eaſt is another larger hill, round, with a ditch. One of theſe may be Roman mentioned by Gibſon: or both caſt up by the people of Lynne when they beſieged the caſtle, and forced one of the earls of Arundel to relinquiſh his claim to one third of their cuſtoms.

I find nothing of the Mowbrays here. Mr. Camden might conclude it from their alliance with the Albinies, as in Dugdale's Baronage I. 121.

Caſtle Acre belonged to the Warrens from the Conqueſt, and after to the Fitz Alans earls of Arundel, the Howards, &c. and now to the late earl of Leiceſter's heirs. The caſtle on a Roman ſite is circular, including about 8 acres. The other ſide of the fortification on the weſt ſide of the circular one about 20 acres. The inner wall remaining was ſeven feet thick, and an outer wall on the rampart with a deep ditch. The keep was within, and croſs this deep ditch are three lofty walls joining the caſtle wall as buttreſſes. Under the outer wall on the river ſide is a pleaſant terrace walk. The other part of the fortification on the weſt ſide of the Bayly ſtreet, which runs through the caſtle, called the Barbican, contained ten acres, &c. was encircled with ditches and high ramparts. Through the whole area of the caſtle now runs north and ſouth a ſtreet of houſes called the Bayly ſtreet, ſo called perhaps from the Baillium, at whoſe north end is a ſtone gate houſe, and near it a ruined chapel. At the ſouth end are traces of another gate, and on the eaſt ſide of the ſtreet was a third gate leading into the outer court of the caſtle. Earl Warren, who built this caſtle, and had 140 lordſhips in the county, made it his chief reſidence, and entertained Edward I. in it 1297; and here was a chapel with monks before 1089. It ſeems to have been a Roman ſtation, a vaſt ſquare ditch running among or behind the houſes to the right of the road through the town gate, to which gate another correſponded. The way called the Peddar's way runs from the north gate of the caſtle by Caſtle Acre Wicken, by Fring and Ringſted to Brancaſter and the ſea. There is little doubt but this was a Roman road leading from Thetford to Brancaſter. Strong traces of its form, breadth, &c. are ſtill to be ſeen in many parts, particularly between Harpley Downs and Anmer, and about a year ago on the weſt ſide of this road in the pariſh of Fring ſome labourers in ditching broke up the remains of a pavement apparently Roman, which the country people, the diſcovery happening during the time of a fair in the village, broke up and carried away great part of it. The owner of the ground Mr. Goodwin, as ſoon as he received information of it, ordered the ſpot to be carefully covered up for the future inſpection of antiquaries. Coins of Veſpaſian, Conſtantine, &c. and a cornelian ſeal with an emperor's head, have been found here: Mr. Thome, the vicar, has a fine Fauſtina found here: and between Houghton and Anmer are many tumuli. A curious bunch of keys found here, and probably belonging to the caſtle, is engraved in three views, Pl. II. fig. 3. from a drawing by Mr. Kerrich: the wards fig. 4.

William firſt earl Warren founded a Cluniac priory about 1085, valued at £. 306. per annum.[a] The ruins of this priory are the fineſt and moſt venerable of any now remaining in this county. The weſt front of the church (74 feet wide) in a beautiful Saxon ſtyle remains with much of the nave, the prior's apartments now a farm houſe, the gate houſe, and great part of the preciſt wall, the ground within which meaſures 29 acres, 2 roods, 10 perches. The prior's dining room may be traced and a ſubterraneous paſſage to the abbey where is a ſmall altar. Mr. Thome, to whoſe friendſhip theſe ſheets are much indebted, told me 1769, that Blomfield had dug in the priory for the founder, but he was buried at Lewes. He married Gundreda a daughter of William the Conqueror, whoſe body was found wrapt in lead at Lewes in Suſſex, about the year 1775. The whole church I paced 126 feet long, tranſepts 37.

Godwick. Mr. Camden miſtakes in placing Godwick at the head of the anonymous river that runs by Caſtle acre, whereas it really ſtands at the head of that which runs into the Windſon below Rainham[b]. Neither was Godwick the birth place of ſir Edward Coke, but Mileham. Mileham, which in fact ſtands at the head of the firſt river, which is called in the maps Lynne river, but is the Nar. Though the Nar does not riſe in the pariſh in which Godwick ſtands (Tittleſhall), it riſes in Mileham the next pariſh and at the foot of the hill, on part of which Godwick houſe is erected. The river that riſes on the other ſide of Godwick runs into the Wentſum, not below but through lord Townſend's park at Rainham. Quære if the Nar, the banks of which appear to have been a good deal inhabited by the Romans, might not from ſome reſemblance not now known, have taken its name from the Italian

Sulfurea Nar albus aqua[c].

[z] Bl. IV. 669—676. [a] Tanner, 337. Bl. IV. 484—499. [b] Bl. V. 1011. [c] Virg. Æn. VII. 517.

The manſion houſe where ſir Edward was born ſtill remains, the property of the earl of Leiceſter's heir, and in the town are the large earthworks of an oval caſtle of 12 or 13 acres, double ditched, with a keep and barbican, built probably by Alan ſon of Flaald anceſtor of the Fitz Alans, and to whom the Conqueror gave this great manor, honor and barony [d].

Rougham. Rougham has been the ſeat of the Yelvertons ever ſince the beginning of the 15th century originally from Yelverton in Henſtede hundred, of whom William under Henry VI. Chriſtopher under Elizabeth, and Henry under Charles I. were chief juſtices of England; but the family became extinct 1649, and the eſtate devolved to the Peytons, who ſold it to the Norths, in whom it now remains [e]. The family ſeat was entirely taken down in 1780.

Narford. Narford, q. d. the ford of the Nar, on which rivulet it ſtands, was the ſeat of the learned ſir Andrew Fountaine, whoſe family is as antient in this county as Henry III. and who had here aſſembled a capital collection of books, pictures, coins, and other antiquities, now enjoyed by his great nephew, who changed his name from Price to Fountaine. The Romans appear to have had a ſtation here from the many bricks and a bronze vaſe found in the yard [f]. In this pariſh, about 14 years ago, were diſcovered a great many urns, together with many human bones, about ſix feet under ground in making a pit for water in the farm yard adjoining to Narford houſe. Only two of them were taken out whole, and all that was found in them was ſome wreathed metal, like bracelets, reſembling that engraved in vol. I. pl. XVII. fig. 9. and now in the hands of Brigg Fountaine, eſq. who has moſt politely favoured me with one of them, and a fragment of one of the urns. See alſo under Cheſterford in Eſſex, p. 62, of this volome.

Narburgh. Narburgh is called by John Brame a famous city, but moſt probably was a ſtation, from its name, and the lofty artificial hill or burgh, from whence runs a large ditch and bank ſouth to Bicham well and Berton. At the foot of the hill a number of human bones and pieces of armour were found in making a garden by ſir Clement Spelman, great nephew to ſir Henry [g].

Weſt Acre. At Weſt Acre was a priory of Black afterwards Auſtin canons, founded t. William Rufus, and valued at £. 260. per annum. The gate and ſome other ruins remain [h].

Oxburgh. Oxburgh has a large vallum north-weſt of it, and many tumuli and little pits called Danes graves, about the town, where Roman and Saxon coins have been found. So that Blomfield inclines to place here the Iciani of Antoninus, which Fulk places at Exning near Newmarket, Talbot at Ickborough, and Gale and Ward remove to Cheſterford or Ickleton near it. The manſion houſe, now in perfect repair, was built of brick t. Edward IV. round a quadrangle in a moat, by ſir Edmund Bedingfield; and in this family it ſtill continues [i]. The grand Gothic hall is lately pulled down.

Wormegay. Wormegay came to the Bardolphs t. Henry II. The laſt of this family was beheaded 9 Henry IV. but the title reſtored to his ſon-in-law ſir William Phelips, whoſe daughter married lord viſcount Beaumont, the firſt viſcount in England, whoſe ſon dying without iſſue it came through ſeveral hands to Mr. Warner of Walſingham. Here was a priory of Black Canons founded by William de Warren t. Richard I. or John, united to Pentney, 1468, and valued with it at £. 170. per annum [k]. In 1766 Mr. Thome plainly diſcovered its ſite in the meadows north of the village about half a mile, and near the ſide of the river Nar. A very ſmall piece of the wall of the church or chapel ſtill remains converted into a ſhed or ſtable. Mr. Parker a farmer is now proprietor of the ſite of the caſtle, which was the reſidence of the Bardolphs, being the head of this barony. Mr. Parker's houſe ſtands near the foot of the mount which he has planted as an orchard. The caſtle ſtood immediately on the right hand as you enter the town from the weſt. The priory was ſituated about half a mile off in the meadows on the left hand, and almoſt oppoſite to the caſtle on the north.

Mr. Watſon [l] prefers Camden's account of Reginald ſon of William firſt earl of Surrey being founder of this priory to that of Dugdale I. 82. who makes him a younger ſon of the ſecond earl William.

Swaffham. Swaffham is very pleaſantly and healthfully ſituated on a riſing ground in a fine champain country. On the north-weſt ſide is a ſpacious heath famous for horſe races. The church is a lofty and magnificent ſtructure, whoſe north aile was built 1462 by John Chapman vulgarly ſaid to have been a pedlar who was enriched by a dream. The manor belongs now to the Hammonds of Weſt acre. Here is an almſhouſe and freeſchool [m].

Sporle. At Sporle was an alien priory of black monks, cell to the abbey of St. Florent at Saumur [n].

Methw. Methwold is a market town famous for its rabbits [o].

Sleveſh. At Sleveſholme here William earl Warren founded a Cluniac priory 1322 [p].

Aſhill. The tenure of the manor of Aſhill was altered to knight's ſervice ever ſince it came to the crown by the forfeiture of ſir Thomas Wyat in the 16th century [q].

East B. Eaſt Bilney gave birth to Andrew Perne, maſter of Peterhouſe, Cambridge, 1554, dean of Ely 1557, one of the tranſlators of archbiſhop Parker's bible. He died 1589, and was buried in Lambeth church [r].

Briſley. At Briſley near North Elmham was born 1505 Richard Taverner, educated at Corpus Chriſti college, Cambridge, afterwards at Oxford, patroniſed by ſir Thomas Cromwell, clerk of the ſignet, 1537, and by favour of the protector Somerſet, licenced to preach though a layman, which he did with his ſword by his ſide, being knighted by queen Elizabeth. He retired to Wodeaton in Oxfordſhire, where he died 1575, aged 70, leaving behind him many writings. His brother Roger was alſo an author, and died at Upminſter in Eſſex 1582 [s].

North-ham. North Elmham was granted by king Sigebert to Fœlix; and about 673, when the ſee of the East Angles was divided, one biſhop ſat here, and the other at Dunwich. They were united 870 and removed to Thetford 1075, and to Norwich 1094 by biſhop Herbert [t], who rebuilt the church here, but the preſent ſeems to be of later date. The biſhops had a caſtle here, probably built by Spencer t. Richard II. moated and having a keep, of which the earthworks remain near the church [u]. In Broomcloſe above half a mile from the town have been found a great number of urns with divers braſs inſtruments in them, Roman coins, and a ſilver ſeal ring, with an eagle holding a thunderbolt [x]. In 1779 in an incloſure

[d] Bl. V. 1041. [e] Bl. V. 1046. G. [f] Bl. III. 518. 523. [g] Bl. III. 461. [h] Bl. IV. 748. Tan. 342.
[i] Bl. III 474. [k] Bl. IV. 207. 214. Tan. 354. [l] Hiſt. of the Warren family I. 63. 70.
[m] Bl. III. 496, &c. [n] Tan. 358. [o] Bl. I. 507. [p] Tan. 359.
[q] Bl. I. 616. [r] Bentham's Hiſt. of Ely, 228.
[s] Tan. Bib. Brit, 705. Ward's Greſh. Profeſſ. Fuller's Church Hiſtory, IX. 95. and Worthies, Oxf. Maſters' Hiſt. of Corpus Chriſti College, 389—391. and Appendix, N° xci.
[t] Tan. 332. [u] Blomf. V. 994. [x] Ib. 998. Phil. Tranſ. 257.

near

near Broom Close the ground sunk in three places circularly several feet. In one of them the diameter of the hole was nearly 12 feet, and the depth 20. The first lay lord of this manor was Thomas Cromwell t. Henry VIII. It now belongs to Richard Milles, esq; whose mother was the eldest daughter and coheir of Richard Warner, esq; who built a handsome seat here in 1729. The ruins of the palace still remain, and the site of the cathedral is visible, and near it are some old wells and many more filled up. Over the north door of the present church is some work in the arch from an older building perhaps the cathedral.

Dereham, called also East and Market Dereham, having been rebuilt since the last fire in 1679, is now a handsome market town, having many hamlets. Here was a nunnery founded by Withburga younger sister to Ethelreda foundress of Ely, but destroyed by the Danes, upon which her body was removed from this church to Ely [y]. At the west end of the church (which is very ancient, and of the conventual form), are the remains of a baptistery, which in 1752 were converted into a cold bath. This town is situated exactly in the centre of the county.

At Montjoy in Heverland in Eynsford hundred William de Gisnes founded a cell of black cannons, suppressed by Wolsey [z].

At Gressenhall was a collegiate chapel founded by one of the Stutevilles, lords of the town [a]. All is ruined but the nave, which is now the infirmary to the house of industry for the hundreds of Milford and Launditch, built in this parish 1776.

Elsing is in Eynsford hundred. In the chancel is a very curious inlaid brass effigy of sir Hugh de Hastings, bart. having on each side engraved portraitures of Edward III. Henry earl of Lancaster, and other nobles of his time [b].

In the church-yard of Foulsham, a market town belonging formerly to the lords Morley, since to the Hunts, and now to sir Edward Astley, is an altar tomb with this inscription: "Robart Colles Cecely his wife," engraved by the Society of Antiquaries, from a drawing by Mr. Prideaux, miserably given in Phil. Trans. N° 189 by sir P. Skippon, copied in Magna Britannia 282. See Pl. II. fig. 5. He witnesses a deed 20 Henry VII. [c] In 1770 the church and a great part of the town were destroyed by fire. The houses are since handsomely rebuilt, and the church and chancel neatly repaired; the former by a voluntary contribution in the county, the latter by sir Edward Astley the patron.

Repeham is a market town which had antiently three churches of Repeham, Whitwell, and Hacton, two adjoining villages, in one churchyard, the latter burnt before 1531 [d].

At Witchingham was probably born John Breton bishop of Hereford, 1269, LL. D. and author of a treatise on the laws of England. He died 1275, and was buried in his cathedral [e].

It was also the estate of Peter Le Neve, Norroy king at arms, an eminent antiquary and herald, who, with indefatigable pains and industry, collected many MSS. and records relative to this county [f], part of which were sold on his death 1730, and the rest on that of Mr. Thomas Martin, who married his widow.

At Salle, which belonged to his ancestors 1283, was probably born sir Geffrey Bulleyn, patronized by sir John Fastolfe, lord mayor of London 1457, and father of queen Anne Bulleyn, mother of queen Elizabeth. He died before 1463.

The distance between Ickburgh and Bury answers to Iciani and Villa Faustini in Antoninus; the road to Swaffham has an air of antiquity; urns have been found at Linford hall a mile hence. On the Bury road was a large milliary lately to be seen [g], and in the plantations at Linford a mile off, and on building the new hall Roman urns have lately been dug up. Ickburgh. Linford.

At Weting All Saints are venerable ruins of a square castle of flint, moated, with a keep, the seat of the De Plaizes lords here till Edward III. Two miles east of the town are certain pits inclosed in a semicircular intrenchment of 12 acres on the side of a hill, with a tumulus at the east end of the work called Grimes Graves, which is equivalent to Graham's dyke in Scotland [h]. On the west side of the town is a bank or ditch running some miles, and called the Foss, and north of the town a green way called Walsingham way, used by pilgrims as their road to Walsingham [i]. In Weting parish was Bromehill priory founded by sir Hugh de Plaiz t. John, or Henry III. for Austin canons, of which there now little remains [k]. Thomas Shadwell the poet is reported to have been born about 1640 in the parish of Weting, whereof his family were lords [l]. Weting All Saints. Bromehill priory.

Horsham Saint Faith's in Taverham hundred had a priory of black monks founded by Robert Fitz Walter 1105, valued at £. 162. per annum [m]. Here was also an hospital of knights templars, not far from Cley, and one of the greatest fairs for Scots cattle held here on St. Faith's day. Horsham.

Binham priory in N. Grenhoe hundred was founded by Peter de Valoines the Conqueror's nephew t. Henry I. for Benedictine monks, valued at £. 140. The nave remains in the style of Waltham abbey, with ruins of the choir and gatehouse [n]. Binham.

William the Conqueror granted Broke in Loddon hundred to the abbey of St. Edmund Bury, placing a small knife wrapt up on the altar of St. Edmund in presence of many his chief nobility, and also the grant signed with his seal [o]. Broke.

At Hickling in Happing hundred was a priory of black canons founded 1185 by Theobald de Valoines, valued at £. 100. per annum [p]. The ruins now belong to Mr. Scambler, standing on a rising ground entirely surrounded by fenny grounds. Hickling.

Jefferey Fitz Piers founded at Shouldham, and was buried in it, a priory for Gilbertines t. Richard I. valued at £. 138. per annum, of which there are now no remains [q]. Shouldham.

Langley in Loddon was a Premonstratensian abbey, founded by Robert Fitz Helke or de Clavering, valued at £. 104. per annum [r]. The manor belongs to sir Thomas Beauchamp Proctor, bart. Langley.

Marham, a Cistertian nunnery, founded by Isabel de Albini countess of Arundel 1251, of which only the north walls of the church remain, and some of the cloisters [s]. Marham.

Wendling abbey, founded by sir William Wendling t. Henry III. for Premonstratenses, valued at £. 55. 11s. now entirely destroyed; only a piece of the west end of the church remains [t]. Wendling.

By the attainder of the last Thomas the title of duke of Norfolk being taken away, his eldest son Philip was called only earl of Arundel, by descent from his mother: and he being attainted of high Earls and Dukes of Norfolk.

[y] G. B. V. 1181. 91. Tan. 332. [z] Tan. 356. [a] Bl. IV. 1016.
[b] It is engraved by John Carter in his 3d number, and illustrated with a particular description by Mr. Fenn.
[c] Blomf. IV. 377. [d] Ib. IV. 390. [e] Blomf. IV. 445. Godwin, ed. Rich. 486.
[f] Blomf. III. 626. [g] Bl. I. 528. [h] Ib. 486. 469. [i] Ib. 486.
[k] Ib. 479. Tan. 359. [l] Blomf. Ib. 481. [m] Tan. 343. [n] Bl. IV. 787. Tan. 343.
[o] Bl. V. 1106. ex reg'ro Pincebeck, f. 181. [p] Tan. 351. Bl. V. 856. [q] Bl. IV. 148. Tan. 353.
[r] Bl. V. 1137. Tan. 353. [s] Bl. IV. 125. 132. Tan. 361. [t] Bl. IV. 1092. Tan. 363.

treason,

treaſon for favouring the Popiſh party, had ſentence of death paſſed on him, but his execution being forborn he died in the Tower 1595. His only child Thomas was created earl of Norfolk 20 Charles I. and dying at Padua 1646, was buried at Arundel leaving two ſons Henry and Thomas, of whom the firſt ſucceeded him, and, dying at Arundel, was buried, and was ſucceeded 1652 in his titles of earl of Arundel, Surrey, and Norfolk by his eldeſt ſon Thomas, who was at the earneſt petition of ſeveral of the nobility reſtored to the title of duke of Norfolk 13 Charles II.[u] He dying at Padua 1677 without iſſue, the title deſcended to his brother Henry lord Howard, who was ſucceeded 1683 by his eldeſt ſon Henry, who leaving no iſſue 1701, was ſucceeded by Thomas ſon of Thomas his younger ſon[22]. He died 1732 without iſſue, and was ſucceeded by his brother Edward, who died 1777, and is ſucceeded by his couſin Charles 10th and preſent duke.

[u] G. Dugd. II. 278.

[22] G.

Rare Plants found in Norfolk.

Acorus Calamus. Sweet ſmelling Flag or Calamus; in the river Yare near Norwich, and at Lynn.

Adonis autumnalis. Corn Flos Adonis, Pheaſant's-Eye, Red Maithes, or Red Morocco; in corn fields.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel; in woods and ſhady places.

Ægilops incurva. Sea Hard Graſs; in ſea paſtures.

Agaricus muſcarius. Fly Agaric: in ſandy woods and hedges.

Aira caneſcens. Grey Hair Graſs; in ſandy ſea places, —— montana β ſetacea. Mountain Hair Graſs; on Stratton heath.

Aliſma ranunculoides. Leſſer water Plantain: on Coſteſſey common.

Alopecurus ariſtatus β paniceus. Bearded Fox-tail Graſs; in wet meadows about Cley.

——— geniculatus β bulboſus. Bulboſe Fox-tail graſs; in watery places and ponds.

Althæa officinalis. Marſh Mallow; in ſea marſhes.

Anagallis arvenſis δ. (Flore cæruleo) Female Pimpernel: in corn fields and ſandy places.

Anchuſa ſempervirens. Evergreen Alkanet; on rubbiſh about Norwich.

Anemone Pulſatilla. Paſque Flower; on Tulip hills near Lexham.

Anthemis nobilis. Common Camomile; in ſunny meadows and paſtures.

Antirrhinum majus. Greater Toad flax or Snap Dragon; on old walls.

——— —— minus. Leaſt Toad flax; in ſandy corn-fields.

Arenaria tenuifolia. Fine leaved Chickweed; in ſandy meadows and paſtures; at Oxburgh, and on Swafham heath.

Artemiſia maritima. Sea Wormwood; on ſea ſhores.

Arundo Calamagroſtis. Branched Reed Graſs: at Hethel, plentifully.

——— Epigejos. Small Reed Graſs: in a meadow at Ranaugh, plentifully.

Aſperula Cynanchica. Squinancy-wort. in dry meadows, eſpecially chalk.

——— odorata. Woodroof; in woods and ſhady places.

Aſplenium Ceterach. Spleenwort: on Heydon church walls.

——— Scolopendrium. Harts tongue; on Little Plumſtead and Sprowſton churches.

Aſter Tripolium. Sea Star Wort: at Cley, and in the marſhes by Acle bridge.

Aſtragalus arenarius. Purple Mountain Milkwort; in ſand and chalky meadows and paſtures; on Swaffham heath.

——— glycyphyllos: Wild liquorice vetch: on chalky meadows and paſtures.

Atriplex littoralis. Graſs Orach; on ſea ſhores and rubbiſh at Lynne, Yarmouth, &c.

——— pedunculata. Pedunculated Orach; on ſea ſhores; at Yarmouth.

——— pedunculata β. Sea Orach, with ſmall Baſil leaves: on ſea ſhores; near Lynne.

——— ſerrata. Serrated Orach: on rubbiſh and ſea ſhores.

Atropa Belladonna. Common Dwale or Deadly Nightſhade: at St. Faith's Newton, on the road to Poſtwick, at Carrow abbey, at Coſteſſey, and about three miles from Norwich near Ayleſham.

Avena pratenſis. Meadow Oat Graſs;
——- pubeſcens. Rough Oat Graſs;
} on heaths, meadows, and paſtures of a chalky ſoil.

Berberis vulgaris. The Barberry or Pipperidge buſh; on chalk hills and hedges.

Bidens cernua. Nodding Bidens; in ditches and lakes.

Boletus coriaceus. Coriaceous Boletus;
——— ſquamoſus. Scaly Boletus;
} on trunks of trees.

Braſſica muralis. Wild Rocket; on the walls in Yarmouth church-yard.

Bunias Cakile. Sea Bunias or Rocket; on ſea ſhores.

Bupleurum rotundifolium. Common Thorow-wax; in corn fields.

——— tenuiſſimum. Leaſt Thorow-wax, or Hares-ear: on a heath between Hillington and Houghton, at Clay, and at Lynn.

Campanula glomerata. Little Throatwott, or Canterbury bells; in mountainous paſtures.

——— hybrida. Leſſer Venus looking glaſs, or podded Corn Violet; in chalky corn fields; in Catton field, and at Cromer.

——— latifolia. Giant Throat Wort; in buſhy places and hedges.

——— Rapunculus. Rampions; in banks of ditches and corn fields.

Carduus acanthoides. Welted Thiſtle; on rubbiſh and margins of fields.

——— acaulis. Dwarf Carline Thiſtle; on mountainous paſtures, eſpecially chalk.

——— criſpus. Curled Thiſtle; on rubbiſh and highways.

——— helenoides. Great Engliſh Soft Gentle Thiſtle, or Melancholy Thiſtle; on high paſtures.

Carduus

Carduus helenoides β Heterophyllus. Melancholy Thiſtle: in high paſtures; on Stratton heath, and on Newton St Faith's bogs.

Carex diviſa. Marſh Cyperus Graſs: in ſea marſhes.

——— dioica. Small Carex; in turfy boggy places.

——— inflata. Bottle Carex; in marſhes.

——— muricata. Leaſt prickly headed ſpiked Cyperus Graſs; on banks of ditches and lakes.

——— pilulifera. Round headed Carex; in wet paſtures and heaths.

——— pulicaris. Flea Carex; in ſlimy and turfy bogs.

Carum Carui. Caraways; in meadows and paſtures.

Caucalis daucoides. Fine leaved baſtard Parſley; in corn fields and barren places.

Ceraſtium arvenſe. Long leaved rough Chickweed with a large flower; in corn fields, ſandy meadows and paſtures.

——— ſemidecandrium. Leaſt Mouſe-ear Chickweed: on walls and in paſtures.

——— umbellatum. Umbelliferous Wild Pink; on old walls and banks about Norwich.

Chara flexilis. Smooth Chara; in the great water pit at Heydon; ——— hiſpida. Prickly Chara: } in ditches and ponds.

Chelidonium corniculatum. Red Celandine, or horned Poppy; ——— Glaucium. Yellow Celandine, or horned Poppy; } in ſandy corn fields, and ſandy ſea ſhores.

——— hybridum. Violet Celandine, or horned Poppy; in ſandy corn fields.

Chenopodium hybridum. Baſtard Gooſefoot; on rubbiſh and corn fields; near Oxburgh.

Chlora perfoliata. Yellow Centaury; in high meadows and paſtures: at Armingale.

Chryſoſplenium alternifolium. Alternate leaved Golden Saxifrage: in wet buſhy places and woods; by Poringland and Stoke in ſeveral places.

——— oppoſitifolium. Common Golden Saxifrage; in the ſame places.

Cicuta viroſa. Long-leaved Water Hemlock: at Heigham, and Newton St. Faith's bogs, and divers other places down the river leading to Yarmouth.

Cineraria paluſtris. Marſh Cineraria, or Flea bane: on Newton Saint Faith's bogs, in Acle marſh; on Ludham marſh; in the road from Norwich to Yarmouth, and at Caiſter.

Cochlearia Armoracia. Horſe Raddiſh: on rubbiſh and banks of ditches.

——— danica. Daniſh Scurvy graſs: on the ſea ſhore.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinquefoil; in muddy ponds and bogs.

Convallaria multiflora. Solomon's Seal; in woods.

Convolvulus Soldanella. Sea Bindweed or Scottiſh Scurvy graſs: on ſea ſhores.

Conyza ſquarroſa. Plowman's Spikenard: in mountainous meadows and paſtures and highways; about a mile beyond Buxton.

Crambe maritima. Sea Colewort: on ſandy ſea ſhores.

Cratægus torminalis. Wild Haw or Service; in woods and hedges.

Crepis fœtida. Stinking Hawkweed; in dry meadows and paſtures.

Cucubalus Otites. Spaniſh Campion or Catchfly; in the way from Barton mills to Brandon, from Brandon to Hilleſborough, and from Barton mills to Thetford.

Cuſcuta Europæa. Dodder, Hellweed, or Devil's guts; on heaths and corn fields.

Daphne Laureloa. Spurge Laurel; on Boteler's heath near Trowſe.

Dianthus Armeria. Deptford Pink: in Thompſon's Grove at Thorpe.

——— deltoides. Maiden Pink: at Clay, and in the way about half a mile from Hilleſborough towards Brandon.

——— prolifer. Childing Pink: in a cloſe on the bankſide overagainſt Hellsden Old hall about half a mile out of St. Auſtin's gate Norwich.

Dipſacus piloſus. Small Teaſel or Shepherd's rod; in watery places and hedges.

Droſera Anglica. Engliſh Sundew; on bogs.

——— longifolia. Long leaved Roſa ſolis, or Sundew; on bogs; on Newton Saint Faith's bogs, and on Muſhold heath by the ſpring.

Equiſetum hyemale. Rough Horſe-tail or Shave Graſs; in Armingale wood.

Erigeron acre. Blue flowered Sweet Fleabane; on barren and dry paſtures.

Eriophorum vaginatum. Mountain Cotton Graſs, or Hares tail ruſh; on wet heaths; near Lynne.

Eryſimum chitranthoides. Treacle Hedge Muſtard or Wormſeed; near Trowſe, plentifully, and elſewhere.

Frankenia lævis. Smooth Sea heath: on Clay beach, and at Lynne.

Fucus gelatinoſus. Sea ragged Staff or Jelly Fucus: on the beach at Clay.

Galeopſis tetrahit δ, A variety of the common hemp leaved Dead Nettle; in corn fields and margins of fields; in a ditch between Riſing Caſtle and the church.

Galium Anglicum. Leaſt Gooſe Graſs; on walls and in ſandy meadows.

Gentiana amarella. Autumnal Gentian: in dry paſtures.

——— campeſtris. Field Gentian; in mountainous paſtures.

——— pneumonanthe. Marſh Gentian, or Calathian Violet; in meadows about Stratton, and on Stratton heath.

Geranium columbinum. Long ſtalked Craneſbill; in corn fields, paſtures, and hedges.

——— rotundifolium. Doves foot Cranes bill: on walls, tiling, and paſtures of a ſandy ſoil.

——— ſylvaticum. Wood Cranesbill; in a wood at Lynn, and near Spixworth church five miles from Norwich.

Geum rivale. Water Avens; in the Oſier ground, at Thorpe and in Wolverton wood.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cudweed, or Cats foot; in dry mountainous paſtures: on Stratton heath.

Gnaphalium margaritaceum. American Cudweed; in gravel pits, on Muſhold heath.

——— ſylvaticum. Upright Cudweed; in ſandy woods and paſtures.

Helleborus fœtidus. Great Baſtard Black Hellebore, Bearsfoot, or Setterwort; between Stifkey and Wells, and at Brampton.

Hieracium murorum. French or Golden Lungwort; in woods, on walls and banks of fields.

Hieracium ſubaudum. Broad-leaved Buſhy Hawkweed; in woods and hedges.

——— umbellatum. Narrow-leaved buſhy Hawkweed; in dry woods and hedges.

Hypochæris glabra. Smooth Hawkweed; in mountainous paſtures: near Norwich.

Hippocrepis comoſa. Tufted Horſe-ſhoe Vetch: in meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil.

Hippophaë rhamnoides. Sallow Thorn, or Sea Buckthorn; on ſea ſhores at Yarmouth.

Hippuris vulgaris. Mares tail; on the bog near the bridge going to Coſteſſey.

Hottonia paluſtris. Water Violet; in ditches and ponds.

Hydnum auriſcalpium. Hydnum like an Ear Picker; near Norwich, in a ſmall plantation of Scotch Pines called Hardy grove.

Hyoſeris minima. Small Swines Succory; in ſandy meadows and corn fields; near Armingale wood near Norwich.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan or Park leaves; in woods and wet hedges.

——— Elodes. Marſh St. Peter's wort; in marſhes of a ſpongy and putrid ſoil.

——— montanum. Imperforate St. Johns' wort; in Thorp wood.

Hypnum ſcorpoides. Scorpion Hypnum; on turfy bogs; near Norwich.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſs; in gravelly places; in a fir cloſe, and elſewhere near Norwich.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in wet meadows and paſtures.

—— pulicaria. Small Fleabane; in places where water has been ſtagnant in the winter.

Iris foetidiſſima. Stinking Gladwyn; in hedges, ditches, and woody places.

Juncus ſylvaticus. Wood Hair graſs; in wet woods and woody places.

Lactuca viroſa. Strong ſcented wild Lettuce; in hedges and margins of fields.

Lathyrus Aphaca. Yellow Vetchling near Armingale.

——— paluſtris. Marſh Chickling Vetch; in wet meadows and paſtures; at Ranaugh near Norwich.

——— ſylveſtris. Narrow leaved Peaſe everlaſting; in woods and hedges.

Lepidium latifolium. Dittander or Pepperwort: in meadows and paſtures; on Sheringham cliffs at Clay.

——— ruderale. Narrow leaved Wild Creſs or Dittander; at Yarmouth, Lynne, and Clay.

Leonurus Cardiaca. Motherwort; in a lane between Lexham and Newton.

Linum perenne. Perennial Flax; between Swaffham and Downham.

——— Radiola. Leaſt Rupturewort, or Allſeed; on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

——— uſitatiſſimum. Flax; in corn fields.

Lithoſpermum officinale. Common Gromwell or Graymill; in the pits at Newton St. Faith's.

Littorella lacuſtris. Graſs leaved Plantain; on Newton St. Faith's bogs, and at Heydon.

Lolium temulentum. Annual Darnel Graſs; at Heydon among the corn.

Lycoperdon fornicatum. Turret Puff-ball; } in meadows and paſtures near Norwich.

——— ſtellatum. Star Puff-ball; }

Lycoperdon tuber. Solid Puff-ball or Trufles; in Lord Leiceſter's park at Holkham, plentifully.

Lycopodium clavatum. Common Club-moſs; } on Muſhold heath by the ſpring.

——— inundatum. Marſh Club-moſs; }

——— ſelago. Fir Club-moſs: on mountainous heaths.

Lyſimachia tenella. Purple money-wort; on Newton St. Faith's bogs.

Malva moſchata. Jagged-leaved Vervain Mallow; in meadows, paſtures, and hedges.

Marrubium vulgare. White Horehound; on rubbiſh and in highways.

Medicago arabica. Heart Trefoil or Clover; } on banks of fields and in highways frequent about Norwich.

——— falcata. Yellow Medick; }

——— falcata varietas. (Flor. Pur.) Yellow Medick with a purple flower; in the way ſide not far from Norwich.

——— ſativa. Lucern; in meadows and paſtures.

Melampyrum Arvenſe. Purple Cowwheat; in the corn on the right hand juſt before you come to Lytcham and between Norwich and Coſteſſey.

——— pratenſe. Meadow Cowwheat; in the meadows near St. Faith's.

Mentha gentilis. Red mint; }

——— Pulegium. Pennyroyal or Pudding Graſs; } in watery places, marſhes and ſtagnant waters.

——— rotundifolia. Round leaved Mint; }

——— ſylveſtris. Long leaved Horſe Mint; }

Mercurialis annua. French Mercury; on rubbiſh, walls, &c.

Myagrum ſativum. Gold of Pleaſure; in fields amongſt flax.

Myoſurus minimus. Mouſe-tail; in corn fields and gravelly meadows between Poringland and Brook and at St. Faith's Fairſtead.

Myrica Gale. Sweet willow Dutch Myrtle; on the boggy part of Derſingham heath, at Cotton, Caſtleriſing, and Woodbaſtic.

Narciſſus poeticus. Pale Daffodil; in upland paſtures: between Ranaugh and Salehouſe.

Narthecium oſſifragum. Lancaſhire Aſphodel or Baſtard Aſphodel; in marſhy and buſhy places: at Derſingham and near Lynn.

Nymphæa alba. White water Lily; in lakes and ſlow rivers.

Œnanthe pimpinelloides. Parſley water Dropwort; in ditches and lakes at Cley and Yarmouth.

Ononis repens. Creeping Reſt Harrow; at Yarmouth.

Ophioglosſum vulgatum. Adders Tongue; in a cloſe near Bixley church.

Ophrys anthopophora. Green Man Orchis; amongſt chalk pits: at Bracon Aſh and Facolneſtone.

——— apifera. Bee Orchis; in dry meadows and paſtures: in a field near Newell in abundance.

——— lilifolia. Dwarf Orchis; in marſhes: near Norwich.

——— muſcifera. Fly Orchis; in fields near Norwich.

——— Nidus Avis. Bird's neſt; in woods and ſhady places: at Heydon.

——— paludoſa. Leaſt Orchis; on Felthorp bogs: near Norwich.

Ophrys ſpiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; on Coſteſſy common and Muſhold heath.

Orchis pyramidalis. Purple late flowering Orchis; in dry and chalky meadows.

Ornithogalum umbellatum. Common Star of Bethlehem; in woods, meadows, and paſtures.

Orobanche ramoſa. Branched Broomrape; in corn fields: a ſingle plant was once found near North Reps church by Cromer.

Oſmunda lunaria. Moonwort; on Muſhold heath.

—— regalis. Oſmund Royal; on Derſingham heath.

Panicum viride. Green Panic Graſs; in corn fields.

Papaver hybridum. Rough round headed poppy; juſt out of St. Benedict's gate at Norwich.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, One berry, or Truelove; in Blackwell and Piſmill woods, and in Rackheath highwood near Norwich.

Parnaſſia Paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; on St. Faith's Newton bogs, and elſewhere.

Peucedanum ſilaus. Meadow Sulphurwort; in wet meadows and paſtures.

Phalaris arenaria. Sea Canary Graſs; on quick ſands near the ſea.

Phallus impudicus. Stinking Morel; in woods and hedges: in the ſand about Holkham, plentifully.

Pilularia globulifera. Pepper Graſs; on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Butterwort or Yorkſhire Sanicle; on Paulin heath near the mill and on Coſteſſey common.

Plantago maritima. Sea Plantain; on the ſea coaſt.

—— coronopus γ. The graſs-leaved plantain with round heads; on the bank of the river near Yarmouth between the town and the pier.

Poa anguſtifolia. Narrow leaved Meadow Graſs; in woods and hedges.

Polygonum Biſtorta. Greater Biſtort or Snakeweed; in wet meadows.

——— Hydropiper. Water Pepper or Arſemart; in wet places, rivers, &c.

——— Hydropiper β minus. Small creeping Arſemart; in wet places and rivers.

Polypodium Thelypteris. Marſh Fern; in Ranaugh meadows and on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

Potamogeton compreſſum. Small branched pondweed; in rivers.

———— marinum. Sea Pondweed; in ditches near the ſea.

———— puſillum. Small graſs leaved Pondweed; in ditches and ponds.

Potentilla argentea. Tormentil Cinquefoil; in meadows and paſtures of a gravelly ſoil.

Primula vulgaris β. Great Cowſlip or Oxlip, in meadows and paſtures; at Lexham.

Prunus padus. Wild Cluſter cherry or Bird cherry; in woods and hedges.

Ranunculus lingua. Great Spearwort; in wet meadows: frequently in the broads down the rivers.

——— parviflorus. Small flowered Crowfoot; in meadows and corn fields of a gravelly ſoil: between St. Giles and St. Stephen's gate, Norwich.

Reſeda lutea. Baſe Rocket; in corn fields, meadows and paſtures eſpecially chalk.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants or Squincey berries; at Coſteſſey and at Horsford.

Roſa villoſa β. A variety of Apple Roſe; in mountainous places.

Rubus Idæus. Raſpberry buſh, Framboiſe or Hindberry; in woods and hedges.

Rumex maritimus. Golden Dock; in roads and on rubbiſh.

—— pulcher. Fiddle Dock; in ways and dry meadows.

Ruppia maritima. Sea Graſs; on ſea ſhores.

Salix purpurea. Roſe Willow; in watery places.

—— triandra. Smooth Willow; in woods and hedges and banks of rivers.

—— vitellina. Yellow Willow; in oſier grounds.

Salſola fruticoſa. Shrubby Stonecrop or Saltwort; } on ſea ——— Kali. Prickly Saltwort; } ſhores.

Salvia pratenſis. Meadow Clary; in Horsford meadow.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder, Danewort; in hedges and ſides of ditches: by Caiſter near Norwich.

Samolus valerandi. Round leaved Water Pimpernel; in wet places: on St. Faith's Newton bogs and between Earlham bridge and Colney.

Saponaria officinalis. Soapwort; in hedges.

Scabioſa columbaria. Leſſer field Scabious; in mountainous paſtures.

Schœnus albus. White flowered Ruſh Graſs; in marſhes: on Cawſton decoy near Heydon.

——— compreſſus. Compreſſed Baſtard Cyperus; in turfy watery marſhes: at Ditchingham and Heydon.

——— mariſcus. Prickly Bog-ruſh or Baſtard Cyperus; in lakes: on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

Scirpus fluitans. Floating Clubruſh; in ditches and pools.

——— maritimus. Long Rocket or Baſtard Cyperus; on ſea ſhores and banks of rivers.

——— ſetaceus. Leaſt Ruſh; in wet ſandy places.

——— ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus Graſs; in watery places and wet woods.

Sedum Anglicum. Engliſh Stonecrop; on ſtony ſandy rocky places.

——— paludoſus. Marſh Ragwort or Bird's Tongue; in marſhy places: at Binham near Wells.

Senecio viſcoſus β ſylvaticus. Mountain Groundſel; in woods, hedges, and heaths.

Serapias latifolia. Broad leaved Baſtard Hellebore; in woods and hedges.

——— latifolia β. A variety of the laſt; in woods and hedges.

——— latifolia γ paluſtris. Marſh Baſtard Hellebore; on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

Silene amœna. Sea Campion; on the ſea ſhores.

——- anglica. Small Corn Catchfly or Campion; in cornfields about half a mile without St. Giles' gate, Norwich.

——- noctiflora. Night flowering Catchfly; in corn fields about Norwich and in the roads to Rawburgh.

Siſon inundatum. Leaſt Water Parſnep; in ditches and roads, and where water is ſtagnated.

——ſegetum. Corn Parſley or Honewort; in cornfields and hedges of a clay wet ſoil.

Sium latifolium. Great Water Parſnep; in rivers, marſhes, and watery places.

Siſymbrium ſylveſtre. Water Rocket; in marſhes and watery places, eſpecially chalk.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; near Norwich frequent; as on Boteler's hill, at Carrow abbey, and in the hedges going to Thorp.

Sparganium ſimplex β natans. Leaſt Bur-reed; in ponds and ſlow rivers: near Heydon and about Norwich.

Spergula nodoſa. Knotted Spurrey or Engliſh Marſh Saxifrage; on Coſteſſey common.

Spiræa Filipendula. Dropwort; in mountainous meadows and paſtures.

Statice Armeria. Thrift or Sea Gilly Flower; in ſea meadows.

——— reticulata. Matted Thrift or Sea Lavender; on the ſea ſhores at Wells.

Stratiotes aloides. Water Aloe or freſh Water Soldier; in ſlow rivers and lakes: in moſt of the broads down the two rivers leading to Yarmouth and at Acle.

Teucrium Chamædrys. Germander; on ruins: on the walls of Norwich.

Thaliſtrum minus. Leſſer Meadow Rue; in wet mountainous paſtures; on Swaffham heath.

Thlaſpi arvenſe. Treacle Muſtard or Pennycreſs; in cornfields.

Tillœa muſcoſa. Procumbent Tillæa; on Drayton heath and ſeveral other places about Norwich, on Muſhold heath.

Trifolium alpeſtre. Perennial Trefoil or Marle Graſs; in mountainous meadows and paſtures.

——— filiforme. Small Trefoil; in ſandy meadows and paſtures.

——— fragiferum. Strawberry Trefoil; in wet meadows and paſtures.

——— glomeratum. Round-headed Trefoil; in ſandy meadows and paſtures: about Norwich.

——— ochroleucum. Yellow flowered Trefoil; in dry meadows and paſtures.

——— ornithopodioides. Bird's foot Trefoil; in ſandy meadows and paſtures: on Muſhold heath near Norwich.

Trifolium ſcabrum. Oval-headed Trefoil; on chalk hills.

——— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil; in barren paſtures.

Triglochin paluſtre. Arrow-headed Graſs; on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

Triticum caninum. Bearded Wheat Graſs; in woods and hedges.

——— junceum. Sea Wheat Graſs; on ſea ſhores.

Turritis glabra. Great Tower Muſtard; in gravelly meadows: in Thompſon's grove near Norwich, and in the road to Yarmouth.

——— glabra β. A variety of the laſt; in the hedges in the road from Norwich to Yarmouth.

——— hirſuta. Hairy Tower Muſtard; on rocks, old walls, &c. frequent about Norwich.

Vaccinium Myrtillus. Black Whorts, Whortle berries, or Bill berries; by the wind-mill on Paulin heath.

——— oxycoccos. Cranberries, Moorberries, or Moſsberries; on Derſingham moor and Cauſton heath.

Valeriana rubra. Red Valerian; on old walls and rubbiſh.

Verbaſcum Blattaria. Yellow Moth Mullein; in gravelly paſtures; at Heydon.

——— lychnitis. Hoary Mullein or White flowered Mullein; in ſandy chalky places: on a heath between Hillington and Houghton.

——— lychnitis β (flore luteo). Hoary Mullein with a yellow flower; about Norwich, Bircham, and elſewhere.

——— nigrum. Sage-leaved Black Mullein; in highways: at Hellſden.

Veronica montana. Stalked Speedwell; in wet woods and hedges: in Armingale wood.

——— ſcutellata. Narrow-leaved Water Speedwell; on St. Faith's Newton bogs.

——— triphyllos. Trifid Speedwell; in ſandy cornfields: at Rowton between the town and the highway twelve miles before you come to Norwich.

Vicia Lathyroides γ. Spring Tare; in the road to Caiſter a little beyond Lakenham.

Vinca minor. Periwinckle; on way ſides a little way out of Magdalen gate and in a grove at Thorp.

——— major. Greater Periwinckle; in woods and hedges: a little beyond Hetherſet.

Urtica pilulifera. Roman Nettle; on rubbiſh: at Yarmouth, plentifully.

Utricularia minor. Leſſer hooded Milfoil; in ſlimy ditches: on St. Faith's Newton bogs, and on Caiſter heath near the decoy.

——— vulgaris. Common hooded Milfoil; in ſtagnant waters: on Coſteſſy common, and on Poringland heath.

A

MAP

of

CAMBRIDGESHIRE

from the best

AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Lucy.

HUNTINGDON SHIRE

BEDFORDSHI.

HARTFORDSHI.

ESSEX

NORFOLK

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS

1 Wisbich
2 Wichford
3 Ely
4 Stapleho
5 Cheveley
6 Radfield
7 Staine
8 Northstow
9 Chesterton
10 Papworth
11 Southstow
12 Wetherley
13 Armingford
14 Flendish
15 Triplow
16 Witlesford
17 Chilford

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

5 East Longitude 10 from London 15

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

INLAND lies the county of Cambridge, in Saxon Gpentbpiggrcyne. Its greateſt length is to the north, and it borders on Norfolk and Suffolk to the eaſt; on the ſouth it has Eſſex and Hertfordſhire; on the weſt Bedford and Huntingdonſhires; on the north Lincolnſhire, and the river Ouſe, which croſſing it from eaſt to weſt divides it into two parts.

The lower and ſouthernmoſt part is moſt improved and cultivated, and conſequently pleaſanter, not one continued plain, but moderately level, for the moſt part if not all (except where it produces large crops of ſaffron) laid out in corn fields yielding plenty of excellent barley, which being ſteept till it is ready to ſprout, and dried in kilns, is made into large quantities of byne, or as we call it malt, which is uſed for brewing beer; of which the inhabitants make a conſiderable profit by ſelling it in the neighbouring counties. The farther and northernmoſt part which by the frequent overflowing of the rivers is marſhy and divided into iſlands, is called the Iſle of Ely, diverſified with rich paſtures, but the ſoil marſhy and ſpungy from the water which undermines and ſometimes overflows it.

One of the Roman conſular ways, called in the book of Ely Ermingſtreet, paſſes on the weſt ſide of the lower part leading ſtrait to Huntingdon, through Roiſton, on the edge of the county, a well known town, but of modern date, already deſcribed; and through Caxton, antiently the barony of Stephen d'Eſchallers, from whoſe deſcendants it paſſed t. Henry III. to the Frevilles, and from them by the Burgoyns to the Jermyns. Nor is Gamlinghay far from hence, where lived the Avenells, whoſe eſtate came by marriage to the antient family of St. George, of which many knights flouriſhed from the time of Henry I. at Hatley, which from them has the additional name of St. George.

More to the weſt this part is divided by a rivulet, which riſing at Aſhwell winds from ſouth to north to join the Ouſe by Shengay (where are ſome of the beſt meadow grounds in the county) formerly a preceptory of Knights Templars, given them 1130 by Sibilla daughter of Roger de Montgomery earl of Shrewſbury and wife of J. de Raines. Not far from hence is Burne caſtle, formerly the barony of Picott, ſheriff of this county, and of the Peverells, by one of whoſe daughters the eſtate and honours came to Gilbert Peche, the laſt of whoſe family when he had provided for the children of his ſecond wife, left king Edward I. his heir. For at that time the Engliſh nobility revived the practice of the Romans under their emperors of making the ſovereigns their heirs whenever they had incurred their diſpleaſure. This caſtle was burnt in the barons' wars under Henry III. by Ribald de Liſle, when Walter de Cotenham, a great nobleman, was hanged for rebellion. The name of this river is diſputed among writers; ſome ſuppoſe it Grant, others Cam. I cannot help preferring the latter opinion, both on account of its winding courſe which is implied in the Britiſh word Cam (and hence a winding river in Cornwall is called Camel) and becauſe the antient town of CAMBORITUM, mentioned by Antoninus in his third Iter, appears to have ſtood on it by the diſtance, name, and the Roman coins found in great quantities near the bridge here. For Camboritum ſignifies the ford at the Cam or the winding ford: Rith[a] being among our Britiſh anceſtors a ford, which I the rather mention that the French may ſee the meaning of Auguſtoritum, Darioritum, Rithomagus, &c. among them. Our Saxon anceſtors choſe rather to call Camboritum Gpant-ceaptep and Gpont-ceaptep, which name it ſtill retains, though I have not been able to trace its etymology. It would perhaps be wrong to derive it from Gpon[b], a Saxon word for a marſh: yet Aſſer repeatedly calls marſhes in Somerſetſhire by a Saxon-Latin word Gronnas paludoſiſſimas, and it is well known a city of Weſt Friſland, ſituated in a marſh, is called Groningen. But let others determine the etymology of this name. This place about the year 700 was, according to Bede[c], "a deſolate little "city, where," he ſays, "near the walls was found "a beautiful coffin of white marble with a cover of "the ſame materials." At preſent it is a little village, part of which Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, gave to his baſe ſon Henry, on condition that his poſterity (who have long ſince been extinct) ſhould bear the name of Henry: the other part king Henry VI. of the houſe of Lancaſter, to whom the eſtate of earl Lacy devolved, gave to his royal college at Cambridge, which town was either part of old Camboritum, or roſe out of its ruins, being ſo near it both in name and ſituation. Nor can I believe Cam derived from Grant, it being too forced a derivation, in which all the letters but one are loſt. I ſhould rather think the common people retain the antient name of Camboritum or the river Cam, though writers often uſe the Saxon name Grantbridge[d]. This city, which is the ſecond univerſity, the ſecond eye, and the ſecond ſupport of England, famous for being the magazine of religion and learning, is ſituated on the Cam, which after ſporting among the iſlands it has formed on its weſt ſide, turns eaſt, and divides the town into two parts, united by a bridge, whence the modern name of Cambridge aroſe. Beyond the bridge is a large old caſtle, which ſeems to have laſted its time, and the college of St. Mary Magdalen. On this ſide the bridge (where

Grant or Cam river.

CAMBORITUM. Of this ſee Eſſex.

Grandcheſter.

Cambridge.

[a] Lluyd in his map calls the river Rhie. As Iſurium ſo Cam-Ritum, Cambo-ritum. MS. n. G.

[b] There is no ſuch word as Gpon in the Saxon dictionary, but Lye cites Cædmon, &c. as uſing Gpunb for a deep place or abyſs; but Groa, Gronna, Grunna, are uſed by writers, Sim. Dun. 1040. Hoved. 251. b. Flor. Wig. 402. Aſſer. p. 30. 60. Flor. Wig. 592. ap. Du Cange in vocib.

[c] H. Ec. IV. 19.

[d] Gnantanbpycge, Gnantabpicge, and Gpantebpige. Uſſer ſuppoſes it Ninnius' Cair Granth, or Grant. G. Grantbridge, Domeſd.

lies the largeſt part of the town) it makes an handſome appearance by the diſpoſition of the ſtreets, the number of the churches, and 16 beautiful reſidences of the Muſes or colleges, in which many learned men are ſupported, and the knowledge of arts and languages flouriſhes in ſuch a manner, that theſe may be accounted the fountains of religion and learning, which diffuſe their ſalutary ſtreams through the gardens of the church and ſtate. Nor is any requiſite of a moſt flouriſhing univerſity wanting here except that the marſhineſs of the ſituation renders the air leſs wholeſome. But perhaps thoſe that founded the Univerſity in ſuch a place had a regard to Plato's opinion, who, enjoying an excellent ſtate of health himſelf, pitched upon an unhealthy part of Attica for an academy, that the bad air of the place might check the redundant humours of the body which would otherwiſe oppreſs the mind. However our prudent anceſtors were certainly directed by Heaven in their choice of this ſpot for the purpoſes of ſtudy, and for erecting ſuch fine buildings here.

Colleges. That I may not ſeem ungrateful to thoſe liberal patrons of literature, or, to uſe the words of Eumenius[e], thoſe parents of our children, I ſhall give from the hiſtory of Cambridge, a ſhort account of them and the colleges they conſecrated to the improvement of learning. Cantaber the Spaniard is ſaid to have firſt founded this univerſity 375 years before Chriſt, and Sigebert king of the Eaſt Angles to have reſtored it[f]. Being ruined in the Daniſh invaſion it lay long neglected till the proſpect began to clear under the Norman government. Houſes of learning, inns, and halls for ſcholars were now founded, but without endowments. The firſt college (Peter houſe) was built and endowed by Hugo de Balſham biſhop of Ely 1284; in imitation of whom Richard Badew aſſiſted by Elizabeth Clare counteſs of Ulſter 1340 founded Clare hall. Mary de St. Paul counteſs of Pembroke Pembroke hall 1347, and the brethren of Corpus Chriſti gild Corpus Chriſti college 1346, called alſo St. Benedict's college. William Bateman biſhop of Norwich founded Trinity hall about 1353. Edmund Gonville 1348 and John Cay the phyſician in our time Gonville and Caius college. Henry VI. king of England King's college 1441, to which he added a chapel deſervedly ranked among the fineſt buildings in the world. Margaret of Anjou his conſort Queen's college 1448. Robert Woodlark Catharine hall 1459. John Alcock biſhop of Ely Jeſus college 1497. Margaret of Richmond mother of Henry VII. Chriſt's college and St. John's about 1506, the latter ſo greatly enlarged with buildings. Thomas Audley chancellor of England built Magdalen college 1542, which Chriſtopher Wray chief juſtice of England lately enlarged and endowed, and the moſt potent prince Henry VIII. formed Trinity college 1546 out of three others, viz. St. Michael's college founded by Hervey de Stanton t. Edward II. King's college, founded by Edward III. and Fiſhwick's hotel. To make this a pleaſant retreat for the Muſes it has been lately repaired, or rather new built in a magnificent manner by the care of Thomas Neville, the worthy maſter of the ſaid college, and dean of Canterbury, ſo that it may vie with any college in Chriſtendom for extent and beauty; and he may be pronounced μεγαλοπρεπης, magnificent, in the opinion even of the greateſt philoſophers, for his liberalities both of a public and private nature. To the honour of the preſent age the right honourable and diſcreet ſir Walter Mildmay, knight of the garter, and privy counſellor to queen Elizabeth, founded a new college in honour of Emanuel; and Frances Sidney counteſs of Suſſex left by will £. 5000. to build a college called Sidney-Suſſex, which is now finiſhed.

I omit the ſmaller religious houſes and fraternities as of leſs note, except Barnwell, which Payne Peverell, a famous warrior, and ſtandard bearer to Robert duke of Normandy in the holy war under Henry I. removed hither from St. Giles' church, where Picot the ſheriff had placed canons, and ſettled 30 monks, he being then 30 years old. Take the origin of the name from the private hiſtory of the place.* "Payne Peverell obtained of Henry I. a certain ſpot without the town of Cambridge, in the middle whereof were certain pure limpid ſprings, called at that time by the Engliſh Barnewell, the children's well, becauſe once a year on St, John's eve the children and youths reſorted thither according to Engliſh cuſtom to amuſe themſelves with wreſtling and other youthful ſports, and with ſongs and muſic. From this reſort of boys and girls ſporting here it became a cuſtom for traders to reſort to the ſame place on the ſame day to ſell their wares."

Barnw

Cambridge, though ſacred to the Muſes, did not eſcape the ravages of war. When the Danes overran the country they frequently wintered here, and about A. D. 1010 when Suene the Dane oppreſſed the nation with the moſt cruel tyranny, he paid no attention to the fame of this place or the Muſes, (though we read that Sylla had ſo much reſpect for Athens) but all was miſerably laid waſte by fire. In the early Norman times it was tolerably populous; for we find in the Conqueror's ſurvey[g] that "the burgh of Grentbridge was divided into ten wards[h], and contained 387 houſes, but eighteen were pulled down to build the caſtle," when William I. thought fit to erect caſtles everywhere to ſerve as curbs to his new conquered Engliſh ſubjects. In the barons war the proſcribed barons from Ely did it much miſchief, to check whoſe ravages Henry III. ordered that deep ditch on the eaſt ſide of the town to be made, which is ſtill called King's ditch. Some may here expect that I ſhould give my opinion of the antiquity of this univerſity: but I ſhall not interfere, nor am I inclined to attempt a compariſon between our flouriſhing univerſities whoſe equals I know not. I fear, however, they build caſtles in the air who carry back its antiquity beyond the bounds of truth to Cantaber preſently after the foundation of Rome, and many years before the Chriſtian æra. This is certain, whenever it was founded, it began again about the time of Henry I. to be the ſeat of literature. We have this account in the old appendix to Ingulphus by Petrus Bleſenſis. "Abbot Joffrid[i] ſent to his "manor of Cotenham near Cambridge, Giſlebert his "fellow monk and profeſſor of Divinity, with three "other monks who had followed him into England, "and were well verſed in philoſophical learning and "other antient ſciences, and going every day to Cam-"bridge hired there a public barn, where making pro-"feſſion of their ſciences, they ſoon drew after them a "great number of ſcholars. The ſecond year of their

* Hiſtoria Barnwellenſis.

[e] Orat. pro reſtaur. ſcholis c. 5.
[f] Salm. Surv. p. 202 ſays A. D. 636 or 638.
[g] fol. 189. The total of the houſes in the 10 wards amount to 373, and the houſes deſtroyed for the caſtle 27.
[h] cuſtodiæ.
[i] He was abbot of Croyland 1109—1124.

"coming the number was so increased as well from all "parts of the country as from the town, that the largest "house, barn, or church would not contain them. "They therefore separated to different parts of the "town on the plan of the University of Orleans. "Early in the morning brother Odo a singular gramma-"rian and satyrist read to the boys and youths under "his care grammar according to Priscian's rules with "Remigius' commentary on him. At one o'clock Ter-"ric a most acute sophist gave lectures to youths in "Aristotle's logic according to the introductions and "commentations of Porphyry and Averroes. At three "o'clock Friar William read Tully's rhetoric and "Quinctilian's institutes, and master Gislebert preached "to the people every Sunday and holiday. This small "spring which increased to a great river, we now see "making glad the city of God, and rendering all "England fruitful by many masters and teachers going "forth from Cambridge as from Paradise," &c. Robert de Remington [k] will inform you when it was made an University. "In the reign of Edward I. says he, Grantbridge from a place of study [l] was made an University like Oxford, by the court of Rome." But why do I enter these lists in which two learned old men [m] have already encountered each other, to whom I freely yeild my arms, deferring with all possible respect to such great names. The longitude of Cambridge is 23° 15″ west, and its latitude 52° 11″ [n]

Near to Cambridge to the south-east are high hills called by the students Gogmagog hills; by Henry of Huntingdon "the pleasant hills of Balsham [o]" from the village below, where, as he says, the Danes left nothing on which they had not exercised their horrid cruelties. On the top of these hills I saw a large fortification triple trenched, and at that time certainly impregnable (in the opinion of those who understand the art of war) but for the want of water. Some think it was a summer station of the Romans or Danes. Gervase of Tilbury seems to call it Vandlebury. "Below Cambridge, says he, was a place called Vandlebury, from the Vandals, who made a camp here when they ravaged part of Britain, and cruelly massacred the Christians. The plain where they pitched their tents on the top of the little hill is trenched round having only one entrance." What he adds of the ghost of a warrior seen here I omit as an idle story of the ignorant vulgar: not professing as he [p] does to insert tales and tickle the ear. In the valley under these hills is Salston which passed from the Burghs of Burgh Green by Walter Delapole and the Inglethorps to John Neville marquis Montacute, and by his daughter and heiress to the Hudlestons, who were eminent here. More east we have first Hildersham, once the seat of the Bustlers, now by marriage, of the Paris's; next among the woods Horsheath, long time the property of the antient and famous families of the Argentons and Allingtons, of which elsewhere, and still the residence of the latter. Castle Camps, the antient seat of the Veres earls of Oxford is not far off; it belonged to Hugh de Vere as the inquisition says on "condition he should be cham-berlain to the king," yet it is very certain that Henry I. king of England made the grant to Aubrey de Vere in these words; "the chief chamberlainship "of all England in fee and inheritance, with all dig-"nities, liberties, and honours thereto belonging, "as freely and honourably as Robert Mallet held "it," &c. Notwithstanding which our kings have appointed different persons to this office at their pleasure. Not far from hence are those large and long ditches which it appears the East Angles made to keep off the Mercians, who, by their sudden in-roads, used to lay the country waste in a most cruel manner. The first begins at Hinkston, and runs east through Hilderstham to Horsheath above five miles. The second near it is called Brentditch, and runs from Melborne through Fulmer. But I stop here, intending presently to treat of these trenches.

Great Chamberlain of England.

Flemdike and other ditches.

Below Cambridge to the east near the little river Sture, every year in the month of September is held the most famous fair in all England, whether in respect to the resort of people, or the quantity of goods. The road near it formerly rugged and troublesome to travellers was raised with a fine causeway for about three miles towards Newmarket by that excellent worthy man William [q] Hervey, Doctor of Laws, and master of Trinity hall, at a great expence; but with a most useful and laudable intention.

Sturbridge fair.

At the end of this causeway appears the third antient ditch beginning at the east bank of the Cam, and passing strait through Fen Ditton, or more properly Dichton from the ditch, between Great Wilburham and Fulburn to Balsham. This is now commonly called seven miles dike because at that distance from Newmarket, antiently Fleamdyke, or the ditch of flight, probably from some remarkable rout here. At Wilberham, antiently Welburgham, lived the barons de Lisle de Rougemont of antient rank, of whom John for his valor was admitted among the knights of the Garter at the first institution of the order by Edward III. The male heir of the family Edmund de Lisle is still living lord of the place, venerable for his age, and blest with a numerous issue.

Fen Ditton.

Fleamdyke.

Wilburgham.

Further east five miles inland is the fourth line or ditch, the largest of all, with its vallum, which the common people viewing with wonder as the work of devils rather than of men have called Devil's dyke; others Rechdyke from the little market town of Rech where it begins. This must be that of which Abbo Floriacensis describing the east part of England says, "On the west the county joins to the rest of the island, and is accessible: but, to prevent the frequent inroads of the enemy, is fortified with a bank like a high wall and a ditch." It crosses for many miles the plain called Newmarket heath, a place much exposed to invasions, begins at Rech, above which the country is marshy and impassable, and ends near Cowledge [r], where the roads are obstructed with woods. It was the boundary both of the kingdom and bishoprick of the East Angles. Who was the author of this great work is uncertain; later writers refer it to Canute the Danish king, though it is mentioned by Abbo who died before Canute† was master of England, and the Saxon Chronicle treating of Rech.

† Abbo died 1003. Canute began his reign 1018. Sigebert.

[k] His "History of England," by some ascribed to Peter de Ickham, and cited by Caius, Antiq. Cant. p. 61. is in the Bodleian Library, 2 MSS. Tan. B. 8. 621.

[l] Studium.

[m] John and Thomas Caius. The latter, master of University college, Oxford, took occasion from the Cambridge public Orator's speech in favour of the greater antiquity to set up that of Oxford, and was answered by the former, master of Caius college. The controversy was carried on in two or three tracts on each side. See Brit. Top. I. p. 211—213.

[n] 17″ G.

[o] VI. 207. per montana amœnissima loci delectabilis qui vocatur Valesham. al. Belesham. He adds, the tower of the church was standing in his time, from whose top a single man defended himself against the Danes.

[p] ut ille ait. C. A certain author. G.

[q] Henry. G.

[r] Catlidge.

the rebellion of Athelwolph* against Edward the elder calls it simply the Dyke, and says that king Edward ravaged all the country between the Dykes[s] and the river Ouse to the north fen, and that Ethelwold the rebel and Eohric the Dane were slain there. But the writers after Canute's time call it St. Edmund's boundary and St. Edmund's Ditch, and imagine Canute made it, because of the high veneration he had for St. Edmund the Martyr, and in order to expiate the horrid cruelty of his father Suene to that prince[t], granted large privileges to the places sacred to him as far as this ditch. Whence Malmesbury in his lives of bishops[u] says, "the tax gatherers, who are "generally an imposing set of men without regard to "right or wrong, on the other side of St. Edmund's "ditch stop all process in a very humble manner." And it appears that the two last trenches were afterwards called St. Edmund's ditches: for Matthew of Westminster says[x] that "the war with Ethelwolph "was terminated between St. Edmund's ditches."

Burwell. Near Reech is Burwell, where was antiently a castle, which in the confusions of Stephen's reign was vigorously attacked by Geoffrey de Magnaville earl of Essex (who lost much reputation by unjust invading of other men's property), till he was wounded in the head by an arrow, and this country delivered from the fear they had long had of him.

Lanbeath. Scarce a mile from hence is Lanbeath, where the knightly family of the Cottons have for many years resided: and not far from that is Isleham. Isleham, formerly the estate of the Bernards, which by marriage came to the knightly family of the Peitons, who, as appears by their arms are descended from the male line of the Uffords (from which also came the Ussords earls of Suffolk), though they took their name according to the custom of the times from the little town of Peiton in Suffolk where they had long been settled.

Kirtling, or Catlidge, Barons North. On the same ditch is Kirtling, called also Catlidge, now famous for the principal seat of the barons North, the first of whom, Edward North, had the title conferred on him for his prudence by queen Mary. It

A. D. 977. was antiently remarkable for a council held here during the furious contests about Easter.

The Fens and isle of Ely. The upper and north part of this county is all divided into river islands, and intersected by innumerable ditches, canals and drains as by so many lines. It affords an agreable verdure to the eye in summer, but in winter is covered with water farther than the eye can reach, and looks like a sea.

Girvii. The inhabitants of this and the other fens reaching from the borders of Suffolk to Wainfleet in Lincolnshire for 68 miles, and comprehending many thousand acres in the four counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, and Lincoln, were called in the Saxon times Girvii, i. e. as some interpret it Fenmen, a set of people rough and uncultivated as the soil itself, envious of others whom they called Upland-men, devoted to feeding of cattle, fishing and fowling, and usually marching about on a sort of stilts like giants. The country in winter, and sometimes for the greatest part of the year, is covered by the water of the Ouse, Grant, Nen, Welland, Glen, and Witham, for want of sufficient outlets; but when the waters return to their beds is so luxurious with long grass and rank hay called Lid[y], that when the Ly. inhabitants have cut down as much or more than they want, they set fire to the rest in November to make it grow stronger: at this time the blazing marshes make an extraordinary appearance. This tract abounds likewise with turf and sedge for firing, reeds for thatching, alders and other aquatic trees, especially willows, which the soil particularly suits, and which are planted as a fence against floods, and being often lopt are of singular service by their numerous shoots, or, as Pliny[z] calls them, offspring. Of these both here and in other places are made baskets, of which I suppose Martial, if I understand him right, speaks in his Apophoreta[a],

Barbara de pictis veni Bascauda Britannis,
Sed me jam mavult dicere Roma suam.

From painted Britain I a basket come,
Imported and adopted here at Rome.

Scordium, or Trissago palustris, Water Germander, grows plentifully on the banks of the ditches. Fœlix[b], an antient writer, gives this account of these fens: "There is a prodigious fen beginning from the "banks of the Roman Gronta, extending a great "way, intersected sometimes by sedge, sometimes "with streams of black water, with woody islands, and "crooked banks from the south to the north as far "as the sea." William[c] monk of Crowland describes the same in these lines of his life of Guthlac:

Est apud Angligenas a Grontæ flumine longo
Orbe per anfractus stagnosos & fluviales
Circumfusa palus, orientalisque propinqua
Littoribus pelagi sese distendit ab Austro
In longum versus Aquilone gurgite tetro,
Morbosos pisces vegetans & arundine densa,
Ventorum strepitus quasi quædam verba susurrans.

In England from the Roman Gronta's banks
Spreads a long fen in winding cuts and cranks;
Stretcht to the limits of the Eastern sea,
From south to north it makes its lengthned way.
Infectious fish, thick reeds and rustling winds,
That whispers feign, are all that here one finds.

To these may be added Henry of Huntingdon's account of it[d]: "This fenny country is very plea-"sant and agreeable to the eye, watered by many "rivers which run through it, diversified with many "large and small lakes, and adorned with many "woods and islands." To crown all, take this short passage from Malmsbury[e]: "Here is such plenty of "fish as to cause astonishment in strangers, while the "natives laugh at their surprize. Water fowl are "as plentiful; so that five persons may not only as-"suage their hunger with both sorts of food, but eat "to satiety for a penny[f]."

I shall not stay to recount the various proposals and debates in parliament concerning the draining these fens, which perhaps had private gain in view, only under the specious pretence of public utility.

* A. D. 905.

[s] Ditches; betpeoh bicum ⁊ Foxan, A. D. 905, p. 101. The Cambridge MS. has bicon. Hunting. p. 202. Inter Dicum (al. Dacum) & Usam.

[t] i. e. to the abbey founded in his honour, which Suene plundered 1014, and afterwards died a painful death, exclaiming that St. Edmund slew him.

[u] II. p. 136. b. [x] 352. A. D. 902. inter duo fossata Sancti Edmundi. [y] Lið, tener, mollis.

[z] Cæsæque densius innumero hærede prosint. N. H. xvi. 37. [a] Epig. XIV. 99.

[b] Fœlix lived at Croyland about 730, and wrote the life of the patron saint. MS. Cott. Nero. E. I. 44. MS. CCC. G. 2. and W. 3. printed by Surius and Mabillon. Sæc. Bened. III. I. 263. also the acts of the abbots of Croyland. Tan. 276.

[c] Not in Tanner. [d] V. 204. [e] de pontif. III. 167. [f] halfpenny, de uno asse.

But

But it is to be feared they will notwithſtanding all endeavours return to their original ſtate, as has often happened in draining the Pontine marſhes in Italy. So that ſome think the advice of the Oracle on a like occaſion the beſt, Not to interfere with the appointments of Providence.

The natural ſecurity of this place and the plenty of proviſion to be found here, occaſioned its being made a retreat not only by the Engliſh who roſe againſt the Conqueror, but the barons whenever they were proſcribed, who from hence moleſted our princes, but always with ill ſucceſs, though they had fortified the moſt acceſſible parts of the iſland at Erysh and Aldred now Audrè. There is ſtill to be ſeen at Audrè a military work, not very high but broad, called Belſars hills from ſomebody of the name of Belſar as is pretended.

The more ſouthern and largeſt part of this fenny track within this county is called is Saxon Elig, now the Iſle of Ely, from the principal iſland. Bede derives the name from Eel, whence ſome have called it Eely iſland. Polydore Vergil, from the Greek Ελος, which ſignifies a Marſh; others from the Britiſh word Helig, a willow, with which trees it abounds, being unfit for others. We read that one Tombert prince of the South Girvii[g] gave part of this country in dower to his wife Etheldreda, who leaving her ſecond huſband Egfrid king of Northumberland to devote herſelf to Chriſt, founded in the principal of theſe iſlands properly called Elyg, and at that time containing 600 families, a nunnery, of which ſhe herſelf was the firſt abbeſs. Yet this was not the firſt church in theſe fens: for the book of Ely ſays, our Auſtin built one at Cradiden, which was afterwards deſtroyed by Penda the Merciан: and Malmesbury[h] tells us that Fœlix biſhop of the Eaſt Angles had his firſt ſee at Soham, which is ſtill a part of the ſee of Norwich. "Soham, ſays he, is a town on the ſide "of a lake which was formerly dangerous to thoſe "who paſſed to Ely in boats; now there is a cauſe-"way made through the plantations of reeds, which "is paſſable on foot. There are ſome traces of a "church deſtroyed by the Danes, who burnt it "with the townſpeople in it." At the ſame time the Danes demoliſhed Etheldred's monaſtery, but it was rebuilt by Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, who purchaſed the iſland by an agreement with the king, and turning out the ſeculars, filled it with monks, to whom king Edgar, as we find in his charter, granted "the ſecular juriſdiction of two hundreds in the fens, "and of five hundreds and an half out of the fens in "Wichlaw in the country of the Eaſt Angles," which are ſtill called St. Etheldred's Liberties. Succeeding kings and nobles endowed it with moſt ample revenues, particularly earl Brithnoth, "who being about "to attack the Danes in the year 999 gave to the "church of Ely, Somerſham, Spaldwic, Trumpinton, "Ratindun, Heiſbury, Fulburn, Tmerſton, Tripleſtow "and Impetun[i]," in caſe he fell in that battle: becauſe theſe monks had entertained him magnificently; but he was killed at Maldun after having fought with the Danes for 14 days. This monaſtery was ſo rich that the abbot, according to Malmſbury[k], received yearly £. 1400. Richard the laſt abbot, ſon of earl Gilbert, intoxicated with this wealth, and diſdaining to be ſubject to the biſhop of Lincoln, by golden promiſes, as the monks write, and unwearied application, ſolicited the king to erect a biſhopric here; but his death prevented the execution of this deſign. Soon after Henry I. having the Pope's leave, made Hervey biſhop of Bangor, who had been driven from his own ſee by the Welſh, firſt biſhop here, giving to him and his ſucceſſors the county of Cambridge for dioceſe, which before belonged to the biſhop of Lincoln, and ſovereign powers in the iſle. To make up the loſs to the biſhops of Lincoln, from whom he had taken both the iſle and the county, he gave them the manor of Spaldwic, or, as the monks have it, "the biſhops of Lincoln had the maner of "Spaldwic given them for ever in exchange for the "epiſcopal cure of the town of Grantbridge." Hervey upon his appointment to this ſee had it much at heart to augment the dignity of his church; that it might be (to uſe the words of the book of Ely) "every "where free from toll, and the burthen of watch "and ward, which it owed to the caſtle of Norwich." He made a way from Exning to Ely through the fens for near ſix miles, and purchaſed ſeveral eſtates. His ſucceſſors reduced the number of monks from 70 to 40, and abounded in plenty and wealth to the laſt age, ſo as to ſurpaſs all the monaſteries of England. Whence a poet of that time ſaid not amiſs;

Prævisis aliis Elienſia feſta videre
Eſt quaſi prævisa nocte videre diem.

All others ſeen, ſee Ely's feſtal day;
'Tis to behold (night paſt) the ſun's bright ray.

They gradually rebuilt the church, decayed by time, and brought it to its preſent magnificence. It is a large lofty and beautiful ſtructure: but the ruinous ſtate of the monuments of nobles and biſhops in it is no ſmall diſgrace to it. The numerous company of monks are now ſucceeded by a dean, prebends, and a grammar-ſchool, where twenty-four boys are educated and maintained. Four things are commonly celebrated about this church: the lanthern on its top over the choir raiſed on eight pillars with ſingular art by biſhop Hotham: the chapel of the Virgin Mary near the church on the north ſide, built in a moſt elegant ſtyle by biſhop Simon de Montacute: a high artificial hill on the ſouth ſide called the Mount, with a windmill on it; and the vineyard formerly ſo fruitful now decayed. Theſe four things were comprehended in this rhyming diſtich by a monk of this place.

Hæc ſunt Eliæ, lanterna, capella Mariæ,
Atque molendinum, necnon dans vinea vinum.

The city of Ely is not inconſiderable, nor yet to be boaſted of for beauty or populouſneſs, being ſituate in a marſhy ſoil and unhealthy air.

In the ſame fens to the north weſt was another very famous monaſtery, called from the thick thorns and buſhes about it Thorney, and antiently from the Anchorites Ankeridge, where as we find in the regiſter of Peterburgh[l], Sexulfus a very devout man, built a monaſtery with cells for hermits. This being deſtroyed by the Danes, Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, for the encouragement of the monaſtic life, rebuilt this monaſtery, filled it with monks, and planted it about with trees. The place, according to Malmſbury[m], "was a picture of Paradiſe, and for "pleaſantneſs might be compared to Heaven itſelf, Thorney.

[g] Pauſan. in Corinth.
[h] A. D. 652. de Pontif. II. 135.
[i] Liber Elienſis.
[k] IIII. 167. b.
[l] Hugo Candidus ap. Sparke, p. 6.
[m] de Pont. IV. 167. b.

"bearing

" bearing trees in the very fens towering with their " lofty tops to the clouds, while the ſmooth watry [n] " plain below attracts the eye with its verdant dreſs, " and may be paſſed without impediment. Not " the ſmalleſt ſpot is here unimproved, being " planted either with fruit-trees or vines creeping " along the ground or ſupported by poles. Here " ſeems to be a tacit conteſt between Nature and " Art, the latter producing what the former has " forgot. What ſhall I ſay of the beauty of the " buildings, which one is amazed to find ſo firmly " ſupported in the fenny ſoil. This vaſt ſolitude " is given to the monks to fix their affections more " on things above, and to make them holier men. " A woman would be deemed a prodigy here: but " men are welcomed as angels. I may juſtly ſay " this iſland is the abode of chaſtity, the reſidence " of virtue, the ſchool of divine philoſophers."

Wiſbech. Of Wiſbech, a caſtle belonging to the biſhops of Ely 13 miles from hence among fens and rivers, and lately a priſon for popiſh recuſants, I have nothing to add, but that this town, together with Walpole, Walpole. was antiently given to Ely abbey by its owner, when he there dedicated his infant ſon Alwin to a monaſtic life: that William I. built the caſtle when the proſcribed barons made inroads from the fens: and that A. D. 1236 the ſea beat on this coaſt for two days together in a violent ſtorm, and made havoc of lands and people far and wide. The preſent brick caſtle was built in the laſt age by John Morton biſhop of Ely [o], who drew a ſtrait cut called the New-leame in this fen for the convenience of carriage to inrich his town by trade: but it has turned out otherwiſe, as it is now of very little uſe, and the neighbours complain that it obſtructs the courſe of the Avon or Neene into the ſea at Clow croſs. Clow cross

The firſt earl of Cambridge was William, brother of Randolph earl of Cheſter, as appears by the charter granted to Alexander biſhop of Lincoln 1139. Afterwards thoſe earls of Huntingdon who were of the blood royal of Scotland, may be ſuppoſed to have been earls of Cambridge, ſince it appears by records that David earl of Huntingdon received "the third penny of the county of Cambridge." Long after this Edward III. advanced John [p] of Hainault, brother of William third earl of Holland and Hainault, to this dignity, to oblige his wife Philippa, who was related to this John. For her ſake alſo when John had gone over to the French intereſt, he conferred the ſame title on William, marquis of Juliers, ſon of Philippa's ſiſter. On the deceaſe of theſe foreigners Edward III. transferred this honour to his own 5th ſon Edmund de Langley, who having held it four years (I have the authority of an antient MS. in the poſſeſſion of that excellent antiquary Francis Thynne) it was claimed in parliament by the earl of Hainault, relation of queen Philippa, and he had ſatisfaction for it [q]. Edmund de Langley, afterwards duke of York, had two ſons, Edward, duke of York and ſometime earl of Cambridge, ſlain at Agincourt, and Richard, created earl of Cambridge by the free favour of Henry V. and conſent of his own brother Edward; but this perfidious man ungratefully contriving the death of that excellent prince, was beheaded: and the title of earl of Cambridge became extinct or ſunk among the titles of his ſon Richard, afterwards duke of York, and fully reſtored to all his dignities as kinſman and heir of his uncle Edward duke of York [r]. Earls of Cambridge

In this county are 163 pariſhes.

[n] æquorea planitie. [o] between 1478 and 1486.

[p] Brooke, p. 91. calls William earl of Cambridge before John, whom he calls uncle to queen Philippa. He ſays William was ſo created 14 E. III. and John 16 E. III. 1342. Camden's account ſeems more probable, and is adopted by Dugdale, II. 113. William died 1360. Brooke, Ib. Edmund de Langley was created earl of Cambridge 1360, and died 1401. Ib.

[q] Et placatus receſſit. [r] He was ſlain in the battle of Wakefield 1460. Brooke, 94.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Cambridge, called by the Saxons Grantabrygcyr, in Domeſday Grentebrigeſcire, and in other writers Grantebridgeſcire, Cantebrigſcire, and Cantebriggeſhire, is in length 52 miles, in breadth 26, and in circuit about 130, divided into 17 hundreds and 163 pariſhes, and ſends ſix members to parliament[a]. It has of late years been much improved in its ſoil by planting ſaintfoin, which is brought from foreign parts, and thrives only in dry and harſh grounds, and by draining the fens in the iſle of Ely at a vaſt expence, but with double profit in the acquiſition of ground, the improvement of the remainder, and the purging of the air[i].

The principal landholders in this county in Domeſday were, beſides the king, the biſhops of Wincheſter, Lincoln, and Rocheſter; the abbots of Ely, St. Edmund's Bury, Ramſey, Thorney, Croyland, St. Wandregeſil in Normandy, and the abbeſs of Chatteriz; the earls Mortaign, Roger, Alan, and Euſtace; the canons of Bayeux; Walter Gifard, William de Warren, Robert Todeni, Robert Gernon, Geofrey Magnaville, Gilbert de Gand, Gilbert Fitz Turold, Eudo Dapifer, Harduin de Scalers, Hugh de Berneres, Hugh de Port, Aubrey de Vere, Euſtace de Huntingdon, Wido de Reinbecurt, Peter de Valoinges, Picot de Grantbrige, Ranulph brother of Ilger, John Fitz Waleran, William Fitz Anſculf, William de Cahainges, Robert Faſiton, David de Argenton, counteſs Judith, &c. The county without the iſle of Ely was computed in the Conqueror's time at 2005 hides of land[b].

Cambridgeſhire was taken ont of the biſhopric of Lincoln and made a ſeparate dioceſe for the newly erected biſhop of Ely by Henry I. 1114.

Burne is ſituate among meadows, paſtures, and woods, having a brook running through divers parts of it, whence its name. The caſtle ſtood on a riſing hill commanding the country round, and is ſuppoſed to have been built by Picot lord of this manor, which was held ſucceſſively by the Reeches, Burnwyſhes, and Hagars[c], whoſe manſion houſe ſtands in the middle of the old works.

The tower of Boxworth being much damaged by a ſtorm, a brief was granted for its repair 1636.

"Royſton ſtandeth in a mean valley betwixt two "hilles. The market place in Hertfordſhire, the "other part of the town in Cambridgeſhire: the "towne itſelf is but of a mene building. The mar-"ket is mervelouſly well frequented eſpecially with "corn[d]." It is ſtill the greateſt corn market in theſe parts. The town, ſurrounded by an extenſive tract of downs, conſiſts of four ſtreets, the principal of which runs down a hill from ſouth to north. The church ſtands at the extremity of the Eaſtern ſtreet, at the weſt end of which, near the centre of the town, is the baſe of a croſs juſt by the cave or oratory of lady Roiſia. At the Red Lion or principal inn was held, till from non-attendance it was ſuſpended in 1777, for ſome time before the Revolution a club compoſed of the principal nobility, gentry, and clergy in the neighbourhood for many miles round. Two handſome rooms were built for their accommodation, and adorned with portraits of our princes from James I. to Anne, chancellor Jefferies, the earl of Oxford, Dr. Savage, maſter of Emanuel college, and ſeveral other eminent members ſtill remaining there.

A fire happening at Baſſingbourne, relief was collected for the ſufferers by the churchwardens and conſtables by letters of requeſt under the hands and ſeals of the juſtices; in which is alſo mentioned the loſs the pariſhioners ſuſtained by the death of their godly and learned miniſter and preacher Mr. Barnes. Briefs ſucceeded this mode of collection[e]. Baſſingbourne.

Caxton is a little market and poſt town, and has ſeveral inns. Caxton.

Above Caxton is Elteſley. "From Cambridge to "Elteſle village al by champeyne counterey eight "miles. At Elteſle was ſumtym a nunnery wher "Pandonia the Scottiſh virgin was buried, and there "is a well of her name in the ſouth ſide of the quire. "I hard that when this nunnery was deſtroyed a new "one was made at Hinchingbroke by Huntendune[f]." Near the vicarage was the old nunnery of St. Pandonia, daughter of ſome king of Scotland, deſtroyed about the Conqueſt, and transferred to Eyneſbury[g]. Elteſley.

"A mile from Elteſle towards Neotes is the limes "of Cambridgeſhire[h]."

Croxton, on the borders of Huntingdon, was an ancient manor of the Scales' family[i], now belonging to that of Leedes. Croxton.

The church at Papworth Agnes ſtands on a very high hill, which ſeems as if it had been an old fortification. Mr. Thomas Rutherforth, who had collected materials for an hiſtory of this county, and was father of the late Dr. Rutherforth, was rector of Papworth Everard 1727. Several perſons of the name of Rutherforth occur in Cherry Hinton regiſter in the 16th century. Papworth Agnes.

Gamlinghay a conſiderable village ſituated on the diviſion of this and the adjacent counties of Bedford and Huntingdon. It belonged to the Averells and Bubbingtons. Here was a large houſe, built by ſir George Downing, bart. pulled down ſince his couſin and heir ſir Jacob left his eſtate to build a college, for which purpoſe their revenues are ſtill accumulating. Gamlinghay.

At Long Stow was an hoſpital for poor ſiſters t. Henry III. founded by Walter vicar here[k]. Long Stow.

The foundreſs of Shengay 1130, the wife of John de Reynes as Camden calls her, is not clear. She is not mentioned by Dugdale under this name. If Shengay.

[a] Mag. Brit. I. 238. [i] G. [b] ex Col. MS. Croylandenſi ad fin. Galei XV. Script. p. 748.
[c] Layer's and Blomfield's MS. collections. [d] Lel. IX. 409. See vol. I. 341. [e] Minutes of Spalding Society 1745.
[f] Lel. It. I. 1. [g] Holland. Tan. 41. [h] Lel. I. 1.
[i] Layer. [k] Tan. 47. Blomfield Collect. Cantab. 15.

ſhe was Sibylla daughter of Roger Montgomery earl of Shrewſbury and Arundel, ſhe muſt have been widow of Robert Fitz Haimon, or ſhe might have been daughter of Roger de Poitou third ſon of that earl[l]. Shengay gave title of baron 1677 to Edward Ruſſel earl of Oxford, with whom it expired 1727.

Wimpole. Somewhat north from it is Wimpole, from James I. to 1637 a manor of the Chicheleys, deſcended from the family of that name at Higham Ferrers, who had a chapel and vault there[m]. It was, in the laſt century, a ſeat of Charles Robarts earl of Radnor[n]; afterwards of lord Harley by marriage with the heireſs of John duke of Newcaſtle; afterwards of the earl of Oxford, now, by purchaſe, of the earl of Hardwicke, whoſe father in digging canals found many bones and pieces of weapons[o]. The title of Hardwicke was taken from a village adjoining.

Hatley St. George. Hatley St. George, ſometimes called from the nature of the ſoil Hunger Hatley, belonged from the reign of Henry III. to the St. Georges, of whom ſeveral have been heralds. Henry St. George, garter king at arms, died 1715, aged 92[p]. Sir George went to Ireland a knight adventurer t. Elizabeth. His eldeſt ſon ſir Oliver was created a baronet by Charles II. and died 1704. His ſon George was advanced to the title of lord St. George of Hatley St. George in the county of Roſcommon in Ireland 1714-15, 1 George I. and died 1735. The title lay dormant till 1763, when it was revived in the perſon of Uſher St. George, who, dying 1775, it is again extinct. One of this family was ſent by Charles I. with the order of the garter to Guſtavus the great king of Sweden, who gave him the arms of Sweden in addition to his own.

Swaveſey. North-eaſt of Elteſley at Swaveſey was a cell to the Benedictine abbey at Angiers, founded by Alan Fergant[q] I. 9 William Conq. ſold to St. Anne's priory near Coventry 1381 t. Richard II.[q] and ſuppreſſed with other alien priories 2 Henry V. 1414[r]. It was the burial place of the Zouch family [s].

Childerley. The caſe of Childerley, which from two pariſhes of Great and Little was reduced to a private chapel, is too remarkable in our hiſtory to be unnoticed here. Archbiſhop Laud complained to the king 1639, that ſir John Cutts, then lord of the manor, kept a chaplain, whom he pretended to be curate to the rector, a titular incumbent without tithe or income, and that the ſite of the church was built upon with offices. It appears from the biſhop of Ely's regiſters that the two churches were united in one preſentation about 1489, as the maner and rectory were united in one perſon about 1466. The lordſhip and patronage fell about 1527 to the family of Cutts, who ſold it 2 James II. to the Calverts, the preſent lords. The rector's ſtipend was but £. 5. at moſt till Mr. Metcalfe, rector 1717, ſued Mr. Felix Calvert in the Exchequer, and recovered the antient dues of the church, and 1719 leaſed the tithes to Mr. Calvert for 99 years, at 20£.[t]

Grancheſter. Granta, or Grancheſter, is ſuppoſed by Dr. Cay to have extended not only as far as Grantbridge, now corruptly called Cambridge, but north beyond the caſtle to St. James's chapel at Homes, a deſolate village, foundations of building having been ploughed up in the fields between Grancheſter and Cambridge. But this is rather to be referred to Cambridge after the deſtruction of Grantaceaſter, which is ſpoken of by Bede as in ruins about the year 700; ſo that whatever is related of this city before the Saxon times relates to Grantceſter, and after them to Cambridge. It is firſt mentioned as a village in Saher de Quincy's grant of it to his eldeſt ſon Robert to endow his wife Hawiſe 8 John[u].

The ſite of Roman Granta is very traceable on the ſide of Cambridge towards the caſtle, on an elevated ground on the north-weſt ſide of the river, of an irregular figure, containing 30 acres, ſurrounded by a deep ditch, great part of which remains on the ſouth-weſt ſide, and in the grounds behind Magdalen college[x]. Four ſtreets croſs each other at right angles; the principal running from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt, continued from the foot of Gogmagog hills, paſſed the Grant by a ford to Godmancheſter another ſtation. The forum ſeems to have been on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the city. Roman bricks are in the decayed walls of St. Peter's church, which ſtands within the works, as does St. Giles's church; that of All Saints ad caſtrum is now gone[y]. I have picked up fragments of urns among the corn. Mr. Gale[z] ſays the caſtle, commonly called Cambridge caſtle, really belongs to Cheſterton adjoining. It was a ſtone building, and had a magnificent hall. Only the keep and gate remain, and two baſtions with part of a third caſt up in the civil war. The gate now ſtanding was built in the time of Edward I. or Henry III. who made a ditch round the town called the King's ditch. In 1291 Edward I. lay two nights in Cambridge caſtle, as before that time, ſays Stowe[a], never any king had done that could be remembered. He had at that time a great ſtable of horſe at Barnwell, Adam de Kiſton being maſter thereof. Edward III. employed part in rebuilding his King's hall, now part of Trinity college. The ſtones and timber of the hall were begged of Henry V. by the maſter and fellows of King's hall towards building their chapel[b]. Mary gave the other materials to build Trinity hall chapel and to ſir John Huddleſton, who therewith built his houſe at Sawſton.

" Cambridge was not Camboritum. The Romans always in extending their conqueſts made a river their boundary. No other ſpot of like eminence with Cambridge on the river: the like at Bedford on the Ouſe, Caſtle Dykes two miles lower, Eaton by St. Neot's, and Huntingdon; all ſpots of high ground on the north ſide of the river, and fortified. Cambridge caſtle has Roman, Saxon, Daniſh, Norman, and modern works, and perhaps Britiſh, but the oldeſt ſeem thoſe from the turnpike ſouth, returning by the garden walls to the eaſt, including about 30 acres, with the preſent caſtle, which ſeems the Prætorium: the eaſt ſide may have been bounded with the river though now at a diſtance, wherein the terrace of Magdalen cloſe may have been part, near which the river ſeems formerly to have run, for the deeds (in the Cottonian library) relating to the foundation of St. Giles's church mention the river as running cloſe to it. The works include the preſent caſtle, probably the Prætorium improved by the Saxons; the mount might be Britiſh though ſuppoſed Daniſh; the buildings

[l] Dugd. I. 329. Tan. 43. [m] Layer. [n] Kip. [o] G.
[p] Carter's Hiſtory of Cambridgſhire, 304. [q] Ib. 199.
[r] Tan. 41. Alan Rufus or la Zouche earl of Britanny and Richmond. [s] Mon. Ang. I. 572.
[t] Holland. [u] Blomf. MS. Coll. pen. editor.
[x] Layer's MS. [y] Stuk. Pal. Br. II. 36. Bentham's Ely, p. 60, n.
[z] Cantabrigia depicta, p. 6, 7. [a] Gale on Antoninus, and MS. n.
[b] Gibſon ex Caio II. p. 117. [b] Ann. p. 205.

were

were added by William I. the ditches deepened, and baſtions added by Oliver Cromwell, who ſigned a writ to fortify this caſtle, and the road turned ſouth-weſtward by St. Peter's church over the green and coming in again at the turnpike, but reſumed the old track on demoliſhing the two baſtions; great part of one remains weſt of the gate and a bit of the other on the eaſt ſide of it [c]. This diverticulum ſeems older than the baſtions.

"Roman coins, from Veſpaſian downwards, have been found within or near this ſpot, and Roman bricks are in the north-weſt corner of St. Peter's church wall. Againſt the mile-ſtone near the rill of water called the Vicar's brook, which croſſes the London road at Pratt's pits in a gravel-pit, were ſome time ago found many curious pateræ of fine red earth, one large vaſe three feet long, braſs lagenæ, a braſs diſh imboſſed, the handle of a ſacrificing knife, the braſſes of a pugillaris or table book, ſome large bones and Roman coins now in Trinity college library. I have traced great part of the road in a direct line from Haverill over Gogmagog hills, and by the direction it has come from Colcheſter through Cambridge, and ſo weſt by Huntingdon to Leiceſter and Cheſter. Another from Ely by Streatham and Cambridge caſtle by Barton and Orwell, winding by Armingfield to Aſhwell near Baldock, pointing towards St. Alban's; all proofs that Cambridge was a conſiderable Roman ſtation. It gave name to its ſhire. Bede repreſents Grantaceſter as a ſmall deſolated city, and ſo ſituated that they came from Ely thither in large boats (navigiis); but no one that knows the country can think the river could have been navigable even ſo high as Cambridge without much difficulty, much leſs to Grantcheſter. It was deſolated 695, and 875 the whole Daniſh army ſtaid in it. It rather means only the Roman ſtation round the caſtle, to which the town had grown as an appendage, and that the inhabitants removed on the oppoſite ſide the river as at Lincoln, Bedford, &c. The brook coming from Burne, and falling into the river above Granchester, might have been the antient Grant from that town near its mouth and Granteſden at the head, in whoſe fields it riſes. Few remarkable ſtations or paſſes of rivers but have leſſer ones adjoining, and to Cambridge are annexed Granchester and Cheſterton. Though no remains of defence at the latter, Cambridge caſtle is now in that pariſh [d], and Cambridge itſelf is in the hundred of Cheſterton [e]."

Dr. William Warren, vice maſter of Trinity hall, ſuppoſed the caſtle end of Cambridge was Bede's Grantaceaſter inſtead of old Granta, and had demonſtrated it as amply as a matter of that ſort allowed [f].

"The mount at Cambridge has been ſuppoſed Daniſh, probably from that people having wintered there; but I have great reaſon to think that no works of that kind, nor indeed of many other ſorts, did really belong to them, and that it ſeems rather of Britiſh origin, as is that at Ely; yet if it were antecedent to the Roman fort, they would have joined their work to it, and not have left that deep unſeemly hollow within their work. If we ſuppoſe that hollow part of the ditch originally encloſing the mount, we ſhould have found ſome traces of the like all round, of which there is only a ſlender appearance in one place. It may poſſibly have been levelled for building or gardens, but I rather think it was made in Oliver Cromwell's time, when the two wings or curtains connecting the mount with the fort were made, and ſeem to be much later work, and alſo to furniſh materials for raiſing the baſtions, which the ditches could not afford in ſufficient quantities [g]."

Roger de Montgomery, to be revenged of William Rufus, deſtroyed the town of Cambridge with fire and ſword. Henry I. to repair theſe damages beſtowed on it many privileges, exempting it from the power of the ſheriff, making it a corporation on payment of 101 marks yearly to the Exchequer, which ſum the ſheriff paid before for his profits out of the town when under his juriſdiction. The ferry over the river, which before was left at large, began then to be fixed near this place [h].

The town is divided into four wards containing 13 pariſhes. Dr. Cay ſuppoſed it was antiently walled round, and had three gates or rather barrs, of which in his time ſtood a wooden poſt at Barnwell gate leading to that village. It was encompaſſed on the ſouth and eaſt by a ditch made by Henry III. when the barons held the iſle of Ely againſt him, which, though much levelled, is yet diſcernable running from the mills near Queen's college in the middle between Pembroke hall and St. Botolph's church by St. Andrew's church under the church of the Franciſcans through Jeſus lane, and ſo on to the river. Over the river are three bridges, of which that called the Great bridge was antiently maintained by the county, but ſince by certain towns and lands chiefly on the weſt ſide of Cambridge. Small bridges by Queen's college in contradiſtinction to the former, and Garret hoſtle bridge only for horſes. The colleges on the river have alſo their ſeveral bridges over it.

The government of the town belonged to the ſheriffs of the county till 1101, when Henry I. eſtabliſhed a corporation. John honoured them with a mayor. Edward II. a. r. 9. gave them leave to eſtabliſh a guild of St. Edmund. Henry III. ordered that the mayor ſhould be aiding and aſſiſting to the chancellor of the Univerſity in puniſhing malefactors, &c. The townſmen growing jealous of theſe great privileges broke out into open rebellion and violence againſt the Univerſity, ranſacking and miſerably ſpoiling Corpus Chriſti college ſoon after its foundation, and obliging the members by oath to renounce their new privileges, and breaking open St. Mary's church burnt the Univerſity records. The mayor for this inſolence was deprived of the government of the town, which was conferred on the Vicechancellor, in whom (as Dr. Cay affirms) it continued till reſtored by the eſpecial favour of Henry VII. and VIII. with ſome diminution however of their authority, and ſuch it now remains; the town being governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and four bailiffs [h].

Cambridge is not confined within the bounds and limits of the town, but ſtretches into the fields about, and has divers manors held formerly by the prioreſs of St. Radigund, the prior of Barnwell, the earl of Lancaſter, and ſeveral private perſons [i].

To the foundation of the univerſity Cantaber I think can have no better claim than a fancied reſemblance of names. Sigebert may have ſomewhat better, at leaſt to a grammar ſchool, which in that age was equivalent to an univerſity, and may ſerve to ſupport its priority againſt Oxford. It were to be wiſhed it could ſupport as well its ſuperiority for

[c] Dr. Maſon's MS. [d] Ib. [e] Nom. Villarum 9 E. II. [f] Min. of Spalding Soc.
[g] Dr. Maſon's MS. [h] G. [h] Layer's MS. [i] Ib.

the

the encouragement of learning by its preſs. One of the firſt endowments for exhibitions is ſuppoſed to be 200 marks, given 1256 by Kilkenny biſhop of Ely, to Barnwell priory, for founding two divinity exhibitions here[k]. The firſt mention of the chancellor is in the charter of 53 Henry I. 1264, wherein the ſheriff of the county and the mayor of the town are directed to be ready to aſſiſt him[l].

Colleges. Peterhouſe.

Hugh Balſham began the foundation of Peterhouſe about 1257 without Trumpington gate by the church of St. Peter (now called St. Mary), from whence it ſeems to have taken its name. He removed the ſcholars before placed in St. John's hoſpital to two hoſtles here. But all the advantage which the ſcholars had at firſt was only the convenience of chambers in two hoſtles, which exempted them from the high rents exacted by the townſmen. He ſettled the endowment 1284 for a maſter, 14 fellows, 29 bible clerks, and eight poor ſcholars[m]; which number might be increaſed or diminiſhed according to the improvement of their revenues[n]. Here are now 22 fellows. The college was built with money left by his will[o]. Nine biſhops, one cardinal, and two archbiſhops, were educated here, beſides ſome eminent writers.

Clare hall.

Clare hall was preceded by Univerſity hall, founded by Richard Badew chancellor of the univerſity 1326, which being burnt was rebuilt 1342 by the aſſiſtance of Elizabeth de Burgh, grandaughter to Edward I. and third daughter and coheir of Gilbert laſt earl of Clare, Glouceſter, and Hertford[p], for a maſter, 10 fellows, &c. The parliament ſeized the ſtone and timber intended for it to fortify the caſtle in the civil war, for which Dr. Tillotſon recovered £. 1000. out of the exchequer[q]. It is at preſent one of the neateſt and moſt uniform houſes in the Univerſity, having been rebuilt of freeſtone[r], with a new chapel. It has a maſter, 20 fellows, and 74 ſcholars. Two archbiſhops and five biſhops had their education here, among other learned men[s].

Pembroke hall.

Pembroke hall was founded by Mary third wife to Audomar de Valence earl of Pembroke, who being, as reported, ſlain in a tilting on the wedding day, ſhe renounced the world, and, among other pious acts, built this college for a maſter and ſix fellows, augmented by ſucceeding benefactors, particularly by Henry VI. to 14 and two bye fellows, now nine and two tanquam fellows, and 20 ſcholars[t]. The chapel was built by biſhop Wren from a deſign of his nephew ſir Chriſtopher. Twenty-ſix biſhops and ſeven archbiſhops were educated here.

Corpus Chriſti or Bene't college.

Corpus Chriſti, or Bene't college, aroſe out of two gilds or fraternities of Corpus Chriſti, and the Bleſſed Virgin, who united to found this college about 1344, which was perfected by Henry duke of Lancaſter 1356, and has its name from the adjoining church of St. Benedict. It conſiſts of a maſter, 12 fellows, and 40 ſcholars[u]. Their greateſt benefactor was archbiſhop Parker, once maſter, who recovered ſeveral rights, founded two fellowſhips and five ſcholars, and gave them a moſt invaluable collection of MSS.[x] Six archbiſhops and 16 biſhops have been bred here.

I cannot better expreſs my own obligations to this ſeminary of Britiſh Antiquaries than in repeating the grateful wiſh of the old poet for his monaſtic mother:

Sit tibi tuta quies!
Hic locus ætatis noſtræ primordia novit,
Annos felices, lætitiæque dies.
Hic locus ingenuis pueriles imbuit annos
Artibus, & noſtræ laudis origo fuit.

Trinity

Trinity hall was built on a place once belonging to the monks of Ely, who ſtudied there before biſhop Bateman 1351 exchanged the advowſons of certain rectories for it. He was a great civilian, and the maſter, two fellows, and three ſcholars of his foundation, now 12 fellows and 14 ſcholars[y], are bound to purſue the ſame ſtudy. The number of fellows has ſince been increaſed to 12, two of whom are divines[z], and the houſe conſiderably improved by buildings. Eight biſhops were educated here.

Gonville

Gonville hall was founded 1348, where are now the tennis court and garden of Benet college, for a warden and four fellows, by Edmund Gonvile rector of Terrington and Ruſhworth, in the county of Norfolk, who leaving money to compleat it with biſhop Bateman, he tranferred it nearer to his own foundation. In the next century the fellows were increaſed to eleven, and a hotel added by William Phiſwicke, eſquire beadle, called after his name, and governed by a diſtinct principal. John Caius, phyſician to queen Mary, refounded it 1557 under the name of Gonvile and Caius college for a maſter and 12 ſenior and 14 junior fellows, and 75 ſcholarſhips, and built the ſouth court[x]. It has produced nine biſhops and one archbiſhop.

Gonvil Caius c

King's lege.

King's college was firſt founded only for a rector and 12 ſcholarſhips, but having added to it St. Nicholas an hoſpital for grammarians founded by William Bingham and the church of St. John Baptiſt or Zachary (where afterwards ſtood St. Auſtin's hall and God's houſe), the founder changed its form 1443, placing therein a provoſt, 70 fellows, and 120 ſcholars, 10 prieſts, 6 clerks, a muſic maſter, 16 choriſters, 16 officers of the foundation, 12 ſervitors for the ſenior fellows, and 1 poor ſcholar[y]. The civil wars interrupted his building; ſo that his magnificent chapel, 304 feet long, 70 broad, and 91 high to the battlements, was completed by Henry VII. and VIII. the latter adding the beautiful painted windows, where in correſponding compartments above and below the whole hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament is repreſented, and the crucifixion in the eaſt, under which a moſt elegant Gothic altarpiece has juſt been erected by Mr. Eſſex, in which is fixed a painting of the deſcent from the croſs by Daniel da Volterra, the gift of the earl of Carliſle. This college has produced 25 biſhops and four archbiſhops, beſides other eminent ſtateſmen, &c. The weſt ſide of the quadrangle was compleated 1724. The old court contains the other apartments.

Quee lege.

Queen's college was founded by Margaret of Anjou conſort to Henry VI. on the ſouth of the Carmelites' houſe in Mill Street; but the civil wars interrupting her deſign, Andrew Ducket, principal of St. Bernard's oſtle, which made part of it at firſt, and had ſtudents in it 1519[z], who had been 36 years the firſt maſter, prevailed on Elizabeth Grey queen of Edward IV. to perfect what her profeſſed enemy had begun. He obtained benefactions from other well-

[k] Bentham's Ely, ex MS. Baker, p. 149. [l] Layer. [m] Tan. 49.
[n] G. and Bentham Ely, 150, who puts the firſt foundation 1280 after he was biſhop. [o] Bentham. Ib.
[p] Tanner, 51. [q] Birch's life of Tillotſon. [r] Tanner, Ib.
[s] G. Tanner, 52. [t] Tan. 53. Hiſtory of the college by Mr. Maſters. [u] G.
[x] Tanner, 53. [x] G. Tan. 53. [y] G. Tan. 55.
[z] Hiſt. of C. C. C. p. 45. n. Tan. 56.

diſpoſed

diſpoſed perſons, and the foundation was at laſt advanced to a maſter, 19 fellows, and 45 ſcholars, and this houſe has produced 19 biſhops and 1 archbiſhop. Eraſmus, while a ſtudent here, reſided in a turret yet ſtanding in the ſouth-weſt angle of the college.

Catharine hall was founded about 1474 by Robert Woodlark, third provoſt of King's college and chancellor of the Univerſity, overagainſt the Carmelites' houſe, for a maſter, and three fellows, ſince increaſed to ſeven, and one bye fellow and 22 ſcholars [a]. Eleven biſhops and three archbiſhops have been bred here. Half the college has been rebuilt and laid open very advantageouſly to the ſtreet.

Jeſus college ſtands on the ſite of an old nunnery dedicated to St. Radegund, as old as the Conqueſt, diſſolved by Henry VII. and Pope Alexander VI. for the notorious incontinence of the nuns, and the ſite granted to biſhop Alcock, who eſtabliſhed in it 1497 a maſter, ſix fellows, and ſix ſcholars, ſince augmented to 16 fellows, and 30 ſcholars [b]. Twelve biſhops and 5 archbiſhops have had their education here. The original chapel, or rather church, of the nunnery, built by Malcolm king of Scotland 1160 in form of a croſs, ſtill remains. The reſt of the houſe is built of brick with a cloiſter of the ſame.

Chriſt's college was founded on the ſite of God's houſe, an hoſtel built near and ſubject to Clare hall for grammarians by William Bingham 1442, tranſlated hither by Henry VI. who intended to have augmented it from a provoſt and four fellows and ſcholars to 60 ſcholars. His maternal ſiſter Margaret counteſs of Richmond, mother to Henry VII. ſettled here 1506 a maſter, 12 fellows, and 55 ſcholars; a 13th fellow was added by Edward VI. to obviate the ſuperſtitious number as alluding to Chriſt and the 12 Apoſtles [c]. Seventeen biſhops and ſeven archbiſhops were educated here. There has been a new building added in this century.

The ſame munificent princeſs founded St. John's college on the ſpot where Nigellus biſhop of Ely, or rather Henry Froſt burgeſs of Cambridge, founded an hoſpital for canons regular. Northwold biſhop of Ely, 1240, placed ſeculars; biſhop Hugh Balſham, 1280, converted it into a priory, dedicated to St. John. Their revenues being greatly reduced by the end of the reign of Henry VII. the counteſs of Richmond's thoughts of a ſecond foundation were turned hither by her confeſſor biſhop Fiſher, who, with others her executors, ſet about it 1511 for a maſter and 54 fellows, and above 80 ſcholars [d]. 37 biſhops and two archbiſhops had their education here. This college conſiſts of three courts of brick (the firſt now caſing with ſtone), and has a well-furniſhed library and handſome chapel. In a ſmall chapel on the north ſide of the altar was lately diſcovered an altar tomb without braſſes, ſuppoſed to have been prepared by biſhop Fiſher for himſelf had he lived his full time: it never was finiſhed.

Magdalen college is ſaid by biſhop Tanner to have been founded on the ſite of St. Giles's priory after that priory was removed to Barnwell, and the place made a retreat for the monks of three houſes, till Edward Stafford duke of Bucks erected on it Buckingham college 1519: but this could not be; for there was a river between St. Giles's priory and this college. This new foundation reverting to the crown on the founder's attainder, was granted to lord chancellor Audley, who founded a college for a maſter and four fellows, which ſir Chriſtopher Wray lord chief juſtice enlarged to ſeven fellows and ſeveral ſcholars, which were afterwards further increaſed [e]. Here are now 16 fellows and 31 ſcholars, and a handſome building has been added. Seven biſhops and one archbiſhop have been educated here.

St. Michael's houſe, founded 1324 by Harvey Aungier of Stanton prieſt, chancellor of the exchequer, gave education to three biſhops [f]. King's hall intended by Edward II. was accompliſhed by his ſon Edward III. 1337 [g]: The maſter's lodge and other buildings behind the chapels were part of it; and it educated five biſhops and one archbiſhop. Phiſwicke hall was an appendix to Gonvile hall 1393, to which Phiſwick before-mentioned gave his houſe. Out of theſe three Henry VIII. compoſed his foundation of Trinity college 1546 for a maſter, vice maſter, 60 fellows, and 71 ſcholars. Henry VIII. began the chapel and old library, which were finiſhed by Elizabeth, and the cloiſter or ſecond court was erected by Thomas Nevile, maſter, 1609. The new library was built from a deſign of ſir Chriſtopher Wren, under the maſterſhip of Dr. Iſaac Barrow. It is well ſtocked with books and MSS. and has the remainder of the Roman inſcriptions collected in Britain by ſir Robert Cotton, and in the antechapel is an elegant ſtatue of Newton by Roubiliac. The grand court is 344 feet by 325, and the obſervatory well furniſhed. This college now maintains 65 fellows, 91 ſcholars, 20 almſmen, and other officers, and three royal profeſſors. No leſs than four archbiſhops and 32 biſhops have received their education here, beſides a number of eminent writers, ſtateſmen, &c. Among them, Bacon, Newton, Ray, Bentley, Barrow.

Trinity college.

Emanuel college was erected on the ſite of the Dominican friary, founded or augmented 1280 by Alice widow of Robert Vere ſecond earl of Oxford, granted at the diſſolution to Mr. Sherwood, of whom it was purchaſed by ſir Walter Mildmay, chancellor and treaſurer of the exchequer, who founded this college 1589 for a maſter and three fellows, now 14 fellows, and 60 ſcholars. The chapel was built by archbiſhop Sancroft [7], and the front of the college has been juſt finiſhed in a ſubſtantial elegant taſte. Seven biſhops and one archbiſhop received their education here [h].

Emanuel college.

Sidney Suſſex college was founded on the ſite of the Franciſcans or Grey friars built by Henry III. or Edward I. and famous for being the place where the public exerciſes were kept before the ſchools were founded. Frances Sidney, widow of Thomas Radcliffe third earl of Suſſex, left a ſum of money for founding this college, which was performed by her executors for a maſter, 16 fellows, &c. Sir Francis Clark augmented the ſcholarſhips, founded four fellowſhips and eight ſcholarſhips, beſides building the ſouth ſide of the ſecond court. The chapel and library were the refectory of the Franciſcans, and are now rebuilt, and ſir John Brereton was another benefactor to the amount of above £.2000. It has 12 fellows and 28 ſcholars [i]. One archbiſhop and ſix biſhops were bred here.

Sidney Suſſex college.

The ſchools were at firſt kept in private houſes hired every ten years for the ſole uſe of the Univerſity.

The Schools.

[a] G. Tan. 56. [b] G. Tan. 43. [c] G. C. Tan. 55. [d] G. Tan. 43. [e] G. Tan. 54. [f] Tan. 51. [g] Tan. 52. [7] G. [h] G. Tan. 49. [i] Tan. 48.

In 1443 public ſchools were begun in the place where they now ſtand at the expence of the Univerſity aſſiſted by benefactors. The weſt ſide of the court, containing the Philoſophy or Batchelors' ſchool below and the Phyſic and Law ſchools above, was built at the coſt of the Univerſity. The north ſide, containing the Divinity ſchools below and the Regent and Non Regent houſes above, by ſir William Thorpe of Lincolnſhire. The ſouth ſide, containing the Logic and Greek ſchools, 1475, by Laurence Booth biſhop of Durham, and chancellor of the Univerſity; and the eaſt ſide or entrance with the handſome porch (whoſe arch is now at Maddingley and the gates themſelves at Suffolk) by archbiſhop Rotheram 1475. The library above was built and furniſhed by the ſame benefactor and Tunſtall biſhop of Durham. Few of the original books are now to be found. But it hath been greatly augmented by the bounty of king George I. who, having purchaſed for £. 12,000. a large and valuable collection of books and MSS. 30,000 volumes, made by Dr. John Moor biſhop of Ely, was pleaſed to beſtow it on the Univerſity[g]. The whole building above ſtairs, the eaſt ſide being rebuilt, has been appropriated to the uſes of a library. The ſenate houſe forming the north ſide of an intended quadrangle, whoſe oppoſite ſide was to contain the conſiſtory, regiſter houſe, and printing-office, was begun 1722, and finiſhed 173., 100 feet long, and 43 broad, and 33 high. The great bridge over the Cam was rebuilt 175., and ſeveral Roman coins and other antiquities found in the foundations. Among the ſeveral bridges laid over this river for the convenience of the colleges, the cycloidical one of three arches at Trinity college, built 1765, deſerves notice.

A 17th college is intended by the will of ſir Jacob Downing of Gamlinghay, bart. who left the reverſion of his eſtate there for that purpoſe, under the direction of truſtees. But little progreſs has hitherto been made in this new foundation.

Before the founding of the preſent 16 colleges and halls, here were, including ſome already mentioned, upwards of 30 inns or hoſtels where ſtudents lived and ſtudied at their own charge and under a principal[k]. The following is but an imperfect liſt of them.

1. Auguſtine's hoſtel, on the ſouth ſide of the Mitre tavern, now Jude's coffee-houſe.

2. Bernard's hoſtel, where now Bene't college ſtable-yard.

3. Bolton's place, now part of Pembroke hall.

4. Borden's hoſtle, between the Roſe back gate and St. Michael's church.

5. St. Botolph's hoſtle, between St. Botolph's church and Pembroke hall.

6. St. Clement's hoſtel, ſouth of St. Clement's church.

7. Couſin's place, part of Pembroke hall.

8. St. Croſs's hoſtel, in Freeſchool-lane behind Bene't college garden and tennis court.

9. St. Edward's hoſtle, oppoſite the eaſt end of Little St. Mary's church between Pembroke and Peter houſe lodge.

10. Ely convent for the monks of Ely, an old building behind Trinity-hall lodge.

11. Another between the Roſe back gate and the weſt end of Green ſtreet.

12. Garret's or Gerard's hoſtel, part of Trinity hall next to Garret hoſtle bridge.

13. God's houſe, now profeſſor Plumtree's houſe, and others ſouthward.

14. Another, or Bingham's hoſtel, now King's college old court, removed to Chriſt's college by Henry VI.

15. St. Gregory's hoſtel, where now Trinity college hall or lodge.

16. Jeſus and St. John's hoſtel, included in Peter houſe.

17. St. John's hoſtel, part of St. John's college. The old chapel is ſtanding.

18. St. Katharine's hoſtel, now Mr. York and Mr. Burrows's houſes oppoſite the end of Green ſtreet.

19. Knapton's place, part of Pembroke hall.

20. St. Margaret's hoſtel, eaſt of Trinity college, facing the White Bear.

21. St. Mary's hoſtel, on the north ſide of Little St. Mary's church.

22. St. Michael's houſe, now part of Trinity college bakehouſe.

23. St. Nicholas' hoſtel, the houſe of the late profeſſor Chappelow, nearly oppoſite the Brazen George yard in St. Andrew's pariſh.

24. Oving's inn, now that part of Trinity college called Biſhop's hoſtel.

25. St. Paul's inn, now the Roſe tavern.

26. Phiſwick's hoſtel, part of Trinity college, next to Caius college.

27. Rud's hoſtel, now the Caſtle inn in St. Andrew's pariſh.

28. St. Thomas's hoſtel, now the maſter of Pembroke's garden; and the adjoining leas are called St. Thomas's.

29. Tiled hoſtel, now part of Trinity college ſtable yard.

30. Trinity hoſtel, ſouth of Trinity college, now gardens.

31. Univerſity hoſtel, granted to Pembroke hall, 1350.

Pythagoras' ſchool, or Merton hall, in a garden adjoining to St. John's college walks, is falſely ſuppoſed to have been the place where the Croyland monks read lectures, or a college founded before the Conqueſt, but is really the infirmary to St. John's hoſtel. Edward IV. took it from King's college here, and gave it to Merton college, Oxford, whoſe property it has ever ſince been. Pytha ſchool

"Univerſity education being eſſential in the deſign of Walter de Merton, and the Univerſity itſelf not in that way of eſtabliſhment at Oxford on his firſt, as on his after modelling his deſign, he (who had ſeen the interruptions here by interdicts, ſucceſſions, and removals, &c.) no leſs naturally began it in the uncertainty of 1264, by making proviſion for his ſcholars either in or out of Oxford, as it might happen. Thence (under the better auſpices of 1274) he ſupereminently compleated it by ſo eſtabliſhing them in it, as at the ſame time it fixed them here was effectual in itſelf and its example to fix and eſtabliſh, in other ſort than before, and in ſort as at preſent, the entire univerſity here.

"Merton hall in Cambridge, though obtained between the two periods, being (as all endowments before the laſt of them) ad perpetuam ſuſtentationem ſcolarium in ſcolis degentium Oxoniæ vel alibi, ubi ſtudium vigere

[g] G.

[k] Fuller's Hiſt. of Cambridge, 26.

vigere contigerit: it ſeems almoſt a queſtion of courſe, whether the founder in this addition (the place as well as domicilium in it conſidered) might be altogether unmindful of ſuch an alibi in Cambridge, in caſe of variation at Oxford, and transferring hither.

"The college concern then taking us more than 500 years back, we are to look to its evidences for the poſſeſſors before them. And herein it is found, that a family of the name of Dunning, by a ſucceſſion of anceſtors from the Conqueſt, hereditarily poſſeſſed this eſtate from the crown (allowing for detachments from and additions to it), with the capital meſſuage or manſion in Cambridge in which they lived, and which (till its change of name on its coming to the college), paſſed under the deſcription of the or their ſtone houſe in Cambridge, with a garden and court, and all other its appurtenances: the ſame too being deſcribed as a manor, and appearing to have been ſituated by the caſtle in Cambridge. Among the title deeds, and as part of the title of this eſtate, we find perpetual grants from Anthony and Richard, the maſters and brethren of the old houſe, or hoſpital of St. John the Evangeliſt in Cambridge, t. Henry III. made under the common ſeal thereof to the Dunnings and their heirs for ever (which the college in a generation or two after came to be), of two beds with all neceſſary bedding for ſick perſons to be found within that their ſtone houſe (ſcil. the hoſpital) for ever: and likewiſe of a chaplain from among the religious of the ſaid hoſpital perpetually to celebrate for the ſaid Dunnings, &c. and both theſe in conſideration of lands by them granted to the ſaid hoſpital out of this eſtate. So that the college by themſelves or their bailif, &c. of this their old ſtone houſe, and its appurtenances, could, as it ſhould ſeem, ſupply the two beds with ſick, &c. according to the agreement, ſo long as the hoſpital was in a condition, or remained capable, of performing it.

"To all which need only be added, that though we often have the name of Merton hall, we meet not with one word of Pythagoras in all the writings of this eſtate, being no leſs than 117 charters and two rolls, and ſome among them with broad ſeals, t. Henry VI. [l]"

Religious houſes, beſides thoſe converted into colleges, were a houſe of Bethleemite mendicants in Trumpington ſtreet, 1257, and of friars de Sacco in the ſame ſtreet, 1258. Friars of the order of ſervants of St. Mary near the caſtle before 1273. Dominicans or friars preachers founded where now Emanuel college and the ſtreet by it called from them Preachers ſtreet. Auguſtines in the Peaſe and Fiſh market about 1290 [m]. Their gate and cloyſter were ſtanding forty years ago. The houſes of Mr. Finch and Mr. Mortlake now occupy the ſite: the refectory ſerves for a lecture room to the profeſſor of Botany in Freeſchool-lane, and the green-houſe of the Phyſic garden is built on the ſite of the church. Gray Friars or Franciſcans, where now Sidney college. They ſucceeded the Jews ſynagogue, now the gaol and buildings adjoining. On taking down part of the gaol to enlarge the town-hall, a coffin lid with a croſs and initials on it was found. White Friars, or Carmelites, 1291, where now Queen's college and the provoſt of King's garden is. An arch of the gate remains in the walls.

By the caſtle end in Bell-lane is an almſhouſe for clergymen's widows. Another near it for antient maidens. Another for the ſame oppoſite Butt's green. One for men in Walls' lane. The Spital houſe for women at the ſouth entrance of the town. Another belonging to Caius college near the Phyſic garden. A free grammar ſchool in Freeſchool-lane; beſides ſix leſſer ſchools ſupported by voluntary contributions of the town and univerſity, jointly on a plan of Mr. William Whiſton. Almſhouſes.

The round church at Cambridge is properly called the church of the Holy Sepulchre in the Jewry; and from thence aroſe the vulgar opinion that it was a Jewiſh ſynagogue, and that the Jews lived there: but it being clear that the Jews had their ſynagogue, and lived in another part of the town, we may conclude that this church was built by the Templars, or by ſome perſon concerned in the Croiſades. It will be eaſier to aſcertain the age, than the founder of it: for the age may be nearly aſcertained by the ſtyle of the building, which, notwithſtanding the alterations and additions which have been made in it, has ſo much of the original left, that Mr. Eſſex has been able to trace all its parts, and repreſent it in the ſtate in which the builders left it; and from thence he ventures to pronounce, that it was built in the reign of Henry the Firſt, or between the firſt and ſecond Croiſades; and is, he apprehends, the oldeſt church of this form in England, being built before the Templars became maſters of the vaſt property they had afterwards in this and other parts of Europe. We have no certain account that the Templars poſſeſſed any part of what is called the Jewry; but that they did not poſſeſs the whole in the time of Edward the Firſt is certain; for in the year 1276, the fourth of his reign, one Robert Fulburn gave ſome ſtone houſes oppoſite St. Sepulchre's church to the cannons of Bernwell [n]. This was 37 years before the order of Templars was diſſolved; therefore theſe could not have been part of their habitations. Of thoſe houſes there are now nothing remaining. There was formerly in this pariſh betwixt St. John's college and the Round church, or St. Sepulchre's, an ancient houſe, called Bede's houſe; in which ſome have ſuppoſed venerable Bede lived and ſtudied [o]. But beſides the improbability, that a common dwelling-houſe built in the ſeventh century ſhould be ſtanding in the ſixteenth, and the uncertainty whether Bede ever lived in Cambridge, it is moſt probable the houſe ſo called might be built when the church was, for the reception of Beads-men, to pray for thoſe who were engaged in the wars for recovering the Holy Land from the Saracens; and therefore not improperly called the Beads houſe; which name it might retain ſome centuries after the uſe of it was forgotten, and the Beads-houſe would be eaſily miſtaken for Bede's houſe. As the church was built within a few years after the firſt eſtabliſhment of the order of Templars, we cannot ſuppoſe it was built by them, but by ſome perſon who had been in the firſt Croiſade, or, intending to engage therein, built it, and appointed a number of Beads-men, to pray therein for the ſucceſs of their arms and ſafe return: and as churches of this ſort were ſometimes built by private perſons, and given to the Templars, by this means the advowſon Round church.

[l] Ex inform. rev. Joſeph Kilner of Merton college.
[a] Parker's Hiſtory of Cambridge, from a MS. in the Cotton Library.
[m] Tan. 48, 49.
[n] Fuller's Church Hiſt. p. 98.

of

of it and the Beads-men's houſe might come into their poſſeſſion, if it ever belonged to them. The pariſh called the Jewry is but ſmall, and it ſeems was originally taken out of All Saints, the advowſon of which belonged to a ſmall Benedictine nunnery in the adjoining pariſh of St. Radigund, to whom, in the year 1122, Pope Honorius II. granted the impropriation of the rectory of St. Clement's [p], probably as a recompence for what was taken from the pariſh of All Saints, when St. Sepulchre's church was built, which was about that time, and when he appointed a habit for the Templars, and gave them a rule for their government. In the year 1134, Henry Froſt, a burgeſs of Cambridge, founded an hoſpital in the ſame pariſh, and dedicated it to St. John the Evangeliſt [q], which being enlarged by Nigellus biſhop of Ely, the nuns were recompenced by a ſmall rent paid out of ſome grounds lying in St. John the Baptiſt's pariſh [r]: but by theſe foundations the pariſh of All Saints was almoſt all taken away, and the nuns, who were poorly endowed, ſuffered very much, until Malcolm IV. king of Scotland, at that time earl and lord of all the town of Cambridge, gave them ten acres of land adjoining the nunnery, for their better ſupport; he likewiſe united the pariſh of St. Radigund to the remains of All Saints, and gave that church to the nunnery. Since that time, which was in the year 1160, the two pariſhes have been called by the name of All Saints, and the church is now called All Saints in the Jewry, and formerly All Saints near the hoſpital, to diſtinguiſh it from All Saints near the Caſtle; it being near the Hoſpital of St. John the Evangeliſt before mentioned [s], but not properly in the Jewry [t].

After the order of Knights Templars was diſſolved in the year 1313 the advowſon of St. Sepulchre's church was given to the priory of Bernwell [u], at which time it is probable the church was raiſed a ſtory higher for the reception of bells, and the chancel was then added, and dedicated to St. Andrew [x], the patron of Bernwell priory, in which the preſentation continued until that was diſſolved by Henry VIII. and is now in the gift of the biſhop of Ely. There can be no doubt either of the time when this church was built, or that they who built it intended it ſhould reſemble the church of the Reſurrection or Holy Sepulchre in Jeruſalem; and that as far as can be judged from the deſcriptions given of that church, this is the beſt copy we have of it in England. But a perfect reſemblance muſt not be expected, where the ſmallneſs of one compared to the other would make an exact imitation no better than a large model, which could be of no uſe but to amuſe the curious. This church, in its preſent ſtate, appears under a variety of diſadvantages, ariſing from the many alterations and additions it has undergone ſince it was firſt built. It is a ſtory higher than the architect intended it ſhould be. This addition was made for the reception of bells, in the reign of Edward the Second, and all the windows (except one now out of view) were then altered to give more light. The preſent chancel was likewiſe added at that time, and the ornaments about the door were defaced and partly hid by a wooden portal; but to compleat the deformity, a modern building has been added on the north ſide of the chancel. The inſide is much deformed by a gallery built juſt above the arches, which reduces the circle to a ſquare, and by its projection hides the pillars and arches of the upper portico. Pews, which are no ornament to any church, and never intended in this, fill the area below, and not only incumber the pillars, ſo that they appear much heavier, and more out of proportion, than they are, but deſtroy the real form and apparent magnitude of the building [y].

Water was firſt brought to the town from the Nine Wells at the foot of Gogmagog hills, by the firſt maſter of Sidney college, on a plan of archbiſhop Parker's. It was continued through Pembroke hall into the King's ditch through Sidney college by Jeſus green into the river. Hobſon the carrier built the conduit, and laid leaden pipes from the town's end to the conduit and market-place.

In this town were born ſir John Cheke 1514, who died 1557, and about 1600 the learned Dr. Jeremiah Taylor biſhop of Down and Conner, who died 1667.

Barnwell priory, firſt founded 1092 for a prior and ſix canons regular, near St. Giles' church by the caſtle by Picot a Norman, lord of Bourne, and many years ſheriff of this county, removed to the other ſide of the river by Pain Peverell for Auſtin canons, was valued at the diſſolution at £. 256. per annum. [z] Scarce a few walls now remain. To it belonged the ſpot whereon is now kept Stourbridge fair. This fair, which Dr. Stukeley deduces from his hero Carauſius, is certainly of early origin, and has continued of great note till the different mode of tranſacting buſineſs now in uſe has ſuperſeded the concourſe of traders to it. On the field is a ſmall antient chapel belonging to an hoſpital for lepers founded in the beginning of the 13th century [a], called the free chapel of St. Mary Magdalen at Steresbrygge by Barnwell, whoſe cuſtos demanded dues from all merchandizes expoſed in its yard, 6*s*. 8*d*. for every booth [b] ſet up there, which, by a jury 1412, 14 Henry IV. was given in his favour againſt the bailiffs of Cambridge. Mr. Blomfield [c] derives Steresbrigge from the bridge over which the ſteers or beaſts were driven, and not from the river Sture, or Stur, as Layer and others.

Barnwell.

Stourbridge fair.

"The burgeſſes of Cambridge, I ſuppoſe as founders, had the preſentation to the hoſpital for lepers at Stourbridge near Barnwell, where there was, and is yet, a ſmall chapel (endowed) dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen. This, they complain, had likewiſe been alienated from them by Hugh Norwold and his ſucceſſors, who had collated chaplains at their pleaſure. But what is moſt remarkable, they find upon inquiſition that there was a certain fair belonging to the ſaid hoſpital at the feaſt of the exaltation of the Holy Croſs within the precincts of the hoſpital, which was held by grant from king John for the uſe and maintenance of the lepers, which falling

[p] Parker's Hiſt. of Camb. p. 161. [q] Tanner, p. 43. [r] Archives of Jeſus college.

[s] Now St. John's college.

[t] In a taxation roll, 1255, it is called eccleſia "Omnium Sanctorum juxta Hoſpitale." In 1255 in a taxation made of all eccleſiaſtical and temporal eſtates, according to their true value throughout all England, it was valued at 1 mark by the name of Eccleſia Sti. Sepulchri.

[u] As this church was not taxed among the ſpiritualities belonging to the priory of Barnwell, in the year 1291, twenty-two years before the order was diſſolved, it probably did not belong to them until after the year 1313; but it is uncertain to whom it belonged before.

[x] Blomfield's Collect.

[y] Mr. Eſſex on the origin and antiquity of Round Churches. Archæol. VI. 173.—177.

[z] Tan. 41. [a] Ib. 48. Reg. Fordham ep. Elien. [b] Macellus. [c] Coll. MSS. pen. Editor.

in

in September within the compaſs allotted for that purpoſe[d] did doubtleſs give birth and original to Sturbridge fair. This is certain that in Henry VIIth's time John Arundell the chaplain of the free chapell of Steresbridge claimed a right of ſtallage within the precincts of that chappel from all perſons merchandizing in that fair, and upon a hearing in the Exchequer the ſame privilege was adjudged to him upon this plea that the ſame right had been enjoyed there by his predeceſſors. This perhaps is too large a digreſſion, but will not I hope be unacceptable to ſcholars, being only a ramble from Cambridge to Sturbridge fair[d].

In the year 1388, Richard II. came to the priory of Barnwell, and held a parliament there, which by all authors is ſaid to be held at Cambridge, and indeed ſo it was, for Barnwell is a pariſh in Cambridge. Here it was that the ſaid king delivered all the temporalities of the biſhoprick of Ely to John Fordham, whom he had preferred to that ſee which was vacant by the tranſlation of Thomas de Arundell to York[e]. In this parliament divers ſtatutes were ordained; "as for the limiting of ſervants wages; for puniſhing of vagrant perſons; for inhibiting certain perſons to wear weapons; for the debarring of unlawful games; for maintenance of ſhooting in the long bow; for removing of the ſtaple of wooles from Middleburgh into Calis; for labourers not to be received but where they are inhabiting, except with licence under ſeal of the hundred where they dwell. There was alſo an act made, that none ſhould go forth out of the realm to purchaſe any benefice with cure or without, excepting licence obtained of the king, and if they did contrary thereto they were to be excluded out of the king's protection. The clergy granted a tenth and the laity a fifteenth in this parliament. During the ſitting of this parliament ſir Thomas Trivett riding with the king towards Barnwell, where the king lodged, by ſpuring his horſe too much the horſe fell with him ſo violently to the ground that his entrails within him were ſo much bruiſed that he died the next day. Many rejoiced at his death, he being eſteemed a haughty proud man as well as ſuſpected not to have dealt juſtly with the biſhop of Norwich in the journey which the biſhop had made into Flanders. But the chief reaſon of his being hated was becauſe he ſtood with the king againſt the lords, and counſelled him in the year laſt paſt to diſpatch them out of the way[e].

At Stow Quoi was born 1650 Jeremiah Collier the nonjuring writer, and as ſome ſay biſhop, who died 1730.

A mile north of Cambridge at Arbury[f] in Cheſterton or Impington pariſh is a large ſquariſh camp, in which Roman coins have been found, particularly one of ſilver with the head of Rome on one ſide, and on the reverſe Caſtor and Pollux on horſeback. The pariſh has the name of Cheſterton[g] from Cambridge caſtle, which is in Cheſterton pariſh. In the church-yard are ſeveral ſtone coffin lids with croſſes; and the remains of a manſion houſe of the priors of Barnwell ſerve as a granary.

At Haſlingfield, ſouth weſt of Cambridge, on Whitehill, about half a mile from the town, was a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary, much reſorted to by devout perſons. Among other offerings hung up was a huge pair of iron fetters, offered by one of the lords Scales in commemoration of his deliverance from ſome impriſonment. The ſite in Mr. Layer's time was incloſed with trees or buſhes. Out of a barrow between this village and Comberton was taken a freeſtone coffin covered with a ſtone inlaid of divers colours as Mr. Layer was told, which he ſuppoſed belonged to ſome noble perſonage. Such an one now lies on the ſite of the abbey church at Waverley in Surrey.

Comberton. The manor of Comberton adjoining, was held by Philip de Haſtings of the king by the ſervice of keeping the king's falcon, and not by knights ſervice[h]. Half a hide here was held by grand ſerjeantry of being the king's baker t. Edward I. In the windows of the church are two devices, one a ladder, probably of the family of Deſchalers who had great property in theſe parts: the other a tun pierced by a tree, probably the rebus of ſome diſtinguiſhed inhabitant or benefactor.

Maddingley. Maddingley, three miles weſt of Cambridge, the ſeat of ſir John Cotton, bart. ſtands within two miles of the Roman road, whence Mr. Gale ſuppoſed it might have its name Maidenley as Maiden Caſtle near Dorcheſter[i].

The ſtatute 34 and 35 Henry VIII. c. 24. recites, that certain perſons were infeoffed of and in the manor of Burlewas, otherwiſe called the Shire manor of the county of Cambridge, lying and being in the pariſh of Maddingley, being of the yearly value of 10*l*. to letten the ſame to farm at this day, to the uſe and intent that the profits thereof ſhould be received and taken for and towards the payment of the fees and wages of the knights of the ſame county of Cambridge, being choſen for the parliament within the ſaid county; and therefore, for the ſure and more perfect continuance thereof, and at the requeſt of the gentlemen and inhabitants of the county, it enacts, that John Hind, one of the king's ſerjeants at law, ſhall ſtand ſeiſed of the ſaid manor, to the uſe of himſelf, his heirs and aſſigns for ever, on condition to pay every Michaelmas 10*l*. to the ſheriff and two knights of the ſhire, who are thereby incorporated by the name of Wardens of the fees and wages of the knights of the ſhire of Cambridge, for the uſe of the ſaid knights of the ſhire towards the maintenance of their charges.

Long Stanton. Long Stanton houſe, built 1560, ſeven miles from Cambridge, has been the ſeat of the Hattons ever ſince the end of the 16th century. The chancellor Hatton was of this family. This village has two diſtinct pariſhes and churches.

Cottenham. Cottenham belonged to Croyland abbey, and is remarkable for a peculiar kind of new cheeſe. It gave birth 1630 to Thomas Tenniſon, archbiſhop of Canterbury 1694, who died 1715.

Girton. Girton, the next village, produces a particular ſort of pippins called by its name.

Hokington vicarage belonged to Croyland abbey of the gift of Turketil. They had a diſpute with the abbey of Barnwell about its tithes. It was purchaſed by Queen's college Cambridge, about 1591, and is the only impropriation they have. It founded 12 ſcholarſhips, which are ſo ſmall that they are of little uſe to the college.

[d] Extract from Mr. Baker's Hiſtory of St. John's Houſe and St. John's college, fol. 3 and 4. copied from the original in the Britiſh Muſeum, and given to the Library of St. John's college by Dr. Newcome, Maſter, Jan. 5, 1765.
[e] Reg. Fordham. Vita Ric. II. 105, 106. Stowe's Ann. p. 304. Hollinſhed, II. 465.
[f] Arborrow meadows. MS. n. G.
[g] G. ex Aubrey MS.
[h] Paſ. Brevia 9 E. II. rot. 40. a. Madox. Hiſt. of Exch. p. 454.
[i] MS. n. G.

Gogmagog hills.

The camp on Gogmagog hills or Vandlebury has been ſuppoſed Britiſh. It is triple trencht, with two ditches, rudely circular, and 246 paces diameter. It is on the hill, as the Britiſh manner was, and the camp at Arbury might be Roman oppoſite to it. Near it runs a Roman way from the brow of the hill ſouthwards, which, together with the Roman coins found there 1685 in making a cellar, probably induced Dr. Gale in his Comment on Antoninus, to reckon it Roman, not regarding its circular figure, as it appears from Vegetius and from other inſtances in England that the Romans did not confine themſelves to a ſquare, but conſulted the nature and conveniences of the ground[12]. Several Roman coins in large braſs and a ſilver ring were found here 1730[k]; and in 1752 a ſmall braſs of NERO, NERO CLAVD. CAES. DRVSVS GER. PRINC. IVVENT. Reverſe a globe on an altar[l]. The Roman way from theſe hills points to Grantcheſter, or as others to Cheſterton. All agree it paſſed near Cambridge. Perhaps Grantcheſter and this camp may have been æſtiva to Cambridge[m]. Salmon[n] ſuppoſes Cheſterton named from the æſtiva to Hogmagog hills, q. d. Vadum ad Caſtra. The road in Antoninus's 5th Iter from Colcheſter to Lincoln paſſes the river here. He fixes Camboritum on Hogmagog hills, where he ſays coins of Valentinus and Valens were found; and thinks Aubrey by Arbury meant the place of that name incloſed by a vallum without a ditch a mile above Aſhwell in Herts, at the head of the river that comes to Cambridge, where Mr. Camden[o] once placed Magiovinium. Salmon[p] queries if Cam had that name till it comes to Cambridge.

Vandlebury is the 4th of the chain of forts which begin at the large camp on the hill where the Hunting tower ſtood oppoſite to Audley inn. Littlebury church ſtands in another. The walled town at Cheſterford is a third. To Vandlebury ſucceeded Grantaceaſter, then Arbury, and laſt Belſars hills: all within ſight of one another, reaching from the woodland of Eſſex to the fens, and croſſed by ſeveral parallel ditches quite to the Devil's ditch, ſucceſſively made by Boadicea and the Iceni as they retreated before the Romans after they had ſacked Verulam.

This trench antiently had only one entrance to it as it were by a gate, but at this day, if I be not miſtaken, ſays Mr. Layer in his MS. collections, it hath four ſeveral entrances into it. The Vandals ſtationed here were ſent with the Burgundians by Probus into Bretagne, where they were ready in caſe of any diſturbances. Mr. Layer conceives theſe hills had the name of Gogmagog from a huge and mighty portraiture of a giant, which the ſcholars of Cambridge cut upon the turf or ſurface of the earth within the ſaid trench, and not unlikely might call it Gogmagog, which he had ſeen, but which was in his time diſcontinued. If this were the caſe, this enormous figure is to be added to thoſe already mentioned, as Dorſet, Berks, Buckingham, and other counties. Theſe hills are in Stapleford pariſh on the river Cam[q].

It is remarkable there ſhould be a Vandlebury and a camp at or near Biceſter and between it and Oxford. On Gogmagog hills is a modern houſe of lord Godolphin's, in digging the foundation for which were found a knuckle ring, with coins of Trajan and Antoninus Pius[r]. In opening a tumulus by the ſide of the Roman way 1778 were found a number of bodies laid by each other's ſide, but in different directions[s].

Linton, a ſmall market town, had a priory, cell to St. Jacutus in Bretaigne, valued at £. 23. 8*s*. 10*d*.[t] given by Henry VIII. to Pembroke hall, who are now poſſeſſors of it, but no remains of it appear. It ſeems to have ſtood on the ſpot where a handſome houſe now ſtands cloſe by the river and bridge in Linton, lately purchaſed by the biſhop of Ely of lord Montfort. I have ſeen a bronze buſt of a ſatyr found here, very like that engraved by C. Caylus I. pl. LXV. fig. 1. Here alſo at Bareham was a priory of Crouched friars, cell to Welnetham, Suffolk[u], where three or four crutched friars uſed to dwell. It was granted by Henry VIII. to Philip Paris, who ſold it to the family of Milliſent, the widow of the laſt of whom married Mr. Landall preſent poſſeſſor in her right. The preſent manſion was probably built out of the materials of the priory, being an antient ſtructure, ſeemingly of the age of Elizabeth: no cloiſters remain, and the glaſs painting in the chapel window is very inconſiderable. The chapel ſtill uſed as ſuch is very ſmall. Mr. Cole had the original ſeal of this houſe; St. Margaret crowned holding a croſs in her right hand wherewith ſhe pierces a dragon, and in her left a book; before her a crouched friar on his knees, and over him a croſs patée. Round the ſeal, "S. prioris sce crucis de Barhaum."

Linton. Barcham.

Baberham was the ſeat of ſir Toby ſon of ſir Horace Palavicini, afterwards of the Benets, whoſe heir ſold it, and the magnificent houſe was pulled down 1767, and the materials ſold. Here were two great floods 1655 and 1749[x]. The church was given by Geffrey de Scales to Waltham abbey[y]. The conſtant tradition that prevails about ſir Horace Palavicini at the place where he lived, is, that he was collector of the Pope's dues in England in queen Mary's time, and on her death, and her ſiſter's acceſſion, he took the liberty of detaining his maſter's money, and ſtaying in a country, where, at that time, ſuch a piece of knavery and diſhoneſty would be ſure to meet with public applauſe, and not to be looked upon in the light it deſerved. Thus much is certain, that he was owner of the eſtate and houſe at Baberham, about five or ſix miles from Cambridge, where in the hall, on a noble chimney piece, adorned with the hiſtory of Mutius Scævola, were his arms, as they were alſo over the portal of the door of the manor houſe at Little Shelford, two miles from Baberham, built by him in the Italian ſtile, with a large piazza or gallery, with pillars in front of the ſecond ſtory. This laſt houſe was pulled down about 20 years ago, and a new one erected in the ſame delightful ſituation, on the banks of a pretty trout ſtream, by Mr. William Finch, an opulent ironmonger of Cambridge, who purchaſed the eſtate. The Palavicini family were all baptized and buried at Baberham, as appears by the following entries in the pariſh regiſter of that village.

Baber.

Toby, ſon of ſir Horatio Palavicini, born 20th May, and baptized the ſame day, 1593.

Baptina, daughter of ſir Horace Palavicini, baptized 22d September, 1594.

[12] G. [k] A. S. min. [l] Ib. [m] Horſley, 431. [n] Survey, 204, 205.
[o] Herts, Vol. I. p. 342. [p] Ib. 200. [q] Layer's MS.
[r] Spalding Society's min. [s] Ex inform. M. Tyſon.
[t] Tan. 48. [u] Ib. 51. [x] Carter, 117, 118. [y] Reg. Waltham abb. in Bibl. Cott.

Horace Palivicini, ſon of Toby Palivicini, and Jane his wife, baptized 1ſt September, 1611.

Tobias, ſon of Toby Palivicini, baptized July 14, 1612.

James, ſon of Toby Palivicini, baptized 3d December, 1620.

Sir Horace Palivicini, died 6th July, 1600; his body was buried the 17th, and his funeral kept Auguſt 4, 1600.

Tobias Palivicini, buried 19th November, 1612.

Elizabeth, daughter of Toby Palivicini, buried 23d May, 1620.

Mr. Oliver Cromwell, and the lady Anne Palivicini, married July 7th, 1601.

By the laſt entry it appears that ſir Horace's widow paid him the compliment not to marry again till a full year after the death of her huſband: but one cannot help obſerving, that it was the very firſt day after the year was complete.

The following epitaph upon ſir Horace is remarkable for the oddity of it, and confirms what is ſaid before of him, concerning his honeſty and integrity:

Here lyes Horatio Palavazene,
Who robb'd the Pope to lend the Queene.
Hee was a Theife. A Thiefe! Thow lyeſt.
For whie? Hee robb'd but Antichriſt.
Him Death with beſome ſwept from Babram
Into the boſome of ould Abraham:
But then came Hercules with his clubb,
And ſtruck him down to Belzebub.

If we had not the aforeſaid authorities from the Regiſters and this epitaph, for ſir Horace's living in Cambridgeſhire, we were ſufficiently informed of that circumſtance, by that very ridiculous fellow, Tom Coryat, who tells us, p. 255. 259. of his Crudities, that he met at Mezolt one John Curtabatus of Chiavenna, who ſpoke pretty good Engliſh, having ſerved ſir Horace Palavicini many years in Cambridgeſhire. How long before 1593 ſir Horace ſettled himſelf at Baberham, I know not; but ſuppoſe only for a ſhort time. That he was in ſome repute at court in 1596, is evident, I think, from lord Arundel of Wardour, as he was afterwards created, referring his caſe (on his accepting the title of Count of the empire, for which he was put into confinement by the queen) to him among others, in theſe words, in his letter to one of the principal lords of queen Elizabeth's court[z], "Neither doe I "thinke England to be ſo unfurniſhed of experienced "men, but that either Horatio Pallavicino, ſir Ro"bert Sidney, Mr. Dyer, or ſome other, can wit"neſs a truth therein." That he was knighted before 1589, appears from a copy of verſes addreſſed to him on that occaſion, by Thomas Newton, in his Illuſtrium aliquot Anglorum Encomia, printed that year, and republiſhed in the 2d edition of Leland's Collectanea, 1770, Vol. V. p. 174. In the Acta Regia, p. 504, it appears, that he was employed by the queen the year following, viz. 1590, to William Landgrave of Heſſe; and at p. 508 of the ſame Collections, in this: "A patent for the ve"neration of Horace Palaviceni, a Genoeſe, dated "Nov. 2, 1586. at Weſtminſter. The king makes "denizens, and the parliament naturalizes. Horace "Palavicini was employed by the queen in her Ne"gotiations with the German princes."

Sir Horace Palavicini purchaſed the houſe at Baberham probably about this time, for on one of the fronts of the noble old houſe were theſe letters R. T. for Robert Taylor, and this date 1576. This noble Gothic building, being one of the beſt houſes in the county and the largeſt, was called Baberham Place, and Mr. Cole's father's houſe was contiguous to part of the offices, in a farm yard, he being tenant under the family of Benet, who owned it for ſome generations. Alexander Benet, eſq. who married a daughter of the late Peter Burrell, eſq. to the admiration of every one, in 1765 ſold the family houſe and pictures, and eſtate, and rectory, which had been in the family ever ſince Charles Iſt's time. The chief front to the eaſt was of brick, and had three fine ſemicircular bow windows in it. In the church are ſeveral good monuments of the family of Benet, who were baronets, and repreſented the county in many parliaments. Levinus Benet founded a free ſchool here. On the death of ſir Richard Benet the eſtate came to the Fiſhers. Robert Jones, eſq. an Eaſt India Nabob, purchaſed the eſtate of the perſon who bought it of Mr. Benet. He built a neat box on the ſite of the old houſe, and having repreſented Huntingdon in parliament died 1774.

The arms of Palavicini are thus blazoned according to father Meneſtrier: Cinque Points d'Or équipollez à quatre d'Azur, au Chef d'Or chargé d'une Eſtacade alaiſée de Sable.

Balſham, ſeven miles ſouth-eaſt of Cambridge, gave birth to Hugh de Balſham, founder of Peter houſe. Balſham.

At Great Shelford was born William Redman biſhop of Norwich 1602. In the church at Little Shelford is a monument for ſir John de Frevile t. Edward II.[a] whoſe family were ſeated here from the reign of Henry I. till Robert and his ſon George ſold it to John Banks, eſq. who alienated the principal part of it to ſir Toby Palavicini, who built here a neat manſion houſe, which was ſcarce finiſhed ere he ſold it to John Gill of Gillingham, eſq.[b] It was afterwards taken down by William Finch, eſq; who built a handſome ſeat on the ſpot. Great and Little Shelford.

Sawſton, ſix miles from Cambridge, ſtill belongs to the Huddleſtones, a catholic family, deſcended from ſir John Huddleſtone, high ſheriff of this county, who entertained princeſs Mary, and in the uſurpation of Jane Grey conveyed her behind him to Framlingham caſtle, for which, on her acceſſion, ſhe made him a privy counſellor, and gave him the materials of Cambridge caſtle to build his fine manſion here. John Nevill, created marquis of Montacute by Edward IV. who purpoſed to match his eldeſt ſon George duke of Bedford with his own eldeſt daughter Elizabeth, was one of the moſt notorious temporiſers of that or any other reign, and at laſt ſlain by his brother the earl of Warwick's ſervants, for intending to deſert from Henry VI. at the battle of Barnet. He married Iſabel daughter of ſir Edward Ingoldeſthorp of Burgh green, by whom he had two ſons, the younger buried here, and five daughters, the younger married to ſir William Huddleſtone of this place[c]. Sawſton.

At Burgh green, 12 miles from Cambridge, are ſome old monuments of the Burghs within and without the church. Burgh green.

[z] Printed in Peck's Deſiderata curioſa, vol. II. p. 52. Lib. 7.
[a] Blomf. Coll. Cantab. 7. [b] Layer MS. [c] Dugd. Bar. I. 307.

Willingham

Willingham. Willingham is memorable for a lad, who, before he was a year old, had marks of puberty; before he was three years old was above three feet and a half high, and before he was ſix, died as it were in an advanced age 1741 as his epitaph in the churchyard ſets forth [d].

Cheveley. Cheveley has a handſome ſeat of the late duke of Somerſet, who much enlarged it. It formerly belonged to the earl of Dover.

Newmarket. Newmarket is a long well-built market town partly in this county and partly in Suffolk [e], ſurrounded by a heath, and much reſorted to for its races, which are twice a year, in Eaſter week and in October. The king has a houſe here, built by James I. and being demoliſhed by the civil war, it was rebuilt by Charles II. and two royal plates are run for annually, one for £. 100. Theſe races are ſuppoſed to have been eſtabliſhed in the reign of Charles II. The town was burnt down in March 1683, when the king, queen, and duke of York were there; the damage amounting to upwards of £. 20,000. towards which not quite £. 3000 was collected, and by a ſecond fire 17 . Here are two charity ſchools [f]. Near the heath were found about 1750 ſeveral coins of Trajan, one of Fauſtina ſen. rev. FOECVNDITAS, and one of Maximianus Herculius, rev. GENIO POP. ROM.

Kirtlington. Whether Kirtling, or, as it is alſo called Catledge, be the ſcene of the ſynod of A.D. 977, is uncertain. The Saxon Annals place it at Kyntlingtune, Bromton at Kerling, Hoveden at Kyrding in Eaſt Anglia [g], Florence of Worceſter at Kyrtlinege in Eaſt Anglia. Spelman finding no ſuch place there ſuppoſes it ſhould be Kirtleton in Oxfordſhire. He reads it Kyntlingtune, n being eaſily miſtaken for n; and Sideman biſhop of Devonſhire dying at this ſynod, willed to be buried in his own church at Crediton; but king Edward and archbiſhop Dunſtan ordered that he ſhould be buried in the church of Abingdon, and he was accordingly laid on the north ſide in the porch of St. Paul. So ſays the Saxon Chronicle, p. 124. and ſo biſhop Gibſon tranſlates it; thence inferring that Kirtlington was near Abingdon: but Spelman [h] tranſlates the command ꝑ hine man ꝓeꝑede to ꝺca manian mynꝺte ꝑ ıꝺ aet Abbanꝺune, that the hinds ſhould go on pilgrimage to Abingdon, and then concludes that the porch of St. Paul was at Crediton, contrary to the meaning of the original. Biſhop Gibſon adds, had the biſhop died in this county, Peterborough would have been a nearer monaſtery, unleſs Abingdon was preferred for being within the Weſt Saxon kingdom. Dr. Wilkins [i] places it at Kyrtlington in Oxfordſhire. The manor of Kirtling was purchaſed about 22 Henry VIII. by Edward North, clerk of parliament, and afterwards king's ſerjeant, &c. created a baron 1 Mary. He died 1564, and his great grandſon Charles marrying a daughter of the lord Grey of Wark, was created lord Grey 25 Charles II. and his ſon William united the two titles. That of Grey ended with him 1734, and his kinſman was created lord Guildford 1683, who died 1684, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and nameſake, created earl of Guildford 1752, whoſe ſon Frederic lord North was for 12 years ſucceſſively chancellor of the Exchequer. Much of Kirtling hall is pulled down. In the windows are arms of Henry VIII. and his laſt queen; others are adorned with medallions, &c. and in the hall is a portrait of a man with a falling band and this diſtich:

Terra eſt noctę die, ſed ego ſine lumine ſolis:
Occaſus terræ principis umbra mihi.

In the church are many family inſcriptions unnoticed by the Peerages.

Dominus Du. North baro de Kertling poſt varios errores et infortunia morbumque coævum
pernicioſſiſſimū ex
fide Dei et Salvatoris
n̄ri miſericordia beatior factus aut^r fort^æ an.
do. 1665. Febr. 22. æta.
84. vivens poſuit.

Horſe At Horſeheath William Allington ſheriff of the county t. Henry V. and knight of the ſhire 7 Henry VI. had a ſeat. His deſcendant William was created baron Allington of Killard 1642, and died ; and his ſon William baron of Wimondley c. Herts 1682 35 Charles II. which title expired with his ſon Giles a minor, and the other title with his brother Hildebrand [k]. The eſtate was bought by John Bromley of the antient family of that name in Shropſhire. His only ſon Henry was created lord Montfort, baron of Horſeheath 1741 14 George II. which titles are enjoyed by his ſon Thomas. Every thing was ſold here 1775, the park let to farm, the dwelling houſe to be pulled down. Hugh de Balſham biſhop of Ely, founder of Peterhouſe, was born here [l].

Caſt Shad Part of the caſtle of the Veres at Caſtle Camps is ſtill remaining. Adjoining to it is Sude or Sutbi, q. d. South Camps, vulgarly called Shady Camps, the ſeat of the Darrels [13]. The advowſon was given to Waltham abbey [m].

Fleam Fleamſdyke began at Pampisford, and runs by Hilderſam and Horſeheath five miles. Brent ditch runs from Melborn to Foulmire. Mr. Eſſex accounts for theſe dykes as thrown up ſeverally as the Britans or Eaſt Angles retreated from the enemy.

Will The title of baron de L'iſle probably ended in Robert ſon of the firſt baron. Their eſtate at Wilburgham belongs now to the Wards. Here died in retirement the diſgraced and wretched ſimoniacal biſhop of St. David's Dr. Thomas Watſon 1717, 80 years old [n]. The knights Templars had a ſettlement here, in which they were ſucceeded by the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem [o].

Tru Trumpington a village two miles ſouth of Cambridge, memorable for the Millar in Chaucer's Reeve's tale; the ruins of the mill ſtill remain. At Dam hill in this pariſh near the river have been found urns and other Roman antiquities with human bones now in Trinity college [p]. Lord Oxford had ſeveral beautiful vaſes and pateræ found here. I have a drawing by Beaupré Bell of a patera, having in the centre a griffin tearing a ſtag ſurrounded by a border of dogs, boars, hares, &c. and an outer one of flowers. A vaſe is engraved Pl. II. fig. 6.

Ful At Fulburne are alſo two churches in one churchyard dedicated to St. Vigor and to All Saints, and an almſhouſe for 11 poor people in the churchyard [q]. St. Vigor's church fell down through neglect of repairs a few years ſince. On one of its bells

[d] Phil. Tr. 475. Dawkes' Prodigium Willinghamenſe, 8vo.
[e] where ſee before, p. 79.
[f] Carter, p. 230.
[g] 249. b.
[h] Concil. p. 493.
[i] Concil. I. 262.
[k] Blomf. MS. coll.
[l] Bl. Ib.
[13] G.
[m] Layer's MS.
[n] Richardſon's Godwin.
[o] Tan. 46.
[p] Carter, 278.
[q] Blomf. MS.

was

was an inſcription that might be paralleled with that in the hinge at Mountneſſing in Eſſex before-mentioned, p. 53.

Jhe Nazarenus rex Judeorum.
Campana ſancti Vigoris.

And in the chancel a large braſs plate and inſcription for William Fulburne canon of St. Paul's, who died 1397 [r].

Cherry Hinton, ſo called from the abundance of cherry trees formerly growing there, is a village in a valley at the foot of Gogmagog hills, and the chief place where ſaffron is planted in this county [s]. In the chalkpits here are found various ſmall foſſil teeth and vertebrae of fiſh.

Triplow gives name to the hundred on whoſe ſkirts it ſtands. Here was born Elias Rubeus an author of Henry III's time 1280 [t], and here the parliament officers influenced by Cromwell formed the Council of Agitators 1648 [u].

Meldrith gave birth to Andrew Marvell, his father being vicar there [x].

Shepreth came from Chatteris abbey to the Wantons, of whom Nicholas left it to his nephew John Layer of the family of that name in Suffolk and Norfolk, and author of the collections for the hiſtory of three hundreds in this county, ſo often cited, who built a pretty houſe there and rebuilt the chancel, being patron of the rectory.

At Ickleton one of the Aubreys de Vere earls of Oxford founded a nunnery t. Henry II. valued at £. 71. 9s. 10s. per annum [y]. The nave of the church is one of the ſpecimens of rude Saxon architecture with maſſive ſhort pillars and rude capitals.

Swaffham Bolebec, four miles ſouth-weſt of Newmarket, ſo called from its lords, had a Benedictine nunnery founded by one of them, valued at £. 40. per annum [z]. This village is made up of three pariſhes; the other two called Priors or Little Swaffham from its belonging to Angleſea priory; and St. Ciric, have their churches in one yard. The tower of Swaffham Priors is ſquare at bottom with an octagon ſtory above and double that number of ſides upwards [a].

At Horningſea near Cambridge was a monaſtery of ſome note in the early Saxon times, ruined by the Danes about 870 [b].

The Devil's ditch was probably ſo called by corruption from one Davilier, who held the manor of Broome in Suffolk, by the ſervice of being conductor of the footmen of Norfolk and Suffolk, who were bound to ſerve the king in his Welſh wars, and their rendezvous was always to be at this ditch [c]. Mr. Warton [d] takes it for the diviſion of the Eaſt Angle kingdom, or rather their eccleſiaſtic juriſdiction. This ditch is one mile and an half from Newmarket, and the ditch on the Cambridge ſide. It begins at Reche from the weſt bank of the Cam, croſſes Newmarket heath and runs to Catlidge and ſo into Suffolk [e]. The ten or twelve pariſhes on its eaſt ſide, though in this county, ſtill belong to the biſhop of Norwich [14]. This looks as if, whoever made the other ditches, this was only a boundary of kingdoms.

"That the Devil's Ditch and like works were made by thoſe that inhabited between them and the ſea is manifeſt by its being on the ſide from the ſea, as it is in all thoſe in Wilts as noted by Dr. Stukeley, who aſſigned the ſame origin, that they were made ſome centuries before Cæſar by the firſt inhabitants that ſettled eaſtward, to ſecure themſelves from the attack of the inland Aborigines. The ſituation of this is ſo well choſen, that being only ſeven miles long it could ſecure Norfolk and Suffolk from midland invaſions, the fen ſecuring all between that and Lynne; and if there was a continuation of wood from Ditton to the Thames, as we have ſome accounts of its having been in later ages, it would cover Eſſex alſo. Its greatneſs proves it the work only of an whole province, eſpecially as there was for greater ſecurity a ſecond parallel to it called Fleamdike, at ſeven miles diſtant, not ſo big, but longer, beginning at Fen Ditton and ending at Balſam about 12 miles. One argument of its great antiquity is that many ways have been cut through it and the ditch filled up, yet ſuch is the nature of the ſoil, being chalk almoſt to the ſurface, that it drinks in all the rain that falls, and no water is ever ſeen in it nor upon any part of the heath; yet near Stetchworth, where the chalk is deeper below the ſurface, violent rains will occaſion ſome water to run and remain in hollows. Not far from thence was a gap cut in a low place, to which the water floating the ſurface tended, which has by length of time brought ſo much ſoil with it as to fill up the ditch for about a furlong each way, ſo that it is now ploughed.

"Another ditch about one mile ſouth of Bourn bridge, between Abingdon and Pampesford, points to Cambridge, on declining ground. Towards the middle it has been filled up for the Ikhield way to paſs over it, and therefore is older than the road. It is very large and deep, but what is remarkable is that it has no bank on either ſide. What became of the ſoil taken out, being chiefly chalk and rubble, and not fit for manure, is doubtful. This ditch is alſo conveniently ſituated for preventing the march of an army, the upper end cloſed with woods, the lower with flat ſoft land.

"Brant ditch, another ſuch ditch from Haydon, pointing near to Barrington, on the decline of the hill, is large, but on the lower land changes into a ſmall bank between two ditches, and two leſſer banks, continuing over part of Foulmire field till it ends in a piece of boggy ground: this part is juſt like that a mile north-eaſt of Newmarket.

"A bank of chalk, viſible in the fens, with deep moors on each ſide, continued for above a mile, ſetting off from north-eaſt of Swaffham and pointing to Denny.

"Another is ſaid to be continued above half a mile parallel to the river on Wicken uplands.

"Leſſer banks are, one in the field between Whitlesford and Foxton: another between Triplow and Foxton running up to Foulmire hedge [f]."

Reche, formerly a market town, to which before the draining of the fens ſhips of conſiderable burden came up, is now only a ſmall village or hamlet to Burwell, and famous for its horſe fair [g], which was granted to the corporation of Cambridge by king John by charter a. r. 2. Reche.

Burwell is now memorable only for having had two churches, of which but one remains, and the melancholy accident which happened here 1727, Burwell.

[r] Blomf. Coll. Cantab. p. 36.
[s] Carter, 204. Of this plant and cultivation ſee before in Eſſex.
[t] Fuller. Tan. Bib. Brit. [u] Carter, 277. [x] Fuller. Carter, 226. [y] Tan. 45.
[z] Tan. 46. [a] Blomf. Collect. 177, 178. [b] Tan. 40.
[c] MS. n. of Sm. Lethieullier, eſq. in Gibſon's Camden pen. Ed. See before, p. 72. [d] Hiſt. of Kiddington, p. 41.
[e] Carter, 246. [14] G.
[f] Dr. Maſon MS. The ditches a camp mentioned by Camden in Cambridgeſhire, a miſtake. [g] Carter 245.

when above 80 perſons were burnt and ſuffocated at a puppet-ſhew in a barn [h]. The only remains of the caſtle are the foundations ſurrounded with a deep moat and other outworks.

Landwade. Landwade, or as Mr. Camden calls it Lanheath, came to the Cotton family before Richard II. of whom ſir John was created a baronet 17 Charles I. and by marriage with Hinde became poſſeſſed of Maddingley. His great grandſon ſir John Hinde Cotton the 4th and preſent baronet enjoys both theſe eſtates. The family burying-place is at the former.

Iſelham. Iſelham belonged to the Uffords, a branch of the Peytons t. Henry III. and created earls of Suffolk 4 Edward III. which ended with the 2d earl 5 Richard II.[i] Here was a priory, cell to the abbey of St. Jacutus in Bretaigne, valued at £. 10. 13*s*. 4*d*.[k] The manor was held 18 Edward III. by Florence wife of Nicholas Fraunces of the earl of Arundel, by the ſervice of finding him whenever he came to a place therein called Heringeſmere, and there was war in England and not elſe, a ſmall piece of bacon on a lance, and a pair of gilt ſpurs, valued at 3*s*. 4*d*.[l]

Spinney. Wicken. Spinney in Wicken pariſh had a priory of Auſtin canons, founded by ſir Hugh de Malebiſſe its lord t. Henry III. united to Ely 1449 [m]. Here retired, died, and was buried Henry Cromwell, who was here viſited by Charles II. or one of his court, on which occaſion this tradition prevails, that his ſervants remembering the office he had formerly borne could not forbear ſhouldering a fork before him as a mace. It was the ſeat of the Gernons and Peytons. Lady Mary Baſſingburn 15 Edward II. endowed here an hoſpital for ſeven poor men, ſubject to the priory [n].

Chippenham. At Chippenham, four miles from Newmarket, is a houſe built by admiral Ruſſel, who won the battle of la Hogue, and whoſe daughter married Samuel Sandys, eſq; member for Worceſter, who ſucceeded to it 1729. It belonged afterwards to lord Sandys [o], as it did formerly to the Cromwells, Henry beforementioned having married a daughter of ſir Francis Ruſſel. It has been ſince ſold to Criſp Molyneux, eſq; member for Lynne. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars [p]. Here was found 1718 a ſkeleton with iron chains and rings, probably of his horſe [q], and another at Doddington in the iſle of Ely, where the biſhops of Ely had a palace [r], as they had alſo with a park at Downham in the iſle [s].

Bedford Level. The Great Level, as it is called, of the fens, or Bedford Level, includes thoſe in the four counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Lincoln, and Norfolk, though much the greater part except the firſt, including near 400,000 acres, was, till within about two centuries ago, almoſt intirely covered with water, except here and there a few iſlands. What accident occaſioned this alteration from the face which this tract is repreſented as wearing by the monkiſh hiſtorians, is not known. The reign of Elizabeth may be properly fixed on as the period when the great level began to become immediately a public care. In her 20th year a commiſſion was granted to ſir Thomas Cecil, ſir William Fitz Williams, and others, to drain the fens about Clow's croſs; with what ſucceſs is not known. An act of parliament paſſed 43 Elizabeth, on a general plan for draining not only this level but all the drowned lands in England; but the deſign failed on the queen's death. James I. revived it, but in ſo complex and unſteady a manner that nothing was effected till the reign of Charles I. In the 6th of that reign ſir Cornelius Vermuiden, a Hollander, well verſed in the buſineſs of draining, contracted with the commiſſioners of ſewers for draining the Great Level, to have 95,000 acres of the lands by him drained. His propoſals were rejected becauſe he was a foreigner; and an agreement was entered into with Francis earl of Bedford, who owned a very large quantity of this level, on the ſame terms. Charles granted to him and his adventurers a charter of incorporation, and the ſame year, which was only four from the date of Vermuiden's propoſals, the commiſſioners declared the great level drained, and his majeſty's ſurveyor attended to ſet out the earl's proportion: when by the irreſolution which marks the character of Charles I. the king's meaſures with regard to this proceeding were totally changed. Every diſcouragement was thrown in the way of the corporation. The king was declared undertaker of the work for 69,000 acres more: the earl who had devoted himſelf to the public ſervice here died 1641, the troubles came on, and his ſon William who adhered to the court no longer than its meaſures were to be juſtified, was by the parliament reſtored to the part his father had taken in the drainage of the fens. An act paſſed 1649, which gave new life to the undertaking, and was confirmed by another 15 Charles II. who eſtabliſhed a corporation for the better governing the great level, whoſe bounds were not ſettled. It conſiſted of a governor, ſix bailiffs, 20 conſervators, and commonalty, in whom were veſted 80,000 acres, part of the above 95,000: of the remaining 12,000 10,000 were veſted in the king, who aſſigned them to his brother the duke of York, and 2000 were given to the duke of Portland. Theſe commiſſioners have power to levy taxes on the 95,000 acres, and ſell them for non-payment. The ſeveral adventurers with the earl had expended above 400,000£. and were almoſt ruined as the expence of draining amounted to more than the value of the 95,000 acres which they were to have. The earl advanced to the title of duke died 1700. The great level had been divided 1697, into three diſtricts, North, Middle, and South, comprehended under the general name of the Bedford level, having a ſurveyor each and the middle two. From theſe a miſconceived diſtinction of intereſts aroſe during a minority in the Bedford family, to whom as principal proprietors of the North level the two others were deeply indebted. This debt was generouſly remitted 1753, and the North level ſeparated from the reſt by act of parliament, except in thoſe inſtances where their connection can operate for the good of the country; and upon this footing it now ſtands [t].

Bedford level is bounded eaſtward from Stoake bridge or cauſeway to Brandon bridge on the uplands of Northwold, Netherwold, Felton, Hockwold and Wilton c. Norfolk, and from Brandon bridge to the end of Worlington load upon Mildenhall river upon the uplands of Brandon, the [h] Carter, 133. [i] Dugd. II. 47. [k] Tan. 50.

[l] Blomefield MS. [m] Tan. 47. [n] Tan. 51.
[o] Carter, 148. [p] Tan. 46. Blomf. 195. [q] A. S. min.
[r] Bentham's Hiſt. of Ely, 163. n. [s] Ib. Carter, 161.
[t] Pref. to Cole's Laws of Bedford Level 1761. 1—31.

low grounds of Wainsford, excluding the ſame: the uplands of Lakingheath, the low grounds of Earſewell, excluding the ſame: and the uplands of Mildenhall c. Suffolk ſouthward from Worlington load unto Burwell block on the uplands of Frekingham, Iſelham, Fordham, Soham, and Wicken c. Cambridge, and excluding the low grounds of Burwell, Landwade, and other places lying eaſtward from Burwell block aforeſaid, and from thence into the mill near Angleſey abbey upon the uplands of Burwell reach, Swaffham Prior, Swaffham Bulbeck and Botiſham c. Cambridge.

Oldfield dyke by Marſhland in the iſle of Ely, being cut and broken down by ſome evil minded perſons, the cutting or breaking down of dykes was made felony by ſtatute 22 Henry VIII. c. 11.

Elge or Elig, ſays Bede [t], is a place in the province of the Eaſt Angles, containing about 600 families or hides, like an iſland, or ſurrounded by fens, whence and from the quantities of eels taken in theſe fens it has its name. Tombert who poſſeſſed it in right of his wife Etheldreda, was one of thoſe Eolbeanmen or princes afterwards called Eorles and Comites, who in the Saxon times held one or more diſtricts hereditarily and in fee or by royal grant, and with the biſhops compoſed the ſupreme council of the nation. Of this kind of provinces there were two in the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles, South and North Girvia. Ethelreda, after the death of Tombert 655, was obtained in marriage after much ſolicitation by Egfrid, king of Northumberland, whom ſhe afterwards forſook, and took the veil at Coldingham, where her aunt was abbeſs. Thence ſhe removed to Ely, where ſhe intended to repair the old church of king Ethelbert's foundation at Cratendune, whoſe ſite is now called Cratendon field, about a mile ſouth from the preſent city. But ſhe ſoon pitched on a more commodious ſpot on an eminence near the river, where ſhe built a church and monaſtery 673. She became firſt abbeſs of her new foundation, and granted to it the whole iſle of Ely. In 678 ſhe died of an epidemic diſorder. Her body being found incorrupt 16 years after her death was replaced in a marble ſarcophagus brought from the Roman ſtation at Granta. The monaſtery was deſtroyed by the Danes 868, together with that of Soham. Beorhed, king of Mercia, took its revenues and juriſdiction into his own hands, and ſome ſeculars were afterwards ſettled there. Theſe Ethelward biſhop of Wincheſter ejected, having purchaſed the whole iſle of king Edgar 970, and ſettled monks here, appointing Brithnoth firſt abbot. His nameſake Brithnoth who gave ſo liberally to the convent, and was ſlain at Malden 999, was buried here in the choir, but was afterwards removed with other benefactors, and placed in a wall on the north ſide of the choir in the new church, where, in the late alterations, his bones were found, which agreed with the accounts of his large proportion, making him ſix feet and an half high: his head was carried away by the Danes, and ſupplied with a wax one not found [u]: his bones with thoſe of the other benefactors are removed into biſhop Weſt's chapel. Ely ſtood a long ſiege againſt William the Conqueror, who plundered the monaſtery. He alſo quartered on it a number of his principal officers for a time; but the abbot, whom he nominated, prevailed on him to reſtore its wealth and all its privileges. Richard, 10th and laſt abbot, withſtood the biſhop of Lincoln's claim over it, and ſuggeſted to Henry I. the idea of erecting a biſhopric here, which was not carried into execution till after his death 1107, in favour of Hervey biſhop of Bangor, from whom there has been a ſucceſſion of 52 biſhops to the preſent, Dr. James Yorke [x]. The biſhop has all the rights of a county palatine, and is ſovereign: he appoints a judge to hear and determine all cauſes within the iſle, holds aſſizes, gaol delivery, and quarter ſeſſions of the peace within the liberty, and has his chief and under bailiffs for execution of proceſs and his cuſtos rotulorum [15 G.]. The monks had not an equal diviſion of lands with the biſhop, who was the perſon mentioned by Malmeſbury "as pocketing "above 1000*l.* a year, beſides what he ſpent on "his houſhold and hoſpitality, and allowing only "300*l.* to the monks [y]". It was a mitred abbey from 1413, and valued at the diſſolution at 1084*l.* per annum [z].

Of the firſt Saxon church built here 673, are very conſiderable remains, now converted into prebendal houſes, and the area of the nave left clear between them [a]. It was 169 feet long by 40 broad [b]. The eaſt end was lengthened 1102 [c]. The preſent church is 535 feet long from eaſt to weſt, 190 from north to ſouth, height 112, of the weſt tower and ſpire 270. The preſent church was begun by abbot Simeon before 1093 [d], and finiſhed by Richard the laſt abbot 1106 [e]. Norwold 1235-1251, added the preſbytery or ſix arches to the eaſt end at the expence of £.5350, and the ſpire on the weſt tower [f]; and Hotham rebuilt the three adjoining ones towards the dome, together with the octagon lantern 1342 [g]. St. Mary's chapel, on the north ſide of the choir, now Trinity church, was built by the convent 1321 [h]. Biſhop Ridel, who died 1189, built the weſt tower [i]; Euſtachius the Galilee [k]. The north and ſouth tranſepts were built in the reigns of Rufus and Henry I. the nave before 1174. The preſbytery is of a far more laboured and finiſhed ſtyle of building than the reſt, and for elegance, proportion, and decorations, may juſtly be deemed one of the choiceſt and moſt perfect remains of Gothic architecture. Into this the choir is now removed from under the octagon lantern, and the real harmony and proportion of this cathedral reſtored. In the old choir were found immured in the walls the bones of Wolſtan archbiſhop of York, Oſmund a Swediſh biſhop, Alwin, Elfgar, and Athelſtan biſhops of Elmham, Ednoth biſhop of Dorcheſter, and Brithnoth duke of Northumberland, and removed into ſimilar cells in biſhop Weſt's chapel. Here are monuments of biſhops Northwold 1254, Kilkenny 1256, de Luda 1298, Hotham 1336, Barnet 1373, Gray 1478, Alcock in a beautiful chapel built about 1488, Redman 1505, Stanley 1514, Weſt in another chapel built 1530, Cardinal Lewis de Luxemburgh 1443, John Tiptoft earl of Worceſter and his two wives 3 R. III. beſides many modern biſhops, &c. [l] The [t] IV. 19. Comp. the Saxon verſion.

[a] Bentham's Hiſt. of Ely.
[y] See Bentham, p. 135. n. Malmſb. de geſt. pont. p. 293.
[z] As at Peterborough and Glouceſter.
[a] Ib. 29. [b] Ib. 24. 29. 289. [c] Ib. 117. [d] Ib. 112. [e] Ib. 117. [f] Ib. 136. 148.
[g] Ib. 136. 156-7. [h] Ib. 156. [i] Ib. 37. 136. 143. [k] Ib. 136. [l] Ib. 282. 289.
[u] Archæol. III. ad fin.

cloiſters and conventual buildings have been long ſince demoliſhed. The refectory is the deanry; and an elegant little chapel, built by prior Crauden, now a granary, adjoins to it. Ely porta, or the great gate, was built between 1366 and 1397. At the diſſolution Henry VIII. placed in Ely a dean and eight prebends with vicars, lay clerks, choriſters, ſchoolmaſter and uſher, and 24 king's ſcholars[m].

The biſhop's palace was built by biſhops Alcock and Goodrich[n], and much improved by the late biſhop. They had three palaces in the iſle, beſides ſix others in different counties and London[o].

Of the caſtle built by biſhop Nigellus, t. Stephen, there are no remains but the name of Caſtle ward[p]. On the ſouth ſide of the church is a high mount like a keep.

Here were two hoſpitals of St. John and St. Mary Magdalen united by biſhop Northwold[q]. No traces of the vineyard are now remaining, except in biſhop Hervey's charter[r]. The temporal juriſdiction of the abbot, and afterwards of the biſhop, extended over the two hundreds of the iſle with the executive part of juſtice[s]. A great council of the nation was held here by Henry II. in the time of biſhop Ridell 1177.[t] Here are two conſiderable fairs; and moſt of the ſoft water is fetched from the river up hill in leathern bags, but they have good ſpring or well water in all parts of the town.

A. D. 1071, many Engliſh, unable to bear the Conqueror's oppreſſions, came hither under the conduct of the earls Edwin of Cheſter, Morchar, and Siward, and of Egelwin biſhop of Durham, ravaged the adjacent country under the command of Hereward, an Engliſh nobleman, and built here in the marſhes a wooden caſtle, called Hereward's caſtle in Matthew Paris's time. William hearing this, beſieged the iſland, made roads of great length in the marſhes, built many bridges over the bogs, and erected a caſtle at a place called Wiſeberum, on which all but Hereward and his followers ſubmitted[u].

The camp occupied by the Conqueror during this long and difficult ſiege is ſtill viſible at the ſouth end of Aldrey cauſey within the manor of Wivelengham at a place called Belſar's hills. Dr. Stukeley ſays it was Roman, and repaired by the Conqueror's head engineer[x]. The right name of the field wherein it lies is in records t. Henry III. Belaſis, probably from William's general of the name, afterwards one of the knights quartered on the monks. It is not improbable that Aldrey cauſeway was firſt made during the ſiege, and from time to time occaſionally repaired, and ſo continues a common way into the iſle[y]. The road from Ely to Cambridge has been lately made turnpike at the expence of £.300 a mile in ſome places.

During the conteſt between king John and the barons 1216, William Buuk with the Brabanters, by favour of the ice entering the iſland towards Herebie, and the earl of Salisbury, Falcaſius and others by Stuntney bridge plundered the churches, and committed great ravages, compelling even thoſe who were placed in all the churches to pay large ſums by way of ranſom for their lives[z], and the prior to pay 200 marks to ſave the cathedral from being burnt. It was plundered again 1267[a].

In the iſle of Ely was born Dr. William Bulleyn a learned phyſician and botaniſt in the reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary, and Elizabeth, who died 1576.

Twenty-four ſmall earthen Roman lamps were found in the iſle of Ely, and were in the hands of W. Collins collector of exciſe at Stamford 1740.[b]

Soham monaſtery was founded by St. Fœlix, firſt biſhop of the Eaſt Angles, who made it his ſee, afterwards removed to Dunwich, as his bones were to Ramſey, when the great church here built by one Luttingus, a Saxon nobleman, was burnt, and the monks ſlaughtered by the Danes 870[c]. Elfric, biſhop of Elmham, gave Soham to Bury abbey[d]. Here was a market and is a charity ſchool. At Soham Roman urns were found, but no coins near them[e]. Soham.

At Fordham was a Gilbertine priory, founded by Henry III. valued at £.40. 3s. 4d.[f] Some walls remain. Admiral ſir Charles Wager was lord here 1716, and built a new ſeat, which he ſold to Gov. Harriſon, whoſe daughter and heireſs brought it by marriage to lord viſcount Townſend. The town is the head of the deanery. Fordham.

At Snailwell is the ſeat of the Clarks, of whom Samuel was created a baronet 10 William III. whoſe great grandſon Andrew ſtill enjoys it. Snailwell.

In the pariſh of Sutton, five miles weſt of Ely, was turned up by the plough 1634, a thin piece of lead, and ſeveral antient coins. The labourer thruſting his hand in the earth, which was a light mooriſh ſoil, pulled out three ſilver plates, the two largeſt faſtened with a round ſilver wire riſing through the middle, and locking them together. One of the plates (ſee pl. II. fig. 7.) had this Dano-Saxon inſcription ſlightly engraved round it: ÆDVƑEN ME A ƃAƃEÞ. O DRIÞTEN DRIÞTEN ÞINE AWERIE ÐE ME ÞIRE ÆTFERIE BVTON ÞYOME SELLE ÞIRE AGENES ƑILLES, which, except the three firſt words, Dr. Hickes[g] thus tranſlates: O Lord, Lord, him always defend, who carrieth me about him. Grant him whatever he deſire. Sutton.

Mr. Blomfield reads it[h] Eadwen Meagage ſhe (is) owner (of me). Lord, him curſe that me from her carries, unleſs ſhe me gives of her own will.

Dr. Hickes ſuppoſes them to contain a charm, and that the knots and fillets on the other ſide have a magical meaning. Mr. Blomfield takes it only for a diſh belonging to Edwin Meagage before the Conqueſt, and laid over theſe things hidden to preſerve them probably during the ſiege of Ely. Nobody ſeems to have attended to the Runic characters on the broken ſlip croſſing the plate; or that except the four firſt words the reſt are rhyme: ƓAƓEIƓAH being Mæſo Gothic for purchaſe, Agaghe may be a tenſe of it, and ſuppoſing the ȝ a ſtop, the verſe will begin with the firſt O Dnihten. Apæpian is to protect or defend, Apeꝑȝian to curſe, Aetꝑepian to take away, Bvton without, Sellan to ſell.

Ædpin me agaghe.
Dnihten hine apepie
Ðe me hipe ætꝑepie
Bvton hyo me ꝑelle
Dipe agener ꝑilleꝑ

[m] Tan. 35.
[n] Bentham. Ib. 183. 191.
[o] Ib. 163. n.
[p] Ib. 137.
[q] Ib. 147. Tan. 45.
[r] Benth. 134.
[s] Ib. 132.
[t] Ib. 142.
[u] M. Par. 7.
[x] Pal. Brit. 11. 38. 139.
[y] Benth. 104. n.
[z] M. Par. 278.
[a] Ib. 1000.
[b] Spalding Soc. min.
[c] Tan. 35.
[d] Reg. ejuſd. ab. & Blomf. Coll. C. MS.
[e] Dugdale's letter to ſir T. Brown in his poſthumous works, p. 4.
[f] Tan. 47. Blomf. Coll. Cantab. 239.
[g] Theſ. p. 187. inter nummos.
[h] Coll. Cantab. 197.

Edwin bought me
O Lord him curſe
That me from him takes away.
Unleſs he ſell me
Of his own accord.

Several large gold rings were found with them [14].

The church, built by Barnet biſhop of Ely, who died 1373, is one of the moſt beautiful buildings in the county, and ſituate on a hill [i].

Soham. At Haddenham was the baſe of a croſs, now removed to Ely minſter, commemorating Ovinus, Etheldreda's ſteward, native here, who died about 680.

✠ LVCEM. TVAM. OVINO.
DA. DEVS. ET. REQVIE
.AMEN.

Thorney abbey was founded by Saxulph firſt abbot of Peterborough. The church was rebuilt 1085 by abbot Gunter, and dedicated by Hervæus firſt biſhop of Ely 1128 [k].

The nave of the abbey church ſtill remains, and over the weſt door nine ſtatues of ſaints between two towers. The aiſles were taken down 1636, and not a ſingle monument of any antiquity remains. It is a curacy of exempt juriſdiction in the gift of the duke of Bedford, who has 19000 acres in the ſurrounding fens, and has made a fine cauſey from it to Peterborough. The ſchool houſe is ſuppoſed to have been part of the cloiſter. The inhabitants of this town are moſtly French proteſtants.

Malmesbury's deſcription of this ſpot as an image of Paradiſe and Heaven has been much wondered at in later ages, when the vineyards and orchards are no more to be found. But if we attend to his deſcription we ſhall find in it nothing more than what might be expected concerning a ſpot which a parcel of retired religious would take all poſſible pains to make agreable to themſelves. The ſituation is far ſuperior to Croyland, the ſoil within two miles of the town capable of bearing apple trees, which are planted as hedges by the ſides of the cauſey, and nearer the town are oaks and elms growing ſpontaneouſly. When Malmeſbury ſpeaks of ſo pleaſant and cultivated a ſpot, "amid the very "marſhes," he only ſhews they were capable of improvement, and as to the æquorea planities, which viridantibus comis oculos advocat, currentibus per campos nullus offenſioni datur locus, if we underſtand it with biſhop Gibſon of the eaſe with which a perſon might run over it without obſtruction, this is no more than might be ſaid of Tatterſall or Burrow fen in ſummer; or, if we refer currentibus to the eyes which could take in this extenſive level of water and ſedges without any interruption, he need not be ſuppoſed to deſcribe it in its wintry or worſt eſtate when under water, though even in thoſe times the higher ſituation of Thorney is in its favour. Its preſent inhabitants, if their teſtimony may be admitted, have not very different notions of their ſituation, and even at Peterborough and the neighbourhood they are ſurprized to hear a perſon expect to find Thorney in the fens. But one may ſee what idea the monks had of paradiſe by the deſcription of Ramſay abbey in its Hiſtory quoted by Mr. Camden in Huntingdonſhire. "It is encloſed with "alders, which, with freſh green reeds intermixed with "bulruſhes make a beautiful ſhew. Long before it "was inhabited it was covered with ſeveral ſorts of "trees, and with elms in abundance; but now of late "ſince theſe woods were partly cut down, the land is "ſaid to be arable, and of a fat mould, and is plenti-"ful in fruit and corn, planted with gardens, rich in "paſture. In ſpring the pleaſant meadows ſmile on "the ſpectators, and the whole iſle is embroidered as "it were with a variety of flowers." The whole deſcription is crowned with the plenty of its fiſh and fowl. Malmeſbury's deſcription of Thorney might vindicate him in his diſtinct notions of Vineyards and Orchards with an unprejudiced reader; and he blends the labours of art and nature to conſtitute his monaſtic paradiſe, though he does not admit the female ſex as eſſential to it. The revenues of this monaſtery, which was one of the mitred ones, were valued at between 4 and 500*l.* a year, and granted with the ſite to the earl of Bedford [l]. The town has ſtill a ſmall market.

A Britiſh gold coin was found at Thorney [m].

Whittleſey. Whittleſey, a large village in the fens, gave birth to William de Whittleſey archbiſhop of Canterbury 1367. Here are two churches, one of which is engraved by P. S. Lamborne. Of its meer, one of the largeſt in England, well ſtocked with freſh fiſh, ſee in Huntingdonſhire.

March. At March in the iſle of Ely, in the road between it and Wisbeach, were found 1730, three urns full of burnt bones, and a pot of 160 Roman denarii of all the emperors from Veſpaſian to Antoninus Pius, both incluſive [n]. The coins were chiefly of Antoninus Pius, and but two or three varieties [o] Another parcel of the lower empire was found at Elme [p], and an altar twenty-one inches high [q]. An urn with braſs coins was dug up here, 1713, near a tumulus; and foundations of buildings may be ſeen on a piece of high ground near the ſame place [r]. Dr. Stukeley ſays a Roman road goes from Granchеſter to Ely by Stretham, and thence by Upwell and Elme to Wiſbeach, which was a Roman town or ſtation. Coins have been found at Welney in urns within reach of the plowſhare [s].

Welney.

Well ſeems of Roman origin, and there was found this braſs inſtrument.

A paſſes through B, and faſtened with a nut [t].

Staney. The fiſhery of Staney having been by the ſervants of the abbey of Ely leaſed at will to one Begmund de Holland, and the kindred of one Aſwen a widow, at the rent of 2000 eels, the latter diſpoſſeſſed the abbey not only of the fiſhery but of Staney itſelf: whereupon in the reign of Edward, ſucceſſor to king Edgar, the abbot of Ely ſued in the alderman's court for the recovery of the poſſeſſion, and had judgment given him by default by Agelwinus, who was totius Angliæ aldermannus [u].

Wiſbeach. Wiſbeach, or Ouſebeach, q. d. the town on the beach or bank of the Ouſe, was given to Ely by [14] G. [i] Blomf. Coll. Cantab. 196. [k] Regiſter in Mon. Ang.

[l] Tan 39. [m] Spalding ſoc. min. [n] Vyner Snell's lerter to Mr. R. Gale. Gale's Letters, p. 163.
[o] Gallienus, Salonina, Victorinus ſen. Cl. Gothicus, Tetrici, Diocletian, Conſtantine M. Valentinian, Gratian.
[p] See Mr. Bell's letter to Mr. Blomfield, 1731. Gale's Letters, p. 465.
[q] Ib. 170. [r] Stukeley. [s] Bell, Ib. [t] Ib.
[u] Selden's titles of Hon. II. 5. 629. from a MS. book of Ely.

Alwyn afterwards biſhop of Elmham. It has a palace of the biſhop of Ely, a good market and ſix fairs. In the church is a rich braſs for Thomas de Bramſton, conſtable of the caſtle 1401. In the years 1613 and 1614 the ſea broke in and overflowed the whole town and the hundred about it with great loſs [x]. Secretary Thurlow rebuilt and finiſhed the caſtle juſt before the Reſtoration, when the eſtate returned to the biſhop. Here was before 1345 an hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt, and another at Leverington hard by [y].

Leverington.

The ſtatute 1 Edward VI. 5, 10. which gives all colleges, free chapels, and chantries, with their eſtates, to the king, excepts inter alia the pariſh church called the Chapel in the fee in Newton within the iſle of Ely.

Newton.

The ſtatute 4 James I. c. 13, for draining 6000 acres of low ground ſubject to hurt by drowning, commonly called the ring of Walderſey and Cooldham, relates to this neighbourhood.

At Upwell was Mirmaud, a Gilbertine priory, cell to Sempringham, valued at £. 10. 7s. 7d. [z]

Upwell.

At Chateris in the iſle of Ely was a Benedictine nunnery founded by Alfwen wife to Ethelſtan earl of the Eaſt Angles about 980, valued at £. 97. 3s. 4d. [a] Here in a kind of tumulus near Somerſham ferry were found 1757 ſeveral human ſkeletons with the iron ſword, ſpear, and umbo of a ſhield, with an earthen urn and glaſs vaſe; which Dr. Stukeley refers to ſome Britiſh king reſident and buried here [b].

Chateris.

At Bottiſham, ſeven miles from Cambridge, William and John de Bottiſham, ſucceſſive biſhops of Rocheſter 1399, 1404, were born [c]. In the church is a braſs inſcription for Elias de Beckingham one of the juſtices itinerant to Edward I. [d]

Bottiſham.

At Angleſey in this pariſh was a priory of Auſtin canons founded by Richard de Clare, or Henry I. and valued at £. 124. per annum [e]. Over the door of the farm houſe are O. a croſs G. the arms of the abbey, impaling Clare, and P. W. and R. Part of the cloiſters make a cellar. Some arches ſloping downwards remain in a wall.

Angleſey.

In Landbeach church was found a heart in pickle wrapt up in hair, now in the Britiſh Muſeum. At Waterbeach adjoining are ſix almſhouſes for poor widows.

Landbeach.

At Waterbeach begins Carſdike, by Dr. Stukeley aſcribed to Carauſius and continued to the Nene in Northamptonſhire.

Denny in Waterbeach was a cell of Benedictine monks ſubject to Ely, founded 1160 by Robert, chamberlain to Conan duke of Britanny, and Aubrey Picot. The manor being purchaſed 13 Edward III. by the counteſs of Pembroke, third wife of Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke, who was killed at a tournament on his wedding day 1338, ſhe removed hither the nuns of Waterbeach, whoſe houſe was founded 1293. She died in advanced age 1374, and was buried in a tomb of touch ſtone between the nuns' choir and that of the ſeculars [f]. The houſe was valued at £. 172 [g]. The refectory, the nave and tranſept of the church and part of the cloiſter walls remain [h]. The whole ſite was moated round, and a place ſtill retains the name of the Vineyard.

Denny.

The following original letter is inſerted from Mr. Blomefield's MS. collections for this county:

" Reverent and worſchypfull Syr, aftyr due re-
" commendacion premiſyd, pleſythe you at the re-
" verens of oure ſpouſe ihu, to qwom we be wil-
" fully profeſſyd, to here gracyouſly oure humble pe-
" tyſcioun, as now compellyd eyther to compleyn us,
" eyther elles to ſuffre oure devout place falle and
" peryſche in oure dayis qwyche hath been ſo longe
" tyme wrongfully oppreſſid be plee for oure beſte
" moſte ſubſtancyal lyvelode, ſo that oure goode and " holſom modyr that was abbeſſe is ſo weryd and " brokyn with thowt that ſche is overthrowyn with " daily ſeeknes, unhabill to occupie the offiz, and we " compellyd agens oure wille gyf it might odyrvyſe a
" been to cheſe anodyr, be the qwyche eleccioun aftyr
" our cuſtume we muſte paye to the biſchope of " Lyncolne xx marke and to the biſchope of Nor" wych as myche, and as to the payment of the " biſhope of Lyncolne we be ſo ſtreytly boundyn
" that the ſeyde lorde may ſtreyne oure goods of the " wyche we have oure neceſſary ſuſtenaunce, and
" nowt only we be thuſe putte in diſcomforte and
" hevyneſſe butalſo oure jeuells qwyche were ordeynid
" of our fyrſte fundacion to araye oure chyrche and " to ſtere uſſe and provoke others to worſchipe God
" and to have oure benefactoris in more freſche re-
" membraunz are now for nede leyde in morgage,
" and ſume loſte for ever, and others in haſte lyke
" to be loſte, and yerto oure placys beſyde all this " miſery are ſo far decayed be non reparacion that " we may nowt wele repayre yem ageen, and ſo owr
" tenants are the more pore and ye werſſe yer may
" paye to us ye dettez of yeyr fermes; and reverent
" ſyr, i beynge ful ſymple and zonge of age and
" choſin to be abbeſſe of yis wrongfullye oppreſſid
" place God knowt ful myche agens my will, in my
" compleynt makyng to God I was putt in mynde
" of the goods that been in zoure hands, and alſo
" of zure holſom and good diſpoſicion qwyche gave " me a gret corage to make my petyſcion to zou for
" the recovere of ower pore place beſechynge zour
" goodeneſſe to conſydre how we be cloſyd withynne
" the ſton wallys and may nonodyrvyſe ſpeke with
" zou but only be wrytynge, and the rathur ſocour us
" for owr lord's love with ſweche goods as we may " continue ſtylle the ſervant of ihu and odyr aftyr us
" in lyke wyſe, the qwyche we wolde thynke to us as " a newe fundacon, and ſo in our ſuffrages we wolde
" annexe the ſowle of that worthy knyht ſyr John
" Faſtolff, and ſwyche odyr as ze will deſyr unto the
" ſoule of owre blyſſid foundatrice; and worſchipfull
" ſyr, is more eſy as zeet to releve us up azeen yan to
" belde a newe place, qwyche i truſte verylize wolde
" doo, and zif ze knewe the blyſſid diſpociſſion of " my weel diſpoſyd modris and ſuſtris be qwos goode
" conſacon i truſt in ihu to have of zou ſume ſocour
" and comfort now at my moſt hevy begynnynge,
" and zif owre lord wolde move zour hert to ſee owre
" pore place i truſt verily to god we ſhoulde have zou
" and zours ever aftyr in goode remembraunz. The " brynger of thys ſymple lettre wrytin in greete he-
" vynes hath experience of all owre inportable hurtys
" before reherſyd, the qwyche trewly was the cauſe
" that he wolde of his owne coſtis be meſſenger:

" our

[x] Blomf. Coll. Cantab. 244—247. Inſcription in the church.
[y] Tan. 52. 56.
[z] Ib. 46.
[a] Ib. 40.
[b] Gent. Mag. 1766. p. 119.
[c] Blomf. Ib. 34. Tan. 42.
[d] Blomf. Ib.
[e] Blomf. Collect. Cantab. 35.
[f] Leland.
[g] Tan. 44. 50.
[h] Blomf. MS. Col.

" our blyſſid lord revard him therefore, qwyche ever
" preſerve zou and zours body and ſoule in goodneſſe
" for hise gret mercy. Wrytyn at denneye the laſte
" day of januer.

Zour pore bedewoman jone keteryche abbeſſe of Denneye.

Endorſt
To the right worſchipfull gentilman, parſton, Executur to ſyr John Faſtolff.

In Stretham church is an old altar tomb for Nicholas de Kynaſton, founder of the chancel, and rector here, t. Edward I.[i]

At Milton, a ſmall village on the Ely road, was the retirement of the eminent antiquary the rev. Mr. William Cole, vicar of Burnham, in the county of Bucks, and the intimate friend of Browne Willis. Here, Dec. 16, 1782, in his 68th year, he cloſed a life ſpent in learned reſearch into the hiſtory and antiquities of this county in particular, which nothing but his declining ſtate of health prevented this work from ſharing the benefit of. He left to the Britiſh Muſeum, to be locked up for 20 years, his valuable collections in 100 volumes in folio, fairly written in his own hand, which was not unlike that of Mr. Thomas Baker, to whoſe memory he has bequeathed a monument in St. John's college chapel. Mr. Cole was buried under the belfrey of St. Clement's church in Cambridge.

Earls of Cambridge.

The title of earl of Cambridge was conferred on James marquis of Hamilton 1619, who was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon James and his ſecond ſon William, who, dying without iſſue of his wounds received in Worceſter fight, the title became extinct. The title of duke of Cambridge was after the reſtoration conferred on Charles Stuart eldeſt ſon of James duke of York, who, died 1661, and afterwards on his three brothers James, Edgar, and Charles, who all died young 1667, 1671, 1677. Queen Anne conferred it on George Auguſtus Elector of Hanover, afterwards king George I. who was the laſt that bore this title.

[i] Blomf. Collect. Cantab. 22.

Rare Plants found in Cambridgeſhire.

Achillea Ptarmica. Sneeze wort; in wet meadows and woods; at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Acorus Calamus: Sweet ſmelling Flag or Calamus; in deep dirty rivers and ponds; in Dove-houſe cloſe, Cambridge.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel; in the hedges of the firſt cloſe on the right hand going from Cheſterton up Mill-lane.

Agaricus campanulatus. Bell Agaric; in meadows and paſtures; at Teverſham.

Agroſtis polymorpha δ ſtolonifera: Creeping Bent graſs; in meadows; near Trinity Conduit Head.

Aira cærulea. Purple Hair Graſs; on Teverſham moor.

—— criſtata. Criſted Hair graſs; in barren paſtures; on the Hill of Health.

—— flexuoſa. Heath Hair Graſs; in meadows.

—— præcox. Early Hair Graſs; in ſandy places about Gamlingay.

Alchemilla vulgaris. Common Ladies Mantle; in the paſtures about Gamlingay and Balſham.

Aliſma ranunculoides. Leſſer water Plantain; on the moors at Shelford and Cherry Hinton.

Allium vineale. Crow Garlic; in meadows and paſtures; at Girton, and in the cloſe called by Mr. Ray, the Chalk-pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

——— urſinum. Ramſon; in Chriſt college pieces, Cambridge, at Ditton, and elſewhere.

Althæa officinalis. Marſh Mallow; in ſea marſhes; at Wiſbech.

——— officinalis β. A variety of the Marſh Mallow; in the iſle of Ely.

Anagallis arvenſis δ. Female Pimpernel or blue flowered Pimpernel; amongſt the corn on the left hand of the way from Cambridge to Hiſton a little beyond the firſt cloſes.

Anchuſa ſempervirens. Evergreen Alkanet; on rubbiſh; near Emanuel college, Cambridge.

Anemone nemoroſa. Wood Anemone; in woods; at Madingley and iſle of Ely.

——— Pulſatilla. Paſque Flower; on Gogmagog hills, and Hilderſham, and at Bartlow.

Anethum Fæniculum. Fennel or Fincle; in Parker's pieces, Cambridge, and in Caxton church yard.

Angelica ſylveſtris. Wild Angelica; in marſhy woods and hedges; at Cheſterton, by the river Cam, and elſewhere.

Anthyllis vulneraria. Kidney Vetch or Ladies Finger; in dry meadows, eſpecially chalk; at Cheſterton, Gogmagog hills, and in the Chalk-pit cloſe at Hinton, and elſewhere.

Antirrhinum Cymbalaria. Ivy-leaved Toad-flax; on the walls of the Great houſe at Drayton.

——— —— Elatine. Sharp-pointed Fluellin; in corn fields; at Teverſham.

——— ——— Linaria. Toad-Flax; in barren meadows and fields; in the lanes and cloſes about Cherry Hinton, on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

Antirrhinum majus. Greater Snap-dragon; on old walls; in the iſle of Ely.

——— ——— minus. Leaſt Toad-flax; in the corn by the lower road on Gogmagog hills.

——— ——— ſpurium. Round-leaved Fluellin; in corn-fields; in the way from Cambridge to Hiſton, and elſewhere.

Aphanes arvenſis. Purſley Piert; on the Hill of Health.

Apium Petroſelinum. Parſley; on Gogmagog hills.

Aquilegia vulgaris. Common Columbines; in a cloſe on the right hand of Teverſham moor as you enter the moor from the town.

Arabis turrita. Tower wall Creſs; on St. John and Trinity college walls, Cambridge.

—— Thaliana. Codded Mouſe Ear; in ſome cloſes on the north ſide of Gamlingay town.

Arenaria rubra. Purple flowered Chickweed or Spurry; on Gamlingay heath.

——— rubra γ marina. Sea Spurry; on ſea ſhores; at Wiſbich.

——— tenuifolia. Fine leaved Chickweed; in the corn fields on the borders of Triplow heath, Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

——— trinervia. Plantain-leaved Chickweed; in woods and hedges; at Baiſham.

Ariſtolochia clematitis. Climbing Birthwort; in woods and hedges; at Whittlesford.

Artemeſia campeſtris. Field Southern Wood; in meadows near Shelford.

Arundo Calamagroſtis. Branched Reed Graſs; in and about Madingley wood in the iſle of Ely, and elſewhere.

Aſparagus officinalis. Aſparagus or Sperage; in Great Shelford church yard.

Aſperugo procumbens. Small wild Bugloſs, Great Gooſegraſs, German Madwort; on rubbiſh; about Newmarket town.

Aſperula Cynanchica. Squinancy-wort; on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Black Maiden-Hair; on the churches of Ditton, Coton, Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— ——— Ruta muraria. White Maiden Hair, Wall Rue, or Tentwort; on the churches of Cheſterton, Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— ——— Scolopendrium. Harts Tongue; in the hedges of a grove near Cheſterton, about Ely cathedral, and elſewhere.

——— —— Trichomanes. Common Maiden-Hair; on the ſouth ſide of Stretchworth church, about the cathedral at Ely, and elſewhere.

Aſter Tripolium. Sea Starwort; on ſea ſhores; at Wiſbich.

Aſtragalus arenarius. Purple Mountain Milkwort; on the drier part of Hinton moor, on Gogmagog hills, on Newmarket heath, Royſton heath, and elſewhere.

Aſtragalus glycyphyllos. Wild Liquorice or Liquorice Vetch; about the caſtle-hill, Cambridge, by the lane ſides that leads from Cambridge to Cherry Hinton, and in many other places.

Athamanta oreoſelinum. Mountain Stone Parſley; on Gogmagog hills.

Atriplex haſtata β. Wild Orach; —— patula β. Spear-leaved Orach; } by the river ſide below Wiſbich.

—— portulacoides. Sea Purſlane; near Wiſbich.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale: in the lanes about Fulborn, in Dove-houſe cloſe, Cambridge, and at Reech.

Ballota nigra β alba. A variety of ſtinking Horehound; on rubbiſh at Coldham near Barnwell, and on the banks of the road to Newmarket near the Paper-mills.

Berberis vulgaris. Berberry-buſh; at Cheſterton, Granchester, and elſewhere.

Betonica officinalis. Wood Betony; in Madingley and Kingſton woods.

Betula alba. Birch Tree; at Chippenham, and elſewhere.

—— Alnus. Alder Tree; at Fulborn and elſewhere.

Bidens cernua. Whole-leaved Water Hemp Agrimony; in marſhy and watery places; at Audrey cauſeway.

—— tripartita β minima. Leaſt Water Hemp Agrimony; in marſhes; on the moor between Cherry Hinton and the road to the Hills, and on the moor. M. T.

Borago officinalis. Borage; in Emanuel college, Parker's piece, in Cow fen, and elſewhere.

Briza media. Middle quaking Graſs, Cow Quakes, Ladies Hair; in the Chalk-pit cloſe, Cherry Hinton, and at Madingley.

Bryonia alba. White Bryony; in the Chalk-pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Bryum carneum. Shining Bryum; in wet places in Cherry Hinton and Teverſham moors, and elſewhere.

Bupleurum rotundifolium. Thorow-wax; in corn fields; by the lower road on Gogmagog hills, among the wheat at Teverſham, and elſewhere.

—— tenuiſſimum. Leaſt Hares Ear; on that ſide of the moor Cherry Hinton which is next the hills road.

Butomus umbellatus. Water Gladiole or flowering Ruſh; in the Stour near the Paper mills, at Granchester, and elſewhere.

Campanula glomerata. Leſſer Throatwort or Canterbury Bells; in Madingley wood, on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

—— rotundifolia. Round leaved Bell Flower; on Gogmagog hills.

—— Trachelium. Great Throatwort or Canterbury Bells; in Madingley and Kingſton wood.

Carduus acaulis, Dwarf Carline Thiſtle; on Cherry Hinton moor and near the new poſt-houſe, Cambridge.

—— eriophorus. Woolly-headed Thiſtle; in mountainous paſtures of a chalky ſoil; in many cloſes about Madingley, Childerley, Kingſton, and elſewhere.

—— helenoides β heterophyllus. Melancholy Thiſtle; in paſtures; about Cherry Hinton.

Carex caneſcens. Grey Carex; on the bogs at Gamlingay.

Carex dioica. Small Carex; on the bogs on Gamlingay heath.

—— diſtans. Looſe Carex; on Hinton moor.

—— flava. Yellow Carex; on Cherry Hinton moor, and elſewhere.

—— globularis. Globular headed Carex (Lyons faſc.) on Gogmagog hills and Hinton Chalkpit.

—— muricata. Prickly Carex; in the cloſes near Granchester meadows.

—— panicea. Pink Carex; in the wood at Everſdon.

—— paniculata. Panicled Carex; on the bogs at Gamlingay.

—— pendula. Pendulous Carex; in wet woods and hedges; at Fulborn, and elſewhere.

—— pilulifera. Round headed Carex; on Gamlingay heath.

—— pulicaris. Flea Carex; in the fenny meadows near Quy water, and on Hinton moor.

—— ſylvatica. Wood Carex; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

Carlina vulgaris. Carline Thiſtle; on Newmarket heath.

Carum Carvi. Caraways; in the meadows by the road ſide between Cambridge and Quoy, and elſewhere.

Caucalis Carota. Wild Carrots or Birdneſt; in the Chalkpit cloſe.

—— daucoides. Fine leaved Baſtard Parſley; about the Devil's ditch, Newmarket heath, and in cornfields about Kingſton.

—— latifolia. Purple flowered great Baſtard Parſley; in corn fields in this county frequent, as between Cambridge and Cherry Hinton.

Centaurea Calcitrapa. Star Thiſtle; in Parker's piece Cambridge.

—— ſcabioſa. Great Knapweed or Matfellon; in the Chalkpit cloſe, Cherry Hinton.

—— ſcabioſa (flore albo). Great Knapweed, with a white flower; at Babram.

Ceraſtium aquaticum. Marſh Mouſe ear Chickweed; on the banks of the river Cam.

—— arvenſe. Long leaved rough Chickweed; on heaths and dry banks amongſt buſhes; on the hill of health, and elſewhere.

—— ſemidecandrium. Leaſt Mouſe ear Chickweed; on the hill of health.

Chara tomentoſa. Brittle Chara; —— hiſpida. Prickly Chara; } in the horſe ferry in the way from Cambridge to Cherry-hinton.

Chelidonium hybridum. Violet coloured Horn Poppy; among the corn between Swaffham and Burwell.

—— majus. Celandine; in Cow fen, Cambridge.

Chenopodium Bonus Henricus. Common Engliſh Mercury; on rubbiſh, walls, corn fields, and highways.

—— maritimum. Sea Blite, or White Glaſswort; by the river ſide below Wiſbich.

—— murale β. A variety of Common Gooſe Foot; —— Vulvaria. Stinking Orache; } in rubbiſh, ways, and walls; in Jeſus lane, Cambridge.

—— urbicum. Upright Gooſefoot; on dunghills; in Cherry Hinton town.

Chlora perfoliata. Yellow Centaury; in mountainous meadows meadows and paſtures in the Chalkpit cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Cicuta viroſa. Long leaved Water Hemlock; in a creek overagainſt the tiled houſe on Rimney balk.

Cineraria alpina. Mountain Ragwort; on Gogmagog hills, Newmarket heath.

——— paluſtris. Marſh Fleabane; in the fen ditches about Marſh and Chateris in the Iſle of Ely.

Circæa Lutetiana. Enchanter's Nightſhade; in the lanes and cloſes about Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Ciſtus Helianthemum. Dwarf Ciſtus, or Little Sunflower; on Triplow heath, on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

——— Helianthemum β (flore albo). Dwarf Ciſtus, or Little Sunflower with a white flower; on Gogmagog hills.

Clematis Vitalba. Great Wild Climber, or Traveller's Joy; } in the meadows and lanes about Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Clinopodium vulgare. Wild Baſil; }

——— vulgare (var. fol. non crenatis). A variety of Wild Baſil; in the ploughed lands on the borders of Gogmagog hills and Newmarket heath.

Cochlearia Armoracea. Horſe Radiſh; in Parker's Pieces, Cambridge.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinquefoil; on the bogs in the Park at Gamlingay, and elſewhere.

Conferva reticulata. Net Conferva; in ditches and ponds in Cow fen, Cambridge.

Convallaria maialis. Lilly of the Valley, or May Lilly; in Whitewood, Gamlingay.

Convolvulus arvenſis β. A variety of Small Bindweed; amongſt the corn between Little Everſdon and Harleſton.

Conyza ſquarroſa. Plowman's Spikenard; in chalky ſoils: at Hilderſham, Abingdon, and Whittlesford.

Crepis fœtida. Stinking Hawkweed; in meadows and paſtures; between Little Shelford and Whittlesford, on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

Crocus officinalis, ſativus. Saffron; on Gogmagog hills, and frequently planted in this county.

Cucubalus Otites. Greater Spaniſh Catchfly; near the gravel pits, on the north ſide of Newmarket, and at Chippenham.

Daphne Laureola. Spurge Laurel; About Cherry-hinton, and elſewhere.

Dianthus Deltoides: Maiden Pink; on a little hill where furze grows next to Juniper hill near Hilderſham.

Dipſacus piloſus. Small Wild Teaſel or Shepherd's rod; at Ditton, and elſewhere. M. T.

Delphinium Conſolida. Lark's ſpur; amongſt the corn on Swaffham fields, and elſewhere.

Droſera longifolia. Long leaved Sun Dew, or Roſa Solis; on Hinton moor; about the watery places, plentifully.

——— rotundifolia. Round leaved Sundew, or Roſa Solis; on the bogs at Gamlingay.

Echium vulgare β anglicum. Engliſh Viper's Buglofs; on the Hill of health, Madingley.

Epilobium paluſtre. Marſh Willow herb; on the bogs at Gamlingay, and elſewhere.

Equiſetum limoſum. Smooth Horſetail; in marſhes and watery places: in Cow fen, Cambridge, and at Granchester.

Equiſetum ſylvaticum. Wood Horſetail; in and about Madingley wood.

Erica tetralix. Croſs leaved heath; on the bogs at Gamlingay.

—— vulgaris. Common heath or Ling; on Gogmagog hills.

Eriophorum polyſtachion. Cotton Graſs; on Cherry-hinton moor, and elſewhere.

Erigeron acre. Blue flowered Fleabane; in dry meadows and paſtures; at Whittlesford and Linton.

Eryſimum chieranthoides. Treacle Wormſeed; in the oſier holts about the bridge at Ely plentifully, and in the other oſier holts by the river ſide in the Iſle of Ely.

Euonymus Europæus. Spindle tree or Prickwood; in woods and hedges; at Granchester, and elſewhere.

Euphorbia amygdaloides. Wood Spurge; in woods and hedges at Cheveley.

——— platyphyllos β ſegetalis. Corn Spurge; amongſt the corn near Kingſton wood and about Triplow.

Euphraſia officinalis. Eyebright; on Gogmagog hills.

Feſtuca ovina. Sheep Feſcue graſs; in dry paſtures.

——— rubra. Purple Feſcue graſs; on Gogmagog hills.

——— myuros. Wall Feſcue graſs; on a wall at Barnwell.

——— decumbens. Decumbent Feſcue graſs; on Shelford moor, and in the cloſes at King's hedges near Impington.

Fontinalis antipyretica. Greater Watermoſs; in the well on the road ſide at Madingley.

Frankenia lævis. Smooth Sea Heath; in ſea marſhes; at Tid Goat near Wisbich.

Fumaria officinalis β capreolata; in woods and hedges: in the corn on the borders of the hills towards Hinton moor on Gagmagog hills.

Galeobdolon luteum. Yellow Nettle Hemp; in King's wood, and in the wood at Madingley, and elſewhere.

Galeopſis Tetrahit δ. A variety of Hemp leaved dead Nettle; amongſt corn at March.

Galium mollugo. Great Ladies Bedſtraw, or Baſtard Madder; in hedges and on heaths; at Linton.

——— montanum. Mountain Ladies Bedſtraw; on Gamlingay heath.

——— paluſtre. White Ladies Bedſtraw; in the bogs at Gamlingay.

——— ſpurium. Corn Ladies Bedſtraw; amongſt the corn about Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

——— uliginoſum. Marſh Ladies Bedſtraw; in the bogs at Gamlingay.

Geniſta Anglica. Needle Furze or Petty Whin; on a ſmall hill near Hilderſham, and elſewhere.

——— tinctoria. Dyer's Broom, or Woodwaxen; in paſtures and margins of fields; at Madingley, and elſewhere.

Gentiana Amarella. Autumnal Gentian, or Fellwort; in dry paſtures; on Gogmagog hills, and on Cherry Hinton moor.

——— campeſtris. Vernal Dwarf Gentian; in and about Cherry Hinton moor.

——— centaurium. Leſſer Centaury; in the way from Cambridge to Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— centaurium (flore albo). Leſſer Centaury, with a white flower; at Linton.

Geranium cicutarium. Hemlock Craneſbill; on the Hill of Health.

Geranium

Geranium lucidum. Shining leaved Cranesbill; on walls and on sandy shady places; at Barnwell and Chesterton.

——— molle. Common Dove's-foot Cranesbill; on the Hill of health.

——— moschatum. Musk Cranesbill of Muscovy; in the rutts of the road on Gamlingay heath.

——— pratense. Meadow Cranesbill; in damp meadows and pastures; at Ditton, Histon, Girton, and elsewhere.

——— rotundifolium. Dovesfoot Cranesblll; in Whitewood, and in hedges near Trinity Conduit.

——— sanguineum. Bloody Cranesbill; about the Devil's ditch, Newmarket heath.

——— sanguineum β. Bloody Cranesbill, with larger, paler, and more deeply divided leaves; on the banks of the Devil's ditch, Newmarket heath towards Reche.

Geum urbanum. Avens; in the Chalk-pit close at Cherry hinton.

Glaux maritima. Sea Milkwort or black Saltwort; in sea marshes; at Wisbich.

Glycyrrhiza glabra. Common Liquorice; planted at Elme, in the isle of Ely, and elsewhere.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cudweed or Cat's foot; on divers parts of Newmarket heath and on Gogmagog hills.

——— montanum. Least Cudweed; in Gamlingay park and elsewhere.

Hedysarum Onobrychis. Medick Vetchling, Cocksfhead, commonly called Saintfoin; on Gogmagog hills, and elsewhere.

Hedypnois hieracioides. Yellow Succory or Rough Hawkweed; in margins of fields of a chalky soil; on Gogmagog hills, at Comberton and Cherry Hinton.

Helleborus fætidus. Great Bastard black Hellebore, Bear's-foot, or Setterwort; in meadows, pastures and hedges; near Cherry Hinton, and in some closes near the mill at Fulborn.

——— viridis. Wild black Hellebore; in the closes adjoining to the parsonage garden at Ditton and in Bigwyn closes beyond the town.

Heracleum Sphondylium β. A variety of Common Cowparsnep; in Kingston wood.

Hieracium umbellatum. Narrow leaved bushy Hawkweed; on a small hill overgrown with furze near Hildersham, and in Gamlingay park.

——— sabaudum β. A variety of broad leaved bushy Hawkweed; in Gamlingay park.

Hippocrepis comosa. Tufted Horseshoe Vetch; on the chalky grounds about Gogmagog hills, and elsewhere.

Hippurus vulgaris. Mare's Tail; in the Stour near the Paper-mills, at Fulborn, and elsewhere.

Humulus Lupulus. Wild Hops; in hedges at Chesterton, and elsewhere.

Hyacinthus non-scriptus (flore albo). English Hyacinth or Harebells (wth a white flower); in Kingston wood.

Hydrocharis Morsus Ranæ. Frogbit; in ditches and slow rivers; at Granchester, in the river Cam, and elsewhere.

——— Morsus Ranæ (flore pleno); at Audrey causeway.

Hydrocotyle vulgaris. Pennywort or White Rot; in marshy places; on Cherry Hinton moor.

Hypericum Elodes. Marsh St. Peter's wort; in the boggy grounds at Gamlingay.

——— humifusum. Trailing St. John's wort; at Hildersham.

Hypericum perforatum. St. John's wort; in the Chalk-pit close, Cherry Hinton.

——— quadrangulum. St. Peter's wort; on Cherry Hinton moor.

Hypnum Adiantoides. Upright Hypnum; on bogs and wet heaths; on Cherry Hinton moor.

——— bryoides. Dwarf Hypnum;
——— alopecurum. Fox tail Hypnum;
——— dendroides. Tree Hypnum;
——— proliferum. Proliferous Hypnum;
——— fericeum. Silky Hypnum;
——— serpens. Creeping Hypnum;
——— sciuroides. Squirrel tail Hypnum;
——— triquetrum. Triangular Hypnum or Trunks of Trees;

in shady places in hedges and woods; in and near Moorbarns thicket, Madingley.

Hyocyami nigri varietas. A variety of the common Henbane; on the castle hill, Cambridge.

Hypochæris maculata. Broad leaved Hungarian Hawkweed; on the banks of the Devil's ditch; near Reche not far from Newmarket, and elsewhere.

Hyoseris minima. Small Swines Succory; in meadows and pastures of a gravelly soil, near the wind mills on Newmarket heath, and in a sandy oatfield adjoining to Whitewood wood.

Jasione montana. Sheeps Scabious; on a small hill near Hildersham and at Gamlingay.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Cress; near the wind mills on Newmarket heath.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in the pastures about Madingley, Barton, Coton, and elsewhere.

—— pulicaris. Lesser Fleabane; in the way from Cambridge to Histon.

Iris fætidissima. Stinking Gladwyn; in a grove by the side of the road from Cambridge to Histon church, and elsewhere.

Isatis tinctoria. Wild Woad; in the isle of Ely and Littleport.

Juncus bulbosus. Bulbous Rush; in damp meadows and heaths; at Gamlingay and elsewhere.

——- campestris. Field Rush; on the Hill of health.

——- conglomeratus. Round headed Rush; in damp heath and meadows, at Gamlingay, and elsewhere.

——- pilosus. Common hairy Wood Rush; in the woods at Eversden and Kingston.

——- squarrosus. Moss Rush or Goose Corn; in the bogs at Gamlingay.

Juniperus communis. Juniper; on the little hill called Juniper hill at Hildersham.

Lactuca Saligna. Least wild Lettuce; on the bank of a little lane leading from the London road to the river a little beyond the Spittle house end at Cambridge.

——— virosa β. A variety of strong scented wild Lettuce: in hedges and margins of fields; in the isle of Ely.

Lathyrus latifolius. Broad leaved Pease Everlasting; in Madingley wood and other woods near Cambridge.

——— Nyssolia. Crimson Grass Vetch; in margins of fields; at Hadnam.

——— palustris. Marsh Chickling Vetch; in a bushy close near Little Eversdon church.

——— pratensis. Tare Everlasting or common Yellow Vetchling; in Madingley wood.

——— sylvestris. Narrow leaved everlasting; near the Castle Crampes; in the hedges in the way that leads from thence to Bartlow.

Leonurus Cardiaca. Motherwort; on the banks of the road from Stourbridge to Newmarket, and elſewhere.

Leontodon Taraxacum δ paluſtre. Marſh Dandelion; on Hinton moor.

Lepidium ruderale. Narrow leaved Wild Creſs or Dittander; on the banks of the river below Wiſbich near the wind-mills.

Lichen calicaris. Channeled Liverwort; on trunks of trees in Gamlingay park.

——- ciliaris. Ciliated Liverwort; on trunks of trees in and near Moorbarns thicket.

——- farinaceus. Mealy Liverwort; on trunks of trees in Gamlingay park.

——- juniperinus. Juniper Liverwort; on trunks and branches of trees; in and near Moorbarn's thicket.

——- nigreſcens. Blackiſh Liverwort; on Willows; in Grancheſter meadows. M. T.

——- phyſodes. Palmated Liverwort; on trunks of trees, ſtones, and heaths in Gamlingay park.

——- pyxidatus. Cup Liver wort; heaths and woods.

——- pyxidatus β. A variety of ditto; in Gamlingay park.

——- pyxidatus ξ digitatus. Fingered Liverwort; in heaths and woods; on Newmarket heath.

——- rangiferinus. Rhendeer Liverwort; on Gogmagog hills.

——- ſaxatilis. Stone Liverwort; on ſtones, rocks, and trunks of trees at Whitwell.

Liguſtrum vulgare. Privet or Prim; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

Limoſella aquatica. Common Mudwort; in a cart rut as ſoon as you are out of Milton in the way to Ely.

Linum Cartharticum. Purging Flax; in the Chalk pit cloſe, and on the moor at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— perenne. Wild Perennial Blue Flax; on the borders of the corn fields about Gogmagog hills, in ſome cloſes about Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— perenne β. A variety of Wild Perennial Blue Flax; in the ſame places.

——— uſitatiſſimum. Flax; in cornfields at Wiſbech.

Lithoſpermum officinale. Common Gromwell or Graymill; in groves and dry places: at Hinton and Teverſham.

Littorella lacuſtris. Small Littorella; on Hinton moor.

Lonicera Caprifolium. Honey Suckle; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Hinton.

Lotus corniculatus β & γ. Two varieties of Common Bird's Foot Trefoil; at Gamlingay, and elſewhere.

Lycoperdon boviſta. Common Puff ball or Bulls fiſts; in meadows and paſtures.

Lycopodium clavatum. Common Clubmoſs; on the bogs in Gamlingay heath.

Lyſimachia Nummularia. Moneywort; in Kingſton wood.

——— tenella. Purple Moneywort; on Teverſham moor, and elſewhere.

——— vulgaris. Yellow Looſeſtrife, or Willow herb; in woods bogs and banks of rivers; on the banks of the river Cam, and elſewhere.

Lythrum hyſſopifolia. Hedge Looſeſtrife, Hyſſop, or Graſs Poley; in the corn fields and ſhady lanes about Hiſton, and elſewhere.

——- Salicaria. Purple Spiked Looſeſtrife; in marſhes and banks of rivers at Hiſton.

Malva Alcea. Vervain Mallow; in Kingſton wood.

Marrubium vulgare. White Horehound; on rubbiſh and ways; on the hill of health.

Medicago falcata. Yellow Medick; in the margins of fields and highways; between Linton and Bartlow, and elſewhere.

——— polymorpha β. The Smalleſt Hedgehog Trefoil; in an old gravel pit in the corn field near Wilbraham church; alſo at Newmarket, where the Cucubalus otites grows.

Melampyrum criſtatum. Purple headed Creſted Cowwheat; in Madingley and other woods in this county abundantly.

——— pratenſe. Meadow Cowwheat; in meadows and paſtures at Stichworth, and in Whitewood, and elſewhere.

——— ſylvaticum. Yellow Cowwheat; in woods at Gamlingay.

Meliſſa Calamintha. Common Calamint; in highways and margins of fields; at Cheſterton and Shelford.

——— Nepeta. Field Calamint; in highways and on banks; at Grancheſter, at Hilderſham, and Babram.

Mentha arvenſis β. A variety of Corn Mint; in watery places and damp corn fields; at Shelford.

——— pulegium. Pennyroyal or Pudding Graſs; about the Caſtle hill, and elſewhere.

——— ſylveſtris. Long Leaved Horſemint; in lakes and watery places, at Grancheſter, in the Chalk pit cloſe at Hinton, and at Triplow.

Menyanthes Nymphoides. Fringed Water Lily; in ſlow rivers and ditches; at Streatham ferry, and in the river Cam.

——— Trifoliata. Buck or Bog Bean; on moors and marſhy places; on Cherry Hinton moor.

Mercurialis annua. French Mercury; about Madingley wood.

Myoſurus minimus. Mouſe-tail; in the fields where Stourebridge fair is kept, and elſewhere. M T.

Myriophyllum ſpicatum. Spiked Water milfoil; in the river Cam, at Stretham ferry, and elſewhere.

——— verticillatum. Verticillated Water-milfoil; in the Stour, and elſewhere.

Myrica Gale. Sweet Willow, Dutch Myrtle, or Goule; in the fens in the Iſle of Ely, in many places abundantly.

Narthecium Oſſifragum. Lancaſhire Aſphodel, or baſtard Aſphodel; in the bogs on Gamlingay heath.

Narciſſus poeticus. Pale Daffodil, or Primroſe Peerleſs; in meadows and paſtures at Whittlesford.

——— Pſeudonarciſſus. Engliſh Daffodil; in woods and hedges at Whitwell and Whittlesford.

Nardus ſtricta. Mat graſs; on Gamlingay heath.

Nepeta Cataria. Cat-mint; in hedges at Ditton, and elſewhere.

Nymphæa alba. White Water Lily; in ſlow rivers and ponds; on Triplow heath; in the horſeway from Cambridge to Hinton, and on Teverſham moor.

——— lutea. Yellow Water Lily, in the river Cam.

Ononis inermis, arvenſis. Corn Reſtharrow; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Ophioglofſum vulgatum. Adderstongue; in damp meadows and paſtures: at Ditton and Granchefter.

Ophrys Apifera. Bee Orchis; in a cloſe near Burrough church, and in Kingſton wood, at Shelford, and elſewhere.

——— aranifera. The Green winged humble Bee Satyrion; in a buſhy cloſe by the footway between the two Abingtons.

——— lilifolia. Dwarf Orchis; in the watery places of Hinton and Teverſham moors.

——— Monorchis. Muſk or Yellow Sweet Orchis; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and in ſome pits about Gogmagog hills.

——— muſcifera. The Fly Orchis; on the banks of the Devil's ditch, and in the cloſes about Hinton and Teverſham, and elſewhere.

——— ovata. Common Twayblade; in damp woods and groves; in the wood at Gamlingay; in the Chalkpit cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Ophrys paludoſa. Marſh Twayblade; on the boggy and fenny grounds near Gamlingay.

——— ſpiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; on Cherry Hinton and Teverſham moors.

Orchis bifolia. Butterfly Orchis; in Kingſton wood, and at Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

——— conopſea. Sweet Orchis; in meadows and paſtures; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton; in the Devil's ditch, Newmarket heath, and at Cheſterton.

——— latifolia. Broad leaved Orchis; in meadows and paſtures; at Cheſterton.

——— latifolia (flore albo). Broad leaved Orchis with a white flower; on Cherry Hinton moor.

——— maculata. Female handed Orchis; ——— maſcula. Male Orchis; } in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

——— morio. Female Orchis; in damp meadows and paſtures; at Girton.

——— morio (flore albo). Female Orchis; at Moor barns thicket.

——— pyramidalis. Purple late flowering Orchis; in the chalk pitt cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and on Newmarket heath.

——— pyramidalis (flore albo). in the ſame place.

——— uſtulata. Dwarf Orchis; on Gogmagog hills and in the Devil's ditch on Newmarket heath.

Origanum vulgare. Common Pot Marjoram; in groves and hedges of a chalk ſoil; at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

Ornithogalum pyrenaicum. Pyrenean Star of Bethlehem; in a buſhy cloſe near Little Everſden church.

Orobanche major. Broomrape; on the roots of broom; at Granchefter, and elſewhere.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moon Wort; in Little Linton warren by the Cow gallery, and on a ſmall hill overgrown with Furze at Hilderſham, and elſewhere.

——— ſpicant. Rough Spleenwort; on the bogs in Gamlingkay park.

Oxalis Acetoſella. Wood Sorrel; in woods and groves; in the Devil's ditch, Newmarket heath, and elſewhere.

Papaver Argremone. Rough headed Poppy; ——— dubium. Long ſmooth head Poppy; } in corn fields.

Papaver ſomniferum. White Poppy; in corn fields and uncultivated places; at Water-beach.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris Truelove, or One Berry; in Kingſton wood, and in the wood at Everſden.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; in wet meadows on Teverſham moor; on that ſide of Hinton moor next the Lime Kiln, and at Trumpington.

Paſtinaca ſylveſtris. Wild Parſnep; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Peplis Portulaca. Water Purſlane; in the bogs in Gamlingay park.

Peziza coccinea. Scarlet Peziza; on rotten wood in woods and hedges; at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

——— punctata. Dotted Peziza; on horſe dung, in Gamlingay park.

Phallus eſculentus. Eſculent Morel; in woods and hedges; at Moorbarns thicket, at Shelford and Cherry Hinton, and on Newmarket heath.

Phaſcum acaulon. Oval Phaſcum; in heaths and banks of a ſandy ſoil; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

Phleum paniculatum. Bulboſe Cat's tail Graſs; on Newmarket heath.

Pimpinella major. Greater Burnet Saxifrage; in the woods at St. George's, Hatley, and in many other woods on the borders of Bedfordſhire.

——— ſaxifraga. Leſſer Burnet Saxifrage; on Gogmagog hills.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Common Butterwort, or Yorkſhire Sanicle; on Cherry Hinton and Teverſham moors.

Plantago coronopus. Buck's horn Plantain, Star of the Earth; on Newmarket heath, and elſewhere.

——— lanceolata β. A variety of Ribwort Plantain; on Gogmagog hills, and Hill of Health.

Poa maritima. Sea Meadow graſs; near Wisbich.

Polygonum Biſtorta. Snakeweed, or Greater Biſtort; in damp meadows; at Whitwell and Shelford.

——— Fagopyrum. Buck Wheat; in corn fields between Hilderſham and Wilbraham.

Polygonum Hydropiper β minus. Small creeping Arſemart; in watery places at Waterbeach.

Polypodium criſtatum. Creſted Polypody; in wet woods and ſhady places; ——— Filix fœmina. Female Polypody; in wet woods and ſhady places; } in Gamlingay park.

——— Thelypteris. Marſh Fern; in buſhy marſhes, groves and hedges; ——— vulgare. Common Polypody; on the cathedral at Ely, and elſewhere.

Polytrichum commune. Greater Golden Maidenhair; on Cherry Hinton moor.

Populus tremula. Trembling Poplar, or Aſp; in wet woods at Cheſterton.

Potamogiton compreſſum. Small branched Pond weed; ——— lucens. Shining Pondweed; in rivers and lakes; } in the river Cam.

——— natans. Broad leaved Pondweed; in ponds and ſlow rivers on Cherry Hinton moor.

——— pectinatum. Fineſt Fennel leaved Pondweed; in the river Cam.

——— perfoliatum. Perfoliate Pondweed; in the river Cam.

——— puſillum. Small Pondweed; in the waters about Stourbridge, and elſewhere.

Potentilla anſerina. Silver weed or Wild Tanſey; in places places where water has been ſtagnant in the winter: at Linton.

Potentilla verna. Spring Cinquefoil; on Gogmagog hills near the Paps. M T.

Poterium ſanguiſorba. Burnet; in fields of a chalk ſoil; at Cheſterton.

Primula vulgaris β. Greater Cowſlip, or Oxlip; in Kingſton and Madingley woods.

——— veris. Common Cowſlip or Pagils; in Madingley wood.

Prunus Cerafus. Black Cherry; in woods and hedges; at Teverſham.

——— Cerafus γ Avium. Common Wild Cherry; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Pyrus communis. Pear tree; in hedges about Hinton.

Ranunculus aquatilis β. Various leaved Water Crowfoot; in the river Cam.

——— aquatilis γ. Various leaved Water Crowfoot; in rivers at Cheſterton.

——— auricomus. Sweet wood Crowfoot or Goldylocks; in woods and hedges; at Ditton and elſewhere.

——— bulboſus β. Upright Pale leaved Crowfoot; in gardens, ſides of roads, and rubbiſh; on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

——— lingua. Great Spearwort; in ſome ditches on Teverſham moor, and in many ditches in the fens of the Iſle of Ely.

——— parviflorus. Small flowered Crowfoot; in meadows and paſtures of a gravelly ſoil; under the hedge at Madingley overagainſt the church, and elſewhere.

Reſeda lutea. Baſe Rocket; in corn fields, meadows, and paſtures of a chalk ſoil: on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

——— Luteola. Dyer's weed, Yellow-weed, or Wild Woad; in the cloſe at Cherry Hinton called the Chalk pit cloſe.

Rhamnus Catharticus. Purging Thorn or Buck Thorn; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

——— Frangula. Black berry bearing Alder; in Gamlingay Park and Whitewood.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants or Squinancy berries; by the river ſide at Abington, and elſewhere.

—— rubrum. Common Currants; in woods and hedges; at Bournbridge.

—— Uva criſpa. Gooſeberries; in Great Shelford churchyard, at Gurton, and in a hedge by Parker's piece.

Roſa Eglanteria. Sweet Briar, or Eglantine; on heaths and hedges; on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

—— villoſus β. A variety of Apple Roſe; in White wood, Gamlingay.

Rumex hydro-lapatheum. Great Water Dock; in Cow fen, Cambridge.

——— pulcher. Fiddle Dock; about the Caſtle hill, Cambridge.

—— maritimus. Golden Dock; on rubbiſh and highways; in the Iſle of Ely, and at Wiſbich.

Sagittaria ſagittifolia. Arrow head; in ditches and banks of rivers; at Cherry Hinton.

Salix Helix. The Yellow Dwarf Willow; in the horſe way from Cambridge to Cherry Hinton, and in the cloſe juſt by the water you paſs over to go thither.

—— repens. Creeping Willow; in the bogs in Gamlingay park.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder or Danewort; in hedges and highways; at Cherry Hinton, Madingley, and Gamlingay.

Samolus valerandi. Round Leaved Water Pimpernel; on Teverſham, Hiſton, and Trumpington moors, and in the way from Cambridge to Hiſton.

Sanicula Europæa. Sanicle; in Madingley wood, and in the Chalk pit cloſe at Hinton.

Sanguiſorba officinalis. Burnet; in wet meadows; at Whitwell and Shelford.

Saponaria officinalis. Soapwort; in meadows and hedges; at Barnwell, and elſewhere.

Satyrium viride. Frog Orchis; in a pit near the Chalk pit cloſe on that ſide of the lane next Cherry Hinton town, and at King's hedges Cheſterton.

Saxifraga granulata. White Saxifrage; in dry meadows and paſtures; near Barnwell, and elſewhere.

Scabioſa arvenſis. Field Scabious; ——— Columbaria. Small Scabious; M T
——— ſucciſa. Devil's bit;
} in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Schœnus albus. White headed Bogruſh; in marſhes; on the bogs in Gamlingay park, and on Teverſham moor.

——— compreſſus. Compreſſed Bogruſh; in marſhy places; between Little Shelford and Whittlesford.

——— mariſcus. Long rooted baſtard Cyperus; in the watery places on Hinton moor, and divers other fens.

——— nigricans. Round black headed Marſh Bogruſh with Gramill ſeeds; everywhere in the watery places on Hinton and Teverſham moors.

Scirpus lacuſtris, Tall Club-ruſh or Bull-ruſh; in pools, rivers, and lakes; in the river Cam.

—— lacuſtris β. A variety of ditto; in pools, rivers, and lakes; by the horſe way from Cambridge to Cherry Hinton.

—— maritimus. Round rooted Clubruſh, or baſtard Cyperus; on banks of rivers, and on the ſea ſhore; at Wiſbich.

——— ceſpitoſus. Dwarf Clubruſh; in marſhes by Stourbridge.

——— ſetaceus. Leaſt Clubruſh; on the bogs in Gamlingay park, and elſewhere.

Scutellaria galericulata. Hooded Willow-herb, or Scull-cap; at Cherry Hinton and Teverſham moors.

Sedum album. White Stone-crop; on walls and houſes; at Chattereſs on the thatched houſes.

——— acre. Yellow Stone-Crop or Wall-Pepper; at Shellford and elſewhere.

——— acre β ſexangulare. Sexangular Stone-Crop; on walls, &c. on Trinity Conduit head Cambridge, and on Ely cathedral.

——— Telephium. Orpine or Livelong; on walls, paſtures and hedges; at Shelford, and elſewhere.

Senecio paludoſus. Marſh Groundſel, or Bird's Tongue; in and on the banks of the ditches in the Iſle of Ely, and near Stretham ferry, and at Chattereſs.

——— viſcoſus. Stinking Groundſel; on heaths, groves, and hedges; in the Iſle of Ely.

Serapias latifolia γ paluſtris. Marſh Baſtard Hellebore; on Teverſham and Cherry Hinton moors, and at Triplow.

——— longifolia. White flowered Baſtard Hellebore; in woods and groves; on Teverſham moor, at

at Quoy, in Kingſton wood, and in the Iſle of Ely.

Serratula tinctoria. Common Saw-Wort; in woods and paſtures at Madingley, and elſewhere.

Sherardia arvenſis. Little Field Madder; on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

Silene Anglica. Engliſh Catchfly, or Corn Campion; among the corn near the Devil's ditch Newmarket heath.

—— Noctiflora. Night flowering Campion; amongſt the corn on the left hand of the road leading from Newmarket to Canvaſs hall in Wood Ditton.

Siſon ſegetum. Corn Honewort; on ditch banks as you go from Cambridge to Madingley.

—— inundatum. Leaſt Water Parſnep; in ditches near Papermills, and on Gamlingay heath.

Sium latifolium. Broad leaved Water Parſnep; in the river Cam.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; in ditches; at Cheſterton and Cherry Hinton.

Solidago Virga aurea. Common Golden Rod; in paſtures at Gamlingay, and elſewhere.

Sonchus paluſtris. Marſh Sowthiſtle; near Stretham ferry.

Sorbus Aucuparia. Mountain Aſh, or Quicken tree; in Gamlingay park, and in Whitewood.

Spergula arvenſis. Corn Spurry; amongſt corn, and in ſandy places; at Madingley and Gamlingay.

—— nodoſa. Knotted Spurry, or Engliſh Marſh Saxifrage; at Cherry Hinton and Teverſham, on the moors, and elſewhere.

Sphagnum paluſtre. Grey Bogmoſs; on the bogs in Gamlingay park.

—— arboreum. Tree Sphagnum; on trees; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

Spiræa filipendula. Dropwort; about Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

—— Ulmaria. Meadow Sweet, or Queen of the Meadows; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

Splachnum ampullaceum. Purple Splachnum; on Cherry Hinton and Teverſham moors.

Statice armeria. Common Thrift or Sea Gilly flower; by the river ſide below the town of Wiſbich.

Stellaria Graminea β. A variety of Leſſer Stitchwort; on bogs in Gamlingay park, and elſewhere.

Stratiotes Aloides. Water Sengren or Freſh Water ſoldier; in the rivers and fen ditches in the Iſle of Ely; in the river ditches near Stretham ferry, and about Audrey cauſey, and at Mepole.

Symphytum officinale. Comfrey; in Cow fen, Cambridge.

Tanacetum vulgare. Tanſey; in Gamlingay park, and elſewhere.

Teucrium chamæpitys. Ground Pine; in barren fields; on the lays about the borders of Triplow heath.

—— ſcordium. Water Germander; in many ditches in the Iſle of Ely; in a ditch on the right hand of the road leading from Cambridge to Hiſton, and at Mepole.

Thalictrum flavum. Common Meadow Rue; on Cherry Hinton moor, and at Cheſterton.

—— minus. The Leſſer Meadow Rue; in the Chalky grounds about Newmarket, Linton, and Bartlow.

Theſium linophyllum. Baſtard Toadflax; on Triplow and Newmarket heaths, on Gogmagog hills, and elſewhere.

Thymus Acinos. Wild Baſil; in gravelly or chalky dry hills; on Gogmagog hills and Newmarket heath, and elſewhere.

—— ſerpyllum γ. Hoary Thyme; on Gogmagog hills.

Tragopogon pratenſe. Yellow Goatsbeard; in meadows and paſtures; as in the Chalk pit cloſe Cherry Hinton.

Tremella auricula, Jew's ear: on rotten wood: near Moorbarn's thicket.

Trifolium agregarium. Hop Trefoil; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

—— arvenſe. Harefoot Trefoil; on the hill of health Cambridge, and elſewhere.

—— filiforme, Small Trefoil; on Gamlingay heath, and elſewhere.

—— fragiferum. Strawberry Trefoil; in Parkers pieces Cambridge.

—— glomeratum. Round headed Trefoil; on Newmarket heath and at Cheſterton.

—— ochroleucum. Yellow flowered Trefoil; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and at Madingley.

—— Melilotus officinalis. Melilot; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

—— ſcabrum. Oval headed Trefoil; on Newmarket heath, and at Gamlingay.

—— ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil; in dry meadows and paſtures; at Gamlingay.

—— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil; in dry meadows near the windmill at Gamlingay.

Triglochin paluſtre. Marſh Arrow headed Graſs; on Teverſham, Shelford, and Hinton moors.

Triticum caninum. Bearded Wheat Graſs; in a buſhy cloſe near Little Everſdon church.

—— junceum. Sea Wheat Graſs; near Wisbich.

Turritis hirſuta. Rough Tower Muſtard; on the walls in Dead Man's lane Wiſbech, and by Bournbridge.

Tuſſilago Farfara. Common Coltsfoot; at Stourbridge near Barnwell; and elſewhere.

—— Petaſites. Butter Bur; in wet meadows and paſtures; at Granchеſter.

Typha latifolia. Greater Cat's tail, or Reed mace; on the bogs at Gamlingay and on Teverſham moor.

Vaccinium Oxycoccus. Cranberries, or Moſs berries; in the bogs at Gamlingay.

Valantia cruciata. Croſswort; about Madingley wood and near Moorbarn's thicket.

Valeriana locuſta. Corn Sallet, or Lamb's Lettuce; in corn and other fields; at Granchеſter and Gamlingay.

—— officinalis. Wild Valerian; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton, and elſewhere.

—— rubra (flore albo). Garden Valerian, with a white Flower; about Ely cathedral, and elſewhere.

Verbaſcum nigrum. Sage Leaved Black Mullein; on Gogmagog hills towards Hinton, and at Shelford, Fulborn, and elſewhere.

Verbena officinalis. Vervain; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Veronica Anagallis. Long Leaved Water Speedwell; in the way from Cambridge to Hinton, and elſewhere.

Veronica Becabunga. Brooklime; on Cherry Hinton moor.

——— montana. Mountain Speedwell; in thick woods and hedges at Linton.

——— ſcutellata, Marſh Speedwell; at Barnwell, and elſewhere.

——— Spicata. Spiked Speedwell; in mountainous meadows; in ſeveral cloſes adjoining to Newmarket heath beyond Bottiſham, and in meadows about Horſe heath hall.

Viburnum Lantana. Pliant Mealy, or Wayfaring tree; in Madingley wood, in the Chalk pitt cloſe Cherry Hinton, and in Kingſton wood.

——— Opulus. Water Elder; in Madingley wood.

Vicia Cracca. Tufted Wood Vetch; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Cherry Hinton.

Vinca major. Greater Periwinkle; in Madingley wood, and elſewhere.

—— minor. Leſſer Periwinkle; at Cherry Hinton.

Viola birta. Violet with Throatwort leaves; in the Chalk pit cloſe at Hinton, Ulva inteſtinalis. Gut Laver; in a ditch at Newton, and at Granchester.

Utricularia vulgaris. Hooded Water Milfoil; in the fen dykes in the Iſle of Ely; in the Stour near the Papermills, and elſewhere.

——— minor. Leſſer Hooded Milfoil; on Teverſham and Gamlingay moors; in muddy ditches and marſhes.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE
CAMBRIDGESHIRE
HUNTINGDONSHIRE
NORMAN
CROSS
HUNDRED
HURSTINGSTONE
Walmsford
Sutton
Castor
Yarwell
Longthorp
PETERBOROUGH
Woodstone
Overton Longville
Overton Waterville
Abvalton
Chesterton
Fletton
Standground
Whittlesea Dyke
WHITTLESEA
Whittlesea Grounds
Flagg Fen
Glass Moor
Farcet
Haddon
YAXLEY
Morborn
Folkesworth
Stilton
Caldecot
Lutton
Holme
Whittlesea Mere
Horse Fen
Stilton Fen
Holm Fen
Ramsea Middle Hearn Moor
Ramsey Upwood Fen
Ramsey Turf Fen
RAMSEY
Ramsey Forlick
Warboys
Bury
Upwood
Bury & Wistow Fens
High Fen
Somersham High & North Fen
Wistow
Great Raveley
Little Raveley
Wood Walton
Conington
Sawtry Little Fen
Sawtry Great Fen
Luddington
Thurning
Gidding Magna
Gidding Parva
Steple Gidding
Winwick
Hamerton
Clapton
Benwick
Ramsey Mere
Pondsbridge
Sword Dyke
Beryll's Beam
Old West Water
Hammonds Eau
Somersham
Broughton
Old Hurst
Ripton Abbots
Alconbury Common
Yaxley Lode
Longueast Lode
Monks Lode
Denton Dyke
Holme Load
Palmers
New Dyke
Ramsey Heights
Ramsey Hollows
Whittlesea Mere
Ugg Mere
Ramsey Mere
Water Newton
Longthorp
Castor Mills
Walton
Orton Longueville
Fletton
Standground
Farcet
Yaxley
Holme
Conington
Sawtry
Upwood
Ramsey
Bury Wistow
Somersham
Benwick
Old West Water
Ramsey Mere
Whittlesea Mere
Whittlesea Dyke
Sword Dyke
Beryll's Beam
Glass Moor
Flagg Fen
Whittlesea Grounds
Ramsey Forlick
Ramsey Hollows
Warboys
Bury & Wistow Fens
High Fen
Somersham High & North Fen
Hammonds Eau
Holme
Conington
Sawtry Little Fen
Sawtry Great Fen
Upwood
Ramsey
Bury Wistow
Somersham
Benwick
Old West Water
Ramsey Mere
Whittlesea Mere
Whittlesea Dyke
Sword Dyke
Beryll's Beam
Glass Moor
Flagg Fen
Ramsey Forlick
Ramsey Hollows
Warboys
Bury & Wistow Fens
High Fen
Somersham High & North Fen
Hammonds Eau

A Map of HUNTINGDONSHIRE from the best Authorities.

Engraved by J. Cary.

E. Noble delin.t et curavit.

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

1 2 3 4 5

Longitude West from London. 0 East from London.

HUNDRED

Somersham

Coln & Earith Fen

Bluntisham Heath

Bluntisham Fen

Holywell Mead.

Kings Bush

Conington

Papworth St Everard

Papworth St Agnes

Graveley

Toseland

Yelling

Hilton

Offord Cluny

Offord Darcy

Godmanchester

Huntingdon

Brampton

Ellington

Grafham

Buckden

Diddington

Great Paxton

Little Paxton

Hail Weston

Stirtloe

Abbotsley

Waresley

Gamlingay

Gamlingay Wood

Gamlingay Park

Caxton

Eltisley

Croxton

Papworth Everard

Fenny Stanton

Hemingford Abbot

Hemingford Grey

St Ives

Houghton

Wilton

Hartford

Ripton Abbots

Ripton Regis

Broughton

Old Hurst

Wood Hurst

Somersham

Needingworth

Over Ferry

Alconbury

Stukeley Parva

Stukeley Magna

Wabridge

Wooley

Buckworth

Weston

Barham

Brington

Molesworth

Bythorne

Keystone

Catworth

Little Catworth

Spaldwick

Easton

Stow Longa

Hargrave

Covington

Tilbrook

Kimbolton

Swineshead

Perenhall

Great Stoughton

Stoughton Parva

Stoughton Moor

Rislip

Colmworth

Eaton Socon

Little End

Little Barford

Eynsbury

Upper Wintringham

Lower Wintringham

Caldecot

Welde

Paddock Hardwick

Hunny Hardwick

Cross Hall

Wyboston

Graveley

Toseland

Yelling

Hilton

Offord Cluny

Offord Darcy

Godmanchester

Huntingdon

Brampton

Ellington

Grafham

Buckden

Diddington

Great Paxton

Little Paxton

Hail Weston

Stirtloe

Abbotsley

Waresley

Gamlingay

H

ON t Hun tuate as t ampton or is divided ſhire on th well adapt in other p woods. T with wood
Henry II.
whole as f
"Waybric
"lord's wo

The fou
by the Ou
this river, towns. A county, wh
St. Neede's
ſpent his v whoſe bod
Cornwall;
palace of ea endowed b ſoon after place was holy man, v
Below this a little ſprings ſalt: the la againſt the dimneſs of ſalutes Bugd
coln, and by transferred in Cambridg family of th
Huntantun,
public ſeal
Henry its a renders it [b], and the new coined by o principal tow likewiſe give
"archdeacon
"both in ple
"ing, nearn
"fiſh." In find in Dome
"four ferling
"paying cuſ
"bordarii [w

[a] And Huntant
[b] fol. 203. a.
[c] "In augment
[d]

HUNTINGDONSHIRE.

ON the back of Cambridgeſhire lies the county of Huntingdon, Saxon Huntedunerycyne [a], ſo ſituate as to have Bedfordſhire on the ſouth, Northampton on the weſt, and alſo on the north, where it is divided from it by the river Avon; and Cambridgeſhire on the eaſt. It is a good corn country, and well adapted for cattle to the eaſt, where it is fenny; in other parts diverſified with ſunny hills and ſhady woods. The inhabitants ſay it was once all covered with woods; and it appears to have been a foreſt till Henry II. in the beginning of his reign diſforeſted the whole as ſet forth by an old perambulation, "except "Waybridge, Sapple, and Herthei, which were the "lord's woods and remain foreſt."

The ſouth part is watered and covered with flowers by the Ouſe ſo frequently mentioned before. Upon this river, among others of leſs note, are three famous towns. After leaving Bedfordſhire it enters this county, where it firſt viſits St. Neot's (commonly called St. Neede's), from Neot a learned and holy man, who ſpent his whole life in propagating Chriſtianity, and whoſe body was tranſlated hither from Neotſtok in Cornwall; and in honour of him Alfric turned the palace of earl Elfrid into a monaſtery, which was richly endowed by Roiſia wife of Richard lord of Clare, ſoon after the Norman invaſion. Before this the place was called Ainulphsbury from Ainulph another holy man, which name ſtill remains in a part of it. Below this at Hailweſton, a very ſmall village, are two little ſprings, one of freſh water, the other ſomewhat ſalt: the latter is reckoned by the neighbours good againſt the itch and leproſy, the former againſt dimneſs of ſight. Not far from thence the Ouſe ſalutes Bugden, an handſome ſeat of the biſhops of Lincoln, and by Hinchingbroke, once appropriated to nuns transferred hither by the Conqueror from Elteſley in Cambridgeſhire, and now the ſeat of the knightly family of the Cromwells, comes to Huntingdon, Saxon Huntandun, according to Marianus, and in the public ſeal Hunterſdune, q. d. Hunter's Mount, as Henry its archdeacon, who lived 400 years ago, renders it [b], whence it bears a Hunter in its arms, and the new Latin name of Venantodunum has been coined by our countryman Leland [c]. This is the principal town of the whole county, to which it likewiſe gives name, "ſurpaſſing, as the forecited "archdeacon obſerves [d], all the neighbouring towns "both in pleaſantneſs of ſituation, beauty of building, nearneſs to the fens, and plenty of game and "fiſh." In the time of Edward the Confeſſor, as I find in Domeſday book [e], "there were in this burgh "four ferlings [f], in two of which were 116 burgeſſes "paying cuſtom and geld, and under them 100 "bordarii [who help to pay the geld]: in the other "two ferlings were 140 burgeſſes ſubject to all "cuſtoms and the king's geld." It ſtands in a rather high ſituation on the north bank of the Ouſe, extending in length to the north, having four churches, and antiently a ſmall monaſtery founded by the empreſs Matilda and Euſtace Lovetoft, whoſe walls I ſaw below the town to the eaſt. On the river near the bridge, which is beautifully built of ſtone, is the hill and ſite of a caſtle built A. D. 917 by Edward the elder, greatly enlarged by David king of Scots, to whom, according to an antient hiſtorian, "king Stephen gave the burough of Hun-"tingdon for an augmentation of his eſtate [g]," and afterwards Henry II. becauſe it was a retreat for rebels, and the Scotch and St. Lizes had often ſet up claims to it, levelled it with the ground to cut ſhort the diſpute, having ſworn in his anger during their importunities, that neither the St. Lizes nor the Scots ſhould ſquabble about it any longer. From the keep of this caſtle is an extenſive proſpect, and under it lies a meadow called Portſholme ſurrounded by the Ouſe, the largeſt and moſt flowery ſpot the ſun ever beheld, to which in ſpring one may juſtly apply this line [h]:

Ver pingit vario gemmantia prata colore.

The Spring with various colours paints the ſtudded meads.

So beautiful a picture does it exhibit. On the hither ſide of the river over againſt Huntingdon ſtands what one may call its mother, whence it ſprung, now called Goodmancheſter, formerly Gormonceſter. A large village, famous for agriculture, in a free open plain, and ſloping towards the ſun. No town in England has ſo many ſtout hinds or employs more ploughs. They boaſt of having formerly received the kings of England in their way hither with a ruſtic proceſſion of 180 ploughs. Certain it is they apply themſelves with the greateſt diligence of any of ur people to a ruſtic life, which Columella [i] ſays is "allied to wiſ-"dom." Henry of Huntingdon before quoted [k], calls this "no unpleaſant town;" and truly ſays "it was a "noble city." For not to mention the frequent finding of Roman coins and the diſtance in the Itinerary, the very derivation of the name proves that this was the city called in Antoninus DUROLIPONTE, corruptly for DUROSIPONTE; Duroſi-ponte (excuſe the change of one letter) ſignifying in Britiſh the Bridge over the river Oſe: for all allow that this river is promiſcuouſly called Uſe, Iſe, Oſe, and Ouſe. But the antient name falling into diſuſe among the Saxons it came to be called Gormanceſter from Gormon a Dane, to whom our Alfred on concluding a peace ceded theſe provinces, as that old line teſtifies, Gormonis a caſtri nomine nomen habet.

From Gormon's caſtle now it takes its name.

Goodmancheſter.

Duroliponte.

[a] And Huntandunerycyne. [b] Hiſt. VI. 207. (361.) [c] Coll. II. 184, 185. [d] Ubi ſupra.
[e] fol. 203. a. [f] Sir Edward Cook explains a ferling by 32 acres. Spelman by 10 acres.
[g] "In augmentum honoris de Huntedune datis ei Dunecaſtra & Caerleol." are the words of John Hexham inter X Script. p. 258.
[h] [i] Pref. [k] ubi ſup.

This is the perſon of whom J. Pike[l] an antient hiſtorian writes thus: "King Alfred ſo humbled the "Danes, that they gave as many hoſtages as he de- "manded to quit the country or embrace Chriſtianity, "which laſt they accordingly did: for their king "Guthrum otherwiſe called Gormond, with 30 "lords, and almoſt the whole nation, received bap- "tiſm, and was adopted by Alfred as his ſon by the "name of Athelſtan. Here then he lived, and had "the provinces of the Eaſt Angles and Northum- "brians aſſigned him: to rule as his inheritance "under ſubordination to the king thoſe countries he "had formerly ravaged as a marauder." Nor muſt we forget that ſome other antient writers have called this place Gumiceſter and Gumicaſter[m], and confidently affirmed that Machutus had his biſhopric here.

Slepe. St. Ive's.

The Ouſe breaking away hence, and approaching now to Cambridgeſhire, runs by a very pleaſant town among the meads, called antiently by the Saxons Slepe, but at preſent St. Ive's, from Ivo a Perſian biſhop, who made ſuch a figure for ſanctity in England about A. D. 600, as is reported, preached the goſpel with unremitting diligence, and left his name to this place where he died, and from whence the monks ſoon removed his body to Ramſey.

Somerſham.

Turning ſcarce three miles hence we ſee Somerſham, lately a beautiful houſe of the biſhop of Ely, given by earl Brithnot to that church, A. D. 491, and James Stanley, a moſt luxurious prelate, enlarged it with new buildings. A little higher up ſtood the wealthy Ramſey.

monaſtery of Ramſey among the fens where the rivers meeting with ſofter ground ſtagnate. Take the following brief deſcription of the place from the private hiſtory of the houſe[n]. "Ramſey, q. d. Ram's "iſland on the weſt (for the fens render it inac- "ceſſible on every other ſide), is divided from the "finer ground by clayey quagmires about two ſtones' "throw acroſs. This place, which formerly received "only ſhips conveyed by gentle gales between the "pleaſant banks of a ſluggiſh ſtream, now by great "pains and coſt, by filling up the ſwamps with wood, "ſand, and ſtones, is approached by perſons on "foot by a hard cauſeway near two miles long, but "not near ſo wide, covered with alders and beds of "green ſedges and bullruſhes, being long before it "was inhabited covered with various trees, but eſ- "pecially large quantities of elm. Now, by length "of time, the woods being in part deſtroyed, it ap- "pears a rich arable ſoil enriched with fruits, ſmiling "with corn, planted with gardens, abounding in "paſtures and beautiful meads exhibiting in ſpring "a charming proſpect; the whole iſland being a "picture of different flowers. It is beſides encircled "with fens abounding with eels and marſhes breed- "ing various ſorts of fiſh and water fowl. One of Ramſey Meere.

"theſe is called Ramſey Mere after the name of the "iſland, ſurpaſſing the reſt around it in beauty and "produce. On that part of the iſland where grows "the largeſt and thickeſt wood it waſhes its ſandy "ſhore in a beautiful manner to the delight of the "beholders. In its vaſt pools [o] are often caught by "drags and other kind of nets, as well as by hooks "and other fiſhing tackle, ſuprizing large pikes Haked.

"called by the inhabitants Hakeds[p]; and the fiſhing "ſportſmen find continual employment always "catching the various watry fry, which is always as "faſt recruited." The author then proceeds more at large to relate how Ailwin of the blood royal, who on account of the great influence and favour he was held in by the king was ſtyled Healf Koning or Half King, admoniſhed by the dream of a fiſherman, built this monaſtery, which biſhop Oſwald forwarded, and kings and others ſo endowed that 60 monks had a yearly revenue of no leſs than £.7000 of our money. But as it has been long ſince deſtroyed, I may be thought to have dwelt too long on this ſubject. I ſhall add, however, from the ſame writer, the inſcription on Ailwin's tomb, as bearing an unuſual ſtyle of honour:

HIC REQVIESCIT AILWI-NVS INCLITI REGIS EAD-
GARI COGNATVS, TOTIVS
ANGLIAE ALDERMANNVS, ET
HVIVS SACRI COENOBII
MIRACVLOSVS FVNDATOR.

q. d. "Here reſts Ailwin kinſman of the renowned "king Eadgar, Alderman of all England, and by "miraculous inſtinct founder of this abbey."

From hence to Peterborough, which is about ten miles off, king Canute finding the way dangerous by floods and inundations, made, at great expence, a road called by our hiſtorians Kingſdelfe, not far from the great lake called Wittleſmere. As this abbey was the ornament of the weſt part of this county, ſo that of the middle part was Saltrey, antiently a monaſtery of Ciſtercians, built by the ſecond Simon de St. Liz earl of Huntingdon. Not far from which is Cunnington, antiently held of the Honor of Huntingdon, as the lawyers ſpeak, where within a ſquare ditch are traces of an antient caſtle, the ſeat, as was alſo Saltrey, by gift of Canute, of Turkill the Dane, who lived here amongſt the Eaſt Angles, and invited over Suene king of Denmark, to ravage England. After his departure it came to Waltheof, ſon of Siward earl of Northumberland, earl of Huntingdon, who had married Judith, William the Conqueror's own ſiſter's daughter, by whoſe eldeſt daughter it came into the royal family of Scotland. For ſhe had for her ſecond husband David earl of Huntingdon, who afterwards aſcended the throne of Scotland, younger ſon of Malcolm Can-mor king of Scotland, and Margaret his wife, of the Saxon blood royal, grand-daughter to Edmund Ironſide by his ſon Eadgar the exile. David had Henry, and Henry another David earl of Huntingdon, by whoſe youngeſt daughter Iſabel Cunnington and other eſtates deſcended in dower to Robert Brus, from whoſe eldeſt ſon Robert ſurnamed the Noble, James king of Great Britain is lineally deſcended; and from Bernard his younger ſon who inherited this Cunnington with Exton, ſir Robert Cotton, who beſides his other virtues is an admirer of and proficient in literature, and having collected the remains of venerable antiquity from all parts, has here formed a cabinet, from which he has often with ſingular kindneſs furniſhed me light in my dark purſuits.

But theſe places lying in a lower ground and for many months under water, and the ſoil in ſome places as it were floating on the ſurface of the water, are

[l] Who wrote a hiſtory of England to the death of John. MS. Cott. Jul. D. VI. 1. and flouriſhed in the beginning of the 12th century. Tan. Bib. Brit. 599.

[m] By the name of Gumiceſter Henry III. granted it to his ſon Edmund earl of Lancaſter. Holland.

[n] Publiſhed by Gale, Ox. 1691. fol. p. 385.

[o] Gurgites.

[p] The German name is Heket, or Hecht. Pennant, Zool. III. 270.

much much infeſted by the thick air and offenſive vapour of the meers and fens. Here that clear lake called Wittleſmere, well ſtocked with fiſh, extends itſelf for ſix miles in length and three in breadth, in a very fenny part of the country; but the inhabitants reckon the thickneſs of the air is compenſated by the advantages of the fiſhery, the plentiful paſturage, and the quantity of turf ſo fit for firing. King Canute ordered the fen to be parcelled out among the ſeveral towns upon it by Turkill the Dane aforementioned, who divided it in ſuch a manner that each town had ſuch a proportion of the fen for its own uſe, as each town had firm land[q] abutting on the oppoſite fen. He ordained that no townſhip ſhould dig or mow without leave in the fen belonging to another, and that they ſhould all have a common right of paſturage, i. e. horn under horn, in order to maintain peace and harmony among them. But this by the by.

When the ſons and ſervants of Canute ſent for from Peterborough to Ramſey were croſſing this lake, "a moſt violent ſtorm aroſe with a whirlwind as "they were chearfully ſailing along, amuſing themſelves with ſinging, and envelopt them on every "ſide, ſo that they abſolutely deſpaired of their "lives or aſſiſtance. But the mercy of the Almighty did not quite fail them, nor ſuffer the "dreadful gulph to ſwallow them up; but mercifully by his providence delivered ſome of them "from thoſe raging waves, and permitted the reſt "according to the ſecret workings of his righteous "judgement to paſs out of this frail life in the midſt "of thoſe waves. When the report of this danger "reached the king's ears, fear and trembling laid "hold on him; but after he had recovered himſelf, "by the advice of his nobles and friends to prevent "for the future the misfortunes occaſioned by this "raging element, he cauſed a dyke to be marked "out by his ſoldiers and ſervants with their daggers "and ſwords in the adjoining marſhes between "Ramſey and Wittleſey, and afterwards cleaned by "labourers, whence, as we learn from the credible "teſtimony of our predeceſſors, ſome of the neighbouring inhabitants give that dyke the name of "Swerdeſdelf, from its having been marked out "with ſwords, and others will have it called Cnoutſ-delf from the king *." It is commonly called at preſent Steeds dike, and is accounted the boundary between this county and Cambridgeſhire.

The eaſt ſide of this county is adorned with the caſtle of Kinnibantum, now Kimbolton, antiently the ſeat of the Magnavilles, afterwards of the Bobuns and Staffords, now of the Wingfelds. Below it was the little abbey of Stonley, founded by the Bigrams[r]. Not far from hence is Awkenbury, which king John gave to David earl of Huntingdon, and John the Scot his ſon to Stephen Segrave, which I the rather mention as he was one of thoſe noblemen that ſerve as inſtances of the inſtability of power. He reached the ſummit of his ambition with difficulty, ſupported himſelf there with much trouble, and met with a ſudden fall[s]. "In his youth from clerk he turned "ſoldier[t]; though of low birth, by his diligence "he acquired ſo much wealth and honour that he "was reckoned among the chief men of the king-"dom, was appointed as juſtice of England, and "managed almoſt all the affairs of the nation as he "pleaſed." At length he quite loſt the king's favour, and lay concealed till his death in a monaſtery; "and thus he who at firſt through pride re-"nounced the prieſthood for the army, returned to "the tonſure he had left." Not far from hence is Leighton, where ſir Gervaſe Clifton began a handſome houſe; and Spaldwicke, which king Henry I. gave to the biſhop of Lincoln to make up his loſs when he took the dioceſe of Ely out of his. Leighton. Spaldwick.

The river Nen entering this county paſſes by Elton, the ſeat of the famous and antient family of the Sapcotts, where is a private chapel, of ſingular beauty, with moſt beautiful painted windows, built by Elizabeth Dinham, widow of baron Fitz Warin, who married into this family. A little higher up near Walmsford, was a ſmall city, older than all theſe places, which Henry of Huntingdon[u] calls Caer Dorm, and Dormeceaſter on the Nene, and mentions as utterly ruined before his time. This was certainly Antoninus' DVROBRIVÆ, q. d. the paſſage of the river, now in the ſame ſenſe called Dornford, near Cheſterton, and exhibiting evident traces of a ruined city beſides antient coins. For to this the Roman road leads ſtrait from Huntingdon; and a little above Stilton, antiently called Stichilton, it appears with a high ridge, and is called in an antient Saxon charter Ermingſtreet. Here it paſſes through the middle of a ſquare rampart, whoſe north ſide ſeems to have been fortified with a wall, and the other ſides only with banks of earth. Near it were ſome time ago dug up ſeveral ſtone cheſts or coffins in the eſtate of R. Bevill of an antient family famous in this county. Some think this city ſtood on both ſides of the river, and that the little village of Caſter on the oppoſite bank was part of it, and this opinion is certainly ſupported by antient hiſtory, which informs us that on the Nene was a place called Dormundeceaſter[x], where Kinneburga having built a ſmall monaſtery, it began to be called firſt Kinneburgecaſter, and afterwards by contraction Caſter. This Kinneburga was the Chriſtian daughter of Penda the Pagan king and wife of Alfred king of Northumberland, "who exchanged her rank as queen "for that of the handmaid of Chriſt (to borrow the "words of an antient writer[y]) and preſided over this "houſe of her own foundation as a mother to the "holy virgins." It was afterwards about A. D. 1010 levelled with the ground by the Danes. Elton. DUROBRIVÆ Caſter in Northamptonſhire. Dormundeceaſter.

The river before it leaves the county paſſes by Bottle bridge (ſo called now for ſhortneſs for Botolph bridge) an antient ſeat, conveyed by inheritance from R. Gimels by the Draitons and Lovets to the family of the Shirleys. To it adjoins Overton, corruptly called Orton, which being confiſcated for felony, was redeemed of king John by Nigel Lovetoft, whoſe ſiſter and coheireſs married Hubert or Robert de Brounford, and their children took the name of Lovetoft. Bottlebridge. Overton.

This county of Huntingdon in the decline of the Saxon government had an officiary earl Siward; for earldoms were not yet hereditary in England, but the governors of ſhires were according to the cuſtom of that time called earls, with the additional title of the ſhires they preſided over, as this Siward while gover- Earls of Huntingdon.

* Hiſtoriola Elienſis. Foundation Charter of Saltrey abbey.

[q] Gibſon underſtands firma terra of the farm ground of each village; Holland, the firm ground.
[r] Bigraves. The miſtake copied from Leland I. 2, 3. [s] M. Paris, 576. [t] Knight, G. I. 170. b.
[x] Gormundeceaſter. MS. n. Gale.

See the Earls of Northampton.

nor here was called earl of Huntingdon, and ſoon after having the government of Northumberland conferred on him, had the title of Earl of Northumberland. His ſon was Waldeof, who governed this county with the title of earl by favour of William the Conqueror, whoſe own ſiſter's daughter Judith he had married. "The eldeſt daughter of Waldeof (according to William Gemiticenſis[z]) was given in marriage, together with the earldom of Huntingdon, to Simon Silvanect or de St. Liz, who had by her Simon. Earl Simon dying, David brother of St. Matilda queen of England (and afterwards king of Scotland) married his widow, and had by her a ſon named Henry[a]." By the revolutions of fortune and the king's favour, ſometimes the Scots, another while the St. Lizes held this honour *, viz. Henry ſon of David, then Simon St. Liz ſon of Simon I.[b] after him Malcolm king of Scotland ſon[c] of earl Henry, and upon his death[d] Simon S. Liz III. who dying without iſſue[e] William king of Scotland brother of Malcolm ſucceeded. For thus writes Ralph Diceto[f] a contemporary author, "A. D. 1185, when earl Simon, ſon of earl Simon, died without iſſue, the king reſtored the earldom of Huntingdon with its appurtenances to William king of Scotland." Afterwards his brother David[g] had it and David's ſon John, ſurnamed Scot, earl of Cheſter, who died without iſſue,[h] and Alexander II. who married the daughter of our king Henry III. and enjoyed this title a little while[i]. The Scots as the wars came on loſt this title and a fine eſtate in England. Edward III. a long time after[k] created William Clinton earl of Huntingdon. Richard II. appointed in his ſtead Guiſcard de Angoleſme, and upon his death John Holand[l], who was ſucceeded by his ſon John[m] and his ſon Henry[n], who were both likewiſe dukes of Exeter. This is that Henry duke of Exeter whom Philip de Comines[o], as himſelf tells us, ſaw barefoot begging, preſerving his attachment to the houſe of Lancaſter though he had married a ſiſter of king Edward IV.[p] Thomas Grey, afterwards marquis of Dorſet, was the next that had this honour conferred on him for a little while[q]. For it appears from the records, that William Herbert earl of Pembrook "brought the charter of creation," by which his father was made earl of Pembrook, "into Chancery to be cancelled," and that Edward IV. in the 17th year of his reign created him earl of Huntingdon. In the laſt age Henry VIII. beſtowed this title on George Haſtings[r], who was ſucceeded by Francis[s], and he by his ſon Henry[t], a perſon truly diſtinguiſhed by the character of real nobility and piety, who dying without iſſue was ſucceeded by his brother George[u] and he by his grandſon Henry who ſtill enjoys the title[x].

This ſmall county contains 78 pariſhes.

* John Fordun Scotichron. VIII. 36. and 39.

[z] Book the laſt. c. 16. The Conqueror after Waltheof was beheaded for a conſpiracy, offered his widow to St. Liz, but ſhe diſliking his perſon was turned out of her eſtate, and Simon married her eldeſt daughter. He died the beginning of H. I. (Dugd. I. 58.)

[a] Henry had this earldom from Stephen to the prejudice of young Simon, and died 1152. Simon was reinſtated. (Ib.)

[b] He died 18 Steph. (Dug. 59.) [c] brother. G. againſt all hiſtory. [d] 1165. [e] 1184. (Dug. Ib.)

[f] Inter X. Script. p. 627. [g] on whom William conferred it. (Ib.) He died 1219. M. Paris, p. 440. Dug. 609.

[h] 1244. Dugd. I. 45. [i] He died 1249.

[k] 11 E. III. He died 1354, 28 E. III. buried at Maxtoke priory which he founded. (Dugd. I. 530-1.)

[l] He was half brother to R. II. and was beheaded at Pleſhy, by the populace in revenge for the duke of Glouceſter's death, and buried in the church there, 1 H. IV. 1399. (Dugd. II. 79.)

[m] He died 25 H. VI. and was buried with his two ducheſſes in St. Catherine's church by the Tower. (Ib.) John was ſtyled duke of Exceſter, earl of Huntingdon and Ivory, lord of Sparre, admiral of England and Ireland, lieut. of Aquitain, and conſtable of the Tower of London. Holland. See his ſeal engraved in the Hiſtory of St. Katharine's hoſpital, pl. IV.

[n] Gibſon makes John and Henry both ſons of John, whereas Henry was grandſon of the firſt John. This 2d John and his ſon Henry were dukes of Exeter. [o] III. p. 79.

[p] He was found dead in the ſea between Dover and Calais 13 E. IV. (Dugd. 82.) [q] 12 E. IV.

[r] 21 H. VIII. He was grandſon of lord Haſtings beheaded by R. III. died 35 H. VIII. and was buried at Stoke Pogeis. (Dugd. I. 586-7.)

[s] He died 1561, buried at Aſhby de la Zouch. (Ib. 588.)

[t] He died 1595, buried with his father. (Ib. 589.) [u] He died 1604, buried with the former. (Ib. 589.)

[x] He died 1643, buried with the former. (Ib.) He was ſucceeded by his ſon Ferdinand, and he 1655 by his ſon Theophilus. (Dugd. Ib.) He 1700 by his ſon George, who died unmarried 1702, and was ſucceeded by his half brother Theophilus, as was he 1746 by his ſon Francis 10th and preſent earl.

ADDITIONS.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE is in length from north to ſouth 28 miles, in breadth from eaſt to weſt 22, circumference about 67. It contains four hundreds, ſix market towns, 79 pariſhes, 240,000 acres, 8220 houſes, and about 50,000 inhabitants. Under the heptarchy it made part of Mercia [a]. Speed, from ſir Robert Cotton, who ſeems to have collected materials for its hiſtory [b], obſerves that its families have been ſo worn out, that though it has been rich in gentry, very few ſurnames of any note remain beyond the reign of the laſt Henry. The cauſe of ſuch decay nearer London is owing to the change of property by luxury and wealth, but here ſays biſhop Gibſon, probably the reaſon is that aſſigned by a later author, that moſt of the county being abbey land, fell to new purchaſers at the diſſolution, and perhaps then new poſſeſſions might have the ſame fate here that church revenues have in other places in lay hands. This is ſpoken in the true ſpirit of a churchman, who conſiders that things conſecrated to God, however illegally or unjuſtly, muſt bear the indelible ſtamp of divine right, and be eternally claimed by the moſt righteous being. An error in judgement might be admitted as giving a claim of right: but an error in honeſty never can, in any other court but that of ſuperſtition. Sir Robert Cotton ſays this county was not completely diſafforeſted till Edward I; ſuch were the encroachments in the reigns ſucceeding Henry I that the inhabitants could gain no redreſs till by the great charter of Henry III. His ſon indeed reſumed his father's conceſſions, till in his 29th year he confirmed the charter, and left no more foreſt than his own demeſne. The government of this county is very peculiar, Cambridgeſhire being joined to it under one ſheriff, who is choſen out of that county one year, out of the Iſle of Ely the ſecond, and out of this county the third, and in the Iſle of Ely alternately out of the north and ſouth parts [i].

"Huntingdonſhire in old time was "much more "woody than it is now, and the dere reſortid to the "fennes. It is ful long ſins it was deforeſtid [c]."

"The elder part of the town of St. Neots, where "the pariſh church is, kepeth the old name of Ainſ-"byri, ſo called corruptely for Enulphesbury. Uſe or "Ouſe river there hard by the town ſtanding on the "eaſt ſide of it divideth Huntyndunſhire from Bed-"fordſhire, and yet a litle lower both the ripes be "in Huntendonſhire. The bridge at St. Neots is of "timber [d]." According to the Ely and Ramſey hiſtorians St. Neot firſt placed here monks, who were long before diſperſed by the Danes, and replaced by Leofric or Alfric. Biſhop Tanner ſhews that neither St. Neot ſcholar of Erconwald biſhop of London, mentioned by Malmeſbury [e], nor his nameſake who flouriſhed in king Alfred's time, could have lived ſo late as the year 991; for the black monks were driven out by Gilbert earl of Clare, but Roiſia his ſon's wife gave it as a cell to Bec abbey, and it was naturalized by Henry IV. and valued at the diſſolution at £. 241. [f] Sir Richard Cromwell had a grant of the abbey 33 Henry VIII. At this town the earl of Holland took up arms to prevent the ill deſigns of the parliament againſt Charles I. but was defeated, and eſcaped with many noblemen of his party. It is a market town and vicarage, with a handſome ſtone bridge and church with a fine ſteeple, and gave title of baron to ſir Edward Montague created at the ſame time (12 Charles II.) viſcount Hinchinbroke and earl of Sandwich, and killed in Solebay fight 1672. Theſe titles are enjoyed by his great grandſon John preſent and fourth earl. Dr. White biſhop of Ely and his brother were born here. Here is a charity ſchool.

Aynſbury is a large village, contiguous on the eaſt to St. Neot's, and joined to it by a bridge. The tower is ſeparated from the church on the ſouth-eaſt ſide. Aynſbury.

Spaldwicke and Buckden were given out of the fee of St. Etheldred to the biſhop of Lincoln for the juriſdiction of the biſhops of Ely in Cambridgeſhire [g]. Spaldwicke.

In the church, which is a handſome building, are buried biſhops William Barlow 1613, Sanderſon 1663, Thomas Barlow 1691, Reynolds 1743, and Green 1779. "Rotheram biſhop of Lincoln built the "new bricke tower at Buckden. He clene tranſlated "the hall, and did much coſte there beſide [h]." Biſhop Ruſſel 1480 built great part of the palace, and is commemorated by a hawk cut on the dormants of the dining room, which he built, inſcribed je ſuy le Ruſſ-cellay. See Pl. III. fig. 1. Biſhops Williams 1621 and Sanderſon 1660 laid out much money in its repairs [i]. It is perhaps the meaneſt epiſcopal palace in the kingdom, being built in great meaſure of brick, and moated on two ſides. It conſiſts of a double court, ſquare tower, and library over the gateway. It was exchanged by the abbot of Ely with the biſhop of Lincoln for leave to make his abbacy a biſhoprick t. Henry I. Here is a charity ſchool. Bugden.

Southoe was head of the barony and firſt ſeat of Nigellus de Lovetot [k]. Southoe.

Huntingdon, called by the Saxons Duntandene [l] and Duntendunepoſte [m], is a pleaſant market town, principally conſiſting of one long ſtreet beginning at the ſtone bridge near Godmancheſter and extending near a mile to a certain place called Baum's hole upon the great north road. The market hill is not HUNTINGDON.

[a] Mag. Brit. II. 1043.
[b] Smith, vit. Cot. p. 3.
[c] Leland I. IV. 48.
[d] Lel. I. 1. 118.
[e] de geſt. pontif. IV.
[f] Tan. 190.
[g] Lel. IV. 48.
[h] Lel. IV. 48.
[i] Buck under his print of it.
[k] MS. Ayloffe.
[l] Sax. Chron. p. 107. 109. 119.
[m] Ib. 36.

ſarge but neat, and placed near the middle of the town. It is adorned with All Saints church on the weſt ſide, and on the eaſt with a handſome court hall with an aſſembly-room built over it a few years ſince. Leland ſays[m] ſome ages before it had 15 churches, in his time reduced to four, the reſt fallen by time and neglect, and ſome traces of their walls and yards remaining. Ecton reckons only 9 (7 deſtroyed). Since the civil war it has had only two of the four. St. Mary's is the corporation church: All Saints is in the market place; the ſtone tower and ſpire of St. Benet, and the churchyard of St. John are all that remain of thoſe churches. "Luve-"tote tranſlated the channons from the place where "now St. Maries church is to the place without "the town where a late it ſtood[n]." Elſewhere[o] Leland ſays the houſe of canons at a little diſtance from the town, where now ſtands St. Mary's church, was removed out of the noiſe of the town by Euſtace earl of Huntingdon. In it was buried David Bruce the Scot earl of Huntingdon. There was alſo an elegant monument with the figure of a knight on horſeback (eques) in his hunting dreſs, aſcribed by the townſpeople to another earl of Huntingdon. The ſeal of the town is a hunter with his accoutrements, and they had a very old coin dug up not far from the town with a greyhound on it, but the inſcription effaced by time[p]. It was granted to ſir Richard Cromwell 33 Henry VIII. and was a priory of black canons founded before 973, removed as above t. Stephen or Henry II. valued at £. 187. 13*s.* per annum.[q] Sir Robert Cotton aſcribes the foundation of the caſtle to the Conqueror[r], and the decay of the town to the alteration made in the river by one Grey a minion of the time, as he calls him, whereas before it had been navigable to the town, and is now made ſo to Bedford for ſmall veſſels. King John granted by charter a peculiar coroner, receipt of toll and cuſtoms, a recorder, townclerk, and two bailiffs. The town is now incorporated by the name of a mayor, 12 aldermen and burgeſſes[s]. The caſtle hill commands the river. Oliver Cromwell was born here in St. John's pariſh April 25, 1599. His father was Robert Cromwell, eſq. of this town, his mother Elizabeth Stewart. Her brother left him an eſtate of between 4 and 500*l.* a year, and after he came of age and married, he ſettled in this town, where the houſe in which he was born ſtill remains at the north end. It is new fronted and ſaſhed, but the original chamber is ſtill ſhewn. Here were two antient hoſpitals founded by the earl of Huntingdon, and an Auſtin friary, founded about 1285[t], and here is now a charity ſchool, with a large endowment.

The chapel of the caſtle and the hall, the town of Tyerford, the mills and the charge of the town were given to the priory[t].

Godmanchester.

Godmancheſter by its huſbandry grew ſo wealthy and conſiderable, that in the reign of James I. it was incorporated as a borough by the name of two bailiffs, 12 aſſiſtants, and commonalty[3]. Here is a freeſchool incorporated 3 James I.[4] and a handſome bridge.

Mr. Ward[u] places DUROLIPONTE at Cambridge as better ſuiting the name and diſtance. Baxter[x] at Huntingdon, reading it Durocinonte, the Durcinate of Ravennas. Mr. Gale[y] queries if it ſhould not be read Duro-ſiponte, biponte, viponte. Offord, or Old-ford, is juſt by. See in the Alps the Lepontini among whom the river Thiſis, or Theſis, and the bridge Durolipons, which is Pons Oeni here, Oenesbrug (Eynsbury) as there Inſprugge.

The life of St. Neot cited by Leland, Coll. III. 11. ſays, the foundations and coins diſcovered at Godmancheſter, and human bones of unuſual ſize, ſhew it was formerly a conſiderable place; and as it is divided from Huntingdon only by a bridge, it may have been part of that town which roſe out of its ruins. The writer of the life of St. Machutus makes him biſhop of Guma, or Gunicaſtria, or Gumicaſtria, which laſt reading Leland[z] approved, but ſuppoſed it a miſtake for Gumcaſter. He purchaſed of a prieſt there among other coins one of C. Antius with long hair. The men of Gumiceſtre gave thirty marks for having the common of their paſture between Hemingeford and Huntingdon bridge as they uſed and ought to have[a].

Stephen Marſhal a parliament divine, head of the Smectymnians, was born at Godmancheſter.

"When the nunnery at Elteſley where St. Pandonia "the Scottiſh virgin was buried was deſtroyed, a new "one was made at Hinchingbroke by Huntendune" by William the Conqueror[b]. It was a Benedictine priory, valued at £. 17. per ann. granted to ſir Richard Cromwell 39 Henry VIII.[c] and was formerly the ſeat of the Cromwells, particularly of ſir Oliver Cromwell, uncle of the protector. He ſold this eſtate with that at Huntingdon to ſir Edward Montague, and it is now the ſeat of the earl of Sandwich, who takes the title of viſcount from it. It has a moſt magnificent room built by ſir Oliver Cromwell for the reception of king James I. when he came from Scotland to London 1603, after the death of queen Elizabeth. Hither cornet Joyce brought the king from Holdenby.

The monks of Ramſey pretending to have found the relics of St. Ivo at Slepe founded a little Benedictine priory there ſubject to them[d], and gave his name to the town. It has now a conſiderable market and fair, and a handſome ſtone bridge. The opinion that it had a mint in the Saxon times reſts entirely on a miſtake of a coin of Eadmund having on the reverſe IVE MONETA, the name of the mint maſter[e], which in the Philoſophical Tranſactions was appropriated to St. Ives, whereas that name was not known in the Saxon times, and it is called Slepe in Domeſday[f]. Roger de St. Ives an Auguſtine friar wrote againſt ſir John Oldcaſtle about 1390[g].

Near St. Ives are two ſmall villages called Old Hurſt and Wood Hurſt, whoſe chapels are in the gift of the vicar. It was formerly a woodland country, and I doubt not but the former was called Wold Hurſt correſponding to the Wolds in Lincolnſhire and the Wilds in Kent. But the moſt remarkable thing near to Old Hurſt is a very large ſquare ſtone near the road ſide as you go to St. Ives, with a very

[m] Collect. III. 11.
[n] Collect. Ib.
[o] G.
[p] G.
[q] n. MS.
[r] Leland. I. 1.
[s] See Hickes, Tab. V. 4.
[t] Ib.
[u] Tan. 194, 195.
[v] G.
[w] Coll. III. 11.
[x] Tan. 193.
[y] f. 204. a.
[z] Lel. It. IV. 49.
[a] Tan. 192.
[b] Speed.
[c] Charta H. III. in Cott. MS. Jul. C. II.
[d] Horſl. 431.
[e] P. 112.
[f] Mag. rot. 15. Joh. Madox, Hiſt. Exc. 284.
[g] Tan. 193.
[h] Tanner, Bib. Brit. 641.

antient inſcripſion not now legible. It is ſuppoſed the hundred of Hurſtingſtone took its name from this town and ſtone.

Brampton adjoining, which was antient demeſne of the crown, and held from king John's time by the family of Haſtings, belongs now to the earl of Sandwich.

The manor of the ſoake of Somerſham, which includes ſeveral of the adjoining pariſhes and the large eſtate there, belonged ſome few years ſince to the Hammonds of Kent [g], but is now the property of the duke of Mancheſter, by purchaſe from the laſt Thomas Hammond, eſq; who left no children. Here is a freeſchool, to which the Hammond family have been contributors, and a noble ſchool houſe near the church yard, which was begun to be built 1782, and is not yet finiſhed. The front of it, which is a great ornament to this pleaſant village, is upwards of 54 feet long. The rectory is annexed to the regius profeſſor of divinity in the Univerſity of Cambridge. A new peal of ſix bells was put up 1782. The old peal conſiſted of five very indifferent ones. The preſent is moſt muſical and delightful, and was caſt by Mr. Arnold, bell-founder at St. Neots. Dr. Layard diſcovered a medicinal water here, on which he printed a treatiſe 1759 [h].

The biſhop of Ely had a noble palace at Somerſham, and in the reign of Edward III. the lady Blanche Wake, a near relation of that monarch, being a daughter of Henry earl of Lancaſter, reſided at the ſmall adjoining village of Colne. Time has totally deſtroyed her houſe, and nothing now remains but the moat that ſurrounded it. It was about a mile diſtant from the biſhop's palace, and in the time of biſhop Liſle there happened a moſt violent quarrel between this lady and the biſhop about their boundaries. This produced a rencontre between their domeſtics, in which one of her ſervants was killed. This enmity ended not but with the total ruin and death of the biſhop. The whole ſtory is affectingly told in Mr. Bentham's Hiſtory of Ely. p. 161, 162.

One wing of the biſhop's palace, which was a good manor houſe, and the reſidence of the late Thomas Hammond, eſq; remained ſome few years ſince, but has been totally pulled down by the preſent duke of Mancheſter.

About the year 1731, in a piece of fen land belonging to William Thomſon, eſq; the plough turned up and broke a ſmall urn containing ſeveral Roman coins, and Mr. Thomſon and the rev. Mr. Whiſton of Ramſey digging near the ſpot found another which contained about 60, moſtly copper, and of the later emperors. This was near the road leading from Somerſham to Chateris in the iſle of Ely. Afterwards when the ſame turnpike road was carried farther, near Merſh in the iſle of Ely upwards of 300 ſilver coins were found [i]. It is plain from the bad country they were obliged to travel through, that the Romans were then in great diſtreſs, and retiring to the ſea coaſt, and there are ſtill ſeveral Roman banks to be ſeen near Wiſbech thrown up to preſerve them from inundations of the ſea.

Daniel Whiſton, younger brother to the celebrated William Whiſton, was curate at Somerſham 52 years for conſcience ſake, as is expreſſed on the monument erected to his memory in the chancel by his ſon the rev. Thomas Whiſton miniſter of Ramſay, now in his 69th year. He had before ſerved the curacy of Horſeheath c. Cambridge, and was once in danger of loſing this but for the interpoſition of Dr. Clarke with a noble peer in the neighbourhood. When he was perſecuted by Thomas Hammond, eſq. the very learned Dr. Clarke made application in his behalf to the famous Sarah ducheſs of Marlborough. She wrote a very ſharp letter to Mr. Hammond deſiring he would deſiſt; if he would not, ſhe would defend Mr. Whiſton at her own expence in every court in the kingdom. This circumſtance ſaved him from the violence of the High Church Squire. He was offered ſeveral livings, but would not accept of any, as he refuſed to ſubſcribe to the uſe of the Athanaſian creed. He thought, and juſtly too, that the admiſſion of that creed into the church is a diſgrace to the ſervice. His "Primitive Catechiſm" was printed by his brother William with improvements. In the ſame chancel has juſt been erected another monument for his only daughter Suſannah Weſt, a pious, learned, and excellent woman, who died about two years ſince, and for his only ſon Mr. Thomas Whiſton before-mentioned, who is ſtill living: his ſiſter's name is at top, his own at bottom. The inſcription for him is very modeſt, being the laſt words of the late lord Roſcommon, who died in Italy,

My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forſake me at my end.

Somerſham was part of queen Henrietta Maria's jointure, but col. Valentine Walton, one of the king's judges, got it ſettled on him and his poſterity for ever, and though the church there belonged to the Margaret profeſſor at Oxford, he got the titles of Colne a little chapelry belonging to the pariſh to be ſeparated from it and annexed to that chapel, by which means he made it a little rectory and gave it to Dr. Laurence head of Baliol college and Margaret profeſſor of Oxford, who had been very kind to Walton when priſoner at Oxford was ejected for his loyalty, and nominated to an Iriſh biſhopric by Charles II. ſome years before his death [k]. Colne.

Holywell, near St. Ives, is a village of great antiquity, and takes its name from a remarkable well there. The church and church-yard are on an eminence, and at the bottom of the hill is this well of clear and excellent water, which was always called the Holy well. I doubt not but its water was converted to many ſuperſtitious uſes in the times of popery, and brought in a good revenue to the prieſt of the place. Holywell.

At Needingworth, a hamlet of Holywell, was born ſir Ambroſe Nicholas, lord mayor of London 1576, who founded and endowed an almſhouſe in Mugwell Street [l]. Here is a charity ſchool. Needingworth.

Bluntſham church is remarkable for its circular chancel. Dr. Knight, the learned antiquary and author of the lives of Colet and Eraſmus, &c. died rector, and was buried here 1746. Here is a freeſchool. Dr. Knight found in the church-yard an old ſtone with the following inſcription on a famous wreſtler and prize-fighter of the laſt century, who died 1621, which he cauſed to be cleaned and new cut: Bluntſham.

[g] G.
[h] reprinted 1767. See his and Dr. Morris's experiments on it, Phil. Tranſ. LVI. art. 3.
[i] See before, p. 141*. Theſe are the coins which Dr. Stukeley, Itin. Cur. I. 77, ſays were found at Ramſay, 1721.
[k] Wood Ath. Ox. II. 130.
[l] Mag. Brit. 1060.

Here

Here lyes the Conqueror conquered,
Valiant as ever England bred;
Whom neither art, nor ſteel, nor ſtrength
Cou'd e'er ſubdue, till death at length
Threw him on his back, and here he lyes
In hopes hereafter to ariſe.

In September 1741 a moſt extraordinary hurricane happened at Bluntſham. A ſtorm from the ſouth-weſt, bringing with it a miſt and ſeeming not 30 yards high from the ground, rolled along at the rate of a mile and a half in a minute, with a noiſe like thunder. It began exactly at noon, and laſted about 13 minutes, eight of them in full violence. Dr. Knight's houſe was untiled, the ſtatues and baluſtrades on it blown down as alſo all the ſtabling: 60 empty barns in the pariſh, the alehouſe and about 12 dwelling-houſes out of 100, and all ſhook from their underpinnings; all the mills in the country, and many ſtacks of hay and corn: the pigeons that were flying in its track were daſhed to pieces againſt the ground. The fine ſpire of St. Ives and that of Hemmingford were blown down. Its courſe was from Huntingdon to St. Ives, Erith, between Wiſbech and Downham to Lynne and ſo to Snetſham, not further ſouth-weſt than Huntingdon or north-eaſt than Downham. Very few trees eſcaped. Its violence was not leſs at Somerſham. Mr. Whiſton, who then lived at Wisbich, watched it very narrowly. There were two currents of clouds that moved on with great force and rapidity; one from the north-weſt, the other from the ſouth-weſt. The ſouth-weſt was the ſtrongeſt. Theſe two currents united between Wisbich and Lynne, when nothing could withſtand their violence. The ſtorm blew down St. Margaret's great church at Lynne, which coſt the town 8000*l.* to rebuild. It was accompanied with thunder and lightning at Cambridge, where it was not ſo violent, and only a few booths were blown down at Sturbitch fair. It ſeems to have been ſuch a ſtorm as happened in Suſſex about 12 years before [m]. A calm ſucceeded for an hour, and the wind then continued pretty high till 10 o'clock at night [n].

Ramſey. Ramſey abbey was founded for Benedictine monks 968 by Ailwin a lord, or, as the Annals of Waverley, conſul of all England, or, as Maurice Johnſon conceived rather lord high chamberlain, and valued at £. 1716. per annum [o]. Sir Richard Cromwell had grant of the ſite 31 Henry VIII. which his great grandſon Henry ſold to col. Titus, whoſe ſurviving coheireſs left it to her ſervants. They ſold it to Coulſon Fellows, eſq; and it is now in poſſeſſion of his ſon William Fellows, eſq. lord and patron. All that now remains is the ruins of the gateway of elegant architecture, and the ſtatue of the founder holding the key and ragged ſtaff or batoon, with the inſcription given by Camden, engraved by Stukeley, who ſaw much painted glaſs in this church 1736 [p], moſtly gone 1745, now intirely. The hiſtory of this abbey, quoted by Mr. Camden, from its foundation to the Norman Conqueſt, was printed by Dr. Gale, Oxford, 1691, from the MS. in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer. But the 4th part, from which probably Mr. Camden quoted the founder's epitaph, and which is cited by Spelman, is loſt. The abbots had place in parliament, the head of their barony being Broughton, at ſome diſtance to the ſouth, which had annexed to it in this ſhire four knights fees [q]. "Engayne had ſome tyme Broughton the barony in Huntendunſhire of the abbots of Ramſey [r]." The market ſunk with the abbey, but recovered itſelf in the laſt century, being very convenient for the ſale of cattle [s]. The fair of St. Yvo anciently granted to this abbey was prohibited by Henry III. but afterwards recovered by the abbot [t].

Geoffrey de Mandeville, having expelled the monks out of this abbey, and fortified it for a caſtle, was in a battle before this church the only perſon killed, being ſhot with an arrow by one of the meaneſt ſoldiers. Blood flowed plentifully from the walls of the church while it was held for a caſtle, a manifeſt proof of the divine wrath [u].

The town conſiſts of one long ſtreet, the pariſh church very antient at the top: on the ſouth ſide ſtood the abbey, its church long ſince gone: the monks hall, or the abbot's parlour and dining room above, converted into a houſe by ſir Richard Cromwell, whoſe initials are about it. I ſaw there 1782 a neglected abbatial chair. Dr. Stukeley ſaw many evidences in the hands of the owner 1736. Ramſey gave birth to William de Ramſay the poetical abbot of Croyland. Here was a good free-ſchool and houſe thereto belonging, endowed with 100 acres of fen land near the town by a decree in chancery 1663, which produced near £. 60. per annum for the maſter: but now the lands are in great meaſure overflowed with water, and the ſchool houſe about two years ſince abſolutely fell down in a very calm evening without any apparent reaſon, and now lies in ruins. The truſtees for this charity had for many years been greatly negligent, to ſay no more. There is likewiſe in this town a charity ſchool for girls, the gift of John Dryden, eſq; whoſe ſeat was at Cheſterton, and he the moſt charitable man that ever lived in this county. He left £. 16000. in charitable benefactions to ſeveral towns and villages, in it as is expreſſed on his monument in Cheſterton church. To this gentleman our celebrated poet Dryden wrote a poetical epiſtle, which may be ſeen in his works. It is a noble eſtate at Cheſterton and the neighbouring towns, and deſcended by a ſiſter of Mr. Dryden to the antient and worthy family of the Piggots of Shropſhire, who enjoyed it till it was ſquandered away at Newmarket, and ſold by their repreſentative Robert Piggot, eſq;

Biſhop Gibſon has erroneouſly placed at St. Ives the dreadful fire which happened at Ramſay May 21, 1731, which deſtroyed above 80 dwelling houſes, beſides ſhops, barns, granaries, &c. with an amazing quantity of malt and flour.

From the rare and very extraordinary title of totius Angliæ Aldermannus given to Ailwin, we may conclude, that among our Saxon anceſtors Ealdorman ſometimes ſignified an officer of much greater eminence then what it was in thoſe times commonly made uſe of to expreſs, as on the other hand we at this day find it ſignifying ſuch as are far beneath the antient notion of it. The laws of our Anglo-ſaxon kings mention ſeveral different degrees of magiſtrates under the general appellation of Aldermanni. Thus we have (beſides this title of totius Angliæ Aldermannus) Aldermannus regis, Aldermannus Orienta-

[m] See Budgen's paſſage of the hurricane from Bexhill 1729. 1730, 8vo.
[n] Mr. Fuller in Phil. Tranſ. 461. p. 851.
[o] Tan. 191.
[p] It. I. 77.
[q] G. Selden. titles of honour, p. II. 157. 741.
[r] Lel. IV. 48.
[s] Mag. Brit. 1053.
[t] Mat. Par. 839 and 972.
[u] M. Paris, p. 80.

lium Anglorum, Aldermannus Comitatus, Aldermannus Civitatis, Aldermannus Burgi, Aldermannus Hundredi five Wapentachii, &c. Therefore the beſt method of informing ourſelves rightly of the true meaning and extent of this title is by conſidering the ſubject matter or addition to the word whenever we meet with it. Mr. Selden [x], ſir H. Spelman [y], and many others of our antiquaries, take this officer to have been the ſame under our Anglo-ſaxon kings as that which during the Norman period was called Capitalis Juſticiarius or Juſticiarius Angliæ, the Chief Juſticier of England; but as the office of Chief Juſticier was intirely of Norman original, and was introduced here together with the Exchequer by the kings of that race, as is plainly demonſtrated by the learned Mr. Madox [z], it ſeems more probable that the totius Angliæ Aldermannus was the ſame officer who was ſometimes called totius Angliæ Vicedominus, for we find ſuch an officer not only in the times of the Anglo-ſaxon kings, but even in the Norman reigns. Bingulph Vicedominus ſubſcribes to a charter of the year 948, given us by Ingulphus, and William Fitz Oſburn earl of Hereford, and Odo earl of Kent, were each of them totius Angliæ Vicedominus [a] under William I. as ſome others were to ſucceeding kings.

A mile ſouth from Ramſey is Bury, a mean village, with a good church on a hill, at the weſt end of which againſt the weſt door of the tower are remains of a building which Dr. Stukeley calls an hermitage, ſuch as he deſcribed at Ryhale in the county of Rutland. A handſome bridge of two ſtout arches of ſtone, built probably by ſome abbot of Ramſay, croſſes the brook here. Sir Oliver Cromwell ſold his eſtate here to the Bernard family.

Kingſdelf occurs in records before Canute's time. Mr. Camden afterwards diſtinguiſhes it from that made by his order. Edgar in his charter to the church of Peterborough [b] makes it the bounds of his donation, and dælf is rather a ditch or chanel than a raiſed cauſeway [c]. "The delphe as much as ſtands of in "—— hundrede is yn the ſhyre of Huntyngdune, "and a little part of it in Normancros hundred in "the ſame ſhire, and it is totally to ſpeke of in "Huntingdonſhire, and if there be any part of the "delph over the Nene longinge to Thorney it is no "great thing [c]." The road here mentioned might probably be the work of ſome abbot of this rich monaſtery like that from Deeping to Spalding made by Egelric, abbot of Peterborough and biſhop of Durham 1008, called from him Elricbrode, q. d. Egelric's road [d].

Warboys is a large village near Somerſham, memorable for its witches, on which account an annual ſermon is preached at Huntingdon on Lady day by one of the fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge, for which a ſtipend of 40*s.* was left. Sir Oliver Cromwell of Hinchinbrook, created knight of the Bath at the coronation of James I. ſold this manor to ſir John Leman, lord mayor of London. William Leman, eſq. his deſcendant, of Northaw, c. Herts, died 1781, and is buried in a vault in this chancel.

Wittleſea meer is ſix miles long and three broad, and frequently agitated in the moſt violent manner with wind. The river Nen forms other conſiderable meers, as Ugmeer, Brick meer, Ramſey meer, and Benwick meer. This laſt is now converted into tillage, and bears very good crops.

Wittleſey, as other rivers in this tract, doth ſometimes in calms and fair weather, ſuddenly riſe tempeſtuouſly as it were into violent waterquakes to the danger of the poor fiſhermen, by reaſon as ſome think of evaporations breaking violently out of the bowels of the earth. As for the unhealthfulneſs of the place whereunto only ſtrangers not natives there are ſubject, who live long and healthfully, there is amends made as they account it by the commodity of fiſhing [e]. In February 1739-40 it was ſo frozen over that two prizes were run for on it.

"One of the Simons Saincte Liz made Pſaltre ab- Saltrey.
"bey [f]." The Ciſtertians of Wardon in Bedford were brought to Saltrey 1146 by Simon de St. Liz. This houſe was valued at £. 141. per annum, and granted to ſir Richard Cromwell, 29 Henry VIII. [g] Here was buried Robert Bruce lord of Annandale. There are no remains of it. Here are three other villages of that name diſtinguiſhed by different epithets. Henry Saltrey a writer on Purgatory was native or monk of this place. Roman urns were found in Sautre field about a mile from the town 1722 [h].

At the entrance into Great Stewkley cloſe to the road is a large round hill ditched. Richard Broughton, author of "Monaſticum Britannicum," was born here. Great Stewkley.

Not far from Sawtrey is Little Gidding, famous in the laſt age for being the reſidence of a ſuperſtitious family, who thought they did God ſervice by ſecluding themſelves from the world in a conſtant round of miſtaken devotion. This ſociety, formed by the Farrars, was called the Arminian nunnery, and by the furious zeal of reformation objected to archbiſhop Laud as an inſtance of his favouring popery, whereas in truth the leading principle of theſe devotees was weak enthuſiaſm. Little Gedding.

The late ſir John Cotton, great great grandſon to ſir Robert, Mr. Camden's friend and patron, finding the family ſeat at Connington ruinous, and having a predilection to that at Stratton in Bedfordſhire, took it down, leaving only a ſtone colonnade of the front. It was built by ſir Robert, and ſtood at the weſt end of the church fronting the north, but is now ſucceeded by a modern farm houſe. In the garden on a terrace were two octangular ſtone ſummer-houſes, one of which was fitted up with Roman inſcriptions from the Picts wall. Thoſe of them which remained were preſented by ſir John Cotton to Trinity college, Cambridge, where they were fixed up at the foot of the library ſtairs, and have been engraved by P. S. Lamborn. The church is a large handſome building full of family monuments, four large modern marble medallions, with inſcriptions for ſir Robert Cotton, his ſon ſir Thomas who died 1662, his grandſon ſir John, and his ſecond wife, who both died 1702. Sir Robert's epitaph is as follows: Connington.

Robertus Cottonus miles & baronettus, dominus hujus
Manerii de Conmington,
Antiquæ & nobilis familiæ Bruceorum quondam
Manerii Dominorum, per parentalem ſucceſſionem hæres;

[x] Titles of honour, part II. C. V. p. 6. 8. [y] Gloſſarium in voc. [z] Hiſt. of Exchеq. paſſim.
[a] Malm. de geſtis regum. Roger Hoveden, Flor. Wigorn. ſub an. 1067. Hen. Huntingdon, Ordericus Vitalis, &c.
[b] Sax. Chron. 119. [c] G. [d] Lel. IV. 48. [d] Ingulph. p. 64.
[e] Holland. [f] Lel. IV. 49. [g] Tan. 194. [h] Spalding Soc. min.

Sagaciſſimus Antiquitatum hujus gentis indagator,
Et conſervator notiſſimus.
Natus 22 Januarii MDLXX Dentoniæ [i],
Obiit 6 die Maii MDCXXI in domo ſua
Weſtmonaſterienſi,
Et juxta hic conditur expectans Reſurrectionem fœlicem.
Communis mundo ſupereſt rogus.

and his ſon's written by Dr. Smith;

Thomas Cottonus baronettus Rob. filius, hæres, et imitator paternæ ſedulitatis in conquirendis Britannicarum Antiquitatum monumentis
H. S. E.
Oppreſſæ patriæ & regi Carolo I. fidem præſtitit.
Bibliothecam ineſtimabilem ſummo ſtudio nec minoribus impenſis conſervavit, locupletavit, & poſteritati eruditæ dicavit.
Duas uxores, lectiſſimas feminas, ſibi ſociavit;
Ex priori filium Johannem, filias Luciam & Franciſcam
ſuſcepit:
Ex poſteriori tres filios (uno prorepto) & duas filias
Superſtites reliquit
Obiit 13° An. Dom. 1692.
Johannes Cotton patri amantiſſimo poſuit.
Quantula pars hominum corporis exuviæ.

On the north wall are theſe honorary inſcriptions: Prince Henry of Scotland, lord of Connington, and Imperator, Rex Franciæ, Anglo-Saxonum, Angliæ, Scotiæ; with the arms which make the quarterings of Cotton; but none of the painted glaſs mentioned by Dr. Stukeley in the windows [k]. Sir Robert brought from Fotheringay caſtle the whole room where Mary queen of Scots was beheaded [l]. Lord Colerane ſaw a chair of an abbot of Peterborough in this church 1743 [m].

Allerton. The name of Allerton is derived by Dr. Neve, its rector and archdeacon of Huntingdon, from Roman origin, Ad vallum, Alwalton; or Adelwoltune from Adelwold biſhop of Wincheſter [n].

Mr. Gale ſaw, 1731, ſome very high banks of an antient town near Allerton, on the eaſt ſide of the high road among fields and hedges, four miles north from Stilton, and half a mile from Water Newton. Here Dr. Stukeley places Durobrivæ, and ſuppoſes Allwalton a corruption of Aldwerkton.

Kimbolton. "Kimoltoun, a market town in the egge of Hun-
" tenduneſhyre. The town itſelf is but bare. The " caſtle is double diked, and the building of it
" metely ſtrong: it longid to the Mandevilles erles
" of Eſſex. Then to Bouns erles of Hereford and " Eſſex, and fins to the Strafords. Sir Richard
" Wingfeld built new fair lodgyns and galeries
" upon the old foundation of the caſtle. The priory
" of canons not far out of Kimolton was of the " foundation of the Bigrames, whoſe manor place
" bearing their name yet remains thereabouts.
" There lay in this priory few men of name buried
" but of Bigrames and Conyers. There is a plotte
" now clene deſolatid, not a mile by weſt from Kim-
" olton, called Caſtle hill, where appear ditches and
" tokens of old buildings [o]." The Wingfields ſold it to the Mountagues, of which family ſir Henry was created 18 James I. baron Montague of Kimbolton and viſcount Mandevil, and 1 C. I. earl of Manchester, and his grandſon Charles duke of Manchester 5 George I. The firſt earl ſpared no coſt to improve this caſtle, which his grandſon almoſt rebuilt [p]. It was the jointure and retirement of queen Catherine after her divorce from Henry VIII. and here ſhe died. The priory abovementioned by Leland was that of Stonley, which in his Collectanea I. 77. he ſays was founded by William Mandeville earl of Eſſex about 1180. It was valued at £. 46. [q] Here is a mean almſhouſe, built by the townſpeople 1701.

At Catworth was born ſir Wolſtan Dixie, lord mayor of London 1586 [r].

From St. Neots to Stoughton village is three miles. " Ther hard by the church is a pretty houſe of Oly-
" ver Leders and pratie commodities about it [s]."
It now belongs to — Coniers. The maps place here knights templars mote.

" The lordſhip of Leighton and village belongeth
" to a prebend in Lincoln. One Carneballe, pre-
" bendary there, did build a piece of a pretty houſe
" ſtanding within a mote. Smith, now incumbent,
" hath made a freeſchool there [t]." It gave name to the hundred.

Sir Gervaſe Clifton was created baron Leighton by James I. and began a handſome houſe here, but did not live to finiſh it. His only daughter married Eſme Stuart duke of Lenox, and his great grandaughter lady Catherine O'Brien was reſtored to the title by Charles II. It has ſince been the poſſeſſion of lady Butler, daughter and heir of the late Richard earl of Arran by marriage with the ſole daughter of James duke of Richmond, who had it by marriage with a daughter and heir of lord Clifton. From a place near this the earl of Arran was created a baron by the title of lord Butler of Weſton 1693.

" The ſureſt and beſt knowen limes that can be " ſette in the fens in the upper part of Hunting-
" donſhire is the Nene river [u]."

The chapel at Elton has been long ſince ruined, and the manſion rebuilt by the Probies, its preſent owners [x], one of whom endowed a ſchool here.

The Roman ſtation at Caſter was rather nearer the river than the preſent village, and on the north ſide of it: the fortification is on the ſouth ſide near Cheſterton; the high ridge paſſes through it obliquely, not parallel to the ſides, nor paſſing through the gates, which makes it look rather like a ſummer camp. The name of Dornford is not much known at preſent, though the coins are called Dormans, and the way Norman gate, probably corruptions for Roman, and the paſſage over the river Dunsford ferry [y]. Dr. Gale [z] removes DVROBRIVÆ to Brigcaſterton without authority, the diſtances better ſuiting Caſter, of which before in Northamptonſhire. At Cheſterton is a field called Caſtle field [a].

In digging near the ſide of the high road near Cheſterton 1754, was found a coffin of a yellowiſh hard ſtone, ſix feet two inches long, covered with a flat lid, which had on the under ſide an edging let quite down about one inch and a half or two inches deep, coinciding with the edges of the cheſt, and containing an entire ſkeleton near ſix feet long, the teeth ſound and firm, the ribs fallen

[i] A houſe near Connington, where his father and mother lived during his grandfather's life. (Smith.)
[k] Itin. I. 77.
[l] Ib. 2d ed. [m] Min. of Spalding ſoc. [n] Ib. [o] Lel. I. 2.
[p] G. [q] Tan. 184. [r] Mag. Brit. [s] Lel. I. 1.
[t] Lel. I. 3. [u] Lel. IV. 48. [x] G.
[y] Ward in Horſley Brit. Rom. 432. Moreton's Northamptonſh. p. 509—512. [z] Anton. 94. [a] Stukeley.

from the back bone, the right leg broken in the middle and repaired by a callus: alſo three glaſs lachrymatories, of which that which was entire contained a corrupted fungous ſubſtance mixed with water, and of an aromatic ſmell on firſt opening, a ſmall braſs ſeal with this mark , three or four pins, like ebony or agate, one of braſs; ſeveral defaced coins, one of Fauſtina, and one ſilver of Gordian, and ſcraps of white wood, inſcribed,

AAΩITT VTERE TA ⊕ FEI IX.

The ſubſtance of nine or ten other ſkeletons was found near the cheſt, and all of them only at the depth of one foot [z].

In making the turnpike road from Kate's Cabbin to Walnsford bridge along the ſide of the city of Durobrivæ in the cemetery of the place they turned up many urns of different clay and ſhape, and coins, ſeveral coffins of equal breadth throughout, of one ſtone, well cut, covered with another handſome ſtone. They dug up a leaden coffin of 400lb. weight, containing a ſkeleton: all had ſkeletons in them; one a coin of Antoninus Pius; another a female ſkeleton with a child in the womb in ſitu: another had two pretty little urns, one on each ſide. Dr. Stukeley had a ſilver Nerva ℞ Libertas publica: a ſmall braſs Valentinian ℞ Victoria. A conſecration of Conſtantine the Great going to heaven in a chariot drawn by four horſes, Quintillus, &c. On the dry gravelly hill by Stibbington hedges they croſſed another burying ground by the river ſide: the Uſtrina or burning places have the earth very black, and bits of charcoal and innumerable fragments of urns, bones, and ſtones, that covered them for a mile. At the ſouth gate of the city digging a ditch, they found the foundation of hewn ſtone and thick pointed iron bars 10 feet long, as of a portcullice. Hermen ſtreet runs through the city, croſſes the river Nyne at the wooden bridge on ſtone piers, ſome of whoſe timbers were taken and uſed in the new navigation [a].

The eſtate of the Bevills came by the ſiſters of the laſt ſir Robert Beville between the Hewetts of Warſley in this county, and the Drydens, and from them to the Hagars, of whom one was an admiral [g].

Stilton, a miſerable village, with two conſiderable inns, has the credit of making the Engliſh Parmeſan cheeſes, which are in reality made in Leiceſterſhire, and only ſold here in great quantities. Here is a charity ſchool. The Bell inn was kept by Cooper Thornhill, who rode to London, 75 miles, three times in eleven hours; and won a cup at Kettering races with a poney which he took thither 12 miles, and went accidentally on the courſe. He died 1759, aged 54. His corn rick, valued at 800*l.* though ſet on high ſtones, was eaten by mice and rats, and found full of them when taken down for threſhing.

Morburn was given by Turketul to Croyland abbey. Morburn.

At Yaxley the abbot of Thorney had a ſmall market [b]. It has a beautiful church with a lofty ſtone ſpire. Yaxley.

At Stanground is the ſeat of lord Tyrconnel. Stanground.

Of Woodſtone and Fletton ſee hereafter in Northamptonſhire, where they are inſerted by miſtake. Woodſtone. Fletton.

In the church-yard of Overton Longueville is a very antient monument of a lord Longueville, lying in armour, with his entrails twiſted round his left arm, alluding, as the tradition of the place is, to a wound he received fighting with the Danes there, notwithſtanding which he continued fighting till he had ſlain their king, and ſoon after expired [c]. The manor belonged to the earl of Lincoln. Overton Longueville.

The famous Carſdike Dr. Stukeley ſuppoſed came quite from Cambridge, though he had only traced it from Waterbeach, c. Cambridge, by the name of the Old Ouſe, or, as ſir William Dugdale [d], a branch of the river Grant. It runs by Charefen, and paſſes into the preſent river called Old Ouſe, going to the great wooden bridge upon Audrey cauſeway, thence along the preſent channel of that river weſtward to Earith. At Earith it enters Huntingdonſhire, croſſes Huntingdon river, goes by Littleport the oldeſt Ouſe, and proceeds northward in that ſtream now called the Weſt water by Benwick, then by that ſtream called the old river Nene to Whitleſea dike, which is the continuation of Carſdike. At Benwick it enters the old Nene, running by March to Cambridge river, and goes upwards in the old Nene by Ravenſwillow and Horſey bridge, and to Peterborough. Dr. Stukeley had two hypotheſes about this canal [e]. At firſt he ſuppoſed it the work of Agricola, begun in the northern or midland parts of Britain, continued by Hadrian, but neglected ever ſince Severus' time, till ſcoured and reſtored by Carauſius, who continued it from Peterborough to Cambridge. Dr. Moreton [f] has given a very particular deſcription of it from the Nen to the Welland, and derives its name from Caer Dorm, where he ſuppoſed it to begin, and be called Caer Dike, or the ditch of the city, by way of eminence through the county of Northampton, ſince in Leiceſterſhire it does not conſtantly retain that name. Carſdike.

Guiſchard De Angle, or D'Angoleſme, earl of Huntingdon, died 1380, and was buried in the Auſtin friars, London [g]. His widow Conſtance married ſir John Cornwall, afterwards lord Fanhop, who 1421 diſburſt 1800 marks for the ranſome of John de Angle his ſon-in-law, whom ſome call earl of Huntingdon [h]; but Dugdale [i] ſays, Fanhope married Elizabeth daughter of John of Gaunt, widow of John Holland earl of Huntingdon [k]. Earls of Huntingdon.

[a] Mr. Manning in A. S. min.
[b] Madox Hiſt. of Exch. 189.
[c] Biſhop Kennet in Peck's Deſ. Cur. I. VI. N° 19.
[d] Hiſt. of Imbanking, p. 373.
[e] Palæog. Brit. II. 37. Hiſt. of Carauſius I. 125. II. 133—139.
[f] Hiſt. of Northamptonſh. 514, 515.
[g] Dugd. Bar. II. 173. G.
[h] Brook, 263. and Kniveton's MS. note.
[i] II. 80. 212.
[k] See alſo Nath's Worceſterſhire II. 418.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Huntingdonſhire.

Mr. Ray tells us he had not obſerved any plants peculiar to this county, the more rare being common to it with Cambridgeſhire. (Gibſon).

Aſplenium Ruta muraria. White Maiden hair, Wall-rue or Tent-wort; on old walls, and in moiſt chinks of ſtones: at Wolley.

Aſtragalus glycyphyllos. Wild Liquorice, or Liquorice Vetch; in meadows, paſtures, and in hedges, eſpecially in a chalky ſoil.

Bupleurum tenuiſſimum. The leaſt Hare's-ear; on a bank by the northern road a little beyond Huntingdon.

Carduus eriophorus. Woolly-headed Thiſtle; by the road ſides in this county.

Geranium ſanguineum. Bloody Cranes bill; on limeſtone rocks, and in dry ſtoney paſtures.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cud-weed or Cat's-foot; in dry hilly paſtures.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in damp meadows and paſtures: about Bugden.

Linum perenne β. Wild blue Flax with ſmall heads and flowers; in meadows and paſtures of a limeſtone ſoil.

Lythrum Hyſſopifolia. Graſs Poly, or ſmall Hedge Hyſſop.

Myrica Gale. Goule, ſweet Willow or Dutch Myrtle; in boggy places.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, True Love or One-berry; in woods and ſhady places.

Sedum daſyphyllum. Round-leaved Stone-crop; on walls about Bugden.

Silene noctiflora. Night-flowering Campion; in woods.

PEDIGREE of OLIVE

Morg

WALTER CROMWELL.

Thomas, Baron Cromwell, of Oakham, Earl of Essex, beheaded 32 Hen. VIII. July 28, 1540. ..... = Morg alias Elizabeth, da. of Sir John Seymour, sister to Edward duke of Somerset, Lord Protector of England. = Gregory, created baron Cromwell of Wimbledon, 32 H. VIII. d. 5 E. VI. b. at Launde, co. Leicester.

Sir Richard Williams, knt. t. Henry VIII. took the name of CROMWELL. = Frances, da. and co of Sir Tho. Murfyn, mayor of London, Frances, wife of Rich. Strode of Newenham, co. Devon.— Another daughter the wife of John Strode of Carneham in Dorset.

Mary, eldest da. of John marquis of Winchester, b. at Launde. = Henry, ld. Cromwell, d. 1592.

Thomas Cromwell. — Henry.

Edward d. s. p.

Catherine and Frances.

Joan, da. and at length heir of Sir Ralph Warren, lord mayor of London, 1536. ob. 12 Oct. 1584.

Sir He brook, 1563,

Frances Rugge. = Edward, died and bur. in Down Patrick, in Ireland. Sold Oakham to Harrington.

Sir Gregory.

Catherine, = Sir Lionel Talmache, bart. ancestor of the earl of Dysart.

Thomas, Visc. Lecale, Earl of Ardglass, in Ireland.

Elizabeth Meverell, died 1653. b. at Tikencote.

Elizabeth, marr. Sir John Shelton, of Shelton, c. of Norfolk.

Frances, mar. Sir John Wingfield, knt. of Tikencote.

Anne, marr. Sir Edward Wingfield, knt. of Powers-court, Ireland; ancestor of visc. Powerscourt.

2 Anne, widow of Sir Horatio Palavicini, of Baberham, co. Camb. marr. July 7, 1601. = Sir Oliver of Hinchinbrook, knighted by Eliz. K. B. at the coronation of James I. died aged 93, and § bur. at Ramsey, Aug. 28, 1655.

1 Elizabeth, d. of Sir Tho. Bromley, lord chancellor.

2 Robert of Huntingdon. ob. circa 1617.

Elizabeth, da. of Sir Thomas Steward, of Ely, She died 18 Nov. 1654.

3 *Henry, of Upwood, co. Huntingdon, d. 1630. bur. at Upwood.

Margaret, da. of Tho. Wynde, of South Wotton, co. Norf.

5 *Richard of Upwood, d. 1620. b. at Upwood.

*Elisa ..... d. 161

§Sir of and I bu. a sey, J 1629

Oliver. Giles. Mary. Anne.

*Anne, b. Aug. 28, 1623.

*Hen 1625, d. Dec. 16

Vere Essex, lord Cromwell, earl of Ardglass, succeeded his nephew Thomas.

1 Wingfield, marr. Mary, daug. of Sir William Russel, of Strensham, co. Worcester. d. 1668.

Mary, marr. William Fitzherbert, esq. of Tiffington, co. Derby.

Oliver, d. s. p.

2 †John, bap. May 14, 1589. a colonel in Holland.

4 §Colonel William, carver to the queen of Bohemia, died Feb. 23, 1665 6.

Ada. mar. sir Hy. Palavicini. ‡ Thomas.

§Hannah, mar. John Baldwin, Sept. 11, 1627. Eliz. mar. sir Ric. Ingoldesby, d. 1666.

†Katherine, b. May, 15, 1594.

Jane ma. Tobias Palavicini, d. 1637.

Richard Cromwell, æt. 10 ann. 1613, mar. Elizabeth Hake; *d. Oct. 9, 1628.

*Henry of Upwood and Ramsey, bapt. June 4, 1615.

*Elizabeth, bapt. Dec. 12, 1616.

Sir Oliver St. Joh co. Northampton of the Common P

Frances and Jane, died young.

Mary.

Thomas, lord Cromwell, earl of Ardglass, marr. Honour, da. of Dr. Michael Boyle, archbish. of Armagh, ob. s. p.

1 Lucy, da. of Sir Edward Carr, of Sleaford, co. Linc. relict of sir Richard Dyer, of Stoughton, co. Hunt. knt. died Jan. 1639, bur. at Ramsey.

1 † Henry, born Aug. 25, 1585, died Sept. 18, 1657. b. at Ramsey. A da. died young.

2 Battina, da. of Sir Horatio Pallavicini, knt.

3 §Lady Elizabeth Ferrers, buried Sept. 2, 1658, in Ramsey church yard, at the foot of the cross.

Richard Cromwell, *Henry of Upwood and Ramsey, bapt. 1613, mar. June 4, 1615. = *Elizabeth, bapt. Dec. 12, 1616. = Sir Oliver St. John, of L co. Northampton lord ch of the Common Pleas in th

Henry, *d. Oct. 9, 1634.

*Richard, d. May 1, 1626.

*Anne, ba. Ap. 22, 1621.

Oliver.

Anne, da. of Colonel Robert Weldon, of London, = Sir Robert married 2d to Thomas the first lord Trevor.

Mary, 2d da. of Sir Francis St. John, bart. = Sir John, d. Dec

Robert Sparrow, of Worlingham-hall, co. Suff. esq. = Mary. Sir Robert Edward Southwell, of King's Weston, co. Glouc, esq.

Elizabeth Cromwell, da. and heir. d. 1709.

1 Anne, unmar. 1650.

2 § Carina, ba. Sept. 1, 1622. marr. William Hedley, of Broughton, co. Hunt.

3 § Elizabeth, bapt. 6 Sept. 1626. marr. Hen. English, esq. of Norfolk.

1 James, colonel under Char. I. d. s. p.

2 Henry Williams, of Ramsey, bapt. June 22, 1625. d. Aug. 3, §1673; bur. at Ramsey.

Anne, only daug. and heiress of Richard Cromwell, son of Henry, uncle to the Protector.

† Elizabeth, bapt. Oct. 14, 1593.

1 †Henry, bapt. Aug. 31, 1595.

†Catharine, b. Feb. 1, 1596.

4 †OLIVER, b. Ap. 25, 1599. died Sept. 3, 1658, æt. 59.

Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Ja. Bourchier, of Felsted, in the county of Essex, ‡ bur. at Wicken Sept. 18, 1672.

§Robert, ba. Jan. 13, 1608. d. 1609. bur. Apr. 4, 1609.

†Margaret, bapt. Feb. 22, 1600. † marr. Valent. Walton, June 20, 1617.

Edward Southwell, of King's Weston, esq.

Edward Southwell, lord Clifford, ob. Nov. 1, 1777, possessed of the Cromwell estate. = Sophia, da. of Samuel Campbell, of Mount Campbell, in Ireland, esq.

Horatio, bapt. Sept. 1, 1611.

Tobias, bapt. July 14, 1612, bur. Nov. 6.

Elizabeth, bapt. Oct. 20, 1618, bur. May 23, 1620.

James, bapt. Dec. 3, 1620.

†George, ba. July 20, 1620. †Anne, b

Edward Southwell Clifford, lord Clifford.

Three other sons.

Three daughters.

†Robert, b. Oct. 13, 1621. di. young.

†Oliver, ba. Febru. 6, 1622. di. young, of the small pox, during the civil war.

†RICHARD, b. Oct. 4, 1626. d. at Chesshunt, co. Herts, July 13, 1712. ag. 85.

May 1649, dau. and coheiress of Rich. Major, of Hursley, co. Hants, esq. born 1626, d. Jan. 5, 1675. ag. 49. = †HENRY, b. at Hunting[n]. Janua. 20, ‡1627. died March 23, 1673-4. ag. 47. bur. at Wicken, co. Camb. lord dep. of Ireland.

‡1653 Elizabeth, d. of sir Fr. Russel, of Chippenham, co. Camb. bart. d. ‡Apr. 7, 1687. ag. 52. b. at Wicken. [Epit.]

1st hus. † Lieu. Gen. Henry Ireton, lord dep. of Ireland, d. Sept. 26, 1651, at the siege of Limeric.

Bridget, ba. Aug. 5, 1624. bur. at Stoke Newington, co. Midd. Sept. 5, 1681.

2d hus. = Lieu. Gen. Cha. Fleetwood. lord dep. of Ireland, afterw. Gen. of the army.

†Elizabeth, bap. July 2, 1629. died 6 August, 1658.

= John Cleypole, of Narborough, co. Northampt. esq.

Henry. Da. mar. ... Carter, merch[t]. of Yarmouth. died about 1723. s. p.

2 Jane ma. Lloyd.

3 Eliz. m. Polhill.

1 Bridget, d. 1727 or 8.

= Thomas Bendish, of Gray and of Southtown, Suffol

A son, b. Nov. d. Dec. 15, 1652.

Anne, b. Mar. 14, d. July 15, 1651.

Mary, b. Feb. 28, 1653. d. Sept. 24, 1654.

A da. b. May 17, d. May 27, 1655.

Dorothy, b. Sept. 15, 1657. d. Dec. 13, 1658.

5 Elizabeth, b. Mar. 26, 1650. d. in Bedford Row, Ap. 8, 1731, aged 81, unmarr. bur. at Hursley.

6 Anne, b. Mar. 27, 1659. d. Dec. 7, 1727. ag. 69. s. p.

= Thomas Gibson, M.D. physician gen. of the army. died July 10, 1722, aged 75. He was uncle to Bp. Gibson, who inherited his fortune after his wife's death.

7 Dorothy, b. Aug. 1, 1660. d. in childbed, May 14, 1681, ag. 21. s. p.

= John Mortimer, esq. of Somersetshire.

2 Oliver, b. July 11, 1656. died single May 11, 1705, ag. 49, at Hursley, which his father had made over to him, with Merdon Farm, and where he resided. Both he and his father were buried at Hursley. He is said to have been a man of spirit, and some abilities.

Elizabeth, b. at Whitehall, Sept. 1654, di. July 17, 1659, buried at Chippenham. Camb.

Oliver, b. at Corkhouse, Dublin, Apr. ‡18, 1656. bur. at Wicken, Camb. in Apr. 10, 1685, æt. 29. Epit. at Wicken. He d. at Spinneyabbey, co. Camb.

Henry, b. in Dublin-cast. Mar. 3, 1658. major in the army. He d. at Lisbon, Sept. 11, 1711, ag. 53, and there bur.

= May 28, 1686 Hannah, eldest da. of Benjam. Hewling, Turkey-merchant. He di. 1731. (Her sister marr. ..... Luson.) She d. March 26, 1732, ag. 70, bur. in Bunhill-fields, (Epit.)

Elizabeth, born a penham, June 3 marr. Wm. Russel Fordham, and d. don, 1711, with h da. Frances and J the small pox.

‡Oliver, born at Spinney, Octo. 18, 1687. bapt. Nov. 17. died in Gray's-inn, May 31, 1703. aged 15.

‡Benjamin Hewling, b. at Spinney, Nov. 18, 1689. died at York, Aug. 25, 1694.

Mary, born at Newington Green, April 11, 1691. died unmarr. the July 9, 1731, ag. 41, bur. in Bunhill fields, (Epit.)

‡Henry, born at Spinney abbey, in Wicken, Mar. 13, 1692. died there June 9, 1692. (See epit)

William, born in Cripplegate parish, April 24, 1693. he d. July 9, 1772, ag. 79. s. p. in Great Kirby-str. Hatton Garden.

= 1750, Mary, relict of Tho. Westby, esq. of Linton, co. Camb. whod. Nov. 19, 1747. she d. Mar. 4, 1752. bur. in Bunhill-fields, (Epit.)

Richard, born at Hackney, May 11, 1695, attorney of Lincoln's-inn, d. at Hampstead, Dec. 3, 1759, ag. 64.

= Sarah, dau. of Ebenezer Gatton, grocer in Southwark, niece and one of the coheiresses of Sir Robert Thornhill, knt.

Hannah, born at Hackney, Jan. 10, 1697.

= ..... Cressy.

Henry, b. May 16, 1698, of the Excise, di. Jan. 4, 1769. cœlebs.

Robert Thornhill, d. Feb. 17, 1762. s. p. at Chesshunt.

Oliver d. an infant.

Elizabeth.

Anne, d. unmarried 1777.

Letitia.

The other two living, 1784, at Hampstead, co. Midd. unmarried.

Eleanor, 3d da. ob. Feb. 24, 1727, ag. 2 months, bur. in Bunhill-fields. (Epit.)

1 Henry, died 1771.

2 Thomas.

3 Elizabeth.

Anne, living 1784, at Stoke Newington, co. Midd.

= Oct. 1, 1753, John Field, apothecary in Newgate-street.

1 Eliz. Da. d. single.

T tic ir a pa th di

—— Baron, = Sept. 2, 1784.

Henry b. Dec. 9, 1755. partner with his father.

2 John, b. Aug. 15, 1760. d. Jan. 31, 1762.

Oliver, b. Dec. 6, 1761.

John, b. Oct. 1, 1764.

William, b. Jan. 10, 1768

Anne.

Elizabeth, died unmarried at Stoke Newington, Dec. 9, 1781, aged 23, bur. at Chesshunt.

Sophia.

Mary.

Letitia.

B af at

* From Upwood

§ From Ram

VER CROMWELL.

Vol. II, p. 161*

Morgan ap Hode. Vide H. 8. 58. b. in Coll. Armor.

Jevan ap Morgan.

L L. William ap Jevan.

. . . . Morgan Williams. alias ap William.

es, da. and co-heir of Tho. Murfyn, lord of London, 1518. — Richard Cromwell. — Walter Cromwell.

of Sir ... or of 1584. — Sir Henry of Hinchinbrook, knighted 6 Eliz. 1563, died 1603. — Francis Cromwell, of Hemingford, co. Hunt. = Margaret, da. of Henry Mannock, of Hemingford.

Henry Cromwell, son and heir.

*Elusai ..... d. 1619 — §Sir Philip, of Biggin and Dentry, bu. at Ramsey, Jan. 28, 1629. = §Mary Townsend, b. at Ramsey, Nov. 3, 1617. — Ralph, probably d. young, and was buried at Huntingdon. — Joan. = Sir Fran. Barrington, knt. and bart. died July 3, 1628. — Elizabeth. = John Hampden, esq. of Bucks. — Frances. = 2d wife of Richard Whalley, of Keston, co. Nottingh. esq. father to colonel Edward Whalley, who signed the warrant for the murder of king Charles: died in New England. See Hutchinson, Hist. of New Engl. — Mary. = William Dunch, esq. — Dorothy. = Sir Thomas Fleminge, of Stoneham, co. Hants. knt.

John, killed June, 1643.

*Henry, b July 28, 1625, d. Dec. 16, 1625.

Sir Thomas, d. 1644. = Frances, d. and coheiress of John Gobert, of Coventry, esq.

Joan. = Sir Richard Everard, of Much Waltham, c. Essex, bart.

St. John, of Longthorp, ... ampton, lord chief justice ... nmon Pleas in the Usurpation. — *Anne, bapt. Mar. 11, 1617. — §Mary, bapt. Sept. 12, 1627.

Sir John, ancestor of Sir Fitzwilliam Barrington, bart. = Dorothy, da. of Sir William Lytton, of Knebworth, co. Herts. bart.

Sir Richard. = Elizabeth, da. of Sir Henry Gibbs, d. 1694.

Mary, da. of John Brown, M. D. of Salisbury. = Sir Hugh, d. 1705-6, ag. 51.

Oliver. — Elizabeth. d. 1679. = Sir John Bernard, of Brampton, c. Hunt. bart.

Sir Richard, d. 1733. = Susannah, da. and coheiress of Dr. Richard Kidder, bishop of Bath and Wells, d. 1739.

Sir Richard, d. 7 March, 1741-2, unmarr. — Sir Hugh.

5 da.

n, = Sir Robert. — Richard Bentley, D.D. master of Trinity College, Cambridge. He d. 1742. = Joanna.

= Sir John, d. Dec. 15, 1766. — Richard. — Denison Cumberland, grandson of Rich. bishop of Peterborough, and bishop of Clonfert and Killaloe, d. 1774. = Joanna.

ary. — Sir Robert, sometime M.P. for Westminster. — A son. — A daughter. — Joanna. d. single. — Richard. many children. — Da. mar. dean Allcock, in Ireland.

, † Margaret, bapt. Feb. 22, 1600. † marr. Valent. Walton, June 20, 1617. — Richard. — † Jane, ba. Jan. 29, 1605. marr. 1. Roger Whetstone. 2. Roger Jones. — † Anne, born Jan 2, 1602. bapt. Jan. 16. marr. John Desborough. — 1st husb. Dr. Pet. French, canon of Christ Church, di. 1655. — Robina, living 1672. = 2d husb. John Wilkins, bish. of Chester, died 1672.

Jane, † marr. William Baker, Jun. 2, 1621. — Henry, b. Jan. 22, 1607, of Biggins, a mile from Ramsey: col. in the king's service. — Henry, rector of Wystow, co. Huntingdon. bur. at Ramsey. — § Philip, b. Dec. 25, 1608. bu. at Ramsey, May 14, 1642. — § Thomas, b. Dec. 26, 1609. colonel in Charles' army. mar. Elizabeth eldest da. of Sir Wolstan Dixie, of Bosworth c. Leicester, knt. and d. soon after the king was beheaded. bur. at Ramsey, where he lived sometime after Naseby fight. — § Oliver, ba. May 21, 1612. student at Padua, in Italy d. in 1628. — § Robert, ba. June 29, 1613. § hanged at Padua, in London. — § Anna, ba. Mar. 5, 1611.

§ Elizabeth, ba. Dec. 21, 1614.

§ Mary, ba. Jan. 18, 1615.

Richard, b. June 20, 1617. d. at Ramsey.

Elizabeth. = Feb. 23, 1663-4, archbi. Tillotson. died Nov. 22, 1694.

Richard. — † John, born Apr. 1637.

20. † Anne, ba. May 22, 1622. — † George, b. 23 Feb. bap. 20 Mar. 1624.

, = John Cleypole, of Narborough, co. Northampt. esq. — James, ba. Jan. 8, 1631. bur. Jan. 9, 1631.

Mary, ba. Febr. 9, 1636. d. Mar. 14, 1712-13. — mar. at Hampton-court, 18 Nov. 1657. Tho. Vis. Fauconberg. di. Dec. 31, 1700. s. p. created earl Fauconberg, Apr. 9, 1691.

1st husb. Nov. 4, 1657, Robt. son of Robert lord Rich, afterwards earl of Warwick, who d. Feb. 16, 1657. s. p. = Frances. d. Jan. 27, 1720-1, æt. 84.

2d husb. Sir John Russell, of Chippenham, co. Camb. bart. bapt. Oct. 6, 1640. bur. March 24, 1669. = Frances.

James Chadwick, esq. — 2 Mary, died 1687. — 1 Elizabeth, died 1681.

Endish, of Gray's-inn, ithtown, Suffolk, esq.

Christian, d. 1669. — Sir William, sold Chippenham. d. 1707. — Richard, capt. of the guar. to Will. III. — John, born 1670. gov. of Bengal. d. 1735. ag. 66. marr. Rebecca Eyre. — Elizabeth Russell. bapt. Nov. 14, 1665. d. 1733. = Sir Thomas Frankland, of Thirkelby, co. York, bart. d. Oct. 29, 1726.

izabeth, born at Chippnham, June 3, 1660. rr. Wm. Russell, esq; of rdham, and d. in Lonn, 1711, with her two Frances and Jane, of small pox.

Francis, b. at Chippenham, June 7, 1663. d. 1719, aged 56.

‡ Richard, b. at Spinney, Aug. 13, 1665. d. in London, Feb. 18, 1687. aged 21.

‡ William, b. at Spinney, Ap. 29, 1667. d. in the East Indies, Jan. 9, 1691. ag. 24.

Sir William, di. in Ireland, May, 1738. s. p. — Mary. — Sir Francis, of Bengal. marr. Anne Gee.

Sir William, in the guards, d. 1757, single. — Fanny.

Diana Topham, d. Feb. 2, 1740-1. — Sir Thomas, d. 1747. — Henry, d. gov. of Bengal. Aug. 23, 1728. — Mary, da. of Alex. Cross, merch. — Frederick, commissioner of excise. d. Mar. 8, 1768. — Elizabeth, widow of Adam Cardonell, esq. d. Jan. 27, 1736-7.

Charles, colonel of the guards, marr. Mary Rivett. — Betty. marr. John Morley Trevor, esq. s. p. — Diana, marr. George Henry Lee, earl of Litchfield, d. 1772, s. p. — Sir Charles Henry, bart. died Jan. 11, 1768. s. p. marr. Agnes Brown, of New England. — Sir Thomas, admiral of the white. marr. in May 1743, Sarah a dau. of Rhett, son to the ch. justice of S. Carolina; died Nov. 21, 1784.

1 Bridget, d. single, after her mother, at South-town. — Catherine Smith, of Colkirke, co. Norf. = 2 Thomas, of Colskirk, Norf. d. in the W. Indies. — 3 Henry of Bedford-row, d. about 1740. = Martha Shute, sister of John first visc. Barrington.

Ireton, d. young, 1730.

Mary, b. 1739, living 1784. — Sir John, b. 1741. barrister at law, marr. Cath. Cary. both died 1784. — Thomas, b. Sept. 1750. — Hugh, died an infant. — William, fell. of All Souls. — Roger, of Chr. Church. — Seven daughters.

Sir John, b. 1779. — George, b. 1781.

Henry, b. May 6, 1698, of he Excise, di. an. 4, 1769. elebs. — Frances, da. of John Tidman. — 1 Thomas, b. at Hackney, Aug. 19, 1699, grocer, di. Oct. 2, 1748. aged 49. — 2 Mary, da. of Nich. Skinner, of London, merch. living 1783. — Oliver, born in Gray's-inn, Sep. 23, 1704. ensign in the army, ob. August 1748. celebs.

Henry, d. single, 1753, at South-town. — Mary. = William Berners, of Hanover-sq. and of Wolverston-park, co. Suff. esq. d. 1783. — 2 Elizabeth, marr. Hagar, of Waresley, co. Huntingd. esq. d. 1784. s. p.

Anne. = June, 1754, Thomas, lord Pelham of Sussex.

Thomas, b. Ap. 8, or 28, 1756. — Henrietta Anne, b. Sept. 1, 1757. — Henry, b. July 11, 1759. — Frances, b. Dec. 4, 1760. marr. Dec. 3, 1778, to George Vis. Middleton; d. June 6, 1783. bur. at Wandsworth. — Lucy, b. Feb. 1763. — Amelia, b. July, 1764. — George, b. Oct. 13, 1766.

A daughter.

1 Eliz. Da. d. single.

Thomas, apprentice to Mr. Sharp, ironmonger, went a lieu. in the company's service to the East Indies and died there single.

Richard. — Hannah-Hewling. — 1 Oliver, attorney, in Essex-street, Strand, clerk to St. Thomas's hospital. = marr. at Allhallows, Barking, Aug. 8, 1771, Mary, daug. of Morgan Morse, attorney.

Susannah, living 1783, with her mother, in Hatton Garden.

Catharine Laroche. = Charles. marr. 21 Jul. 1765. — Henry, rector of Hambledon, co. Bucks. living and single.

Charles, Henry, William, Mary, } twins.

Elizabeth Oliveria. d. an infant.

Oliver Cromwell, b. Sept. 24, 1782, in Nicholas-lane, Lombard-street.

THE CROMWELL family having made ſo conſiderable a figure in this county during the laſt and preceding century, and ſuddenly ſunk into ſuch oblivion, that ſcarce any memorial remains of them except in the regiſters of one or two churches, we have ſubjoined an ample pedigree of them, as exact as ſuch regiſters afford [a].

Walter the father of Thomas created lord Cromwell [b] by Henry VIII. in whoſe hands he was an eminent inſtrument for bringing about the Reformation, is ſuppoſed to have been a blackſmith at Putney. A nameleſs daughter of his married to Morgan Williams is the firſt of the family that can be traced with certainty. Their ſon ſir Richard, who bore his paternal name of Williams till he aſſumed his mother's, was preferred to the king's ſervice by his uncle Thomas baron Okeham [c], obtained the honour of knighthood 1540, 32 Henry VIII, for his atchievements in tilting at Weſtminſter, was ſheriff of the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon the ſame year, and had a grant of five religious houſes in the latter county, Hinchinbroke, Saltrey, Ramſay, St. Neots, and Huntingdon.

Others with Fuller, and perhaps with greater appearance of probability, ſuppoſe that the father of ſir Richard Cromwell was Thomas Cromwell, eſq; ſheriff of Cambridge and Huntingdonſhires 28 Henry VIII. as was ſir Richard himſelf four years after, and that the tradition of the alliance with the earl of Eſſex aroſe from the deſcent of the Protector's wife from the Bouchiers, who bore that title. But there ſeems not the leaſt ground for connecting this family with the Cromwells of Tatteſhall, co. Lincoln. Dugdale alſo deduces John lord Williams of Tame from the ſame family with ſir Richard Williams, who took the name of Cromwell [d].

That there was early an intermarriage between the families of Williams and Cromwell ſeems probable from the latter aſſuming the former name after the Reſtoration.

Sir Richard Williams, alias Cromwell, was ſeated at Ramſay, which his grandſon Henry ſold to col. Titus.

Sir Henry Cromwell, only ſon of ſir Richard, reſided at Hinchinbrook in winter, and in ſummer at Ramſay, which his eldeſt ſon ſold to col. Titus. He had the name of the Golden Knight from his great liberality to the people, who, whenever he came from Hinchinbrook to Ramſay, were conſtantly collected in the High ſtreet to welcome him and receive his bounty: for he always threw money out of his coach till he reached the abbey houſe behind the church.

Hinchinbrook deſcended to his ſon Oliver, who made it his ſummer reſidence for ſome time, and then ſold it to ſir Sidney Montague father of Edward firſt earl of Sandwich. He had the honour of entertaining there king James I. 1603, who created him a knight of the Bath. His majeſty at his departure ſaid to him, "Morry mon, thou haſt entertained me the beſt of "any mon ſince I left Edinburgh." He held Eſton and Newport in Eſſex in right of his mother [e], and ſold the former to the Maynards [f]. He alſo ſold Warbois co. Huntingdon to ſir John Leman, lord mayor of London. He married two wives, Elizabeth, daughter of lord chancellor Bromley, and Anne, daughter of —— Houſman, and widow of ſir Horace Pallavicini of Babraham.

Robert, ſecond ſon of ſir Henry, was ſeated at Huntingdon, and had four ſons, including the Protector, and ſeven daughters. By the intereſt of his elder brother he was made a juſtice of peace for this county, having inherited from his father the eſtate in Huntingdon, valued at about 400*l*. a year, which was the ſuppoſed value of each of ſir Henry's other eſtates at Hinchinbroke, Ramſay, and Upwood, his youngeſt ſon having the ſmalleſt income. The beſt part of Robert's his ſon Oliver conſumed in his youthful extravagances. Robert married a daughter of Sir Thomas Stewart of Rothſyth in Fifeſhire [g], and ſiſter to ſir Robert Stewart of the city of Ely, knt. who left his nephew, afterwards Protector, an eſtate of l. 500. per annum in the iſle of Ely [h].

Henry, third ſon of ſir Henry, was lord of the manor of Upwood, and probably built of timber the manſion-houſe now ſtanding there, caſed with brick by Mr. Pheſaunt. The arms of Cromwell with impalments and quarterings were on each ſide of the chimney-piece in the great room [i] till the houſe was modernized

[a] In which reſearch I muſt acknowlege myſelf particularly indebted to the rev. Mr. Thomas Whiſton, the preſent worthy miniſter of Ramſey, where the elder branch of the Huntingdonſhire family were ſeated; Lady Bickerton for a ſight of the regiſter of Upwood, and for many other curious particulars; to the rev. Mr. Hodſon of St. John's church in Huntingdon; and to the rev. Mr. Tookie of Chippenham.

[b] Thomas lord Cromwell's eldeſt ſon Gregory was created baron Cromwell after his father's execution, and his great grandſon Thomas viſcount Lecale earl of Ardeglas in Ireland, whoſe poſterity remains.

[c] The Protector himſelf diſclaimed all alliance with the baron, if we believe a ſtory told by Fuller (Worthies in Cambridgeſhire, p. 169,) that Dr. Goodman, biſhop of Glouceſter, dedicating a book of devotion to him, and in a printed pedigree pretending a deſcent from the ſame family, Oliver told him, with ſome warmth, that lord Cromwell was not related to him in any degree.

[d] Bar. II. 393. [e] Morant, Eſſex, II. 585. [f] Ib. 434.

[g] Rothſyth caſtle is almoſt oppoſite to Hopeton houſe on a rock near the ſea. It is ſuppoſed the family went into England with James VI. The barony of Rothſyth is now the property of the earl of Hopeton, worth l. 500. per annum.

[h] Short View of the Troubles in England. Gent. Mag. xxxiv. 208. Mrs. Cromwell's great uncle Robert Steward, laſt prior and firſt dean of Ely, deduced the pedigree printed in Wharton's Anglia Sacra, I. 686.

[i] Over the arms were H. M. C. (Henry and Mary Cromwell) 1602. The motto under the arms was Sudore non Sopore. The arms are a lion rampant holding a ring in his right paw, an addition given by Henry VIII. on account of Mr. Richard Williams, who at the grand juſting overthrew two foreign knights. According to the conſtant tradition of this place the king knighted him on the ſpot, gave him his ring from his finger, and ſaid, "Henceforth you ſhall be my knight." The quarterings on this chimney-piece were eleven. 1. A lion modernized by ſir Richard Bickerton, bart. preſent poſſeſſor. It was ſold by Henry Cromwell's nephew to Stephen Pheſaunt of Gray's-inn, eſq. father of Peter[k], chief juſtice of the King's Bench. The conveyance, dated Oct. 20, 1648, runs thus: ſir Oliver Williams, alias Cromwell, Henry Williams, alias Cromwell, eſq; ſon and heir apparent to ſir Oliver, and Elizabeth his wife, and Henry Williams, alias Cromwell, ſon and heir apparent of the ſaid Henry, and Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Richard Williams, alias Cromwell, deceaſed, ſon and heir apparent, in her life time, of Henry Williams, alias Cromwell, late of Upwood, eſq; deceaſed, brother of the ſaid ſir Oliver Williams, alias Cromwell, of the firſt part, and Stephen Pheaſant, of Gray's-inn, eſq; of the ſecond.

Sir Philip was the 4th ſon of ſir Henry, and ſeated at Biggins a mile from Ramſay, and died 1629. He married Mary daughter of ſir Henry Townſend, juſtice of Cheſter. A ſon of his, named Oliver, died a ſtudent in the univerſity of Padua 1628[l].

The fifth ſon of ſir Henry was Ralph, of whom we have no further particulars. He probably died young, and was buried at Ramſay.

Richard, ſixth and youngeſt ſon of ſir Henry Cromwell, lived and died at Ramſay, and was buried at Upwood.

From ſir Henry's eldeſt daughter Joan are deſcended the baronet families of the Barringtons and Everards of Eſſex. From his ſecond daughter Elizabeth the Hampdens of Hampden, c. Bucks, and the preſent earl of Buckinghamſhire. Her ſon John was the famous patriot killed in Chalgrave field 1643. From his eldeſt ſon Robert's grandaughter (Frances youngeſt daughter of the Protector) are deſcended the baronet families of Ruſſel and Frankland, and from a daughter of the laſt named family Thomas lord Pelham of Stanmore. From his third ſon Henry's eldeſt daughter Elizabeth deſcended the preſent ſir Robert Barnard, Richard Bentley, ſon of the late Dr. Bentley, and the Cumberlands of Northamptonſhire, deſcendants of the biſhop of Peterborough of that name, of whom Dr. Deniſon Cumberland died biſhop of Clonfert and Killaloe in Ireland 1774.

Sir Oliver had iſſue Henry who married firſt Lucy daughter of ſir Edward Carr, of Sleford, bart. relict of ſir Richard Dyer, knt. of Stoughton c. Huntingdon; ſecondly Battina or Baptina Palavicini, daughter of his mother-in-law by her firſt huſband, and thirdly lady Elizabeth Ferrars. By the firſt of theſe he left a ſon Henry (his eldeſt ſon James dying without iſſue a colonel in Charles I's army) and three daughters; and by the ſecond a daughter. Sir Oliver had two other ſons; John a colonel in the king's army was ſent over by prince Charles to offer his couſin Oliver any terms if he would ſave his father's life; and William another colonel in the ſame army, and carver to the queen of Bohemia, who died at Ramſay Feb. 23, 1665-6, at 9 in the morning, and was buried next day at 9 at night, being the firſt that died of the great plague. Henry's eldeſt ſon Henry married Anne only daughter and heireſs of Richard Cromwell, ſon of Henry, uncle to the Protector. Sir Oliver had three daughters, of whom Jane the youngeſt married Tobias Palavicini, knt. of Babram[m].

Henry was a favourite name in this family out of compliment to king Henry VIII. There were ſeven Henry Cromwells living at one time at Ramſay and Upwood as marked † in the pedigree. In 1663 there are two Henry Cromwells, eſqrs. parties to an amicable bill in chancery for incloſing and dividing the commons of Ramſay, in the beginning of which they are thus entered: "Henry Williams, alias Cromwell, eſq; the elder," and "Henry Williams, alias Cromwell, eſq; the younger." The latter was the laſt of the family that lived at Ramſay, and was buried there 1673. He died at Huntingdon at lion rampant. 2. A lion rampant looking back. 3. 3 fleurs de lis. 4. 3 ſpear heads. 5. A chevron between 3 fleurs de lis. 6. 3 chevronels. 7. A chevron, in the dexter point a mullet. 8. A chevron ingrailed between 3 griffins heads. 9. A bend Ermine between 6 annulets. 10. On a bend between 3 martlets 3 billets. 11. A chevron ingrailed between three heath cocks. Theſe are thus blazoned in an atchievement in the houſe of Mr. Farr of Ramſay: 1. G a lion rampant S. 2. G 3 ſpear heads A. 3. A a chevron between 3 fleurs de lis G. 4. A 3 chevronels G. 5. A a lion rampant G. 6. O on a chevron G. a mullet A. 7. A z. a unicorn rampant between 8 croſs croſslets A. 8. O a chevron ingrailed between three griffins heads G. 9. G a bend between 6 annulets O. 10. G on a feſs between three martlets A 3 billets G. 11. A on a chevron ingrailed G between 3 heath cocks S a mullet O. 12. G a lion rampant A. Creſt on a helmet a demi lion rampant A holding a ring O. On a ſhield of pretence a dolphin naiant embowed impaling a lion rampant Arg. Motto as above. The two other coats on the chimney at Upwood were a feſs between 3 ſquares voided quartering a chevron between 3 griffins heads, and impaling a chevron charged with 3 roſes ſlipt between 3 ſpear heads.

[k] Againſt the north wall of Upwood chancel is this inſcription in Roman capitals on a large braſs plate in a ſtone frame for Judge Pheſaunt.

M. S.
Petri Pheſaunt modo ſenioris (bis ſolius) juſtitiarii de banco; pietate, erga Deum probitate erga homines, Chriſtiani feſicis, natu & moribus verè generoſi, juris ſcientia, equitatis conſcientia, lenitate erga bonos, ſeveritate in malos, juſtitia ad omnes judicis eximii, inconcuſſa denique in patriam (etiam in periculis) conſtantia propagnaculi fidelis.
Necnon Mariæ (ab antiqua familia de Bruges in com. Gloceſtriæ ortæ) uxoris ejus matriſque liberorum chariſſimæ.
Qui poſt quadraginta annos conjugii & amoris illæſi ſub hoc lapide ſimul quieſcunt, adventum ejus expectantis qui caput eſt anguli, lapis exciſus e monte ſine manibus.

Arms. Az. a bend indented O and Az. a chief, O. ſingle, and impaling, A. a croſs, S. charged with a leopard's head caboſhed, O. and quartering, Az. three creſcents, G, or S. a chief, Erm. Creſt a Pheaſant. Though no date is on this epitaph, he is entered in the regiſter of funerals 1682, May 20, Peter Pheaſaunt armig. In the houſe are two portraits of this family on board: one repreſents lady Pheaſaunt three quarters in ruff and handkerchief, ſlaſhed ſleeves, black gown, watch at right ſide, feather fan in left hand; from a ſmall ſtring round her neck hangs the pheaſant, the creſt of the family, her right hand is on a girl's head ſuperſcribed Margareta Pheaſaunt, æt. 4. No inſcription over the mother. The other picture exhibits whole lengths of a boy and girl, with red hair and in ruffs: the boy holds a whip in his right hand, under which is a ſmall top: his left hand holds the right of his ſiſter, who has a modern fan in her left. Over him Natus 22 Maii 1617. Over her Nata 7 Jan. 1615. Between them Stilo Angliæ pict. 7 Jan. 1622.

In the burial regiſter we have Sarah, wife of Stephen Pheſaunt, eſq; May 6, 1654, and Stephen Pheaſaunt, eſq; May 31, 1657. Theſe were probably buried under the chancel: but where the Cromwell family buried is totally uncertain, unleſs under the manor pew, where ſome ſmall bones have been taken up in opening a vault for ſome of the preſent family.

[l] Papadopoli in his Hiſtoria Gymnaſii Patavini. Venet. 1726, II. p. 306, 307. having aſſerted that Oliver Cromwell (the Protector) was ſtudent there 1618, and that his arms were painted in the cloiſter there; ſir James Burroughs in anonymous "Anecdotes of the Cromwell family 1763," attempted, but without ſucceſs, to clear up this difficulty, which our pedigree eaſily clears. Sir Oliver Cromwell marrying for his 2d wife the lady Anne widow of ſir Horace Palavicini who was of Italian extraction, one of her ſons by her firſt huſband, took this Oliver Cromwell, ſon of ſir Oliver's brother ſir Philip, when young into Italy, and entered him at the univerſity of Padua. He never returned into England, but died according to report by a fall from a tower at Rome.

[m] Vincent's viſitation of Huntingdonſhire in coll. Arm. p. 115.

an election, where he had put up for candidate in opposition to the earl of Manchester —— Apreece, esq; of Washingley, a relation of his wife. He was defeated in his point, and dropt down dead from his chair while drinking with his friends after the election was over. Having no issue, he sold the reversion of his estate to col. Titus. His widow survived him 14 years, and, at his death, removed to a house at the bottom of Mr. Whiston's garden, which, with all her jointure lands, is still called Dame Williams's. The register of Ramsay is interrupted from 1642 to 1653, when the marriage ceremony was performed by justice Pheasant of Upwood, or justice Lloyd of St. Ives. This elder branch of the family were in great measure ruined by the civil war. After Mrs. Williams' death col. Titus took possession of the whole estate.

The estate at Upwood was with three others bequeathed to Lemon Hutchins, esq. cousin to the last Mr. Pheasant, who it is believed was a Turkey merchant. Mr. Hutchins died 1738, leaving all his estates to his widow, who 1745 remarried Vere Warner, esq. attorney at law, who dying 1756, left Upwood to her. Mrs. Warner settled the estate 1758 on the present possessor then a lieutenant in the royal navy, who married her niece Maria Anna Hussey. She gave up the estate during her life, and died July 1771. The tithes of Raveley magna were given with the estate, the common fields joining.

Titus was author of the famous pamphlet against Oliver Cromwell intituled "Killing no murder," published under the name of William Allen, in which was plainly shewn, that one who had violated all laws could derive protection from no law. Cromwell got intelligence of this, and determined to destroy him. The royalists used to meet at a certain tavern in London, and Cromwell knew of it. He sent a trusty officer with a party of soldiers to seize Titus and Firebrace of Suffolk. The officer ordered his men to halt at the door till he went in for information. He privately asked the master of the house whether they were there, telling him that he came not to take away, but to save their lives. The master went with him to the room; the officer entered, but took care first to throw his red cloak over his head. His speech was very concise. "If Titus or "Firebrace are in the room, let them escape for "their lives this instant." He directly retired, and called in his soldiers to take them. The two gentlemen escaped out of the window, mounted their horses that night, and made the best of their way to general Monk in Scotland. With him they returned at the Restoration. They advertised this affair in all the public papers, and desired the officer to apply to them, with promise of ample reward for his kindness. But neither of them could ever hear of him, and Titus always supposed that Cromwell found or suspected the officer had deceived him, and therefore hanged him up in their stead. The colonel was strongly attached to the Protestant religion, and brought the Exclusion bill into the House. Part of his speech in verse on that occasion was long remembered in Ramsay:

I hear a lion in the lobby roar;
Say, gentlemen, shall we shut the door;
Or do you rather chuse to let him in?
But how then shall we get him out again?

He was knight of the shire for this county many years; and when he was an old man the earl of Manchester proposed his brother for a candidate, offering, in order to strengthen his interest, his sister with £.10,000 in marriage to Anthony Hammond, esq. of Somersham, who was a lively, sensible young gentleman, and called Silver-tongued Hammond. However he refused the earl's offer, and joined with col. Titus to oppose the brother. When the election approached it was generally believed that the earl's brother would be the first upon the poll. This induced Hammond to act a very ungenerous part by Titus. On the election morning Titus took all the votes from this side of the county and honestly polled them for Titus and Hammond. Hammond rested his votes in the soak of Somersham till the afternoon, when he polled them for Hammond only, by which means he secured a majority over Titus. When the colonel saw the dirty part Hammond was acting, he took his hat from the peg, and withdrew, saying to his friends who pressed him to stay, "Nothing vexes me in the affair but to be outwitted by a boy." He was one of the wits and buffoons of Charles II's court, and constantly mimicked and ridiculed the speech, looks, and gestures of the great lord Clarendon. Whenever he saw the minister coming to do business with the king, he cried out, "Here comes your majesty's schoolmaster." Happy would it have been both for the king and the nation had he continued in so good a school many years longer. The colonel died at his other seat at Bushy in Hertfordshire, where his family had resided early in that century. He left three daughters who were never married. The last, however, Mrs. Catharine, was lady of the manor of Ramsey many years and left it to her man and maid servants, who sold it for 37,000*l.* to the late Coulson Fellowes, esq.

But to return. The Protector[n] had by his wife[o] Elizabeth, daughter of sir James Boucher of Felsted c. Essex, three sons (one of his own name) who died infants[p]. His eldest surviving son and successor Richard's only son Oliver, who is said to have been a man of spirit and some abilities, died unmarried, at the age of 49, before his father, who, dying 1712, left three daughters[q]. The numerous issue of the Protector's son Henry, who was settled at Spinney abbey in the parish of Wicken[r], in the county [n] The Protector's birth is thus entered in the register of St. John Baptist's church in Huntingdon:

"Anno Domini 1599. Oliverus filius Roberti Cromwell gener. et Elizabeth ux. ejus natus vicesimo quinto die Aprilis & baptisatus vicesimo nono ejusdem mensis."
The fate of his corpse after his decease is variously reported: the Thames, Naseby field, and Westminster abbey, are all severally assigned as its repository. Dr. C. Mortimer had the mason's receipt for taking it up at the Restoration; and the Gesta Britannorum at the end of Wharton's almanack for 1663 records the event, as does Seymour's Survey of London, 1735. Gent. Mag. 1783, p. 846. Whether Cromwell had the vanity to rank among kings in his death no apology can be made for the mean revenge taken on his putrid carcase five years after its commitment to its peaceful mansion.

[o] The following entry in the register of Northborough near Peterborough, the seat of the Cleypoles, shews she was buried there:
"Elizabeth the relict of Oliver Cromwell, sometime Protector of England, was buried Nov. 19. 1665."

[p] Oliver, Richard, and Henry, were educated in Felsted school, which had been founded by their aunt's husband's father, about eighty years before. Lives of Illustrious Persons who died in 1712, p. 283. Morant, Essex, II. 421.

[q] By the inscription in Hursley church, it appears, that Richard had two sons and seven daughters, of whom only one son and three daughters lived to maturity. Gent. Mag. 1777, p. 266.

[r] Henry had Spinney by his wife daughter of sir Francis Russel of Chippenham adjoining. His grandmother was buried at his right hand county of Cambridge, and married Elizabeth[s] eldeſt daughter of ſir Francis Ruſſel of Chippenham in the ſame county, bart.[t] are reduced to one male repreſentative Oliver, born Sept. 24, 1782. Thoſe of his eldeſt daughter Bridget[u] by lieutenant general Ireton, her firſt husband[x], and of his youngeſt daughter Frances by ſir John Ruſſel of Chippenham, in the county of Cambridge, bart. are lately extinct[y]. His third and favourite daughter Elizabeth, who died in his life time, married John Cleypole of Narborough, in the county of Northampton, eſq; and was buried in Henry VII's chapel Weſtminſter abbey, where her corpſe eſcaped undiſturbed when her father's was removed for its ignominious expoſure on a gallows at Tyburn at the reſtoration.

Of the Protector's three brothers, and his two elder ſiſters, little is known beyond the pariſh regiſters. His third ſiſter Margaret married Valentine Walton of Stoughton in this county, who was one of the regicides, and had a grant of the manor of Croyland, and part of that of Spalding, being parcel of the queen's mother's jointure, and reſtored to her by the parliament 1660. Jane married col. Desborow, or Disborow, of whoſe name many occur in Wicken regiſter. Robina had to her ſecond husband Dr. Wilkins, afterwards biſhop of Cheſter, and their daughter married archbiſhop Tillotſon.

hand under the communion table at Wicken, with this epitaph:
" Elizabetha Cromwell de Ely obiit XVI die Septembris anno Chriſti MDCLXXII annoq. ætatis LXXIV."
and by her his eldeſt ſon Oliver,
" Olivar Cromwell filius Henrici Cromwell obiit in Apr. 1685, annoq. ætatis ſuæ 29."
On the ſlab over himſelf, which is of black marble as highly poliſhed as if juſt laid down, are theſe inſcriptions:
" Henricus Cromwell de Spinney obiit 23, die Martii anno Chriſti 1673. Annoq. ætatis 47."
In ſmaller text,
" Elizabetha uxor Henrici Cromwell, obiit 7 die Aprilis, an° 1687, annoq. ætatis ſue 52."
" Henricus filius Hen. Cromwell jun. obiit 4° Jun. a° 1692, a° ætatis ſue 12 Sept."
His houſe was rebuilt 1775 by the preſent earl of Aylesford, who married one of the coheireſſes of the late duke of Somerſet.

[s] Wicken regiſter ſtyles her " the good lady Cromwell, Elizabeth Cromwell."

[t] This eſtate came afterwards by purchaſe to admiral Ruſſel of another family, created earl of Orford, who died 1727, having rebuilt the family ſeat; in which are whole-length portraits of the Protector, major-genera Lambert and admiral Popham. The admiral left it to his niece Anne, whoſe eldeſt daughter married Samuel firſt lord Sandys, who ſold it to Mr. Molyneux, whoſe ſon now enjoys it and offers it to ſale. The admiral alſo built a houſe in Covent-Garden which he left to his niece's younger daughter who married Thomas lord Archer, whoſe ſon married the daughter of the late James Weſt, eſq. who occupied it; and ſince whoſe death it has been turned into an hotel.

Sir Francis Ruſſel's eldeſt ſon and ſucceſſor married Elizabeth the Protector's youngeſt daughter.

[u] The limits of our work oblige us to refer to the Gentleman's Magazine for 1765. 357. 1774. 251. and to the appendix to the 2d vol. of Hughes' letters, for anecdotes of this lady's eldeſt daughter who married Mr. Bendiſh of an antient family in Eſſex, and lived till 1727 or 8.

[x] Of her ſecond huſband lieut. gen. Fleetwood and his family, ſee Hiſtory of Stoke Newington, p. 27.

[y] Mrs. Day of Fordham, co. Cambridge, is maternal grandaughter of Henry Cromwell. One of her nieces married Mr. Addiſon of Soham, who ſurvives her; the other Mr. Saunders, whom ſhe ſurvived, and is ſtill living at Greenwich with Dr. Maſkelyne the Aſtronomer Royal.

A MAP
of
NORTHAMPTONSHIRE
from the beſt
AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J.Cary

WARWICKSHIRE LEICESTERSHIRE OXFORDSHIRE BUCKINGHAMSHIRE

Welham · Welland River · Sutton · Bowden Magna · MARKET HARBOROUGH · Lubbenham · Pamplillion Hall · Thedingworth · Bosworth · Welland Riv. · Bowden Parva · Braybrook · Ozenden Magna · Sibbertoft · Clipston · Arthingworth · Harrington · Kelmarsh · Scotland · Maidwell · Draughton · Swinford · Cathorp · Stanford Hall · Stanford upon Avon · Welford · Naseby · Hasselbeech · Claycoton · Lilbourn · Cold Ashby · Thornby · Yelvertoft · Hilmorton · Winwick · Guilsborough · Cottesbrook · Lamport · Crick · West Haddon · Kilsby · Barby · Watford · Raventhorpe · Brixworth · Scaldwell · Ashby Ledgers · Long Buckby · East Haddon · Holdenby · Pitsford · Willoughby · Braunston · Welton · Wolfhamcote · Great Brington · Harleston · Boughton · Whilton · Norton · DAVENTRY · Drayton · Brockhall · Kingsthorp · Stowerton · Dodford · Flower · Dallington · Catesby · Newnham · NORTHAMPTON · Killingbury · Hellidon · Badby · Lower Heyford · Stowe · Charwelton · Farthingstone · Preston Capes · Litchborough · Upper Boddington · Woodford · Canons Ashby · Blakesley · Tiffield · Bliſworth · Courteen Hall · Stoke Bruern · Ashton · Hartwell · Croperdy · Culworth · Grafton Regis · Alderton · Sulgrave · Wappenham · Whittlebury · Whittlebury Forest · Potterspury · Chalcombe · Middleton Cheney · Greatworth · Helmedon · Warkworth · BANBURY · Thenford · Radſton · Biddleſton · Lillingſton · Wicken · Farthingho · Newbottle · Hinton · Turweſton · BRACKLEY · Adderbury · Aynho · Thornton · Croughton · Evenley · Tyfield · Evdon · Chipping Warden · Sulgrave · Chalcombe · Middleton Cheney · Warkworth · Thenford · Radſton · Biddleſton · Newbottle · Hinton · Turweſton · BRACKLEY · Adderbury · Aynho · Thornton · Croughton · Evenley

1 Longitude West 5 5 from London 5 0

LINCOLN SHIRE

MARKET DEEPING

RUTLAND SHIRE

ISLE of ELY

NORTHAMPTON SHIRE

HUNTINGDON SHIRE

BEDFORD SHIRE

HERTFORD SHIRE

Crowland
West Deeping
James Deeping
Tallington
Uffington
STAMFORD
Maxey
Northborough
Market Deeping
Newton
Bainton
Etton
Waldram Hall
Burghley Park
Pilsgate
Barnoak
Helpston
Glinton
Ketton
Easton
Ufford
Woodcroft
Colly Weston
Wittering
WITTERING HEATH
Southorp
Werrington Chap.
Gunthorpe
Helpston Heath
Marham
Walton
Paston
Tickfover
Duddington
Thornhaugh
Barrowden
Chap
Upton
UPPINGHAM
Wakerly
Wandsford
Ailsworth
Milton Park
PETERBOROUGH
Longthorpe
Seaton
Stibbington
Sutton
Castor
KINGSCLIFF
Harringworth
Laxton
Yadwell
Water Newton
Durobrivæ
Woodstone
Overton Longville
Allwalton
Overton Waterville
Blatherwick
Nassington
Apethorpe
Wood Newton
Chesterton
Elton
Sheepwalk
Caldecot
Grotton
Bulwick
Deans
Fotheringhay
Castle
Wellond River
Deanthorpe
ROCKINGHAM
Southwick
Cotterstock
Tansor
Papley
Warmington
Ruins of Ogerstone
Packs Lodge
Washingley House
Corby
WELDON Magna
Glapthorn
Overthorpe
Biggin
Benefield
OUNDLE
Chap
Ashton
Polbrook
Armston
Lutton
Hemington
Stanion
Oakley Magna
Oakley Parva
Brigstock
Lyveden Old
Lyveden New Buildings
Pilton
Wadenhoe
Lilford
Achurch
Aldwinkle St Peter's
Aldwinkle All Saints
Thrapston
Titchmarsh
Titchmarsh Lodge
Clapton
Winwick
Geddington
Sudborough
Luffwick
Drayton
Warkton
Grafton Underwood
Slipton
Islip
Twywell
Cranford St Andrews
St John's
Woodford
Denford
Ringstead
Bythorn
Keyston
Broughton
Pytchley
Burton Latimer
Addington Magna
Addington Parva
Isham
Orlingbury
Thingdon
Raunds
Stanwick
Hannington
Harrowden Parva
Harrowden Magna
Irthlingboro
Hardwick
Covington
Hargrave
Bidwell Spring
Chelston cum Caldecot
HIGHAM FERRERS
WELLINGBOROUGH
Meers Ashby
Wilby
Irchester
Knuston
Rushden
Yeildon
Newton Bromshold
Great Doddington
Earls Barton
Ecton
Wellaston
Wilmington
Irchester Nom.
Higham Park
Knotting Gate
Knotting
Finedish
Puddington
Strixton
Grendon
Cogenhoe
Whiston
Bozeat
Denton
Yardley
Yardley Wood
Shire Lane
From Yardley
to London through Newport Pagnel

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS

1. Nafaburgh
2. Willowbrook
3. Corby
4. Polbrook
5. Rothwell
6. Huxlow
7. Navisford
8. Guilesburough
9. Orlingbury
10. Faufley
11. Nobottle
12. Spolho
13. Hamfordſhow
14. Higham Ferrers
15. Chipping Warden
16. Greens Norton
17. Towceſter
18. Wimerſley
19. King Sutton
20. Cleley

Statute Miles 69¼ to a Degree of Latitude.

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

C

WE come no
the iſland,
name of Northan
I ſhall not attempt
theſe people ſprea trifling to derive t
I ſhall, agreeable t

NO

THE count
apendon-r monly called N
heart of England gradually narrow eaſt ſide is Bedfo ſouth Bucks and ſhire, on the nor ſhires, are divid
the Welland. T lingſtreet, runs t to Doubridge, a writers Anſona, part. It is a p
with the ſeats o churches, ſo that in others near th to view. The corn and paſtur on the further however as oth and as it were in ſir Thomas M
" tame and ea
" greedy and
" and depopul
On the ſouth
mentioned; riſe throw out ple
Fern bed, form nufacture, and wealth by its who were lor
from them it
ceſſively in rig
der of Lovell
Stanleys. Th

[a] See Chron. S
[c] Vit. Agr. c.

CORITANI.

WE come now to the CORITANI, who lay a great way further inland than the Iceni in the heart of the iſland, and ſpread themſelves to the German ocean in thoſe parts, at preſent known by the name of Northamptonſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Rutlandſhire, Lincolnſhire, Nottinghamſhire, and Derbyſhire. I ſhall not attempt to account for their name, leſt I ſhould ſeem to take uncertainties for granted. For though theſe people ſpread themſelves far and wide, which is the meaning of Gur Tani in Britain, it would ſeem trifling to derive their name from their circumſtances. Others may be more happy in their conjectures. I ſhall, agreeable to my deſign, ſurvey each of the aforementioned counties in their order.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

THE county of Northampton, Saxon Noꝛþ-aꝛendon-ꝛcyꝛe[a] and Northantonſhire,[b], commonly called Northamptonſhire, ſituate in the very heart of England, is broadeſt to the ſouth-eaſt, and gradually narrows towards the north-weſt. On the eaſt ſide is Bedfordſhire and Huntingdonſhire, on the ſouth Bucks and Oxfordſhire, on the weſt Warwickſhire, on the north Leiceſter, Rutland, and Lincoln ſhires, are divided from it by the leſſer Avon and the Welland. The Roman military way called Watlingſtreet, runs through the eaſt part from the Ouſe to Doubridge, and the river Nen, called by ſome writers Anſona, gently divides the middle and eaſt part. It is a plain, well-peopled county, adorned with the ſeats of the nobility, and full of towns and churches, ſo that in many places no leſs than twenty, and in others near thirty ſpires or towers preſent themſelves to view. The ſoil upon the whole is rich both in corn and paſture lands: but it has few woods except on the further and hither edge. All parts of it however as other counties in England are covered and as it were beſet with ſheep, which, as Hythodæus in ſir Thomas More's Utopia ſays, "uſed to be ſo "tame and eaſily maintained, now are ſaid to be ſo "greedy and ſo untractable, that they eat up men, "and depopulate whole towns, fields, and houſes."

On the ſouthern edge, where the river Ouſe ſo often mentioned; riſes in a gentle hill, where its ſources throw out plenty of water, ſtands Brackley, q. d. Fern bed, formerly conſiderable for its woollen manufacture, and expreſſing its antient extent and wealth by its ruins and its mayor. The Zouches who were lords of the place built a college there; from them it came to the Hollands and Lovells ſucceſſively in right of marriage, but upon the attainder of Lovell t. Henry VII. the king gave it to the Stanleys. The college now in ruins belongs to Magdalen college Oxford, to which it ſerves for a retreat. This place was antiently of no little conſideration for the memory of the infant Rumbald, who, as we read in his life, was ſon of a king, and as ſoon as he was born here uttered certain holy words and profeſſed himſelf a Chriſtian, and as ſoon as he had received baptiſm expired.

Aſtwell. Travelling hence ſix miles northward along a woody road we come firſt to Aſtwell, where T. Billing formerly an eminent chief juſtice of the King's Bench lived; from whom it came by inheritance to the antient family of the Lovells. From thence to Wedon and Wapiham held by the Pinkeney family by barony till H de Pinkney left it by will to king Edward I. This excellent prince was appointed heir by many bad perſons, whereas Tacitus[c] remarks, that a good father would make no prince but a bad one his heir. Immediately from this place we come to TRIPONTIUM, mentioned by Antoninus, but out of its proper place; for I take this to be what we now call Torceſter: and there remain no inconſiderable arguments for my opinion. If Trimontium[d] in Thrace had its name from three mountains, Triturrita[c] in Tuſcany from three towers, Tripolis from three cities; there is no room to doubt that this our Tripontium took its name from three bridges. In this Torceſter you have the Roman prætorian or military way, which ſhews itſelf very conſpicuous in many places between this town and Stoneyſtratford, and is interſected by the three principal ſtreams into which the river divides itſelf, which antiently as now muſt have been neceſſarily united by as many bridges. If you aſk a Briton how his countrymen call three bridges, he will immediately anſwer Tair ponte, and ſome perſons of credit who have given me Roman money found here, uniformly aſſert, that Torceſter is the true name of the place, Wedon. Wapiham. Barony of the Pinkeneys.

TRIPONTIUM. Torceſter.

[a] See Chron. Sax. Gibſon. [b] See Hampſhire, at Southampton.
[c] Vit. Agr. c. 43. [d] Ptol. Plin. IV. 11.

and think it derived from its towers[f]. Marianus indeed calls it Toveceſter, if the copy of him be not faulty, where we read that A. D. 917, it was ſo well fortified that the Danes could not poſſibly take it, and that Edward the elder afterwards ſurrounded it with a ſtone wall: but after the moſt diligent ſearch I could find no traces of walls. Only a hill remains called Berihill in private gardens covered with cherry trees; and the town itſelf has been ſo ruined by time, that it owes the opinion of its antiquity merely to its ſituation, name, and the Roman coins there. There is nothing remarkable in it but one church, large indeed and handſome, in which Mr. Sponde, formerly its rector, to whom both church and town are ſaid to owe great obligations, lies buried under a beautiful monument. But in the neighbourhood at Elton is a handſome houſe of the knightly family of the Farmers.

Elton.

The river that waters Torceſter in its way from thence to the Ouſe paſſes by Grafton, now a royal honour *, but antiently the ſeat of the family of Widdevil, of which Richard, a perſon of tried valour for marrying Jaquet widow of John duke of Bedford and daughter of Peter of Luxemburgh earl of St. Paul without the king's leave, was fined £.1000 ſterling, by Henry VI.† who afterwards conferred on him the title of baron Widdevil of Rivers. Edward IV. privately married his daughter Elizabeth, being the firſt of our kings ſince the Conqueſt that married a ſubject. By this he drew upon himſelf and his wife's relations a load of misfortunes, as may be ſeen in our hiſtorians. This Richard de Widdevill lord of Rivers, Grafton, and de la Mote, was by his ſon-in-law Edward IV. advanced, to borrow the words of the charter of creation, "to be earl of Ri-" vers by the girding on a ſword to have and to hold " to him and his heirs male with a fief of 20 pounds " by the hands of the ſheriff of Northampton." He was ſoon after‡ appointed conſtable of England with great honour, "to hold, diſcharge, and execute that " office (ſuch are the words of the original patent) " by himſelf or ſufficient deputies, for his life, re-" ceiving yearly £.200 from the Exchequer, with " full power and authority to hear and proceed in " cauſes relating to and concerning high treaſon or " upon occaſion thereof, and to hear and examine " the aforeſaid cauſes and affairs, with all and ſin-" gular the circumſtances thereunto belonging and " thence ariſing, to bring them to due concluſion in " a ſummary plain way without noiſe, or a judicial " manner upon knowledge of the truth and even " with royal authority if requiſite acting for us with-" out appeal[g]." He enjoyed theſe honours but a ſhort time, being defeated at the battle of Edgcote fighting for his ſon-in-law, and ſoon after taken and beheaded.

Grafton.
Widdevil or Wadville.

Earls Rivers.

Conſtable of England.

But though the family became in a manner extinct in his ſons when Anthony earl Rivers was beheaded by Richard III. and Richard and his other brothers died without iſſue, his daughters produced ſeveral noble families. For from them iſſued the royal family of England, the marquiſes of Dorſet, earls of Eſſex, Arundel, Worceſter and Derby, and barons Strafford.

Behind Grafton lies Sacy foreſt, appropriated to hunting. The country more to the eaſt is thick ſet with villages, amongſt which the principal are Bliſworth the ſeat of the Wakes, who ſprung from the illuſtrious family of the barons Wake and Eſtoteville; Pateſhull, which formerly gave name to a famous family Greenes Norton, ſo called from the Greens conſiderable for their wealth in the laſt age; being called before, if I miſtake not, Norton Dany[h], "held " in chief of the king by the ſervice of lifting up " the right hand towards the king yearly on Chriſt-" mas day wherever he was in England[i]." Wardon hundred, which had for its lords the deſcendants of Guidon de Reinbudcourt, a Norman, whoſe eſtate came by the Folliots to Guiſcard Leddet, whoſe daughter Chriſtiana had ſeveral children by Henry de Braibrook her huſband, and the eldeſt Guiſcard aſſumed his mother's name Leddet; but this large eſtate was ſoon after divided by females between the brothers William and John Latimir of Corby. From the latter the Griphins in this county, from the former the Latimers antient barons in Yorkſhire derived themſelves.

Higher up to the north riſes the river Aufona (Avon being the general Britiſh name of all rivers) called by the inhabitants Nen, and after many windings by the return of its banks runs from the weſt in ſome ſort through the middle of this county to which it is of infinite advantage. A noble river, and, if I am right in my conjectures, formerly fortified with Roman garriſons. For the hither part of Britain having ſubmitted to the Romans under Claudius, ſo that its inhabitants were called allies of the Romans, and the remoter Britains continually making furious inroads into it, and theſe allies more eaſily bearing the Roman yoke than the Roman oppreſſion ſuddenly conſpired with the remoter ones. "P. " Oſtorius (ſays Tacitus[k]) ſet himſelf to reduce " them having hemmed them in between the rivers " Antona" (I would read Aufona if I might take ſuch liberty) " and Severn;" i. e. if I underſtand my author right, he reſolved to build forts[l] along theſe rivers, to curb the remote Britons as well as the provincials, that they might not ſupport each other againſt the Romans. What river this Antona was nobody has told us; Lipſius the ſun of our age has diſpelled this darkneſs, or I myſelf am in a cloud. He directs us to Northampton, and I ſuppoſe Antona crept into Tacitus inſtead of Aufona, on which Northampton ſtands. For near it is the centre or heart of England, where from one hill ariſe three rivers running different ways, the Cherwell ſouth, the Leame (ſoon after received by another, Aufona making towards the Severn) weſt, and this eaſt. Of theſe the two Avons ſo croſs and divide the iſland that a perſon coming from the north muſt croſs one of them. Therefore when Oſtorius fortified the Severn and theſe Avons, the Romans and their allies had nothing to apprehend from Wales and the north parts of Britain, having at this time reduced the part of

* 23 H. VIII. c. 38. † Pat. 27 H. VI. ‡ 7 E. I.

[f] Some will have the name of the river that runs by it to be Tove. Camden. So Bridges. Drayton (ſong 23) calls it Tea, H. and the town Towceſter.

[g] Moreover about that time he was made lord treaſurer of England. Holland.

[h] Davy. Bridges, 238.

[i] Inq. 44 E. III. another MS. puts this ſervice under Aſhby. Gibſon ſays, I do not find it under either in Blount.

[k] Ann. XII. 31.

[l] cinctos caſtris χαρακι for camps were placed ad characa introrſum, the χαραξ or vallum was drawn from the Antona to the Severn; περιτειχισμος χαραξ are the ſame, and uſed ſynonymouſly in the N. Teſtament. See Grotius in loc. MS. n. G.

the

the iſland neareſt theſe rivers into a province, as Tacitus elſewhere relates [m].

Of theſe fortifications of Oſtorius ſeem to be thoſe great forts and military entrenchments ſeen hereabouts at Gildſborough and Dantrey between the ſources of the two Avons which run different ways, and where lay the only paſſage into the hither part of Britain unintercepted by rivers. That at Gildſborough is large and ſpacious, but this at Dantrey bigger and more extenſive, of a ſquare form on a high hill commanding a moſt extenſive proſpect of the country below, having on the eaſt a keep [a] called Spelwell, and incloſing near 200 acres within its banks. In this area the country people frequently find coins of Roman emperors, proofs of its antiquity. They are miſtaken therefore who ſuppoſe it a Daniſh work, and that it gave name to the town of Dantrey below, now noted for its inns, having antiently a houſe of Auſtin friars, ſaid to have been founded by H. de Faweſley.

To return to the ſources of the Avon. On them ſtands Cateſby, which gave name to an antient family, but of infamous memory for the moſt atrocious, black, and unheard-of deed, which Robert Cateſby of Aſheby St. Leger, the diſgrace of the family, animated by deſperate wickedneſs and horrid cruelty, conſpiring the ruin of his country and ſovereign under the ſpecious colour of religion, lately deviſed. Of this let fame be ſilent, leſt the relation of it expoſe the ſhame of our time to after-ages, which we cannot think of without horror, ſince even mute and inanimate things ſeem affected at ſuch a great and atrocious crime. Near it is Fawſley, where long lived the Knightleys, a famous knightly family, deſcended from the older family of that name of Gnowſhall in Staffordſhire. More to the eaſt on the Avon now reduced to a ſmall ſtream, is Wedon on the Roman way, the palace of Wolpher king of Mercia, converted into a monaſtery by his daughter Werburg, a holy virgin, whoſe miraculous power in driving away geeſe from hence has been the theme of credulous writers. I ſhould think myſelf running counter to truth itſelf, though I was once of a different opinion, if I did not allow this to be the BANAVENNA, BENNAVENNA, and BENNAVENTA of Antoninus's Itinerary, where it is once written corruptly Iſannaventa [o], though there are no exact traces of the name remaining in the wreck and changes of time. The diſtance from the neighbouring ſtations and manſions agrees, and in the name itſelf Bennavenna obſcurely points out the name of the river Aufona, whoſe ſource is near it. The military way runs hence due north, its ridge frequently loſt and worn down, but particularly over againſt the little village of Creke, where it was obliged to be joined by a bridge, but in other parts with a bold ridge, to Dowbridge by Lilborne.

A little more north we ſee Althorp, the houſe of the famous and knightly family of the Spenſers, allied to many of the moſt famous families, and of which the fifth knight in uninterrupted ſucceſſion, Robert, an excellent encourager of virtue and learning, was by our moſt ſerene prince James advanced to the title and honour of baron Spenſer of Wormleighton. Near it is that unparalleled pattern of magnificent building Holdenby houſe, built on an eſtate inherited from his great grandfather by another heireſs of the antient family of the Holdenbies by ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, privy counſellor to queen Elizabeth, high chancellor of England, and knight of the garter, for the greateſt and laſt monument of his youth, as he afterwards uſed to call it. He was a man (I ſpeak inconteſtable truth) of ſingular piety to God, fidelity to the ſtate, uncorrupted integrity and extenſive munificence in charitable donations, and (which is not the leaſt part of his praiſe) gave the kindeſt encouragement to learning. As he lived piouſly ſo he fell aſleep piouſly in Chriſt 1591. His praiſe will live in the annals of literature better immortalized than by the ſplendid monument worthy ſo great a man erected at a great expence in St. Paul's church, London, by his adopted [p] ſon ſir William Hatton.

The Avon advances with a gentle ſtream a little way below this, and ſoon after receives an increaſe from a little river from the north, where at their conflux ſtands a town, called from the river Northafandon, by contraction Northamton, ſurrounded on the weſt by one river, on the north by the other. I lately was too eaſily led to think that this was the antient BENAVENTA, but the acknowledgement of my miſtake is the beſt atonement for it. Its name may be derived from its ſituation on the north bank of the Aufona. The town itſelf ſeems to have been built entirely of ſtone, has handſome buildings, is large and ſurrounded by walls, from which one has a proſpect of a ſpacious plain every way. On the weſt it has an old caſtle, whoſe age is its glory, built by Simon de St. Liz, commonly called Senliz, firſt earl of Northamton of that name, who alſo erected near it a beautiful church, dedicated to St. Andrew, for his burying-place, and is ſaid to have rebuilt the town; his ſon Simon, the younger, built the nunnery de Pratis, commonly called De la pre, out of the town*. In the Saxon Heptarchy it ſeems to have lain in ruins, nor is it any where mentioned by hiſtorians in the Daniſh ravages, except when Swain the Dane committed the moſt horrid cruelties in his ungoverned rage and paſſion all over the kingdom. Then according to Henry of Huntingdon [q] it was burnt down. In the time of Edward the Confeſſor here were, as appears from Domeſday [r], "60 burgeſſes in "the king's demeſne, having as many houſes; of "theſe in the time of the Conqueror 14 were waſte, "and 47 remained: beſides theſe there were in the "new town 40 burgeſſes in king William's de-"meſne." After the Norman conqueſt it bravely held out againſt the barons, when they laid every place waſte with fire and ſword to revenge their private quarrels with king John, which they took care ſo to diſguiſe under the pretence of religion and the public weal as to ſtyle themſelves "the army of "God and Holy Church." At this time they ſay the neighbouring entrenchment called Hunſhill was thrown up. But it did not withſtand its lawful king Henry III. with the ſame ſucceſs as it had done the rebels. The barons inured to thoſe ſeditious practices ſounding the ſignal of revolt from him here, he eaſily ſtormed the wall, and made himſelf maſter of it. Afterwards, as alſo before, our princes held their parliaments here on account of its ſituation in the heart of England; and A. D. 1460, it was witneſs to

NORTHAMPTON.

The army of God.

* 1075 Regiſter of St. Andrew's abbey.

[m] Vit. Agr. c. 13.

[o] Bannavenna, Bannaventa, Benaventa, falſely Iſannaventa, Iſannavatia, Iſannavaria, Iſannavantia, and Iſanantia. Iſanicum prom. Ireland, Ptol. MS. n. G.

[p] who was his nephew and took his name. Dugd. II. 468.

[q] Hiſt. VI. 207. a.

[r] fol. 219. a.

that fatal battle, in which when England was torn in pieces by rebellion, Richard Nevill earl of Warwick, after killing many of his nobles, carried off the unfortunate king Henry VI. a second time priſoner.

Northamton is placed by our mathematicians in longitude 22° 29′, and in latitude 52° 13′.

Caſtle Aſhby. From hence the Avon haſtens by Caſtle Aſhby where Henry baron Compton began a fine houſe, to which adjoins Yardley Haſtings, named from the Haſtings, formerly earls of Pembroke, to whom it belonged, to the market town of Wellingborough, antiently Wedlingborough, where falls into it from the eaſt a little river paſſing through Ruſhton, and Neuton the ſeat of the Treſhams; Geddinton, where was a royal caſtle, and ſtill remains a croſs in honour of Eleanor conſort of king Edward I. Boughton, the ſeat of the knightly family of Montague; Kettering, a market town of conſiderable reſort, near which is Rouwell, famous for a horſe fair, through Burton, alſo the barony (if I am not miſtaken in the name) of Alan de Dinant *. This barony was given him by Henry I. in this county, on account of his having ſlain the king of France's champion at Gizors in ſingle combat. Harrowden, whoſe lord Nicholas Vaux, governor of Guiſnes in Picardy, was created a baron by king Henry VIII.

Yardley Haſtings.
Wellingboro'.
Ruſhton.
Newton.
Geddinton.
Boughton.
Kettering.
Rouwell.
Burton.
Harrowden.
Lords Vaux.

Higham Ferrers. From hence the Avon comes to Higham, a town formerly belonging to the Ferrers, from whom it had the name of Higham Ferrers, and who had their caſtle here, whoſe ruins are to be ſeen near the church [s]. But the greateſt ornament of this place was Henry Chichely, archbiſhop of Canterbury †, who built here a beautiful college, in which he placed ſecular clergy and prebendaries, and at the ſame time erected an hoſpital for poor. From thence it paſſes to Addington, formerly the ſeat of the Veres, and Thorpſton, commonly called Thrapſton [t], and overagainſt it Draiton, in the laſt age the ſeat of Henry Green; afterwards it came by his daughter to John and Edward Stafford earls of Wiltſhire, and now belongs to baron Mordaunt, who inherited it from the Greens, a noble and famous family in theſe parts.

Addington.
Thrapſton.
Draiton.

Oundale. Avon next ſurrounds the neat little town of Oundall, to which it gives name, being ſo called, by corruption, from Avaundale, where nothing is to be ſeen but a very handſome church and ſchool for youth, with an hoſpital formerly founded by W. Laxton mayor of London. Near this is the little caſtle of Barnwell, now fitted up with new buildings by Edward de Montacute, a famous knight, deſcended as appears by his arms from the antient family of Montacutes. It was formerly the eſtate of Berengar le Moine or Monk, not as ſome ſay of Berengar of Tours, whoſe opinion about the Euchariſt was formerly examined and condemned by a council [u]. Afterwards it approaches Fotheringhay caſtle, ſurrounded by moſt pleaſant meads, which in the reign of Henry III. when the many ſtrong holds encouraged the nobility to rebel, was ſurprized by William earl of Albemarle, who laid waſte the ſurrounding country, as M. Paris informs us [x]. At this time it ſeems to have belonged to the earls of Huntingdon [y]. A long while afterwards Edward III. gave it as an inheritance or appenage as it was called, to Edmund of Langley his ſon duke of York, who rebuilt the caſtle and the higheſt fortification, commonly called in caſtles the Keepe, in form of a fetter lock [z], the device of the houſe of York. Edward duke of York his ſon 2 Henry V. and A. D. 1415, as appears by certain barbarous verſes inſcribed therein, built the beautiful collegiate church, in which he was buried, being ſlain in the battle of Agincourt, as alſo Richard duke of York, his brother's ſon, ſlain at Wakefield, and his wife Cecily Nevill, who all had magnificent monuments there; which being deſtroyed, together with the eaſtern part of the church [a], queen Elizabeth cauſed two monuments to be erected to their memory in the lower remaining part of the church. But ſuch was the avarice of the perſons that had the care of them, that they are thought by no means worthy ſuch princes, ſons of kings and progenitors of kings of England. The ſaid Cecily in the courſe of a few years experienced all the ſports that impotent fortune (if I may be allowed the expreſſion) makes with the misfortunes of the powerful. She ſaw her huſband Richard when he had the crown in full proſpect ſlain with his ſon earl of Rutland in a bloody battle, and a few years after her eldeſt ſon Edward IV. advanced to the royal dignity, and ſnatched away by untimely death, having firſt taken off his brother George duke of Clarence. Afterwards her other ſon Richard aſpiring to the ſovereignty by the barbarous murder of his nephews and the infamy of his mother, whom he publickly charged with incontinence, and when poſſeſſed of the ſceptre, preſently killed in battle. In ſuch a cloſe connection were all her misfortunes, that each day roſe more calamitous than the preceding. What happened here to another powerful princeſs Mary queen of Scots, I had rather bury in ſilence than relate. Let oblivion cover it if it can; if not, at leaſt let it be paſſed by in ſilence. There are always under the beſt princes thoſe who being once veſted with authority know how by ſpecious artifice to cover their own private deſigns under the ſacred name of religion; as well as thoſe who have a ſincere and hearty regard for religion, the ſafety of the prince and the welfare of the ſubject, which is the ſupreme law. Nor is it to be denied that the beſt of princes, like pilots, are frequently hurried away in ſtormy times againſt their will. Their conduct muſt be left to God, who alone has power over kings.

Fotheringhay.

Cecily of York.

King III.

The Avon now approaching Huntingdonſhire, runs under a beautiful bridge at Walmesford, and ſo by the very antient city of DUROBRIVÆ, called by the Saxons Dormanceſter, as I before obſerved, and occupying both ſides of the river in each county. For the little village of Caſter, a mile diſtant from the river, ſeems to have been part of it by the teſſelated pavements found there, though this more modern inſcription is to be ſeen on the church wall.

XV KL. MAII DEDICATIO HV
IVS ECCLESIAE MCXXIIII.

q. d. "This church was dedicated 15 kl. May "1124." And it was certainly a very conſiderable place; for in the neighbouring fields called Normanton for Dormanton fields, are found ſuch quantities of Roman coins, that one would think they had been ſown there, and two military ways, with very conſpicuous ridges, led from hence, one called Forty foot way, from being 40 feet in breadth to Stanford;

* Book of Inquiſitions in the Exchequer.

† Mat. Parker.

[a] It belonged firſt to the Peverells, and then to the Ferrars. Holland.

[s] belonging alſo to the Veres. Holland.

[t] P. 310. A. D. 1221.

[u] The council of Verceil, A. D. 1050. (Hoffm. Lex.) by 113 biſhops. Holland.

[x] which both of itſelf and with a falcon in it was his device or empreſe, as implying that he was locked up from all great hope as a younger brother. Holland.

[y] who were of the royal race of Scotland.

[z] in Edward VI's time. Holland.

the

the other called Longditch and Highſtreet by Lolham bridges, a very old bridge of eleven arches, now decaying with age, through Weſt Deeping into Lincolnſhire. At the firſt diviſion of theſe roads ſtands Upton, on higher ground, whence its name, where ſir Robert Wingfield deſcended from the antient family of the Wingfelds that has produced ſo many illuſtrious knights has a beautiful houſe with lovely walks. From Durobrivae the Aufona or Nen runs to the little city of Peterborough in a corner of this county, where hiſtorians tell us was in the river a whirlpool of immenſe depth, called Medeſwell, and by the ſide of it a town from thence called Medeſwellhampſted and Medeſhamſted, which as I find in Robert de Swapham[b] "was built on an excellent ſpot, "ſurrounded on one hand with a fen and the fineſt "water, and on the other with woods, meads, and "many paſtures, every way beautiful and acceſſible "by land except on the eaſt ſide. The river Nen "flows by the ſouth ſide of Burgh. In the middle "of this river in a place ſo deep that in ſummer-"time no ſwimmer can get to the bottom of it, nor "is it ever frozen over in winter. For there is a "ſpring whence the water bubbles up. The an-"tients called this place Medeſwell," till Wolpher king of Mercia, dedicated a monaſtery there to St. Peter: and as the place was marſhy, "he laid (as "Robert goes on) prodigious ſtones in the founda-"tions, ſuch as eight yoke of oxen could ſcarce "draw one, which I ſaw when the monaſtery was "deſtroyed." It afterwards came to be called Petriburgus, Petropolis, Peterborow, and Burgh, and the monaſtery there became very famous. Its riſe and foundation I have thought proper to recite in brief from Robert de Swapham aforeſaid, a very antient author. Peada, ſon of Penda, the firſt Chriſtian king of Mercia, laid the foundations of a monaſtery at Medeſhamſted in the country of the Girvii, but being taken off by the wicked contrivances of his wife left it unfiniſhed. Peada was ſucceeded by his brother Wolpher, who, being extremely averſe to Chriſtianity, barbarouſly murdered his ſons Wolphald and Rufinus for their attachment to it[c]: but himſelf a few years after embracing Chriſtianity, to make ſome atonement for this his impiety by ſome act of devotion, ſet about finiſhing the monaſtery which his brother had begun, which by the aſſiſtance of his brother Ethelred, and his ſiſters Kineburga and Kineſwitha, he completed A. D. 633, and dedicated to St. Peter (whence the place got the name of Peterboro') endowed it with large revenues, and appointed Sexwulfus a religious man and chief adviſer of the work, firſt abbot thereof. This monaſtery afterwards flouriſhed in great renown for ſanctity about 214 years, till that terrible devaſtation of the Danes, when the monks were maſſacred, and the monaſtery burnt, and lay whelmed in its ruins near 109 years[d]. At length about A. D. 960, Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, who was indefatigable in promoting monkery, began to reſtore it by the eſpecial aid of king Eadgar and Adulph the king's chancellor, who by way of atonement for having with his wife in their ſleep overlaid their only ſon, gave all his wealth to rebuild this monaſtery, bid adieu to the world, and was made abbot of the new houſe[e]. It was now famous for its great revenues and many privileges, though in the reign of William the Conqueror Herward, an Engliſh outlaw, made an inroad from the iſle of Ely, and plundered the great treaſures, againſt whom abbot Turold erected a caſtle called Mont Turold[f]. It was, however, reckoned very rich in the laſt age. For then Henry VIII. drove out the monks from all places, alledging that they had departed from the courſe and practice of thoſe holy men the antient monks, and waſted in luxury the goods of the church which were the property of the poor, and appointed a biſhop to preſide over this county, and the neighbouring one of Rutland, with a dean and prebendaries. Thus from a monaſtery it became a cathedral church, which, if you regard the ſtructure, is venerable for its antiquity, its weſt front majeſtic, its cloiſters ſpacious, in the painted windows of which is repreſented the hiſtory of the founder Wolpher, with the ſucceſſion of the abbots: a large and coſtly chapel of the Virgin Mary, and a beautiful choir, in which two unhappy queens, Catharine of Spain, and Mary of Scotland, were buried, and found reſt from their troubles. Mont Turold.

Below Peterborough the Aufona or Nen having now proceeded about 45 miles from its ſource, and carrying with it all the leſſer ſtreams and land-floods, takes various courſes. But not finding a way, overflows the plain country far and wide with its winter floods, ſo that it ſeems one vaſt plain of water with a few iſlands appearing above it. The cauſe of this, according to the inhabitants, is that of the three channels which bring down ſuch a quantity of water, the firſt leading to the ſea by Thorney abbey, and then ſeparately by Clowſcroſs and Crowland, the other through the drain made by Morton biſhop of Ely, called the New Leame and Wisbich, have been long neglected; and the third, which goes down by Horſey bridge, Wittleſmere, Ramſeymeer, and Salters load, is unable to contain ſuch a body of water, which therefore forces itſelf with greater violence on the adjacent country. The people complain heavily of the miſconduct of thoſe who neglect to clear the channels, and of thoſe who draw off the water for private uſe, and, with the people of Reate in Tacitus[g], ſay "that nature has admirably contrived matters for the advantage of mankind by eſtabliſhing the banks, courſes, and ſources of rivers, as well as their termination." But of this enough and too much. The Fens.

Hereabouts the county narrows, the Aufona and Welland another river bounding it to the north, being ſcarce five miles aſunder. On the Welland, called by Ethelward[h] an antient writer Weolod, near its ſource, is Braybrok, a caſtle built by Robert May alias de Braybrok, a great favourite of king John, whoſe ſon Henry marrying Chriſtiana Ledet, a rich heireſs, his eldeſt ſon took the name of Leder, from one of whoſe ſon's nieces, as I before obſerved, it came to the Latimers, and by them to the Griphins, to whom it now belongs. Near it among the woods I ſaw the ſmall remains of a monaſtery, formerly called De Diviſis, now Pippwell, built for Ciſtertians by William Buttevillein, t. Henry II. Next one ſees Rockingham, once a caſtle of the earls of Albemarle, built by William the Conqueror, at which time it was "waſte," as appears by his ſurvey[i]. It was fortified with ramparts, bulwarks, and a double row of battlements, and ſtands on a hill in a thick foreſt from it called Rock-

Braybrok.
Lords of Braybrok.
Pipewell.
Rockingham.

[b] Theſe paſſages are found in Hugh White's Hiſtory of Peterborough abbey, publiſhed by Mr. Sparke 1725, p. 2, 3.
[c] This part of the ſtory is not in White. [d] Ib. p. 14. [e] Ib. 18, 19. [f] Ib. 48, 49.
[g] Ann. I. 79. [h] P. 847. Edit. Franc. 1601.
[i] "Waſta erat quando rex W. juſſit ibi caſtellum fieri." Domeſd. fol. 220. a.

Heringworth. ingham foreſt. Afterwards the river runs by Heringworth formerly the ſeat of the Cantelupes, now of the barons Zouch, deſcended from Eudo younger ſon of Alan de la Zouch of Aſhby, and riſen to a conſiderable family of barons, who owe much of their honor to a match with one of the heireſſes of Cantelupe, and another of the baron St. Maur, who alſo derives his deſcent from the heireſs of lord Zouch of Aſhby, and the Lovels lords of Caſtle Cary, in the county of Somerſet. In this foreſt I likewiſe ſaw Deane, antiently memorable for being the reſidence of the Deanes, afterwards of the Tindals, now the elegant ſeat of the Brudenels, of whom ſir Edmund Brudenell, knight, lately deceaſed, was a great admirer and encourager of venerable antiquity. The family of Engayne alſo of antient and honourable rank was ſettled here at Blatherwic (where now live the Staffords of knightly rank deſcended from Radulphus firſt earl of Stafford), and turned their caſtle called Hymell into a monaſtery named Finiſheved. Their male line failed 200 years ago, but the eldeſt daughter marrried John Goldington, the ſecond Laurence Pabenham, and the third William Bernak, all illuſtrious knights. Here is alſo Apthorp the ſeat of Anthony Mildmay a famous knight, whoſe father Walter Mildmay, lately privy councellor to queen Elizabeth, juſtly deſerved to be ranked among the excellent men of this age for his valour, prudence, piety, and munificence to the republic of letters in founding Emanuel college at Cambridge. Near this is Thornhaugh, formerly belonging to the family of St. Medard, now to the right honourable William Ruſſel ſon of Francis earl of Bedford of the ſame family, whom king James for his virtues and faithful ſervices when viceroy of Ireland advanced to the rank of baron Ruſſel of Thornhaugh. Nor muſt we forget the little town of Welledon, formerly accounted a barony which by Matilda daughter and heireſs of Geofrey de Ridell, who was drowned with the ſon of king Henry I. deſcended to Richard Baſſet ſon of Ralph Baſſet juſtice of England, in whoſe line it continued to the time of Henry IV. and then by failure of iſſue male went by females to the Knevetts and Ailsburys.

Barons Zouch. Deane. Barons of Engayne. Blatherwic. Hymell caſtle. Finiſheved. Apthorp. Thornhaugh. Welledon. Baſſets of Welledon.

Colliweſton. From Heringworth the Welland proceeds to Colliweſton, where Margaret of Richmond, mother of king Henry VII. built a handſome and elegant houſe. Below this place are dug great quantities of ſlates uſed by all the neighbourhood for building. Wittering heath runs from hence a long way eaſt, on which the inhabitants ſay the Danes were formerly defeated in a famous battle. The Welland now approaches Burghley a beautiful houſe, which lately by favour of queen Elizabeth gave title of baron to the experienced and right honourable William Cecil, the great pillar of Britain, high treaſurer of England; and received luſtre from his virtues, as well as additional magnificence from the buildings he erected there, and the park (a word uſed by Varro [k]) for deer incloſed with a ſtone wall of great extent. Below this at Bernak are the quarries from which the monaſteries of Peterborough and Ramſey were built. The hiſtory of Ramſey ſays [l], "the quarries are frequently worked, and there always remains ſtone enough for future working." And we read in a charter of Edward the Confeſſor [m]: "For 4000 eels in Lent the brethren at Ramſey ſhall have out of St. Peter's lands as much hewn ſtone from Bernak and ſtone for walls from Burch as they want." Below Berneck that high Roman road called by the neighbourhood from its breadth 40 foot way, leading from Caſter to Stanford, divides the county here, and rears a high ridge particularly in the little wood of Berneck, where it has a watch tower on the ridge, and runs a great way under Burghley park wall.

Slates. Burghley. Bernak. Forty foot way.

A few miles hence the Welland running by Maxey caſtle, once belonging to the barons Wake; and Peagkirke, where in the infancy of the Engliſh church Pega a holy woman, who gave name to the place, and was ſiſter of St. Guthlac, exhibited to the holy virgins an example of piety and chaſtity in her life and converſation [n], comes to the fens before-mentioned. The bank being neglected on its ſouth ſide, it overflows the adjoining fields, to the great damage of the proprietors, breaking out of its proper channel, which led before through Spalding, and entering the Nen or Aufona, which it greatly overloads.

Maxey Peagkirke

The leſſer Avon, the other boundary of this county to the north, as I before obſerved, though it ſerves as a boundary for only five miles, riſing near the ſources of the Welland, runs by Stanford called upon Avon, the reſidence of the family of the Caves, from which deſcended an illuſtrious and numerous lineage in the neighbouring county; and Lilborne, antiently belonging to the Canvilles. The ſituation of this place on the Roman road, the antient ramparts, and the conical hill, near which ſome people digging in hopes of treaſure found only coals, ſeem to imply that it was a Roman ſtation. The river here running under Dowbridge leaves Northamptonſhire and enters Warwickſhire.

Stanford The family of Caves Lilborne

From the aforementioned coals may I be allowed to conjecture this hill was thrown up for a boundary: as Siculus Flaccus tells us aſhes, or coals, or potſhards, or broken glaſs, or burnt bones, or chalk, or plaiſter, uſed to be put under boundary marks; and St. Auſtin [o] writes of coals, "Is it not extraordinary that materials ſo weak that the ſmalleſt blow will break them, and the leaſt preſſure cruſh them, ſhould be proof againſt the greateſt length of time; ſo that the makers of boundaries lay them under their marks to confute any future claimant that may ariſe at ever ſo great a diſtance of time, and ſay the boundary has been altered." And I the rather incline to this opinion, as the writers on boundaries ſay little hillocks of earth called Botontines [p] were placed on bounds; ſo that I am apt to think moſt of the tumuli and round hillocks we ſee ſcattered up and down the country were raiſed for this purpoſe, and that aſhes, coals, potſherds, &c. would be found under them if they were ſearched.

Antient boundaries

The firſt earl of this county that I know of was Waldeof ſon of the warlike Siward, who was alſo earl of Huntingdon [q], and loſt his head for treaſon againſt William the Conqueror, leaving only two daughters, whom he had by Judith, the Conqueror's own ſiſter's daughter*. Matilda the eldeſt was married to Simon de St. Liz or Sylvanect, by her mother Judith, whom he had before courted, and who rejected him with ſcorn becauſe he was lame. He built the church of St. Andrew and the caſtle at Northampton; and was ſucceeded by his ſon Simon

Earls of Huntingdon

* Life of Waldeof.

[k] Colum. IX. 1. has Vivarium ferarum.
[l] Ib. c. 113. p. 456.
[m] Hence perhaps our word Buttings. See Du Cange.
[n] See before, earls of Huntingdon.
[o] Ingulphus.
[p] III. c. 112. p. 455. Ed. Gale.
[q] De Civ. Dei, 21. c. 4.

the ſecond, who had a long ſuit for his mother's eſtate with David king of Scots, her ſecond huſband, and following the intereſts of king Stephen, departed this life, A. D. 1152, with this character, that he was "a young man guilty of every irregularity and impropriety." His ſon Simon III. ſpent his eſtate in the ſuit and trial about the earldom of Huntingdon againſt the Scots, and by favour of king Henry II. married the daughter and heireſs of Gilbert de Gaut, earl of Lincoln, and afterwards recovering the earldom of Huntingdon, and diſpoſſeſſing the Scots, died without children, A. D. 1185. Many years after Edward III. created William de Bohun, a man of tried valour, earl of Northampton; his elder brother Humphrey de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and conſtable of England being unequal to the conſtable's office in that warlike age, he made him alſo conſtable of England. He was ſucceeded in the earldom of Northampton by his ſon Humphry, who, on his uncle's dying without children, ſucceeded to thoſe of Hereford and Eſſex, and had had two daughters, one [Eleanor] married to Thomas of Woodſtock, youngeſt ſon of Edward III. the other [Anne] to Henry of Lancaſter, duke of Hereford, who afterwards obtained the crown. Thomas of Woodſtock's daughter [Anne] conveyed by marriage this title derived from her grandfather to the Staffford family. They being afterwards deprived of their honours [a] Edward VI. advanced that accompliſhed courtier William Par earl of Eſſex to the title of Marquis of Northampton, who died without iſſue in my time. While I was reviſing the work our moſt gracious ſovereign king James advanced Henry Howard brother of the laſt duke of Norfolk, a perſon of the brighteſt parts, moſt fluent eloquence, poſſeſſed of every accompliſhment, of the moſt conſummate prudence and foreſight, to the rank and ſtyle of baron Howard of Marnhill, and to the honour of earl of Northampton at the ſame time. A. D. 1603.

In this county are 326 pariſhes.

[a] upon the execution of the duke of Buckingham by Richard III.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Northampton is of an irregular figure inclining to oval: its greateſt length from the ſouth-weſt corner near Aynhoe, to the north-eaſt boundary at Crowland in the north of Peterborough fen, is 66 miles; its greateſt breadth from Higham park in the eaſt to the oppoſite the weſtern boundary near Dunchurch in Warwickſhire is 32 miles; and its circumference is about 216 miles. It contains 336 pariſhes, and 11 market towns, 550,000 acres and 24,808 houſes[a]. It was larger at the Conqueſt than at preſent; for the north part of Rutlandſhire is reckoned into it in Domeſday[b]. The inhabitants are maintained and employed by agriculture: the cloathing manufacture was once attempted without ſucceſs[c]; but there is at preſent a conſiderable return from Northampton and other towns by ſtockings, and in Kettering and others ſerges and ſhalloons employ many hands[1].

The principal landholders in this county at the making of the Domeſday ſurvey were, beſides the king, the biſhops of Bayeux, Durham, Coutance, and Lincoln; the abbots of Peterborough, Weſtminſter, St. Edmund's Bury, Ramſey, Thorney, Croyland, Coventry, Eveſham, and Greſtaign; the church of Rheims: the earls Mortaign, Mellent, Alan, Albery (de Vere), Hugh: Hugh de Grentmaiſnill, Hugh de Juri (Ivery), Henry de Ferrers, Robert de Todeni, Robert de Statford, Robert D'Oyly, Robert de Veci, Robert de Buci, Ralph Paganel, Ralph d'Limeſi, Robert White, William de Cahaignes, William Peverel, William Fitz Anſculf, William Loveth, Walter Deyncurt, Walter Flandrenſis, Geffrey de Mandeville, Gilbert de Gand, Euſtace de Huntingdon, counteſs Judith, &c.

Charwell r. Cheping Warden.

On the ſouth-weſt ſide of the county runs the river Charwell, on which is Cheping Warden, which by its name ſeems to have had a market. Foundations of antient buildings and Roman coins are frequently ploughed up here. It was the manor of Guy de Reinbacourt, a Norman, who ſettling here gave its name to the hundred, of which he was lord[d]. At the north end of the town is the Wallow, q. d. Wall low or Wall hill, a bank ſuppoſed to have been raiſed by the Romans to ſecure their conqueſt from the northern Britans of Warwickſhire. About a quarter of a mile weſt is Arberry banks, a Dunſmore.

camp of the Saxons or Danes[e]. Dunſmore or Daneſmore, an adjoining valley, is ſuppoſed to take its name feom the Danes, who ravaged theſe parts[f].

Edgecote.

At Edgecote was fought a battle between the houſes of York and Lancaſter 9 Edward IV.[g] when William Herbert earl of Pembroke, who commanded the former with his brother Richard, Richard Widville, earl Rivers, and his brother John were taken and beheaded.

In the ſouth-weſt corner of the county ſtands Ay Aynho, which t. Henry II. William earl of Eſſex granted to Roger Fitz Richard and his heirs in exchange for Cumton. This charter is without date, and concludes thus: "Notum ſit omnibus quod iſtud "eſcambium factum fuit apud Wintoniam ad ſcaccarium "coram domino rege Henrico filio regis H. 2di & ba- "ronibus ſuis: teſtibus, &c. It is inrolled inter Mich. commun. 5 Edward II. rot. 19 a.[h]

In Charleton pariſh is Rainsborough, an oval camp, Ch double trencht, on a hill, the inner bank higheſt. It has two entrances on the ſouth and two on the north ſide, the circumference within a quarter of a mile, without half a mile. In levelling part of the area were found urns, glaſs veſſels and aſhes. A little below to the eaſt is a ſmaller intrenchment. A gold coin of Veſpaſian was ploughed up a little way from this hill[i].

Newbottle, now the ſeat of the earl of Thanet, Ne belonged from the time of Henry III. to the Greys, of whom Richard being much addicted to the ſtudy of chemiſtry, obtained leave of Edward IV. to practiſe the tranſmutation of metals[k]. At Aſtrop, a As hamlet partly in this pariſh and partly in that of King's Sutton, which laſt gives name to the hundred, is a mineral well called St. Rumbold's in much eſteem ſince it was firſt diſcovered by Drs. Willis and Lower[l].

On the Charwell at Chaucomb above Banbury, Ch was a priory of black canons, founded t. Henry II. valued at £.83.[m]

"The town of Brakeley, by eſtimation of old Br "ruins hath had many ſtreets in it, and that large. "It floriſhed in the Saxon times until the Danes "raſid it. It floriſhed again ſyns the Conqueſt, and "was a ſtaple for wool privilegid with a major, "the which honor yet remaineth to this pore town. "Ther was a fair caſtle in the ſouth-weſt end, the "ſite and hill where it ſtood is yet evidently ſeen, "and berith the name of the caſtle hill, but not any "piece of wall ſtanding. There were three goodly "croſſes of ſtone in the toun, one by S. at the end "of the town, thrown down alate by theves that "ſowght for treaſure. Another at the W. end of "St. James's church. The 3d very antique, faire "and coſtly in the inward part of the High ſtreet. "There be divers tabernacles in this with ladies "and men armed. Some ſay the ſtaplears of the town "made it, but I rather think ſome noble man lord "of the town[n]." This croſs 28 feet high, was taken down 1706 to build the handſome town houſe at the expence of the duke of Bridgewater lord of the manor. "There is a churche as a chaple of eaſe "of Seint James in the ſouth end of the town, an "olde peece of worke, and on the ſouth ſyde of the "chaunſell of it is a faire chapell or iſle, and there

[a] Mag. Brit. III. 459.
[b] Moreton, Nat. Hiſt. of Northamptonſhire, p. 2.
[c] Fuller, Worth. 279.
[1] G.
[d] Bridges' Hiſt. of Northamptonſhire, 100. 102.
[e] Moreton, 525-6. Bridges, 111.
[f] Moreton, 541. Bridges, 117.
[g] Bridges, 118.
[h] Madox Hiſt. of the Exchcq. 145. Bridges, 134.
[i] Moreton, 540. Bridges, 190.
[k] Dugd. Bar. I. 712. Bridges, 187.
[l] Bridges, 180. Rutty, 379. Moreton, Phthiſiologia.
[m] Tan. 375. Bridges, 155.
[n] Lel. VII. 10.

"be

"be in the wyndow fydes in ſtone imagis berringe "woll ſakks in theyr hands in token that it was of "the ſtapelers makyng. There is in the midle of the "town a churche of St. James and St. John, ſome "time a college, and an almoſehouſe or hoſpitall. "This was ſuppreſſid and given to Magdalene col-"lege with landes. There ly buryed in tumbes "divers noble men and women in the preſbitery of "this churche: firſt, two noble men in one tumbe, "having on their ſhelds a lion rampant and flures-de-"luce. There ly buried on the ſouth ſyde in the "wall a noble man havynge in a feld of Gules 10 "bezants of gold, and at his feete lyith another "havynge in his ſheld a lion rampant. Ther lyeth "alſo Robart Holand that died in anno Domini 1373; "Mawd his wife lyeth there alſo. There lyeth a no-"bleman and his wyfe; he berith in his ſhelde vaire "gold and Gules." [John lord Lovell died 1408.] "One tolde me that of late day one of the lords "Lovells was taken for foundar there, and that by "his graunte it cam in gift to Magdalen college. "The church of St. Peter being the chief church "of the town and mother church of the whole "deanery of Brakeley is in the eſt ſide of the town. "I ſaw no tumbe or great antiquity in it. In the "church-yard lieth an image of a preeſt reveſted, the "which was vicar of Brakeley, and there buried "quike by the tyranny of a lord of the town for a "diſpleaſure that he toke with him for an horſe taken "as ſome ſay for a mortuary: but the lord as it is "there ſaid went to Rome for abſolution, and took great "repentance [o]." Brackley is divided into New and Old. Edward II. made it a wool ſtaple and a corporation, but it did not ſend members to parliament till after the laſt parliament of Henry VIII. Robert Boſſu, earl of Leiceſter, founded an hoſpital [p] here t. Henry III. confirmed by Sayer de Quineey earl of Wincheſter, whoſe daughter brought the manor to the Zouches, and his daughter to Robert Holand, and his daughter to John lord Lovell. His great grandſon Francis, an inſtrument of Richard III. forfeited it after the battle of Boſworth, when Henry VII. granted it to George lord Strange, eldeſt ſon of lord Stanley. A daughter of Stanley brought it to the Egertons, of whom John, ſon of lord chancellor Elleſmere, was created viſcount Brackley 14 James I. earl of Bridgewater the following year, and marquis of Bridgewater and duke of Bridgewater 6 George I. 1770. Here are both a church and chapel. The hoſpital which conſiſted of two courts, Leland calls a college and hoſpital, of the foundation of the lord Lovel's more truly than of lord Zouch's. It is ruinous, the hall rebuilt, the chapel diſmantled, and of the fine tombs mentioned by Leland, which by the arms belonged to the Zouches, Holands, and Lovels, only two remain, and thoſe diſplaced. Francis lord Lovell gave it to Magdalen college, who leaſe it out. Here was another hoſpital or chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard out of the town, and ſir Thomas Crewe founded an almſhouſe for ſix women [q]. Brakeley market was deſolated in Leland's time [r]. "There be two faire ſprings "or wells a little weſt north-weſt from St. Peter's "church. One is called S. Rumoaldes well, wher they "ſay that within a few days of his birth he preached. "The other is called Welle. There iſſueth a very little "ſtreamlet out of each of them being not the "caſte of a coyt diſtance, and ſtrait come to one "ſtreamlet [s]." On Bayard's green between Brakeley and Mixby was held a famous tournament 1249, and another at Brackley [t].

Stene in this neighbourhood was the ſeat of ſir Reginald Bray, whoſe father for his ſervice to Henry VII. when earl of Richmond, bore a crown in a thorn buſh in memory of his finding Richard III's crown in a buſh at Boſworth, which is alſo repreſented in the hall window here. It came to the Crews of Cheſhire, of whom John was created baron Crewe of Stene by Charles II. and on the death of biſhop Crewe of Durham 1721, it came by reverſion and marriage to Henry duke of Kent, and now belongs to earl Spencer. Lord Crew was poſſeſſed alſo of the manor to which Boſworth belongs [u]. Stene.

At Croughton near Brackley was born 1675, John Friend an eminent phyſician, who died 1728. Croughton.

Aſtwell hall is an old manſion belonging to earl Ferrars by marriage with the heireſs of Lovett (not Lovell as Mr. Camden) who held it t. Henry VII. Thomas Billing the chief juſtice died 1481, and is buried in the pariſh church of Wapenham [x]. Aſtwell.

Wapenham was the barony of the Pinkeneys from the Conqueſt, being mentioned in Domeſday [y] till Henry de Pinkeneys alienated it 29 Edward I. ſurrendering his barony at the ſame time [z]. Wapenham.

At Slapton near Wapenham was born Dr. Francis Gaſtrell biſhop of Cheſter, who died 1725. Slapton.

In the parlour of the rectory houſe at Helmedon is a chimney piece inſcribed with a date which Dr. Wallis [a] makes out to be A. D. M° 133, and thence concludes the uſe of Arabic numeral figures to be earlier among us than is generally ſuppoſed [b]. Helmedon.

At Sulgrave weſt of the church is a caſtle hill, and about a mile north of the town in the road between Banbury and Northampton is an artificial hill called Burough hill 40 feet ſquare on the top [c]. Sulgrave.

At Wedon Pinkney or St. Loys was a Benedictine priory cell to St. Lucian near Beauvais, now belonging to All Souls college, Oxford [d]. In the town is a medicinal ſpring of ſome repute, called St. Loy's well; and the riſing ground on the green before the church retains the name of Caſtle hill. Wedon Pinkney.

Camden and Baxter miſplace TRIPONTIUM at Towceſter. Dr. Gale [e] places it at Dowbridge, where Dr. Stukeley [f] ſays there are indeed no remains, but that antiquities have been found both at Cathorp [g] and Lilburne [h] adjoining, and at the latter place at Caſtle hills are ſome old walls mentioned by Mr. Camden, after whoſe deſcription Mr. Ward [i] inclines to remove it to Rugby in Warwickſhire, called in Domeſday [k] Rocheberry. Salmon [l] puts it at the camp on Edgehill. Leland was told there appeared certain ruins or ditches of a caſtle at Towceſter [m], which muſt be on the Berrymount hill, an artificial on about 24 feet high, on the north-eaſt ſide of the town, at whoſe foot has been found a coin of Gratian [n]. Edward rebuilt the town 921 after it had been ruined by the Danes [o]. The words of the Saxon Annaliſt, TRIPONTIUM. Towceſter.

[a] Lel. VII. 11, 12. [b] Bridges, 143—153. [c] M. Paris, 768. Bridges, 146.
[d] Lel. VII. 13. [e] Ib. 12. [f] fol. 227. a.
[g] Bridges, 196—198. [h] Ib. 213—217.
[i] Bridges, 212. [k] Phil. Tranſ. N° 154, p. 199, and Algebra, p. 7. 12. [l] Bridges, 172.
[m] Bridges, 127. [n] Bridges, 254—258. Tan. 378. [o] P. 99. [p] It. I. 106. [q] Q. Caucot.
[r] Q. Litchboro', near which the new map places a caſtle. [s] Horſl. Brit. Rom. 436. [t] fol. 241.
[u] P. 513. [x] I. 13. [y] Bridges, 272. [z] Sax. Chron. 107.

het zeſapan þa buph æt Toſeceaſtep, ⁊ hie zetymbpian, may as well be underſtood of the caſtle as the town; and next ſummer the Danes aſſaulted the buph a whole day without ſucceſs, ſo that the king found it neceſſary to encamp at Paſſenham till a ſtone wall was built round Towceſter, þa hpile þe mon ponhte þa buph æt Toſe-ceaſtep mid ſtan pealle[p], which more ſtrongly implies the fort than the urbs or civitas, as Gibſon tranſlates it. In 1748 near Towceſter in digging ſtone to repair Watling ſtreet were found many braſs coin of the Lower Empire, pieces of urns, bones, pebbles laid in rows, vaults as of a ſepulchre about four feet under ground, partly of hewn ſtone, partly of pebbles 11 or 20 inches high, full of black mould of an odd ſmell on opening[q].

Mr. William Sponne archdeacon of Norfolk and rector here, gave 29 Henry VI. the Talbot inn here to public uſes of the town, and has in the chantry chapel built by him in the church a tomb with his figure in pontificalibus, a ſkeleton below and an inſcription at his feet[r]. The chantry and its college are now the ſchool and maſter's houſe, the two old gates remaining. Pope Boniface held this rectory at the time of his advancement to the popedom 1294[s].

Whittlebury foreſt.

"Whittlewood, or Whittlebury Foreſt, ſtill continues "wooded for ſeveral miles in length, and of different "extents in breadth, in a moſt deep and clayey "country. Much of the timber is cut in rotation, "but in parts towards the edge of Buckinghamſhire, "are conſiderable quantities of good oak. This "foreſt remained in the crown till the year 1685, "when Henry Fitzroy, firſt duke of Grafton, was ap"pointed hereditary ranger. The preſent duke "hath an elegant houſe called Wakefield Lodge, ori"ginally built by Mr. Claypole ſon-in-law to Oliver "Cromwell, and ranger of the foreſt. This was one "of the five tracts called walks; viz. Wakefield, "Shelbrook, Hazelbury, Shrob, and Hanger. Four"teen townſhips are allowed the right of common "in the open coppices and ridings, from the prin"ciple of juſtice, that ſome reparation might be "made to them for the damages ſuſtained by the "deer. In this great tract here are two lawns, i. e. "ſpots incloſed with pales, for paſture for the deer: "one is Wakefield Lawn, the other Sholbrook Lawn, "which are ſecluded from the foreſt cattle. That "fierce animal the wild cat is ſtill met with in this "foreſt. In the reign of Richard I. the abbot and "convent of Peterborough had a charter for hunting "in this place the hare, the fox, and the wild cat; "which was confirmed to them in 1253, by "Henry III.[t] Shrob lodge near Old Stratford was purchaſed and improved by Thomas Willis, ſon of the phyſician and father of the antiquary of that name.

Paul's Perry.

At Paveli or Paul's Perry, by Towceſter, was born 1638 Dr. Edward Bernard, a learned aſtronomer and Savilian profeſſor at Oxford, who died 1697. Coins of Conſtantine, Maximian and other emperors have been found here[u].

Eſton.

Eſton (miſprinted both in Camden and Gibſon Elton) has been the ſeat of the Fermors ever ſince Richard Fermor bought it of the ſon of Empſon t. Henry VIII. This family was ennobled by William III. 1692 with the title of lord Lempſter and of earl of Pomfret 1721. The preſent houſe was built 1702 by William lord Lempſter after a deſign of I. Jones of fair white Helmdon ſtone, the wings of brick by ſir Chriſtopher Wren. Here was a valuable collection of portraits and tapeſtry, and here were the remains of the Arundelian marbles, 32 ſtatues, 47 other pieces, and 25 buſts, which were, 1755, reſtored to the reſt of that collection at Oxford by the preſent counteſs dowager. Among theſe were the ſtatues of Cicero, Marius, Minerva, large as life and in perfect preſervation; a pillar from Delphi; a pediment of a temple with meaſures of the antient ell and foot; and a braſs head of Apollo, whoſe body is ſuppoſed to lie with many more under Arundel ſtreet[x].

At Sewardſley[y] was a Ciſtertian nunnery founded by Richard de Leſtre t. Henry II. valued at £. 12. 6s. 7d. granted to Richard Fermor[z]. Some old walls, the kitchen, and ſome ponds remain. The founder's ſeal among Mr. Charles' collections, Cotton Lib. Jul. C. VII. has his figure armed on horſeback, his ſhield on his breaſt, and over the horſe's neck a boy dancing.

Courtenhall the eſtate of William Peverell at the Conqueſt, and in the reign of Elizabeth of Richard Ouſely, who built the manſion houſe 1580, was purchaſed 1650 by ſir Samuel Jones. kt. who left it to the younger ſon of ſir William Wake, bart. on condition he aſſumed his name. It is now the ſeat of ſir William Wake, bart. his great nephew, repreſentative of the antient family of that name that came in with the Conqueror[a].

Grafton Regis or Widvile belonged from the time of king John to the Widville family, which ended in the ſons of the firſt earl. His daughter's huſband Thomas Grey marquis of Dorſet inherited it, and his ſon Thomas gave it up t. Henry VII. 38 Henry VIII. it was made an honour, and Charles II. gave it in fee to his natural ſon by Barbara ducheſs of Cleveland, Henry Fitzroy created duke of Grafton in this county 1675, which title has continued to his deſcendants. The manſion houſe is much reduced[b]. Edward IV. was privately married at Grafton to lady Grey, nobody being preſent but the boy who ſerved at maſs, the ducheſs of Bedford, and two of her gentlewomen[c].

The kings hundreds of Wimberſley and Affords How and his foreſts of Whittlewood and Sawcey, his chaces of Yardley and Whaddon, and all his manors, parks, ſites of monaſteries, lands, &c. within the pariſhes, towns, and hamlets of Grafton, Hartwell, Aſhton, Rood, Cortnall, Alderton, Stoke, Brewern, Shittilanger, Shoreſley, Bliſeworth, Milton, Malleſworth, Tiffeild, Palliſpery, Toſſetour, Eiſton, Hulcot, Abthorp, Foſcot, Greinſnorton, Blacheſley, Wooden, Colebigham, Grimſcot, Parſet, Eſcot, Aſcot, Daleſcot, Bugbroke, Ruddiſtrip, Collingthrigh, Hardingſton, Wotton, Quinton, Hopton, Denſſager, Yardley, Potterspery, Furthoo, Coſgrove, Caſtle Aſhby, Wiken, and Delaprey, in the county of Northampton, and in the hamlets, towns, and pariſhes of Luffield, Hanſap, Caſtle Thorp, Horſham, Shenley, Little Harwood, Snelſoo, and Little Lidforth, in the county of Buckingham, and elſe-

[p] Sax. Chron. 109. [q] Nixon in A. S. Minutes. [r] Bridges, 276. [s] Ib. 277.
[t] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter to London, 204. Bridges, 310. Gunton's Hiſt. of Peterborough. [u] Bridges, 314.
[x] Stukeley I. 36. Marm. Ox. 1768. Bridges, 289. One Guelfi an Italian repaired many.
[y] vulgarly Shordſley, and in the new map Shoaſly. [z] Tan. 382. Bridges I. 295.
[a] Bridges, 352. [b] Bridges, 298. [c] Frag. ad fin. Sprotti Chron. by Hearne.

where, within the realm of England, belonging or appertaining to any manors or hundreds lying or being in any the towns, &c. aforementioned, ſhall be annexed to the manor of Grafton, and the ſaid manor, &c. ſhall be called perpetually the Honor of Grafton, and ſhall be in the order and ſurvey of the court of Augmentations, ſaving ſo much thereof as is within her dutchy of Lancaſter, or county palatine of Lancaſter[d].

Bliſworth belongs now to the honour of Grafton. Roger Wake, eſq. founded a freeſchool there in the reign of Edward VI.[e]

The Pateſhulls were at Pateſhull t. Henry III. Simon was an able ſtateſman and chief juſtice of England t. Richard I. and John. His ſon Hugh was chancellor of the Exchequer, and treaſurer. Martin was dean of St. Paul's and Juſtice of the Common Pleas t. Henry III. It came afterwards to the Nevilles[f], and is now the property of Mr. Markes.

Dr. Stukeley[g] has traced a chain of forts along the river Nen, viz. Cogenhoe, Cheſter walled about oppoſite to Wellingborough, Archeſter, a ſquare camp near Ringſted and Artleborough; coins frequently found at the latter; Wadenhoe, Periboe, Walmsford, Caſter on one ſide the river, Cheſterton [Durobrivis] on the other, both walled about, Peterborough, Narborough, Braceborough, Billingborough, Garric, Walcot, Lindwood, Waſhenborough. Some intermediate ones may be found out by ſkilful inquirers. All of theſe however do not appear in the new Survey. That at Cogenhoe is Clifford's hill; that at Ringſted is called by Moreton Cotton mill, where urns with aſhes and coins have been found[h]. At Wadenhoe the map marks a tumulus; Pinhoe may mean Peny lane or mill beyond Cotterſtock; the reſt from Narborough or Northborough are in Lincolnſhire. Morton[i] mentions thoſe at Mill Cotton, Cheſter, and Clifford hill, all which appear to be Roman work by the coins, urns, and other antiquities found there, and this may have occaſioned Nen to have been ſuppoſed Aufona[k]. Horſley takes Autona, or Aufona, for the Avon[l]. See before in Wilts[m]. It is remarkable, however, that Leland calls the Nen Avon when it comes to Oundle[n].

The camp at Guilsborough is called the Burrows[o]; it is an oblong ſquare, the north and ſouth ſides ſhorteſt, fenced by a deep broad ſingle ditch, the longeſt ſide between 5 and 600 feet, the ſhorteſt about 300, the area about 8 acres[p].

Sir John Langham, bart. alderman of London, founded 1651 an almſhouſe at Cottesbrooke, the ſeat of his family, who have monuments there. Sir John left alſo to the corporation of London a ſum of money, out of which each alderman has £.4. to beſtow annually on a poor diſtreſſed ſoldier or ſeaman. In a part of this lordſhip, ſtill retaining the name of Kalendar meadow, was a place called Kayland given by William Buttevillian to Sulby abbey, who made it a cell of Premonſtratenſian canons. Large foundations have been dug up, and the ſite appears to have been moated round[q].

Burrough hill in Daventry pariſh is an oval three quarters of a mile from ſouth to north, and a quarter broad, three miles in circuit, the area a horſe courſe may contain 190 acres. It is defended in different parts with a double trench and two banks, three trenches and four banks, and by four trenches and five banks on the eaſt and north ſide. The weſt ſide has only one trench and two banks, the ſouth two trenches and three banks. About the middle it is divided by a ſmall trench reaching about two thirds of the way from the weſt ſide, and at another one quarter of the length is a larger trench croſſing in like manner terminating at eighteen round hills of the ſize of windmill hills, and a little hollow at top, the whole row of them about 160 yards, and there are three ſeparate ones larger. The remaining quarter of the camp is divided from the reſt by a deep trench about 200 yards long, incloſing an area of about 12 acres at the north part of the hill declining eaſt, and near this trench is a ſpring called Spellwell miſcalled a mount by Mr. Camden. The entrance to this camp ſeems to have been on the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt ſides. Roman coins have been found in the trenches. Two hundred and fifty yards below this, on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the hill, is a ſmaller camp of about an acre, ſingle trenched, an oblong ſquare, the entrance on the eaſt and weſt. At the foot of the firſt on the ſouth is Burnt walls, about ſix acres, which ſeem to have been moated round, where loads of ſtone and rubbiſh have been dug up; and banks incloſing dry ponds in Daventry park, may have belonged to this ſite, where John of Gaunt is ſaid to have had a palace, but the place had this name ſo early as Henry III. Moreton ſuppoſes this a Roman camp lengthened by the Saxons when the Danes overrun the county 1006, or by the Danes themſelves[r]. Mr. Pennant[s] refers it to the Britans, and conceives it one of their poſts made againſt Oſtorius, who after reducing it converted it to his own uſe for a ſummer ſtation, and the warm bottom near the fort to a winter ſtation. He ſuppoſes it called by the Britans Ben Avon, q. d. the head of the river, and here, with Mr. Gale, he places the Roman BENAVENNA. Charles I. occupied this poſt a little before the battle of Naſeby.

Daventry is a market town and corporation, and has five fairs, and a charity ſchool. The Cluniac priory founded at Preſton Capes by Hugh de Leyceſter 1090, was removed hither, valued at £. 236. and was the firſt and largeſt houſe ſuppreſſed for Cardinal Wolſey[t]. Its ſmall remains are inhabited by poor people. Here is a freeſchool, founded 1576 by William Parker native. Here was born, 1614, John Wilkins biſhop of Cheſter 1668, who died 1672. In a field at Whitton, four miles from Daventry, old foundations and Roman coins here called Danes money have been dug up[u]. Daventry.

At Newnham near Wedon was born 1605 Thomas Randolph the poet, who died 1634. Newnham.

At Cateſby was a Ciſtertian nunnery, founded by Philip de Eſſeby in the 13th century, valued at £. 132. 10. 11.[x] and the church has been in ruins ever ſince the diſſolution. Some Roman coins have been found in the park. The family of Catesby have been remarkable for their ſhare in public com- Cateſby.

[d] Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 38.
[e] Bridges, 335.
[f] Bridges, 265.
[g] Hiſt. of Caraufius I. 171, 172.
[h] Bridges, 190.
[i] P. 516.
[k] Salmon, 362.
[l] Brit. Rom. 31. 36.
[m] Vol. I. p. 96.
[n] I. 3.
[o] Stuk. I. 35.
[p] Bridges, 566.
[q] Ib. 553.
[r] Moreton, 520. Bridges, 42.
[s] Journey from Cheſter to London, p. 191—192.
[t] Tan. 375.
[u] Bridges, 41. 49.
[x] Bridges, 32. Tan. 383.

motions. John de Catesby was in ſeveral commiſſions in this county for ſuppreſſing unlawful aſſemblies, particularly the inſurrection of Straw and Tyler t. Richard II. His great grandſon William was one of Richard III's three aſſociates in government, and beheaded after the battle of Boſworth. His lineal deſcendant William was a principal contriver and actor in the powderplot, and was ſhot with Percy, whoſe daughter he had married, in defending himſelf in Holbach houſe, Staffordſhire, to which the principal conſpirators fled after its diſcovery, and both their heads were ſet on the parliament houſe [y].

Between Catesby and Badby is Arbury banks, q. d. the high hill, Ord ſignifying high in Britiſh, and burgh a hill in Saxon, it being remarkably high [z]. It is ſingle trenched, ſquariſh, or irregular, conforming to the ſhape of the hill, the area 10 acres entrance on the eaſt, a kind of outwork at the ſouth-weſt angle [a].

Fawſley. "Mr. Knightley, a man of great lands, hath his "principal houſe at Faulieſley, but it is no very "ſumptuous thing [b]."

Fawſley is ſtill the ſeat of the Knightleys, whoſe anceſtor purchaſed it in the reign of Henry V. The windows of the hall are magnificent and lofty, 52 feet long, adorned with the family arms, and the chimney ſo contrived, with two funnels through the buttreſſes, that there is a window over it: the two chimnies in the kitchen have double arches like that deſcribed at Edgecot by Dr. Wallis, Phil. Tranſ. N° 166.[c] Mr. Pennant deſcribes ſeveral curious portraits here [d].

eſton capes. At Preſton capes near Fawſley Hugh de Leiceſter ſteward to Maud wife of Simon de St. Liz, firſt earl of Northampton, had a caſtle, the ſite ſtill called Caſtle hill, near which was a houſe of four monks, which being inconveniently ſituated he removed to Daventry. The porter's ward is ſtill entire. On the third bell in this church is this inſcription: I H S Nazarenus Rex Judæorum fili Dei miſerere mei [e].

Wedon. "Wedon is a praty thoroughfare ſet on a playne "ground, and much more celebrated by carriers, by-"cauſe it ſtondeth hard by the famoſe way there com-"monly callid of the people Watheling ſtrete, and "upon this the townelet is called Wedon on the ſtrete. "The tounlet of itſelf is very mean, and hath no "market, and the paroche church is as mean. A "litle from the ſouth ſide of the church yard is a fair "chapel dedicated to St. Werburgh, that ſometyme "was a nun at Wedon, where was a monaſtery in "Bede's time, ſyns deſtroyed by the Danes, but "whether there were any monaſtery ſince the con-"queſt I could not well learn there. The vicar told "me that the lordſhip of the town did belong to Bek-"harwik [Bec] a monaſtery in Normandy, and "that after the priories aliens of the French order "did leſe their poſſeſſions in England king Henry VI. "gave it to Eton college. On the ſouth ſide of "St. Werburg's chapel, in hominum memoria, was "an area and fair building about it, and a cha-"pel within, now nothing but great barns [f]." In the grounds called Aſh yard, ſouth of the church, the foundations of old buildings and ſtone walls have been diſcovered [g]. Mr. Bridges denies there ever was a priory here.

Dr. Stukeley [h] concurs with Mr. Camden in placing BENNAVENA at Wedon. Gale [i] puts it at Caſtledikes, a mile more ſouth, and reads it Penn Aven or Nayne, q. d. head of Avon, or Nen.

If Dr. Stukeley's reading BENAVONA be admitted, Mr. Ward would incline to Bensford in Polbrook hundred, though on account of Burrough hill he prefers Daventry, for which Baxter would torture it to Dannavantria. Salmon is of Ward's opinion [k], but makes Iſanavatia a diſtinct ſtation [l].

Ben Von

At Stow Nine Churches, ſo named from 9 churches, to which the lord of the manor has a right of preſentation [m], is a moſt beautiful monument of Elizabeth, wife of ſir John Danvers of Dantſey, c. Wilts, and after of ſir Edmund Cary, third ſon of Henry lord Hunſdon, with her figure in white marble cumbent on a marble ſlab, ſet up in her lifetime, the work of Nicholas Stone for £. 220. She died 1630. Oppoſite to it is a cenotaph to Dr. Thomas Turner, brother to biſhop Turner of Ely, preſident of Corpus Chriſti college, Oxford, where he was buried 1714, to which and Ely church and city he was an eſpecial benefactor. Here is alſo an old croſs legged figure of one of the Gaunts, antient lords of this place [n]. Succeeding lords were the Armenters, Segraves, De L'iſles, lords Berkeley, Beauchamps earls of Warwick, and lords Latimer, of which laſt Elizabeth lady Danvers was a coheireſs. From the family of Danvers it paſſed to the lord Wharton, and from him by ſale to Edward Harley, eſq; of whom it was purchaſed 1716 by the executors of Dr. Turner, and ſettled by them on the corporation for the relief of poor clergymen's widows and children. The rev. Dr. Lloyd is the preſent tenant. Here are two mineral ſprings [o].

Stow Chu

The Watling ſtreet enters this county at Old Stratford, and paſſes in a ſtrait line to the leſſer Avon near Lilburne, and thence into Warwickſhire at Dowbridge, where pavements, trenches, mounts (one called the Round hill), are to be ſeen. It runs very high near Watford, where its greateſt breadth is not above ſeven yards, but in ſome places broader, and every where will admit two carriages abreaſt. It is not ſo much worn at Creke, nor had the need of a bridge there, as Camden repreſents, unleſs he means where it divides Watford lordſhip to the eaſt, Aſhby and Welton to the weſt, where are now three bridges, or the low watry place by Thorp encloſures, where the rill divides it [p].

In the ſecond Iter of Antoninus, the 22d ſtation, Horſley thus appropriated miles		miles

Manduеſſedum to Venonis,	12.	Manceter or Manceſter, to Clayceſter,	12.
Bennavenna,	17.	to Weedon,	17.
Lactodoro,	12.	to Stoney Stratford	12.
Magiovinio,	17.	to Fenny Stratford,	17.

[y] Bridges, 15. Rapin IX. 293.
[z] Stuk. It. I. 107. See a fortification of this name in Hertfordſhire I. 342. another in Cambridgeſhire II. 137.
[a] G. Moreton, 524. Bridges, 19. Pennant, 292. [b] Lel. I. 12
[c] Bridges, 65. [d] Ubi ſup. p. 292. [e] Bridges, 82, 83. [f] Lel. I. 12, Tan. 373.
[g] Bridges, 93. Pennant, ubi ſup. p. 193, 194. [h] I. 107. [i] P. 59, 60.
[k] P. 358. [l] P. 361.
[m] Dame Catharine Danvers died 9 H. VIII. ſeized of the manor of Stowe, and as the record expreſſes it cum advocationibus novem eccleſiarum appendent. eidem manerio. Eſc. 9 H. VII. n. 38.
[n] Pennant, 195. 199. [o] Bridges, 87—93. [p] Moreton, 501.

This

This road Mr. Bartlett informs me he travels almoſt every year, and has often been ſurprized that no notice has been taken of the great improbability that either Towceſter, which is but eight miles from Weedon, or Stoney Stratford, which is 17 miles from the ſame place, ſhould be the ſtation in Antoninus called Lactodorum. About 14 miles from Weedon is a village called Old Stratford or the parent of the new; this place he ſhould with the approbation of the editors of the firſt volume of the hiſtory of Northamptonſhire call by that name. Betwixt Cleyceſter and Weedon it meaſures 20 miles but is called 17. About eight miles from Cleyceſter is an acknowledged ſtation, which Richard of Cirenceſter inſerts by the name of Tripontium.

Antoninus		Horſley		Richard
From Manduеſſedum to Venonas,	16.	Cleyceſter,	11.	Benones,	2.
				Tripontium,	9.
Bennavenna,	17.	Weedon,	28.	Bennavenna [q],	12.
Lactodorum,	12.	Towceſter,	8.	Lactodoro,	12.
Magiovinium,	17.	Fenny Stratford,	15.	Magiovinio,	12.
	62.	Now meaſured	54.		47.

According to Mr. Bartlet's idea they ſhould ſtand thus,

Antoninus,		or, Richard,
Cleyceſter,	11.	Cleyceſter,	11.
Weedon,	20.	Tripontium	} 9.
Old Stratford,	14.	Dove Bridge,	}
Fenny Stratford,	9.	Weedon,	12.
		Old Stratford,	14.
	54.	Fenny Stratford,	9.
			54.

In Horeſtone meadow, at Nether Hayford, near Wedon, half a mile from the Street was found 1699, a beautiful teſſelated pavement, 15 feet long from eaſt to weſt, of white, yellow, red, and blue teſſelæ, and the apartment to which it belonged was ſided by others about ten feet by four, floored with plaiſter, and the ſides of the floors painted with three ſtrait lines of red, yellow, and green; in theſe were fragments of pottery and a hammer head [r].

Caſtle Dikes in Farthingſton is a high hill, intrenched, commanding a moſt extenſive view, but at preſent overgrown with thick woods, and a large ditch running from eaſt to weſt acroſs the area of near 13 acres. In digging for ſtone in the ruins they diſcovered a vaulted room, and under it another room whence aroſe a putrid ſmell. Among the rubbiſh were found three ſtones rudely carved with heads, &c. To the ſouth-weſt, on the ſide of a contiguous hill, is an area of ſix or ſeven acres of an irregular ſhape, called the Caſtle yard, intrenched on every ſide but the ſouth-weſt. At the bottom of the trench are huge heaps of cinders incorporated with earth and pebbles. Theſe may have been Saxon works [s], if their vicinity to the Watling ſtreet do not rather incline us to ſuppoſe them of Roman origin.

Althorp has belonged to the Spencers ever ſince the reign of Henry VII. Robert lord Spencer was ſucceeded 1627 by his ſon William, and he 1637 by his ſon Henry, created earl of Sunderland after the battle of Edgehill, 1642, and ſlain at the battle of Newbury the ſame year. His wife Dorothy, daughter of Robert earl of Leiceſter, is celebrated by Waller under the name of Sachariſſa, and his ſon Robert ſucceeded him and dying 1702, was ſucceeded by his ſecond ſon Charles, who married Anne ſecond daughter of John duke of Marlborough, and dying 1722, was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, and he 1729, by his brother Charles, who, in right of his mother, ſucceeded to the title of duke of Marlborough, and dying 1758, is ſucceeded by his ſon George, preſent and ſecond duke of Marlborough of this name. The title of lord Spencer devolved to John third ſon of Charles earl of Sunderland by Anne beforementioned, whoſe ſon John was created 1761 viſcount Spencer, baron Spencer of Althorp, and 1765 earl Spencer and viſcount Althorp, preſent owner of this ſeat, which was rebuilt by earl Robert, and has a magnificent gallery and moſt valuable collection of pictures.

Of ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, who attracted queen Elizabeth's notice by his graceful dancing, and was chancellor of Oxford and England, no print has yet been publiſhed though there are ſeveral portraits.

Holdenby houſe.

Holdenby houſe was moſt pleaſantly ſituated on a hill ſurrounded by fields and groves. In the hall were three high pyramids, the middle one reaching to the roof, the two others to the ſides, and painted with the arms of all the gentry of the county, and all the Engliſh nobility. The garden, raiſed, levelled, and formed out of a moſt unprofitable craggy ground, was diſpoſed in various walks and arbors, the fiſh ponds well repleniſhed, and a park and warren for deer and rabbits, and a diſtilling houſe on the weſt end of the garden, over which was a pond of water brought by pipes out of an adjoining field a mile from the houſe. In ſhort, as Norden obſerves, "the ſtate of the houſe was ſuch and ſo beautiful, that it might well delight a prince." Sir Chriſtopher Hatton gave it up to the queen in her 10th year for other lands, and it was granted to him again in her life. Accordingly it ſeems to have been uſed as a royal retreat. Here Charles I. was confined ſome months 1646, and carried away hence forcibly by cornet Joyce to the army. While here he often amuſed himſelf with bowling at lord Vaux's at Boughton. It was probably demoliſhed by order of parliament, and only ſome gateways and pieces of the pyramids remain, ſome of the latter ſupporting hovels, and ſome arched niches in the garden walls. Holdenby gave title of baron to Lewis Duras, marquis of Blanquefort, and brother to the duke of Duras, 24 Charles II. for his ſervice in the ſea fight againſt the Dutch, 1665. He had alſo from the duke of York 1673 the honour of Holdenby, was afterwards created earl of Feverſham, and left the kingdom at the Revolution. Of his heirs the duke of Marlborough purchaſed it, and is preſent owner [t].

NORTHAMPTON.

"The toune of Northampton ſtondith on the north "ſide of Avon ryver, on the brow of a meane hill. Al "the old building of it was of ſtone, the new is of "tymber. There be in the walls four gates: the "eaſt gate is the faireſt of them all; there is a fair "ſuburb without the ſouth gate, another but leſs "without the weſt gate. The caſtel ſtandith hard by "the weſt gate, and hath a large keep. The area of "the reſidew is very large, and bulwarks of erth be "made afore the caſtle gate. Pariſh churches with-"in the walls be ſeven, and two in the ſuburbs. All "Hallows is principal, ſtanding in the heart of the "town, and is large and well builded. There is a "chapel of St. Catarine ſet in a cemetery in the

[q] in Richard Iſanta Varia.
[r] Moreton, 528. Bridges, 519.
[s] Moreton, 543. Bridges, 61. Stuk. I. 107. Pennant ubi ſup. p. 194, 195.
[t] Bridges, 525.

"toune

motions. John de Catesby was in several commissions in this county for suppressing unlawful assemblies, particularly the insurrection of Straw and Tyler t. Richard II. His great grandson William was one of Richard III's three associates in government, and beheaded after the battle of Bosworth. His lineal descendant William was a principal contriver and actor in the powderplot, and was shot with Percy, whose daughter he had married, in defending himself in Holbach house, Staffordshire, to which the principal conspirators fled after its discovery, and both their heads were set on the parliament house [y].

Between Catesby and Badby is Arbury banks, q. d. the high hill, Ord signifying high in British, and burgh a hill in Saxon, it being remarkably high [z]. It is single trenched, squarish, or irregular, conforming to the shape of the hill, the area 10 acres entrance on the east, a kind of outwork at the south-west angle [a].

Fawsley. "Mr. Knightley, a man of great lands, hath his "principal house at Faulkesley, but it is no very "sumptuous thing [b]."

Fawsley is still the seat of the Knightleys, whose ancestor purchased it in the reign of Henry V. The windows of the hall are magnificent and lofty, 52 feet long, adorned with the family arms, and the chimney so contrived, with two funnels through the buttresses, that there is a window over it: the two chimnies in the kitchen have double arches like that described at Edgecot by Dr. Wallis, Phil. Trans. N° 166. [c] Mr. Pennant describes several curious portraits here [d].

eston capes. At Preston capes near Fawsley Hugh de Leicester steward to Maud wife of Simon de St. Liz, first earl of Northampton, had a castle, the site still called Castle hill, near which was a house of four monks, which being inconveniently situated he removed to Daventry. The porter's ward is still entire. On the third bell in this church is this inscription: I H S Nazarenus Rex Judæorum fili Dei miserere mei [e].

Wedon. "Wedon is a praty thoroughfare set on a playne "ground, and much more celebrated by carriers, by-"cause it stondeth hard by the famose way there com-"monly callid of the people Watheling strete, and "upon this the townelet is called Wedon on the strete. "The tounlet of itself is very mean, and hath no "market, and the paroche church is as mean. A "litle from the south side of the church yard is a fair "chapel dedicated to St. Werburgh, that sometyme "was a nun at Wedon, where was a monastery in "Bede's time, syns destroyed by the Danes, but "whether there were any monastery since the con-"quest I could not well learn there. The vicar told "me that the lordship of the town did belong to Bek-"harwik [Bec] a monastery in Normandy, and "that after the priories aliens of the French order "did lese their possessions in England king Henry VI. "gave it to Eton college. On the south side of "St. Werburg's chapel, in hominum memoria, was "an area and fair building about it, and a cha-"pel within, now nothing but great barns [f]." In the grounds called Ash yard, south of the church, the foundations of old buildings and stone walls have been discovered [g]. Mr. Bridges denies there ever was a priory here.

Dr. Stukeley [h] concurs with Mr. Camden in placing BENNAVENA at Wedon. Gale [i] puts it at Castledikes, a mile more south, and reads it Penn Aven or Nayne, q. d. head of Avon, or Nen.

If Dr. Stukeley's reading BENAVONA be admitted, Mr. Ward would incline to Bensford in Polbrook hundred, though on account of Burrough hill he prefers Daventry, for which Baxter would torture it to Dannavantria. Salmon is of Ward's opinion [k], but makes Isanavatia a distinct station [l].

At Stow Nine Churches, so named from 9 churches, to which the lord of the manor has a right of presentation [m], is a most beautiful monument of Elizabeth, wife of sir John Danvers of Dantsey, c. Wilts, and after of sir Edmund Cary, third son of Henry lord Hunsdon, with her figure in white marble cumbent on a marble slab, set up in her lifetime, the work of Nicholas Stone for £. 220. She died 1630. Opposite to it is a cenotaph to Dr. Thomas Turner, brother to bishop Turner of Ely, president of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, where he was buried 1714, to which and Ely church and city he was an especial benefactor. Here is also an old cross legged figure of one of the Gaunts, antient lords of this place [n]. Succeeding lords were the Armenters, Segraves, De L'isles, lords Berkeley, Beauchamps earls of Warwick, and lords Latimer, of which last Elizabeth lady Danvers was a coheiress. From the family of Danvers it passed to the lord Wharton, and from him by sale to Edward Harley, esq; of whom it was purchased 1716 by the executors of Dr. Turner, and settled by them on the corporation for the relief of poor clergymen's widows and children. The rev. Dr. Lloyd is the present tenant. Here are two mineral springs [o].

The Watling street enters this county at Old Stratford, and passes in a strait line to the lesser Avon near Lilburne, and thence into Warwickshire at Dowbridge, where pavements, trenches, mounts (one called the Round hill), are to be seen. It runs very high near Watford, where its greatest breadth is not above seven yards, but in some places broader, and every where will admit two carriages abreast. It is not so much worn at Creke, nor had the need of a bridge there, as Camden represents, unless he means where it divides Watford lordship to the east, Ashby and Welton to the west, where are now three bridges, or the low watry place by Thorp enclosures, where the rill divides it [p].

In the second Iter of Antoninus, the 22d station, Horsley thus appropriated

Manduessedum	miles	Manceter or Mancester,	miles to Venonis,	12.	to Clayceſter,	12.
Bennavenna,	17.	to Weedon,	17.
Lactodoro,	12.	to Stoney Stratford	12.
Magiovinio,	17.	to Fenny Stratford,	17.

[y] Bridges, 15. Rapin IX. 293.
[z] Stuk. It. I. 107. See a fortification of this name in Hertfordshire I. 342. another in Cambridgeshire II. 137.
[a] G. Moreton, 524. Bridges, 19. Pennant, 292. [b] Lel. I. 12
[c] Bridges, 65. [d] Ubi sup. p. 292. [e] Bridges, 82, 83. [f] Lel. I. 12, Tan. 373.
[g] Bridges, 93. Pennant, ubi sup. p. 193, 194. [h] I. 107. [i] P. 59, 60.
[k] P. 358. [l] P. 361.
[m] Dame Catharine Danvers died 9 H. VIII. seized of the manor of Stowe, and as the record expresses it cum advocationibus novem ecclesiarum appendent. eidem manerio. Esc. 9 H. VII. n. 38.
[n] Pennant, 195. 199. [o] Bridges, 87—93. [p] Moreton, 501.

This

This road Mr. Bartlett informs me he travels almoſt every year, and has often been ſurprized that no notice has been taken of the great improbability that either Towceſter, which is but eight miles from Weedon, or Stoney Stratford, which is 17 miles from the ſame place, ſhould be the ſtation in Antoninus called Lactodorum. About 14 miles from Weedon is a village called Old Stratford or the parent of the new; this place he ſhould with the approbation of the editors of the firſt volume of the hiſtory of Northamptonſhire call by that name. Betwixt Cleyceſter and Weedon it meaſures 20 miles but is called 17. About eight miles from Cleyceſter is an acknowledged ſtation, which Richard of Cirenceſter inſerts by the name of Tripontium.

Antoninus		Horſley		Richard
From Manduеſſedum to Venonas,	16.	Cleyceſter,	11.	Benones,	2.
				Tripontium,	9.
Bennavenna,	17.	Weedon,	28.	Bennavenna [q],	12.
Lactodorum,	12.	Towceſter,	8.	Lactodoro,	12.
Magiovinium,	17.	Fenny Stratford,	15.	Magiovinio,	12.
	62.	Now meaſured	54.		47.

According to Mr. Bartlet's idea they ſhould ſtand thus,

Antoninus,		or, Richard,
Cleyceſter,	11.	Cleyceſter,	11.
Weedon,	20.	Tripontium	9.
Old Stratford,	14.	Dove Bridge,
Fenny Stratford,	9.	Weedon,	12.
		Old Stratford,	14.
	54.	Fenny Stratford,	9.
			54.

In Horeſtone meadow, at Nether Hayford, near Wedon, half a mile from the Street was found 1699, a beautiful teſſelated pavement, 15 feet long from eaſt to weſt, of white, yellow, red, and blue teſſelæ, and the apartment to which it belonged was ſided by others about ten feet by four, floored with plaiſter, and the ſides of the floors painted with three ſtrait lines of red, yellow, and green; in theſe were fragments of pottery and a hammer head [r].

Caſtle Dikes in Farthingſton is a high hill, intrenched, commanding a moſt extenſive view, but at preſent overgrown with thick woods, and a large ditch running from eaſt to weſt acroſs the area of near 13 acres. In digging for ſtone in the ruins they diſcovered a vaulted room, and under it another room whence aroſe a putrid ſmell. Among the rubbiſh were found three ſtones rudely carved with heads, &c. To the ſouth-weſt, on the ſide of a contiguous hill, is an area of ſix or ſeven acres of an irregular ſhape, called the Caſtle yard, intrenched on every ſide but the ſouth-weſt. At the bottom of the trench are huge heaps of cinders incorporated with earth and pebbles. Theſe may have been Saxon works [s], if their vicinity to the Watling ſtreet do not rather incline us to ſuppoſe them of Roman origin.

Althorp has belonged to the Spencers ever ſince the reign of Henry VII. Robert lord Spencer was ſucceeded 1627 by his ſon William, and he 1637 by his ſon Henry, created earl of Sunderland after the battle of Edgehill, 1642, and ſlain at the battle of Newbury the ſame year. His wife Dorothy, daughter of Robert earl of Leiceſter, is celebrated by Waller under the name of Sachariſſa, and his ſon Robert ſucceeded him and dying 1702, was ſucceeded by his ſecond ſon Charles, who married Anne ſecond daughter of John duke of Marlborough, and dying 1722, was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, and he 1729, by his brother Charles, who, in right of his mother, ſucceeded to the title of duke of Marlborough, and dying 1758, is ſucceeded by his ſon George, preſent and ſecond duke of Marlborough of this name. The title of lord Spencer devolved to John third ſon of Charles earl of Sunderland by Anne beforementioned, whoſe ſon John was created 1761 viſcount Spencer, baron Spencer of Althorp, and 1765 earl Spencer and viſcount Althorp, preſent owner of this ſeat, which was rebuilt by earl Robert, and has a magnificent gallery and moſt valuable collection of pictures.

Of ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, who attracted queen Elizabeth's notice by his graceful dancing, and was chancellor of Oxford and England, no print has yet been publiſhed though there are ſeveral portraits.

Holdenby houſe.

Holdenby houſe was moſt pleaſantly ſituated on a hill ſurrounded by fields and groves. In the hall were three high pyramids, the middle one reaching to the roof, the two others to the ſides, and painted with the arms of all the gentry of the county, and all the Engliſh nobility. The garden, raiſed, levelled, and formed out of a moſt unprofitable craggy ground, was diſpoſed in various walks and arbors, the fiſh ponds well repleniſhed, and a park and warren for deer and rabbits, and a diſtilling houſe on the weſt end of the garden, over which was a pond of water brought by pipes out of an adjoining field a mile from the houſe. In ſhort, as Norden obſerves, "the ſtate of the houſe was ſuch and ſo beautiful, that it might well delight a prince." Sir Chriſtopher Hatton gave it up to the queen in her 10th year for other lands, and it was granted to him again in her life. Accordingly it ſeems to have been uſed as a royal retreat. Here Charles I. was confined ſome months 1646, and carried away hence forcibly by cornet Joyce to the army. While here he often amuſed himſelf with bowling at lord Vaux's at Boughton. It was probably demoliſhed by order of parliament, and only ſome gateways and pieces of the pyramids remain, ſome of the latter ſupporting hovels, and ſome arched niches in the garden walls. Holdenby gave title of baron to Lewis Duras, marquis of Blanquefort, and brother to the duke of Duras, 24 Charles II. for his ſervice in the ſea fight againſt the Dutch, 1665. He had alſo from the duke of York 1673 the honour of Holdenby, was afterwards created earl of Feverſham, and left the kingdom at the Revolution. Of his heirs the duke of Marlborough purchaſed it, and is preſent owner [t].

NORTHAMPTON.

"The toune of Northampton ſtondith on the north "ſide of Avon ryver, on the brow of a meane hill. Al "the old building of it was of ſtone, the new is of "tymber. There be in the walls four gates: the "eaſt gate is the faireſt of them all; there is a fair "ſuburb without the ſouth gate, another but leſs "without the weſt gate. The caſtel ſtandith hard by "the weſt gate, and hath a large keep. The area of "the reſidew is very large, and bulwarks of erth be "made afore the caſtle gate. Pariſh churches with-"in the walls be ſeven, and two in the ſuburbs. All "Hallows is principal, ſtanding in the heart of the "town, and is large and well builded. There is a "chapel of St. Catarine ſet in a cemetery in the

[q] in Richard Iſanta Varia.
[r] Moreton, 528. Bridges, 519.
[s] Moreton, 543. Bridges, 61. Stuk. I. 107. Pennant ubi ſup. p. 194, 195.
[t] Bridges, 525.

"toune

" toune belonging to it, and the ruins of a large " chapelle without the north gate. St. Andreas, " the late monaſtery of black monks, ſtood in the " north part of the town hard by the north gate. " Simon Sainſteliz the firſt, beyng earl of Northampton " and Huntendune, made this houſe, but is buried " in France where he died; but earl Simon the " ſecond, and earl Simon the third, his ſon, were " buried here, and under a flat ſtone in the choir " an archbiſhop [u]. St. James ſtandeth a litle diſtant " from the extreme part of the weſt ſuburb; the wall " that compaſith the hole ſite of the houſe, is high, " fair, and large, ex lapide quadrato [x]." This laſt houſe was founded for black canons by William Peverell, natural ſon of the Conqueror before 1112, valued at £. 175. [y] The abbot got excuſed from ſummons to parliament [z]. De la Pray, a Cluniac nunnery founded by Simon Sainſteliz, t. Stephen, valued at £. 119. [a]. is now the ſeat of the honourable Edward Bouverie. " There was a great battle fought in Henry VIth's " time at Northampton on the hill without the ſouth " gate, where is a right goodly croſs called, as I remem- " ber, the Queen's croſſe, and many Welſh men were " drowned in this conflict in Avon river. Many of " the ſlain were buried at Delapray, and ſome at St. " John's hoſpital, which was originally founded by " one William Sainſte Clere, archdeacon of North- " ampton, within the walls a litle above the ſouth " gate [b]," for poor perſons, valued at £. 25. and ſtill ſubſiſting [c]. " St. Thomas' hoſpital, without the " town, joins hard to the weſt [ſouth] gate, erected " within leſs than 100 years paſt, and endowed with " lands by the citizens of Northampton. It is ſtill " ſubſiſting. The Grey friars was the beſt builded " and largeſt of all the places of the freres, and " ſtode a little beyond the chief market place almoſt " by flat north, the ſite belonged to the cite, and " the citizens were taken for founders of it [d]." Theſe friars ſettled here ſoon after their arrival in England 1224, and this houſe was valued at £. 6. [e] The Black friars in the horſe market, founded before 1240, valued at £. 5. [f]. The White friars a litle above the Grey friars, founded by Simon Montfort, &c. 1271, valued at £. 10. [g] " The Auguſtine friary " hard againſt St. John's hoſpital, founded by the " Langfelds [Longviles], who were buried there, " of Buckinghamſhire [h]."

Norden calls Northampton " a fair town with " many fair old buildings, large ſtreets, and a very " ample and fair market place. It was waulled about " with a wall of ſtone but mean of ſtrength: near " the town ſtands an eminent caſtle ruinous." The town is finely ſituated on an eminence gently ſloping to the river which bounds it on the ſouth and weſt. The ſtreets are in general ſtrait and very handſomly built [i]. It was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VIII. [k] It was almoſt entirely burnt down with Allhallow's church, and the market croſs 1675, but £. 25000. being raiſed by brief and by the royal bounty, it was ſoon rebuilt of ſtone fairer than before, and the market place is the moſt ſpacious, elegant, and complete in the kingdom. Of the caſtle remains only the hill with a rude wall on it, the river on the weſt, and a deep foſſe on the other ſides. Oppoſite to the caſtle Mr. Pennant noticed a great mount, the foundation of ſome more antient fortreſs, perhaps one of the line of forts which croſſed this and the neighbouring counties. Here are now four churches, an infirmary founded 1744, and a handſome ſeſſions houſe. St. Peter's church is built in an antient ſtyle; St. Sepulchre's is circular. St. Andrew's priory ſubſiſted as early as 1076. Simon Saint Liz refounded it for Cluniacs, 1084; it was made deniſon t. Henry IV. and valued at £. 263. [l] St. Leonard's hoſpital in Hardingſtone founded for lepers before 1240, was valued at £. 10. On the ſite is a farm houſe, and a tenement called Spitel, or lazar houſe, where one poor man is maintained [m]. Northampton is a corporation with a mayor, ſends two members to parliament, and has a market, and eight fairs. Robert Brown, founder of the ſect of Browniſts, was born here and died 1060.

Queen croſs is one of queen Eleanor's croſſes, 54 feet high, and was repaired 1713 [n]. It ſtands in Hardingſton pariſh, where alſo about one mile ſouth-weſt from Northampton, is Hunsborough, or Hundſhill, an oval camp on a high hill, ſingle trenched, containing about an acre, ſuppoſed Daniſh made about 921 [o]. Mr. Pennant inclines to think it Britiſh. It was too far from the town, and on the wrong ſide of the river, to have been uſed as thought in the barons wars. Mr. Darker, whoſe ſeat is at Gayton, about five miles from it, ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1771 a ſword blade, blue glaſs and ſtone beads, found lying by a ſkeleton in digging ſand near this camp 1770, to build a farm houſe for the hon. Mr. Bouverie to whom the ſite of the nunnery belongs. An urn of dark brown earth found near this camp 1774, had a flowered pattern ornamented as if ſtamped, containing aſhes, bones, made of glaſs, and vitrified earth and amber, and one large one of cryſtal regularly cut and poliſhed, but of a flat ſurface [p].

Northampton cannot be a corruption of Northafandun, becauſe in the Saxon Chronicle it is always called Hamptun, as is alſo Southampton. The preſent name occurs not till after the Conqueſt, and then is written Norþ Hamtun and Norþhamtun: ſo that it ſeems to have no relation to the river on which it ſtands; but being at firſt called Hamtun, as many other towns were and ſtill are, had probably the initial North put to it when Southampton became conſiderable [q]. Moreton and Stukeley [r] ſuppoſe it the Eltavona of Ravennas between Lectocetum & Ratae, though no Roman antiquities have been found here, and Mr. Bridges places it on the ſite of Queen croſs, Roman coins having been found in the adjacent fields. Councils or parliaments were held at Northampton by Henry I. Stephen, Henry II. Edward II. and III. In 1263 ſome ſcholars from Cambridge, on a difference with the townſmen, retired hither and obtained licence of the king to ſettle an Univerſity here, which was ſoon diſannulled on account of its vicinity to Oxford. A like ſeceſſion had happened juſt before from that Univerſity hither on a riot againſt the pope's legate, who laid them under interdict, and by other diſturbances; which being aſcribed to the [u] of Triers, who died t. R. I. Bridges, 455.

[x] Lel. I. 7, 8.
[y] Tanner, 377. Bridges, 501.
[z] Selden Titles of Honour, II. c. 4. p. 731.
[a] Tan. 379. Bridges, 364.
[b] Lel. Ib. 9.
[c] Tan. 378. Bridges, 456.
[d] Lel. Ib. 10.
[e] Tan. 385. Bridges, 455.
[f] Lel. Ib. Tan. 386. Bridges, 435.
[g] Tan. 386. Bridges, 455.
[h] Lel. Ib. Tan. 387. Bridges, 456.
[i] Pennant ubi ſup. 299.
[k] Stat. 27 Henry VIII. for reedifying Northampton.
[l] Tan. 374.
[m] Tan. 386. Bridges, 363.
[n] Bridges, 358.
[o] Moreton, 537.
[p] A. S. minutes.
[q] G. & aut. in Bridges, 421.
[r] I. 34.

great number of ſtudents, the king granted leave, 1260, to found ſchools here, and ſo many ſcholars ſoon reſorted from Oxford, that after the taking of the town by the king's forces, it was found neceſſary to oblige them to go back and forbid them ever to return again [s]. Biſhop Gibſon ſuppoſed the place or lane called the College may be the monument of their ſettling here. It is rather of the college of All Saints founded here 1459 [t]. The Auſtin friars held five councils here in the 14th and 15th century [u]. Richard earl Rivers and his ſon being taken at their houſe at Grafton by the northern men in Edward IV's army were beheaded here [x]. The town was fortified for the parliament by lord Brook 1642, and a foſs and baſtion are ſtill to be ſeen at the north end of it [y].

Harding ſtone gave birth to James Hervey, a learned and ingenious but enthuſiaſtic writer, rector of Weſton Flavell and Collingtree, at the laſt of which he died 1758.

Upton, two miles from Northampton, is the ſeat of ſir Thomas Samwell, bart. whoſe anceſtor purchaſed it 1600.

An eſtate at Kiſlingbury was given to the univerſity of Cambridge by the will of Mr. Seaton of Stamford, who was admitted ſizer of Clare hall 1711, and obtained a ſcholarſhip and fellowſhip there, which he reſigned on receiving a living from the earl of Northampton, whoſe chaplain he was. The rents of this eſtate are to be diſpoſed of yearly by the Vice-chancellor, the maſter of Clarehall, and the Greek profeſſor for the time being, to raiſe a ſum of money for an annual poem in Engliſh on the attributes or ſome other ſacred ſubject by a maſter of arts of that univerſity, after paying the expences of printing the ſaid poem. The firſt poem was publiſhed 1750, and the publication has continued uniformly to the preſent time, except in the years 1766, 1769, 1771.

At Boughton is a ſmall antient ſeat belonging to the earl of Strafford, who purchaſed the manor of lord Aſhburnham, to whom it had been mortgaged by ſir John Briſcoe, knt. who became poſſeſſed of it in right of his wife Anne, eldeſt daughter of Nicholas earl of Banbury, who ſucceeded Nicholas lord Vaux. It had been in the family of Vaux ever ſince the reign of Henry VIII. In that of Edward III. it belonged to ſir Henry Greene, who obtained a fair here, which is ſtill kept with great ſolemnity on the vigil of the nativity of St. John Baptiſt, to whom the church is dedicated, and is famous for its trade in brooms and wooden ware. At the making of Domeſday this manor belonged in part to the abbey of St. Wandregeſil in Normandy, to which it had been given by Judith counteſs of Huntingdon, with leave of her uncle the Conqueror [z].

Upon the green about half a mile diſtant from the village ſtands the church, now in ruins, no part of the roof remaining, and the walls in ſeveral parts levelled with the ground. It conſiſted of a body, chancel, and north chantry chapel. When this chantry was founded is unknown. A ſpire of eight ſides on a plain coped tower at the weſt end is entire; at the lower end of the church is a bracket and niche for a ſtatue. On the north ſide of the chancel is an epitaph for Arthur Lennard, rector, who died 1670. The church yard is ſtill uſed for burial, but ſervice is performed in a chapel in the town, which, by a date over the ſouth door, appears to have been built 1599, ſo that we may probably date the ruin of the church about that time [a].

Kingſthorpe.

"From Northampton to Kingeſthorpe a mile and a "little further by [Boughton] parke encloſid with "ſtone, where is a meatlie plentie of wood. It longgid "a late to the lord Vaulx, now to the kinge. In it "is no building but a mene lodge. Kingſthorpe is "a goodly benefice, and yet is but a chapel to St. "Peter's of Northampton by the caſtle, the which "is now a very poore thing [b]."

Kingſthorpe manor is held in truſt for the town by ſeveral freeholders incorporated with a common ſeal. The church, though a chapel to St. Peter's at Northampton, enjoys all parochial rights, and the patron are the maſter, brethren, &c. of St. Catharine's by the tower. At a ſmall diſtance from the town ſtood an hoſpital, founded 1200, whoſe ruins with thoſe of one of its two chapels are ſtill remaining [c].

Great and Little Billing.

At Great Billing is a handſome old houſe with pleaſant gardens and plantations belonging to the earl of Thomond for many generations [d]. At Little Billing are remains of part of the very antient manſion houſe of the Longuevilles. The firſt ſtory is ſupported with broad arches, where is the appearance of a chapel: the door caſes of Harleſton free ſtone thick and large. At the ſouth-eaſt corner is a turret with a ſtair caſe, and part of it is embattled [e], "The eldeſt houſe or "manor place of the Langevilles yet remaynith at "Little Billinge, about a three miles eaſt from "Northampton, and ther ly divers of them buried [f]." Mr. Buck has engraved theſe ruins, which he miſcalls a Ciſtertian priory. This and the fragment of Longeſpe's houſe at Canford, Dorſet, are among the few ſpecimens of our early manſion-houſes not caſtellated. Billing houſe was completely modernized by Mr. Carr, architect, of York, for lord John Cavendiſh, who purchaſed it about three years ago. The detached kitchen and ſervants-hall connected by a covered way juſt open on one ſide are admirable.

Ecton.

Ecton adjoining is the ſeat of Ambroſe Iſted, eſq. The rectory is or lately was in the Palmer family [g].

Caſtle Aſhby.

"Almoſt in the midle way between Welingborow "and Northampton, I paſſid Aſcheby more than a mile "on the left hand, where hath bene a caſtle that now "is clene down, and is made but a ſeptum for "beaſts [h]. The earl of Northampton's ſeat, built round a ſquare court, was finiſhed 1624: the eaſt and ſouth ſides deſigned by Inigo Jones, by whom are ſeveral chimney pieces: the eaſt ſide had cloiſters now filled up. The old part is ſaid to have been built by Henry created lord Compton 14 Elizabeth, and furniſhed by his ſucceſſor William, but ſince damaged by fire. In the gallery are portraits of ſeveral earls and others of the family, and of John Talbot firſt earl of Shrewsbury ſlain at the ſiege of Chaſtillion in France 1453, and his ſecond wife Margaret daughter of Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick. Theſe two laſt are engraved by Mr. Pennant. From the houſe a noble avenue near three miles long extends into Yardley chace. In making this avenue 1719 Roman coins were dug up.

[a] Bridges, 425.
[b] Bridges, 430.
[c] Lel. I. 12.
[d] Bridges, 409.
[e] Bridges II. 141.
[f] Tan. 388. Bridges, 458. Pennant, 304.
[g] Ib. 431.
[h] Bridges, 413—417. Lel. IV. 40. Lel. I. 7. Bridges I. 341. Pennant ubi ſup. 310—316.
[x] Ib. 410.
[y] Bridges, 429.
[z] Ib. 411. Groſe's print of it.
[a] Bridges, 406.

Houghton parva.

Clifford's hill in the parish of Houghton parva is a vast artificial mount, having once on it a specula or watch tower. The coins found in or near prove it to have been the work of the Romans. Before the river Nen was diverted by the building of Billing bridge the channel ran under this mount which it is supposed to have guarded[i].

Horton.

Horton was the lordship of sir William Parr, uncle and chamberlain to queen Catharine Parr, created baron Parr of Horton, which honor shortly vanished with him, when he left only daughters married into the families of Tresham and Lane[k]. He died 1548, and has a fine monument in the church with his own figure and that of his lady. Sir Henry Montague, first earl of Manchester, purchased this manor, and by descent it fell to the earl of Halifax, whose daughter and heiress conveyed it by marriage to lord Hinchinbrook.

Yardley Hastings.

Yardley Hastings, so called from the Hastings earls of Pembroke its lords, whose antient seat remains in ruins north of the church, is famous for its noble chace, consisting of 21 coppices, abounding with fine timber, and well stocked with deer, and belonging to the earl of Northampton. Mr. Lye, author of the Saxon Dictionary published 1772, with so much improvement by Mr. Manning of Godelming, died rector here 1767.

Easton Mauduit.

At Easton Mauduit, the seat of sir Christopher Yelverton t. Elizabeth, and of his descendants, earls of Sussex, is a valuable collection of portraits collected about 1690 by Barbara, lady Longueville, whose son was created earl of Sussex 1717[l], and a valuable library of printed books and MSS, begun by sir Henry Yelverton, attorney-general to James I. and completed by Henry viscount Longueville, among which are the letters and state papers of Mr. Beale, Elizabeth's envoy to Germany and the Low countries, whose daughter sir Christopher married, and the MSS. of bishop Morton of Durham, who was buried here[m]. They were left to Christ church Oxford, if sir Christopher left no sons. The library was dispersed by public auction in London 1784, and the MSS. only wait for a purchaser. In the chapel are monuments for sir Christopher and his son sir Henry 1607.

Wellingborough.

"Welingborowe is a good quik market town builded "of stone, as almost all the towns be of Northamp- "tonshire. It standeth about a quarter of a mile from "Avon river[n]." Its market was granted by king John at the suit of the monks of Croyland[o], to whom the manor and living belonged. Here are remains of an old hall of the abbot of Croyland built 1281. Here is a freeschool founded by Edward VI. and augmented by private benefactors. The Redwell a medicinal spring near the town was in such repute 1626 as to be honoured by Charles I. and his queen, who staid here nine weeks to drink it. Sir Paul Pindar, knt. embassador to Turkey from James I. was born here. He laid out £.19,000 on St. Paul's church, and lent Charles I. £.12,000. and gave the communion plate and a bell to his native parish[p].

Harrowden magna.

Harrowden magna near Wellingborough was formerly the seat of sir Nicholas Vaux, knt. to whom it gave title of baron t. Henry VIII. His descendants sold it to the Wentworths, and it came to the late marquis of Rockingham. Edward last lord Vaux died 1661.[q]

The river Ise rising at Clipston, where is a free- Cli school and hospital, founded 1677 by sir George Buswell, bart. for 12 poor persons out of that and Nobold parish, or other parishes in the county where he had estates, and for six poor children of Clipston[r], passes by Harrington, an antient seat of lord Dysert, Ha formerly belonging to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem[s]; by Rushton, which came from the Tre- Ru shams to the Cockaines, of whom Charles was created viscount Cullen 1642[t]. His great grandson is the present possessor and fourth viscount.

"Gadington a pratie uplandish town[u]." The cross Ga remains the most entire of its kind. Here was a royal seat in a close called the castle or hall close northeast of the church, where Henry II. held a parliament to raise money for a crusade 1188[x]. Sir Robert Dallyngton a native, who died 1637, founded a school which, for want of endowment, fell to decay, but the duke of Montague allowed 12*l. per annum* for a school[y].

Boughton in Weekly parish by Geddington gave title Bo of baron 18 James I. to Edward Montague, whose grandfather Edward Montague, lord chief justice of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, inherited it. His grandson Ralph was created viscount Monthermer and earl of Montague by William III. 1689; marquis of Monthermer and duke of Montague by queen
Anne 1705. He died 1708, and the titles expired 1749 with his son John, who almost new-built the house[z]. His younger surviving daughter married George earl of Cardigan, in whom both titles were revived 1766. Here is a magnificent hall, wherein king William was entertained 1695, a spacious and beautiful garden of 91 acres, with waterworks, a canal above half a mile long, and a cascade, a whole river running through the garden[a]. Within the contiguous manor of Warkton is a petrifying spring, and at Sidney college Cambridge is shewn a scull incrusted there both within and without, which Charles I. borrowed to look at and returned[b].

At Hannington[c], where his father, afterwards bishop B of Bath and Wells, was rector, was born 1561 Francis Godwin, successively bishop of Landaff and Hereford, a distinguished English historian, who died 1633.
A house of the age of Elizabeth or James I. now
Mr. Trinder's boarding school near the Peacock inn in Northampton market place, has his motto over the door; Heb Dywf heb Dym Dyw a digon. q. d.
Have God have all. A chevron between three roundlets and three stags heads.

"Kettering, a pretty market town[d]," large and populous, having a good manufactory of shalloons, tammies, and serges. Here are six almshouses, founded by Mr. Sawyer 1688, endowed with 4*d.*½ a week each person. The abbot of Peterborough had a hall here, afterwards Mr. Sawyer's, to whom Mr. Camden granted arms 1604[e], now the duke of Montague's house. The date over it 1674. In 1726 here were found many coins of Trajan, Mar-

[i] Pennant, 320.
[k] Holland. Pennant, 323, 324.
[l] Bridges, II. 163. Pennant, 316—320.
[m] See a Catalogue of them, Cat. MSS. Ang. 1672.
[n] Lel. I. 7.
[o] Holland.
[p] Bridges, II. 149—153.
[q] Bridges II. 102.
[r] Bridges II. 17.
[s] Bridges, II. 33.
[t] Bridges II. 67.
[u] Lel. I. 13.
[x] Spelm. Conc. II. 116. Hoveden, 46. Bridges II. 309.
[y] Bridges, Ib.
[z] Stukeley, Itin. Cur. I. 36.
[a] Stukeley Ib. Bridges, II. 349.
[b] G. Fuller Worth. p. 280. Bridges II. 263.
[c] The bishop having in his English edition of his lives of the bishops written it Havington, and in the Latin altered it to Hannington, the writer of his life in Biographia Britannica denies the existence of such a place as Hannington because it is not in Spelman's (and we may add Adams') Index Villaris: but Mr. Bridges, Hist. of North. II. p. 98, proves that this orthography is right.
[d] Lel. I. 12.
[e] Bridges II. 241.

cus Aurelius, Fauſtina, Gordian, Antonia Aug. Claudius, Conſtantine, Maximian, Carauſius, Allectus, middle braſs, Cæſar Germanicus, rev. Agrippina Druſilli filia; ſhewn to the Society of Antiquaries by Mr. Sawyer. A braſs ſeal with St. Michael and the dragon circumſcribed S. Willelmi Cheſterton was found in Kettering field near Rothwell, where, under a large ſtone covering a cell or vault, was found a ſmall braſs hog ſhewn to the ſame Society 1776.

Rothwell has the appearance of being much larger formerly than at preſent, and is ſaid to have been ſurrounded with a wall and gates. It ſtill gives name to an hundred and deanry. The market houſe is much decayed, and the church reduced. Here was a ſmall Auſtin nunnery, founded by ſome of the Clares lords of the manor, valued at £.6. per ann.[f]

In Loddington ſteeple Mr. Tew, late rector, found a Greek MS. of the three goſpels, Mark being wanting, ſuppoſed 600 years old, and believed to be now among biſhop Moore's MSS. at Cambridge[g].

Weſt of Rothwell is Naſeby. The river Avon, called in maps only the Northampton water, or Naſeby head, which falls into the Nen at Northampton, riſes in this town. Its field is memorable for the battle between the king's forces and the parliament, 1645, which ended ſo fatally to the former, and gave ſuch a blow to his affairs. Prince Rupert, with the king's right wing, being occupied in ſummoning the parliament's artillery, Cromwell fell with their right wing on the king's left wing, broke it, and ſurrounded the foot, purſuing the horſe to Leiceſter, and taking in Clipſton field the king's coach with his cabinet of letters. In Naſeby field are two hollows, where the dead were buried, and bodies are dug up in Sibertoft enclosure[h].

At Barton Segrave was born 1592, Humphry Henchman, biſhop of Saliſbury and London, who died 1675.

Burton Latimer was held by the heirs of Nicholas Malemaynes and Chriſtiana Ledet of the barony of Alan Dinant, who had it by gift of king Henry grandſon of king Richard, and who fought againſt the king of France's champion between Giſors and Trie[i]. 17 Edward II. Gerard de Eyleſted held it of Latimer lord of Sutton, by ſervice of an ounce of ſilk or 12*d*. It now belongs to John Harper, eſq.[k]

At Ruſhden near Higham Ferrars was born Daniel Whitby 1638, a learned commentator and poleміſt, who died 1726.

"Higham Ferrers is a market town[l]. There is a "collegiate church and a graminar ſchool, and a "caſtel now of late clene fallen and taken down. "There is a mair[m]." The ſite of the caſtle is divided into two parts from eaſt to weſt, the ſouth part two acres, the north is about four, with a deep moat on the eaſt and ſouth ſides. The market croſs is ſurmounted by a ſtone cube with reliefs of the Crucifixion. The church is a handſome building; the ſteeple and weſt doors recede; the weſt porch is adorned with ten rude roundeaux of the hiſtory of the Paſſion. The ſpire and ſteeple were rebuilt 1632. Archbiſhop Chicheley who was born here, whoſe parents and brother have handſome braſſes in the church, and whoſe family name occurs till within the laſt hundred years in the regiſter, founded here ult. Henry V. a college for a maſter and ſeven canons, four clerks, (one a grammar maſter, another a muſic maſter) and ſix choriſters; the clear annual revenue 166*l*.[n] One wing of the gateway remains, late an inn. The ſchool at the north-weſt end of the church is neglected, but the almſhouſe of the ſame foundation on the ſouth ſide of the church ſubſiſts, divided into cabins for the beadſmen, of whom the firſt is ſtyled prior. Here was an hoſpital ſo early as the 13th century, founded by ſome of the Ferrars. The town was incorporated by Philip and Mary, and ever ſince has ſent one member to parliament[o].

In Irchеſter or Archeſter at Cheſter, in records anIrcheſter. tiently called Cheſter parva and ſuper aquam, a hamlet of one houſe, is a fortification of an oblong ſquare incloſing about 18 acres within a ſtone wall, in ſome places about nine feet thick, of which the outer courſes of the ſtone are placed flatways, the inner endways; the longeſt ſides run north and ſouth. It was ſituated on a ground declining to the river which runs under the north wall. Among the ruins on the ſouth ſide have been found two plain oblong quadrangular ſtone pillars four feet long and almoſt two broad, which by their form ſeemed altars; alſo fragments of teſſelated pavements, coins of Adrian, Fauſtina, Antoninus, Gratian, Conſtantine, and 45 braſs coins in an urn with a ring and chain hanging to it. Moreton thinks it a ſummer ſtation, the winter one of which he places at Irchеſter[p].

At Artleboro' or Irtlingboro', pleaſantly ſeated in a Attleborough valley, was a college, founded by John Pyel 49 Edward III. for a dean, five canons, and four clerks, valued at £.64, of which a very great part remains near the church. Here was another church converted into a manſion houſe[q].

At Thingdon alias Finedon is the ſeat of ſir Wil- Thingdon. liam Dolben, bart. great grandſon of John archbiſhop of York, whoſe eldeſt ſon Gilbert was the firſt baronet of the family[r]. Leland[s] mentions Fineton bridge under which Kettering water runneth.

In Great Adington church is a monument for Hen- Great Adington. ry Vere, who died t. Henry VIII.[t]

Woodford on the Nen had been the ſeat of lord St. Woodford. John of Bletſoe from the reign of Elizabeth, but was taken down 1783. Two ſmall coins of the lower empire, one inſcribed CONSTANTINOPOLIS, have been found in the field here, and near the town are three large hills in a line at a little diſtance from each other, which have the appearance of tumuli. Roman tiles and fragments of a teſſelated pavement with an urn have been found here[u].

"Thrapeſton village, where the lord Mordant is Thrapſton. "lord by copartion with Brown the ſerjeant and "ſir Wiſton Brown's ſon. Thrapſton bridge over "Avon has eight arches of ſtone[x]." In making the road between this place and Market Harborough were found ſeveral marks of burial; aſhes, ſkeletons, and urns, helmets, ſpears, bones of beaſts, and ſtags horns, amber and glaſs beads, fibulæ, petrified wood, and defaced coins, and at Kettering foſſil bones[y]. Lord St. John had a fair gold Valentinian found here[z]. The Nen was made navigable hither 1737.

"At the very end of Thrapſton bridge ſtand "ruins of a very large hermitage and principally "well builded, but a late diſcovered and ſuppreſſid; "and hard by is the town of Iſelep on Avon as on Iſlep. "the further ripe, and about two miles further,

[f] Bridges II. 56. Tan. 383.
[g] Bridges II. 45.
[h] Ib. I. 574.
[i] Inq. 19 H. III. Corton MS. Jul. C. VII.
[k] Bridges II. 222.
[l] Lel. I. 2.
[m] Ib. V. 94.
[n] Tan. 388.
[o] Bridges II. 169.
[p] Ib. 181.
[q] Tan. 388. Bridges II. 338.
[r] Bridges II. 256.
[s] Lel. I. 9.
[t] Bridges II. 203.
[u] Ib. 265—269.
[x] Lel. I. 6.
[y] Gent. Mag. 1757, Jan. p. 19. and Dr. Maſon's account to the Ant. Soc. 1754.
[z] Bridges II. 269.

"but

Draiton.

"but not upon Avon river is Draiton village and "caſtle, the prettieſt place in thoſe quarters, long-"ing, as Iſelep doth, to lord Mordant in copartion. "Staford earl of Wiltſhire, uncle to Edward late "duke of Buckingham, had Draiton by an heir ge-"neral of the younger Green, and kept his houſ-"hold in it. The great Grene gave to his eldeſt "ſon Grenes Norton with a great portion of lands, "and Draiton with other lands to his younger ſon. "This Draiton caſtle was moſt builded by Greene "that was ſo great a man in king Richard II's days. "His lands came to two daughters[a]." The preſent houſe was built by Henry Green about the end of Henry VI. embattled, with turrets, furniſhed with many good portraits of the Mordant family and of Henry VII. and VIII, by Holbein, and many valuable articles of the Arundelian collection belonging to the lady Elizabeth ſecond daughter of ſir John Germain, who married Mary daughter of Henry earl of Peterborough, and widow of Henry Howard duke of Norfolk, great nephew of Thomas earl of Arundel. On her death 1770, moſt of them were ſold by auction in London. The eſtate and houſe belong by her will to George viſcount Sackville, who took the name of Germain. Sir Henry Green chief juſtice of England t. Edward III. ſucceeded the Draytons here, and his ſon Henry for his inviolable allegiance to Richard II. was ſurprized in Briſtol caſtle, and beheaded by Henry IV. His heirs female brought it to the Staffords earl of Wilts, one of whoſe heirs female brought it to the lord Mordant her firſt huſband (her ſecond being Humphry ſon of ſir Wiſtan Brown) whoſe deſcendant was created earl of Peterborough[b]. A Roman pavement three feet by one and an half was found near Drayton 1736[c].

Luffwic.

The adjoining church of Luffwic contains ſeveral fine monuments, of Edward Stafford earl of Wilts 1490, lady Mary and ſir John Germain, and the families that poſſeſſed Draiton[d].

Aldwinkle.

Aldwinkle has two churches, and gave birth 1608 to Thomas Fuller the hiſtorian, who died 1661, and to John Dryden the poet 1611, who was grandſon of ſir Eraſmus Dryden of Titchmarſh, bart. and died 1701[e].

Tichmarſh.

Tichmarſh was the ſeat of the late lord chief baron Jeffrey Gilbert. The eſtate belonged to the Pickerings from the time of Edward VI. when Gilbert Pickering from bought it, whoſe deſcendant ſir Gilbert Pickering holds it[f].

Liveden.

Liveden was the ſeat of the Treſhams from the reign of Edward IV. Sir Thomas, knighted by Elizabeth, began a handſome manſion here of free-ſtone, in form of a croſs, but did not live to finiſh it; and major Butler, in the civil war, cauſed the timbers to be ſawed out of the walls, and with it built an houſe at Oundle. Here are yet remains of the old manſion-houſe, erected probably by ſir William Treſham of Sywell, and mentioned by Leland[g].

Clopton.

Clopton was the ſeat of the Dudleys from the time of Elizabeth to ſir William Dudley, bart.[h] who dying it was purchaſed by Anthony Williams, and was the reſidence of ſir Booth Williams, bart. grandſon of Peere Williams, a great lawyer, author of three volumes of Reports, whoſe ſon Hutchins Williams was created a baronet 1747, and died 1758. His eldeſt ſon ſir William Peere Williams was killed at Belleiſle 1761, and his brother ſir Booth dying 1784, the title is extinct, but the eſtate devolved to William Peere Williams, eſq; late captain of the Flora frigate.

Thorpe Waterville

At Thorpe Waterville, two miles from Thrapſton upon Avon, Leland ſaw the ruins of the wall of Watervill's caſtle[i]. Walter Langton biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield erected here a large manſion houſe, whoſe ſite is ſtill to be ſeen[k].

Achurch adjoining had the ſame lords Waterville and Langton and gave birth to John de Achurch monk of Peterborough, who compleated a regiſter of the convent named after him and ſtill in the poſſeſſion of the dean and chapter. Robert Brown founder of the ſect of the Browniſts was alſo born here, and died in Northampton gaol 1630: a little thatched houſe in which he lived in Thorpe Waterville is ſtill ſubſiſting with a date on the chimney 1618[l].

Oundle

At Undola on the river Nen near Stamford was a monaſtery before 711, when Wilfrid archbiſhop of York, died there[m]. It was a cell to Peterborough.

"Oundale hath a very good market, and is all "buildid of ſtone. The pariſh church is very fair. "One Robert Viate, merchant of the town, and his "wife made the ſouth porch and a prety almſhouſe on "the ſouth ſide the church yard, and a goodly large "hall over it for the brotherhood of the church, "and at the weſt end of the churchyard lodginges "for two cantarie preſtes founded alſo by them. "The ſcripture in braſs over the houſe bearith the "date of 1485. At the weſt-north-weſt end of the "church-yard is the ferme or parſonage place im-"propriated to Peterborough: it is £.50. by the "year. Peterborow was lord alſo of the town, and "now the king hath allotted it unto the queen's "dower. There I ſaw another church or chapel of "St. Thomas, now of our lady, as I entered into "Oundale town. The river of Avon ſo windeth "about the town that it almoſt inſulatith it; the "north bridge has a very long cauſeway to it, the "meadows lying on every ſide on a great level there-"abouts. I geſſid that there were about 30 arches "of ſmall and great that bare up this cauſey[n]." The church has a handſome froſted ſteeple, repaired 1634. The principal ſtreets are formed of ſtone houſes covered with ſlate. At Chapel end was a chapel. Laxton's foundation is now a private houſe ſupported by the Grocers company who pay the maſter 10£. per ann. he has alſo an exhibition of 5£. from queen Elizabeth, and a houſe at the weſt end of the church-yard. Wyat's foundation was intended by Laxton's executors for a perpetual eſtabliſhment for the relief of ſeven poor perſons[o]. Here is an hoſpital for 16 poor women and a ſchool, both founded by Nicholas Latham, rector of Barnwell, 1620: and at Aſhton an adjoining hamlet is a free-ſchool founded 1704 by Mrs. Creed[p]. Oundle has

[a] Lel. I. 6.

[b] Bridges II. 249. The mention of this houſe, which was the ſeat of the Mordaunts from Henry VII. ſuggeſts a curious work, of which only 24 copies were printed, intitled, "Succinct genealogies of the noble and antient houſes of Alno, or de Alneto, Broc of "Shephale, Latimer of Duntiſh, Drayton of Drayton, Mauduit of Weſtminſter, Greene of Drayton, Vere of Addington, Fitz Lewis of "Weſt Hornedon, Howard of Effingham, Mordaunt of Turvey, juſtified by public records, ancient and extant charters, &c. By Robert "Halſtead, Lond. 1685." Fol. The author's name is fictitious, the work being really compiled by Henry earl of Peterborough, and Mr. Rans his chaplain, rector of Turvey c. Bedford. It is illuſtrated with plates of arms, ſeals, &c. Eight copies are known to be now extant, viz. two at Drayton houſe, others in the Britiſh Muſeum, Devonſhire houſe, Heralds college, Caius college, and the Public Library at Cambridge. Mr. B. White bought one at Mr. Joy's ſale 1780, for 19 guineas. A 9th Mr. Gulſton's was purchaſed by Mr. Burrell for 20 guineas.

[c] Brit. Top. II. 48. [d] Bridges II. 246—248. [e] Ib. 208—210. [f] Ib. 381.
[g] It. VI. 38. Bridges II. 373, 374. Fuller. [h] Bridges, Ib. 367. 373. [i] Lel. I. 6.
[k] Bridges II. 367. [l] Ib. 366. Fuller's Worthies Northamptonſh.
[m] Tan. 374. [n] Lel. I. 4. [o] Bridges II. 410. [p] Ib. 412.

three fairs, The famous drumming well is in the Talbot inn yard, and has a pump in it. It ſounds like the rolling of the ſticks on the drum head, and in ſtill weather may be heard ſome yards off: the noiſe is the ſame whether the well be empty or full, and the ſound to perſons at bottom ſeems at top. It drummed for a fortnight 1758.

" At Barnewell village, a mile from Oundale, re-
" maine yet four ſtrong towers, part of Berengarius
" Moyne's caſtle, after longing to Rameſey abbey,
" now to Monteacute: within the ruines of the caſtel
" is now a mean houſe for a farmer[q]." Sir Edward Montague, lord chief juſtice of the King's Bench, purchaſed it of Henry VIII. at the diſſolution, repaired and beautified it, but it has ſince gone to decay, and the duke of Montague is now owner. It is ſquare with four round towers at the corners and two at the gate[r].

Lilford village upon Avon, where Elmes a gentleman had in Leland's time[s] a praty manor place, is now the property of Thomas Powis, eſq.

" Welledoen, an uplandiſh town, four miles from " Geddington, where the ſoil is ſomewhat furniſhed
" about with wood, and plentie beſide of corne and " graſs. On the ſouth ſide of Welleden, a little " without it, hard by the highway, ys a goodly
" quarry of ſtone, where appere grete diggyns. A " little without Welleden I paſſed over a brocket,
" and thereby I ſaw a fair chapel, and thens two " miles by corn, paſtur, and wood to Deene[t].

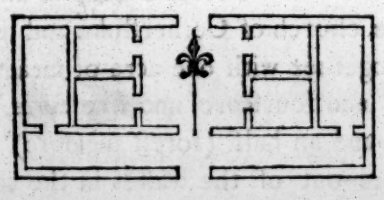
Weldon is a handſome market town with four fairs. In a corn field of lord Hatton's, called Chapel field, was found 1738, a Roman pavement 96 feet long and 10 broad, within a kind of gallery 100 Roman feet long in front, ſided by ſeveral rooms about 30 feet ſquare, in which were ſimilar pavements. The whole houſe was a double ſquare 100 feet by 50 of this form.



They covered over as much of the ſite as made a half H, leaving the centre expoſed. The pavement appears to have been patched by the Romans themſelves. With it were found a great number of coins of the Lower Empire, and ſeveral of Conſtantine and Conſtans, Magnentius with Gloria Romanorum, and Conſtantine jun. There are foundations of a ſtone wall, but the ſuperſtructure appears to have been timber, and burnt down, the pavement being burnt in ſome places, and tiles lying on it as at Cotterſtock[u]. It ſtands on an eminence on a delicate plain fronting the weſt, declining to the river Willy that riſes here, whence the town may derive its name Willy down or Wilton. It is divided into magna and parva. Higher up on the hill are many foundations, and they ſay a whole town ſtood there. Mr. Gale thinks theſe pavements belonged to fixed villas and not to camps[x]. This was drawn by John Lens and engraved by J. Cole, at the expence of lord viſcount Hatton, one of whoſe domeſtics cauſed a wall to be built round it, and a deal roof laid over it.

" There was one Ivo, ſometyme lord of Dene, Dene.
" about the time of king John, and he had the lands
" of a priory ſometime there, and cell to Weſtmin-
" ſter and afore ſuppreſſid of the abbot of Weſt-
" minſter upon a certain rent[y]." Deane belongs at preſent to the duke of Montague, who has a houſe and park there.

" From Dene to Benifield, two long miles. There Benfield.
" appere by the weſt end of rhe paroche church,
" the ditch and ruins of an old caſtle. Mr. Brude-
" nel told me that he read once in an old record of " the king's that Baſſingburne, or one of a like
" name ending in burne, was lord of it. Now it
" longith to Souch of Codnor[z]." At the Conqueſt it was the property of Richard afterwards ſurnamed de Tonebrugge; afterwards of William de Liſures, but being ſeized for debts due to the crown, king John granted it with the caſtle in conſideration of their payment to John de Baſingburn[a]. It belongs now to Charles Joy, eſq.

Humphry Baſingburn of Cambridgeſhire granted his caſtle of Benningfield or Benfield c. Northampton with the advowſon of the church, except the hamlets of Glapthorn, Southwick, and Cotterſtock mills to queen Eleanor for life for 100 ſhillings, 3 Edward I. 1276 to obtain the acquittance of a debt of 2050 marks 10*ſ*. due from him to a jew[b]. It was next in the Colvilles, then paſſed by Baſſet to Grey of Codnor and to Zouch. Sir John Zouch ſold it, 8 Elizabeth, to ſir William Hatton, of whom Robert lord Rich earl of Warwick inherited it, and ſold it to the duke of Powis[c]. It belongs now to Charles Joy, eſq. Thomas, brother of John Greaves, and, like him a learned orientaliſt, was rector here till he reſigned and died 1676[d].

" From Oundale to Foderingeye a two miles by Foderinghay.
" mervelus fair corne ground and paſture, but little " wood. King Edward IV. for the love that he bore
" to Foderingey had thought to have priviledged it
" with a market and with putting down wares and
" mills to have cauſid that ſmall lighters might have " come hither[e]."

" The town of Foderinghay is but one ſtreet, all
" of ſtone building. The glory of it ſtandith by
" the pariſh church of a fair building and collegi-
" atid. This was ſometime a nunnery: the nuns
" were tranſlatid to De la Pre by Northampton.
" Edmund of Langley, ſon to Edward III. got a li-
" cens to make a college there, but he did it not,
" being prevented by death. He left two ſons Ed" ward and Richard. Edward began the college
" and endowed it meatly well. It chanced that Ri" chard ſuſpected of treaſon was put to death at " Hamton, about ſuch time as king Henry V. went " into France. Wherupon at ſuch time as the bat" tle of Agincourt ſhould be fought, Edward de-
" ſired of king Henry to have the foreward of the " battle, and had it, where by much hete and throng-
" ing being a fat man, he was ſmouldered to death,
" and afterwards brought to Foderinghey, and there
" honorably buried in the body of the quire, upon
" whoſe tomb lieth a flat marble ſtone with an image
" flat in braſs. After Edward's death Henry V. con-
" ſidering the good ſervice confirmed the college,
" and gave it certain lands of priories aliens. Then " came after Edward IV. and ſomewhat envying the

[q] Lel. I. 2.
[r] Bridges II. 392.
[s] I. 6.
[t] Lel. I. 13.
[u] Brit. Top. II. 84. Mr. Lantrow's letter to Mr. Hutton 1730 in Gale's Letters, p. 460.
[x] MS. letter.
[y] Lel. I. 13.
[z] Ib.
[a] Bridges II. 396.
[b] Spalding Soc. min.
[c] Ib.
[d] Bridges II. 399.
[e] Lel. I. 5, 6.

" glory of Henry V. made the college of his own " foundation, and builded part of it as it is now, " and cauſed the body of his father duke of York " to be brought from Pontefract thither, and to be " laid on the north ſide of the high altar, where alſo " is buried Edward IV's mother, in a vault over " which is a pretty chapel. The fair cloiſter of " the college was made in king Edward IV's days, " one Feld being maſter of the college at that time, " who ſet up the figures of the book called Ethio- " pum terras [f] in the glaſs windows." The town is delightfully ſituated on the Nene, which meanders along the meads to Oundle two miles diſtant, but in a ſtrait line ſcarce one [g]. William Horwood of this town indented with the duke of York's executors 13 Henry VI. to build the nave, ſteeple, and two ſquare porches for 300*l.* ſterling, the duke to find carriage and ſtuff, for which purpoſe he enfeoft his caſtle and manſion here in truſtees, and if Horwood exceeded the ſum or failed in performance he was to become the duke's vaſſal for ever. The revenues of the college were £.419. per ann. [h] At the diſſolution the college and the choir were pulled down and the bodies of the founder and his family left expoſed till queen Elizabeth's time, who ordered them to be interred, and the preſent monuments to be erected, which are exactly alike, in the ſtyle of that age, conſiſting only of a frieze charged with falcons and fetter locks, ſupported by four fluted Corinthian pillars; in the middle of an ornamented ſquare compartment the ſhield of arms, and on the baſe the ſame devices as on the frieze, and the inſcription in Roman capitals almoſt effaced. An indulgencee penned in a fair Roman hand was found about the neck of the ducheſs with a ſilken ribband. The weſt wall of the cloiſters remains, the arches ſtopped up. The ſteeple is ſurmounted with a handſome octagon tower like Boſton: the roof of the belfrey is of ribbed ſtone. The windows are full of painted figures and devices and ſaints much defaced. The inſcription mentioned by Mr. Camden is painted on the ſouth wall:

In feſto martyrii proceſſu Martiniani
Eccleſiæ prima fuit hujus petra locata.
Aº Xpi centum ac mille . . . . . .
Cum deca quarto H v. tunc imminente ſecundo.

On the north ſide of the church is a free ſchool, founded by Henry VII. or Edward VI. endowed with £.20. per annum for a maſter, payable out of the exchequer by the receiver of the county. On the north-weſt ſide of the church in the town is a building, now a barn, with a row of blank ſhields in quatrefoils, and on two ſhields at bottom of the arch Caſtile and Leon, and Chequè. " There be exceeding goodly meads by " Foderingey. The bridge over Avon is of timbre. " The caſtle is fair and meatly ſtrong with double " diches, and hath a kepe very antient and ſtrong. " There be fair lodgings in the caſtle. As I heard, " queen Catharine of Spain did great coſts in late " time of refreſching it. It longid to Edmund of " Langley, and ſo lineally to the dukes of York." The caſtle belonged to Mary counteſs de St. Paul t. Edward III. and after her death to William earl of Northampton [i]. In the hall of this caſtle the queen of Scots, who had been in the cuſtody of ſir Amias Pawlet here, was tried October 14, 1586, by 36 judges, and on the 8th of February the ſame year beheaded in her 45th year in the ſame hall, in the preſence of four noblemen and 400 ſpectators. Her crime, of which ſhe was convicted by her own letters, was conſpiring the death of queen Elizabeth; yet our great Antiquary, writing in the reign of her ſucceſſor, diſguiſed the truth in his Annals, and equivocated like Elizabeth herſelf in his Britannia. Her own ſon, who wore her crown in her life-time, accepted the unjuſt fine inflicted on poor Daviſon as a full ſatisfaction, took the ſon of Cecil her warmeſt enemy into his favour when he came to the throne of England, and beat down the caſtle in a fit of revenge. It was ſo completely demoliſhed that only the earth-works remain, and the keep ſhews the fetter-lock form, round on the weſt and flat at the eaſt end [k]. Within the firſt work is a farm-houſe with ſome carved ſtones wrought into it, and at the ſouth-weſt corner of the inner trench are ſome maſſes of ſtone walls. Sir Robert Cotton carried the wainſcot of the hall to Connington.

The bridge over the river here was firſt built by queen Elizabeth, 1573, of timber, with three pillars upon the foundation. Daniel, firſt earl of Nottingham, and the other truſtees for William Saville, marquis of Halifax, rebuilt it, 1722, of freeſtone from King's Cliffe.

On the oppoſite ſide of the river is Elton, the ſeat of lord Carysfort. El

Cotherſtoke was made a collegiate church A.D. 1338, by one John Giffard, canon of York, who gave his ſaid manor of Cotherſtoke, with two mills there and the right of fiſhery in the river Nene, as alſo the advowſons of the church of Cotherſtoke and the hoſpital of Periho, together with one acre of meadow in Periho aforeſaid, and fourſcore and five acres, three roods, one perch and an half (foreſt meaſure) with the appurtenances out of the waſtes in the foreſt of Rokingham, in a certain place called the ſouth ſide of Totenhowe, and reaching in length from a certain way called Horſweye on the eaſt to Tottenhou hacche on the weſt: and in breadth from Benifeld Ridding on the north to Carem le Stebbynge on the ſouth, together with all houſes and other buildings thereupon, and common of paſture in the foreſt of Rokingham, to keep and maintain a provoſt (prepoſitum) twelve ſecular chaplains, and two clerks, who were to pray daily in the ſaid church of Cotherſtoke for the health and happineſs of the ſaid king Edward III, queen Iſabel his mother, and queen Philippa his conſort, and their children, and alſo for the health and well-being of the ſaid John Giffard and William his brother, ſo long as they reſpectively lived in this world, and after their deaths then to Co

[f] Theodulus in the 10th century wrote a learned eclogue; "A dialogue between Truth and Falſehood," printed among the "Octo Morales," and by Goldaſtus Man. Bibl. 1620, 8vo. and by Wynkyn de Worde "Theoduli liber," 1515, 4to. It was from one of Theodulus' eclogues that Feild, maſter of Fotheringay college, about 1480, ſet theſe verſes in a window of the new and beautiful cloiſter built about that time, Warton's Hiſt. of Engliſh Poetry, II. 167."

[g] Stukeley I. 33. [h] Tan. 378. [i] Dugd. Bar. I. 185.

[k] The form of the keep beforeſaid built like a fetter lock occaſioneth me to digreſs a little, and I hope with your pardon, which the graveſt authors in as ſmall matters have done the like. Edmund of Langley, duke of York, who built that keep, and garniſhed the glaſs windows there with fetter locks, when he ſaw his ſons being younger ſcholars gazing upon the painted windows, aſked them what was Latin for a fetter lock. They ſtudying and looking ſilently one upon another, not able to anſwer; "If you cannot tell me, ſays he, I will tell you. Hic, hæc, hoc, Taceatis, i. e. Hic, hæc, hoc, Be ſilent and quiet;" and therewithal added, "God knoweth what may happen hereafter." This king Edward VI. his great grandchild publicly reported, when he having attained the crown created Richard his younger ſon duke of York, and then commanding that he ſhould uſe for his badge the fetter lock open, to verify the preſage of his great grandfather. But this by the way. Holland.

pray for their ſouls. The ſaid John Giffard was by agreement to pay at Michaelmas yearly into the ſaid king's Exchequer, by the hands of the ſheriff of Northampton, the ſum of £. 1. 8s. 8d.¾, as an acknowledgement for the ſaid 85 acres, 3 roods, 1 perch and an half ſo taken in and incloſed from the waſte of the king's foreſt (as aforeſaid) and for leave to him to alienate, and the ſaid provoſt, &c. to accept of the ſaid donation notwithſtanding the ſtatute of mortmain. Some time after the ſaid John Giffard obtained a grant from the ſaid king Edward III. in favour of the collegiate church of Cotherſtoke, whereby the ſaid king for ever quits and releaſes the ſaid yearly reſerved rent of £. 1. 8s. 8d.¾, payable to him by the ſaid provoſt, and grants all the ſaid premiſes to them and their ſucceſſors for ever to hold the ſame in frank almoin [l]. It is probable the building which now joins to the ſaid church, and out of which there is an antient door leading immediately into the chancel was the chantry houſe [m].

In Cotterſtock church is a Roman arch facing the water, ſuppoſed by Dr. Stukeley the original Roman granary: the chancel was rebuilt by the religious. In the church is a fine perfect braſs of Robert Wintringham, minor canon of Lincoln &c. who died 1420. Arms of Samuel, a chevron between three ſquirrels, G. twice painted in the windows. The baſe of the croſs in the church-yard is inſcribed

Johs leek et Jack
-len uxor ejus hac
fecerunt fieri ✠. [n]

In 1736 a ſervant of Mr. Campion of Cotterſtock ploughing on the edge of that lordſhip adjoining to Glapthorn on a head land commonly called the Gilded Acre, turned up ſeveral little ſtones or teſſelæ, of which informing his maſter, he with an intimate neighbour opened the ground, and found a pavement 20 feet ſquare, very little defaced, the border ſeven feet wide, conſiſting of red, light blue and grey ſtones about one inch and a quarter ſquare, the work within the margin 10 feet ſquare, conſiſting of white, red, and blue teſſelæ of as many different ſtones in beautiful reticulated and other patterns, and in the centre four hearts, their points to the corners. The country people ſoon pulled it in pieces, except about a yard ſquare taken up by a neighbouring nobleman. In the ſtratum of looſe earth weſt of this pavement were ſeveral fragments of urns, ſome oyſter ſhells and ſome large nails. A bed of aſhes lay near this ſpot, with the horns and bones of ſome beaſt. The adjoining fields were ſcattered over with ſmall ſtones and pieces of tiles, and ſome fragments of urns; and a large freeſtone was taken up and converted into a watering trough; and other foundation ſtones. The neighbouring wood is called the Hall wood. Five or ſix coins of Valentinian were found among the rubbiſh thrown off the pavement, which was ſuppoſed to reach further weſt [o]. It was engraved by Vertue for the Society of Antiquaries.

Pierhoe or Perryhoe was a free chapel or hoſpital, founded by ——— Knyvet, but united 12 Edward III. to the adjoining college of Cotherſtoke [p]. Perry lane and Perry mill retain its name.

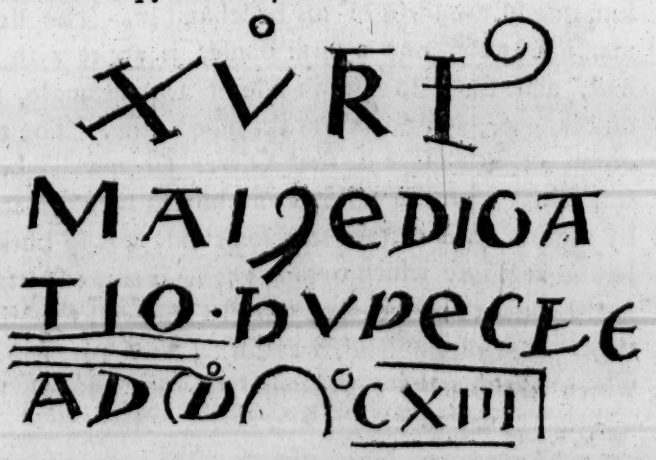
Dornford retains ſome of the old name of DUROBRIVÆ, where the road croſſed the river by a bridge. Caſtlefield at Cheſterton on this ſide the river, where, and not at Caſter, Dr. Stukeley places Durobrivæ [q], is a large tract incloſed by a ditch and rampart; the Roman road runs with a bold ridge through it. It was probably one of the Roman forts on the Aufona, made by Plautius prior to the Roman road. Allerton hard by in Huntingdonſhire is written Aldwelton, and Aldwalton. Hermen ſtreet beyond the river runs ſome way along the ſide of it, and then turns with an angle, and proceeds full north. Caſter is about half a mile from it on the hill. A piece of foundation of the wall is diſcernable in the ſtreet at the north-weſt corner of the church-yard, ſurrounding it, and taking in the hill; and the city lay below it, where ſeveral pavements have been found; and great quantities of Roman coins, earthen pipes, bricks, and other antiquities in the fields between the river and town, one of which is called Norman or Dorman gate, and the coins Dorman pence. Part of this is Berryſted, where, and in Millfield, which ſeems to have been a little citadel, other antiquities are frequently found. A tract or ſtreet running through the town is ſuppoſed by the country people to have been curſed by Kineburga, becauſe its gravelly texture prevents corn from growing on it. Dr. Stukeley [r] mentions coins of Antonius III vir, Auguſtus, Galba, Domitian, rev. Diana, Hadrian, rev. Cos. III. another rev. AEGYPTOS, a coin of M. POBLIC, rev. ... NVS. IMP. conſular denarii of Sabinus, rev. L. TITVR. the rape of the Sabines, and Silanus, rev. L. F. ROMA. Mr. Gibſon, late curate here, intended a hiſtory of this ſtation as a comment on the whole Iter. He ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries a moſt beautiful bronze term found here, having on each ſide of the baſe a bird and a rabbit. Caſter.

Here was a monaſtery, founded before A. D. 669, by Kineburga, daughter of Penda and wife of Alfred king of Northumberland, and deſtroyed by the Danes 1010 [s]. Her name is preſerved in Lady Coneyburrow way, which ſeems to have begun about Water Newton, on the other ſide of the river, and to have been paved with a ſort of cubical bricks [t]. On the road from Peterborough are ſeveral ſtones ſet in ſquare baſes that may have been Roman milliaries.

The church conſiſts of a nave and two tranſepts, the ſouthern longeſt, having a round arch to its weſt entrance. The north aile has three round arches and columns, the ſouth three pointed arches on hexagon columns. Againſt the eaſt end of the north aile are ſome rich arches with pillars hollow from the wall, and under them rich quatrefoil work, as if for a ſhrine. The three ſouth windows of the chancel are of the lancet form. Over its ſouth door is cut in raiſed letters the following rude inſcription engraved pl. III. fig. 2. from Dr. Stukeley [t], but here cut from a copy taken 1782.



[l] Mon. Angl. III. ii. 96. Tan. 387.
[m] Spalding Soc. Min.
[n] Ib.
[o] A.S. Min. Stukeley, Hiſt. of Carauſ. I. 169. Brit. Top. II. 48.
[p] Tan. 387.
[q] Palæog. Brit. II. 37.
[r] It. I. 78, 79. and 2d. edit. p. 12.
[s] Tan. 373.
[t] G.
[t] It. II. Pl. XIII.

The

The ſouth door of the church has carved round it in capitals the following inſcription, the end of which has been cut away:

⊕RICARDVS/BABY/RECTORIS/ECCLESIE/DE/CASTRE/FE.....

The tower ſtands in the centre cloſed from the church by a groined ſtone roof, through a hole in which the bell-ropes deſcend. The pillars have Saxon capitals, and the outſide of the ſteeple is adorned with ſemicircular archwork. In the ſouth wall of the nave, under an arch, is a ſtone coffin lid inſcribed with a croſs, under which ſeven ſculls were taken up at the burial of Mr. Popplewell the late ſchoolmaſter under it. There is a more elliptic arch in the wall of the tranſept. In the church-yard at the ſouth-weſt corner of the church is a large well of fine water, and at the eaſt end a ſhaft of a croſs charged with rude reliefs. Dr. Stukeley ſays the tower is a moſt beautiful remnant of the firſt Chriſtian architecture in the Mercian kingdom, and with the ſouth door over which is a very rude relief of our Saviour, and the upper window at the weſt end is of the original building of Kineburga[u]. The rectory is annexed to the biſhopric of Peterborough.

Mylton. The manor houſe weſt of the church belongs to earl Fitz Williams, whoſe ſeat is at Mylton adjoining.

Thorpe. At Thorpe or Longthorpe between Caſtor and Peterborough, the ſeat of the St. Johns, now of ſir Robert Bernard, was found 1720 a Moſaic pavement, and at the ſame time a conſular medal of L. Julius of Julius Cæſar's family, braſs coins of Claudius and Caligula, reverſe in a civic crown S.P.Q.R.P.P. OB. C. S. very rare[x]. Here are or were ſeveral coloſſal ſtatues, which Dr. Stukeley[y] ſays are part of the Arundel collection: but this is a miſtake, though five of them are antique and of marble. The church, which is a chapel to Peterborough, is remarkably mean. Near it is a low ſquare embattled tower, to which adjoins a farm-houſe, and againſt a houſe at the diviſion of three roads ſtands the ſhaft of a croſs ten feet high.

The manor of Thorpe Belet or Underwood in this pariſh was held by the canons of Wroxton c. Oxford in frankalmoigne, of the donation of John de Montague[z], or rather of Nicholas Belet their founder[a].

Upton. Upton was ſince the ſeat of Dr. Dove biſhop of Peterborough, and gave birth 1611 to ſir James Harrington, who died 1677.

Aye. At Aye in Peterborough great fen on Caer dike were found 1721, ſeveral celts, arrows, beads, bones, &c.[b]

Northborough. Northborough by Peterborough was the ſeat of the Cleypoles, of whom John, grandſon to Adam, married Elizabeth the favourite daughter of Oliver Cromwell, who firſt made him maſter of the horſe, and July 16, 1657, created him a baronet, and appointed him one of the lords of his bedchamber. The ſtone manſion houſe, now a farm houſe, is entire with its hall, and forms the ſouth ſide of a quadrangle, the offices, gate, and portal on the north ſide. The tradition of the place is that Oliver Cromwell's body was taken from the gallows and buried here privately by night. It is certain that ſomebody was ſo buried. In the regiſter, which begins 1538, is this entry:

"Elizabeth the relict of Oliver Cromwell ſometime "protector of England, was buried Nov. 19, 1665." which is the more remarkable, as her epitaph has been ſuppoſed to remain in the chancel at Wicken, c. Cambridge, at the right hand of her ſon Henry on a blue ſlab thus inſcribed:

"Elizabetha Cromwell de Ely obiit xvi die Sep-"tembris anno Chriſti MDCCXXII anno 9. ætatis "LXXIV."

The above entry has given riſe to a tradition that the protector's favourite daughter Elizabeth was buried here, though her body was the only one undiſturbed in Henry VII's chapel at Weſtminſter at the reſtoration, and the plate on her coffin there was given to the earl of Oxford by biſhop Wilcox 1732.

In the vicar's chancel at the eaſt end of the ſouth aile is a monument for James Cleypole, eſq; 1599, with his arms, G. a chevron A. between 3 heurts and a ſmall blue ſtone with raiſed letters run in lead for Robert Cleypole 1658. The vault has long been open and uſed as a charnel houſe.

At Woodſton on the edge of the county by Peterborough, lived its rector Robert Smyth, an indefatigable antiquary, who had made large collections for a hiſtory of the Sheriffs throughout England from the time of Henry II. to which Maurice Johnſon prefixed a preface on the office itſelf. After his death 1761, it is much to be feared the MS. was deſtroyed by his drunken illiterate brother.

What Mr. Camden quotes from Swapham about Peterborough, is from Hugh White's hiſtory of that abbey[c]. The gulf is now loſt unleſs we place it with tradition under the preſent bridge[d], where it is eaſily fathomed[e]. The church, the completeſt model of our early architecture, is the ſixth cathedral in England for ſize. It meaſures from eaſt to weſt 480 feet, from north to ſouth 78. It was built at different times. The choir and the cloiſter by abbot Watervill t. Henry II. The nave with its painted cieling and fine weſt front by his ſucceſſor Benedict. The great ſteeple 186 feet high by abbot London t. Edward I. The Lady chapel on the north ſide of the church (pulled down 1651 being ruinous to repair the cathedral after the devaſtation of the civil war) was built by abbot Paris about the ſame time, and the three chapels at the eaſt end now laid into one for the library, with a rich ſtone roof by abbot Kirton, the laſt abbot but one t. Henry VII. and VIII.[e] whoſe monument is concealed in it. The three chapels of the north tranſept have been laid into one for morning prayers. The weſt front is 156 feet wide, compoſed of three lofty and deep portals 82 feet high, the middlemoſt narroweſt in which is the great weſt door, and over it has been inſerted by abbot Waterville the chapel of Thomas Becket which might eaſily be removed and would reſtore the original magnificent deſign. It was finiſhed by abbot Benedict, who was prior of Canterbury and chancellor to that prelate at the time of his death, and the ſtones marked with his blood made the altar here[f]. The original windows of the church have in many places had their tracery altered in the reign

[u] It. I. 78.
[x] A. S. min.
[y] I. 79.
[z] Hill Commun. 27. H. III. rot. 18. a. Madox Hiſt. of Exch. 467.
[a] Tan. 430. Bridges II. 66.
[b] A. S. min.
[c] Ed. Sparke, p. 2. 4.
[d] Gunton's Hiſt. of Peterb. p. 1.
[e] Willis Cath. II. 477.
[f] Gunton, 286, 287, 292. Tan. 383.

of Henry III. The pillars of the nave are maſſive, ſupporting round arches, and the walls are adorned with interlaced arches. On the ſouth ſide of the choir was the ſhrine of St. Tibba, miſtaken for a cenotaph with an herſe over it for the queen of Scots, who was only buried in a grave or vault near it, from which her body was removed by her ſon to Weſtminſter; and oppoſite to this on the north ſide a plain ſlab for queen Catherine, inſcribed with her name; her tomb and herſe being removed by the Oliverians. Her body was diſcovered in the late new paving, but immediately cloſed up again. The ſhrine in the repairs of 1780, when the meaneſt imitation of Gothic in wainſcot was put up by way of altar piece, as if to heighten our regret for that antient ſtone one deſtroyed by the Oliverians and preſerved only in Gunton's hiſtory, was removed into the dean's garden, and the original ſlab of queen Catherine thrown away to make room for two iron gates. Here are only three monuments for abbots of the 12th century, brought from the chapter-houſe on the eaſt ſide of the cloiſter, and the monument of the abbot and 84 monks maſſacred by the Danes 870, a ſolid black and blue marble, ſhaped like a ſhrine, with the figures of Chriſt and the apoſtles, now placed behind the altar [c], and the date in modern characters.

The nave was built ſome time between the years 1177 and 1199, and the hiſtory of the church ſays that the cieling and its painting is of that date. The ceiling is of wainſcot formed into three compartments running the whole length of the nave: a principal one along the middle, and a leſſer one on each ſide. Each compartment is framed into panes or panels in the form of lozenges and half lozenges. The fillets and mouldings are gilt. The panes or panels are painted in diſtemper; a regular Grecian fret runs round their edge as a border, and within them are painted various figures. Beginning from the eaſt end of the nave and reckoning to the weſt, there is in the middle compartments a coat of arms, three otters and fiſh. This coat is borne by the Luttrels, and has an alluſion to their name. This family was at the Conqueſt or ſoon after ſettled in theſe eaſtern and fenny parts of the iſland, and they were perhaps principal benefactors to this abbey. The ſecond panel has painted on it a bad draught of the buſto of Janus. The third a groteſque fancy figure. The fourth the lamb triumphant in death, bleeding into the holy chalice, an emblem of the ſacrament of the paſſion. In the 5th panel is the figure of St. Peter. In the ſixth an emblematic figure characterizing the degeneracy and pride of the nobility carried on in full career by luſt in a ſituation of infamy. This is exhibited by a monkey carrying an owl on his fiſt run away with by a goat in full ſpeed, his face to the tail. In the 7th panel is the portrait of St. Paul. The 8th gives the portrait of a nobleman wearing a coronet. The 9th bears that of a mitred figure. The 10th a female figure crowned. The 11th a mitred figure; and ſo on to the 18th incluſive, crowned and mitred figures alternately; compliments probably to the patrons and benefactors of the abbey. The 19th panel has painted on it the figure of an eagle. The 20th bears a ſingular emblematic figure of a woman riding in a ſelf-moved cart. As Janus at the eaſt end of the ceiling may be ſuppoſed to have reference to the Spring, ſo this figure may be meant to repreſent the Harveſt dame and Harveſt moon. The hand and arm of the woman which bears the creſcent are muffled up in the drapery; the other hand and arm are bare. The panels in the two ſide compartments contain a ſtranger mixture of figures; ſingers, minſtrels, angels, and caricaturas. In the hands of the minſtrels one ſees ſeveral repreſentations of the violins as uſed at this day in many parts of Europe: of violins of a form nearly as uſed at preſent; alſo of the mandoline [d], the guitar, and dulcimer. There are ſimilar figures of angels playing on ſimilar inſtruments of muſic carved in alto relievo on the tympana of the arches in the eaſt part of Lincoln cathedral, which has therefore by ſome been called the choir of angels. In one of theſe ſide panels there is painted an emblematic figure of the Aſinus ad Lyram. In another there is an admirable caricatura of a muſician playing on the violin, deſigned with great ſpirit. In another of the ſide panels is the figure of a woman riding in a four-wheeled waggon. The drawing in theſe figures is not ſo bad as thoſe who ſuppoſe the art was dead, and did not revive till the middle of the 13th century muſt imagine. There is not indeed much diſpoſition or compoſition of light and ſhade, which makes the colouring appear under every diſadvantage. But there is a ſpirit of deſign in ſome of the figures both ſerious and groteſque, which marks ſome ſteps of genius [e].

The cloiſters exhibit arches of five different ſtyles, Saxon, Norman, pointed of the time of Henry III. pointed of the time of Henry VI; and the five that held the abbot's monuments are of this laſt period. The ſouth and ſouth-weſt doors are of the time of Henry III. The ſouth-eaſt door of the ſouth aile is of the original building. The windows were adorned with ſcripture hiſtory, the kings of England from Peada and the hiſtory of the foundation of the monaſtery; but theſe with the cloyſters themſelves, the old chapter houſe and library and the biſhop's hall were pulled down and ſold by order of parliament, and the church itſelf was the firſt example of their ravages in 1643, while the parliament forces under Cromwell himſelf lay here for the ſiege of Croyland. The biſhop's palace, formerly the abbot's houſe, is a plain antient building, much improved and in part rebuilt by the preſent biſhop. The deanry gate was built by abbot Kirton, whoſe rebus is on it. Over the weſt door are the arms of the deanry two ſwords in ſaltire between four croſſes impaling a chevron crenelle, below it a lion rampant, and in chief a creſcent and ſtar. Creſt on a helmet a ſwan collared. Over the weſt gate of the cloſe was St. Nicholas' chapel and hoſpital, built by abbot Benedict. This chapel is now a lumber room, with a ſchool adjoining; the fine windows ſucceeded by ſham painted ones.

The abbey was of the Benedictine order, and valued at £. 1720. per annum. The abbots were called to parliament by Henry III. but had not the honour of the mitre till 1400. Henry VIII. placed here a biſhop, dean, ſix canons or prebends, a divinity reader, eight minor canons, eight lay clerks, eight

[c] See a print of it by Mr. Carter ſuperior to that in Gunton, but not faithful.
[d] The number of ſtrings on the violin were four, as alſo were the ſtrings of the violin carved in alto relievo in the choir of angels at Lincoln.
[e] Mr. Pownall's Obſervations communicated to the Society of Antiquaries.

choriſters and a maſter, two ſchoolmaſters, twenty ſcholars, &c.[f]

The city has one other church, whoſe pillars by the ſpread of the roof have been puſhed out of their perpendicular and overhang in an extraordinary manner, having probably on rebuilding the church after a fire been ſet forward on the old baſes to gain room. Here was alſo an hoſpital dedicated to St. Leonard, founded by abbot Waterville before 1175 for lepers without the town, ſtill called the Spittle, near which is St. Leonard's well, whoſe water has been thought medicinal[g].

Peterborough is a corporation, has a market, and two fairs, one called Bridge fair, very conſiderable for timber and cattle, held juſt at the bridge. It has alſo two charity ſchools, and gave title of earl 9 Charles I. to John lord Mordaunt, who was ſucceeded 1643 by his ſon Henry, and he dying without iſſue male the honour deſcended to Charles ſon of John lord Mordaunt of Ryegate, and viſcount Avalon, ſecond ſon of John firſt earl[4], who was ſucceeded 1735 by his grandſon and nameſake the 4th and preſent earl.

The abbot of Peterborough gave MCCCXX marks for himſelf and the knights and five tenants of the Naſſum Burgi, that the Naſſum Burgi might be deafforeſted, as alſo a palfrey to have the king's letters patent that nobody might hunt in the Naſſum Burgi, unleſs they had the conſent of the abbot and the knights and free tenants[h]. This now makes Naſborough hundred.

The inconveniences mentioned from the floods of the Nen have been remedied ſince Mr. Camden's time by draining and embanking[5].

Carſdike. Peterborough great fen is bounded to the weſt by the famous Carſdike before-mentioned in Huntingdonſhire. It runs from the Nene at Stanground ſluices, where it enters this county, to the Welland, by Peakirk and Wuldram hall by Deeping gate along the top of Deeping fen by Swaton in Lincolnſhire, and thence to the river Witham about three miles below Lincoln. "It appears to have entered the old "chanel of the Nyne in that part of it which is a "quarter of a mile below Peterborough. The firſt "viſible marks of it are a little below the houſe "called the Low, about a furlong north of the old "river; the ground nearer the river being a moraſs "it has gradually in time been filled up. It paſſes "through the field at Peterborough called the "Boon field in a ſtrait direction northward to Newark "a ſmall village; thence on the weſt ſide of Eye to "Eye Edgerley, where it is turned eaſtward that it "may paſs through a valley between two pretty "ſteep little hills: thence on the borders of Burrow fen having Paſton weſt of it to Wirrington "ends, the name of the ſheep common; thence between Wirrington field and a ground called the "Inhams, and ſtill on along the edge of the fen "land to Peakirk. Part of it on or nigh Wirrington field for about a mile in length has been uſed "as a drain to carry off the high land water into "the Weland. From Peakirk it paſſes to Northborough under a ſtone bridge and betwixt that "called Northfen and Northborough meadow, where "part of one of its banks appears plain enough, and "a piece of ground joining to it, is now called Cardike furlong. It runs through the eaſt end of "Northborough town by their cow-paſture, where "both its banks and chanel appear ſtill more evidently, unto that part of the north fen lying north "of the town, whence from their field end to the "river Weland it is ſtill more plain. Its courſe "from the hill above Eye Edgerly to the Weland is "ſtrait. It enters that river at the eaſt end of "Deeping gate, a village ſo called, at a place where "is now a ſluice. From Northborough to the Weland it is 20 yards broad, its banks about three "feet high. In many other places it bears the "ſame breadth, and where it is not ſo broad it appears to have been in part filled up. It has now "the name of Cardike wherever it is ſomething viſible, in all its whole courſe from the Nen to the "Weland which is about eight miles. In ſome "parts of it particularly between Northborough and "the Weland it is now generally without water unleſs "in a wet ſeaſon. In Lincolnſhire along its courſe "from the Weland to the Witham are the like foot-"ſteps of it in many places[i]."

Foſſil ſhells and wood were found 30 feet deep in digging a well at Flitton near Peterborough 1739[k]. Flit

"A mile from Deping market is the ruin of a Ma "caſtle called Maſſeye, whereof ſome part ſtandith "yet[l]. It was by all likelihood the lord Wake's "houſe. Of late days it appertained to the counteſs of Richmond, king Henry VIII's mother. "Paynel ſaid that lord Cromwell builded a piece of "Maxey caſtle[m]."

Maxey was one of the manors wherewith the good Ma counteſs of Richmond intended to have augmented the foundation of St. John's college, Cambridge[n]. It was the reſidence of her mother Margaret ducheſs dowager of Somerſet.

In Etton was Woodcroft houſe, which the rev. Dr. W Hodſon, rector of Offington, c. Lincoln, the favourite ho and faithful chaplain of Charles I. whom he accompanied in his eſcape from Oxford to the Scots, 1647, made a garriſon, and was barbarouſly murdered there 1648[o].

Pega ſettled on the death of her brother Guthlac 714 in a cell at Peykirk. Edmund Atheling made it P a monaſtery, which, though twice deſtroyed by the Danes, ſubſiſted till 1048, when the abbot of Peterborough got the houſe and the monks removed to Croyland[p]. Part of the college remains: the church is not very antient, though the bells hang expoſed in a ſtone frame or belfrey at the weſt end as in ſeveral churches in Lincolnſhire, Northumberland, and in this county.

The Welland, called in the Saxon Chronicle[q] Peolud, and by Florence of Worceſter Weolund, was made navigable 13 Elizabeth[6]. Its ſource is in the ponds of the vicarage at Sibbertoft, which manor was held t. Edward I. by Nicholas Le Archer, by ſervice of finding a foot ſoldier with a bow and arrows in the king's army 40 days; not of carrying the king's bow through all the foreſts in England, which, though the ſerjeantry of this family 2 Edward I. does not relate to this maner. On Fox hill in this [f] Tan. 371. [g] Gunton, 285. 317. Tan. 379. [4] G.

[h] Mag. Rot. 2 H. III. rot. 6 a. Madox, Hiſt. Exch. 284. Du Cange underſtands the word Naſſa as ſynonymous with piſcaria, but in his firſt inſtance there is nothing to lead to that meaning. [5] G.
[i] Moreton, 514, 515. [k] Spalding Soc. min. [l] Lel. VII. 47.
[m] Ib. VI. 60. [n] Baker's preface to her Funeral Sermon.
[o] Peck, Deſid. Cur. 347. 380. [p] Tanner, 374. [q] P. 109. [6] G.

pariſh was a caſtle, and below it on a point is a round mount with a trench to the ſouth, and below that a ſemicircular bank and trench encloſing half an acre. The king's ſtandard at the battle of Naſeby was erected on the Moot hill here[r].

At Eaſt Farndon near Harborough is a camp on a hill double trencht.

Great Oxendon church is remarked by Moreton for its echo returning to the weſt part of the hill near 700 feet off 13 ſyllables and on the ſouth ſide fewer[s].

Braybrok caſtle, "upon Wiland water, was made "and embatelid by licens that one Braybrok a no- "bleman in theſe days did obteine. Mr. Griphin "is now owner of it; he is a man of fair landes[t]." It ſtood low and was double ditched, and probably built t. Edward I. ſince in the 32d of that reign Thomas Latimer obtained licence to embattle his manor houſe here. Part of it was accidentally blown up while it belonged to the Griffins, of whom Edward ſon of ſir Edward Griffin treaſurer of the chamber to Charles II. was created 4 James II. lord Griffin of Braybrok. On that king's abdication he attended him to France, and was outlawed and taken 1708 intending to invade Scotland. He was reprieved by queen Anne till his death 1710. His grandſon Edward turning proteſtant took the oaths and ſeat in parliament 1727, but dying 1742 without iſſue male the title became extinct. His eldeſt daughter married John Whitwell, eſq. of Oundle, by whom ſhe had John Griffin, who, on the death of his aunt ducheſs of Porſmouth, took the name of Griffin, and was advanced 1784 to the title of lord Howard of Walden. This eſtate is now ſold out of the family. Here was born Robert Braybrok biſhop of London 1381—1404, whoſe corpſe was found intire in St. Paul's after the fire[u]. The Griffins removed to Dingley adjoining, where they had a manſion rebuilt, in part 1558, when the park was made, and part later[x]; now the ſeat of John Peach Hungerford, eſq. where have been found an antient bead and a coin of Cunobelin[7], and where was a preceptory of the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem t. Stephen, valued at £.108. 13s. 6d.[y].

Carlton is the ſeat of ſir John Palmer, bart. whoſe family held it t. Edward IV. Sir Geoffery Palmer, attorney general, founded here an almſhouſe for three men and three women[z].

Rockingham is a market town, and the ſeat of the Watſons, of whom Sir Lewis was 20 Charles I. created lord Rockingham, and ſucceeded 1652 by his ſon Edward, who by Anne eldeſt daughter of the famous Thomas earl of Stafford[a] had Lewis his ſucceſſor 1691, who dying 1723, was ſucceeded by his grandſon Lewis, and he 1745 by his uncle William earl of Strafford, who took the name of Wentworth, and dying 1723, was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas, created marquis of Rockingham 1746, who dying 1750, was ſucceeded by his ſon Charles the ſecond marquis, who dying 1782 the title is extinct.

Rockingham caſtle was taken by Henry VIII. 1220[b]. "The caſtle on a ſtoney hill in the utter "part of the ſide of Rockingham foreſt falleth to "ruin[c]." It was in the crown at the Conqueſt. Henry III. and Edward III. reſided much in it, and in its chapel was held the council to determine the diſpute between William Rufus and Anſelm archbiſhop of Canterbury touching the right of inveſtiture and obedience to the ſee of Rome, Sunday March 11, 1094[d]. It was granted by James I. to the marquis of Buckingham, who paſſed it the ſame year to ſir Lewis Watſon, bart. who garriſoned it for Charles I. and was 1644 created baron Rockingham of Rockingham caſtle, from whom it has deſcended to the preſent poſſeſſor lord Sondes[e].

"The caſtle of Rockingham ſtandeth on the top "of an hille right ſtatelie, and hath a mighty ditch "and bulwarkes agayne without the ditche. The "utter walles of it yet ſtonde; the kepe is exceed- "ing faire and ſtrong, and in the waulles be certein "ſtrong towers. The lodgings that were within the "area of the caſtelle be diſcoverid and faul to ruine. "One thing in the wallis of this caſtelle is much to "be notid, that is that they be embatelid on booth "the ſides. So that if the area of the caſtelle were "won by cumming in at other of the two greate "gates of the caſtelle, yet the kepers of the waulles "might defende the caſtelle. I markid that there is "a ſtronge tower in the area of the caſtell, and from "it over the dungeon dike is a drawbridge to the "dungeon toure. There lyith a greate valley under "the caſtelle of Rokingham very plentiful of corne "and graſſe. The foreſt of Rokingham after the "olde perambulation is aboute a 20 miles yn lenght, "and in bredthe 5 or 4 miles in ſum places, and in "ſum leſſe[f]. There be dyvers lodges for kepers of "falow deer yn it. And withyn the precincte of it "is good corne and paſture and plentie of woodde. "The launde of Benifeld with [in] this foreſt is "ſpatious and [faire] to courſe yn[g]. The faireſt "game of the foreſt is ſeen at a place in the foreſt "caullid launde of Benefield[h]."

"At this time there be 2 houſes of the Treſhams "in Northamptonſhire. The elder brother's houſe "is now commonly at Ruſchton by Katering: but Ruſhton. "he calleth himſelf commonly Treſham of Liveden Liveden. "2 miles from Undale in Northamptonſhire, where "yet ſtandeth part of an antient manor place and "goodly medows about it, and there hath Treſham "300 marks by the year. This Treſham hath alſo "a manor and place at Sywell 3 or 4 miles north Sywell. "from Northampton[i]." The gateway and one wing of the houſe at Liveden are or were lately remaining. The ſhell of the new houſe remains, begun probably by ſir Thomas Treſham in the reign of Elizabeth, out of which major Butler ſawed the timbers in the civil wars, and built therewith a houſe at Oundle. The eſtate is divided between ſir Rowland Gwynne and Mr. Thorney[k].

"Pipwell abbey ſtondith in Rokingham foreſt, and Pipewell. "mo abbays is not nor were, as I hard ſay, in the "foreſt[l]."

"From Rokingham to Pippewelle the late abbay "about a three miles of by wood and paſture. There "be faire buildinges at this place. The king huntid "at a great park of his owne caullid ....., It is [r] Bridges II. 73. [s] Moreton, 357, 358. Bridges II. 55. [t] Lel. I. 13.

[u] Bridges II. 9. [7] G. [x] Brid. II. 304.
[y] Tan. 379. [z] Brid. II. 295. [a] Dugd. II. 474.
[b] Mat. Par. 310. [c] Lel. V. 94. [d] Spelman Concil. II. 16. [e] Bridges II. 334, 335.
[f] "The foreſt of Rokingham is in ſum places a ii miles, in ſum places but a mile brode, and by eſtimation a xiiii miles long." Lel. V. 94.
[g] Lel. I. 13, 14, 15. [h] Ib. V. 94. [i] Ib. VI. 38. where ſee more of this family.
[k] Bridges II. 373. [l] Lel. I. 15.

" from Pipewelle a 4 miles[m]." Richard I. ſetting out on a croiſade held a general council here[n].

Pipewell abbey was founded 1143, and valued at £.286. 11s. 8d.[o] It is now the ſeat of col. Harcourt.

" From Metburn to within a mile of Pipewell is " mervelus goodly medow. Divers gentlemen of " veri faire landes dwelle in villages neere about " Pipewell[p]."

Heringworth. " From Dene to Haringworth a 3 miles be corne, " graſſe, and ſum woody grounde. The Lorde " Souche hath a right goodly manor place by the " paroche chyrche of this village buildid caſtelle " like. The firſt courte thereof is clene doune ſa- " ving that a greate peace of the gate houſe and " front of the waulle by it yet ſtondith. The ynner " parte of this place is meatly welle maintainid, and " hath a diche about it. The waulles of this ynner " courte be in ſum places embattelid. And withyn " this courte is a faire chapelle, in the bodie whereof " lyith one of the Souches byried, and a great flat " ſtone over hym. There is a parke by this manor " place, and a fair lodge in it. I hard ſay that this " place hath bene long tyme yn the Souches handes, " and that they have countid it for one of their " chefeſt houſes[q]."

" Harringworth is in Northamptonſhire and ſtand- " ith on Weland water[r]."

Herringworth came to the Zouches in the reign of Edward I. of which family was William archbiſhop of York 1342—1352. The male iſſue of the family failing in the reign of Elizabeth the eſtate was ſold to different perſons[s], laſt to Mr. Clark, who has a fair

Bulwick. ſeat at Bulwick in the neighbourhood, and the houſe is pulled down, but the chapel belonging to it in which the Zouch family were buried, was with the monuments therein reſerved to that family. It is at preſent no perſon's property, and the ſhell remains with a monument of George lord Zouch, who died 1560. South from the church are ſome poor houſes, and was formerly a chapel[t].

Laxton. At Laxton were lands held by the ſervice of hunting in all the king's foreſts and parks throughout Oxfordſhire, Buckinghamſhire, Huntingdonſhire, and this county, to deſtroy the vermin in each[u]; and the manor of Highteſley was alſo held on condition to find dogs for the deſtruction of wolves, foxes, &c. It is now the ſeat of lord Carbery.

Kirby. Kirby in the ſame foreſt was the ſeat of the Hattons, from the reign of Elizabeth, of which ſir Chriſtopher Hatton 1644 Charles I. was created a baron, and his ſon by Charles II. a viſcount which title expired with his ſon William[10]. The village is now reduced to this ſingle houſe, conſiſting of a ſquare court built by Humphry Stafford, whoſe name and creſt are on it and the dates 1572, 1638; the gardens were beautifully laid out and ſtocked with exotic plants. Here were curious portraits of the Hatton family, and a valuable library of MSS. The books have been ſince ſold by the late heireſs of the family. The houſe is ſaid to have been exchanged with the crown for Holdenby[x].

Deane. Dean was the ſeat of ſir Robert Brudenell, chief juſtice of the King's-bench t. Henry VIII. whoſe grandſon is the perſon celebrated by Mr. Camden. He died 1584, and his epitaph in the church ſets forth that he was

Hoſpitio deditus multum, muſiſque profanis
Et ſacris, patriæ gloria magna ſuæ.
Charus erat patriæ, pandenti ſigna vetuſtâ
Nobilium pulchra clarus in arte fuit.

His younger brother's ſon was created 3 Charles I. baron Brudenell of Stanton Wivill, c. Leiceſter, and during his confinement in the Tower for his loyalty, made large extracts from the records there, which are now in the library at Deane. At the reſtoration he was created earl of Cardigan, and his great grandſon George duke of Montagu 1766. Here was before the Conqueſt a priory, cell to Weſtminſter[y].

" Cliffe [King's Cliffe] park is partly wallid with ſtone and partly paled[z]."

" Finſhed [in Laxton pariſh] lately a priory of blak " cannons four miles from Stanford. In the very " place where the priory ſtood was in times paſt a " caſtle called Hely." [Caſtle Hymel dimoliſhed in the reign of John[a]]. " It longid to the Engaynes, " and they dwellid in it until ſuch time that one of " them for lack of children of his own[b], began a " priory there, wherby after the caſtle was pulled " down to make up the priory, ſo that now there " remaineth almoſt no token that ever ther was any " caſtle there[c]."

Caſtel Hymel, or Finiſheved, was a priory of black canons, founded by Richard Engayne, ſen. in the beginning of the reign of John, valued at £56. 10s. 11d.[d] Mr. Lynn ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1732 a very antient vellum calendar written 1544 within ſome northern county, found in taking down the refectory, 1730; it has St. Guthlac with the croſs, St. Swithin with a horn. This abbey was the ſeat of Charles Kirkham, eſq.[e] Mr. King rebuilt it, it having been burnt down, and he obliged to ſit in his coach during the fire. He is buried and has a monument in St. Alban's abbey church. It is now the ſeat of the hon. John Monckton. The preſent parochial chapel was built of the ſtones of Fotheringhay caſtle[f].

Apthorp came through a diſtant relationſhip to a family of Fanes to a grandfather of the preſent earl of Weſtmoreland, to whom it now belongs[11].

The deſcendants of lord Ruſſel of Thornhaugh came to be marquiſes of Taviſtock, and dukes of Bedford[12]. A fine old monument of a Ruſſel remains in the church. The preſent rector Dr. Proby, dean of Lichfield, has here an elegant houſe, and has converted part of the church-yard into an agreeable pleaſure-ground.

Walnsford is chiefly remarkable for an extremely good inn by the fine bridge over the Nene, and for a large and commodious wharf, in the tenure of Mr. Medmore, the duke of Bedford's principal receiver for his eſtates in this neighbourhood. The church, which is on the Northamptonſhire ſide of the bridge, is (like that of Thornhaugh on which it is dependant) in the patronage of the duke. The whole town belongs to his Grace, except a part on the Huntingdon ſide the property of Dr. Walcot of Oundle, and a few houſes belonging to Mr. Swan. It

[m] Lel. V. 94. [n] Spelm. Conc. II. 119. Hoveden, 658. Bromton, 1162.
[o] Tan. 380. Bridges II. 333. [p] Lel. V. 94. [q] Ib. I. 14, 15.
[r] Ib. I. 25. [s] Bridges II. 319. [t] Ib. 320. [u] G.
[x] Inq. 16. E. II. and 4 H. IV. Bridges II. 321. [y] G. [10] G. [x] Bridges II. 315.
[y] Tan. 374. Bridges II. 300. ſays here was no cell, only a grange to Weſtminſter abbey, which had this manor among their earlieſt poſſeſſions. [z] Lel. I. 25.
[a] Bridges II. 307. [b] He had two ſons. Bridges II. 307. [c] Lel. I. 25. [d] G.
[e] Tanner, 385. [f] A. S. and Spalding Society's min. [f] Bridges II. 309. [11] G. [12] G.

has

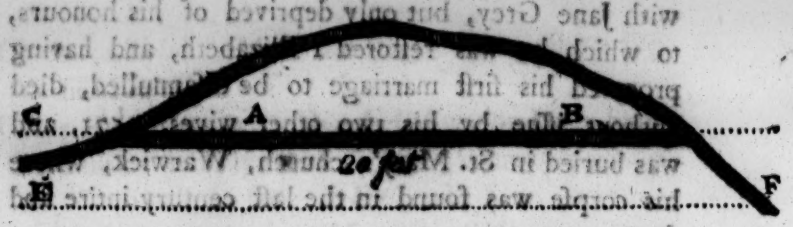
has been remarked as a ſingularity, that there is not a peal of bells in any one of the duke's churches in this county.

"Calyweſton for the moſt part is of new building "by the lady Margaret mother of Henry VIII. "The lord Cromwell had afore begun a houſe there. "Bagges or purſes remayne in the chapel and other "places[a]." The greateſt part of this is pulled down. It now belongs to Mr. Skryne.

Burleigh, one of the completeſt models of architecture in the 16th century, has received great embelliſhment from the deſcendant of the founder, the earl of Exeter, whoſe ſeat it now is. Here is a capital collection of pictures, and the park has been greatly improved by plantations and walks. At Wortborpe, a little diſtance from this, Thomas Cecil, firſt earl of Exeter of this family, built another handſome houſe, with a park walled about, which, though not ſo large as Burleigh, he uſed to ſay, was only intended for him to retire to while the other was ſweeping out. The duke of Buckingham and his family lived in it ſome years after the Reſtoration[b]. The greateſt part is now pulled down, and the remainder converted into a farm houſe. Here was a ſmall Benedictine nunnery united 28 Edward III. to St. Michael's Stamford[b].

The great Roman road called the Erming Street having gone through Huntingdonſhire, leaving to the laſt hundred in that county the name of Norman croſs, croſſed the river Nen and paſſed Caſter, from thence under the name of Norman croſs way and Forty foot way, puſhes directly to Stamford, about five miles diſtant from Caſter. In ſomething more than half way betwixt theſe two towns it paſſes through the pariſh of Barnack, where the ground on each ſide of the road has been opened a large ſpace to dig for ſtone, and theſe pits from a ſmall hamlet in this pariſh are called Southrope pits. In thoſe on the weſt ſide of the road many Roman coins and antiquities have been found both 1733 and 1753; from which remains it is evident that this was a conſiderable burying place during the government of the Romans in this iſland, and not the ſepulchre of any one family or party of men ſlain at one time near this place. The vaſt quantity of cinders and fragments of urns found there, and the coins of ſuch different ages as thoſe of Antoninus Pius, Marcus Aurelius, Claudius Gothicus, Magnentius, and Conſtantine the Great, afford reaſon to believe that it continued for a long time a public burial place. Its diſtance from any known Roman ſtation ſeems a little extraordinary, it being at leaſt three miles from Durobrivæ or Caſter, and more from Cauſennis or Brigaſterton. After paſſing theſe famous quarries, which furniſhed ſtone for Peterborough, Ramſey, Croyland, Thorney, and even St. Edmund's Bury, and which, by theſe diſcoveries, appear evidently to have been known to the Romans, the Ermine ſtreet enters a ſmall paddock belonging to Thomas Noel, eſq; at Walcote, and runs juſt within the wall, and upon leaving the paddock enters a large common field, where it takes a remarkable circular ſweep merely to comply with a natural ridge of the ground which runs in that form, though the ground on either ſide is equally dry. It makes here for about half a mile a delightful walk covered with turf, and is called the Forty foot way. From thence it enters lord Exeter's park at Burleigh, and through that going down to St. Martin's, croſſes the Welland, and there enters Lincolnſhire[i]. The overſeers of the highways of St. Martin's pariſh Stamford had in a ſacrilegious manner digged it up to mend their wicked ways withal[k].

Section of Ermine ſtreet by Wothorp park corner as it deſcends the hill north to paſs the river.



A B Old ſurface of the earth, a courſe two inches deep of ſmall pebbles and blackiſh ſtuff crouded together.

C D the original ſurface of the earth worn away by time: ſo that the firſt extent in breadth of the Roman road at bottom is 20 feet E F. This is the native ſtony ground. The perpendicular height of the artificial earth is three feet made of the ſtoney ground dug up at a diſtance. The double ſhaded line at top is the turf gathered by the roots of graſs growing on it in 1600 years. The turf near Bernack ſtone pits, though generally of 1000 years date, is not near ſo thick: the turf of primitive and unmoleſted earth in this ſtoney country in nine inches[l].

Mr. Lethieullier got from Mr. Payne ſome urns dug up in the burial place by the Roman road between Bernak and Walcot.

Bernak. Bernak abounds with antient reliefs and windows in almoſt every houſe. The church is a curious pile, containing ſeveral very old monuments: among others a croſs-legged knight, and a lady in an antient dreſs[l]. From the ruined manor houſe, which belongs to the earl of Exeter, he has taken much painted glaſs: it is going to be pulled down and rebuilt.

Stanford. The old houſe of the Caves at Stanford was pulled down, and a new one erected on the other ſide of the Welland in Leiceſterſhire[m].

Sulby abbey. Sulby abbey in Welford, was founded for Premonſtratenſes by William Wideville, 1155, valued at £. 258. 8*s*. 5*d*.[n]

WeſtHaddon. Oſtor hill. In Weſt Haddon field at the interſection of four roads is Oſtor hill, a high tumulus ſuppoſed of P. Oſtorius, the celebrated proprætor in Britain, where he died worn out by the delays of the war[o]. So Oyſter hill near St. Alban's is ſuppoſed to have been one of his camps.

Lilborn. Lilborn is on the Watling ſtreet. The caſtle is ſquare, with hillocks or baſtions at the ſouth-eaſt and ſouth-weſt angles, and to the north-weſt a high mount ſaid to have had a watch tower. About half a mile from the town is Roundhill not unlike Berry hill at Towceſter ſuppoſed alſo a watch tower. Moreton was told the coals found here was only a vulgar tale. They might as well be aſhes and burnt bones, ſuch as were found in levelling another hillock on the Watling ſtreet a furlong from Dowbridge. Many human bones and ſculls have been found about Roundhill, and tradition talks of a bloody battle between the Danes and Saxons here. The diſtance of Lil-

[a] Lel. I. 25. [b] G. [b] Tanner, 377. [i] Sir Charles Frederick in Archæol. I. 61. [k] Stukeley MS.
[l] Two good pieces of carving in oak, now forming the pannel of a pew, are engraved in Mr. Carter's Eighth Number.
[m] Stukeley's MS. letter. [n] Bridges I. 578. [o] Tanner, 381. Bridges I. 598.
[p] Tac. An. XII. 39. Bridges I. 599.

born from Bennavenna and Vennones induced Dr. Gale [p], and Moreton [q], to fix Tripontium here [r].

Earls of Northampton.

William Bohun was created earl of Northampton 11 Edward III. and dying 1360, was buried at Walden [s], as was his ſon and ſucceſſor Humphry the ſame year [t].

William Parr, created marquis of Northampton 1 Edward VI. was brother to Henry VIII's queen Catharine. He was ſentenced to death for joining with Jane Grey, but only deprived of his honours, to which he was reſtored 1 Elizabeth, and having procured his firſt marriage to be diſannulled, died without iſſue by his two other wives, 1571, and was buried in St. Mary's church, Warwick, where his corpſe was found in the laſt century intire and dry [u].

Henry Howard (ſon of Henry earl of Surrey, beheaded 1547) was created earl of Northampton 1 James I. and dying at his houſe, which he built at Charing croſs (now Northumberland houſe) 1614, was buried in Dover caſtle. He was chancellor of Cambridge, and founded three hoſpitals at Greenwich, Clun, and Caſtle Rising, at the former of which he had a cenotaph [x].

William Compton, eldeſt ſon of Henry firſt lord Compton, was created earl of Northampton 16 James I. 1618, and dying 1630, was ſucceeded by his only ſon Spencer Compton, ſlain at Hopton heath 1642-3, buried at Derby. He by his ſon James [y], who dying 1681, was ſucceeded by his ſon George 1749-50, and he by his ſon James, who dying 1754, was ſucceeded by his brother George; he 1758 by his nephew Charles, and he 1763 by his brother Spencer 8th and preſent earl.

[p] P. 99. [q] P. 531. [r] Bridges I. 571, [s] Dugd. I. 185. [t] Ib.
[u] Ib. II. 381, 382. [x] Ib. II. 275, [y] Ib. II. 404.

Rare Plants found in Northamptonſhire.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel; on Mantles heath at Farthingſton and by the mineral ſpring at Preſton.

Alchemilla vulgaris. Ladies Mantle; in the woods at King's Cliff, and in Sbrob walk Whittlebury foreſt.

Allium urſinum. Ramſons; in woods at Cliff, and elſewhere.

—— vineale. Crow Garlic; in meadows and paſtures: between Kettering and Thorp, alſo on the fence walls at Collyweſton.

Anemone Pulſatilla. Paſque-flower; on Bernake heath in great plenty.

Antirrhinum Elatine. Sharp-pointed Fluellin; in corn fields: at Cranſley.

—— minus. The leaſt Toad-flax; in old ſlate-pits at Collyweſton.

—— ſpurium. Round-leaved Fluellin; in corn fields: at Cranſley.

Aquilegia vulgaris. Common Columbines; on old willows at Braybrook and Oxendon.

Arenaria tenuifolia. Fine-leaved Chickweed; in ſandy meadows and paſtures: at Duddington and Finſhead.

Arundo Calamagroſtis. Branched Reed-graſs; in gorſey grounds at Radſton, and by the ſide of Wilmore park.

Aſperula cynanchica. Squinancy-wort; on Ufford heath.

—— odorata. Woodroof; in the woods at Sulby.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Black Maiden-hair; in Birchin lane, Halſtone.

—— Ruta muraria. Wall Rue, or White Maiden hair; under the bridge at Lilford.

—— ſcolopendrium. Harts-tongue; in a well in Caſtor church-yard.

Aſtragalus glycyphyllos. Wild Liquorice, or Liquorice Vetch; in a field at Rothwel.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade, or Dwale; in hedges and on rubbiſh: at Peterborough.

Campanula glomerata. Leſſer Throat-wort, or Canterbury bells; in chalky hilly paſtures: at Bernak, and in the Limeſtone grounds at Culworth.

—— Rapunculus. Rampions; in the wood at Badby.

Cardamine hirſuta. Hairy Ladies ſmock; at the head of the milldam by the watermill at Lilford.

Caucalis daucoides. Fine-leaved Baſtard Parſley; in a limeſtone-pit at Deſhanger.

Centaurea Calcitrapa. Star Thiſtle; in barren meadows, and by way-ſides: at Peterborough and Oundle.

Chryſoſplenium oppoſitifolium. Common Golden Saxifrage; in a ditch by the ſide of a ſmall wood at Litchborough.

Cineraria alpina. Mountain Ragwort; on Wittering heath.

Ciſtus Helianthemum. Dwarf Ciſtus, or Little Sunflower; in hilly meadows and paſtures eſpecially of a limeſtone ſoil: at Finſhead.

Colchicum autumnale. Meadow Saffron; in a meadow at King's Thorp, and in woods at Cranſley.

Conferva reticulata. Net Conferva; in the old lime-ſtone pit at Clipſton.

Convallaria maialis. Lily con-valley, or May Lily; in the woods on the north ſide of King's Cliff.

Conyza ſquarroſa. Plowman's Spikenard; in the lane leading from Finſhead to Dadington.

Cotyledon umbilicus veneris. Navel-wort, Kidney-wort, or Wall Penny-wort; in a cloſe on a ſandy bank by the road to Chapel Brampton from Church Brampton, alſo on walls about Delapre at Northampton, and at Peterborough.

Cratægus torminalis. Common wild Service-tree or Sorb; in the woods at Cliff and Oundle.

Cuſcuta europea. Dodder; in corn fields and on heaths: at Coſgrave and Oxendon.

Cynogloſſum vulgare β. A variety of Hound's tongue; on rubbiſh and by way-ſides: in Geddington Chace.

Droſera rotundifolia. Round-leaved Sun-dew, or Roſa ſolis; on bogs on the ſide of Halſton heath.

Equiſetum ſylvaticum. Wood Horſe-tail; in a mooriſh place in Naſeby field.

Erica Tetralix. Croſs-leaved Heath; on the heath at Halſton.

Erigeron acre. Blew-flowered Flea-bane; in very dry meadows and paſtures of a limeſtone ſoil: at Cranſley and Kettering.

Eryngium campeſtre. Common Eryngo; by the ſide of the old Roman way called Watling ſtreet, not far from Daventry.

Euphorbia Amygdaloides. Wood Spurge; in Sulby woods.

—— platiphyllos β. A variety of broad-leaved Spurge; in corn fields: at Coſgrave, and in the borders of Oxendon field.

Fagus Caſtanea. Cheſnut-tree; in the wood called Stumps at Farthingſton.

Feſtuca myurus. Wall Feſcue-graſs; on garden walls at Thorp Malſor.

Gentiana Amorella. Autumnal Gentian, or Fell-wort; in dry paſtures: at Cranſley and Lodington, and by Eaſton near Stamford.

Geniſta anglica. Needle Furze, or Petty-whin; on Halſton heath.

Geranium lucidum. Shining Dove's-foot Crane's bill; on walls, roofs, and in ſandy ſhady places: at St. Martin's Stamford, and on the ſtone walls at Bernak.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cudweed or Cat's-foot; on the heath at Bernak, and on Wittering heath.

——— ſylvaticum. Upright Cudweed; in Naſeby field, and in a grove of aſh trees at Thorp Malſor.

Helleborus viridis. Wild black Hellebore; in the cloſes near Whittlewood foreſt.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan, or Park-leaves; in woods about the mineral ſpring at King's Cliff.

——— humifuſum. Trailing Saint John's-wort.
——— pulchrum. Upright Saint John's-wort.
} on the Links, at Kettering.

Hypochæris maculata. Spotted Hawk-weed; on Bernak heath.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſſe; on the banks of the ſtone or ſand pits at Little Creaton.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in the Home cloſes at Rance, and in the ground near Newton Broomſhold church.

Juncus bulboſus. Bulboſe Ruſh; on the downs at Badby.

——— ſquarroſus. Moſs-ruſh, or Gooſe-corn; on the Links at Kettering.

——— ſylvaticus. Great hairy Wood Ruſh; in ſtone pits overgrown with wood about a mile ſouth of Cliff.

Juniperus communis. Common Juniper; on heaths and hilly places: at Brakeley.

Lactuca viroſa. Strong ſcented wild Lettuce; in hedges, and at the ſides of fields; at Northampton.

Lathyrus Niſſolia. Crimſon Graſs Vetch; at the ſides of fields: at Oundle.

——— ſylveſtris. Narrow-leaved Peaſe everlaſting; in woods and hedges: at Coſgrove, alſo upon the hill at Burrow Fen, and in woods at Brampton.

Lichen articulatus. Jointed Liver Wort; on an oak in Sholbrook lawn Whittlebury foreſt.

Limoſella aquatica. Baſtard Plantain; in a lane at Kelmarſh.

Linum perenne. Perennial blue Flax; on the balks of corn fields about Bernak heath, alſo on Wittering heath, and in the lane at Worthorpe.

Lithoſpermum officinale. Gromwell, Gromill, or Graymill; in woody and dry places of a limeſtone ſoil: near the Hermitage at Brampton.

Lycoperdon Tuber. Solid Puff-ball, or Truffles; under ground; in woods and high paſtures: at Ruſhton. Of theſe ſee Dr. Tancred Robinſon in Phil. Tranſ. N° 202. p. 824.

Lyſimachia nemorum. Yellow Pimpernell of the woods; in a grove at Pychley.

——— tenella. Purple Money-wort; in bogs on the ſide of Halſton heath.

Melampyrum criſtatum. Creſted Cow-wheat; on a buſhy common ſouth-weſt of Braybrook town, and in the woods at Yarwell.

Mentha rotundifolia. Round-leaved Horſe-mint; in the church-yard at Geddington, and in the rill running from the firſt head of the Welland at Sibertoft.

Menyanthes Nymphoides. Fringed Water Lily; in the Nyne at Peterborough.

Montia fontana. Water Chick-weed; on the downs at Badby.

Myagrum ſativum. Gold of Pleaſure; in a flax ground near the Welland at Dingley.

Myoſurus minimus. Mouſe-tail; in gardens and fields at Thorp Malſor.

Myriophyllum verticilatum. Verticillate Water Milfoil; in the Nyne at Peterborough.

Nepeta Cataria. Nep or Cat-mint; in paſtures and hedges in a limeſtone ſoil: at St. Martin's, Stamford.

Ophrys apifera. Bee Orchis; on a buſhy common between Blatherwick and Finſhead.

——— muſcifera. Fly Orchis; in the wilderneſs at Ruſhton.

——— ſpiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; in dry meadows and paſtures: by the way to Weekly windmill Weerkton.

Orchis uſtulata. Little purple flowered Orchis; on the ſtoney ground by the road between Duddington and Stamford.

Ornithopus purpuſillus. Bird's foot; on balks and lays at Creaton.

Origanum vulgare. Wild Marjoram; in buſhy places and hedges in a lime ſtone ſoil: at Finſhead.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moon-wort; on the heath at Halſton.

——— ſpicant. Rough Spleen-wort; in a rocky ground at King's Cliff.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; in the bogs at Thorp.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, True-love or One-berry; in woods at Brampton and Cranſley, and in Shrob walk Whittlebury foreſt.

Peziza lentifera. Seeding Cup-muſhroom; in woods and fields and on rotten wood: at Oxendon.

Phallus eſculentus. Eſculent Morel; in woods and hedges: on heathy banks at Walcot Houſe, at Weekly and Boughton.

——— impudicus. Stink-horns or Stinking Morel; in a grove of aſh trees at Thorp Malſor.

Pilularia globifera. Pepper-graſs; in Borough fen, Peterborough.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Butter-wort or Yorkſhire Sanicle; in marſhy places: at Wellingborough.

Polygonum Biſtorta. The greater Biſtort or Snake-weed; in the meadows by the Ouſe at Coſgrave.

Polypodium criſtatum. Creſted Polypody; in woods and damp ſhady places: at Brampton.

——— rhæticum. Stone Polypody; on a ſmall rock by the ſides of a ſpring at Badby.

Prenanthes muralis. Ivy-leaved wild Lettuce; on the tops of willows between Weekly and the water-mill.

Prunus ceraſus. Black Cherry; in woods and hedges: between Sibertoft and Marſton.

Ranunculus lingua. Great Spear-wort; in the Ouſe at Stratford.

Rhaphanus Rhaphaniſtrum γ. A variety of white Charlock; in the drains at Burrow fen.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants; on the banks of King's Thorp river at Northampton.

Roſa Eglanteria. Sweetbrier or Eglantine; in the grove at Great Oakly hall.

——— ſpinoſiſſima. Burnet Roſe; at the foot of Burrough hill, Daventry.

Rumex maritimus. Golden Dock; on the banks of Caerdyke at Paſton.

Sagina erecta. The leaſt Stitch-wort; amongſt the furze at Thorp Malſor.

Salix purpurea. Purple Willow; in oſier grounds at Peakirk.

—— triandria. Smooth Willow; in woods, hedges, and on banks of rivers; at Preſton and at Peakirk.

Salvia verbenacea. Common Engliſh wild Clary; in King's Thorp church-yard.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder or Dane-wort; in hedges and way ſides: at Boughton.

Saponaria officinalis β. A variety of Soap-wort; in the ſmall grove of a wood called Spiney at Litchborough.

Satyrium viride. Frog Satyrion or Orchis; in meadows and paſtures: at Foſter's Booth, and on a buſhy common ſouth-weſt of Braybrook.

Stachys arvenſis. Upright Ground-ivy; in corn fields: between Rothwel and Deſborow, and at Thornhaw.

Scleranthus perennis. Perennial Knawell; in old ſtone-pits by Highgate houſe at Creaton.

Scirpus fluitans. Floating Club-ruſh; in mooriſh ground on the north ſide of Badby.

—— ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus-graſs; in a ſmall brook on the right hand of the road from Kettering to Thorp Malſor.

Sedum Telephium. Orpine or Live-Long; amongſt the rubbiſh of the old caſtle at Caſtle dikes, and in the woods at Preſton.

Sherardia arvenſis. Little Field Madder; in the fields at Wittering.

Silene nutans. Nottingham Catch-fly; amongſt the corn between Harringworth and Wakerly.

Siſon ſegetum. Corn Parſley or Hone-wort; in corn fields and hedges in a clay and chalky ſoil: at Oxendon.

Solidago Virgaurea. Common Golden Rod; in the wood at Badby.

Spergula nodoſa. Knotted Spurrey or Engliſh Marſh Saxifrage; in ſandy places and moiſt paſtures: at Wellingborough.

Stellaria graminea β. A variety of Leſſer Stitchwort; in marſhy places: between Braybrook and Oxendon.

Tanacetum vulgare. Common Tanſey; on the area of the old fortification in a wood at Sibertoft.

Teucrium Chæmæpitys. Ground Pine; in the fields near Helpſtone ſtone-pits at Ufford.

Thlaſpi arvenſe. Treacle-muſtard or Penny creſs; in Wadenhoe field.

Thymus ſerpyllum ε. Lemon Thyme; on heaths and hilly places: at Thorp and in dry barren paſtures at Kettering.

—— ſerpyllum η. Hoary Thyme; on heaths and hilly places: at King's Cliff.

Tilea Europæa. The Lime or Linden Tree; in woods and hedges: at Thornhaugh.

Trifolium ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil; in dry meadows and paſtures: between Brixworth and Lamport.

Valeriana Locuſta. Lamb's-lettuce or Corn-ſallad; in the lime-ſtone grounds at Culworth.

Vinca major. The greater Perriwincle; under a wall at the north end of Southorp.

Viola hirta. Hairy Violet; at the bottom of an old ſtone-pit at Walcot houſe.

A

MAP

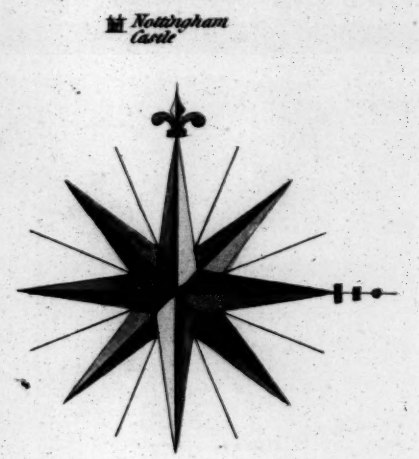
OF

LEICESTERSHIRE

from the Best

AUTHORITIES

Engrav'd by J.Cary.



NOTTINGHAMSHIRE

DERBYSHIRE

LEICESTERSHIRE

WARWICKSHIRE

Staunton
Shire Bush
Normanton
Bottesford
Elton
from Nottingham
Sutton
Granby
Barnston
Barston
Redmile
Langar
Plungar
Belvoir Castle
Wolsthorpe
Denton
Harby
Stathern
Prathorn Hill
Knipton
Hickling
Grange
Hose
Long Clawson
Piper Hole
Eaton
Eastwell
Goadby Marwood
Croxton Park
Saltby
Stonesby
Sproxton
Buckminster
Coston
Garthorpe
Wymondham
Edmondthorpe
Teigh
Wissendine
Ashwell
Langham
Oakham 4 Miles
100 Miles from London
Cold Overton
Knossington
Owston
Lady Wood
Twyford
Thorpe Satchville
Pickwell
Ashby Folville
Gaddesby
Great Dalby
Little Dalby
Queniborough
Syston
Rearsby
Thrussington
Ratcliff on the Wolds
Brooksby
Hoby
Frisby
Asfordby
Melton Mowbray
Welby
Sysonby
Kirby Bellars
Kirby Lodge
Gaulsbridge
Stapleford
Wyverby
Burton Lazars
Thorpe Arnold
Freeby
Saxby
Goldsmith Grange
Spinney House
Freeby Gorse
Welham
Goadby Marwood
Scalford
Holwell
Holwell Mouth
Ab Kettleby
Wartnaby
Dalby on the Wolds
Grimston
Saxelby
Ragdale
Thrussington Wolds
Burton on the Wolds
Walton on the Wolds
Wolds Thorpe
Server Sear Hill
Prestwold
Wimeswould
Willoughby
Over Broughton
Nether Broughton
Rempston
Normanton upon Soar
Hathern
Stanford
Loton
Dishley Grange
Sheepshead
Garnsdale
Burleigh
Broadhurst Hill
Barrow upon Soar
Seagrave
Sileby
Cossington
Rothley
Swithland
Woodhouse
Woodhouse Lizard
Mount Sorrel
Quorndon
Wood Thorpe
Outwoods
Beau Manor
Beaulieu Park
Line Works
Fosse Road
Thurcaston
Wanlip
Markfield
Groby
Ratcliff upon Soar
Kingston
Kegworth Br.
Kegworth
Sutton Borrington
Castle Donington
Hemington
Lockington
Isley Walton
Diseworth
Long Whatton
Breedon
Tonge
Langley
Belton
Belton Low Wood
Oakley Wood
Thorpe Acre
Osgathorpe
Barrow Hill
Lime Works
Normanton
Worthington
Stanton Harold
Pistern Mill
to Derby 11 Miles
Smisby
Church Gresley
to Burton
Black Fordley
Park House
Boothorpe
Orton
Packington
Willesley
Nether Seal
Chilcot
Appleby Magna
Appleby Parva
to Tamworth
Snarestone
Swepston
Heather
Ibstock
Nailston Wiggs
Bagworth
Newton Regis
Odston
Mailston
Thornton
Stanton under Bardon
Bardon Hill
Ringy Cross
Upper Grange
Swithland Hall
Ulverscroft Priory
Ansty
Newtown Unford
Groby Pool
Beaumont Leys
Birstall
Peatling
Humberstone
Keam
Quenby
Barkby
Barkby Thorpe
Thurmaston
Beeby
Barsby
Cranoe
Loseby
Marefield
Hungarton
Leicester
Market Bosworth
Bosworth Field
Sutton Cheney
Shenton
Shackerstone
Calloden House
Foston Pane
Burton
Barton
Ratby
Desford
Kirby Muxloe
Glenfield
Braunstone
Aylestone
Wigston
Oadby
Knighton
Evington
Stoughton
Thurnby
Scraptoft
Humberstone
Keyham
Queniborough
Syston
Barkby
Beeby
Thurmaston
Barkby Thorpe
Twyford
Thorpe Satchville
Ashby Folville
Gaddesby
Great Dalby
Little Dalby
Pickwell
Somerby
Knossington
Owston
Lady Wood
Melton Mowbray
Asford

WARWICKSHIRE

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE

RUTLAND

LEICESTERSHIRE

REFERENCES TO THE HUNDREDS.

1. West Goscote
2. East Goscote
3. Framland
4. Sparkinghoe
5. Guthlaxton
6. Gartrey

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree

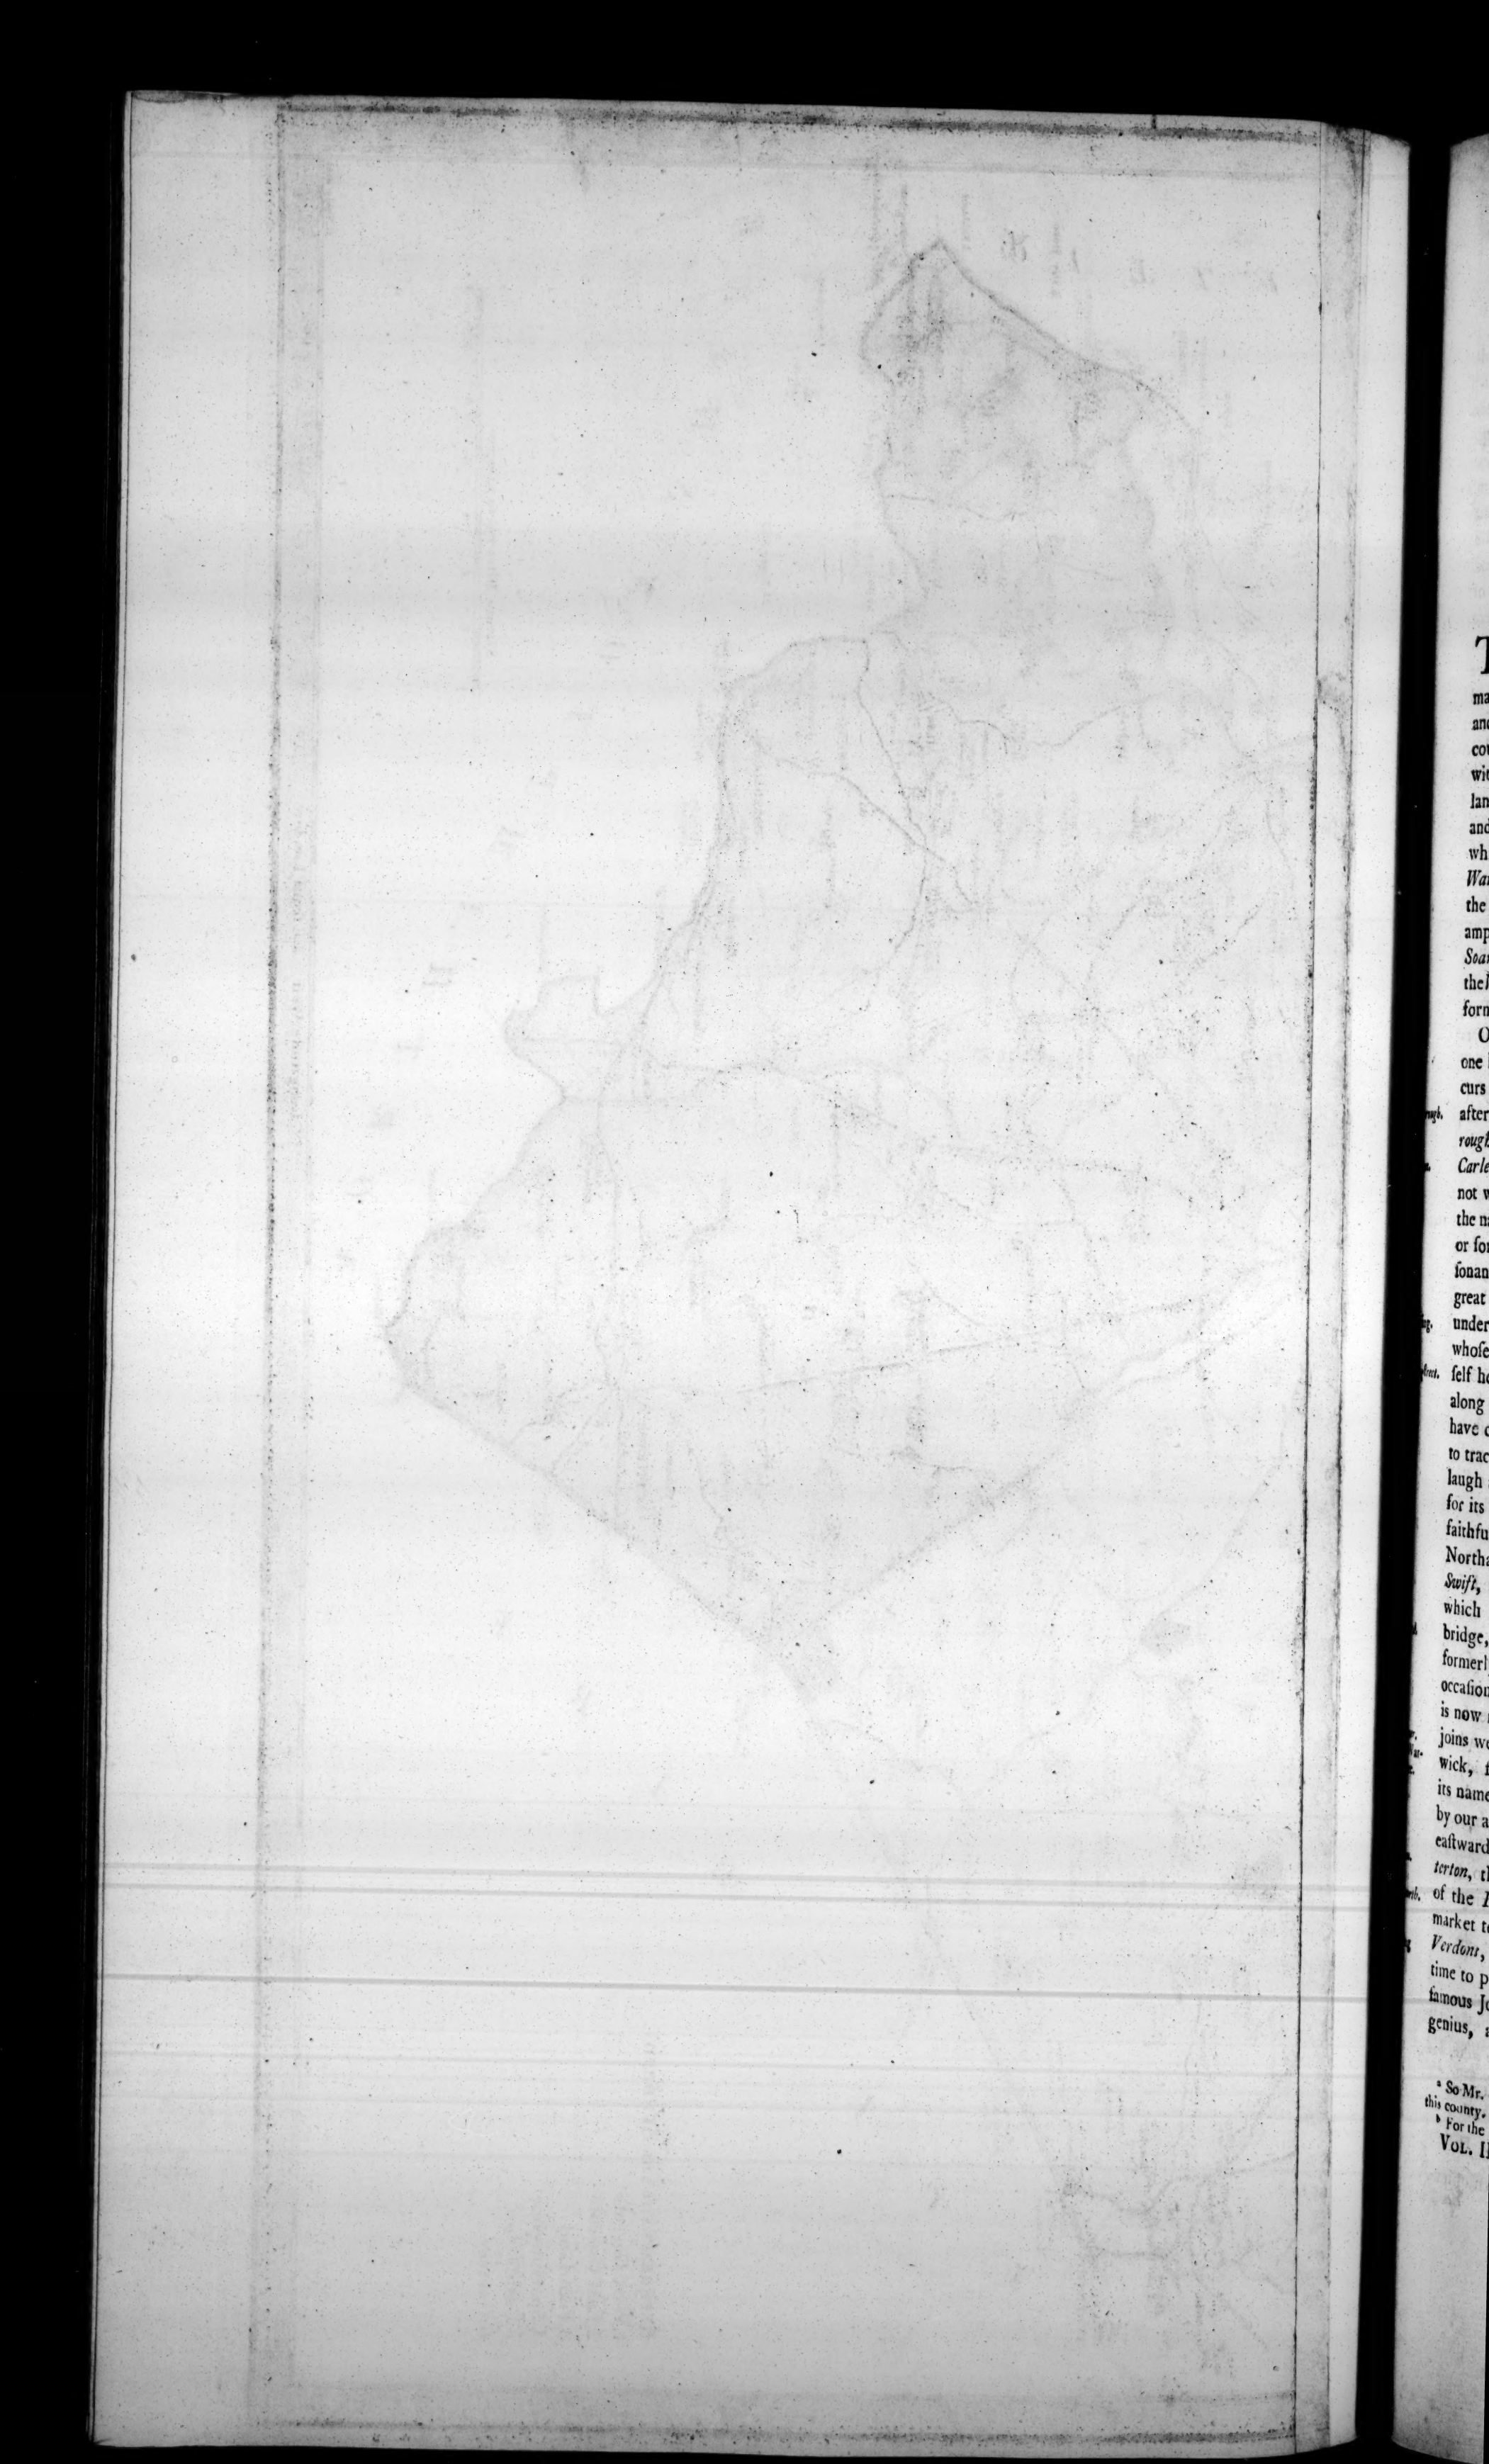
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

1° Longitude West 55 from London

30 25 20 15 10 5 0 5 0 45 40

35 30 25

E. Noble delin.



LEICESTERSHIRE.

TO Northampton on the north adjoins the county of Leiceſter, called in the ſurvey of England made by William the Conqueror, Ledeceſterſcyre, and in common language Leiceſterſhire. It is a level country, and fit for corn, but for the moſt part without wood. It is ſurrounded on the eaſt by Rutland and Lincolnſhire, on the north by Nottingham and Derbyſhires, on the weſt by Warwickſhire, from which it is divided by the Roman military way called Watlingſtreet, which forms its weſtern edge; and on the ſouth it borders, as I before obſerved, on Northamptonſhire. Through the middle part runs the Soar in its way to the Trent; and in the eaſtern part the Wreke, a little river that afterwards joins the Soar, forms many gentle meanders.

On the ſouth, where the leſſer Avon bounds it on one hand, and the Welland on the other, nothing occurs worth mentioning, except on the Welland ſoon after its riſe Haverburg, commonly called Harborough, famous for a ſheep fair; and not far from it Carleton, or the town of Huſbandmen, of which I know not whether it be worth mentioning that almoſt all the natives of it, by a peculiarity of the ſoil or water, or ſome other unknown natural cauſe, ſpeak in a diſſonant inarticulate manner, drawing their words with great harſhneſs out of their throat, and labouring under a kind of wharling[a]. The Roman road, whoſe ridge in other places is worn down, ſhews itſelf here very plainly, running in a ſtrait line north along the weſt ſide of this county. Its courſe I have carefully followed from the Thames into Wales to trace the antient towns. The reader will perhaps laugh at this expenſive diligence, or at leaſt curious for its expence. Nor could I have truſted to a more faithful guide[b]. From Dowbridge, where it leaves Northamptonſhire, it is firſt interrupted by the river Swift, a ſlow ſtream, notwithſtanding its name, to which it anſwers only in the winter months. The bridge, called Bransford and Bensford bridge, which formerly lay over it having long lain broken down occaſioned ſo famous a road to be diſuſed; but it is now repaired at the public expence. To this adjoins weſtward Ceſterover, but in the county of Warwick, famous for its lord ſir Fulke Greville, though its name implies ſome antiquity, Caſter being applied by our anceſtors only to old towns or camps. Thence eaſtward near the Swift we have on one hand Miſterton, the property of the famous and antient family of the Poulteneys; on the other Lutterworth, a ſmall market town, ſaid to have antiently belonged to the Verdons, near which is a ſpring ſo cold as in a ſhort time to petrify ſtraws and ſticks. Of this church the famous John Wiccliffe * was rector; a perſon of a ſubtle genius, and thoroughly verſed in the Scriptures, who drawing his pen againſt the Papal power, and the church of Rome, was not only perſecuted by them while he lived, but 41 years after his death his corps was inſulted, dug up, and burnt by order of the council of Sienna.

From Bensford bridge the road aſcends to Highcroſs, ſo called from a croſs that antiently ſtood there on a high ground, now ſucceeded by a higher poſt with its props. The neighbours told us that here the two principal roads of England croſſed each other, and that here was a moſt flouriſhing city named Cleyceſter, which had a ſenate of its own, and of which Cleybrook, about a mile off, was part, and that on both ſides of the road foundations of hewn ſtone lye under the furrows, and Roman coins are very often ploughed up though above ground, as the poet ſays, —etiam ipſæ periere ruinæ, the very ruins themſelves are loſt. This exactly correſponding with the diſtance from Bennaventa, or Wedon, together with Bensford the name of the bridge, induces me to place here BENNONES, or VENONES, the next ſtation after Bennaventa in Antoninus, eſpecially as Antoninus ſays the way here parts into two, which is alſo the current tradition. For to the north-eaſt going to Lincolnſhire, the Foſſeway leads ſtrait to Ratæ and Vernometum, of which preſently, and to the ſouth-weſt Watlingſtreet into Wales by Manduеſſedum, of which in the county of Warwick.

Highcroſs.

Cleyceſter.

Cleybrook.

Hinckley ſtands higher up on the ſame road, having antiently its own lord Hugh Grantmaiſnill; high ſteward or ſeneſchal of England in the reign of William Rufus and Henry III. He had two daughters, Petronilla married to Robert Blanchmains, ſo called from the whiteneſs of his hands, earl of Leiceſter, who with her had the office of ſeneſchal of England, and Alicia to Roger Bigot. On the eaſt ſide of the church are ditches and very high earth-works, which the inhabitants ſay were Hugh's caſtle. Three miles hence is Boſworth, an old market town, this privilege having been procured for it of Edward I. by Richard Harecourt. Below it the kingdom of England in the laſt age turned upon the ſucceſs of a ſingle battle. For Henry earl of Richmond here, with a ſmall army, encountered Richard III. who, by the moſt complicated crimes had poſſeſſed himſelf of the crown, and by expoſing himſelf bravely with his followers for the liberty of his country, happily defeated and ſlew the tyrant, and in the midſt of the ſlain was with loud acclamations ſaluted king, and by his bravery reſcued England from the oppreſſion of the tyrant, and by his prudence reſtored the peace diſturbed by civil diſcord. Whence Bernard Andreas, the poet of Tholouſe, who lived then, in his ode to Henry VII. alludes thus to the roſes which were his deviſe;

Hinckley.

Boſworth.

1485.

* John Wickliffe died 1387.

[a] So Mr. Camden himſelf in his marginal note; ſo Burton, Holland, and Gibſon tranſlate Rhotaciſmus. See alſo Fuller's Worthies in this county. The preſent inhabitants neither have this defect, nor know any thing of it.

[b] For the finding out the towns ſpecified by Antoninus in his Itinerary. Holland.

Ecce nunc omnes poſuere venti
Murmura, præter Zephyrum tepentem,
Hic roſas nutrit, nitidaſque flores
Veris amæni.

All winds were huſht, but Zephyr's gentle gale;
Nurſe of the bluſhing roſe, his breezes bring
The blooming flowers, and new create the ſpring.

Aſhby de la Zouch. Baron Zouch of Aſhby.

Nothing elſe occurs remarkable on the road except further off Aſhby de la Zouch, now a pleaſant town of the earl of Huntingdon, formerly of Alan baron de la Zouche[e], who bore G. ten bezants. He marrying one of the coheireſſes of Roger de Quincy, earl of Wincheſter, acquired a great eſtate in this county in right of his wife. But having ſome claims on John earl of Warren, who was for fighting the matter out, and not trying it at law, was killed by him in Weſtminſter hall A. D. 1279, and a few years after his nephew's daughters and heireſſes conveyed this eſtate by marriage to the families of St. Maur[d] and Holand[e]. This town afterwards came to the Haſtings, who had there a very handſome houſe, of whom William procured a fair of Henry VI. Nor muſt we here forget Cole Overton, the reſidence of Henry de Beaumont[f] of the ſame famous family with the viſcounts Beaumont. This place has its ſurname from the coals dug here like hardened bitumen, which yield ſuch profit to the lords of the manor, and ſupply all the neighbourhood far and near with firing.

Cole Overton.

Soar r.

We have already ſaid that the river Soar divides the county. It riſes not far from this road, and increaſed by the addition of many never-failing ſtreams, flows gently northward, and waſhes the north and weſt ſides of the chief town of the county, called by writers Legeceſtria, Leogora, Legeoceſter, and Leiceſter. This town makes at once a very antient and handſome appearance. A. D. 680 when Sexwulph, by order of king Ethelred, divided the kingdom of Mercia into dioceſes, he fixed the ſee here, and was himſelf the firſt biſhop; but a few years after on the removal of the ſee elſewhere this dignity ceaſed, and the town gradually declined till the noble lady Edelfleda, A. D. 914, repaired it, and fortified it with new walls; ſo that Mathew Paris in his Hiſtoria Minor writes, "Legeceſtria is a very rich city, and defended with a very ſtout and laſting wall, which if it had a good foundation, would make the place equal to any city." At the Norman invaſion it was well peopled, and had many burgeſſes, 12 of whom (as we find in the Conqueror's ſurvey[g]) were bound by old uſage to ſend out men with the king "whenever he went to war. If he went by ſea againſt his enemies they were to ſend four horſes to carry arms or other baggage to London. This city paid to the king yearly £. 30. by tale and £. 20. in ore[h] and 15 ſextaries[i] of honey." But in the reign of Henry II. it laboured under great diſtreſs, and had its walls razed when Robert earl of Leiceſter ſurnamed Boſſu or Humpback plotted againſt the king. This Mathew Paris relates in the following manner:

LEICESTER.

1173.

"For the inſolence of earl Robert who had lifted "up his heel againſt the king, the noble city of Lei- "ceſter was beſieged and ruined by king Henry, and "the wall, which ſeemed proof againſt every thing, "was razed all round." After (to add a few particulars from his Hiſtoria Minor) "the walls of the town "were undermined, and the props that ſupported "them burnt, great fragments fell down, which lie "there to this day intire and unbroken, of the ſize and "hardneſs of rocks by the indiſſoluble tenacity of "the cement[k]." At this time the townſpeople were miſerably fined and ſent into baniſhment, and ſuch as by a ſum of money purchaſed leave to go where they pleaſed, retired for refuge to St. Alban's and St. Edmund's. The caſtle, which appears to have been very large and ſtrong, was alſo diſmantled. Under it is a handſome collegiate hoſpital, in whoſe church Henry earl of Lancaſter and Henry of Lancaſter his ſon firſt duke of Lancaſter, are buried. This duke being advanced in years erected and dedicated this houſe for the pious purpoſe of providing for the poor, of which Henry Knighton of Leiceſter, who lived at this time, ſpeaks thus in his hiſtory[l]. "Henry duke of Lancaſter firſt built a "collegiate church and hoſpital without the ſouth "gate of Leiceſter, in which he ſettled a dean, "with 12 canons prebendaries, and as many vicars "and other officers, for a hundred infirm poor and "10 able women to wait upon the infirm, and ſuf- "ficiently endowed the ſaid hoſpital." On the other ſide of the city among rich meads watered by the Soar, was a monaſtery, thence called de Pratis, of which Knighton aforementioned writes thus[m]: "Robert le Boſſu[a] earl of Leiceſter, founded the 1143 "monaſtery of the Virgin Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter, "and liberally endowed it with lands, eſtates, and "revenues; and himſelf with the conſent of his "wife Amicia became a canon regular in the ſame "houſe, and after ſerving God there 15 years in the "regular habit fell aſleep in the Lord a canon." This he did that by repenting in a canonical habit he might atone for his guilt in rebelling againſt his ſovereign. What name Leiceſter went by under the Romans does not appear. I take it to be called in Ninnius' catalogue Caer Lerion; but that the fabulous king Leir built it whoſo will may believe for me. The ſituation anſwers ſo exactly to Antoninus' deſcription in diſtance from Bennona and Verometum on the military way called the Foſs, that I cannot help thinking it RATÆ, or as Ptolemy writes it RAGÆ[o], though not the leaſt trace or mark of the name of Ratæ now remains, unleſs perhaps in the rampart called Rawdikes[p], ſcarce half a mile from the ſouth gate of Leiceſter. Here I am at a loſs, and uncertain which road to take as my guide in ſearch of the antient town. Ranulph, monk of Cheſter, ſays the antient ſtreet went hence through the waſtes to Lincoln, but does not ſay through what waſtes[q]. It is commonly ſuppoſed to have run north through Nottinghamſhire: the emperor

RAT

[e] who deſcended from Alan viſcount of Rohan in Little Britain, and Conſtantia his wife, daughter to Conan le Gros, earl of Britain and Maud his wife, natural daughter of Henry I. Holland.

[d] of Caſtle Carey. Ib.

[a] Yet their father firſt beſtowed this Aſhby upon ſir Richard Mortimer of Richard's caſtle, his couſin, whoſe younger iſſue thereupon took the ſurname of Zouch, and were lords of Aſhby, but from Eudo a younger ſon of Alan who was ſlain in Weſtminſter hall, the lords Zouch of Harringworth branched out and have been for many deſcents barons of the realm. Ib.

[f] deſcended from ſir Thomas Beaumont of Bachevill in Normandy, brother to the firſt viſcount, which ſir Thomas, as ſome write, was he who was ſlain manfully fighting at ſuch time as the French recovered Paris from the Engliſh in the time of Henry VI. Holland.

[g] fol. 230. a. [h] i. e. by weight. Holland. [i] pints and half, or 24 oz. Gibſon.

[k] See alſo Wats' edition, p. 128. [l] Inter X ſcriptores, p. 2625. [m] Ib. p. 2346.

[a] when he began Gerondon abbey for Ciſtercians. Holland.

[o] Paſſ, Pal. Egalæ; obvious miſtakes for Palæ, as in Ravennas Rateconon for Rate Coritanorum. [p] or Road-dikes. Holland.

[q] P. 196. He means the Wolds as now called.

Antoninus, if I understand him, seems to intimate, that it went north through this county into Lincolnshire. On this track several places of antient note occur to be mentioned in their order; on the other, with all my search, and I do not answer for others, I have yet been able to find none.

Near[r] Leicester is Grooby, a large and fine estate, or as our people call it, manor, which from Hugh Grantnaisnill[s], on whom William the Conqueror bestowed large revenues, came by the earls of Leicester and the Quincies to the family of the Ferrars, of which the lords Ferrars of Grooby long enjoyed the rank of barons, and at last their only daughter Isabel[t] carried it by marriage into the family of the Greys, on whose attainder it reverted to the crown. But while I was revising these sheets our sovereign king James restored sir Henry Grey to this honour of his ancestors, having before his coronation created him baron Grey of Groby.

I return now to the Soar river, which leaving Leicester first gives name to Montsorell, or rather Mont-soare-hill, compounded of a Norman and English name, now famous only for its market, antiently very much so for its castle on a steep craggy hill overhanging the river, formerly belonging to the earl of Leicester, afterwards in the barons' wars to Saer de Quincy earl of Winchester, now nothing but a heap of ruins. For A. D. 1217, being taken after a long siege, it was levelled with the ground by the inhabitants, "as a nest of devils and a cave of thieves and robbers." Higher up on the opposite bank is Barrow, where they dig chalk of remarkable hardness. A few miles hence the Soar ends in the Trent a little below Loughborrough, a market town, which gave its name to one baron Edward Hastings in the reign of queen Mary. But upon her death, whose great favourite he had been, he took a disgust at human affairs, and renouncing the world, in order to devote himself solely to God, retired to an hospital he had built at Stoke Pogeis in Bucks, where he lived, serving God with the poor, and ended his life devoutly in Christ among them[u]. The resemblance of the names seem to prove that this Loughborrough was the royal vill called in Saxon Liezanburze[x], which Marianus tells us Cuthwulf took from the Britans A. D. 572. At present it justly claims the next place to Leicester among all the towns in this county, either in regard to its size, its buildings, or the pleasant woods that surround it. For below it the forest of Charnwood or Charley extends a great way, in which is the park of Beaumannour, which the lords Beaumont inclosed, as I have been informed, with a stone wall. These are commonly supposed to be descended from a French family; they certainly sprung from John de Brienne[y], king of Jerusalem, and came into England about Edward I's time, and by marriage with a daughter of Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan in Scotland, whose mother was one of the coheiresses of Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, obtained a fine estate, and became a considerable family. From hence in the reign of Edward III. Henry for some years received summons to parliament by the style of earl of Buchan, and in that of Henry VI. John was constable of England for a time, and the first I meet with that had the honour of a viscount from that king. But William the last viscount dying without issue, his sister married lord Lovell; and this rich estate was afterwards by attainder for treason forfeited to the crown[z].

The first viscount in England.

In this north part nothing remarkable occurs except a small nunnery, founded for nuns by Roisia de Verdon, and called Grace dieu; and in that part where the Trent runs, Dunnington, an antient castle, built by the first earls of Leicester, and afterwards the property of John Lacy, earl of Lincoln, who obtained a market and fair here of Edward I. But his estates being parcelled out among different persons in the attainder of the barons under Edward II. the king bestowed this maner on Hugh Le Despenser the younger[a].

Grace Dieu.
Dunnington.

The eastern part of the county, which is hilly and feeds numerous flocks of sheep, is adorned with two places of considerable note; VERNOMETUM or VEROMETUM, mentioned by Antoninus, and Burton-Lazers, very considerable in former ages.

VERNOMETUM has now lost its name; but seems to have been situate in that spot now called Burrow-hill and Erd-burrow. For between Verometum and Ratæ in Antoninus are 12 miles, and the same number at present between Leicester and this place. Its present name Burrough comes from Burgh, which among the Saxons signified a fortified place. But what is most material is that in the very place is a hill, steep on all sides except on the south-east, on whose top are evident traces of a ruined town, a double ditch, and marks of the very walls, inclosing about 18 acres. It is now a ploughed field, and remarkable for nothing so much as the sports practised here yearly by the neighbouring youth. The name would lead one to suppose here was some great temple of the heathen Deities. For Vernometum in the language of Gaul, which was the same with that of Britain, signifies the great temple, as Venantius Fortunatus plainly shews of Vernometum a town in Gaul in these lines of his first book:

Vernometum or Verometum.

Vernometum its meaning in the old Gaulish.

Nomine Vernometum voluit vocitare vetustas
Quod fanum ingens Gallica lingua sonat.

Antiquity the name of Vernometum gave
Where the old Gauls their larger temple have.

Burton, surnamed Lazers, was a rich hospital for Lazers or Lepers, to the master of which all the lesser houses for Lazers throughout England were in some sort subject, as he was to the master of the Lazers at Jerusalem. They say it was founded on the arrival of the Normans by a sum of money raised all over England (to which the Mowbrays contributed the most), at which time the Leprosy, or as some call it the Elephantiasis, had spread itself in a most destructive manner over the kingdom. It was the opinion of that age, that this distemper came first from Egypt into this island, and soon after spred itself all over Europe, first in the time of Pompey the Great, afterwards under Heraclius, and at other periods as appears in history: but I do not find it ever was in this island before those times. But be-

Burton Lazers.

Leprosy in England.

[r] North-west from Leicester. Holland.
[s] Grantsmaisnill.
[t] Elizabeth. Burton, 122. Dugdale I. 719.
[u] See before Vol. I. p. 314. 318.
[x] Liezanburze, Lyzanbyrig, Sax. Chron. p. 22. Lizanburh, Florence, Lienberig and Lienberi by later writers. But this is rather fixed at Leighton c. Bedford, as being nearer to Ailesbury, which Cuthwulf took at the same time. G. See before, Vol. I. p. 331.
[y] Hence correct Burton, p. 35.
[z] By attainder of Lovell it fell into the hands of king Henry VII. Holland.
[a] The hereditaments of Thomas of Lancaster and Alice Lacy his wife were seized unto the king's hands and alienated in divers sorts: the king enforced her to release this manor to Hugh le Despenser the younger. Holland.

sides

Milton Mowbray.

Skeffington.

Earls of Leiceſter.

ſides theſe more conſiderable places I muſt not forget near this laſt town Melton Mowbray, a market town, called from the Mowbrays formerly lords of it, where is to be ſeen only a handſome church, and further ſouth Skeffington, which gives name to a famous family, and receives eminence therefrom [b].

This county of Leiceſter was always famous for its earls, who were perſons of diſtinguiſhed note. As they were in the Saxon times hereditary, I ſhall give the ſucceſſion of them as that ſkilful antiquary Thomas Talbot extracted them for me out of the public records. In the time of Ethelbald king of Mercia A. D. 716, Leofric was earl of Leiceſter, to whom ſucceeded, in a direct line, Algar I. Algar II. Leofric II. Leofſtan, Leofric III. who was buried at Coventry, Algar III. whoſe ſons were Eadwin earl of March, and Morkar earl of Northumberland, and a daughter Lucia, married firſt to Ivo Talbois of Anjou, afterwards to Roger de Romara, from whom ſprung William de Romara earl of Lincoln. This Saxon line failing, and the very name of Saxons being almoſt deſpiſed, Robert de Bellomont, a Norman, lord of Pont Audomar and earl of Mellent, on the death of Simon earl of Leiceſter, obtained his earldom A. D. 1102, by favour of Henry I. "He was a man of great knowledge, flattering eloquence, ſhrewd cunning, profound prudence, and an artful turn of mind, and while he was in the height of his glory his wife was carried off by another earl. On this account he loſt his ſenſes in the decline of life, and ſunk into a profound melancholy [c]." * He was ſucceeded by his ſon ſur-named Boſſu [d], his grandſon ſur-named Blanchemains [e], and his great grandſon Fitz Parnell, all named Robert. The laſt of them, this Fitz Parnell, named from his mother Petronilla or Parnell, daughter and coheireſs of the laſt Hugh Grantmaiſnill [f], died without iſſue [g]. A few years after Simon de Montfort deſcended from a baſtard ſon of Robert king of France, who married the ſiſter of Robert Fitz Parnell, enjoyed this honour †. But being driven out [h] with all his family A. D. 1200 [i], Ranulph earl of Cheſter obtained this honour [k], not by right of inheritance, but by the royal favour. Afterwards however Simon de Montfort, ſon of Simon aforenamed, obtained this title upon Almaric his elder brother renouncing all claim to it in the preſence of Henry III. [l] Such was the good will of that prince to this Simon, that he recalled him from exile in France, loaded him with wealth, and gave him the earldom of Leiceſter [m] and his ſiſter in marriage: he overwhelmed with favours for which he had no opportunity to ſhew his gratitude (ſuch is the wickedneſs of mankind) began to hate and give his royal benefactor all kind of trouble, and in conjunction with the rebellious barons raiſed a horrible civil war, in which he at length loſt his life ‡. His honours and eſtates were granted by his victorious father to Edmund ſurnamed Crouchback earl of Lancaſter, younger ſon of Henry III. [n] This honour afterwards lay long ſunk as it were among the titles of the houſe of Lancaſter, till Matilda, daughter of Henry duke of Lancaſter, marrying William the Bavarian earl of Hainault, Holland, Zealand, &c. added to his other titles that of Leiceſter, he being expreſsly ſtyled in a charter of 35 Edward III. William earl of Henhaud and Leiceſter, and according to the inquiſition 36 Edward III. § ſhe by the name of ducheſs of Bavaria held the caſtle, manor, and honour of Leiceſter. Upon her dying without iſſue this honour reverted to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter, who married Blanch another ſiſter of Matilda [o]. From thenceforth it was united to the family of Lancaſter till in our time it received luſtre in the perſon of that Robert Dudley whom queen Elizabeth in the 6th year of her reign girded with the ſword of the earldom of Leiceſter, who was called by common concurrence of the united Netherlands, which had been long ravaged by the ſtorm of war, to ſettle their ſtate, and preſently after neglected by them. He departed this life in 1588 [p].

In this county are 200 pariſh churches.

* Hen. Huntingdon Epiſtola de contemptu mundi in bib. Cott.

† Rot in Theſ. Scacc.

‡ See Eveſham in Worceſterſhire.

§ In Regiſtro Magno Duc. Lanc.

[b] Burton, 260.

[c] He died 1118. 18 Henry I. and was buried in Preaux abbey where he turned monk. Dugd. Bar. I. 85. After rebelling againſt Henry II. weary of his looſe irregular life he became a canon regular. Holland.

[d] Died 1167. buried in Leiceſter abbey. Dugd. Ib. 87.

[e] He ſided with the young king againſt his father Henry II. He died and was buried at Duras in Greece 1190. Ib. 88.

[f] In whoſe right he was ſeneſchal or ſteward of England. Holland.

[g] He died 1204, and was buried in Leiceſter abbey.

[h] as wholly devoted to the French. Holland.

[i] He was ſlain at the ſiege of Tolouſe by Lewis king of France 1219. M. Paris. Dugd. Bar. I. 752.

[k] 1220. 4 Hen. III. Ib. 43.

[l] 1229. 14 Hen. III. Ib. 752.

[m] and granted him the ſtewardſhip of England. Holland.

[n] 49 Henry III. He died 24 Ed. I. Dug. Bar. I. 778-9. His ſon Thomas was buried at Pontfract 14 Ed. II. Ib. 780-1. His brother Henry died and was buried at Leiceſter, 1245. Ib. 783. as was his ſon and ſucceſſor Henry 1360. Ib. 789.

[o] and died 1399, 22 R. II.

[p] at Warwick.

ADDI-

ADDITIONS.

LEICESTERSHIRE is 43 miles long from north to ſouth, 36 broad from eaſt to weſt, and about 150 in circumference, containing ſix hundreds, 12 market towns, 200 pariſhes, 500,000 acres. The ſoil is rich and fertile[a]. The north-eaſt parts are elevated and bare. All the coal conſumed thereabouts was brought from Derbyſhire through roads formerly impaſſable except in the midſt of ſummer, when the hay and corn harveſt hardly allowed opportunity to fetch it in exchange for pigeon's dung at the rate of buſhel for buſhel, or if paid for in money it is at the extravagant price of 1*s*. or 1*s*. 6*d*. per buſhel. To relieve the diſtreſſes of the poorer ſort of people on this account, Mrs. Hewitt of Melton Mowbray, about 15 years ago, left £.20. to buy coals, which they were to pay for as they wanted, to take them at a penny or halfpenny more than they coſt, to defray the ſuperintendant, and to this ſmall ſum the pariſh added as much more. They have now great plenty of coal on very reaſonable terms from Bedworth in Warwickſhire.

The landholders in this county at the making of the Domeſday ſurvey, were the king, the archbiſhop of York, biſhops of Lincoln and Coutance; abbies of Peterborough, Coventry, and Croyland; earl of Mellent, and earls Aubrey, and Hugh: counteſſes Godiva, Alveve, and Judith: Hugh de Grentemaiſnil, Henry de Ferieres, Robert de Todeni, Robert de Veci, Roger de Buſli, Robert Diſpenſator, Robert Hoſtiarius, Ralph Mortimer, Ralph Fitz Hubert, Wido de Rembodcurth, Wido de Credune, William Peverel, William Buenvaſleth, William Loveth, Geofrey Alſelin, Geofrey de Wirce, Gunfrid de Cioches, Hunfridus Camerarius, Gilbert de Gand, Drogo de Bruere, &c. &c.

Burton, p. 161, takes notice that under the Heptarchy this ſhire was part of the kingdom of Mercia.

When the Danes had expelled Burgred A. D. 874, they conferred the kingdom on Ceolwulf durante beneplacito; and whereas the kingdom contained the CORITANI, CORNAVII, DOBUNI, and CATTIEUCHLANI, in 877 they took from him the CORITANI, particularly Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, Lincoln, and Stamford, where they domineered when the reſt of Mercia was reduced by king Alfred, and put under the government of duke Athelred, &c. and from hence they made frequent excurſions into other parts, and were not fully reduced till 942[b].

Market Harborough gave title of baron to Bennet Sherrard lord Sherrard 1714, 1 George I. and of earl 1718, 5 George I. He was ſucceeded 1732 by Philip Sherard his nephew, he 1750 by his ſon Bennet, and he 1770 by his brother Robert 4th and preſent earl. The ſeat of this family is at Stapleford in this county. Abigail, daughter of Roger Cave, eſq; of Stanford, and wife of ſir William Sherard an anceſtor of this family, was a great collector of antiquities, and cauſed to be made a fine pedigree of the Sherards, and their matches, with drawings of their monuments, arms, and portraits in windows, deeds, &c. now in the hands of the earl of Harborough, and exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries 1735, by Smart Lethieullier, eſq; together with two ſmall pendent oval medals with the buſt of this lady both in profile and fullfaced, and on the reverſe her arms in gold and in ſilver gilt made for her funeral[c]. The church is ſuppoſed to have been built by John of Gaunt as a penance for keeping Katherine Swinford[d].

Huſbands Boſworth church, Sunday July 6, 1755, in the evening was ſtruck by lightning; ſeveral ſtones beat out of the walls within, the pavement in ſeveral places raiſed an inch above the level, the bells diſplaced, the frames and wheels ſplintered, the ſtone ſpire very much ſhattered, a large breach made in it 12 yards long by one broad, and many heavy ſtones forced to a conſiderable diſtance[e]. Huſbands Boſworth.

At Medbourn, a valuable rectory, with the chapel of Holt, near Market Harborough, a Moſaic pavement was found 1721[f]. At Holt, which is a hamlet to Medburn, is the ſeat of Mr. Neville, from whoſe family the place is called Neville Holt. Here is the only water truly aluminous that Dr. Short could find in all his ſearches into the mineral waters of England. It was diſcovered in 1728. It is impregnated with a large proportion of calcarious nitre, a ſmaller of an acid auſtere ſalt reſembling alum, with a fat clay or bole, a latent ſulphur, and ſometimes a little ochre. It has this peculiar excellency that whilſt it is a ſtrong aſtringent it is at the ſame time an evacuant and deobſtruent medicine, and not poſſeſſed of the coagulating qualities of alum or of the ſharper vitriols. Dr. Short affirms it has no parallel among our medicinal waters in hæmorrhages of every kind. It prevails in exceſſive relaxations in general, and is very uſeful in ſcrophulous caſes. In digging up the hill in queſt of the ſpring, in the clay, through which the water is ſtrained, great quantities of talc have been found, which being powdered and given in warm ale have proved a ſovereign remedy in obſtinate fluxes. The earth about it abounds with nitre, and the greateſt part of the hill at or near the ſpring is limeſtone or gritſtone, beſides a good deal of iron ſtone[g]. Medbourn.

At Church Langton the rev. Mr. Hanbury, rector, eſtabliſhed 1753 an extenſive plantation, the profits of the ſale of which were to be applied to decorating and rebuilding the church, providing an organ and Church Langton.

[a] Mag. Brit. II. 1339. [b] Sax. Chron. p. 114. [c] A. S. min.
[d] Gent. Mag. 1765, p. 263. [e] See print of it by Sam. Turner, engraved by Jefferies.
[f] Ant Soc. min. Stukeley, Itin. Cur. I. 181. 2d Ed.
[g] Dr. Short's account of it 1742 and 1749, the water being his property. Rutty, p. 293—305.

school, establishing a public library here, erecting an hospital for 60 poor women, founding professors of grammar, music, botany, mathematics, antiquity, poetry, and a printing house, and augmenting small livings; the deeds for all which were executed and enrolled in Chancery 1767[h]. These immense designs are now come to nothing.

Goadby. Goadby was the rectory and residence of that industrious antiquary Francis Peck, who collected so many valuable materials for our monastic history. He died 1743, aged 51, on this only preferment he ever enjoyed.

Stanton Wivill. The Wivills, whose name is last mentioned on Battle abbey roll, were first settled at Stanton Wivill in this county, where they continued 24 Henry VIII. on this token that William Wivill being sworn and examined did depose, that he could expend 20*l*. a year of old rents besides all charges. Of this house was Robert de Wyvill bishop of Salisbury. Long since the Wyvils here are extinct. They bore G Frettè vairè a chief O. They were a different family from those of Burton Constable c. York[i].

Bradley. Hallaton. At Bradley, near Hallaton, formerly a market town on the Rutlandshire side, was a small Austin priory, valued at £. 20. 15*s*. 7*d*.[k]

Nosley. At Nosley Sir Anketil de Martival founded, and his son Roger, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, endowed in the parish church, a chantry, or college, valued 24 Henry VI. at £. 6. 13*s*. 4*d*.[l] It consisted of three priests, two clerks, and four choristers, and was founded, according to Leland, by Roger Morteville, who, t. Edward III. married the heir general of the Blackets. Nosley and other lands thereabouts came to two daughters of one of the Mortevilles, whereof one was married to Hugh Hastings, and the other was a nun, and alienated much of her part. Nosley came afterwards by marriage of an heir general to the Hasilrigs[m].

Skeffington. Skeffington, whence rose the name of the Skeffingtons, lay upwards of a mile from Noseley[n].

Laund. Laund abbey, founded by Richard Basset in the latter part of the reign of Henry I. in territorio villæ de Lodington[o] for Austin canons, was valued at £. 9 9 9 per annum[p]. Leland gives it to the Chaworths. It was the seat and burying-place of Gregory baron Cromwell son of Thomas earl of Essex, whose great grandson was created viscount Lecale earl of Ardglas in Ireland. It is now the seat of John Simpson, esq; and is a fine piece of antiquity. The old burial ground is still in use.

Osulweston. Osulweston, or Oweston, an Austin priory, built by Robert Grimbald t. Henry II. valued at £. 161.[q] The abbey was lately pulled down, and a farm-house built on the site, the property of sir John Palmer. There is nothing remarkable in the church but an octagon font with old arms, and a figure on a monument in the wall, now almost hid. The late Mrs. Brown, relict of Mr. Benjamin Brown of this place, was a near relation to sir Isaac Newton, and had, as is supposed, the only portrait for which he sat, by Kneller, which, having been sent to London for sale was bought by the present duke of Rutland for 30*l*.

Withcote. Withcote chapel by Osulweston belongs to sir John Palmer: the outside is antient, the inside neatly fitted up about 40 years ago. In it are two handsome marble monuments of the Johnsons, one of Edward Palmer, esq. who died July 17, 1770, and a small bust of Ambrose Smith, esq. 1589. Saints and apostles whole length in the windows, the painting remarkably coarse, and much painted glass in the house.

Somerby. Somerby, for many years possessed by an elder branch of the Greens of Hinckley, is now chiefly the property of the rev. Charles Dickinson.

Lutterworth. Lutterworth shews a fair church which has been increased by the Fieldings of knights degree and antient gentry in this shire[r]. In it is a monument for John Fielding of Lutterworth 1403, and his second wife Joan 1428. The church has been intirely new fitted up; but the pulpit, which is hexagon, made of thick planks, with a seam of carved work in the joints[s], is preserved in memory of Wicliffe, who preached in it, being presented to this rectory by the king, 48 Edward III. and died here December 31, 1387 or 84, of a palsy which had held him two years, and seized him as he was hearing mass in this church on Innocents' day. At the elevation of the host he fell down speechless, and continued so till his death, as Gascoigne was told by John Horne, a priest 80 years old, who had been parish priest here with Wicliffe the last two years of the latter's life. This great man, our English Luther, was a North-country man, born at Wycliffe in Richmondshire about 1324, educated at Merton college, Oxford, doctor in Divinity, master of Baliol college, and afterwards of archbishop Islip's new foundation at Canterbury hall, from whence Islip's successor soon ejected him. Under the patronage of John of Gaunt, who administered the government in the decline of his father's life, he was sent to the court of Rome to assert the liberties of the English church; and from the new view he obtained of that court during the two years of fruitless negociation, he first bestowed on the Pope the title of Antichrist, and when summoned to appear before the bishop of London, he came attended with such powerful supporters that he met with less severe opposition for the rest of his life. He was always preserved from imprisonment or fine, and though he was worried out of Oxford by the intrigues of his inveterate enemy the archbishop of Canterbury, he passed the remainder of his life quietly on his living; and one may fairly question whether his mean-spirited enemies found enough of his remains to vent their revenge on when they dug up his body, and burnt it, and threw the ashes into the water by order of the council of Constance, or rather of Sienna, executed by Fleming bishop of Lincoln[t]. The vulgar tradition is, that this stream never overflowed for four years after. Here was an hospital founded by Roisia de Verdon and her son in the reign of John, valued at £. 26.[u] "Lutterworth is scant half so big as Lughborow, but "has an hospital of the foundation of two or three "of the Verdons its antient lords[x]."

At Dunton Basset is a medical spring[y].

Stanford, the seat of sir Thomas Cave, bart. removed on rebuilding out of Northamptonshire into this county is an excellent mansion with great command of beautiful water. The river Avon, through [h] History of the rise and progress of charitable foundations at Church Langton by Mr. Hanbury 1767, 8vo.

[i] Fuller's Church Hist. p. 170. [k] Tan. 242. [l] Tan. 245. [m] Lel. I. 15.
[n] Lel. ib. 15. [o] Carta H. I. Mon. Ang. II. 90. [p] Burton, 157. Tan. 236.
[q] Tan. 240. Burton, 213. [r] Holland. [s] See the founding board and cope, Hist. of Hinckley, pl. VII.
[t] Lel. Coll. II. 371. Tan. Bib. Brit. 768, [u] Tan. 243. [x] Lel. I. 21. [y] G.

which

which was probably a long ford, runs through the park.

At Swinsford was a ſmall preceptory of hoſpitallers[y].

Swift riſes near Knaptoft the ſeat of the Turpins, a knightly family deſcended from the Gibſons[z].

The Poultneys took their name from Poulteney a place now decayed within the ſaid lordſhip[a].

Dr. Stukeley, who travelled along Watling-ſtreet with a deſign to make obſervations on it, affirms, that VENONÆ ſtands at the interſection of the Foſſe with Watling-ſtreet at High croſs, and that many Roman bricks, coins, &c. are found here, and foundations of houſes all the way to Cleyceſter. He adds that this is probably the centre and higheſt ground of this part of England ſince the rivers all run from it every way[b]. Mr. Lee of Leiceſter had a Roman urn found here in digging a vault for the late lord Denbigh, with eleven more covered with Roman bricks[c]. In the garden before the inn was a barrow, lately removed, and under it on the plain ſurface a human body[d]. Here is a croſs of four Doric pillars regarding the four roads, ſurmounted by a globe, croſs, and dial, erected by ſubſcription 1712[e], and the following Latin inſcriptions compoſed by Mr. George Greenaway a ſchoolmaſter at Coventry. This pillar is now incloſed in a fence to protect it from abuſe. It is engraved in pl. XCIII. of Dr. Stukeley's Itinerarium Curioſum I.

On the Weſt ſide:

Vicinarum provinciarum VERVICENSIS
Scilicet & LEICESTRENSIS ornamenta,
Procere patriciique,
Auſpiciis illuſtriſſimi BASILII
Comitis de DENBIGH,
Hanc Columnam ſtatuendam
Curaverunt, in gratam pariter
Et perpetuam memoriam JANI tandem
A Sereniſſima ANNA clauſi.
A. D. MDCCXII.

On the North ſide:

Si veterum Romanorum veſtigia
Quæras, hic cernas, Viator. Hic enim
Celeberrimæ illorum viæ militares,
Seſe mutuo ſecantes, ad extremos uſque
BRITANNIÆ limites procurrunt. Hic
Stativa ſua habuerunt VENNONES, & ad
Primum abhinc Lapidem Caſtra ſua;
Ad STRATAM & ad FOSSAM Tumulum
CLAUDIUS quidem Cohortis Præfectus
Habuiſſe videtur[f].

Burbach rectory was held, with that of Aſton Flamvile the mother church, by Anthony Grey, 10th earl of Kent, after his advancement to the title, till his death 1643. Here was born 1662 Roger Cotes the mathematician, who died 1716. Aſton Flamvile was long the property of the antient family of Turvile, and is now poſſeſſed by Edmund Cradock Hartop, eſq.[g]

Hinckley is the ſecond market town in the county, and had an alien priory of Benedictines, given by Robert Blanchmaines, earl of Leiceſter, to Lyra in Normandy[h]. "The ruines of the caſtle, now longyng "to the king, ſumtyme to the earl of Leiceſter, "be 5 miles from Leyrceſter and in the borders "of Leyrceſter foreſt, and the boundes of Hinkeley "be ſpatious and famoſe ther[i]." Only the earthworks of the caſtle remained in Burton's time: only the hill at preſent. The ſite of the caſtle had, beyond the memory of the oldeſt inhabitant, been occupied as a gardener's ground, and the caſtle hill conſiderably lowered, by taking ballaſt from it for repairing the roads; when in 1760 it was purchaſed by William Hurſt, eſq. (high ſheriff of the county in 1779) who cauſed a handſome dwelling-houſe to be built on it in 1770. At this time the foundation of a bridge acroſs the ditch which ſurrounded the antient caſtle, ſeveral large ſtones which had been part of the caſtle, a ball of ten inches circumference, and a piece or two of ſilver coin, were found.

Hinckley was held at the making of Domeſday by Aubrey de Vere lord high chamberlain. It was afterwards created an honor or barony, and held by Hugh de Grenteſmaiſnil lord high ſteward, which office became hereditary in his family. His great grand daughter Petronilla married Robert de Bellomont ſurnamed Blanchmaines. Her father Hugh is ſaid to have been created earl of Hinckley by William Rufus. Blanchmaines' ſon Robert Fitz Parnell (or, as Burton, Blanchmaines himſelf) forfeited his eſtates and office to Henry II. The former were reſtored to him by Richard I. but the king kept the office of high ſteward in his own hands till he beſtowed it with the title of earl of Lancaſter on his 2d ſon Edmund ſurnamed Crouchback; in whoſe deſcendants it continued till Henry IV. after which it was held by different perſons. Brooke makes both Robert Fitz Parnell and the two Simon Montforts high ſtewards before Crouchback.

The lordſhip of Hinckley comprehends two manors; one of which, containing "three parts in four equally to be divided," belonged formerly to ſir Robert Cotton, of Great Connington, in the county of Huntingdon, and afterwards of Hatley St. George, in the county of Cambridge, who was alſo poſſeſſed of lands and tenements to a conſiderable amount; the greateſt part of which, together with the manor and divers chief rents, after paſſing from the Cottons through ſeveral intermediate hands, are now the property of Mr. Hurſt.

The other manor, being one fourth part of the whole lordſhip, has, for time immemorial, belonged to the inhabitants of the town, for whom it is holden in truſt by two nominal lords, whoſe accompts are annually audited on St. Thomas's day by two townmaſters. This portion was originally granted to the town by one of its early lords, with the reſervation of a fee-farm rent.

The borough is the only part of the antient property from which a chief rent is reſerved to the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaſter; and this fragment may perhaps ſoon be diſſevered by lawful purchaſe. Whether it ſent repreſentatives to parliament is uncertain. It is now governed by a mayor, conſtables, and headburgh.

The aſſizes were formerly held here. The gaol and gallows are now gone. On incloſing the common field where the latter ſtood many human bones were found in a ſtate of petrifaction. The market on Mondays is ſtill conſiderable: the fair

[y] Tan. 212.
[z] Holland.
[a] Holland.
[b] I. 104.
[c] Stukeley ib. 2d ed.
[d] Ib.
[e] Ib.
[f] Nichols's Hiſtory of Aſton Flamvile and Burbach, 1786, 4to.
[g] Tan. 241.
[h] Hiſt. of Hinckley, p. 121.
[i] Lel. I.

is mentioned by Shakſpeare in the 2d part of Henry IV. The extenſive introduction of the ſtocking manufactory has conſiderably augmented the traffick of the town, which now contains 750 houſes and about 4600 inhabitants. The hall houſe as it is called, adjoining to the church-yard on the ſouth, was the reſidence of the prior of Hinckley. On the road to Lutterworth is a ſpring called the Holy Well and our Lady's Well from the Virgin Mary, to whom it was dedicated. Near it was found, 1755, ſix gold nobles of Edward III. Great variety of curious foſſils have, within theſe few years, been diſcovered in a gravel-pit on the Derby ſide of the town. Hinckley gave birth 1647 to Dr. Thomas Stanley, maſter of Corpus Chriſti college, Cambridge, and dean of St. Paul's, who died 1731[i]. Stoke, Dadlington, Wyken, and The Hyde, all diſtinct villages, and the latter of them in the county of Warwick, are ſo many hamlets of Hinckley.

Henry III. created his ſon Edmund earl of Leiceſter, giving him therewith the honour of Hinckley and ſtewardſhip of England[k]. This honour of Hinckley and office of high ſteward of England, came firſt to Robert Blanchmaines earl of Leiceſter, in marriage with Petronilla or Parnel, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Hugh Grentemaiſnil under Henry II. by gift of the ſaid Hugh: but afterwards at the coronation of Henry IV. who was earl of Leiceſter before he came to the crown, dictus dominus rex (as we read in the cloſe rolls of his firſt year) ut in jure comitatus Leyceſtriæ cui officium ſeneſchalli pertinet idem officium commiſit Thomæ filio ſuo in coronatione prædicta faciendum[l]. At the coronation of queen Eleanor 1235, Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter claimed the office of high ſteward, but his claim was then controverted by Roger Bigod earl of Norfolk; but it appeared that the ſame conteſt having ariſen at the coronation of king John, it was compriſed in favour of the earl of Leiceſter, on his giving ten knights fees to the earl of Norfolk, who thereupon releaſed his claim[m].

Higham. At Higham or Hecham were found 1607, under a large ſquare ſtone which lay in Watling-ſtreet at the croſſing of another road leading to Coventry, above 250 ſilver coins of Henry III. with his buſt on one ſide, and on the other a croſs moline between four roundels, circumſcribed Fulc on Luid; alſo a gold ring with a ruby, another with an agate, and a third a ſilver one with this Arabic inſcription, thus read and tranſlated by Mr. William Bedwell for Mr. Burton:

Cef Hhany cullo yed halimah
B'mahamed thhaly b'fatimah.

By Mahomet magnify him
Turn from him every hand that may hurt him[n].

This ring, now in the Bodleian library, we have engraved Pl. III. fig. 3.

Lindley. Lindley was the birth-place and eſtate of Mr. William Burton the Leiceſterſhire antiquary, and his brother Thomas, author of the Anatomy of Melancholy, whoſe monument with the ſcheme of his nativity is at Chriſt Church Oxford; and Mr. Burton obſerves of this place that never were ſeen in it adder, ſnake, or lizard, though common all round[o].

At Fenny Drayton were ſeated the anceſtors of Drayton the poet, who was, however, born in the county of Warwick[p]. Fenny Drayton.

Boſworth ſtands high and the battle was fought on Radmore plain three miles from it, whereon is a little mount, on which they ſay the earl of Richmond harangued his men; but it is more likely a tumulus over his ſlain. Great quantitiet of large arrow heads, weapons, and armour, have been dug up in Stoke incloſure. The Harecourts flouriſhed here from the Conqueſt to Henry VIII.[q] Withlaf, king of Mercia, confirmed, A. D. 883, to Croyland abbey the grant of Norman the ſheriff of lands and a windmill in Sutton by Boſworth, and a manor and lands adjoining[r]. Q. if Normanton Turvile here, or Normanton by Belvoir were Norman's reſidence. Turketill gave this abbey lands in Beby with the church[s]. Mr. Simpſon the mathematician was born here 1770, and died in this neighbourhood 1761. Anthony Blackwall was ſome time maſter of the freeſchool, and Samuel Johnſon his uſher. Boſworth.

The battle of Boſworth-field, as it is uſually called, was fought, according to Burton[t], "in a large, flat, "plain, and ſpacious ground, about four miles from "Hinckley, and three from Boſworth, between the "towns of Shenton, Sutton, Dadlington, and Stoke;" which plain comprehended part of thoſe ſeveral lordſhips when unincloſed; and this account I have every reaſon to believe is accurate. In this field was found a gold ring, on which was enamelled a white boar, and the motto Ffraunche, which fell into the hands of the late Dr. Charles Maſon, of Trinity college, Cambridge, and after his death was bought by Dr. Lort for the duke of Devonſhire. A braſs ſeal ring found here is engraved in the Hiſtory of Hinckley, Pl. IV. fig. 3. The plain is ſpacious; and, being very nearly ſurrounded with hills and woods, has a beautifully noble appearance. The woods of Sutton Chainell and of Ambeime in particular, have a ſtriking effect. King Richard's Well, and Crown Hill, where Richmond harangued his army, preſerve the identity of the place. The head quarters of Richard were at Nottingham; thoſe of Richmond were at Tamworth. Stanley, with a large detachment of the royal army, was poſted at Atherſtone, not far from the expected field of battle, and ſoon after its commencement contributed to the deciſion of the day, by declaring for the earl of Richmond. The ſlaughter was great; and many of the dead bodies were buried in the cemetery belonging to Dadlington chapel. Richard, it is univerſally acknowledged, performed prodigies of valour. Deſperate perhaps at the laſt, he ruſhed furious into the thickeſt of the fight, ſlew numbers, and among them the ſtandard-bearer of Richmond, with his own hand; and fell at laſt ingloriouſly (if tradition may be credited) by a treacherous blow from one of his own followers. His body was thrown acroſs a horſe, and carried for interment to the Grey Friars at Leiceſter.

At Cadeby is a chalybeat water[u].

Aſhby de la Zouch is a market town, having a neat ſtone croſs and a freeſchool. "The lord of "Huntingdone hath three parkes. This Aſſcheby "hath been in the Haſtinges ever ſince that the lord "Haſtinges ſo great with Edward IV. got it partly "by a title, partly by money paid. The late

[i] See Mr. Nichols's ample and well-digeſted Hiſtory of this town, 1782, 4to. which his particular connection with it has led him to render as complete as poſſible.
[k] Knighton.
[l] Selden's Titles of Honor, part II. 1. 5. p. 655.
[m] ex lib. rub. ſcacc. ut tranſcribitur in MS. Cotton. Claud. C. IV.
[n] Burton. 131, [o] Ib. 174. [p] Ib. 92. [q] Ib. 47, 48.
[r] Ingulphus, 488. [s] Ib. 498. [t] P. 47. [u] Brokeſby in Lel. VI. 100.

"Thomas Boleyne erle of Wiltſhire made a title "to it by the lord of Rochford, which was heyre to "the Zouches[x]." Lord Haſtings took the lead off Belvoir caſtle, and brought it hither, as alſo the ſpoils of Stoke Daubeney another goodly manſion of the lord Ros[y]. William Haſtings, earl of Huntingdon, beheaded by Richard III. built here a fair houſe with a lofty ſtone tower, which being made a garriſon for the king in the civil war was afterwards demoliſhed 1648. It was called the Maiden garriſon becauſe never taken by the Parliament forces. James I. was entertained here by the then earl of Huntingdon, which his whole court for many days, during which time dinner was always ſerved up by 30 poor knights in velvet gowns with gold chains[z]. It came to this family on the attainder of James Butler earl of Ormond and Wilts after king Edward recovered the crown. Sir William Haſtings had a grant of it on account of his eminent ſervices againſt Henry VI. on which account he was alſo made a baron chamberlain of the king's houſhold, captain of Calais, and knight of the garter. He obtained two fairs for this place 14 Edward IV. when he had licence to make a caſtle of his houſe here[a]. It belongs to his deſcendant the preſent earl of Huntingdon. Here was born 1582 John Bainbridge, an eminent phyſician and aſtronomer, Savilian profeſſor at Oxford, where he died 1643. Joſeph Hall, biſhop of Exeter, born at Briſtow or Preſtop park, in the pariſh of Aſhby de la Zouch, 1574, died 1656.

"The ruins of Whitewick caſtle long now by per- "mutation of lands to the marquis of Dorſet[b]."

At Heather or Hatherne was a preceptory of knights hoſpitallers, valued at £.39. 1s. 5d.[c]

The Beaumont family of Cole Overton became extinct by the death of Thomas lord Beaumont, who left his eſtate to ſir George Beaumont, bart. of Stoughton Grange near Leiceſter. It belongs now to Mr. Keck. In this pariſh is a medicinal water called Griffy-dam. The coal-pits here burnt for many years in the reign of Henry VIII.[2]

At Oſgarthorp is an almſhouſe for ſix poor clergymen's widows, built by Thomas Harley citizen of London, with the allowance of £.10. per ann. each, and a freeſchool of £.40. per ann.[3]

At Bredon was a priory of black canons, cell to Noſtal c. York, valued at £. 24. per annum[d], dedicated to St. Mary and St. Hardulph or Bardulph. Near it at Langley a Benedictine nunnery, founded by William Pantulf, valued at £. 29.[e] In this pariſh is Stanton Harold, a chapelry, the ſeat of lord Ferrars. The church was rebuilt by ſir Robert Shirley, as is ſet forth in this inſcription in front.

In the year 1653.
When all things ſacred thro'out the nation
Were either demoliſh'd or profan'd,
Sir Robert Shirley, bart. founded this church:
Whoſe ſingular praiſe it is, to have done
The beſt things in the worſt of times[4].

At Appleby, ſouth of Aſhby de la Zouch, ſir John Moore, citizen and mayor of London, built a noble ſchoolhouſe, endowing it with £. 60. for a maſter, 40 for an uſher, and 20 for a writing maſter, with houſes for each[5].

At Norton near Twyerofs, where his father was rector, was born 1667 the celebrated William Whiſton. He was admitted of Clare hall, Cambridge, 1686, and was elected fellow, 1690, and was chaplain to biſhop More, who preſented him 1698 to the living of Loweſtoffe in Suffolk, which, after a moſt conſcientious diſcharge of his duty for five years, he reſigned 1703 on being appointed mathematical profeſſor at Cambridge through the intereſt of ſir Iſaac Newton: and he was very inſtrumental in eſtabliſhing charity ſchools there for 300 poor children. His opinions on the Trinity and Incarnation ſoon after occaſioned him to be expelled the Univerſity. He fell under the cenſure of the Convocation, and being refuſed communion with the church of England, he in 1747 joined the Baptiſts. Having ſupported himſelf and family by his mathematical abilities and lectures, and the bounty of his friends, he died after a week's illneſs at London 1752, and was interred at Lyndon c. Rutland, where he has a handſome tomb and inſcription. Norton.

In this pariſh is Gopſall, late the ſeat of Charles Jennens, eſq. a Nonconformiſt gentleman, diſtinguiſhed by his collection of pictures and criticiſms of Shakſpeare. He was deſcended from a family who acquired an ample fortune at Birmingham, where they were equally famous for induſtry and generoſity. He died 1773, and the ſeat here is now the property of Aſheton Curzon, eſq. Gopſall.

LEICESTER. "The whole town of Leiceſter at thys tyme is "builded of tymbre. The caſtle near the weſt "bridge is at this time a thing of ſmall eſtimation, "and there is no appearance of high walls or dikes, "ſo that I think that the lodgings that now be there "were made ſince the time of the barons' war in "Henry III's time, and great likelihood there is that "the caſtle was much defacid in Henry II's time, "when the walls of Leirceſter were defacid. There "was afore the Conqueſt a collegiate church of pre- "bendes intra caſtrum"[f] deſtroyed with the city and caſtle, but rebuilt 1107 by Robert Boſſu for a dean and prebends, which continued to the diſſolution, called St. Mary the leſs, and valued at £. 24 13s.[g] "the "lands whereof, were given by Robert Boſſu earl "of Leirceſter to the abbay of canons made by him "without the walls. A new church of the reſidew "of the old prebendaries was erected without the "caſtle, and dedicated to St. Mary as the old was[h]." The collegiate church of Newark, founded by Henry earl of Leiceſter and Lancaſter 1330 as an hoſpital, made a noble college by his ſon Henry duke of Lancaſter about 1335, and improved by his ſon John of Gaunt, for a dean, 12 ſecular canons, 12 vicars, 110 poor men and women, valued at £. 800. clear £.595[i], "joineth to another piece of the caſtle ground. "The college church is not very great, but it is "exceeding fair. There lyith on the north ſide of "the high altar Henry earl of Lancaſter withowt "a crownet and two men children under the arch "next his head. On the ſouth ſide lyith Henry the "firſt duke of Lancaſter, and in the next arch to his "head lyith a lady by likelihood his wife. Conſtance "daughter to Peter king of Caſtile, and wife to "John of Gaunt, lieth before the high altar in a "tomb of marble, with an image of braſs like a

[x] Lel. I. 22.
[y] Lel. I. 114, 115.
[z] Groſe's account under his two views of it.
[a] Burton, 16. 21. G. Dug. Bar. I 582.
[b] Lel. I. 20.
[c] Burton, 53. Tan. 242.
[2] G.
[3] G.
[4] G.
[d] Burton, 86. 129. Tan. 238.
[e] Tan. 242. Burton, 83.
[f] Lel. I. 16.
[g] Tan. 236.
[h] Lel. Ib.
[i] Tan. 236.

"queen on it. There is a tomb of marble in the "body of the choir. They told me that a counteſs of "Derby lay buried in it, and they make her, I wot "not how, wif to John of Gaunt, or Henry IV. "Indeed Henry IV. while John of Gaunt lived was "called earl of Darby. The cloiſter on the ſouth-"weſt ſide is large and fair, and the houſes in the "college for the prebendaries be al very pretty. "The walls and gates of the college be ſtately. "The large almſhouſe ſtandith alſo within the "quadrangle of the area of the college [k]."

This almſhouſe is a ſingular low ſtone building with a monſtrous ſloping oak roof leaded, ſupported by pillars reaching to the points of the roof, and others ſeparating the houſes as they are called, where the poor men lodge in a kind of cells with a window and a chimney, and have a chapel parted off at top, in which one of the body reads prayers, and in which Mr. King ſaw part of an old tomb. The number of poor is 84, at one penny per day, proviſions and firing, and 10 nurſes; and the miniſter of St. Mary's preaches eight ſermons a year, which uſed formerly to be preached in a pulpit on the green before the hoſpital. It is ſtill ſupported in ſome ſort by the dutchy of Lancaſter [o]. At the head of the area is the miniſter's houſe.

"A little above the weſt bridge the Sore caſteth "out an arm, and ſoon after cometh in again and "maketh one ſtream. In this iſle ſtand the Black "friars very pleaſantly, and hard by the friars' is "a bridge of ſtone over this arm of Soar [l]." This houſe, founded by an earl of Leiceſter, t. Henry III. [m] has only a piece of ivy-grown wall left at the foot of the ſingle arch called Bowbridge, over which they ſay Richard III's body was carried after the battle of Boſworth: others ſay it was thrown under the bridge, and taken up again, and Speed ſays he had a monument in the church. The bridge is one handſome ivy-ſhrouded arch blocked up at both ends to preſerve it.

"The whole water creping about half the town "cometh through the north bridge of ſeven or eight "arches of ſtone. There it breaks into two arms "again, whereof the biggeſt goes by St. Mary's "abbey on the farther ripe in a right large pleaſant "inſulated meadow. Thence it is called S. Maria "de pratis [n]."

It was founded for black canons by Robert Boſſu 1143, valued at £. 195. [o] Cavendiſh built a brick houſe on the ſite now ruined, and except the gate and walls not a ſtone of the abbey remains, or of Wolſey's grave. It belonged lately to lord William Manners, who a little before he died incloſed it, and greatly increaſed the rent.

"The other arm of Sore is called the biſhop's "water, becauſe the biſhop of Lincoln's tenants have "privilege on it, and by it is a chapel longing to "the hoſpital of St. John [p]."

A piece of ground near St. Mary's is ſtill called Biſhop's barn cloſe, and a royalty the biſhop's fee [q].

"John Peny, firſt abbot of Leiceſter, and then biſhop of Bangor and Carliſle, who built the new brick works of Leiceſter abbey, and much of the brick walls, is buried in St. Mary's the faireſt pariſh church of Leiceſter, where once was a cathedral church, and thereby the biſhop of Leiceſter had a palace, whereof a little yet ſtands. Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, or Petronilla counteſs of Leiceſter, is buried in a tomb ex marmore chalcedonico in the wall of the ſouth of the high altar of St. Mary's abbey. The walls of this abbey be three miles about [r]."

The Grey friars founded by Simon Montfort [s], ſtood at the end of Wigſton's hoſpital, and there was buried king Richard III. [t] William, youngeſt ſon of Robert Blanchmains earl of Leiceſter, being a leper, founded a lazar houſe for lepers in the north end of the town [u]. Another hoſpital was dedicated to St. John, for a maſter, brethren, and ſiſters before 1235, whoſe lands were chiefly given to Newark college here by Edward IV. [x] The corporation purchaſed ſome of them t. Elizabeth, and built the town gaol and an hoſpital for poor widows thereon [y]. The friars de pœnitentia Jeſu and the Auſtin friars had houſes here [z]. William Wigſtone, or Wingſton, merchant of the ſtaple, founded 1520 an hoſpital for a maſter, a confrater, and 24 poor men and women, who are ſtill ſubſiſting, and allowed, the poor 1*l.* 10*d.* per week, the maſter £. 160. per annum, and the confrater £. 70. [a] The apartments are as at the other hoſpital for the men below, and women above. Here is another hoſpital for ſix widows, and a charity ſchool.

Leiceſter is called in authors Legerceaſter, Ligoraceaſter, Lygraceaſter, Legraceaſter, Legoraceaſter, ſome of which names are alſo given in our ancient hiſtories to Caerleon or Cheſter. Mr. Somner ſays it had the name from the river formerly called Lear, having a town of that name at its head. It has a market, four fairs [b], and a great ſtocking manufactory. Here were 10 churches beſides chapels [c].

What follows about Leiceſter marked with inverted commas is from ſome MS. papers of the late Mr. Carte in the Bodleian library.

"There is nothing now remaining of the walls of the town above ground, except the four gates, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth gates. Who built them I know not, and what Mr. Burton ſays of Ethelfleda's repairing them is falſe. For the Leiceaſter which ſhe repaired was Weſt Cheſter, Leiceſter being all that time in the poſſeſſion of the Danes till the ſpring of 920, when indeed ſhe took it, but died twelve nights before Midſummer following, at which time it was not poſſible for her to accompliſh ſuch work, and ſoon after her death the Danes recovered it.

"In the hiſtory of the abbey [c] it is ſaid that in the time of the Conqueror both the city and caſtle of Leiceſter were deſtroyed; and in 1173, as Burton truly obſerves, the town was deſtroyed again, and the walls thrown down, and I believe that from that time till this, that quarter of the town which lies between the north and eaſt gate, and is commonly called Backlanes, was never rebuilt; but Matthew of Weſtminſter ſays, the caſtle was demoliſhed 1176. No doubt it was afterwards re-edified and fortified by the great earls who lived here, probably by Robert Blanchmains himſelf, when Richard I. came to the crown, with whom he was in great favour. When it was finally deſtroyed, I know not; but gueſs it to have been in the conteſts between the houſes of York and Lancaſter, t. Henry VI.

[k] Lel. ib. 17. [l] Lel. ib. 18. [m] Tan. 245. [n] Lel. ib. 18. [o] G. [p] Tan. 237. [q] Lel. Ib. [r] Tan. 245. [s] Lel. ib. 16. [t] Lel. ib. 18. [u] Tan. 242. [x] Tan. Ib. [y] Tan. 245. [z] Tan. 247. [a] Burton, 160. [b] Ib. 165. Ecton. [c] Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 312.

"There ſtill remains the great hall of the caſtle, in which the aſſizes and ſeſſions for the county are kept, the eaſt ſide whereof was enlarged and beautified with a new front about twenty years ago, and at the ſouth end without there remains a very good cellar, as did alſo the old kitchen till about two or three years ſince, when it was pulled down, and turned into a coach-houſe.

"The moſt remarkable of the religious foundations was the church of S'tæ Mariæ infra et juxta caſtellum[d]. The church, having been deſtroyed in the time of the Conqueror, was rebuilt by Robert de Bellomont earl of Mellent, and in it he placed twelve ſecular canons and a dean, to whom he appropriated all the churches in Leiceſter except St. Margaret's, which was a prebend of Lincoln, and endowed them with many other poſſeſſions, all which his ſon Robert Boſſu transferred to the great abbey upon his founding it; but, that he might not totally ſeem to deſtroy his father's foundation, he, with the conſent of Richard firſt abbot, placed eight canons in the church of St. Mary de Caſtro, whereof one was dean, and endowed them with the oblations, &c. Theſe continued till the general diſſolution, and there ſtill remains in the veſtry a cheſt called an ark, in which there is a convenience for hanging their ſeveral veſtments.

"The great abbey ſtands about three quarters of a mile from the town. There is nothing of the old building remaining, except a little of the outhouſes; the wall now ſtanding being erected ſince the diſſolution by thoſe noble perſons that enjoyed it. I am not certain whether the earl of Huntingdon was the firſt patentee to whom it was granted, but he certainly enjoyed it in the time of queen Elizabeth. In the time of James I. it was ſold to the earl of Devonſhire, and during the war which broke out in 1642, was burnt by a party which came from Aſhby de la Zouch with Henry Haſtings, afterwards made lord Loughborough, and has ever ſince continued ruinous, and is in the poſſeſſion of the preſent duke of Devonſhire.

"As to the great cardinal Wolſey's ſepulchre, the beſt account I have met with is from one Mr. John Haſlor, whoſe grandfather Arthur Barefoot was gardener to the counteſs of Devonſhire, who lived at the abbey before the war. He tells me that the church ſtood part of it in what is now a little garden, and the eaſt end of it in the orchard (which was formerly called the little garden), where his grandfather with others digging, found ſome ſtone coffins, the cavities of which did not lye uppermoſt, but were inverted over the bodies; that one of theſe was taken up of about ſix feet and a half long, four wide, and two deep; that it ſeemed very ſound at firſt, but when it was expoſed to the air it ſoon mouldered away; that he obſerved that all of them had a round hole about the middle of them near five inches diameter, but for what uſe he could not tell; that among theſe he diſcovered cardinal Wolſey's (Mr. Haſlor forgets by what means he knew it) which the counteſs would not ſuffer to be ſtirred, but ordered it to be covered again, and his grandfather laid a great heap of gravel over it, that he might ſtill know the place, which ſtill remains there.

"The abbot being ſummoned to parliament 25 Edward III. pleaded that his abbey was founded in frank almoigne, and that the advowſon or patronage thereof came into the hands of Henry III. by forfeiture of Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter, and that he held not of the king by barony or otherwiſe whereby he was obliged to come to parliament; whereupon the king granted him a patent of exemption next year[e].

"The Newark was ſurrounded with high ſtone walls embattled, except towards the river, great part whereof remains, but great breaches are made in it. It has three gates; that towards the caſtle is a very fine one, but that towards the ſouth gate ſtreet far exceeds it, and is made uſe of for the county magazine. Within theſe walls are contained both the old hoſpital and the collegiate church. The hoſpital was founded in 1332, by Henry earl of Lancaſter, in honorem Dei et B. Mariæ Virginis, but is now ſtyled the hoſpital of the Holy Trinity in Newark. It was endowed with an annual rent charge iſſuing out of the duchy lands, which afforded to each of the poor 7*d*. weekly, but ſince the ſale of chief rents in the time of king Charles II. the revenue being leſſened, the number of poor is reduced from 112 to 78, and they would have a poor ſubſiſtence were it not for ſome modern benefactions, and the yearly contributions of the inhabitants of the town to them at Chriſtmas and Whitſuntide. 7 James I. the corporation obtained of Henry earl of Huntingdon the maſter or wardenſhip of this hoſpital, which is now by patent ſettled on the mayor of Leiceſter for the time being.

"The collegiate church was founded in honour of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary by Henry duke of Lancaſter. The church, as Leland ſays, was not great, but exceeding fair, and in it lye buried Henry earl of Lancaſter, Henry the firſt duke of Lancaſter, and near him a lady; alſo Conſtance, daughter of Peter king of Caſtile, wife of John of Gaunt; two of the Shirleys, knts. and their wives, lady Hungerford, and others. There are now no remains of the fabrick, the very foundations of it being razed about 1690, in making the garden belonging to Mr. Carter's houſe.

"There are now three fair houſes in the Newark belonging to Lawrence Carter, eſq; William Trunks, eſq; and Mrs. Stephens; but they are of late erection, all the old buildings being demoliſhed except two ſtone houſes belonging to certain chantry prieſts, one of which has been lately purchaſed for the vicar of St. Mary's church.

"The hoſpital of St. Leonard, founded by William the Leper, ſon of Robert Blanchmains, was ſituated, as I gueſs, near to St. Leonard's church-yard. In the reign of Edward IV. William lord Haſtings obtained this hoſpital of the king, and gave it to the collegiate church of the Newark, for which they engaged to keep a ſpecial obit for him, February 12, 17 Edward IV."

Mr. Freeman, an ingenious painter of Cambridge in 1776, brought Mr. Cole the impreſſion of the ſeal of this hoſpital, the original matrix being then lately found at Saffron Walden in Eſſex. It is of an oval form of three inches depth, having the full figure of St. Leonard dreſſed as an abbat, with a [d] Mon. Ang. vol. II. p. 312.

[e] Selden, Titles of Honour. Pat. 26. Edward III. p. 1. m. 22.

ſhort

ſhort mitre on his head, a croſier in his left hand, a book in his right, and a pair of manicles, or collar and chains hanged from them to expreſs the nature of his charitable employment in redeeming captives. Under an arch below his feet is the half figure of one of the brethren of the hoſpital praying to him. The ſaint ſtands under a beautiful Gothic canopy, and the whole is ſurrounded with this legend in ſmall Gothic characters:

Sigillu' com'une Magiſtri et Fratrum hoſpital' S'ci Leonardi Leceſtrie.

This hoſpital at the diſſolution fell into the hands of a perſon whoſe name was Catlyn. Now as a family of that name has long been ſettled at Walden, it is not improbable that the ſeal and writings have been in that family, and the ſeal occaſionally loſt in that place.

"The hoſpital or college of St. John the Evangeliſt and St. John the Baptiſt was ancient, and occurs 20 Edward III.[f] but by whom founded I have not yet learned. In this church was the gild of St. John, founded by Peers Celler and his wife, as I ſuppoſe, becauſe they are ordered to be prayed for particularly in an agreement made between the maſter of the hoſpital and the ſteward of the gild 17 Edward IV. and to this hoſpital belonged the chapel of St. John, deſcribed to be ſituated at the town's end of Leiceſter, which I take to be the little chapel of the weſt gate. The ſite of this hoſpital was by queen Elizabeth given to the corporation, who, 34 Elizabeth, granted it to Mr. Thomas Clarke for life, to be made a wool hall, which growing into diſuſe in time of James I. or Charles I. ſix poor widows were placed in it, who were maintained by a revenue of about 17*l.* 16*s.* per annum given by about twenty benefactors, and the voluntary contributions of the town. About 1702, Mr. John Bent, alderman, by his will, gave land at Enderby of about £. 24. per annum to the corporation, to maintain four poor widows, who, according to his directions, have apartments fitted up for them in the ſame hoſpital.

"The hoſpital of St. Urſula is valued in Burton at £. 22. and in the catalogue of diſſolved monaſteries in the Monaſticon at £. 8. but I cannot find where it was ſituated, nor any other memorandum of it.

"The chief hoſpital in the town is that called the new hoſpital, or William Wigſton's hoſpital, erected by William Wigſton, junior, merchant of the ſtaple at the weſt ſide of St. Martin's churchyard, for which he obtained the king's licence, 4 Henry VIII. and his confirmation 6 Henry VIII. It conſiſts of a maſter, a confrater, twelve old men, and as many old women; to whom he gave ſtatutes, which were confirmed by John biſhop of Lincoln, the laſt of September 1522; but theſe were altered by Henry earl of Huntingdon in the reign of queen Elizabeth. The pay of the poor men is now advanced to 2*s.* 10*d.* and that of the women to 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly, beſides which they have other advantages. In 1656; John Whatton, eſq; gave to the corporation £. 7. per ann. payable out of the ſhire hall cloſe, for the maintenance of another poor widow, to be placed in two rooms which were built in the ſaid new hoſpital by his firſt wife Elizabeth; of this ſum 2*s.* 6*d.* was to be paid to the poor woman weekly, and 5*s.* annually to the maſter; and 5*s.* the mayor and his brethren are to have for wine. This hoſpital was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, St. Catharine, and St. Urſula. Q. If this be not the hoſpital called Urſula's by Burton and the Monaſticon?

"Beſides theſe, there are two other little hoſpitals, the one commonly called the Spittle Houſe at the end of Belgrave gate, in which are commonly maintained about ſix poor women, placed in it by the juſtices of the peace for the county, but they are not limited to any certain number. They have 14*s.* weekly paid them by the treaſurer of the county, and yearly at Chriſtmas partake of the charity of the chief inhabitants of the town. At Michaelmas yearly they preſent to Mr. Thomas Noble 12 chicken, on account of an eſtate which he enjoys at Rearſby in this county, which formerly belonged to the family of Keble there, and by two co heireſſes deſcended to Noble and Orton, during which diviſion each received ſix chicken: but Orton's part coming to Faunt, and being ſince purchaſed by Mr. Noble aforeſaid, he is intitled to the whole. It is probable that this right was grounded on Keble's giving the ſite of the houſe to the uſe of the hoſpital. The other is in the Abbey gate, called the Counteſs's hoſpital. It was founded by the counteſs of Devonſhire, who lived at the abbey in the time of king Charles I. for ſix poor women, maids or widows, and endowed with 80*l.* per annum, which is paid by the duke's bailiff quarterly, viz. 25*l.* to each.

"There were three houſes of Friers. The Franciſcan or Grey Friers, ſtood on the ſouth ſide of St. Martin's church-yard, towards which there is a portal remaining, but all the other building is quite demoliſhed. Moſt of it now belongs to Mr. Noble, who has a very fair houſe within the precincts of it. Leland ſays, that Simon Montfort was the founder of it, and that king Richard III. was there buried. I know no other evidence that the ſtone coffin formerly uſed for a horſe-trough was king Richard's but the conſtancy of the tradition. There is a little part of it ſtill preſerved at the White Horſe Inn, in which one may obſerve ſome appearance of the fitting for retaining the head and the ſhoulders.

"The Auguſtine or Black Friers were ſeated without the weſt gate between the two channels of the river. Nothing of the building remains except a bridge of one large arch over the whole channel of the river, which is commonly called Bow Bridge, and by the narrowneſs of it appears to have been only a foot bridge for the uſe of the friers, ſo that the tradition of the king's paſſing over it in his way to Boſworth Field muſt be falſe. A well near it is ſtill called St. Auguſtine's well.

"The White Friers were planted near the north gate: nothing remains of the buildings. I have not met with any of the founders, either of the Black or White Friers.

"The tradition of thirty-two churches is groundleſs. There are at preſent five churches and ſix pariſhes, viz. St. Mary's, St. Martin's, St. Nicholas's, All Saints, and St. Margaret's; the ſixth, St. Leonard's pariſh, has now no church.

"St. Mary's de Caſtro was parochial at the ſame time that it was collegiate. The ſouth aile of it was built long before the main fabrick, as it is ſaid, by John of Gaunt, and is ſuppoſed to be as large or broad as any ſide aile in England, being 33 feet broad within the walls. To the weſt end of the north ſide of the church

[f] Rentale Nov. f. 86, ſeu 95, col. 1.

church joins the houſe belonging to the porter of the caſtle, which has a lodging-chamber within the walls of the church, which yet is ſaid not to be in the pariſh. From this church there uſed to be a ſolemn proceſſion every Whitſun Monday to St. Margaret's church, in which the image of the Virgin Mary was carried under a canopy borne by four perſons, with a minſtrel, harp, or other muſic, and 12 perſons repreſenting the 12 Apoſtles, each of which had the name of the Apoſtle whom he repreſented written in parchment fixed on his bonnet, and 14 perſons bearing banners, the virgins in the pariſh attending. When they came to St. Margaret's, among other oblations made by them there were two pair of gloves, whereof one is ſaid to be for God, the other for St. Thomas of India. There was the like proceſſion from St. Martin's church on Whitſun Monday, and the image of St. Martin was carried thither with 12 perſons repreſenting the 12 Apoſtles, and 12 banners, &c. After the church (which conſiſted of three ailes) was built, there was a conſiderable addition made to it all along the ſouth ſide, the eaſt part whereof was called our Lady's chapel or choir, where now the conſiſtory is held; and the weſt end was St. George's chapel; and there ſtood St. George's horſe harneſſed, &c. The riding of the George was one of the principal ſolemnities in this town, as may appear by the expreſs mention of it in an order made at a common hall 17 Edward IV. which enjoins all inhabitants ſummoned to attend the mayor to ride againſt the king (ſo it is expreſſed), or for riding the George, or any other thing, to the pleaſure of the mayor, and worſhip of the town. 14 Henry VII. it was ordered that every one of the 48 ſhould pay towards the upholding St. George's gild; they who had been chamberlains 6*s.* and ſuch as had not been ſo 4*s.* yearly at leaſt: and 15 Henry VIII. the maſters of the guild having neglected the riding of the George, an order was made enjoining them to do according to ancient cuſtom between St. George's day and Whitſunday, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.*[g] In the ſame church was founded alſo Corpus Chriſti guild, which was the chief guild in the town, and contributed largely to the public charges, in the purchaſe of charters, &c. and the maſters of it had great intereſt in the government of the town, having power with the mayor to levy penalties on the mayor's brethren for their miſdemeanours; and upon the mayor's neglect, they were impowered to levy them upon him.

"St. Nicholas' church is an old Gothic building, the pillars and arches thick and very low. It conſiſted of three ailes, but about 1697 the north aile being ruinous was taken down, ſo that now it has only two. The pariſh being poor and ſmall, it uſed to be held by the vicar of St. Mary, who preached there about once a month; but now, by means of queen Anne's bounty, the beneficence of the corporation, and the contributions of the pariſhioners, it is provided with one to preach in it every Sunday, &c.

"All Saints is a handſome church. It uſed to be preached in about once a fortnight; but, the corporation having pioufly augmented the revenue of this as well as all other churches in the town, and the pariſhioners adding their contributions, they have now a particular miniſter attending the ſervice of it.

"St. Margaret's is a very fair church. In this was founded St. Margaret's guild, for which I have ſeen a memorandum of a patent granted 16 Richard II. This guild was rich, and uſed to join with that of Corpus Chriſti in defraying the public charges. The ſolemn proceſſion annually made to this church on Whitſun Monday I ſuppoſe occaſioned a very broad ſtreet leading from the North-gate to this church to be called Sen-vey or Sancta via. The ſix bells belonging to this church were for many years celebrated for one one the moſt tuneable ring of bells in England." Two more were added in Mr. Carte's time; and within theſe few years they have been increaſed to ten by the bounty of William Fortrey, eſq. of Norton by Galby, who has rebuilt the church and ſteeple at Norton, and furniſhed it with a peal of ten bells, clock, and chimes, at his own expence, and is poſſeſſed of all the anecdotes that remain relative to Hugh Watts, once mayor of Leiceſter, and founder of the lofty tower of St. Margaret's church[h].

"St. Leonard's pariſh lies almoſt intirely beyond the North bridges without the franchiſes of the town. The church was rebuilt a few years before the war that began 1642; but lying ſo as to command the north bridge, it was pulled down when Leiceſter was made a garriſon. In this pariſh there was a mint for coinage of money. It is mentioned in the Conqueror's ſurvey, and in the hiſtory of the foundation of the abbey.

"Of the other churches mentioned by Burton, St. Michael's was ſituated in what are call the Back Lanes, and demoliſhed ſo long ago that the particular place where it ſtood is not known. The pariſh belonging to it was long ſince united to All Saints. St. Peter's church being ruinous, the corporation, April 7, 15 Eliz. purchaſed of the queen the materials of it to build a ſchool-houſe, and 33 Elizabeth it was agreed that this pariſh ſhould be united alſo to All Saints, by the miniſter of which the church-yard is now enjoyed as an orchard. As to St. Clement's church, I have found that in ſome old writings a lane which runs from the North-gate, between the White Friars and the backſide of the houſes oppoſite All Saints church, is called St. Clement's-lane, and therefore I conclude that it was ſituated in or near it, and if ſo, then it is alſo united to All Saints. St. Sepulchre's was not a pariſh church, but a chapel, as the record quoted by Burton ſhews. It ſtood at the extremity of the liberties of the borough to the ſouth, at the South-gate end, where they who died at the gallows uſed to be buried.

"Another church that I find mentioned is St. Auſtin's; and in the rental aforeſaid, fol. 147, ſect. 148, I met with this memorandum: "Quod "ecclia de Coſby pertinuit ad eccliam Sti Au- "guſtini Leic'. Quæ quidem ecclia Auguſtini "ſita fuerat ad orientalem partem cancell' eccliæ "Nici Leic'. Et erat ipſa ecclia conſtituta ſub "duobus tectis conjunctis ſuper medias columnas, "cujus una pars erat dedicata Sto Auguſtino & al- "tera Sto Columb'; modo nominatur Holybones "Leyc'." Upon this my conjecture or opinion is, that the church was dedicated to St. Auguſtin the monk, who converted the Engliſh Saxons, and to St. Columbus or Columbanus, who converted the Picts in Scotland. It was not a pariſh church; and therefore the church of Coſby lying five miles diſtant was appropriated to the maintenance of it. I reckon that it was demoliſhed at the Conqueſt, or in the troubles enſuing in 1088; and therefore the church of Coſby (being freed from the charge of maintaining it) was given to the abbey by the founder.

[g] In Dr. Bulleyn's "Dialogue between Soreneſs and Chirurgery," is a ſtory of one Roger a citizen's ſervant, whoſe grandſon eſcaped from the battle of Barnet, and hid himſelf in a hollow tree on Enfield chace for a month, till at length he eſcaped without danger; in memory of which, or his more martial atchievements, his harneſs was worn upon St. George's back in Barnet church many a cold winter after. Biog. Brit. art. Bulleyn, note E.

[h] Hiſtory of Hinckley, p. 35.

"It was a general cuſtom to bury the reliques or bones of ſome martyr in the place where churches were erected; and I ſuppoſe that after the demolition of the church, ſome unſucceſsful attempt being made to find out theſe depoſited, it was ſaid that the holy bones were ſtill there, and that from thence the place came to be called Holy Bones, as it is to this day.

"Here are now five churches, viz. St. Nicholas, All Saints, St. Margaret's, St. Martin's, St. Mary's, of which the firſt, fourth, and fifth have ſpire ſteples;" and the third a fine lofty tower. "There is an organ at St. Martin's, and an epitaph for Mr. John Heyrich, who died April 8, 1589, aged 76. He lived in one houſe with Mary his wife full 52 years, and in all that time never buried man, woman, or child, though ſometimes 20 in family. The ſaid Mary lived to 97, and ſaw before her death December 8, 1611, of her children and grand-children and great grand-children 143.

"The principal trade of the town is that of making ſtockings, of which there has been for ſome years a return of £.60,000 per ann. of which alderman Cowper, the chief manager of it at preſent, gives this account. 20,000 todd of wool is wrought up yearly in the manufacture of hoſe, which employs in the town and country about 1000 hands to ſort, kemb, and dye; 6000 to ſpin, double, and throw; 6000 to weave, ſeam, and dreſs up; and the improvement amounts to ſix times the value of the wool in the loweſt ſort of hoſe, and above that in the fine ſort.

"Several places in or about the town are out of the franchiſes of it, viz. the Caſtle and Newark toward the South, the Biſhop's Fee on the Eaſt, Abbey-gate and Wood-gate beyond the North bridge, and Braunſton-gate at Bruntingſthorp beyond the Weſt bridges.

"I have ſeen a charter of Simon Montfort, dated 39 Henry III. whereby it appears that the law called Borough Engliſh, whereby the youngeſt ſon was heir to his father, took place in this town; but then, at the petition and with the aſſent of all the burgeſſes, he ordained, "Quod omnes filii primogeniti de legi-
"timo matrimonio in prenominata villa Leyc' & ejus
"ſuburbiis poſt mortem patris eor' hereditatem pa-
"ternam & habitationem pacifice et de certo habeant
"& obtineant, & ſint eis heredes de cetero legi-
"timi, &c."

"The ſtyle of the corporation formerly was, "The mayor and burgeſſes," but is now "The mayor, bailiffs, and burgeſſes." When and by what authority (whether of Henry III. or Simon Montfort the ſecond) this became a mayor town, is not well known; but the moſt ancient catalogue which I have ſeen of the mayors makes Peter ſon of Roger to have been choſen the firſt mayor in 1248, 32 Henry III. and to have continued ſo nine years. I give the greater credit to this, becauſe in an inquiſition taken 37 Henry III. I find that he is then ſaid to be mayor of Leiceſter, but the earl's bailiff is there placed before him. The chief government of the town was then in a company of 24, one of whom September 29 and on the Monday after Martinmas ſwore fealty to the earl of Leiceſter; as he does now to the king as duke of Lancaſter. The reſt of the 24 were called burgeſſes and coburgeſſes. 4 Edward IV. the king appointed that the mayor, four of the burgeſſes, with one learned in the law to be called the recorder, ſhould be juſtices of the peace, impowering them to hold ſeſſions, and exempted the inhabitants from the juriſdiction of the juſtices of the county. 7 April, 1 Richard III. at a common hall, the town was divided into 12 wards, and each aſſigned to one of the coburgeſſes, who was to be called alderman; but queen Elizabeth, in her charters, ſtyles all the 24, aldermen, as they are now called. Here are two bailiffs, whereof one is the king's, though choſen by the 24 aldermen. He holds his place by patent for life, and has the exerciſe of the office and return of writs; the other is annually choſen out of the aldermen who have not been mayor.

"The earl of Huntingdon having procured a patent, dated 17th of April, 7 James I. whereby the king granted to the corporation the power of electing a ſteward and bailiff, the corporation 20 December 7 James I. obliged themſelves, that at the 3d, 5th, and 7th, and ſo every other avoidance, they would elect ſuch fit perſon as the earl and his heirs would nominate to them.

"There are alſo two coroners choſen yearly out of the aldermen who have not been mayor. Two chamberlains are choſen annually, one by the mayor elect, called the mayor's chamberlain, the other by the company of 48, called the town chamberlain, who has precedence of the mayor's.

"The place of the body corporate's meeting or town-hall was anciently ſituated at the bottom of the lane called of late years Blue-boar-lane, from an inn which had the ſign of the Blue[1] boar, where, according to tradition (which I think falſe) king Richard III. lay the night before he marched to Boſworth field, but formerly the Mayor's-hall-lane; and I gueſs it to be the houſe called the Old Shop, which was employed for making or ſtoring up gun-powder while Leiceſter was a garriſon; and was blown up when Leiceſter was taken, 31 May, 1645.

"At the diſſolution of guilds and chantries the corporation purchaſed the hall belonging to Corpus Chriſti guild, together with the houſes belonging to four chantry prieſts at the weſt end of St. Martin's church-yard (ſeparated from Wigſton's hoſpital by the vicarage houſe), which thereupon were fitted for the uſe of the corporation, containing a ſquare court in the middle, having on the north a ſpacious hall for holding the aſſizes, ſeſſions, and other courts, &c. on the weſt a large parlour for the aldermen and 48 to aſſemble in, &c. with chambers over it; on the ſouth a large kitchen, with other conveniences, for preparing their public feaſts; and on the eaſt, beſides ſeveral neceſſary apartments below ſtairs, a handſome chamber for a public library, fitted for that purpoſe about 1632. There is another public building

[1] Richard's cognizanee was a white boar.

building ſituate in the Saturday market, which is called the Gainſborough; the lower rooms are employed as ſhops, and one of them for a dungeon; over which there is a convenient ſquare room for the mayor and juſtices to meet in on market and fair days, to determine ſuch matters as are brought before them; adjoining to this is a leſſer room for their ſervants and attendants, and alſo a handſome balcony overlooking the market-place.

"The houſe called the Lord's Place was formerly much noted for the entertainment of perſons of the greateſt quality. The firſt mention that I find made of it, it was called Reynolds Houſe or Place. 27 July, 11 Elizabeth, John Eaton of Rounſton, and Ralph Eaton of Leiceſter, gentlemen, ſold it to Henry earl of Huntingdon. It afterwards came to a gentleman of Northamptonſhire, from whom the corporation purchaſed it about 1649, and in 1702 ſold it to Simon Barwell, who has in part demoliſhed it.

"The freeſchool was begun to be built 15 Elizabeth, and finiſhed the next year; and at the ſame time a new houſe was erected on the north end of it for the head man to dwell in, towards which the two companies of 24 and 48 contributed. On the outſide of the ſchool are engraven on a ſtone the names of the benefactors by whom it was endowed. There is a maſter and two uſhers; and the viſitors of the ſchool are the mayor and aldermen, and the maſter and confrater of Wigſton's hoſpital.

"The ancient lords of Leiceſter were the earls of Mercia and biſhops of the dioceſe. What the biſhops had was called manerium juxta Ligeceſtr' and manerium de Knighton, as comprehending that village in it. That part of it which is in the ſuburbs of Leiceſter is commonly called Biſhop's Fee, and remains as aforeſaid out of the liberties and juriſdiction of the town; though ſeveral attempts were made in the reign of Edward VI. and queen Elizabeth to have it and the other exempted boroughs reduced under its government, but without effect. This manor continued in the biſhops A. D. 1138, as appears by the bull of Pope Innocent III. dated 4 cal. Maii that year, confirming it to Alexander the then biſhop and his ſucceſſors; but it was ſoon (as it ſeems by Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 115) transferred to the earls of Leiceſter in exchange for other lands, and by Robert Boſſu, the founder of the abbey, was given to the monks there.

"The reſt of the town and ſuburbs belonged to the earls of Mercia before and at the Conqueſt: Edwin the laſt of them was ſlain 1071. After this the county of Leiceſter was committed to Hugh Grentemaſnil as vice-comes; and whereas in Domeſday book it is ſaid that the king had "de monetariis xx" it is added "de his xx habet Hugo de Grentemaiſnil tertium denarium." Hugo dying 1094, his ſon Ivo ſucceeded him, and enjoyed his eſtate in England till 3 Henry I. when taking up arms in favour of Robert Curthoſe, he fell into the king's diſpleaſure, and thereupon undertaking a voyage to Jeruſalem, he mortgaged his eſtate to Robert Bellomont, who by favour of the king was that year, viz. A.D. 1102, made earl of Leiceſter. After Robert Fitz Parnell's death 1206, partition being made of the eſtate of theſe ancient earls between Simon Montfort and Saer de Quincy earl of Winchеſter, Simon's part was called the honour of Leiceſter, and Saer's the honour of Winchеſter. Simon having taken poſſeſſion of his part ſoon returned into France, and about 1209 was choſen general of the Pope's army againſt the Albigenſes, and ſo continued to his death. But in 1217 Lewis the Dauphin invading England, Simon favoured him with his intereſt; whereupon king John ſeized his earldom, and conferred it on Ranulph Blundevill earl of Cheſter, who enjoyed it till 1229; when Almaric, eldeſt ſon of Simon aforeſaid, propoſed to Henry III. to ſurrender all his right to it to his brother Simon, who ſhould quit his intereſt in France and come and live in England, and thereupon the earldom was conferred on him.

"The honour of Winchеſter deſcended from Quincy to Ferrers of Grooby, and from them to the Greys, and is now the inheritance of the earl of Stamford. Burton in his liſt of Earls of Leiceſter, p. 172, has omitted Thomas earl of Lancaſter, Derby, and Lincoln, who ſucceeded his father Edmund in 1295, and was beheaded at Pontefract 15 Edward II. 1322; but the people reputing him to be a ſaint, made offerings to him, ſo that in an account made of the profits of the church of St. Martin's, received by the abbey about 1348, is "pes Thomæ Lancaſtr' reddit vi li. x s."[k]

"In 1712 there were 1290 families in Leiceſter.

"The corporation conſiſts of a mayor, recorder, 24 aldermen, 48 commoncouncil men, 2 chamberlains, a ſteward, bailiff, ſolicitor, and town-clerk.

"As to the elections, obſerve, 1. That the government of the town being anciently lodged in 24 perſons ſtyled "The mayor and his brethren," theſe ſeparately made choice of one of the members of parliament, and the commonalty of the town choſe the other. This diſtinct choice laſted as long as Henry VIII's reign; but I cannot tell the preciſe time when they began to chooſe jointly. 2. That the commons concerned in the election of their member were all the inhabitants of the town, whether free men or others, till 4 Henry VII. when the king, by the advice of his council of the dutchy, to prevent the diſorders which frequently happened in the election of mayor, burgeſſes of parliament, and making aſſeſſments, ordered the mayor and 24 comburgeſſes to call unto them only 48, whom they ſhould judge to be the wiſeſt and graveſt of the commonalty, upon theſe occaſions; and at the next election of annual officers, September 21, 5 Henry VII. the commons at large inſiſting upon their ancient privileges in a tumultuous manner, the king in parliament that year ordained that the mayor and his brethren ſhould from time to time chooſe 48 of the moſt diſcreet inhabitants of the town, who, with the mayor and his brethren, or the moſt part of them, ſhould make yearly election of all the mayors and other officers of the ſaid borough, and their election ſhould be good, &c. The election of parliament men is not expreſsly mentioned in this act; nevertheleſs, all elections of them were in fact made agreeable to the tenor of it till the reſtoration of king Charles II. when ſir John Prettyman made intereſt with the commons at large, and, upon a hearing in the houſe of commons, was admitted to be duly elected in virtue of their votes; and now the right of election is veſted in the freemen at large not receiving alms, and in the inhabitants paying ſcot and lot, not being perſons certificated from other places. The number of electors is now ſuppoſed to be about 2000. As to the perſons elected, it is obſervable that of old they were always inhabitants and members of the borough. The firſt inſtance which I have met of any countryman's[1] election being in the firſt parliament of queen Mary, when William Faunt and Thomas Farnham, eſqrs. were choſen."

[k] It may be queried whatever pes here means the foot of the ſaint, or the ſum total of the profits of his ſhrine.

The caſtle was the court of the great Henry duke of Lancaſter, who added to it 26 acres of ground, which he incloſed with a ſtrong ſtone wall 18 feet high, and called it his novum opus, now the Newark, where the beſt houſes are, being ſtill extraparochial under caſtle guard by antient grant from the crown. The ſpacious hall and kitchen are intire, the former new fronted ſerving for the ſeſſions houſe; and ſeveral gates, of which the eaſtern is eſteemed a curious piece of architecture, with a curious arch, and the tower over it ſerves as a magazine for the county militia[2]. The keep remains and large parts of the walls. St. Nicholas' church is partly built of Roman ruins, of very long bricks and ragged ſtones alternately. At the weſt end is the Jewry wall, a ruin of three large arches with three leſſer within them, and three like niches, the wall one yard and a half thick, conſiſting of five rows of ſtones and three of brick alternately: human bones have been found thereabouts, which may have belonged to the adjoining church. Some ſuppoſe it part of a temple of Janus[m], others of a ſepulchre, others of a ſynagogue. At the eaſt end of the church is a ſpot called Holy bones, where many bones of oxen have been found, it having been the old ſhambles.

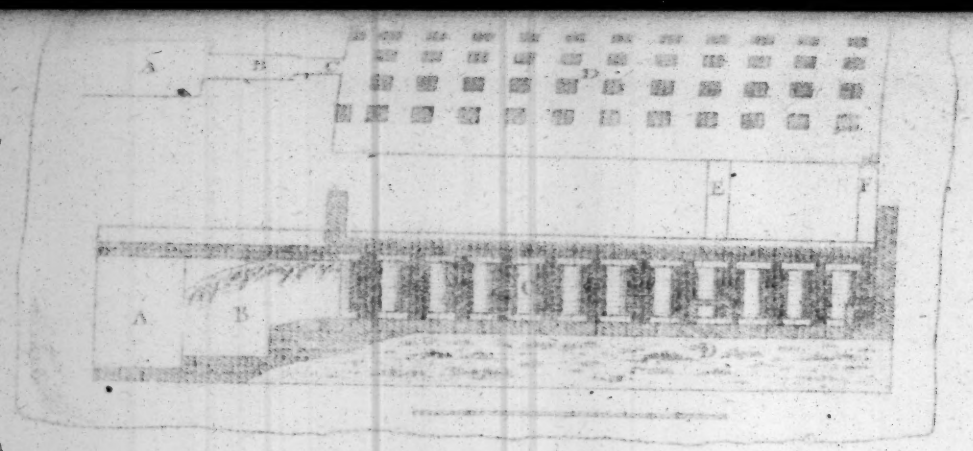
Mr. Samuel Carte, vicar of St. Martin's, in a letter to B. Willis, gives the following account of this ruin commonly known by the name of Jewry Wall. "It is at the weſt end of St. Nicholas church-yard; and though what remains of it ſerves for a wall, yet was it, I doubt not, a building which took in a great deal of the area of the church-yard, and the materials of it were in a great meaſure made uſe of in building that church, as appears by the Britiſh or Roman bricks or tiles viſible in the walls of it. It is difficult to judge now what the uſe of it was; but I am apt to think it was of the ſame nature with the Werry-wall in Lancaſter, or the old works at Worceſter, and if one had an opportunity of viewing all theſe and comparing them together, one might perhaps make a probable gueſs at their uſe. The remains of it are about 23 yards long, and on the outſide the height is about 9 or 10 yards, raiſed up by ſeveral ſtrata of rough foreſt ſtone and of brick or tile; each brick is about 18 inches long, 15 broad, and about two thick, for ſome are bigger and ſome leſſer. The mortar between the bricks is full as thick as the bricks. I reckon 17 ſtrata, in the following order.

1. Four rows of ſtone 27 inches high.
2. Three rows of brick about 10 inches high.
3. Three rows of ſtone, 18 inches.
4. Three rows of brick, 8 inches.
5. Four rows of ſtone, 20 inches.
6. Three rows of brick.
7. Four rows of ſtone.
8. Three rows of brick.
9. Three rows of ſtone.
10. Three rows of brick.
11. Three rows of ſtone.
12. Three rows of brick.
13. Three rows of ſtone.
14. Three rows of brick.
15. Four rows of ſtone.
16. Three rows of brick.
17. Four rows or more of ſtone.

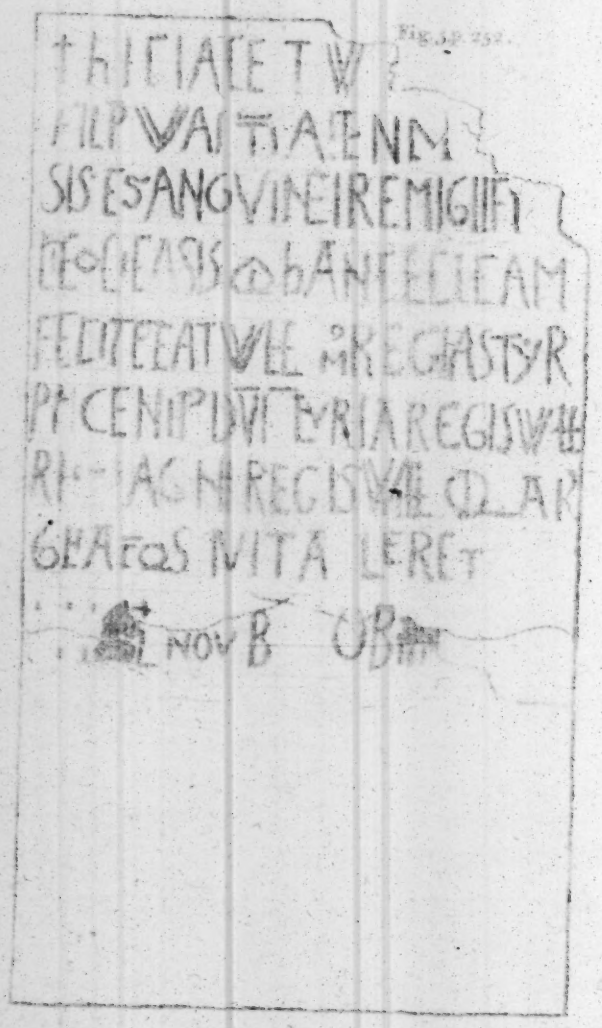
In the wall near the middle at five yards diſtance from each other there are two large arches, which ſerved for the entrance into it, about three yards wide and four and an half high. There are ſeveral holes in the wall about ſix inches ſquare, viz. in the 3d, 6th, 9th, 13th, and 17th ſtratum. The holes in this laſt are as large again as the others, and paſs quite through the wall; whereas the firſt do not appear to do ſo, though there are ſome holes like them on the inſide. The wall on the inſide (viz. in the church-yard) has no facing, as being broke off roughly from the parts that were continued to it, and it conſiſts of four arches; the two largeſt are in the middle, and in part anſwer the two on the outſide, which were made for entrances, but are much larger within, and the entrances are not in the middle of them. In the column between theſe two great arches there appears the remainder of an archwork, which ſeems to be made for reverberating heat; and in all the inſide the blackneſs of the ſtones and brick retain plain indications of fire and ſmoke. The two other arches are near as high, and in ſhape are much like the other, but not ſo large. In the ſouth arch a poor woman has a little houſe, who ſhewed me two ſtones now placed on the outermoſt wall of her houſe, which, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was informed were taken out of the arch within her houſe, and placed where they were; that, though the perſon living there was not at home, yet perſons of curioſity might ſee them. One of them is in the exact form of a croſs formy or patée, as I think it is called; it is 13 inches over, and the breadth of each of the four arms at the decuſſation is four inches, and at the end ſix or ſeven. The other ſtone has a croſs excavated in it about 10 inches long. I ſomewhat doubt of the truth of the woman's relation as to the place whence the ſtones were taken, becauſe I can diſcover no ſuch formed ſtones in any part of the work." We have engraved in Pl. IV. fig. 1. Mr. Buck's view of theſe ruins.

In a cellar at the Nine Elms near All Saints church is ſtill to be ſeen a teſſelated pavement three or four feet ſquare, with a rude repreſentation of a ſtag, Cupid, and another perſon, in red and white teſſelæ: An account of it, ſent by Mr. Carte about 1675, with a draught and his opinion to Mr Humphry Wanley, was publiſhed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions 1711, N° 331. The ſubject of it is generally called by ſuch authors as mention it Actæon; but is, he thinks, the repreſentation of that fable, which ſays that a perſon finding fault with Venus, ſhe in revenge engaged her ſon Cupid to make him fall in love with a monſter; it conſiſting of the figure of Cupid with his bow drawn, and a man with one arm about a monſter's neck as going to kiſs it. The monſter has the head of a ſtag, which gave the occaſion to the calling it Actæon. It was diſcovered upon digging of a cellar at a houſe over againſt St. John's hoſpital, about a yard and a half under the common ſurface of the earth. What was the ex-

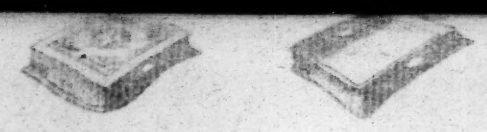
[1] i. e. non reſident. [2] G. [m] Burton, p. 166, 167.

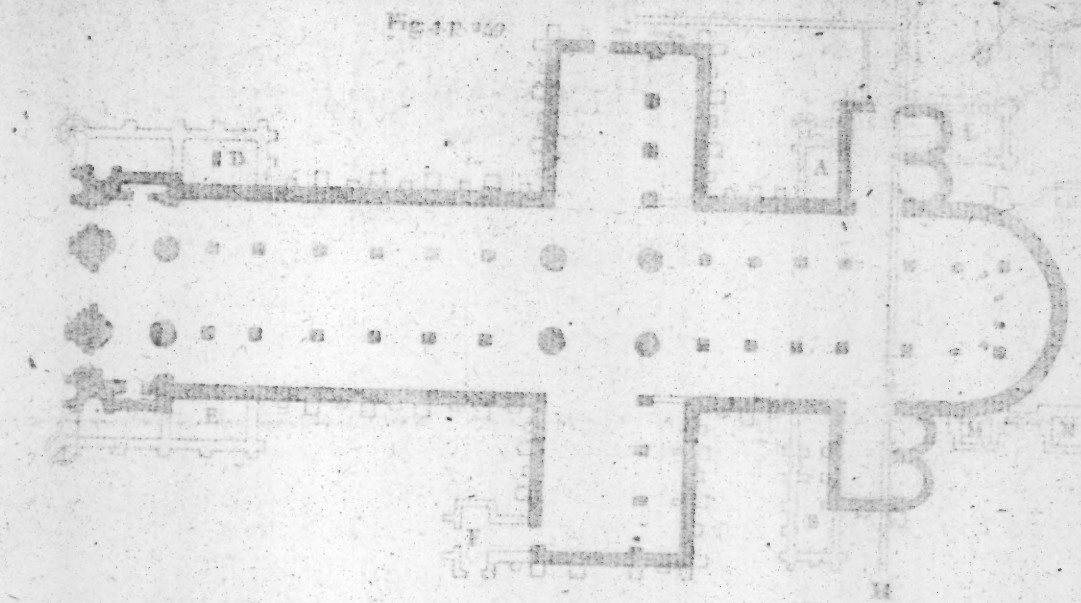


A
B
C
D
E
F

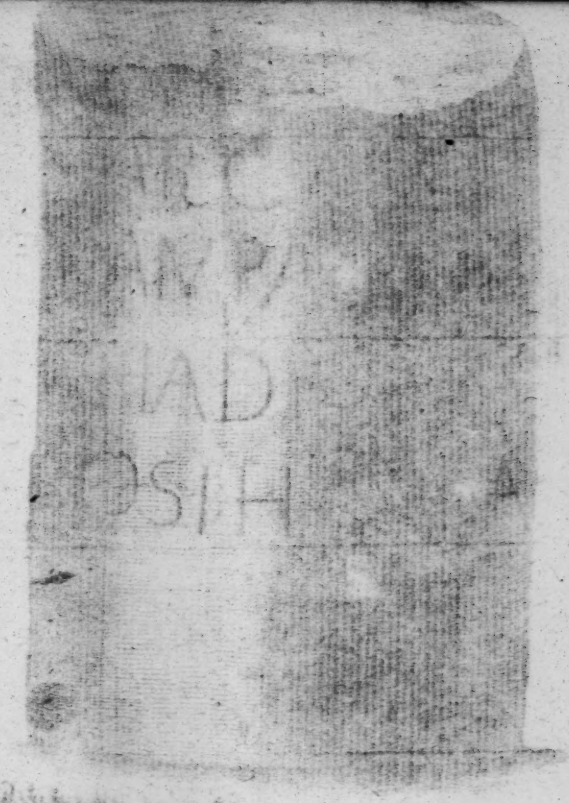


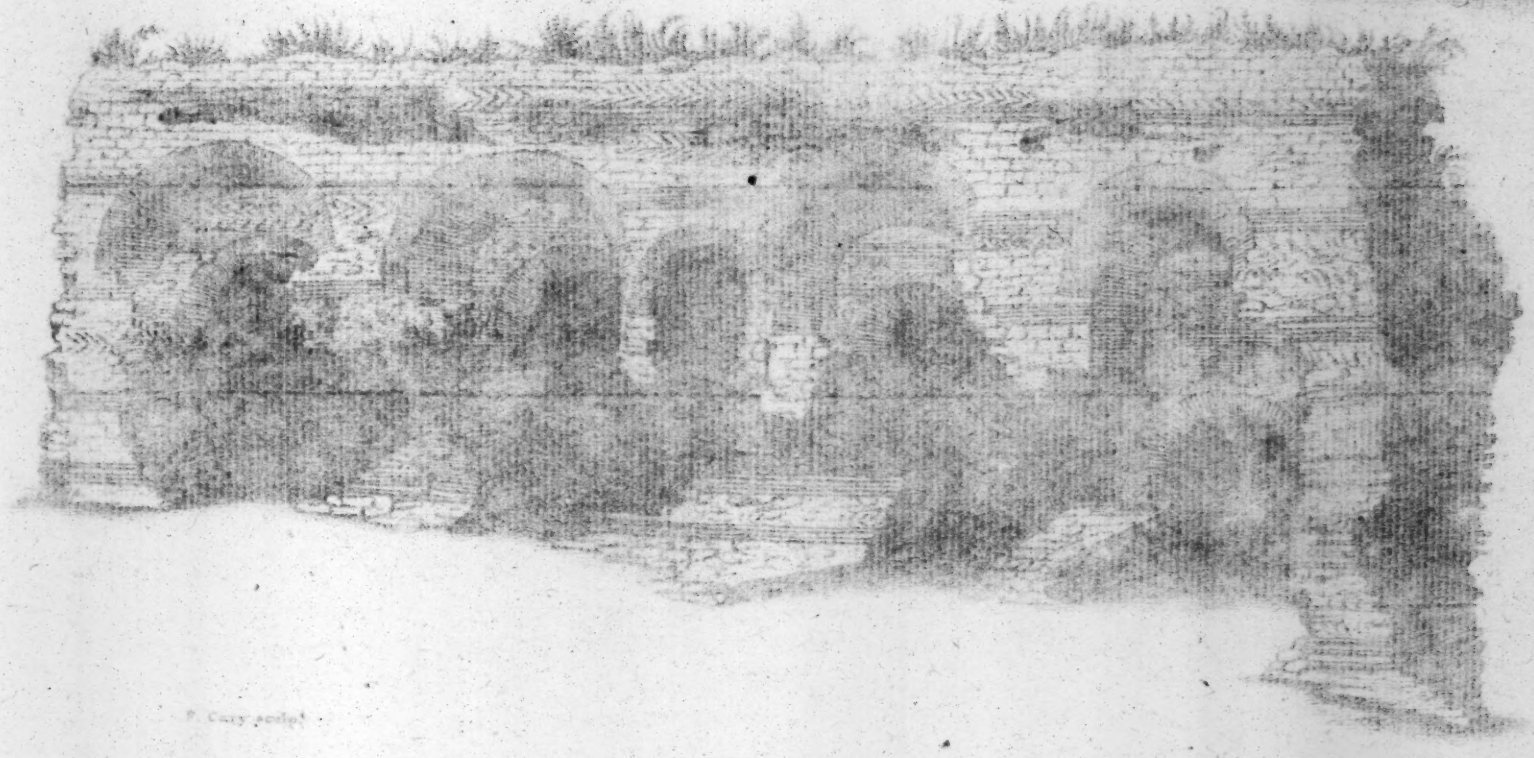
THICIATE TW
FILP VAR TIA TENM
SIS ES ANG VINEIRE MIGIIFT
TEOCIEASIS ⊙ bANFECIEAM
FEDITEEATVE MREGIASTVR
PTCENIPIDVITERIA REGISVIII
RI--IAGNI REGISVIII ⊙ AP
GEATOS MITA LERET
NOV B OB





A
B
C
D
E





being perſons certificated from other places. The number of electors is now ſuppoſed to be about 1000. As to the perſons elected, it is obſervable that of old they were always inhabitants and freemen of the borough. The firſt inſtance which I have met with to the contrary, is the election, in the 6th year of queen Mary, when Thomas Farnham, eſqrs. were choſen.

The caſtle was the court of the great honour of Lancaſter, who raiſed it on the ruins of Leiceſter, which he incloſed with a ſtrong wall 30 feet high, and called it his new gate, now the North gate, where the beſt houſes are, being all extraparochial under caſtle grant by antient grant from the crown. The ſpacious hall and kitchen are intire, the furnace now fronted ſerving for the ſeſſions houſe; and ſeveral gates, of which the eaſtern is a curious piece of architecture, with a ruſtic arch, and the tower over it ſtrengthened for the county militia. The [illegible] walls. St. [illegible] ſtrong ruins, [illegible] three feet within them, and three pilaſters, the wall one yard and a half thick, conſiſting of five rows of ſtones and three of brick alternately: human bones have been found underneath, which may have belonged to the adjoining church. Some ſuppoſe it part of a [illegible] of James [illegible], others of a ſepulchre, others of a [illegible] gogue. At the eaſt end of the chancel is [illegible] called Holy Rood, where [illegible] have been found, it having been [illegible] church.

Mr. [illegible] Clare, [illegible] to [illegible] though what remains [illegible] it, I doubt not, [illegible] of the area of [illegible] it were in a ſtyle [illegible] that church, as appears by the [illegible] bricks or tiles [illegible] to judge now what the [illegible] to think it was of the ſame nature with the [illegible] wall in Leiceſter, or the old works at Wallingford, and it was had an opportunity of viewing [illegible] and compaſſing them together, one might [illegible] make a probable gueſs at their uſe. [illegible] of it are about 24 yards long, and [illegible] height is about [illegible] or 30 feet, [illegible] ſtrata of ruſtic work [illegible] brick is about [illegible] inches [illegible] two thick, for [illegible] mortar between the [illegible] bricks. I reckon 27 [illegible]

1. Four rows of ſtone.
2. Three rows of brick.
3. Three rows of ſtone.
4. Four rows of brick.
5. Four rows of ſtone.
6. Three rows of brick.
7. Four rows or more of ſtone.

In the wall near the middle [illegible] from each other, there are two [illegible] ſerved for the entrance into [illegible] wide and four and an half high. [illegible] holes in the wall about ſix [illegible] 9th, 10th, and 11th [illegible] in this laſt are at large [illegible] quite through the wall; where [illegible] peer in at, ſo, though the [illegible] on the inſide. The wall [illegible] though ſo dry has [illegible] rough from the [illegible] a crevice of four inches [illegible] and in part ſurrounded [illegible] which was made [illegible] there appears to be [illegible] and the entrance [illegible] [illegible] and the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

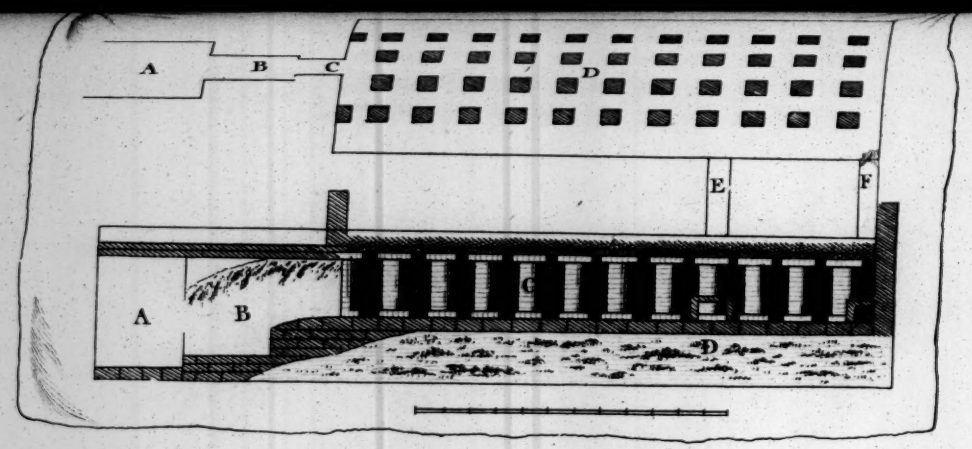


Fig. 5. p. 252.

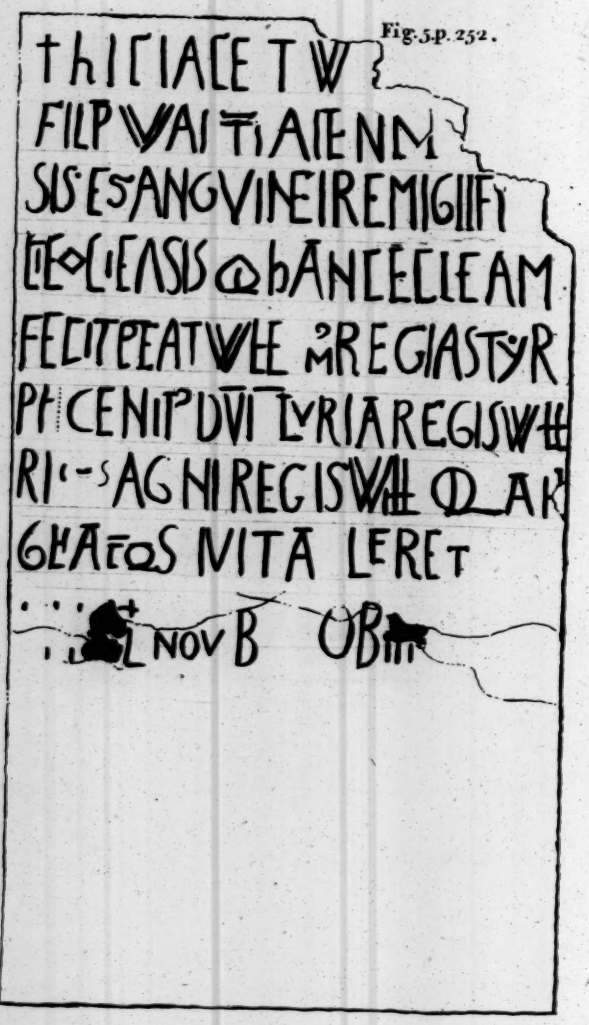

Fig. 4. p. 259.

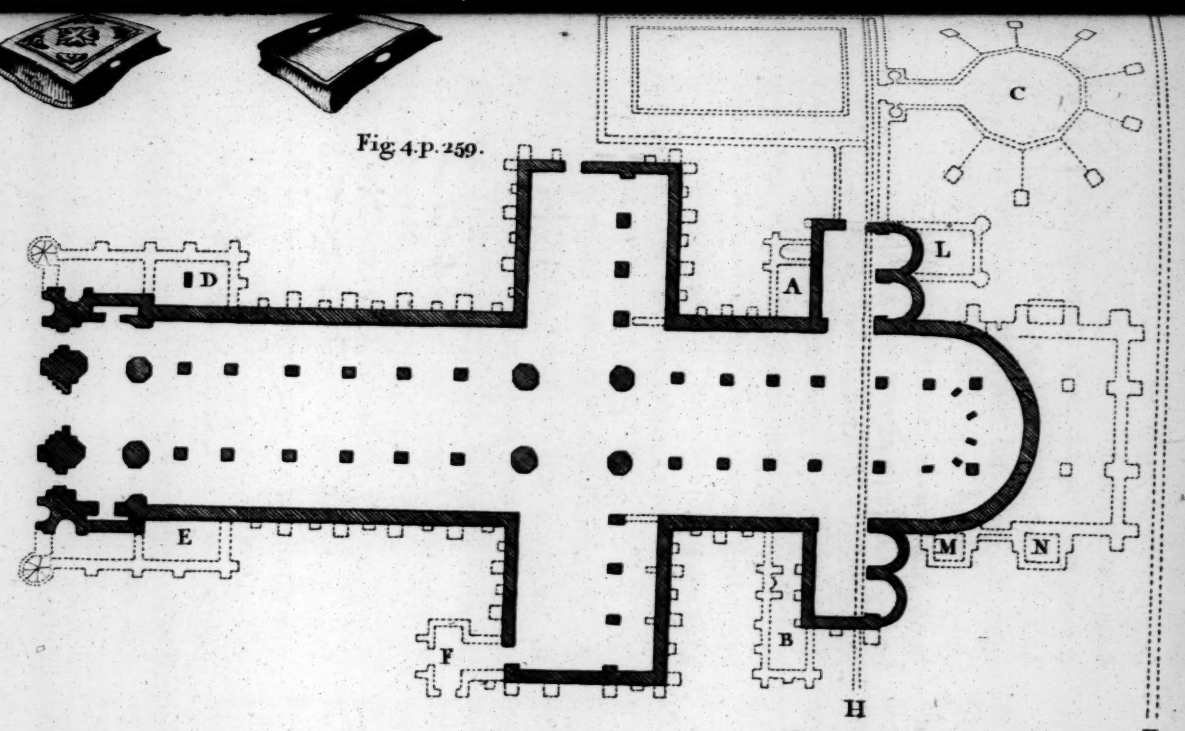

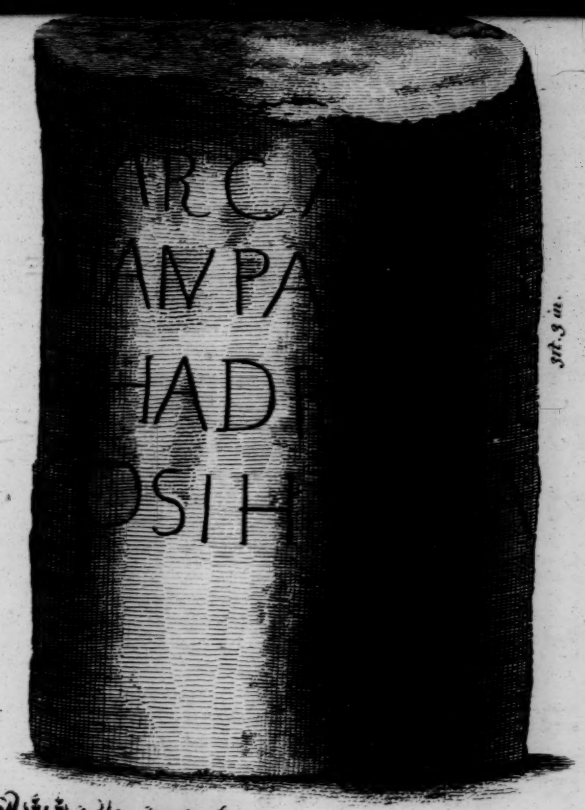

Fig. 1. p. 208.

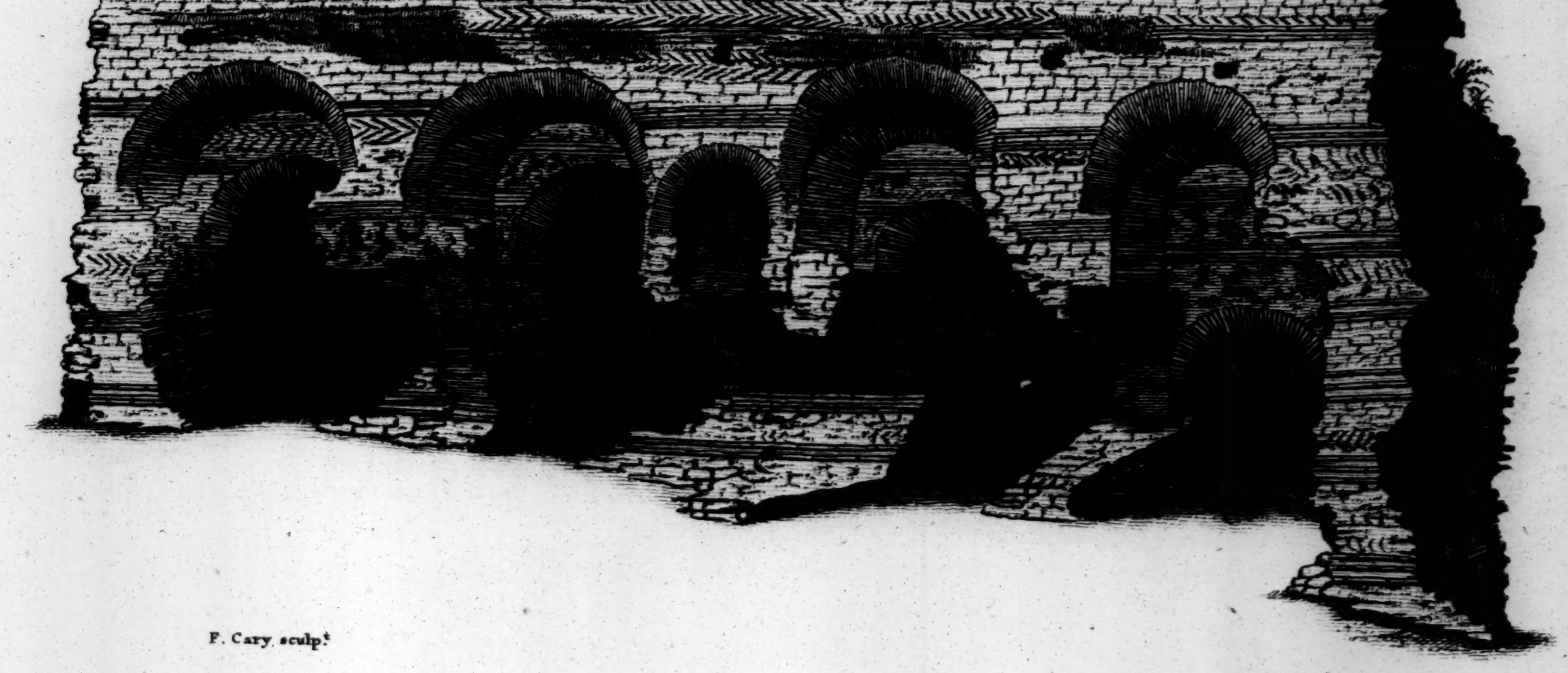

F. Cary, sculp.

tent of the whole pavement is not known; but this figure was preſerved by order of the maſter of the houſe, and is an octagon of about a yard diameter. Upon digging other parts of the cellar deeper they found the earth under the opus teſſelatum to conſiſt of little elſe but oyſter-ſhells, and that to a great depth. A perſon employed in digging wells, &c. told Mr. Carte that they find that about the middle of the town the made earth is about 16 feet deep, but in the outer parts (e. g. about the horſe-fair) it is but about nine feet deep. Mr. John Wilkins, then ſenior alderman, informed him that about 1667 or 1668, digging in a yard belonging to a houſe on the eaſt ſide of the High Croſs Street, near the Water-houſe, about 12 feet deep, he diſcovered a very fine floor, which upon examination he found to be made of lime mortar, about ſix or ſeven inches thick, and about 10 feet long and four wide. The walls (whether of brick or ſtone he forgets) were finely painted; and on the wall ſide of the room, within about four yards diſtance of each other, ſtood two chimnies as high as the mantle-tree, &c. Two other pavements were found ſince at Cooke's new Vauxhall in a bathing-room near the river, which now riſes over and damages them, but muſt formerly have been conſiderably lower, as at Salisbury. Burton mentions a hypocauſt found in his time near the Jewry wall. At the brick works on the ſouth ſide of the town, in digging clay, the workmen find urns, coins, and other remains of the Romans [n]. A pot of Roman coins was found at the entrance of the Grey friars. Six hundred braſs coins of Dioclesian, Maximian, Maximinus Daza, Chlorus, Severus, Maxentius, and Conſtantine the Great [o] were found near the town 1736.

The town wall and ditch of which Dr. Stukeley ſaw traces are now gone. On the old Boſworth road at the back of the town which leads to the Foſſe way is St. Auſtin's well, antiently in great repute. On the left of the Foſſe are Dane's hills, near which is a cavern with an arched roof called Black Annis' hole, and a marley medicinal water now diſuſed.

There can be no doubt that Leiceſter was the RATÆ of Antoninus, ΡΑΤΑΙ of Ptolemy, &c. [p] which ſome derive from Rhedyn, fern, which Dioſcorides ſays is called in Celtic Ratis, and which grows hereabouts plentifully [q]. Dr. Stukeley traced the Roman wall nearly all round. Rawdikes, about half a mile ſouth of the town, is a double bank with a ditch between it like thoſe at Dorcheſter c. Oxford, probably a fortification, though Dr. Stukeley calls it a Britiſh curſus [r]. At Ratby village three or four miles north-weſt from Leiceſter on the declivity of a hill at Ratby ſprings, ſo called from a fine ſpring of water juſt by, is a camp about 280 yards by 155, the vallum from one and an half to three yards high, very bold; the foſs much filled up [s].

The ſee was removed in the reign of Edgar 970 to Lincoln, after 12 biſhops had ſat here from 680 to 737 [t].

Theſe following Mr. Carte took to be the only proper biſhops of Leiceſter:

Anno 679. The ſee of Leiceſter being taken out of the dioceſe of Litchfield, Cuthwinus was placed in it; but he ſoon quitting, it reverted to Litchfield.

Anno 691. St. Wilfrid being baniſhed from York, was made biſhop of Leiceſter by king Æthelred, and ſo continued till he was ejected by the ſynod of Hethefeld, anno 703, when the ſee was re-united to Litchfield.

Anno 737. the ſee was finally ſeparated from Litchfield, and Tota placed in it, who died anno 764 [u]. To him ſucceeded Eadbert.

Werenbert died 768 [x].

Unwora, or Unwona.

Rethunus died 861 [x].

Aldredus was depoſed 873 [x].

Ceolred ſucceeded; but in the following year, when the Pagan Danes conquered Mercia, I ſuppoſe, he fled to Dorcheſter near the Thames, which was the boundary of the Weſt Saxon kingdom, from whence he might expect protection from the Danes. His ſucceſſor Halurdus or Salurdus ſat at Dorcheſter, and therefore is ſtyled Dorceſt' Epus [y].

"The foreſt or chace of Leyceſter joining hard "to the town is a five miles lengthe, but of no "great breadthe, and is repleniſhed with deer. "Bellmontes leaſe, ſumtyme a great parke by Ley-"ceſter, but now converted to paſture [z]."

Thurmaſton.

In July 1771 the workmen making a new turnpike road from Leiceſter to Melton found near Thurmaſton and not far from where the preſent Leiceſter road paſſed from Foſs, a heap of ſtones ſet in lime (the lime of Barrow from a hard dark blue ſtone is reckoned the beſt in England) ſo hard as to baffle their eagerneſs to demoliſh it. It had ſerved as a baſe to a large milliare three feet ſix inches high, five feet ſeven inches round, which lay by it, and ſtill remains at the turnpike houſe at Thurmaſton. On it was this inſcription:

IMR CAES ARI
DIV. TAIAN. PARTH F. DIV. NERVAE NEP
TAIAN. HADRIAN. AVG. PONT. MAX. TRIB.
POT. IV COS III VA RATIS .....
H

Whether the figures in the 5th line ſtand for II or III miles it determines the antient name of Leiceſter to have been Ratæ and not Rage. It is the oldeſt milliare known in Britain (the others beginning with Philip), as well as the firſt inſcription found in this iſland. It is engraved in pl. IV. fig. 1.

Groby.

"There remain few tokens of the old caſtle at "Groby more than that yet is the hill that the kepe "of the caſtle ſtode on very notable, but there is "now no ſtone work upon it, and the late Thomas "marquiſs filled up the ditch with erthe intend-"ing to make an herbare there. The old part of "the worke that now is was made by the Ferrers, "but newer works and buildings were erected by "the lord Thomas firſt marquis of Dorſet, who be-"gan and erected the foundation and walls of a [n] Stukeley I. 103. [o] R. Gale, A. S. min. [p] Horſley. 437. [q] Gale, Anton. 100.

[r] Theſe hippodromes were called in the language of the country rhedagua, the racer rhedagwr, and the carriage rheda. Pownall on the ſtudy of Antiquities, p. 277.
[s] Gent. Mag. Feb. 1773, p. 75. [t] Burton, 161. Godwin 280. 308. Ed. Rich.
[u] Simeon Dunelm. [x] Matthew Weſtm.
[y] Chron. Sax. 897. Matthew Weſt. 897. Angl. Sacr. vol. I. p. 554.
[z] Lel. I. 21.

" great gatehouſe of brick and a tower that was " left half onfiniſhed of him, and ſo it ſtandeth yet. " This lord Thomas erected alſo and almoſt finiſhed " two towers of brick in the front of the houſe, as " reſpondent on each ſide to the gate-houſe. There " is a fair large park by the place, ſix miles in com- " paſs, and a poor village [z]."

Groby near Ratby was a market town, and gave title to the Greys, which was forfeited by the attainder of Thomas Grey marquis of Dorſet by Richard III. He made his eſcape to Venice. At his return in the next reign he was reſtored, and began to build here. He died 18 Henry VII. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas and grandſon Henry, duke of Suffolk, whoſe daughter Jane being beheaded for uſurping the crown from queen Mary, he eſcaped with his life, but raiſing commotions the ſame year was proſcribed, and being betrayed by his park-keeper was apprehended in his park at Aſtley, and beheaded, as was his brother ſoon after. The title of baron Grey of Groby was reſtored by James I. in his firſt year to ſir Henry Grey ſon of another brother, John of Pirgo, whoſe grandſon John was created earl of Stamford 3 Charles I. which title continues in the family [a].

Badgeworth. " The lord of Huntingdon hath Baggeworth " park, where appear within a ditch ruins of a manor " place like a caſtle building [b]."

About ſeven miles north of Leiceſter on the Foſſe way is a ſmall round hill, ſuppoſed a tumulus, and Segs hill. known by the name of Segs or Sex hill, there being ſix pariſhes which centre at it, making it the mark of their bounds [7].

Thurcaſton. Beyond Leiceſter is Thurcaſton, which gave birth to that holy martyr biſhop Latimer, where the inhabitants pretend to ſhew the remains or ſite of the houſe wherein he was born [8].

Montſorel. Montſorel is a long ill-paved town [c]. In the ſtreet is an antient croſs almoſt hid by a paltry building ſet up round it: the ſhaft is long and ſlender, with ſome very rude carvings on it, and ſtands on a pedeſtal, at each corner of which is as rude a figure. The caſtle ſtood on a ſteep hill of reddiſh granite, with pieces whereof the ſtreets are paved. Theſe ſtones are commonly called Charnley foreſt ſtones, and are ſo hard as to be coveted for painters' mullers. Many houſes are built with them, and make a very odd appearance. They are often imperfect cones, and being too hard to be cut or broken the ſmootheſt face is laid outermoſt in beds of the excellent lime of the adjoining pariſh of Barrow, whoſe ſoil is a hard ſlate lying in thin ſtrata. The firſt under the earth is yellow, and below it are ſeveral ſtrata of blue ſtone, about ſix inches thick, and two feet aſunder. Both ſorts are dug up, piled in form of a cone, and burnt. The burning one of theſe heaps takes up two days and three nights. This lime is in ſuch repute for waterworks that much of it is exported to Holland, and the demand has within theſe few years greatly increaſed. The lime for manure is chiefly burnt at Gracedieu ſome miles off. On extending the incloſures in this county many of the old ones are broken up, and it is found very good huſbandry ſo to do. They lime them, and in three or four years lay them down again.

Barrow At Barrow is an hoſpital founded by Thomas Cave and Humphry Babington for the old bachelors and widowers of this pariſh and Querndon adjoining [9]. William Beveridge, biſhop of St. Aſaph, was born at Barrow 1638, and died 1708. He gave the patronage of this vicarage, which he augmented, to St. John's college Cambridge, where he was educated.

Rod Rodeley on the high turnpike road to Derby was a preceptory of knights templars, valued at £. 87. [d] What is called Rodely houſe is a poor inn by the road ſide, I think the ſign of the Red Lion. At Mr. Babington's ſeat at ſome diſtance from the village are ſtill ſeveral monuments and portraits. When his ſiſter ſhewed Mr. Aſhby the houſe, on entering one room, probably a chapel, ſhe ſaid they were then in Jeruſalem, by which he ſuppoſed the whole houſe was no longer in proprio loco, but transferred to Jeruſalem in order to be diſcharged of all parochial duties, tithes, &c. But it rather proves that this was the ſite of the preceptory, and that the chapel only went traditionally by the name of its antient lords, as at Aſlackby c. Lincoln, where was a preceptory of Templars, the whole farm houſe, where only the tower remains intire of the original building, retains the name of the Temple. Here was found a teſſelated pavement with coins of Conſtantine, broken urns, human ſculls and bones, ſtags horns, and part of a wall [e]. The owner of this manor is intitled to a ſum of money from every one making a purchaſe of lands within what is called his ſoke, at ſo much per cent on what is paid for the purchaſe.

B Not far from it is Bradgate; " a fair park and " lodge, lately buildid there by Thomas lord Grey " marquis of Dorſet [f]," where was born 1537 his great grandaughter, the unfortunate queen Jane, beheaded 1554. It is ſtill the property of the earl of Stamford and baron Grey of Groby. The old houſe was burnt down ſome years ago, but the park remains.

F About four miles from Leiceſter on the oppoſite ſide the Soar to Montſorrel at Foſſington, ſo called perhaps from the Foſſe way, juſt by the Wreke is a large tumulus, 350 feet long 120 broad, 40 high, and very ſteep, ſtanding due north and ſouth, called S Shipley hill. Mr. Carte took it to be the monument of ſome Daniſh king. On its top are modern trenches cut for amuſement, perhaps like thoſe on Burrow hills hereafter mentioned, and the mazes in Dorſet and Eſſex. It is about a land's length on this ſide Ratcliffe on the Wreke, between the Foſſe road and the river; and whereas all other tumuli which he had ſeen are of a round form, this is long, and agrees with the account which Olaus Wormius gives of the ſepulchres of the moſt antient Daniſh kings, ſaying that they are made ad magnitudinem & figuram carinæ maximæ navis regiæ [g]. At Radcliff the Roman road paſſes the brook over meadows. Dr. Stukeley [h] thinks it ended at Leiceſter eaſt gate, but Mr. Aſhby conceives it paſſed on by Belgrave turnpike and Leiceſter abbey, and did not come within half a mile or more of Leiceſter.

[z] Lel. I. 19. [a] Dugd. Bar. I. 719. [b] Lel. I. 22. [7] G. [8] G.

[c] Bullet's derivation of the name of this place, ſorel, facheux, q. d. difficult of aſcent, is not much better than the vulgar derivation of the country people, that the Devil mounted ſorrel and took one leap (Wanlip). The obvious one ſeems that of the mount καὶ' ἐξοχὴν overhanging the Soar; hill being only a repetition.

[9] G. [d] Tan. 243. Burton, 234. [e] Archdeacon Palmer's letter in A. S. min. 1721.

[f] Lel. I. 19. [g] See ſuch at Alfriſton, Suſſex, and Shipton hill, c. Dorſet. [h] Stuk. I. 102.

Soar ends in the Trent a little above Cotes, the habitation of the family of Skipwith, originally deſcended out of Yorkſhire, and enriched many years ſince with fair poſſeſſions in Leiceſterſhire by an heir of Ormeſby[i].

Dalby a preceptory of knights hoſpitallers, founded probably by Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter t. Henry II. valued at £.91.[k]

" The town of Lughborow is in largeneſs and " good building next to Leyrceſter of all the mar- " ket towns in the ſhire, and hath in it four ſtrait " ſtreets or more well paved. The pariſh church " is fair. At the ſouth end of it is a fair houſe of " timber, where ons king Henry did lie[l]." It is a dirty ill-paved town, with one good inn, a freeſchool and charity ſchool, a market, and five fairs. Slate is common hereabouts, and the tombs are all made of it; the inſcriptions being neatly though not eaſily cut, and laſting. It makes very good mile ſtones, on which the letters appear white. The principal quarries are at Swithland between Montſorrel and Bradgate, belonging to ſir Joſhua Danvers, from whence the ſtables at Houghton were covered; but they are not equal to thoſe of Weſtmorland and Cumberland.

Loughborough was the antient inheritance of the noble family of Deſpencer, who procured it a market and fairs. But on the death and attainder of Hugh le Deſpencer earl of Wincheſter 19 Edward III. it was forfeited to the crown, and granted by Edward III. to Henry Beaumont in general tail; and in his poſterity it continued till William viſcount Beaumont being in the battle of Towton on the ſide of Henry VI. was attainted of high treaſon 1 E. IV. and the manor granted to William lord Haſtings. But viſcount Beaumont was reſtored to it by Henry VII. and on the attainder of viſcount Lovel his ſucceſſor, it reverted to the crown. 19 Henry VIII. the marquis of Dorſet obtained a grant of it, but on the attainder of his ſon Henry duke of Suffolk 2 Mary it was forfeited to the queen, who gave it to Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough, from whom it has deſcended directly to the preſent earl of Huntingdon. This Edward was third ſon of George earl of Huntingdon, and did great ſervice to queen Mary by raiſing forces to oppoſe lady Jane Grey. He was made maſter of the horſe, privy counſellor, and knight of the garter, created lord Haſtings of this place, and lord chamberlain. The title was revived 9 Charles I. in Henry his great nephew, younger ſon to his brother Henry earl of Huntingdon, who firſt appeared in arms for Charles I. conducted the queen from Burlington to Oxford, planted garriſons of his own forces, particularly at Aſhby de la Zouch the family ſeat. He died unmarried 1666, and with him the title ſunk[m]. It was revived 1780 in the perſon of Alexander Wedderburn lord chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, who ſtill enjoys it.

" Lughborow parke, a mile from the town, came " to the marquis of Dorſet by exchange of lands " with the king[n]."

A navigation opened 1778, ſupplied by ſeveral neighbouring brooks, communicating with the river Soar, brings up coals from Derby, Shipley, and other coal-pits, reduced to half price.

" A little way off Burley park now longing alſo " to the marquis of Dorſet[o]." Burley park.

" The foreſt of Charley is 20 miles in compaſs. " The moſt part of it at this time longeth to the mar- " quis of Dorſet; the reſidue to the king and the erle " of Huntingdon. In this foreſt is no good town, nor " ſcant a village. Riding almoſt in the entering of this " foreſt I ſaw two or three quarres in hilles of ſlate " ſtone longing to the marquis of Dorſet. And riding " a little further I left the parke of Bewmanor cloſid " with ſtone walls and a pratie lodge[p]." " Bewmanor " parke is the kings[q]." " There is a fayr quarry " of alablaſter ſtone about four or five miles from " Bewmanor[r]." Charley foreſt. Beaumanour park

Charnewood foreſt is in form ſomewhat ſquare, of a hard barren ſoil, full of hills, woods, rocks of ſtone, diſaforreſted by Henry III.[s] It extends about 10 miles in length and ſix in width, and though in Leland's time it had plenty of wood, and in the memory of man a ſquirrel might be hunted in it ſix miles together without touching the ground, it is now without a tree in the uninclоſed part. Charnewood foreſt.

A little beyond Loughborough is Quarendon park, bought by ſerjeant Philips of the duke of Buckingham for judge Jefferies, but the ſerjeant liked the purchaſe ſo well that he kept it for himſelf. The duke, however, cut down 5000*l.* of timber before he would execute the conveyance. One of this family died a few years ago, and left the place and the large eſtate to his wife for life. She is ſince married to ſir William Gordon. A little farther at Diſhley, a farm belonging to this eſtate, lives Mr. Bakewell, whoſe improvements in the breed of cattle and in farming are well known to every lover of huſbandry. Quarendon. Diſhley.

The Beaumonts of Charnwood deſcended from a younger ſon of John count of Brienne in France, who, for his high honour and true valor, was preferred to marry the heireſs of the kingdom of Jeruſalem, and with great pomp crowned king of Jeruſalem 1248. Hence it is that we ſee the arms of Jeruſalem ſo often quartered with thoſe of Beaumont in ſundry places of England. Sir Henry Beaumont was the firſt that planted himſelf in England about 1308[t].

Ulverſcroft, Auſtin priory, founded t. Edward II. valued at 83*l.*[u] Ulverſcroft.

Grace Dieu, an Auſtin nunnery in Belton pariſh, founded about 24 Henry III. valued at £.83.[x] Sir John Beaumont, brother of the dramatic poet of that name, and himſelf a poet, was born here 1582, and buried here 1628. Grace Dieu.

Gracedieu belonged to a younger branch of the Beaumonts[y].

" Dunnington caſtle is in the border of the foreſt " of Charnley towards Derbyſhire, and hath thereby " a park. It longid ſumtime to the earls of Leyceſter, " now it is the king's[z]." 1 Edward III. Henry earl of Leiceſter obtained a reverſal of his brother's attainder and reſtitution of his eſtate, of which this caſtle and manor were part. Afterwards deſcending to Henry IV. it became parcel of the duchy of Lancaſter, and ſo continued till the reign of queen Elizabeth, when Robert earl of Eſſex having obtained a grant of the park, ſold it in the latter end of that reign to George earl of Huntingdon, who pulled down the caſtle, and built a fair houſe, which Dunnington.

[i] Holland.
[k] Burton 84. Tan. 240.
[l] Lel. I. 20.
[m] Dug. I. 588. G.
[n] Lel. I. 20.
[o] Lel. Ib.
[p] Lel. I. 20.
[q] Lel. I. 21.
[r] Lel. I. 22.
[s] Burton, 69. 70.
[t] Holland.
[u] Tan. 241. Burton, 69. 231. 295.
[x] Tan. 244.
[y] Holland.
[z] Lel. I. 24.

now

now belongs to his ſucceſſor [a]. It ſtands a mile and an half from the caſtle, of which there are ſome ſmall remains. The park is extenſive, the houſe old and ſmall. Here was an hoſpital, valued at £. 3. 13s. [b]

A mile from hence, at a place lately called Welden ferry over the Trent, at its junction with the great Staffordſhire navigation, is now a handſome ſtone bridge of three large and two ſmall arches called Cavendiſh bridge, as having been built by that family. The tolls continue the ſame as to the ferry.

Diſeworth. At Diſeworth was born the aſtrologer Lilly 1602, who died 1681.

To return to the eaſt part of the county:

Burrow hills. "The place that now is called Borow hills is duble "dichid, and conteinith within the diche to my eſti- "mation a iiii ſcore acres. The ſoile of it berith "very good corne. Firſt I took it for a camp of "men of war, but after I plainly perceived that it "had been wallid about with ſtone, and to be ſure "pulled out ſome ſtones at the entering of it, where "hath been a great gate, and there found lime be- "tween the ſtones. But whether there hath been "any more gates than one there I am not yet ſure, "but conjecture yt. Very often hath been found "there numiſmata Romana of gold and ſilver, braſs "and fragments of all foundations in plowing. This "ſtondith in the very high way betwixt Melton and "London. To thes Borowe hilles every year on "Monday after Whiteſonday cum people of the "country thereabouts, and ſhoot, runne, wreſtle, "dance, and uſe other like feats of exerciſe. Bo- "row village is within leſſe than haif a mile of hit, "and ther dwelleth one Mr. Borow the greateſt "owner here. Borow hilles be about ſeven miles "from Leiceſter [c]."

VERNOMETUM. Dr. Gale finds in VERNOMETUM traces of the word Guern, Britiſh an Alder, as alſo in the neighbouring foreſt of Cherne, and in Quarendon, and traces of Roman names in Loughborough, Burghley, and Barrow. But he ſays the miles fix the ſtation at Charnley [d]. Dr. Stukeley follows Mr. Camden, and deſcribes the camp as very great, of 16 acres, on a very high hill with an extenſive proſpect, whoſe top it takes in: the rampart vaſt ſtones covered with turf, and a ditch; the form for the moſt part irregular, 800 feet long, the entrance ſouth-weſt guarded by two ramparts, an eminence in the middle. There is no Roman road from it to Ratæ [e]. Mr. Aſhby doubts the exiſtence of the ſtone ramparts mentioned by Leland and Stukeley.

Burton Lazar. "Burton Lazar, a very fair hoſpital and collegiate "church [f]," for a maſter and eight brethren of the Auſtin order, as well as ſeveral poor leprous brethren, valued at £. 265 [g] The preſent church is neat and ſmall, and here is a famous well, which was cleaned out by Mr. Burton, who has a good eſtate here. There are no remains of the hoſpital. Burton is only a hamlet to Melton Mowbray, as are Lyſonby, Freeby, Wymerley, Kettilby, and Wellby. The neighbourhood fancy Burton is uncommonly cold: Mr. Aſhby found that Fahrenheit's thermometer ſtood at 17 degrees above freezing, as it did alſo when immerged in a pailful of freſh-drawn pump-water at the ſame time at Melton Mowbray.

Freethby was the ſeat of the Hartopps from the Free time of Richard II. Edward Hartopp created a baronet by James I. married a daughter of ſir Eraſmus Dryden of Canons Aſhby co. Northampton, bart. and their grandſon John married a grandaughter of Charles, commonly called lord Fleetwood, one of Cromwell's generals. The title ended in ſir John 1765, and the eſtate paſſed to lord viſcount Howe by marriage with the daughter of his brother lieutenant-governor of Plymouth. Buckminſter in this Buc county on the edge of Lincolnſhire was another ſeat of this family.

William Cave, born at Pickwell 1637, where his Pick father was rector, died 1713.

"Melton hath one fair pariſh church, ſometime Mel
"an hoſpital, and cell to Lewes in Suſſex [h]." The Mow church is handſomely built in form of a croſs, beautifully neat within, with many good monuments, and the ſtalls, veſtry, and organ caſe ſtill remain. A large chapel in the ſouth tranſept, where the Hartopps, &c. bury, is full of rubbiſh. In this church lies Adam de Villiers, who died 1177; his figure on a tomb in a coat of mail croſs legged, and on his left arm a ſhield with a lion rampant. A cumbent figure of Hammon Belers, brother to lord Mowbray, the inſcription hid by a pew, in the ſouth aile: a braſs 1543. Biſhop Gibſon ſays it had a chantry for 14 prieſts, ſed q. The church ſuffered ſome damage within four or five years by a ſtorm in ſervice time. The tower is ſquare and magnificent. In the churchyard are many fine ſpecimens of Chriſtopher Staveley's letter-carving on ſlate. He once lived in this town, now at Lyſonby houſe a mile off, whence lord Beſborough took his Engliſh title. A chimney in Mrs. Underwood's houſe is ſuppoſed part of a nunnery, perhaps the hoſpital, and many marks of antiquity about the houſe. Its market is the moſt conſiderable for cattle in this part of England [10].

Near it is Stapleford, the ſeat of the earl of Har- Sta borough, to whom it gives title of viſcount [11].

Croxton abbey, founded for Premonſtratenſians Cro
1162 by William Porcarius de Linus, valued at £.385.[i] The laſt foundations were dug up by the duke of Rutland's order 1727 [k]. King John's bowels were buried in its church, the abbot being his phyſician.

Bottesford is a ſmall town, whoſe beautiful church Bo is the burial place of the family of Roos and Manners. Here are monuments for Thomas Manners earl of Rutland 1543 and wife. Henry 1563 and wife. Roger Manners earl of Rutland 1612 and his wife. George Manners 7th earl 1641, and others unknown.

Tilton, the original of the Digbys. Here was T an hoſpital annexed to Burton Lazars t. Henry II. [l]

Sir John Popham having built for his own ſepulture a chapel in the convent of Carthuſians at London, and dedicated it to St. Michael, endowed it with his manor of Rolleſton in this county. The prior and convent by deed dated July 1, 1460, granted to ſir John a fraternity and participation of ſpiritual benefits, and covenant to find a chaplain to celebrate maſs for his ſoul daily in his chapel, to keep his anniverſary with notes in their church, and to provide two torches that day at his tomb, burning one at his head, the other at his feet, and to give a

[a] Burton, 89. G. [b] Tan. 243. Burton, 90.
[c] Lel. V. 93. Holland. [d] P. 101. [e] P. 102-3.
[f] Lel. V. 93. [g] Ib. Col. I. 72. Burton, 43. 229. Tan. 239.
[h] Lel. V. 93. Tan. 243. [10] G. [11] G.
[i] Tan. 239. [k] Stukeley, MS. [l] Tan. 241.

dole to the poor of 6*s*. 8*d*. and a pittance for the convent that day [m].

"The river that waters this part of the ſhire is by the inhabitants about it called the Wreken, along which, upon reſemblance of the name, Holland ſought Vernometum, but in vain. This Wreken gathereth a ſtrong ſtream by many lively brooks reſorting unto it, whereof one paſſeth by Wimondham, an antient habitation of a younger branch of the houſe of the lords Barkleis well increaſed by an heir of Delalaund, and ſo on by Melton Mowbray beforementioned by Kirkby Bellers (where there was a priory) having that addition of the Bellers, a reſpective, rich, and noble family in their times, by Brokeſby, a ſeat now of the Villiers of an old Norman race, and deſcended from an heir of the Bellers, which Brokeſby imparted formerly the ſurname to the Brokesbies of eſpecial antiquity in theſe parts [n]." Of theſe were Francis Brokesby of Stoke, buried at Hinkley 1633, whoſe grandſon and nameſake, the nonjuring miniſter and writer, was fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge, and rector of Rowley in the eaſt riding of Yorkſhire, who communicated to Mr. Hearne in a letter by him printed in the 6th volume of Leland's Itinerary divers curious obſervations made in his travels about England with a view to a new edition of the Britannia. He alſo wrote the life of Mr. Dodwell, the champion of the Nonjurors, and died ſoon after its publication, 1715 [o]. Brokeſby has been long alienated from the Villiers family, and belongs now to Mr. Wright of Gothurſt. Here is no other houſe, nor has been a long time, in the pariſh, but the hall and a water-mill. Sir George Villiers, thinking he might employ his time more agreeably in London than in writing to his wife (as the ladies did not come regularly to London every winter), uſed to write all his letters to her before he left the country. Some miſtake in numbering them occaſioned a diſcovery of this piece of ingenuity.

"The chiefeſt houſe of the Villars at this time is "at Brokeſby in Leyceſterſhire lower by four miles "than Melton on the hither ripe of Wreke or Eye "riuer. There lye buried in the church diverſe of "the Villars. This Villars is lord of Houby hard "by ſometime parcell of the Bellars' lands, where "alſo is a meane manor place. This Villars is alſo "lord of Coneham in Lindecolneſhire towards the "parts of Trent, and there he hath a manor place. "This Villars is at this time a man but of 200 marks "of land by the yere. There is a mene generation "of the Villars about Stamford [p]." George Villiers, firſt duke of Buckingham, was born at Brookſby 1592, went to ſchool at Market Billeſdon, ſtabbed by Felton 1628. Hoby ſtands on the other ſide of the river.

Kirkby Bellers, a college for a warden and 12 prieſts, founded by Roger Beller 9 Edward II. afterwards a priory of Auſtin cannons 1359, valued at £. 142. 9 [q].

"Then the Wreken ſpeedeth by Ratcliffe [r], high mounted on a cliff, and within few miles conjoineth itſelf to Soar near Mount Soar hill. Whatſoever of this ſhire lyeth beyond the Wreken northward, is not ſo frequently inhabited, and part of it is called the Wold, as being hilly without wood: wherein Dalby, a ſeat of the old family of the Noels, of whom I ſhall ſpeak elſewhere, and Waltham on the Wold, a mean market, are moſt notable. Through this part, as I have been informed, paſſeth the Foſſe way, made by the Romans from Lewing bridge, by Segrave, which gave ſurname to the honourable family often mentioned, and the Lodge on the Would towards the Vale of Bever, but the tract thereof as yet I know not [s]. Dalby. Waltham on the Would.

The boundary of Leiceſterſhire from Warwickſhire is plain and ſtrait, Watling ſtreet road all along from Witherley till it approaches Northamptonſhire. The river Anker croſſes this ſtreet at Witherley bridge, and not overagainſt Lindley as in the maps [t]."

Search being made in the Exchequer for the releifs due from Henry earl of Lancaſter, ſon and heir of Henry earl of Lancaſter, it was found that his father had been charged with the relief of £. 50, for the hundred, town, and caſtle of Leiceſter, formerly belonging to Simon de Montfort, to wit, for half the moiety of the inheritance formerly belonging to Robert de Mellent earl of Leiceſter [u].

In Mr. Charles' collections, Cotton Lib. Julius C. VII. is a drawing of a broken ſeal of Robert de Boſſu appendant to his grant of a moiety of the fiſhery of Kidderminſter, himſelf armed on horſeback, with his ſhield hanging backward, and his counterſeal an angel ſitting on a rock holding a bird in his hands. No inſcription on either.

Ralph Brook ſays, that Robert de Bellomont or Beaumont, third earl of Leiceſter, was called Blanchmaines, from his white hands: but query, if this title of Blanchmaines may not rather be derived from the white ſcurf of the leproſy (then moſt common in France and England), than from the beauty of his hands? eſpecially as his ſon William was ſo infected with that malady, that he founded an hoſpital for it in Leiceſter. And more eſpecially if we conſider, that theſe ſobriquets or ſurnames, ſo common in theſe times, were often impoſed on imperfections or deformities; as William the Baſtard, Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, ſo named, no doubt, from his crooked make, and many others eaſy to be named if requiſite: Edmund Crouchback, Henry Torto-Collo (Wryneck) duke of Lancaſter.

Petronilla, counteſs of Leiceſter gave 3000 marcs to have the county of Leiceſter, with its appurtenances, together with the fees and domains belonging to her honor of Grenteſmainill, as well within the county as without as her right and inheritance, and that the houſe of Witewich ſhould be committed to whomſoever the king would, the party giving ſecurity that he would faithfully ſerve the king [x]. The honor of Leiceſter is a juriſdiction within this county once if not ſtill belonging to the duchy of Lancaſter. Of the liberty or franchiſe within this county called the biſhop's fee ſee before, p. 202. 207.

[a] Ex autogr. tranſcribed into Madox's Collections, vol. II.
[b] Holland. [o] Brokeſby's letter, p. 114. Hiſtory of Hinkley, p. 171, 172.
[p] Lel. VI. 65. [q] Tan. 245.
[r] Q. if any reference to Ratæ in this name, or to the Roman road running near it; it being likewiſe ſpelt Radcliffe. So Ratcliffe Culey in this county near the Watling ſtreet.
[s] Holland. [t] Brokeſby, p. 114.
[u] Com. Hill. 25 E. III. rot. 4. ex parte rememor. Theſ. & Hill. 6. E. III. Fines.
[x] Mag. rot. 6 John rot. 17. b. Warw. and Leiceſter. Madox Hiſt. of Exchequer, 338.

Earls of Leiceſter.

James I. conferred the title of earl of Leiceſter, 1622, on Robert Sidney, brother of ſir Philip, and ſon of ſir Henry Sidney, and Mary ſiſter of Robert Dudley earl of Leiceſter. He died 1626 and was buried at Penſhurſt, and ſucceeded by his ſon Robert[y], who dying 1677, was ſucceeded by his ſon Philip. He by his ſon Robert 1698. He, 1702, by his ſon Philip, who dying 1705 without iſſue, was ſucceeded by John, who dying unmarried 1732, the title is extinct[z]. King George II. conferred this title 1744 on Thomas Coke, fifth in deſcent from lord chief juſtice Coke. He died 1759, and his ſon dying before him, the title is extinct. An unſucceſsful attempt was made in the Houſe of Peers in June 1782 to revive this earldom in the perſon of Mrs. Perry, who now enjoys the family eſtate and venerable manſion of the Sidneys at Penſhurſt, to which ſhe has reſtored many of the portraits which were put up to auction 1770 after the death of her ſiſter lady Mary Sidney Sherrard.

[y] Haſted's Kent, I. 412, 413.

[z] Dugd. Bar. II. 410.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Leiceſterſhire.

Acorus Calamus. Sweet-ſmelling Flag or Calamus; in the river Soar, in ſeveral places between Loughborough and Kegworth, eſpecially about Normanton plentifully, and near the abbey at Leiceſter ſparingly.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuburous Moſchatel or Muſk-wood Crowfoot; among the buſhes on the ſouth ſide of Buddon wood, ſparingly.

Agaricus piperatus. Pepper Muſhroom; in the out-woods near Loughborough, and in Buddon wood near Mountſorrel, plentifully.

—— umbelliferus. Little delicate Umbrella or Wood Agaric; in hedge bottoms, and in woods, ariſing from the putrid leaves.

Aira præcox. Early Hair-graſs; on ſandy and barren grounds and on mud walls: in ſeveral places about Leiceſter and Loughborough, upon Beacon and Bardon hills in Charley foreſt, plentifully.

Alchemilla vulgaris. Ladies Mantle; in the moiſt cloſes at Woodhouſe, near Buddon wood, upon Charley foreſt near Beacon hill, and in Wichwood foreſt.

Allium urſinum. Ramſons; among ſome buſhes by the ſide of a rivulet near Buddon wood.

—— vineale. Crow Garlick; in meadows and paſtures: found but rarely.

Anthoſceros punctatus. Spotted Anthoſceros; upon the banks of brooks and ditches in ſeveral places.

Aquilegia vulgaris. Common Columbines; in the out-woods near Loughborough.

Aſperula odorata. Herb Woodroof; in Buddon, Okely, and Hollinghall woods near Loughborough, and in the Stocking wood near Leiceſter.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Black Maidenhair; in woods and ſhady lanes, at the roots of trees about rocks, and on old ſtone walls.

—— Trichomanes. Common Maidenhair or Engliſh black Maidenhair; on an old wall in Normanton town near Loughborough.

—— viride β. Green Maidenhair; upon the rocks on Beacon hill in Charley foreſt.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale; in hedges and among rubbiſh: about Grace Dieu abbey, ſparingly.

Boletus bovinus. Cow Boletus; in the out-woods near Loughborough abundantly, and in Buddon wood near Mountſorrel.

Bryum glaucum. White Bryum; upon Charley foreſt, among the Sphagnum paluſtre which is much more frequent.

Campanula glomerata. Leſſer Throatwort; in mountainous places eſpecially of a chalky ſoil.

—— hybrida. The leſſer Venus Looking-glaſs or Codded Corn Violet; among the corn near Loughborough.

—— patula. Field Bellflower; in Buddon wood and in ſome of the hedges and lanes adjoining.

Cardamine hirſuta. Hairy Ladies-ſmock or the Leſſer hairy impatient Cuckow-flower; by the ſide of the brook at Thorpe near Loughborough, and elſewhere.

—— impatiens. Impatient Ladies-ſmock or Cuckow-flower; among the rocks on the ſummit of Beacon hill.

Carduus eriophorus. Woolly-headed Thiſtle; in the Stocking wood near Leiceſter, and upon the wolds about Dalby and Waltham.

—— pratenſis. The Engliſh ſoft or gentle Thiſtle; in ſome of the boggy places at Woodhouſe near Buddon wood.

Caucalis nodoſa. Knotted Parſley; by the turnpike road about Hathern, and upon dry banks about Leiceſter.

Ceraſtium aquaticum. Marſh Mouſe-ear Chickweed; in watery places, and on banks of rivers, very common.

—— ſemidecandrium. The leaſt Mouſe-ear Chickweed; on walls and in paſtures, very common.

—— viſcoſum. Broad-leaved Mouſe-ear Chickweed; in meadows and paſtures and on walls, very common.

Ceratophyllum demerſum β ſubmerſum. Horſetail Water Milfoil; in ditches and ſlow waters: about Loughborough.

Chryſoſplenium oppoſitifolium. Golden Saxifrage; in the out-woods near Loughborough, and among the buſhes on the ſouth ſide of Buddon wood, ſparingly.

Clavaria Hypoxilon. Flat Clavaria; about rotten wood, eſpecially aſh.

—— Hypoxilon δ. A variety of the laſt; about Leiceſter.

—— muſcoides. Pointed Clavaria; in the paſtures about Loughborough.

—— piſtillaris. Simple Clavaria; } in paſ—— piſtillaris γ. A variety of the laſt; } tures.

Clinopodium vulgare. Great wild Baſil; in meadows and paſtures, eſpecially of a chalky ſoil: frequent.

Convallaria majalis. Lily Convally, May Lily, or Lily of the Valley; in Okely and Buddon woods near Leiceſter.

Cotyledon Umbilicus veneris. Navel-wort, Kidney-wort, or Wall Penny-wort, upon the rocks about the ſlate-pits at Swithland, plentifully.

Cuſcuta Europæa. Dodder, Devil's Guts or Hell-weed; upon the common nettle in ſome of the back lanes about Leiceſter.

Daphne Laureola. Spurge Laurel; in ſome hedges about Belton near Loughborough, and in the lanes about Enderby near Leiceſter.

Dipſacus piloſus. Small wild Teaſel or Shepherd's rod; in Hollinghall wood, and in the lanes about Garenton park, ſparingly.

Erica cinerea. Fine leaved Heath;
—— Tetralix. Low Dutch Heath, Beſom Heath, or Croſs-leaved Heath;
} on Charley foreſt and on the wolds between Aſhby de la Zouch & Burton upon Trent.

Eriophorum polyſtachion. Cotton-Graſs; on bogs and marſhes: upon Charley foreſt, in the cloſes about Woodhouſe, near Buddon wood, and elſewhere.

Fragaria ſterilis. Barren Strawberry; in barren paſtures and heaths, very common.

—— veſca. Strawberry; in the woods, ſparingly.

Fumaria claviculata. Climbing Fumitory; upon the rocks in Charley foreſt near Whitwick.

Geranium diſſectum. Jagged-leaved Doves-foot Crane's bill; in paſtures, corn-fields and hedges: frequent.

—— lucidum. Shining Dove's-foot Crane's-bill; among the rocks upon Charley foreſt, particularly about Baſdon hill.

—— pratenſe. Crowfoot Crane's-bill; in moiſt meadows and paſtures: not uncommon.

—— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Crane's-bill; on walls, roofs, and in paſtures of a ſandy ſoil: frequent.

Helvella Mitra. Curled Helvella; on the graſs walks at Burley hall near Loughborough.

Hieracium umbellatum. Narrow-leaved Buſhy Hawkweed; in almoſt all the woods and among the rocks in Charley foreſt.

Hippuris vulgaris. Mare's-tail; in the river Soar near Loughborough.

Hottonia paluſtris. Water Violet, Water Gillover or Gilloflower; in the river Soar about Loughborough and Leiceſter, ſparingly.

Hydnum imbricatum. Common Hydnum; in woods: about Leiceſter.

Hypericum humifuſum. The leaſt trailing St. John's-wort; upon Charley foreſt, about Buddon wood, and elſewhere.

—— pulchrum. Small upright St. John's-wort; in woods.

Hypnum ſerpens. Creeping Hypnum; on the rocks at Mountſorrel.

Iberis nudicaulis. The leſſer Shepherds Purſe or Rock Creſs; upon the rocks at the ſummit of Beacon hill in Charley foreſt, and about the ſlate-pits at Swithland.

Inula pulicaria. Dwarf Fleabane; on way-ſides and in places where water has ſtagnated in the winter: about Loughborough.

Jaſione montana. Hairy Sheep's Scabious or Rampions with Scabious heads; on Charley foreſt, plentifully, and about Buddon wood.

Jungermannia furcata. Globe Jungermannia; about the roots of trees among other moſſes.

Lactuca ſaligna. The leaſt wild Lettice or Dwarf Gum-Succory; in Hollinghall and Buddon woods and in ſome hollow ways and ſhady lanes about Sheepſhead and Thrinkſton.

Lathyrus paluſtris. Marſh Chickling Vetch; upon ſome bogs on Charley foreſt about Bardon hill.

—— ſylveſtris. Narrow-leaved Peaſe-everlaſting; in Stocking wood and in the lane leading from Belgrave to Thurcaſton near the wood ſide.

Lichen caninus. Aſh-coloured Ground Liverwort; in dry paſtures, very common.

—— floridus. Flowering Liverwort; in the woods.

—— fragilis. Small brown Collarine Moſs; upon the higheſt rocks, on Beacon and Bardon hills, in Charley foreſt.

—— hirtus. Rough Liverwort; in the woods.

—— jubatus. Rock Hair; on the rocks, in Charley foreſt, and near Thrinkſton.

—— paſchalis. Woody Liverwort; upon Charley foreſt, and in Buddon wood.

—— pulmonarius. Lungwort, or Oak Lungs; in Buddon wood, about the roots of trees, and upon rocks;

Lithoſpermum arvenſe. Baſtard Alkanet; in corn fields.

—— officinale. Gromwell, Gromill, or Graymill; on the edge of the foreſt about Grace-Dieu park, ſparingly.

Lycoperdon fornicatum. Turret Puff-ball; obſerved for ſome years ſucceſſively at Hathern near Loughborough.

—— fraxineum. Aſh Puff-ball; upon old trees near Enderly, and upon trees about Belton, near Loughborough.

—— ſtellatum. Star Puff-ball; in meadows, paſtures, and in hedges at Hathern near Loughborough.

Lyſimachia nemorum. Yellow Pimpernel of the Woods; in wet woods and ſhady places: common.

—— Nummularia. Moneywort; in wet meadows and paſtures: common.

—— tenella. Purple-flowered Moneywort; in the boggy valleys in and about Charley foreſt.

—— vulgaris. Yellow Willow Herb, or Looſeſtife; in a moiſt place in the outwoods near Loughborough.

Malva Alcea. Vervain Mallow; in hedges, and on the edges of fields.

Melica montana. Red Oat Graſs of the Woods; in Buddon wood, and in ſome places upon Charley foreſt, as about Swithland Slate-pits.

Meliſſa Nepeta. Field Calamint; in Preſtwold lanes near Loughborough, in the town-ſtreet near Swithland, and elſewhere.

Mentha rubra. Red Mint; in the outwoods near Loughborough.

—— ſylveſtris. Long-leaved Horſe-mint; about Swithland, at Thorp, near Loughborough, and elſewhere.

Narciſſus Pſeudo-Narciſſus. Wild Engliſh Daffodil; by the brook-ſide between the obeliſk and the hall in Garenton park.

Nardus ſtricta. Small Matweed; on Charley foreſt.

Nepeta cataria. Nep or Cat Mint; in Preſtwold lanes, near Loughborough and Grooby lane near Leiceſter.

Ophiogloſſum vulgatum. Adder's tongue; in and about Hallinghall wood, near Loughborough, and elſewhere.

Ophrys cordata. The leaſt Tway-blade; in Hollinghall wood, near Loughborough, plentifully.

—— ſpiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; in the cloſes, about Buddon wood.

Orchis bifolia. The Leſſer Butterfly Orchis; in ſome incloſures near Buddon wood, ſparingly.

—— bifolia β. Butterfly Satyrion; in Hallinghall wood near Loughborough.

Orobanche major. Broom-rape; in dry meadows on roots of broom and among corn; about Thrinkſton, Grace Dieu, and Sheepſhead, and among the gorſe and broom about the outwoods near Loughborough.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moonwort; in hilly meadows: in the cloſes between Okeley wood and Whatton, near Loughborough, in the meadow near Swarſton bridge, and near Harborough.

——— regalis. Water Fern, Flowering Fern, or Oſmund Royal; in rotten watery places and marſhes: about Grace Dieu abbey.

——— Spicant. Rough Spleenwort; in the outwoods near Loughborough, and in Buddon wood, near Mount Sorrel.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris, True-love or One-berry; in Hallinghall wood, plentifully, in the Stocking wood, Leiceſter, ſparingly, and in Okeley wood near Hathern.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; in ſeveral of the marſhy cloſes near Buddon wood.

Peucedanum ſilaus. Meadow Saxifrage; in moiſt meadows and paſtures, plentifully, and on the higher grounds.

Phellandrium aquaticum. Water Hemlock; in the Soar about Leiceſter plentifully.

Pimpinella major. Great Burnet Saxifrage; in woods.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Butterwort, or Yorkſhire Sanicle; in moiſt cloſes about Buddon wood.

Plantago Coronopus. Buckſhorn Plantain, or Star of the Earth; on a hill called Ives head, on Charley foreſt near Sheepſhead, in Preſtwold lanes near Loughborough, and in a cloſe the footway between Quorn and the turnpike.

Polygonum Biſtorta. The Greater Biſtort or Snakeweed; in ſome paſtures and moiſt cloſes near Leiceſter.

Polypodium aculeatum. Prickley auriculate Male Ferny; in the outwoods and in Hollinghall wood near Loughborough, and elſewhere.

Potentilca argentea. Tormentil Cinquefoil; upon the old walls about Buddon wood near Mount Sorrel.

——— reptans β. Creeping Tormentil; in Radmore cloſes between Loughborough and Burley hall.

Poterium Sanguiſorba. Burnet; in hilly meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil; upon the banks of the Raw dikes, near Leiceſter, and at Hinckley.

Reſeda lutea. Baſe Rocket; in corn fields, meadows, and paſtures, eſpecially of a limeſtone ſoil; about Waltham on the Wold.

Rhamnus Frangula. The Blackberry-bearing Alder; in the outwoods near Loughborough, plentifully, and in Buddon wood.

Ribes rubrum β. A variety of Currants; in the woods at Stanton.

Roſa ſpinoſſima. The Burnet Roſe; on heaths and ſandy places: about Kegworth, Sawley, and elſewhere.

Rubus idæus. Raſberry-buſh, Framboiſe, or Hindberry-buſh; in Buddon wood near Mount Sorrel.

Rumex maritimus. Golden Dock; in a paſture by the river ſide near Hathern.

——— ſanguineus. Bloodwort, or Bloody Dock; in kitchen gardens, fallow lands, dunghills, &c. very uncommon.

Samolus valerandi. Round-leaved Water Pimpernell; in the outwoods, and in Buddon wood, near Loughborough, and upon ſeveral bogs near Charley foreſt.

Scirpus ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus Graſs; in an old pond in a park at Loſeby plentifully, and elſewhere.

Serapias latifolia. Broad leaved Baſtard Hellebore; in the northern part of Buddon wood, and in an incloſure adjoining to Beaumanor coppice near Loughborough.

——— latifolia γ paluſtris. Marſh Hellebore; in moiſt cloſes between Woodhouſe and Buddon wood, and upon Charley foreſt.

Siſon ſegetum. Baſtard Stone Parſley; in and about the north-eaſt ſide of Okeley wood near Hathern.

Sium latifolium. Great Water Parſnep; in many places in the river Soar, near Leiceſter and Loughborough.

Spergula nodoſa. Knotted Spurrey, or Engliſh Marſh Saxifrage; on the bogs in Charley foreſt near Beacon hill.

Solidago Virga aurea. Golden Rod; about Buddon wood, plentifully.

Teucrium Scorodonia. Wood Sage; in all the neighbouring woods, and among the rocks all over Charley foreſt.

Thymus Acinos. Wild Baſil; on dry, gravelly, and chalky hills.

Tremella juniperina. Yellow Tremella; upon rotten wood.

——— Noſtoc. Jelly Tremella or Tar-ſlough; in meadows and paſtures after rain, eſpecially about hedges.

Trifolium arvenſe β. A variety of Hare's-foot Trefoil; upon the banks of the Raw-Dikes in St. Mary's field at Leiceſter.

——— glomeratum. Round headed Trefoil; in the cloſes oppoſite Needleſs inn near Loughborough.

——— ſcabrum. Oval headed Trefoil; on ſeveral dry banks in St. Mary's field, at Leiceſter.

——— ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil; upon ſome lays near the fiſh-pond cloſe at Loughborough.

——— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil, with long white flowers; on dry ſandy banks very common.

Triglochin paluſtre. Arrow-headed Graſs; by the brook ſides, and in marſhy places: about Woodhouſe, and elſewhere.

Tuſſilago hybrida. Long-ſtalked Butter-bur; in moiſt meadows: about Barkby, Leiceſter, and by Dixley mill, Loughborough, and by the ſide of a brook in the road between Aſhby de la Zouch and Appleby.

Vaccinium Myrtillus. Black Whorts, Whortle berries, or Billberries; in Buddon wood near Mount Sorrel, plentifully, and in the outwoods near Loughborough.

Valantia Cruciata. Croſswort, or Mugweed; in buſhy places, and in hedges very common.

Veronica officinalis. Male Speedwell, Fluellin, or true Pauls Betony; on Charley foreſt, ſparingly, in Garenton park, and upon the old walls in and about Buddon wood near Quarndon.

——— ſcutellata. Narrow leaved Water Speedwell or Brooklime; in a moiſt place in one of the cloſes between Loughborough and Burley hall.

Ulva inteſtinalis. Gut Laver; in the river Soar about Leiceſter and Loughborough.

Edmondsthorpe
Market Overton
Teigh
Barrow
Cotsmore
Mt Alstre
Wilsrendine
Pickwell
Ashwell
Cold Overton
Lyndham
Lady Wood
Barleythorpe
Vale of Catmose
Knofsington
Flitteris
Ruins
OAKHAM
Braunston
Egleton
Hamilton
Withcote
Brooke
Martinsthorpe
Manton
Leafield
Ridlington
Preston
Wing
Loddington
Aiston
UPPINGHAM
Belton
Bisbrooke
Warsley
Allerton
Stockerton
Glaston
Caldecot
Eathon
Rockingham Castle
LEICESTERSHIRE
OKEHAM SOKE
HUNDRED
MARTINSLEY
HUNDRED
WRANDIKE

MAP of RUTLANDSHIRE

from the best AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Cary

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

Lobthorpe
Post Witham
Castle Bytham
Stocking
Part of OAKHAMSOKE
HUNDRED
Careby
Clipsham
Holywell
Streeton
Twin Woods
Pickworth
Hornby
Carlby
Ruins
Disputed Common
Hardwick
Thrift House
Tolthorpe
Greatford Br.
Ufford
Thistleton
Hoods Stone
Thickthorn
St Botolph Ruins
Little Casterton
Bridge Casterton
Empingham
Witchley
STAMFORD
Uffington
Common
Tinwell
St Martins
Canal
North Luffenham
Burghley Park
Ketton
Easton
South Luffenham
Colly-weston
Tixover
Duddiston
Barrowden
Walkerly
Inthorpe Oaks
Horn Lane Roman Road
Langham
Wing
Lyndon Ryhall
Essendine
Lambton Hall
Greetham
Wardley
Belmesthorpe
Barrow
Manton
Normanton
Hambleton
Rutland Water
Oakham
Exton
Whitwell
Ridlington
Braunston
Preston
Uppingham
Leighfield
Morcott
Glaston
Tickencote
Pickworth
Greetham
Market Overton
Teigh
Cottesmore
Ashwell
Whissendine
Langham
Burley
Ridlington
Exton
Whitwell
Braunston
Preston
Uppingham
Leighfield
Morcott
Glaston
Tickencote
Pickworth
Greetham
Market Overton
Teigh
Cottesmore
Ashwell
Whissendine
Langham
Burley

RUTLANDSHIRE.

RUTLAND, Saxon Roteland, is in a manner included in Leiceſterſhire, except on the ſouth, where it lies on the river Welland, and on the eaſt where it borders on Lincolnſhire. It is not leſs rich and pleaſant than Leiceſterſhire, though much ſmaller in extent, being the ſmalleſt county in all England. Its form is almoſt circular, as much in circumference as a good horſe could meaſure in one day: whence the inhabitants fable that a certain unknown king gave one Rutt as much land as he could ride round in one day, and that he mounting his horſe rode round this county within the limited time; whereupon it was beſtowed on him, and called after his name. But to diſmiſs ſuch ſtories where truth is diſguiſed by the wantonneſs of fable; as the ſoil of this county is in general reddiſh inſomuch that it tinges the fleeces of the ſheep of a reddiſh hue, and the Saxon word for Red was Roet and Rud, may we not ſuppoſe it called Rutland quaſi Red Land. Names often correſpond with the things themſelves as the poet[a] ſays. That places among all nations have taken their names from Redneſs may be proved from Rutland caſtle in Wales, built on a reddiſh ſhore; Red point, the Red Sea between Egypt and Arabia, Erythreia[b] in Ionia, and a thouſand other inſtances without recurring to fable.

This ſmall tract was very late made a county; for in the Confeſſor's time it was accounted part of Northamptonſhire, and our hiſtorians, till theſe laſt 300 years, have not reckoned it among the counties.

The little river Waſh or Gwaſh, which croſſes the middle of this county almoſt from eaſt to weſt, divides it into two parts. In the hither or ſouthernmoſt ſtands Uppingham on high ground, whence its name, remarkable for nothing but its good market and handſome ſchool, lately founded, as alſo another at Okeham, for the inſtruction of boys in grammar learning, by the laudable deſign of R. Jhonſon, miniſter of the goſpel, who left a ſum of money for that purpoſe. Below this ſtands Dryſtoke, not to be forgotten as being the antient reſidence of the famous and antient family of the Digbys; but branded with everlaſting infamy by Everard Digby, who wickedly conſpired with thoſe execrable incendiaries to deſtroy his king and country at one blow of helliſh thunder.

In the further part beyond the river, among the hills, lies a very pleaſant and fertile valley, called at preſent the Vale of Catmoſe, perhaps from Coet maes, which ſignifies in Britiſh a woody plain. In the center of it is Okeham, which for the ſame reaſon ſhould ſeem to take its name from Oaks. Near the church[c] remain the decaying walls of an old caſtle, reported to have been built in the early Norman times by Walkelin de Ferrars. That it was the habitation of the Ferrars appears further from the iron horſeſhoes, which were the antient arms of that family, nailed on the gate and in the hall. It afterwards belonged to the lords Tatteſhale, but when king Richard II. advanced Edward, ſon of the duke of York, to the earldom of Rutland, he gave him alſo this caſtle. In the laſt age it fell to Thomas Cromwell as the ſeat, as I read, of his barony, he being advanced by Henry VIII. to the higheſt rank, and preſently after his extenſive plans drawing upon him a ſtorm of envy, ſuddenly deprived by him of his life and honour.

Burley.

Overagainſt it to the eaſt Burley, now the magnificent houſe of the Harringtons, overhangs a moſt beautiful valley. This family by marriage with a daughter and heireſs of Colepeper obtained ſuch a very fine eſtate that they became as conſiderable in theſe parts as the Colepepers had been, to whom came by N. Green part of the rich eſtate of the Bruces. Theſe Bruces being of the firſt nobility of England intermarried with the royal family of Scotland, from whom by Robert the eldeſt brother deſcended the royal family of Scotland, and by Bernard the younger brother the Cottons of Connington in Huntingdonſhire already treated of, and theſe Harringtons. On this account king James conferred the title of baron Harrington of Exton[d] on the moſt illuſtrious ſir John Harrington[e].

Barons Harrington.

Brigcaſterton.
Richall.

In the eaſt part of the county on the river Guaſh are Brigcaſterton, of which hereafter, and Rihall, where when our forefathers were ſo bewitched by ſuperſtition as almoſt to loſe the true God in the croud of deities, Tibba, a ſaint of inferior order, was worſhipped as another Diana by fowlers, as patroneſs of hawking. Near it is Eſſenden, whoſe lord Robert Cecil, the worthy ſon of a worthy father, who had been the ſupport of the ſtate, was lately created by king James baron Cecill of Eſſenden.

The Fowlers' Saint.

Eſſenden.

Baron Cecill of Eſſenden.

This little ſhire was bequeathed by Edward the Confeſſor to his wife Edith, on condition, however, that after her death it went to the church of Weſtminſter[f]. The words of the will are as follow: "I will that after the deceaſe of queen Eadgith my conſort Roteland with all its appurtenances be given to my monaſtery of St. Peter, and be ſurrendered without delay to the abbot and monks there ſerving God for ever." But this his will was ſet aſide by William the Norman, who reſerved great part of it to himſelf, and divided the reſt between counteſs Judith, whoſe daughter had married David king of Scots, Robert Mallet, Oger, Giſlebert de Gant, earl Hugh, Alberic the clerk, and others. He left, however, to the church of Weſtminſter firſt the tithes,

[a]
[b] Erythræum prom. in Crete. Ptol.
[c] Which is large and fair. Holland.
[d] A town adjacent where he hath alſo another fair houſe. Holland.
[e] Branched from the ſtem of the antient lords Harrington. Holland.
[f] See a charter of the Confeſſor to this purpoſe. Mon. Ang. I. 61. Wright's Hiſt. of Rutland, 2.

and

and afterwards only the church of Okeham with its appurtenances.

Earls of Rutland.

This county has not many earls to boaſt. The firſt earl of Rotland was Edward eldeſt ſon of Edmund de Langley duke of York, ſo created by the free grace of king Richard II. in his father's life, and afterwards by the ſame king declared duke of Albemarle: the ſame who wickedly deviſed the vile deſign of taking off Henry IV. and then with equal fickleneſs diſcovered it. But after his father's death being duke of York, he died bravely fighting among the thickeſt of the enemy at the battle of Agincourt. In this honour long after ſucceeded Edward, the ſon of Richard duke of York, ſlain when a youth [g] with his father in the battle of Wakefield during the unhappy civil wars. Many years after Henry VIII. created [h] Thomas Mannours earl of Rutland, who had obtained the very conſiderable eſtate of the barons Roos in the neighbouring counties in right of his grandmother Eleanor. To him ſucceeded Henry [i], and to him again his ſon Edward [k], to whom in lieu of any other encomium I may juſtly and properly apply thoſe lines of the poet [l]:

——Nomen virtutibus æquat
Nec ſinit ingenium nobilitate premi.

His virtue equal to his name
Nor is his genius influenc'd by his fame.

But he being ſuddenly taken to heaven left the honour to his brother John, who being ſoon after called away by death [m], was ſucceeded by his ſon Roger [n] who already gives ſtriking proofs of the nobility of his anceſtors.

This little county is adorned with 48 pariſh churches.

[g] only 12 years old. Dugd. I. 161.
[h] 17 H. VIII. he died 1543. buried at Botesford. Ib. 297.
[i] His ſon, who died 1563. was buried at Botesford. (Ib. 298.)
[k] Died 1587, buried at Botesford. (Ib.)
[m] 1587, buried at Botesford (Ib.)

ADDI-

ADDITIONS.

THE county of RUTLAND is in length from north to ſouth 18 miles, in breadth from eaſt to weſt 15, and about 60 in circumference; is divided into five hundreds, contains two market towns, 48 pariſhes, 3263 houſes, and about 100,000 acres. The air is mild, pleaſant, and healthful; the ſoil fertile. It has more pariſhes than any county in England in proportion to its ſize, is well watered, and abounds with wood. There is a great deal of red land in Rutland, and very red, but it is by no means univerſal in the county, nor peculiar to it. The ſouthern parts are to be found in Domeſday in Wicheſlai hundred under Northamptonſhire[a]. The others in Nottinghamſhire, the ſheriff of which county by ſtatute 31 Henry III. is appointed eſcheater for this[b].

The name of ROTELOND, however, in Domeſday[c] comprehended the two wapentakes of Alfnodeſton, now Alſtoe, and Martineſleie, how Martinſley. The firſt included two hundreds, and lay half in the wapentake of Thurgartun, and half in that of Brockeleſtou, both in Nottinghamſhire. In the wapentake of Alfnodeſton are enumerated Gretham [Greetham], Cotesmore [Cotſmore], Overtune [Market Overton], Straton [Stretton], Tiſtertune [Thiſtleton], Tie [Tygh], Wichingedene [Whiſſendine], Exentune [Exton], Whitewelle [Whitwell], Aleſtaneſtorp [Alesthorpe][d], Burgelai [Burley], Exvvelle, [q. Aſhwell]. In Martineſlei wapentake we find Ockeham [Okeham], Hameldune [Hambleton], and Redlingtune [Ridlington]. Theſe three laſt places are diſtinguiſhed by the name of Cherchefocke. All but Ridlington lie on the north ſide of the river Guaſh: ſo that the diſtrict at that time known by the name of Roteland was, except that ſingle place, confined between that river and the preſent boundary of the county of Nottingham. Theſe two wapentakes adjoin or appertain, ſays the record, to the ſheriffdom of Nottingham, as far as the king's tax is concerned. Roteland pays to the king 150 white pounds[e]. Gilbert de Gand held lands in Empingham, in the county of Northampton, de foca regis de Roteland[f]. An inquiſition, 4 Edward I. cited by Mr. Wright, p. 1, as inſerted in Domeſday (where, however, it does not now appear), ſays that Henry III. comitatum Roteland regi Alman. contulit, ſed neſciunt quo modo. But it ſhould ſeem that it was a diſtinct county t. John; for in his 5th year his queen Iſabel had at her coronation aſſigned in parliament for her dower among other lands, Com. Roteland & villam de Rokingham in com. Northampton, and in his 12th year the Cuſtos accounted for the profits of this county in the Exchequer, by which Cuſtos we are to underſtand the ſheriffs.

"The ſhire of Rutheland lyith in a manner as "it were in a roundel, and lyith partly upon "Wiland water from Staunford to the very bridge "of Rokingham[h]."

The principal river of Rutland is the Welland, which parts it from Northamptonſhire, and is navigable up to Stamford. The next river is the Guaſh, which croſſes the middle of it from weſt to eaſt. The Chater croſſes it ſome miles ſouth of the Guaſh. The little Eye (antiently the Lytelee) divides the ſouth-weſtern part of Rutland from Leiceſterſhire; it is generally a ſmall ſtream, but ſubject to very great floods. The Ey is a ſmall brook running by Aſhwell into Leiceſterſhire. And there is another river which has almoſt loſt its name, running out of the vale of Catmoſe into the Guaſh above Empingham, and perhaps taking its name from the vale it comes from, but I cannot certainly learn.

"Waſche riveret riſith in Leyrceſtreſhire, and "comith by Gritham in Ruthelandſhire and by Maſter "Harrington's place called ..... The hole "courſe from the hedde of it a litle byneth Waſch "bridge, where it goith into Welande river, a litle "benethe Staunford toune, is an xviii or xx miles. "The commun ſaying is there that Waſche and "Weland ſhal drown al Holande[i]." Holland is the ſouth-eaſt fenny part of Lincolnſhire, to which the Rutland waters come down. Waſh r. Gretham.

"Uppingham, a market town, is but one mean "ſtreet, and hath but a very mean church, yet it "is countid the beſt town of Ruthelandſhire[k]." Uppingham is principally but not only one ſtreet; it cannot be called an elegant one, but is not deſpicable. The church is a decent building though not nicely fitted up. The ſchool is of the ſame foundation as that at Okeham, and by the improvement of the rents the poor were long ago increaſed to 24 at each place, and of late years to about 48. A braſs plate fixed on the founder Mr. Johnſon's graveſtone in North Luffenham chancel has the following inſcription: Uppingham.

"Robart Jhonſon bacheler of Divinitie, a painfull preacher, parſon of Northluffenham.
Had a godlie care of religion, and a charitable minde to the poore.
He erected a faire free gramar ſchoole in Okeham.
He erected a fair free gramar ſchoole in Uppingham.
He appointed to each of his ſchooles a ſchoolemaſter and an uſher.
He erected the hoſpitalle of Chriſte in Okeham.
He erected the hoſpitalle of Chriſte in Uppingham.
He procured for them a corporation and a mortmaine of ſower hundred markes.
Whereby well diſpoſed people maie give unto them as God ſhall move their hartes.
He bought landes of quene Elizabeth towardes the maintenance of them.

[a] Wright's Hiſt. of Rutlandſhire, 1. Domeſday fol. 219. [b] Wright, 2.
[c] fol. 293, where it makes a diſtinct title.
[d] Aleſthorpe is only part of Burley lordſhip, with an odd farm houſe or two on it.
[e] "H. duo wapent' adjacent vicecomitatui Snotingeham ad geldam regis. Roteland reddit regi cL libras albas." Domeſd. f. 293. b.
[f] Domeſd. f. 227. b. [g] Wright 3. G. [h] Lel. I. 25. [i] Lel. VI. 30. [k] Lel. I. 25.

He provided place in eache of the hoſpitalles for xxiiii poore people.
He recovered, bought, and procured the hoſpitalle of William Dalby in Okeham, and cauſed it to be renewed, eſtabliſhed, and confirmed, which before was found to be confiſcate and conſealed, wherein divers poore people be releeved.
He was alſo beneficiall to the towne of Northluffenham,
And alſo to the towne of Stamford, where he was borne of worſhipfull parents.
It is the grace of God to give a man a wiſe harte to laie up his treiſure in Heaven.
Theis be good fruites and effects of a juſtifieng faith and of a trew profeſſion of religion,
And a good example to all others to be benefactors to theiſe and ſuche like good workes.
That ſo they may glorifie God, and leave a bleſſed remembrance behinde them
To the comfort and profite of all poſteritie.
All the glorie honor, praiſe and thanckes be unto God for evermore. Amen.

Sic luceat lux veſtra. Let your light ſo ſhine."

There is no mention on the braſs plate when he died, but I find by the pariſh regiſter that he was buried July 24th, 1625.

He was archdeacon of Leiceſter and rector of N. Luffenham.

Dryſtoke. Dryſtoke was not affected by the attainder of ſir Everard Digby, having been intailed by him before his treaſon[l]. Sir Everard was one of the handſomeſt men and fineſt gentlemen of his time, drawn into the powder plot by the prieſts. His ſon ſir Kenelm was an extraordinary character for learned ſpeculation[m], and from him is deſcended the preſent lord Digby. It is not now in this family. Mr. Powis had it ſince, and it now belongs to the earl of Exeter.

Lydington. " Lydington an antient manor place of the biſhop " of Lincoln[n]." The lord Burley 1602 converted it into an almſhouſe called Jeſus hoſpital, for a warden 12 poor men and a poor woman; the biſhop's hall remaining[o]. It appears from Wright that Liddington was an antienter market than Uppingham, and complained of the ſetting up one there; but Uppingham being better ſituated prevailed, and there has been no market at Liddington for time out of mind.

Morcot. George Jilſon founded another almſhouſe for ſix poor men and women 10 James I. at Morcot[p].

Okeham. Okeham t. Henry II. was part of the barony of Baldwin de Buellot, or as Dugdale calls him Bollers or Boſſers, and was then held by Walkelin de Ferrariis by ſervice of one knight's fee[q].

The Ferrars of Okeham ended in the reign of Henry IV.[r] as did the Tatſhalls 34 Edward I.[s] Perhaps in alluſion to three horſeſhoes, the arms of Ferrars, it is a cuſtom to this day that every baron of the realm the firſt time he paſſes through this town ſhall give a horſeſhoe to nail on the caſtle gate, and on his refuſal the bailiff of the manor has power to take one off his horſe's foot. This is generally compounded for with money, and a ſhoe made larger or ſmaller in proportion to the ſum, with the donor's name and titles cut on it, is nailed up. Wright has recorded 15 in the laſt century, and ſays others were ſo old as to be illegible[t]. Much Dane wort grows round the caſtle wall[u]. Thomas Cromwell was created lord Cromwell of Okeham 28 Henry VIII. and had this caſtle and manor[v]. He is called lord Cromwell of Wimbledon ſtat. 31, Henry VIII. c. 3[w]. The Dean and Chapter of Weſtminſter have ſtill the great tithes of Okeham, and are lords of a part of the manor which is called the Dean's hold; as that part of it, of which the earl of Winchelſea is lord, is called the Lord's hold; and they chuſe different pariſh officers. Here was an hoſpital founded by William Dalby of Exton, merchant, 22 Richard II. for 12 poor men, valued at £.12 per annum[x]. It ſtill ſubſiſts by the name of the old hoſpital, but decayed and different from its inſtitution, the governors pretending it is of a new foundation[y]. Mr. Johnſon before-mentioned recovered the foundation, and added a freeſchool[z]. His heir male is always a governor. Jeffery Hudſon, the dwarf, was born here 1619. He was but 18 inches high at ſeven years old, from which time till he was 30 he never grew, but after that age ſhot up to three feet nine inches, and died 1682[a]. Four ſilver pennies of the later Mercian kings were found here in an earthen pot 1749[b].

The Harringtons of Exton ended 1613[c], and their lordſhip of Exton was ſold to the Hickes', of whom St. Baptiſt was created viſcount Camden, and who with the Harringtons, Bruces, and Nicholas Green, have monuments here[d]. The eſtate of Hickes viſcount Camden deſcended by marriage to the Noels, which family have been for ſeveral generations earls of Gainſborough and viſcounts Camden. Moſt of the monuments in Exton church are of the Harringtons and Noels, with an old one of Grene under an arch in the north wall of the chancel, one of Kelway and one of Bruce, all three related to the Harringtons.

Burley on the hill belonged to Spenſer the warlike biſhop of Norwich t. Richard II. and was purchaſed by George Villiers duke of Buckingham, who here entertained James I. with Ben Jonſon's maſk of the gipſies. It was burnt by the parliament in the civil wars except the noble ſtables. Daniel earl of Nottingham, who purchaſed the eſtate, rebuilt the houſe, which has a park incloſed by a wall of five or ſix miles round[e]. It belongs to the preſent earl of Winchelſea, and the court is ſuppoſed the largeſt in the kingdom. Here is ſome very fine tapeſtry, and the ſaloon is ornamented with the hiſtory of Julius Cæſar. Villiers bought Burley of the heirs of Harrington, and the earl of Winchelſea is grandſon to the earl of Nottingham who purchaſed it of Villiers.

North of this lies Market Overton, where Mr. Camden in his edition 1590 placed MARGIDUNUM, but afterwards removed it to Belvoir. Roman coins have, however, been found here in great abundance, and the diſtances from Gauſennæ Brigcaſterton, Verometum Burgh-hill, and Ad Pontem Great Paunton, are ſuppoſed to agree[f]. But Mr. Ward places it at [l] Wright 114.

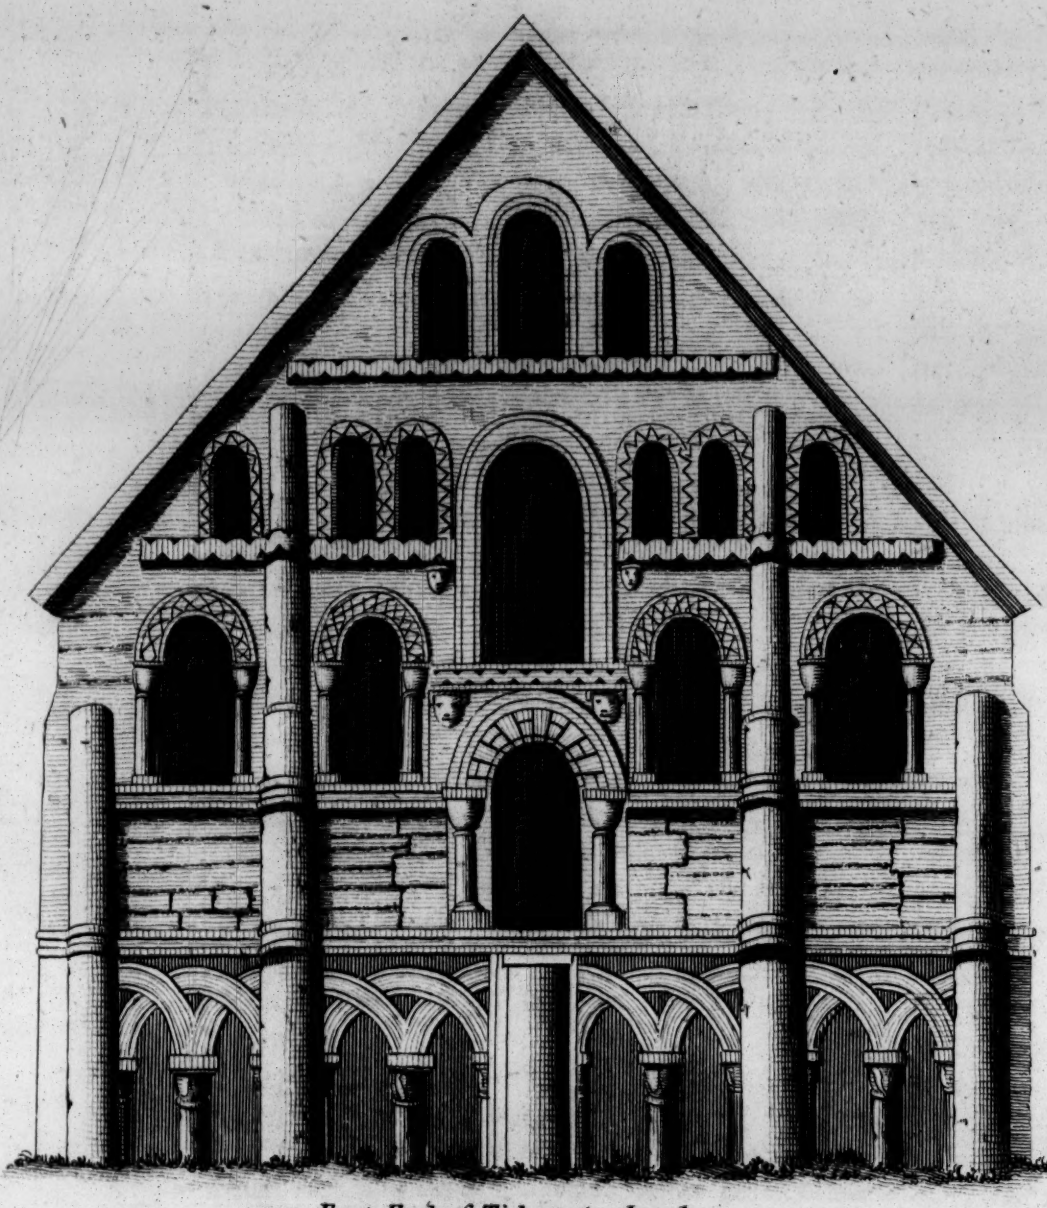
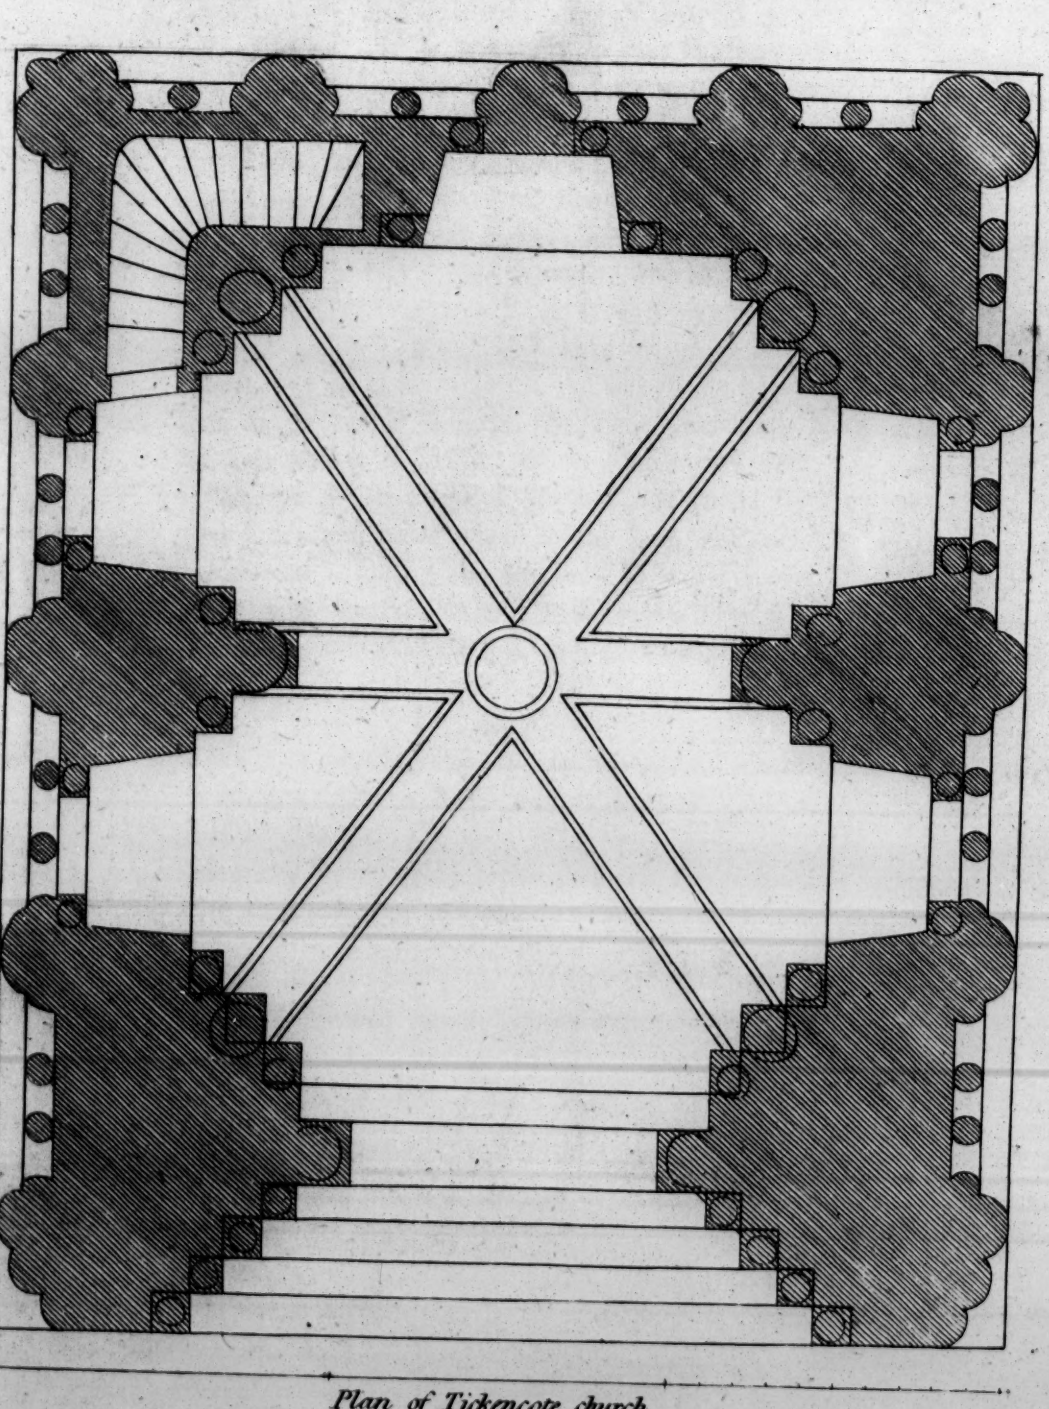
[m] Of theſe perſons and their family ſee a particular account in Mr. Pennant's Journey from Cheſter to London, p. 327—337.
[n] Lel. I. 25. [o] Wr. 80. [p] Wr. 91. G.
[q] Bar. I. 598. Lib. Nig. Scac. 218.
[r] Dugd. Bar. I. 266. From Wright the Ferrars ſeem to have ceaſed in king John's time.
[s] P. 104. [t] G. [u] Dug. II. 371. [v] G
[w] Wright 102. G. [x] Wright, Ib. [y] Ib.
[z] Dugd. II. 416. [a] Wr. 47. 62. [b] Wr. 28—32. G. [c] Dugd. Ib. 410.
[d] Tan. 443. [e] A. S. min. [f] Wr. 87. G.



East End of Tickencote church.



Plan of Tickencote church.

Stukeley delin.

*p. 223.

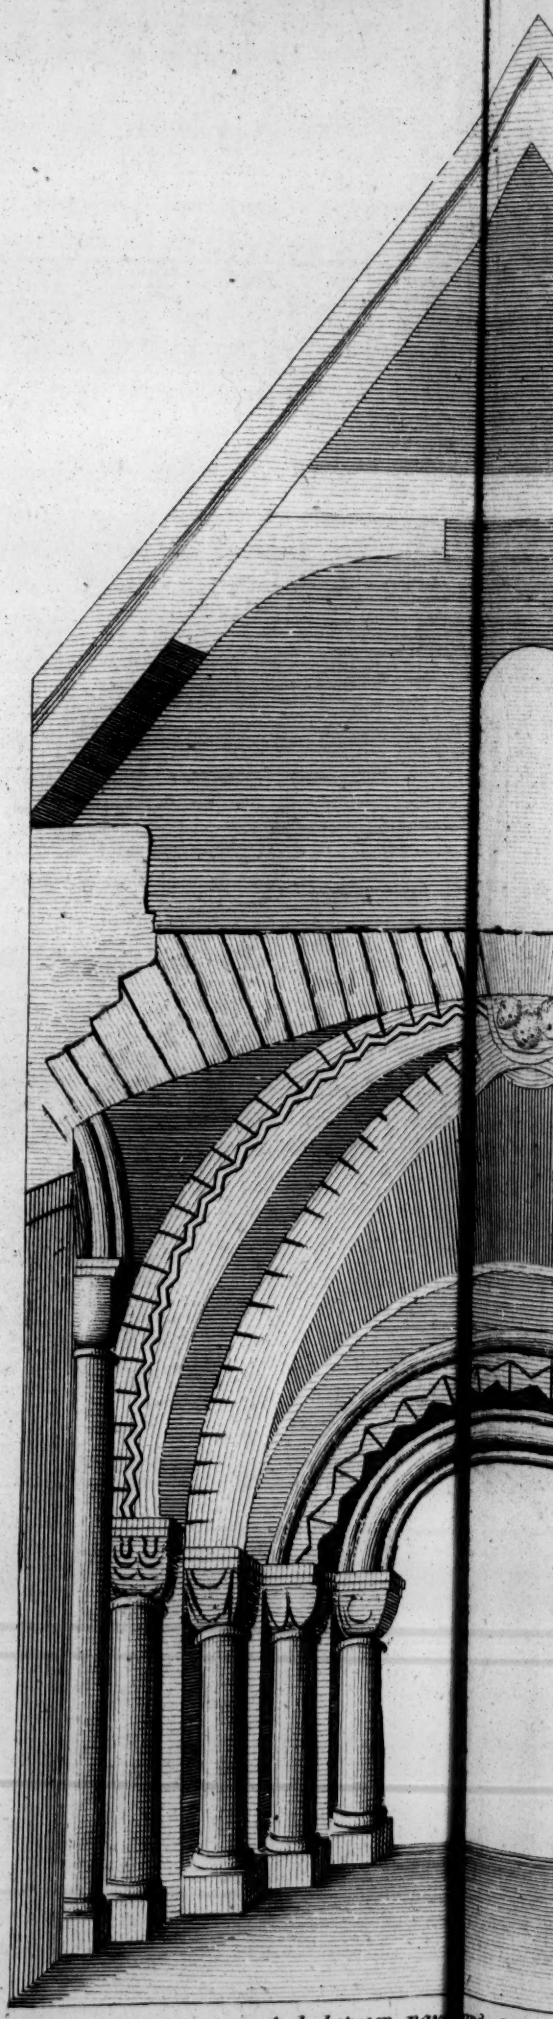
Fragment of a vase found near Sempringham.
p. 246.



Arch between nave and chancel

*p. 223.

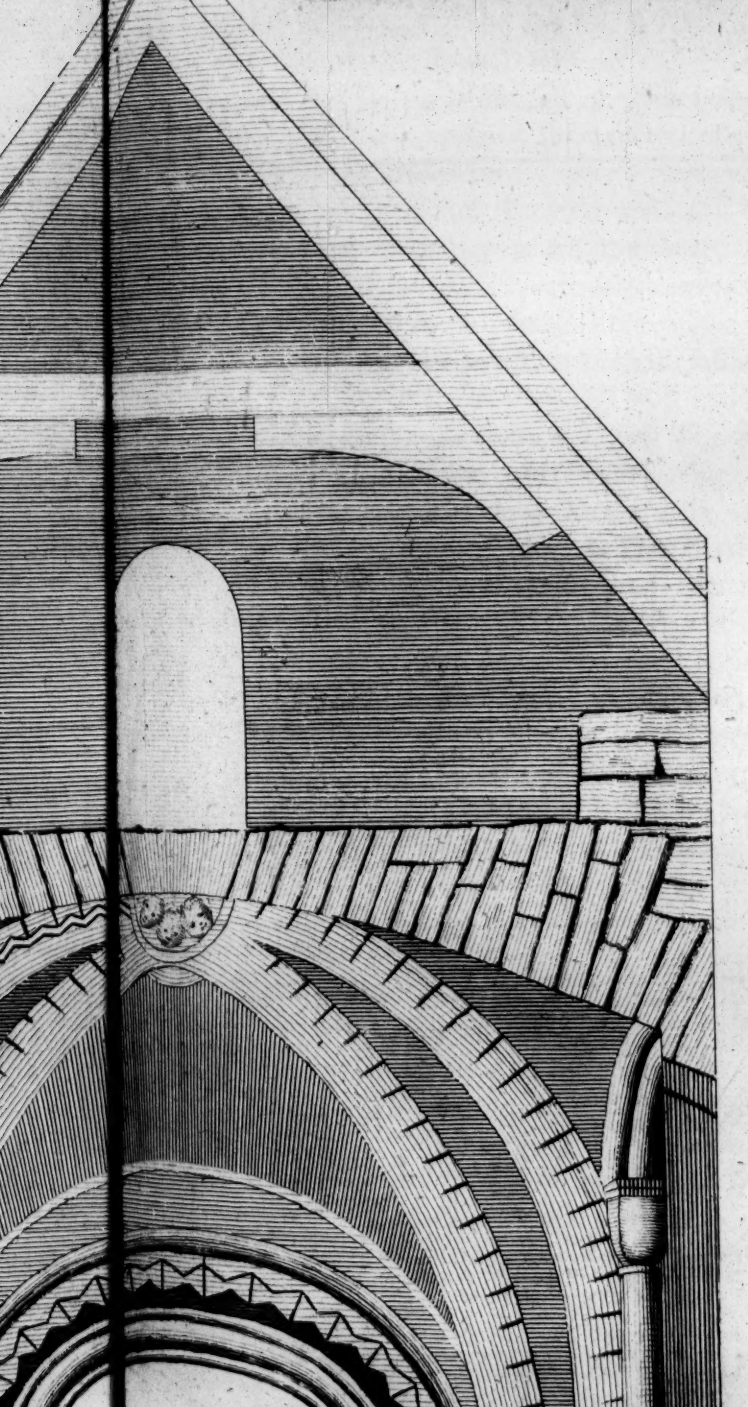
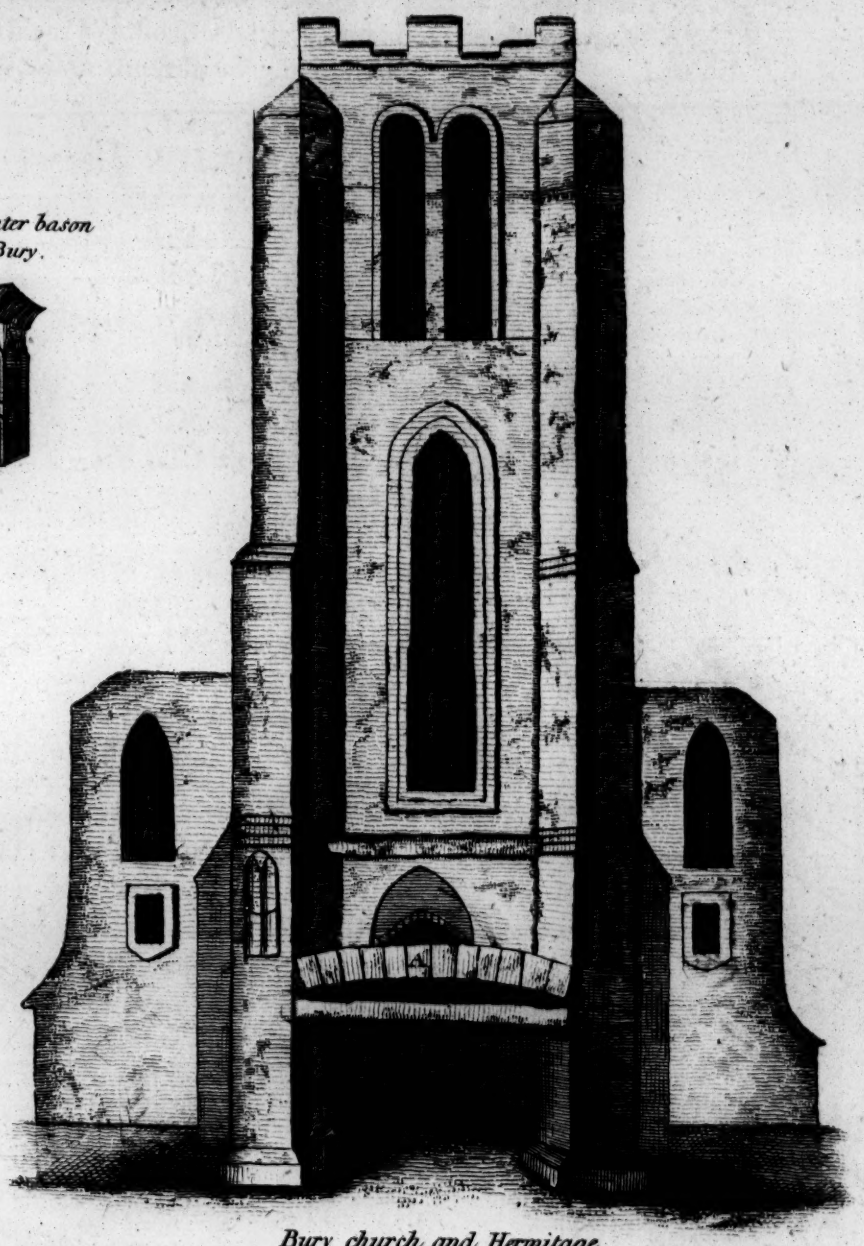
South side of Tickencote church.

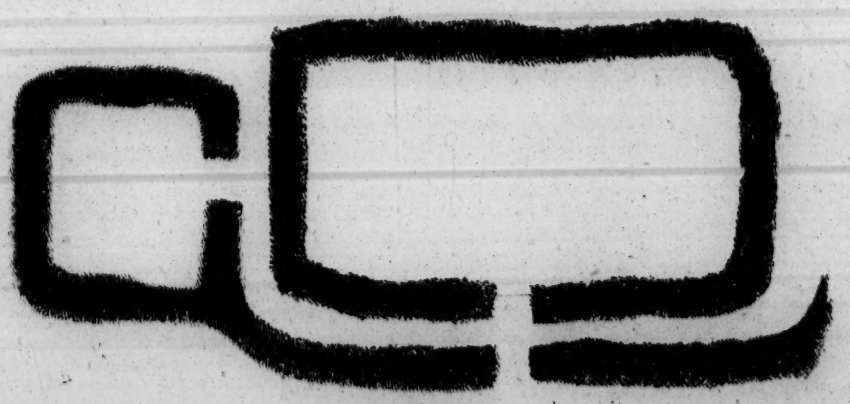


between nave and chancel of Tickencote church. – p. 223.

Holy water bason at Bury.



Bury church and Hermitage p. 161. Fig. 5.



Hunnington camp. Fig. 6. p. 230.

F. Cary sculp.

Ex? Bridgeford [s]. Mr. Cook, bookſeller, of Okeham, has a ſilver Aurelius and a copper Catauſus dug up in Market Overton field.

Near this place is Cotſmore, memorable for the charity of Anne widow of John lord Harrington of Exton, who purchaſed a rent charge of £.100 per annum iſſuing out of this manor and left it among the poor of ſeven pariſhes [h].

Ryhale belongs to the earl of Exeter. Tibba was a female anchorite at Godmancheſter, related to Penda king of Mercia about 696, and buried here, from whence her reliques were removed by Elffi abbot of Peterborough 963 to his monaſtery [i]. Dr. Stukeley [k] makes her the hunters ſaint, and derives from her name the notes of the horn Tan Tivy, q. d. San or Saint Tibba. At Ryhall they call her a queen, and ſay ſhe uſed to bathe in Tibbal's hill ſpring, i. e. Tibba's hill well: on this hill is Hale (q. d. Holy) green. At the north-weſt ſide or end of the church behind the ſteeple is her cell or chapel where ſhe lived, died, and was buried: the eaſt end of it is the weſt end of the pariſh church, partly introduced into it, and an aperture in the ſolid wall for the prieſt or perſon in the chapel to ſee the choir. In the eaſt end of the chapel a ſquare ſpace over the altar for a picture, and by it a ſmall ſtone niche for a ſtatue or relique: ſix holes ſtill remain to faſten a cryſtal or door before it; the ſides and weſt end of the chapel gone: one of its ſtone windows in a cottage at the weſt end of the town on this ſide the river. The manſion-houſe, lord Exeter's, is very old, and remains of a much older. The court is kept in the chamber, where is a door made of a fine piece of old painting, a crucifixion, Chriſt and the right hand thief remaining, given by ſome antient lords to the church now alienated. In the entry of the manor-houſe one ſees the buttrey hatch; on the right hand was the hall, a very old little window of one ſtone in the ſtair-caſe; the cellar of ribbed work arches: in the yard we ſee a large old arch in the houſe wall, and other marks of antiquity. Juſt above is Stableford bridge, q. d. St. Ebba's ford, couſin to Tibba, to whom perhaps the ſpring oppoſite to Tibba's was conſecrated, now called Jacob's well. The Ebulus is plentiful about it [l].

The title of baron Eſſindon is ſtill borne by the earl of Saliſbury. This manor being in the crown as part of the earl of Warwick's land was purchaſed 36 Henry VIII. by Richard Cecyll of Burleigh c. Northampton, eſq. [m] The patent calls it Eſyndon.

Edith Weſton had an alien priory of Benedictines t. Henry II. [n] It afterwards belonged to the Carthuſians of Coventry.

Brooke had a ſmall Auſtin priory, founded by Hugh Ferrars t. Richard I. valued at £.40. [o]

Manton an hoſpital and chantry or college [p].

Tikencote has one of the moſt antient Saxon churches. The arch between the chancel and nave conſiſts of a number of rude mouldings with various zigzag and dentals, and there is a ſemicircular arch in the ſouth wall of the chancel, in which lies a mutilated figure. The eaſt end of it rather cracked and decaying; the weſtern is more modern and very plain. It is within a quarter of a mile of the great north road. Dr. Stukeley ſays this church, the moſt venerable extant, is the entire oratory of prince Peada, founder of Peterborough abbey [q]. From his drawings we have engraved the weſt and ſouth ſides, the inſide view, and plan, Pl. V.

Martinſthorpe was a ſeat of the earl of Denbigh [r]. The Denbigh family ſold it to the Devonſhire family. The late dutcheſs of Devonſhire had it, and left it to her two younger grandſons lord Richard and lord George Henry Cavendiſh, and lord Richard being ſince dead lord George-Henry has now the whole. The houſe was pulled down about the year 1755, except the chapel which had a roof ſet over it; and the ſtables were turned into a tenant's houſe. Martinſthorpe.

At Lyndon is the ſeat of Thomas Barker, eſq; whoſe learned father married a daughter of the celebrated William Whiſton, who was buried in the churchyard here, with the following inſcription: Lyndon.

Here lyeth the body of
The rev[d]. WILLIAM WHISTON, M. A.
He was born Dec. 9, 1667,
And died Aug. 22, 1752,
In the 85th year of his age.
His writings ſhew
His unwearied ſtudy, and extenſive knowledge
in various parts of literature;
His ſufferings for conſcience ſake prove his ſincerity.
After a life ſpent
in piety towards God,
and benevolence and charity towards man,
He reſts in hope
through the merits of Chriſt of a joyful and bleſſed reſurrection to eternal life.

On digging a trench at Lyndon in 1780 to lay a drain, a great number of pieces of talk were dug up in ſtiff blue clay. Talk has alſo been found in other parts of Rutland.

At Normanton in a piece of marſhy ground is a ſtrong chalybeat ſpring. The ſtrongeſt of the ſteel, and moſt noted in Rutland, is between Market Overton and Tighe, which is much reſorted to; and there are ſeveral others about the country, as at North Luffenham, Lyndon, Hambleton and Martinſthorp. Normanton.

About the year 1775 a workman digging a ſaw-pit in his yard at North Luffenham found many human bones buried there; but there is no remembrance or tradition when or on what account that yard was uſed as a burying-place. North Luffenham.

Among the witneſſes to Henry I's charter to Herbert biſhop of Norwich, and the monks of the Holy Trinity there 1101, is Robert Comes Rutland [s]. But Edward grandſon of Edward III. is the firſt of whom we can ſpeak with certainty.

[l] Horſley Brit. Rom. p. 438.
[i] Sax. Chron.
[k] MS.
[l] Dr. Stukeley Pal. Brit. II. 44. He communicated to the Spalding Society draughts of the two wells, Tibba's chapel, parts of the manſion houſe, and old window of the cell.
[m] Pat. 36 H. VIII. in Collins' Life of lord Burleigh, p. 28.
[n] Tan. 443. Wright, 41.
[o] Ib. Wright, 26.
[p] Ib. Wright, 84.
[q] It. II. 62.
[r] Wright, 88.
[s] Dugd. Mon. I. 411. G.
[h] Wr. 52. G.

Roger

Earls of Rutland.

Roger Manners, earl of Rutland, dying 1612, was ſucceeded by his brother Francis, and he 1632 [r] by his ſon George who died 1641. The title devolved on John Manners of Haddon c. Derby, ſon and heir of Dr. George Manners ſecond ſon of Thomas firſt earl of Rutland [t]. He died 1679, and was ſucceeded by his ſon John, created duke of Rutland 1703, and ſucceeded $17\frac{10}{11}$ by his ſon John, and he 1720-1 by his ſon John, who, dying 1779, was ſucceeded by his grandſon Charles, fourth and preſent duke.

[r] Dug. Bar. I. 298.

Rare Plants found in Rutlandſhire.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade, or Dwale; in hedges and amongſt rubbiſh: about North Luffenham.

Dipſacus piloſus. Small Wild Teaſel, or Shepherd's-rod; in a lane near Edith Weſton.

Linum perenne. Perennial blue Flax; on each ſide of the North road between Stamford and Tickencote, and in the ſtony fields adjacent, very plentifully.

Melampyrum criſtatum. Creſted Cow-wheat; in a ſtony lane between Tolethorp and Ryhal, and among the woods near Stretton.

Nymphæa alba. White Water-lily; in the Welland near Tixover, and in ſome pits in Tinwell meadows.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus; on a bog between Normanton and Empingham in great abundance, in the field and incloſures between North Luffenham and Edith Weſton among ſprings, and in a marſhy meadow below Manton.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Butterwort or Yorkſhire Sanicle; on a bog near North Luffenham.

Polytricum commune. Great Golden Maidenhair; on ſpungy ground among ſprings near Pilton.

Sambucus ebulus. Dwarf Elder or Dane wort; in an incloſure at the eaſt end of North Luffenham.

s ſucceeded
1703, and 1720-1 by cceeded by duke.

Finwell mea-

; on a bog am in great ares between mong ſprings,
ton.
Yorkſhire Sa-
am.
idenhair; on Pilton.
ane wort; in th Luffenham.

LINCOLN-

NOTTINGHAM
YORK
THE RIVER HUMBER
THE GERMAN OCEAN
AXHOLME ISLE OF LINDSEY HOLLAND
KESTEVEN
LINDSEY
REFERENCES to the WAPONTAKES
1 Manley
2 Yarborough
3 Corringham
4 Aslacoe
5 Walshcroft
6 Bradley
7 Ludborough
8 Well
9 Lawres
10 Wraggoe
11 Gartree
12 Louthesk
13 Caleeworth
14 Hornecastle
15 Hill
16 Bolingbroke
17 Candleshoe
18 Boothby
19 Lincoln Liberty
20 Langoe
21 Loveden
22 Flaxwell
23 Winnibriggs
24 Grantham
25 Aswardburn
26 Aveland
27 Beltisloe
28 Nesse
29 Skirbeck
30 Kirton
31 Holland Elloe

A MAP OF LINCOLNSHIRE, from the Best AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

E. Noble delin. & Curavit

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

1o Longitude 55 West from 5o London

5o 4o 3o 2o 1o 0 1o 2o 3o 4o 5o

40 45 50 55 60

LIII

Lincolnshire
Rutland sh
Leicestershire
Northamptonshire
Cambridge Sh
Huntingdonshire
Norfolk
German Ocean
Wash
Boston
Spalding
Holbeach
Sutton St Mary
Sutton St James
Wisbech
Lynn
Walpole St Andrew
Walpole St Peter
Terrington
Lincoln
Grantham
Stamford
Bourn
Folkingham
Sleaford
Horncastle
Louth
Market Rasen
Caistor
Gainsborough
Corby
Oakham
Uppingham
Melton Mowbray
Market Harborough
Rockingham
Kettering
Thrapston
Oundle
Peterborough
Wisbech
Ely
Isle of Ely
Whittlesea Mere
Deeping
Bourn
Folkingham
Sleaford
Ancaster
Grantham
Stamford
Bourn

LINCOLNSHIRE.

TO the eaſt ſide of Rutlandſhire adjoins the county of Lincoln, called by the Saxons Lincollrcyne, by the Normans on their firſt arrival by a tranſpoſition of letters Nicolfſhire [a], now commonly Lincolnſhire. It is an extenſive county, near 60 miles in length, in breadth in ſome places above 30; of a mild temperature, fit for corn and cattle, thick ſet with towns, and watered by ſeveral rivers. Its eaſtern ſide, which forms a long curve, is laſhed by the German ocean. Its northern reaches to the Abus or Humber. On the weſt it has Nottinghamſhire; and on the ſouth the river Welland ſeparates it from Northamptonſhire. The whole is divided into three parts, one of which we call Holland, the other Keſteven, the third Lindſey.

Holland, or, as Ingulphus [b] calls it, Hoilandea, lies on the ſea, and, like Holland in Germany, is ſo much of it under water, that people's feet ſink in, and the ground ſhakes under them; whence it ſeems to have its name, unleſs one ſhould chooſe to ſay with Ingulphus that Hoiland is the right name, and derived from hay [c]. This whole tract lies on that Æſtuary, which Ptolemy calls METARIS [d] for Maltraith, now the Waſhes. This is a large and celebrated Æſtuary, under water when the tide comes in, and when it goes out practicable to travellers, though not without great danger, as king John found to his coſt. For journeying this way in the barons' war, by the ſudden coming in of the ſea he loſt all his baggage and regalia at Foſſe dyke and Welſtreame, as Matthew of Weſtminſter relates. This country, which the inhabitants, from the heaps of ſand called Silt, ſay is the gift of the ocean, is ſo aſſaulted by the ocean on one ſide and the great body of united waters from the higher grounds, that in winter time they are forced to keep conſtant watch, and have the utmoſt difficulty to defend themſelves with banks againſt theſe violent enemies. The country produces but little corn, but is covered with graſs, and breeds plenty of fiſh and waterfowl. The ſoil is ſo ſoft that the horſes wear no ſhoes, nor can you find a ſingle ſtone unleſs accidentally brought in, though it has churches built in a moſt beautiful manner of hewn ſtone. By certain banks raiſed againſt it, now two miles from the ſhore, and by the Salt hills, as they are called, near Sutterton, the ſea appears to have reached further inland. There is, however, a general want of freſh water, nor have they any except the rain water caught in wells, which, if dug below a certain depth, grow brackiſh, and if too ſhallow preſently dry up. Nor are there wanting quickſands, whoſe wonderful power of attracting and ſucking in is frequently experienced by the ſhepherds and ſheep to their coſt.

This Holland is divided into two parts Lower and Upper. The Lower has ſo many muddy bogs and impaſſable fens, that the inhabitants themſelves cannot get at them with their ſtilts [e]; and as this part lies lower, they have great difficulty to defend it by great banks from the ſea on one hand, and from the waters that cover the upper part of the iſle of Ely on the other. The moſt conſiderable of theſe banks is Southy bank, or dike, which they take unwearied care to prevent from being broken through by that prodigious force of water which comes like a deluge from the ſouth when the rivers overflow. A new cut was however begun at Clowſcroſſe by the neighbours in 1599 at public expence to drain them off. Near this bank I ſaw Crowland, called alſo Croyland, a town of great fame among the marſhlanders, whoſe name ſignifies, according to Ingulphus [f] its abbot, a crude and muddy ſoil. The place is ſaid to have been formerly haunted by certain frightful phantoms, till Guthlac, a man of conſummate ſanctity, led the life of an hermit there, in memory of whom, to the honour of God, Ethelbald king of Mercia founded here A.D. 716, at great expence, a monaſtery very eminent for its ſanctity and wealth. Of which take theſe lines from the life of Guthlac by Fœlix a very antient monk. Crowland.

Nunc exercet ibi ſe munificentia regis,
Et magnum templum magno molimine condit.
At cum tam mollis, tam lubrica, tam male conſtans,
Fundamenta palus non ferret ſaxea, palos
Præcipit infigi quercino robore cæſos,
Leucarumque novem ſpatio rate fertur arena,
Inque ſolum mutatur humus, ſuffultaque tali
Cella baſi multo ſtat conſummata labore.

The royal bounty here itſelf diſplays,
And bids with mighty pains a noble temple raiſe;
The ſoft, the ſlippery, the unſettled ſoil
Had long diſdain'd the buſy workman's toil:
No ſtone foundations ſuit this marſhy land,
But piles of oak in goodly order ſtand,
And boats for nine long leagues fetch filling ſand.
The fickle ſoil cements to ſolid ground,
The ſacred pile on the firm baſe they found,
And art and labour grace the work around.

If I ſhould give you the ſame author's deſcription of the Devils of Crowland with their blubber lips, fire-ſpitting mouths, ſcaley viſages, enormous heads, ſtrutting teeth, pointed chins, hoarſe throats, ſable ſkins, ſpindle ſhoulders, tun bellies, burning loins, hawmed legs, tailed buttocks, &c. who formerly haunted theſe places, and gave ſo much trouble to Guthlac and the monks, you would indeed laugh heartily, but I ſhould be thought a fool for my Devils of Crowland.

[a] and ſo late as the reign of Edward IV. See Stat. 4 Edward IV. c. 3. Yet in Domeſday it is always called Lincoleſcire.
[b] p. 94. Hoylandenſes.
[c] Which our progenitors broadly called Hey. Holland.
[d] Pliny has Mittaris inſula. Gale. MS. n.
[e] gralli.
[f] P. 4.

pains. Allow me, however, to ſtop a while to deſcribe the extraordinary ſituation and nature of this ſpot ſo different from all others in England, and this ſo very famous monaſtery. Crowland lies among the deepeſt fenns and waters ſtagnating off muddy lands ſo ſhut in and invironed as to be inacceſſible on all ſides except the north aud eaſt, and that only by narrow cauſeys. Its ſituation, if we may compare ſmall things with great, is not unlike that of Venice, conſiſting of three ſtreets, divided by canals of water, planted with willows, and built on piles driven into the bottom of the fen, and joined by a triangular bridge of admirable workmanſhip, under which the inhabitants report is a pit of immenſe depth dug to receive the confluence of waters. Beyond this bridge, where, as the poet ſays, In ſolum mutatur humus, "The ſoil cements to ſolid ground," antiently ſtood the monaſtery ſo famous in a much narrower ſpace, all round which, except where the town ſtands, it is ſo moory that you may run a pole into the ground to the depth of 30 feet, and nothing is to be ſeen on every ſide but beds of ruſhes, and near the church a grove of alders. It is notwithſtanding full of inhabitants, who keep their cattle at a good diſtance from the town, and go to milk them in little boats (called Skerries), which will hold but two perſons: but their chief profit ariſes from the catching of fiſh and wild fowl, which they do in ſuch quantities, that in the month of Auguſt they drive 3000 ducks into one net, and call their pools their fields. No corn grows within five miles of them. On account of this fiſhery and catching of fowls they paid formerly to the abbot and now to the king £. 300. ſterling a year.

I need not enter into the particular hiſtory of this monaſtery, which may be found already printed in Ingulphus. But it may not be amiſs briefly to mention what Petrus Bleſenſis [g], vicechancellor to Henry II. formerly recited at large about the rebuilding of this houſe in 1112, that by this ſingle inſtance may appear by what means and helps ſo many and ſuch beautiful ſacred ſtructures were raiſed about the kingdom. Abbot Joffrid obtained of the archbiſhops and biſhops of England "remiſſion of the third part of penance injoined for ſin to every one that would aſſiſt in ſo holy a work. With this he diſpatched the monks all round to collect money, and having got a tolerable fund, that he might begin his work with lucky names, he appointed the feſtival of St. Perpetua and Felicitas for laying the foundation. On this day numbers of nobles, prelates, and the common people reſorted hither. After the ſervice and the chanting was ended, the abbot himſelf laid the firſt ſtone at the eaſt corner; each of the nobles laid a ſtone in turn, and upon the ſtone ſome laid money, others grants of lands, titles to the patronage of churches, tithes of their ſheep and of their churches, meaſures of wheat, or a certain number of labourers or ſtone cutters. Of the common people ſome gave money, others their labour one day in every month till the work was completed, ſome offered to erect whole pillars, others baſes of pillars, and others parts of the walls, with an eager and cheerful devotion. The abbot in a public manner commends their ready benevolence to ſo holy a work, grants them all the brotherhood of his monaſtery, and a ſhare in all the ſpiritual good things of that church, and after feaſting them ſumptuouſly diſmiſſes them with his bleſſing in good ſpirits to their reſpective homes. But I muſt not dwell longer on this ſubject.

From Crowland a cauſey decked with willows, leads north between the river Welland and deep marſhes, on which, about two miles from Crowland, I ſaw a piece of a pyramidal ſtone with this inſcription:

AIO ÞANC
ꝑETRAꝏ
GVTÞLACVS
ÞABET SI
BI ꝏETAꝏ.

q. d. I ſay this ſtone is Guthlac's boundary.

Higher up on the ſame river lies Spalding, ſurrounded on all ſides with rivulets and canals, a handſomer town than one would expect in this tract among ſtagnated waters, where Ivo Talbois, whom Ingulphus in another place [h] calls earl of Anjou, gave an antient cell to the monks of Anjou. From hence to Deping, a town ten miles off, Egelric abbot of Crowland, afterwards biſhop of Durham, "through the centre of a wild foreſt and deep marſhes, as Ingulphus [i] relates, raiſed with wood and gravel a ſolid cauſey for travellers, called after him Elrich road." But no traces of it are now to be ſeen.

In Upper Holland, which lies more to the north, the firſt place we meet with is Kirk-ton, ſo called from its very beautiful church; and next, where the river Witham, confined with artificial banks on both ſides, empties itſelf with a wide mouth into the ocean, ſtands Boſton, more properly Botolph's town. It takes its name from Botolph, a moſt pious Saxon, who, according to Bede [k], had a monaſtery at Icanhoe. It is a conſiderable town ſtanding on both ſides of the Witham, over which is a lofty wooden bridge. Its commodious harbour occaſions it to be much frequented, and it has a large market place, and a church remarkable for its beauty and ſize, whoſe tower running up to a great height as it were hails travellers at a great diſtance, and directs ſeamen. This place fell into miſerable decline t. Edward I. For in the then univerſal corruption of manners throughout England, certain military men appointing a turnament here at the fair time, came to it in the diſguiſe of monks and canons, fired the town in ſeveral places, and fell upon the merchants, carrying off large quantities of goods, and burning more with ſuch violence, that our hiſtorians [l] ſay melted gold and ſilver ran together in the ſtreets, as the antients relate happened at the deſtruction of Corinth. Their leader Robert Chamberlan confeſſing his crime and ſhame was afterwards hanged, but could by no means be prevailed on to impeach his accomplices. Better times ſucceeding raiſed Botolph's town once more out of its aſhes, and the ſtaple for wool, &c. being ſettled here, brought in great wealth, and invited the merchants of the Hanſeatic League, who eſtabliſhed here their Gild or houſe. It is at preſent handſomely built, and drives a conſiderable trade, and the inhabitants apply themſelves both to trade and grazing of cattle.

[g] P. 113. Ed. Gale. [h] P. 72. [i] P. 64.
[k] IV. 3. Leland It. I. 33. Coll. III. 33. ap. Tan. 248. places Icanho in the eaſt ſuburb of Lincoln.
[l]

Near it was the barony of Croeun, or Credon, of which family Alan de Croeun founded Freſton priory*, and afterwards Petronilla, heireſs of the family, married twice, conveyed no ſmall eſtate, firſt to the Longchamps (from whom ſpring the Pedwardines), and ſecondly to J. de Vaux, from whom deſcend the barons Roos. Holland reaches not above ſix miles further; the whole of it was granted by William I. to Ivo Talbois of Anjou, whoſe inſolence Herward, a hopeful and ſpirited Engliſhman, ſon of Leofric, lord of Brune, or Burne, not being able to brook, as his own and his family's ſafety was now concerned, having obtained knighthood from Bran abbot of Peterborough, whoſe averſion to the Normans had already ſhewed itſelf, made war againſt him, and after giving him ſeveral overthrows, at laſt took him priſoner, and allowed him to ranſom himſelf on condition that he himſelf ſhould be reſtored to the king's favour, and die in his allegiance and protection. Such was the effect of merit even in an enemy. His daughter, who was married to Hugh de Enermue lord of Deping, obtained his eſtate, which I am told devolved afterwards to the barons Wake. This family of the Wakes, poſſeſſed of the eſtates of the *Eſtoteville*s, had been very eminent in theſe parts to the time of Edward II. then by marriage with an heir female their eſtate fell to Edmund of Woodſtock, earl of Kent, youngeſt ſon of king Edward I. From the younger ſons deſcended the antient and illuſtrious family of the Wakes of Bliſsworth c. Northampton ſtill ſubſiſting.

The ſecond part of this county, commonly called Keſteven, and by Ethelward [m], an antient writer, Ceoſtefne wood, adjoining to Holland on the weſt, has a much more healthy air, and no leſs rich ſoil. It is alſo larger, and embelliſhed with more towns. On the edge of it on the Welland ſtands Stanford, Saxon Steanford, built of hewn ſtone, whence its name; a populous town, diſtinguiſhed with various privileges, and defended by a wall. "It paid geld, according to Domeſday book [n], for 12 hundreds and a half to the army, the ſhipping, and Danegeld; and there were in it ſix wards." When Edward the elder fortified the ſouth bank of the river againſt the inroads of the Danes from the north. Marianus tells us, he built oppoſite to this town on the ſouth ſide the river (now called Stanford Baron), a very ſtrong caſtle. No traces of it now appear; for that which in the civil war Stephen fortified againſt Henry of Anjou is reported to have been within the town, and the ſite of it ſtill remaining proves it. This Henry when king of England gave "the whole town of Stanford, which was his demeſne, except the fees of the barons and knights of the ſaid town, to Richard de Humez, or Humetz, who was conſtable of our lord the king to hold of him by homage and ſervice †." The ſame was afterwards "held by William earl Warren by favour of king John." In the reign of Edward III. an univerſity was eſtabliſhed here, and profeſſors of literature, which the townſmen reckon as their greateſt glory. For a violent quarrel breaking out at Oxford between the northern and ſouthern ſcholars, a great number of ſtudents retired here, but ſoon after returned to Oxford [o], and put an end to this riſing ſeminary almoſt as ſoon as they had given it a beginning, and it was afterwards provided by oath that no Oxford man ſhould take a degree at Stamford. It nevertheleſs had a flouriſhing trade till in the rage of civil wars between the houſes of York and Lancaſter the northern ſoldiers ſtormed and ravaged it with fire and ſword. From that time it never fully recovered its antient luſtre. It is however at preſent in a tolerably flouriſhing ſtate, governed by an alderman and 24 burgeſſes, embelliſhed with about ſeven pariſh churches, and ſhews a very handſome old hoſpital, founded by William Brown of this town, beſides that new one lately built on the other ſide of the bridge by the Neſtor of Britain William Cecil baron Burghley, when he erected that magnificent houſe at Burghley already deſcribed in Northamptonſhire. He is buried in St. George's church here: a perſon, to ſay to no more of him, who lived not long enough for the ſervice of Nature, Glory, or his Country.

Though here remain ſome monuments of antiquity, and the Roman road, which occurs as ſoon as you leave the town to go north, plainly proves that here was a ford, they do not, however, ſatisfy us that this was GAUSENNÆ, though Antoninus places it not a great way from hence. But as a mile off is a little village called Brigcaſterton, in whoſe name appears ſome name of antiquity, where the river Guaſh or Waſh croſſes the military way, the correſpondence of the name Gwaſh with Gauſennæ, which the diſtance does not contradict, makes me ſuppoſe it to be Brigcaſterton, till time brings truth to light. If I ſhould ſuppoſe that Stanford roſe out of theſe ruins, and that this part of the county was called Keſteven from Gauſennæ, as the other Lindſey from the city of Lindum, let not my opinion influence the reader's judgement. It is believed that Gauſennæ fell to decay, when, as Henry of Huntingdon [p] informs us, the Picts and Scots ravaged the whole country to Stanford, where our Hengiſt, with his Saxons, with unwearied force and uncommon bravery, ſo hemmed in the furious barbarians, that after many were killed and taken, the reſt fled.—But to proceed.

Highdyke.

GAUSENNÆ.

Brigcaſterton.

In the eaſt part of Keſteven towards Hoiland as you go north, the firſt town you meet with is Deeping, i. e. as Ingulphus [q] informs us, the Deep Meadow, where "Richard de Rulos, chamberlain to William the Conqueror, confining in a dyke the river Weilond which before uſed to overflow often, and building on the dyke many tenements, formed a large town." This is very properly called Deping, or the deep meadow; for the plain below it extending many miles is the deepeſt of all this fenny country, and the receptacle of many waters: and, which is very extraordinary, much below the bed of the river Glen, which runs by from the weſt confined within its own banks. Then comes Burne, famous for the conſecration of king Edmund [r], and the caſtle of the Wakes, who obtained of Edward I. a market for the town. More eaſt [s] is Irnham, antiently the barony of Andrew Lutterell; Sempringham, now famous for the beautiful houſe built by Edward baron Clinton, afterwards earl of Lincoln, formerly for the religious order of Gilbertines, inſtituted by Gilbert lord of the place, who being, as authors ‡ tell us, "a very Deping.

Burne.

Irnham.

Sempringham.

Gilbertines.

* Reg. de Freſton. † Lib. Inq. in Scacc. ‡ Scrope.

[a] P. 847. Ed. Franc. 1601. [b] fol. 336. b.

[n] Sax. Chron. 109. A. D. 922. Edward built a burh, and all the people in the north town (byrh) ſubmitted to him.

[o] Upon the king's proclamation. Holland. [p] II. 178. [q] P. 78.

[r] See Buers in Eſſex, p. 60. and Suffolk, p. 83. [s] N. W. G.

wonderful

wonderful man, and of ſingular grace for the guardianſhip of women[t]," did in 1148, contrary to Juſtinian's Conſtitutions, which forbid double monaſteries where men and women herd together, but authorized by Pope Eugenius III, inſtituted an order of men and women[u], which ſo increaſed that he himſelf founded 13 houſes of this order, and had in his lifetime 700 brethren, and 1100 ſiſters in his monaſteries, but of doubtful character if we believe Nigel[x], a ſatyriſt of that age, who ſings thus of them:

Harum ſunt quædam ſteriles, quædam parientes,
Virgineoque tamen nomine cuncta tegunt.
Quæ paſtoralis baculi dotatur honore,
Illa quidem melius, fœrtiliuſque parit.
Vix etiam quævis ſterilis reperitur in illis;
Donec eis ætas talia poſſe neget.

Of theſe ſome barren, ſome good breeders are;
Yet all alike the guiſe of Virgins wear;
By bleſſing to the paſtoral ſtaff conveyed,
A fruitful mother is the Abbeſs made:
And not a Nun but boaſts the childing power,
Till age forbids the exertion of it more.

Folkingham. Lords of Folkingham.

Next is Folkingham, now likewiſe the barony of the Clintons, formerly of the Gaunts deſcended from Gilbert de Gaunt, nephew of Baldwin earl of Flanders, to whom great eſtates fell by the liberality of the Conqueror. "Memorandum, ſays an antient MS. that the Conqueror was accompanied by one Gilbert de Gaunt, to whom the ſaid William gave the manor of Folkingham, with its appurtenances, and the honour thereto belonging, and they drove out a certain woman named Dunmoch. From the ſaid Gilbert came one Walter de Gaunt, his ſon and heir, and from the ſaid Walter Gilbert de Gaunt, ſon and heir, and Robert de Gaunt younger ſon. And from the ſaid Gilbert ſon and heir came Alice, daughter and heireſs, who was married to earl Simon, gave many tenements to the religious, and died without heirs of her body. And the eſtate deſcended to Robert de Gaunt aforeſaid her uncle, and from Robert aforeſaid came Gilbert his ſon and heir, and from the aforeſaid came another Gilbert ſon and heir, and from the aforeſaid came another Gilbert, ſon and heir, who gave the manor of Folkingham, with its appurtenances to Edward ſon of Henry king of England." This Gilbert, as appears by the pleas* proving this pedigree, "demanded ſervice againſt William de Scremby." At length the king gave it to Henry de Bellomont, who appears to have held it t. Edward II.† Near it is Skregingham remarkable for the death of Alfric II. earl of Leiceſter, ſlain here by Hubba the Dane. To this place Ingulphus[y] ſeems to allude when he writes, "in Keſteven were ſlain three Daniſh kings, who were buried in a town before called Laundon, but now, from the burial of the three kings, Tre-king-ham." More to the eaſt is Hather, remarkable only for the reſidence of the Buſſeys, or Buſleys, deſcendants of Roger de Buſley, in the time of the Conqueror. Then Sleford, a caſtle of the biſhops of Lincoln, built by biſhop Alexander, where was alſo a houſe built by J. Huſſey, firſt and laſt baron of that name[z], who loſt his life by imprudently engaging in the inſurrections on account of religion at the Reformation 1537. A few miles hence is Kime, which gives name to the noble family called de Kime; but the property of the place came at laſt to the Umfranvilles, of whom three were ſummoned to parliament by the title of earls of Angus in Scotland. Our common law prudently refuſed to acknowledge the firſt of them as earl, becauſe Angus is not within the limits of the kingdom of England, till he produced in court the king's writ, by which the king had ſummoned him to parliament by the title of earl of Angus. From the Umfranvilles this place came to the family of Talbois, of which Gilbert was created by Henry VIII. baron Talbois, whoſe two ſons dying without iſſue it came by females to the Dimocks, Inglebeys, and others. More to the weſt I ſaw Temple-Bruer, which I render Temple in the heath. It ſeems to have been a preceptory of the Templars by the ruined walls of the demoliſhed church built like thoſe of the New Temple at London. Near this is Blankeney, once the barony of the D'Eincorts[b], who flouriſhed in a long ſucceſſion from the arrival of the Normans to the time of Henry VI. Then their male line ended in William, who had two ſiſters his coheireſſes, one married to William Lovell, the other to Ralph Cromwell. I the rather mention this family as a kind of ſatisfaction to the deſire of Edmund baron D'Eincort, who being antiently very ſolicitous to preſerve his name, and having no male iſſue, petitioned Edward II. "becauſe he was apprehenſive his name and arms would be loſt after his deceaſe, and earneſtly deſirous that they might be kept in remembrance after his death, that he might infeoff whom he pleaſed in his name and arms ‡." This was granted by the king's letters patent, notwithſtanding which the name for anything I find to the contrary is totally extinct, and had it not been recorded in hiſtory would have been uttetly forgotten.

Skrekingham.

Hather.

Buſſy.

Sleford.

In the weſt part of Keſteven on the edge of this county and Leiceſterſhire ſtands Belvoir or Beauvoir caſtle, ſo called (whatever was its antient name) from the fine proſpect on a ſteep hill, which ſeems the work of art. They ſay Todenei the Norman was the founder of this caſtle, and of the little monaſtery adjoining, from whom it came by inheritance by the Albenies, Bretons, and the barons Roos to the Manners earls of Rutland. The firſt of theſe, Thomas, as I have been informed, rebuilt it after it had lain many years buried in its ruins. For out of reſentment to Thomas lord Roos who followed the intereſts of Henry VI. it was in great meaſure deſtroyed by William lord Haſtings, to whom on the attainder of lord Roos, Edward IV. had given it with a very large eſtate. But Edmund, baron Roos, ſon of Thomas, recovered this property of his anceſtors by favour of Henry VII. Below this is found the Aſtroites ſtone repreſenting a cluſter of little ſtars, with five rays iſſuing from each corner and a cavity in the middle of each ray. This ſtone

* Pl. 27. H. III. Rot. 13. Linc. † Inq. 4 Edward II. ‡ Pat. 10. Ed. II.

[t] in cuſtodia mulierum gratiæ ſingularis.

[u] On this reflection of our author ſee Salmon's New Survey, p. 251, 252.

[x] Nigellus Wireker was a Benedictine monk of Canterbury, 1200, whoſe ſevere writings againſt the vices of the clergy are extant in MS. Bodl. and C. C. C. C. Tan. Bib. Brit. 783.

[y] P. 24.

[z] Created by king Henry VIII. Holland.

[a] Gilbert 25 Ed. I. Robert his ſon, Gilbert his grandſon. Dugd. Bar. I. 505. 507.

[b] Inq. 21 Henry VI. Dugd. Bar. I. 385-8, where ſee an inſcription on the ſecond of the family from the Conqueſt, of which we have engraved a more faithful copy.

has

has its German name from Victory[d], because, according to George Agricola in his 6th book of Fossils, they imagine the wearer of it will gain his cause, and overcome his enemies. Whether this of ours like that in Germany, when laid in vinegar, will move and turn round, I have not had an opportunity to try. The vale below this castle, commonly called from it the Vale of Belvoir, is of great extent and very pleasant, diversified with meads and cornfields, and extending into the three counties of Leicester, Nottingham, and Lincoln.

MARGIDUNUM mentioned next after VERNOMETUM by Antoninus, appears to have been antiently if not in this very place, not very far from it, both by the name and distance from Vernometum and PONTE or Paunton, between which Antoninus places it. The antient name seems borrowed from Marga and its situation. Marga in British is a sort of earth with which they manured their lands, and Dunum signifying a hill is applied only to higher grounds. I am, however, at a loss in fixing this place, as marle is scarce hereabouts (perhaps for want of digging) unless we should suppose the Britans gave the name of marga to plaister, which I am informed is found in the neighbourhood, and which Pliny[e] in his Natural History tells us was in great demand among the Romans for whitewashing[f] and small images[g].

This part of the county is watered and bounded on the north by the river Witham, yielding plenty of pike, though but a small stream. It rises at a little village of its own name not far from the ruins of Bitham castle, which (as an antient pedigree sets forth) William I. gave to Stephen earl of Albemarle and Holderness, that he might have wherewith to feed his infant son with white bread[h], for in Holderness they at that time eat only such as was made of oats, which is now hardly ever used there. But in the reign of Henry III. when William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle[i] held out this castle in a rebellious manner and ravaged the neighbouring country, it was almost levelled with the ground. It was afterwards the residence and in a manner the head of the barony of the Colvilles, who long flourished in great honour, but failed under Edward III.[k] and their estate passed by marriage to the Gernons and Bessets of Sapcot.

The river Witham soon after its rise comes to the town of Paunton, which lays claim to some antiquity, and often turns up Roman pavements, and had formerly a bridge over the river; for that this was AD PONTEM placed by Antoninus seven miles from Margidunum, the name of Paunton, and the distance not only from Margidunum but from Croco-calana plainly proves. Antoninus gives this last name to that town which we call Ancaster, which is nothing at present but a long street on the military road, one part of which lately belonged to the Vescies, the other to the Cromwells. On entering it from the south I saw a rampart, and a camp appears to have been higher up, as on the other side to the west appear some summer camps of the Romans. It seems to have had its British name from its situation, lying under a hill. Cruc maur signifies in British a great hill, and Cruc occhidient a western hill in Giraldus Cambrensis[l] and Ninnius[m]; but the meaning of Colana others must determine. The monuments of antiquity in this town are the Roman coins and subterraneous passages frequently discovered, its situation on the military way, and the 14 miles distance between it and Lincoln on the grassy plain called Ancaster heath; for so many miles Antoninus reckons between Croco-calana and Lindum. But to return to the river.

After Paunton we come to Grantham, a town of no small resort, embellished with a school built by Richard Fox bishop of Winton, and a handsome church, whose spire rises to a great height, and is famous for the many stories told about it. Below this near Herlaxton, a little village, was ploughed up in the last age, a brass vessel, containing[n] a gold helmet of most antique make, set with jewels, which was presented to Catharine of Spain, dowager of Henry VIII. From hence the Witham takes a long course north not far from Somerton castle built by Anthony Bec bishop of Durham*, who gave it to Edward I. and he soon after to William de Bellomont, who about that time came into England, and gave birth to the family of the viscounts Bellomont, which in a manner failed in the last century, the sister and heiress of the last viscount marrying John lord Lovell of Tichmersh. But of this family I have before treated in Leicestershire[o]. The river turning thence gradually to the south-east through the fen country below Boston empties itself into the German ocean, having encompassed Kesteven on the north. Though it has a quick fall to the sea and a large bed, the heavy winter floods occasion it to overflow the marsh land on each side with great damage: but in spring it is drained off by sluices called Gotes.

Grantham.

Herlaxton. A golden helmet.

Somerton castle.

Lords Bellomont.

On the other side of the Witham lies the third part of this county Lindsey, called by Bede[p] from the chief city Lindissi, more extensive than Holland and Kesteven, presenting a vast front to the sea, which breaks against it on the east and north; bounded on the west by the river Trent; on the south divided from Kesteven by the Witham, and a drain called Fossedike[q] carried by Henry I. for seven miles from the Witham to the Trent for the conveniency of bringing up provisions to Lincoln. On the junction of this dyke with the Trent stands Torkesey, Saxon Turcesig, now an obscure little town, formerly very famous. For before the Norman times (as appears in William I's survey of England) here were reckoned 200 burgesses, enjoying not a few privileges, upon condition they should conduct the king's ambassadors[r] when they came this way, in their boats down the Trent, and bring them as far as York.

Lindsey.

Torksey.

At the junction of this dyke with the Witham stands the first and principal city of this county, called by Ptolemy and Antoninus LINDUM, by the Britans Lindcoit from the woods, (for which some copies have corruptly Lintcoit) by Bede[s] the city Lindecollinum, and Lindecollina; whether from its hilly situation or from its having been a colony I do not take upon me to determine. The Saxons called it Lindocollyne, Lindcyllan-ceaster, the Normans Nichol, LINDUM.

* Lib. Dunelm.

[d] Q. if here is not some confused allusion to Andrate, Adraste, or Astarte, the Goddess of Victory, of whom see Introduction, note L. p. xxiii.

[e] N. H. XXXVI. 24. [f] albariis & sigillis. [g] Images, Holland. Cielings, Gibson.

[h] pane siligineo. [i] Mat. Par. 310. [k] Dug. Bar. I. 626. [l] Itin. Camb. c. 3. p. 862. near Abertivi.

[m] Crucochideint, i. e. tumulus occidentalis; c. 23. See Gale and Bertram's notes. Cruachaneli, collis Eli. Nen. c. 58.

[n] Leland does not say the helmet was in the pot, but with it, and dowager in him means of Prince Arthur.

[o] P. 191, 195. [p] II. c. 16. [q] Hoveden. [r] legatos. Domesd. fol. 337. a. [s] II. c. 18.

we Lincoln, the Latins Lincolina. Whence Alexander Necham in his poem on the Divine Wiſdom, Lindiſiæ columen Lincolnia, ſive columna,

Munifica felix gente, repleta bonis.

Pillar and Guard of Lindſey Lincoln ſtands,
By liberal people held, and every good commands.

Some think it had its name from the river Witham, which they ſay, but on no good grounds, was antiently called Lindis. But I cannot agree with them; for Necham is againſt them, who called this river Witham 400 years ago, in theſe lines:

Trenta tibi piſces mittit, Lincolnia, ſed te,
Nec dedigneris, Withama parvus adit.

Tho' Trent afford thee fiſh, Lincoln, deſpiſe
Not Witham's ſlender ſtream that glads thine eyes.

I ſhould rather derive it from the Britiſh word Lhin ſignifying a Lake: for I have heard from the citizens that the Witham was wider below the town at Swanpole where it is now wide enough: and not to mention Lindaw in Germany on the lake of Conſtance, and Linternum in Italy on a lake, I find in our own country the towns of Talhin, Glan lhin, Linlithquo, ſituated on lakes. This large and famous city ſtands on the brow of a hill where the Witham turns eaſt, and dividing into three channels waſhes the lower parts of the town. The evident marks of a rampart and deep ditch ſtill ſhew that the antient Lindum of the Britans ſtood on the ſummit of the hill, which is hard of aſcent, and run out northerly beyond Newport gate. In this city Vortimer, that warlike Britan, who had ſo often routed the Saxons, ended his days, and was contrary to his expreſs command buried. For he had flattered himſelf with a full perſuaſion that if he were buried on the coaſt his ſpirit alone would defend Britain from the Saxons, as we are told by Ninnius the diſciple of Elvodugus. But the Saxons deſtroying this old Lindum, firſt occupied the ſouth ſide of the hill[t], fortifying it with the ruins of the antient city, and afterwards went down to the river, and built in the place called Wickanforde, raiſing walls where the river did not ſerve for a defence. At this time, according to Bede[u], "Paulinus preached the word in the pro"vince of Lindiſſi, and firſt converted the governor of "the city of Lindocollina, whoſe name was Blecca,
"with all his family. In this city he built a ſtone
"church of exquiſite workmanſhip, whoſe roof being "ruined by long neglect or the violence of the ene-
"my, only the walls are now ſtanding." The Danes afterwards took it more than once: firſt thoſe marauding parties, from whom Edmund Ironſide wreſted it; afterwards Canute, from whom Ethelred retook it, when at his return from Normandy he bravely drove Canute out of it, and unexpectedly recovered England. In the Confeſſor's time, according to Domeſday book[x], "here were 1070 houſes inhabited, and 12 lagemen, having Sac and Soc." But in the time of the Normans, according to Malmeſbury[y], it was one of the moſt populous cities in England, and a mart for commodities, brought both by land and water, and as appears from Domeſday[z], at that time "800 burgeſſes were reckoned here, many houſes were ruined, 166 for the caſtle, the remaining 74 were without the bounds of the caſtle ruined not by the oppreſſion of the ſheriff and his people, but by misfortunes, poverty, and fire." William I. for its defence and to awe the citizens, raiſed on the top of the hill a ſpacious and very ſtrong caſtle, and about the ſame time Remigius biſhop of Dorcheſter for its embelliſhment transferred hither his ſee from Dorcheſter, which was a ſmall town, and in the remoteſt corner of the dioceſe. The church which Paulinus had built being by this time fallen down, "Remigius purchaſed lands on the higheſt parts of the city (as Henry of Huntingdon[a] informs us) near the caſtle which made a figure with its ſtrong towers, and built a church ſtrong and fair in a ſtrong place and a fair ſpot, to the Virgin of Virgins, in ſpite of all the oppoſition from the archbiſhop of York, who laid claim to the ground, placing in it 44 prebendaries. This being afterwards (proceeds the ſame author) damaged by fire was elegantly repaired" by that moſt munificent biſhop of Lincoln Alexander, of whom William of Malmeſbury[b] ſays, "being in perſon far below the common proportion of men, his mind exerted itſelf to excel and ſhine." And among other things a poet of that time[c] ſings thus:

Qui dare feſtinans gratis ne danda rogentur,
Quod nondum dederat, nondum ſe credit habere.

Eager to give, preventing each requeſt,
Thought what he gave not he had ne'er poſſeſt.

Not only theſe two prelates, but Robert Bloet Alexander's predeceſſor, R. de Beaumeis, Hugh the Burgundian, and ſucceeding biſhops, gradually brought this work, which one alone could not do, to its preſent magnificence. As it was raiſed at great expence, it diſcovers in every part ſingular beauty and rare ſkill, particularly the weſt front, which attracts and engages the eyes of all ſtrangers. Though there are in this church monuments of many biſhops and others, the moſt remarkable ſeem to be that braſs one in which are depoſited the bowels of that excellent queen Eleanor conſort of king Edward I. thoſe of Nicholas Cantelupe, one or two of the family of Burgherſh: alſo the tomb of Catherine Swinford third wife of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter and mother of the Somerſet family, with whom was buried her daughter Joan, ſecond wife of Ralph Nevill firſt earl of Weſtmoreland, by whom ſhe had a numerous progeny.

The dioceſe of Lincoln, not confined within the narrow limits which in the early Saxon church ſatisfied the biſhop of Sidnaceſter, who preſided over this county, takes in ſo many counties that it was ready to ſink under its own greatneſs; and though Henry II. took out of it the dioceſe of Ely, and Henry VIII. thoſe of Peterborough and Oxford, it is ſtill reckoned the largeſt in England for juriſdiction and number of counties, and comprehends 1247 pariſh churches. Many eminent biſhops ſat in this ſee after Remigius, whom it is not my purpoſe to recite. Nor ſhall I enlarge upon Robert Bloet, whom king William Rufus fined in the great ſum of 50,000*l.* on pretence

[t] At the foot whereof they built as it ſeemeth the gate yet ſtanding compiled of vaſt ſtones. Holland.
[u] II. 16. [x] Fol. 336. [y] de geſt. pontif. IV. 165. b.
[z] nouies centum Hic numerus computatur anglice centum pro cxx. tuti
[a] VII. 213. but the copy mentioned by Camden muſt have been fuller.
[b] de geſt pont. IV. 165. b. He is ſpeaking of Remigius not Alexander.
[c] Theſe are two of the lines recorded by Henry of Huntingdon VII. p. 219.

that

that he had not a proper title to the city of Lincoln, nor that munificent Alexander who took ſuch extravagant delight in extravagant buildings, nor Hugh the Burgundian who was cannonized, and whoſe body king John " with his nobles to do honour (ſays my author R. Hoveden [d]) to God and the holy biſhop" carried to his grave on their ſhoulders. I muſt, however, mention two of them; one is Robert Groſteſt *, a perſon of incredible learning and knowledge of languages for that age, " a dreadful antagoniſt [e] to the Pope, a faithful monitor to his ſovereign, and lover of truth, a reprover of prelates, director of prieſts, inſtructor of the clergy, ſupporter of ſcholars, preacher to the people, diligent ſearcher of ſcripture, the hammer of the Romaniſts, &c." the other my ever-honoured maſter and reverend father Thomas Cooper, who deſerved ſo well of the republic of letters and the church, in whoſe ſchool I acknowledge with joy and gratitude I received my education. The city itſelf was long conſiderable, being made by Edward III. a ſtaple market, as it is called, for wool, leather, lead, &c. Though it never experienced very heavy calamities, it was once burnt and once unſucceſsfully beſieged by king Stephen (who was there overpowered and made priſoner) and it was taken by Henry III. when the rebellious barons who had invited over Lewis of France to the crown of England held it out againſt him; but it ſuffered no great damage. Yet it is incredible how it has as it were declined by age, and of fifty churches which it had two centuries ago ſcarce 18 now remain. I ſhall juſt obſerve that its latitude is 53° 12″ and its longitude 22° 52′.

As the Roman military way led ſtrait from Stanford to Lincoln, ſo here it runs north with a high ſtrait courſe, now and then interrupted, about 10 miles to a ſmall village, called Spittle in the ſtreet, and further. Three miles from Lincoln I obſerved another military way, called Ould ſtreet, ſtriking out of this, with a very conſpicuous ridge weſtward, which I believe led to Agelocum the next ſtation from Lindum. But I ſhall now purſue the courſe I began.

The Witham leaving Lincoln runs down by Wragby, a member of the barony of Truſbutt, whoſe title came by the barons Roos to the Manours, now earls of Rutland. Next to this it paſſes the walls of the famous abbey of Beapbana or Peartaneu, commonly called Bardney, where Bede [f] ſays king Oſwald was buried, and a banner of gold and purple laid upon his tomb. The writers of former ages cannot be ſatisfied with celebrating this moſt Chriſtian hero Oſwald, but muſt tack to his noble atchievements ſome ridiculous miracles, which I purpoſely omit. Our anceſtors for many ages believed his hand was preſerved here uncorrupted, and a very antient poet ſays,

Nullo verme perit, nullo putredine tabet
Dextra viri, nullo conſtringi frigore, nullo
Diſſolvi fervore poteſt, ſed ſemper eodem
Immutata ſtatu perſiſtit, mortua vivit.

From worm and putrefaction ſafe appears
The wondrous hand, nor cold nor heat it fears.
In the ſame ſtate unalter'd it ſurvives;
And tho' long dead by miracle ſtill lives.

This houſe, as Petrus Bleſenſis relates [g], " was formerly burnt by the fury of the Danes, and lay many years quite deſolate, till the famous and religious earl of Lincoln Gilbert de Gaunt rebuilt it, ſettling on it among many other poſſeſſions the tithes of all his manors throughout England." The Witham after this receives the little river Ban, which riſing in the heart of Lindſey runs firſt by Horncaſtle, antiently the eſtate of Adeliza de Condia, and levelled with the ground in the reign of Stephen, afterwards the barony of Gerard de Rodes, now as I am informed of the biſhop of Carliſle. Thence by Scrivelſby the manor of the Dimockes, who held it by inheritance from the Marmions by J. Ludlow, by " the ſervice of grand ſerjeantry (to uſe the law phraſe) that whenever any king of England is to be crowned, the lord of this manor for the time being, or in caſe of ſickneſs, ſome one for him, ſhall come well armed for battle on a good horſe into the preſence of our lord the king at his coronation, and make proclamation, that if any one will ſay that our ſaid lord the king has not a title to his kingdom and crown, he ſhall be ready and prepared to defend the right of the king and his kingdom and the dignity of his crown in his own perſon againſt him and any other whatſoever." Lower down the Ban falls into the Witham at Tatterſhall, a ſmall town conveniently ſituated among the fens, with a caſtle built for the moſt part of brick, and noted for its barons. They ſay that Eudo and Pinſon, two Norman nobles, united by an almoſt brotherly affection, received from the liberality of William I. many poſſeſſions in theſe parts which they divided between them in ſuch a manner that Tatteſhall fell to Eudo, who held it by barony, and from whoſe deſcendants it came by Dryby and the Bernaks to Radulphus de Cromwell, whoſe ſon of the ſame name high treaſurer of England under Henry VI. departed this life without iſſue †: and Ereſby, which is not far off, to Pinſon, by whoſe iſſue the eſtate paſſed by the Bekes to the Willoughbies, who had alſo rich eſtates in dower with their wives not only from the Uffords earls of Suffolk, but alſo from the lords Welles, who brought with them the great eſtates of the antient noble family of Engaine of great ſway in this part ever ſince the Norman Conqueſt. Among theſe Willoughbys the moſt conſiderable t. Henry VI. was Robert Willoughby, for his valour created earl of Vendome in France, and from them by the mother deſcended Peregrine Berty baron Willoughby of Ereſby, a perſon of eminent greatneſs of ſoul and valour.

Ban r. Horncaſtle. Scrivelſby. Dimock. King's Champion. Tatterſhall. Cromwell. Ereſby. Willoughby. Lords Welles. Lords of Engaine.

The Witham now approaching the ſea receives another nameleſs river from the weſt, at whoſe ſource is Bollinbroke caſtle, in a low ſituation, built of mouldring ſtone by William de Romara earl of Lincoln ‡, taken from Alicia de Lacey by Edward II. becauſe ſhe had married againſt his conſent, and diſtinguiſhed by the birth of Henry IV. who was thence ſurnamed Henry of Bollingbroke. At that time it began to be ranked among thoſe honorary eſtates called Honors. The Witham after receiving this river falls, as I ſaid before, into the ſea below Boſton.

Bollinbroke caſtle. Honors.

From the mouth of the Witham the ſhore ſwells out with a great bend into the German ocean to the Humber mouth, notched with ſeveral little

* He died 1233.
[d] P. 461. b.
[f] Eccl. Hiſt. III. 11.
† Inq. 23 Edw. IV. Fines Mich. 1 H. VI.
[e] M. Paris, p. 876, and an Anonymous Annaliſt.
‡ Lib. Stanlow.
[g] Contin. Hiſt. Croyl. p. 127.

æſtuaries. It has but few towns, becauſe the harbours are ſcarce, and many ſhoals lie off hereabouts. Of the towns on this ſhore ſome are, however, remarkable, eſpecially Wainfleet, were it only for giving birth to William Wainfleet, biſhop of Wincheſter, founder of Magdalen college, Oxford, a man eminently well deſerving of literature. Next Alford, which owes its market to Leo lord Welles, who obtained this privilege of Henry VI. This family of Welles was very antient and illuſtrious; the laſt male married a daughter of king Edward IV. and was created viſcount Welles by Henry VII. and died without children. The eſtate came by females to the Willoughbys, Dimockes, Delalaunds, Hoys, &c. Afterwards Louth a little market town of good reſort, which takes name from the little river Lud, which waſhes Cokerington antiently the head of the barony of Scoteney. Then Grimſby, which our wiſeheads who dream what they pleaſe will have to be ſo called from one Grim a merchant, who educating Haveloc a royal Daniſh infant that had been expoſed has furniſhed matter for fable, together with Haveloc his pupil, who was firſt ſcullion in the king's kitchen, and afterwards for his heroiſm was honoured with the king's daughter's hand, and performed I know not what exploits fit for thoſe old women who love to paſs a winter's evening in telling old wives tales *.

Wainfleet. Alford. Louth. Lud r. Cokerington. Grimſby.

Scarce ſix miles from hence inland appears an old caſtle, now called Caſtor, by the Saxons Ðuanȝceaſtep and Thong Caſter, by the Britans Caer Egarry, in both languages taking its name from the circumſtance of cutting a hide into thongs like Byrſa the famous citadel of Carthage. Our chronologiſts pretend that Hengiſt the Saxon after defeating the Scots and Picts obtained of Vortigern very extenſive poſſeſſions in other parts of the kingdom, but here could obtain only as much land as he could incompaſs with a bull's hide cut into ſmall ſhreds, or as we call them Thongs, on which he built this caſtle. Whence one who wrote an epitome of Britiſh hiſtory in verſe, has thus applied thoſe lines of Virgil:

Caſtor. Byrſa.

Accepitque ſolum facti de nomine Thongum,
Taurino quantum poterat circumdare tergo.

He had the ſpot call'd from the ſtory Thong,
What a bull's hide inclos'd when laid along.

From Grimsby the ſhore retires with a great bend to let in the Abus Æſtuarium or Humber, by Thornton, formerly a college, founded for divine worſhip by William le Gros earl of Albemarle; and Barton, where is the moſt famous paſſage into Yorkſhire. Near it the Ankam, a ſmall muddy river, and therefore abounding with eels, empties itſelf into the Humber, and near its ſource is Market Raiſin, ſo called from its market of no ſmall reſort. Higher up lie Angotby, now corruptly Oſgodby [h], antiently belonging to the family of St. Medard, from whom it came by inheritance to the Airmins; and Kelſay, antiently the property of the Hanſards, who were of great note in this county, from whom it came by marriage to the knightly family of Aſhcough. After theſe the Ankam has a bridge at Glanford, a ſmall market town called by the common people from its bridge Brigg, its true name being almoſt loſt. Near it in a foreſt of oaks is Kettleby, the ſeat of the famous knightly family of the Tirwhits [i], antiently, as one would ſuppoſe from the name, that of one Ketell, a common name among the Saxons and Danes. For Bye and Byan ſignify in Saxon a habitation, and to inhabit, whence ſo many places elſewhere in England, and particularly in this county, end in Bye.

Thornton. Barton. Ankam r. Market Raiſin. Oſgodby. Kelſay. Glanford brig.

At certain ſeaſons of the year, not to mention fiſh, amazing flights of fowl are found all over this part of the country: not the common ones which are in great eſteem in other places, ſuch as teal, quails, woodcocks, pheaſants, partridges, &c. but ſuch as have no Latin names, the delicacies of tables, and the food of heroes, fit for the palates of the great; Puittes, Godwittes, Knots, which I take to mean Canute's birds [k], for they are ſuppoſed to come hither from Denmark, Dotterells, ſo called from their extravagant doatiſhneſs, which occaſions theſe imitative birds to be caught by the fowler's geſtures by candle light; if he only puts out his arm, they put out a wing, and if his leg, they do the ſame: in ſhort, whatever the fowler does, the bird does the ſame, till the net is drawn over it. I leave this to the attention of Naturaliſts or Epicures.

More weſt, the Trent, after a long courſe, falls into the Humber. After bounding this county with its ſandy bank from Foſſedike, it runs firſt not far from Stow, where Godiva, wife of earl Leofric, built a monaſtery, which, from its low ſituation under the hills, Henry of Huntingdon [l] ſays is placed under the promontory of Lincoln. Not far from thence is Knaith, now the reſidence of lord Willoughby of Parham, antiently of the family of the barons Darcy, who derive great honour as well as property from the daughter and heireſs of F. Meinill. This family of Darcy proceeds from an older, viz. from one whoſe name was Norman de Adrecy, or Darcy of Norton, who flouriſhed in high repute t. Henry III. and whoſe deſcendants endowed a ſmall convent of nuns at Alvingham in this county. But this dignity almoſt failed when the laſt Norman in the antient direct line left only two ſiſters, one of whom married Roger Pedwardin, the other P. de Limbergh †.

From thence the Trent runs down to Gainsborrow, a little town remarkable for being the anchoring place of the Daniſh ſhips, and for the death of Suene Tiugſkege, the Daniſh tyrant, who, after ravaging the country, was (as we learn from Matthew of Weſtminſter [m]) ſtabbed by an unknown hand, and received the puniſhment due to his crimes. Many ages after it was the property of William de Valence, earl of Pembroke, who obtained for it the privilege of a fair from Edward I. From this earl by the Scotch earls of Athol and the Percies deſcended the barons Bourough, who lived here, of whom before in Surrey [n]. In this part of the county was antiently the city of Sidnaceſter, the ſee of the biſhops of this province, who were called biſhops of Lindisfare; but it is now ſo totally vaniſhed that the very ruins ſeem to have periſhed with the name. Nor muſt I forget to obſerve that in theſe parts at Mellwood flouriſhes the famous and knightly family of St. Paul, corruptly

* Eulogium.

† Fines 29 E. III.

[h] Gibſon ſays that Dugdale ſays this belongs to the other Oſgodby in this county. But Dugdale does not ſay this, Bar. I. 486. nor is there another Oſgodby in this county, but two more in the Eaſt and North ridings of Yorkſhire, and Oſgard*by* here.

[i] Deſcended from Greville, Oxenbridge, and Eckinham. Holland.

[k] So Drayton Polyolbion II. 112. ſong 25. See Pennant's Brit. Zool. II. 366, 8vo. II. 387, 388, 4to.

[l] Hiſt. VI. 210. [m] P. 293. [n] I. 171.

called Sampoll, which I always ſuppoſed deſcended from the antient Caſtilian family of the Counts of St. Paul in France, but the arms of Luxemburg which they bear convey a different inſinuation, viz. that they are of French extraction, ever ſince that Caſtilian family of St. Paul, about 200 years ago, was united by marriage to this of Luxemburg.

Above this the Trent, Idell, and Dun, ſport in ſo many ſeparate channels, to uſe the words of Frontinus[n], that they ſurround a river iſland called Axelholme, Saxon Eaxalholme, which is part of the county of Lincoln, ten miles in length from ſouth to weſt, and about half as broad. The lower part on the rivers is marſhy, and produces an odoriferous ſhrub called Gall: the middle part, which riſes gently, is rich and fruitful, and yields great quantities of flax, as alſo alabaſter, which not being of the hardeſt ſort, is fitter for white-waſhing and plaiſtering than any other purpoſe. The chief town was antiently called Axel, now Axey, whence by the addition of the Saxon word Holme, which they uſed for a river iſland, the name has doubtleſs been formed. But it hardly deſerves the name of a town, it is ſo thinly inhabited. It ſhews, however, the ſite of a caſtle, demoliſhed in the barons' wars, which belonged to the Mowbrays, then lords of great part of the iſland. A.D. 1173, according to an old Chronicler[o], "Roger de Mowbray, renouncing his allegiance to the old king[p], repaired a caſtle at Kinard ferry in the iſle of Axholm, which had been deſtroyed of old. A body of Lincolnſhire men croſſed over in boats, and laid ſiege to the caſtle, forced the conſtable and all his men to ſurrender, and razed the caſtle." Higher up is Botterwic, whoſe lord Edmund Sheffield Edward VI. created firſt of his family baron Sheffield of Botherwic. He loſt his life againſt the Norfolk rebels, leaving by Anne Vere daughter of the earl of Oxford, John the ſecond baron, father of Edmund, who is now a companion of the moſt noble order of the garter[q]. More to the north, on the other ſide Trent, is Burton Stather, of which I have not yet found any thing remarkable.

This county of Lincoln boaſts for its earls after Egga, who lived A. D. 710, and Morcar, both Saxons, and only officiary earls, William de Romara, a Norman, on whoſe death[r] (for neither his ſon, who died before his father, nor his grandſon, enjoyed this title), king Stephen appointed Gilbert de Gaunt[s]. On his death Simon de St. Liz. jun. ſon of earl Simon (to borrow the words of Robert de Monte a contemporary writer), "wanting land, was preſented by Henry II. with his only daughter and the honor[t]." Afterwards Lewis of France, who was invited over to England by the rebellious barons, girded the ſword of the earldom of Lincoln on another Gilbert[u] of the family of Gaunt: but Lewis being ſoon after driven out, his title to the earldom was acknowledged by none, and he himſelf voluntarily renounced it. Then Ralph, ſixth earl of Cheſter, obtained this honour of king Henry III.[x] who, a little before his death, gave by charter to his ſiſter Hawiſe, wife of Robert de Quincy, the earldom of Lincoln," as far as it belonged to him, that ſhe might in right thereof be ſtyled counteſs." Such are the words of the charter[y]. She conveyed it to John de Lacy[z], conſtable of Cheſter, and the heirs he might have by her daughter Margaret. He had iſſue Edmund, who, dying before his mother[a], left this honor to be enjoyed by his ſon Henry[b], who was the laſt earl of that family. For his ſon[c] being ſnatched away by an untimely death, and only an infant daughter Alice left, he betrothed her at nine years old to Thomas ſon of Edmund earl of Lancaſter, on condition "that if he died without heirs of his body, or if they died without heirs of their bodies, his caſtles, lordſhips, &c. ſhould remain to Edmund earl of Lancaſter and his heirs for ever*." Alice had no children by her huſband Thomas. But on the ſaid Thomas being beheaded, ſhe having by her unchaſte behaviour brought no ſmall reflection on her character, married without the king's[d] leave Eubulo Le Strange, with whom ſhe had conſorted, which the king reſenting, ſeized her eſtate. On her death[e] in an advanced age, without children, Henry earl of Lancaſter, grandſon of Edmund by his ſecond ſon, in right of the conveyance abovementioned, came into poſſeſſion of this large eſtate, which from that time was in the houſe of Lancaſter. The kings of England have, however, conferred the title of earl of Lincoln on others. Edward IV. on John de la Pole[f]: Henry VIII. on Henry Brandon[g], ſons of two dukes of Suffolk, who both died without iſſue: and queen Elizabeth on Edward baron Clinton[h], high admiral of England, whoſe ſon the right honourable Henry[i] now enjoys it. See Dukes of Suffolk.

2 H. II.

In this county are about 630 pariſhes.

* Lib. Monaſt. de Stanlow.

[n] Suis aquarum divergiis ludunt, p. 121. Edit. Rigaltii 1674.

[o] Mat. Paris, p. 129. See alſo Brompton, p. 1090.

[p] Henry II. ſo ſtyled with reſpect to his ſon the younger. G.

[q] Preſident of the council eſtabliſhed in the North. Holland. He was created earl of Mulgrave 1 Char. I. and dying 1646 was ſucceeded by his grandſon Edmund, and he 1658 by his ſon John (Dugd. Bar. II. 307.) who was created marquis of Normanby 1694, and duke of Buckingham 1702, and dying 1720, was ſucceeded by his only ſon Edmund. He died unmarried 1736, and the title became extinct.

[r] 1152. Dugd. Bar. I. 346.

[s] who married the daughter and heir of William de Romara, and died 1156, 2 Henry II. Ib. 400.

[t] Ib. 59. [u] Ib. 401. [x] 1 Henry III. died 1132. Dugd. Bar. I. 43, 44.

[y] "Ranulphus comes Ceſtriæ & Lincoln omnibus preſentibus et futuris preſentem cartam inſpecturis vel audituris ſalutem in Domino. Ad Univerſitatis veſtræ notitiam volo pervenire me dediſſe, conceſſiſſe, & hac preſenti carta mea confirmaſſe Dominæ Hawiſe de Quincy ſorori meæ uterinæ comitatum Lincoln. ſcilicet quantum ad me pertinet, ut inde Comitiſſa exiſtat, habend. & tenend. de Domino noſtro rege & hæredibus ſuis libere, quiete, perpetuo, pacifice, & integro jure hereditario cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis & cum omnibus libertatibus ad prædictum comitatum pertinentibus, & ut preſens ſcriptum perpetuitatis roborem obtineat illud ſigilli mei appoſitione roborare dignum duxi. His teſtibus, venerabilibus patribus W. Wint. & Alex. Coventr. & Lichf. epiſcopis, R. Mar. Com. Pembr. W. de Ferres, Comit. Derby, Steph. du Segrave Juſtic. Angl. Simon de Monteforr, Will. de Percy, Ph. de Albianaco. Henr. de Aldith. W. de Cantalupo & aliis."
Appendant thereto his ſeal, himſelf in a coat of mail armed on horſeback, his ſhield and the capariſons of his horſe charged with arms, viz. three wheatſheafs, circumſcribed Sigillum Ranulphi Comitis Ceſtrie & Lincolnie.
Counterſeal in an eſcutcheon, his arms as before, circumſcribed Secretum Ranulphi Co. Ceſtrie & Lincolnie.
From a tranſcript in Mr. Charles's collections, Cotton MS. Julius C. VII. p. 114.

[z] He died 1240. 24 Henry III. buried at Stanlaw abbey. Dug. Bar. I. 102. [a] He died 42 Henry III. buried at Stanlaw, ib. 103.

[b] He died 1312. 5 Edward II. in his houſe at Lincoln's-inn, which he built, and was buried in St. Paul's London, ib. 105

[c] He was drowned in a well at Denbigh caſtle. ib. 106.

[d] E. II. Yet both Eubulo L'Eſtrange and Hugh Frere, her third huſband, are in ſome records named earl of Lincoln. Holland.

[e] 22 Edward III. ib. 106. [f] Cart. 7 Edw. IV. 4. 4. He was ſlain at the battle of Stoke 1487. Dugd. Bar. II. 190.

[g] He died before 1545, ib 300. [h] 14 a. r. He died 1584, buried in St. George's chapel at Windſor. Dugd. Bar. I. 533. [i] He died 1616.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Lincoln, called in Domeſday Lincoleſhire, is 76 miles long and 46 broad and above 300 in circumference, contains about 2,042,880 acres, 40,590 houſes, one city, 35 market and five borough towns and 30 hundreds.

The principal landholders in this county at the making of the Conqueror's ſurvey were the king, the archbiſhop of York, the biſhops of Durham, Bayeux, Saliſbury, Coutance, and Lincoln; abbots of Peterborough, Weſtminſter, Ramſay, and Croyland; earls Alan and Hugh: Ivo Tailbois, William de Warren, Roger de Poitou, Roger de Buſli, Roger and Berenger de Todeni, Ilbert de Laci, Henry de Ferrars, William de Perci, Gilbert Tiſon, Gilbert de Gand, Hugh Fitz-Baldric, Colſvan, Alured de Lincoln, Goſcelin Fitz-Lambert, Eudo Fitz-Sperewic, Drogo de Brurere, Walter de Aincurt, Norman le Cras, Ernegis de Burun, Ralph Paganel, Ralph Mortimer, Robert de Veci, Robert Diſpenſer, Wido de Rebudcurt, Reyner de Brimou, Oſbern de Arcis, Oger Brito, Ralph de St. Walery, Durand Malet, William Blund, counteſs Judith, Wido de Credun, Robert Malet, Robert de Stadford, Peter de Valonges, Balduin Flandrenſis, William Tailbois, &c. &c.

Biſhop Gibſon derives the name of Holland from the Saxon heah, deep[a], which in the northern county is pronounced how. South and north heath (f. heah) are ſtill diſtricts of this tract. It begins at the double toll-gate between Boſton and Spalding a little north of the Black river, on whoſe banks are plantations and a manufacture of madder, and extends ſouth to the Welland and Elloe. It has been chiefly gained from the ſea, and by time and induſtry its ſoil has been changed from a deep fenn, frequently overflowed, to good graſs ground. Dr. Stukeley was of opinion that it was firſt imbanked by the Romans who ſecured it from the land floods by Cardike[b]; and they yet ſhew what they call the Roman banks, now ſome way within land, the ſea leaving in theſe parts what it waſhes from the Holderneſs coaſt in Yorkſhire.

Holland. Holland gave title of earl 1624 to Henry Rich lord Kenſington 22 James I. who was beheaded 1648, and ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, who by the death of his couſin german Charles Rich 1673 had the additional title of earl of Warwick, and left both titles 1675 to his ſon Edward, who died 1701, and was buried in Kenſington church; his widow married Mr. Addiſon. From this earl they deſcended to his ſon Edward-Henry, who died 1721, and was buried at Kenſington, and ſucceeded by Edward ſon of Cope Rich 4th ſon of Henry firſt earl, who was great grandfather to the 4th earl. With him the title expired 1759, but was revived as a barony 1762 in the perſon of Georgina Carolina, ſiſter of the preſent duke of Richmond, who was created baroneſs Holland in her own right, and in the year following her huſband Henry Fox was created lord Holland, baron of Foxley, theſe titles being choſen by this family from their poſſeſſing the ancient manſion of the Riches earls of Holland near Kenſington. The titles paſſed to their ſon Stephen 1774, and the ſame year to his ſon Henry Richard, preſent and 3d baron.

In the year 1747 ſome locuſts were found dead on the coaſt near Croſs keys waſh[c].

The Long Waſh between Lynne and Boſton was formerly travelled, and here king John loſt his bag- Long gage, the memory of which is preſerved by the corner of a bank between Croſs keys Waſh and Lynne, called King's Corner[d].

On the edge of Norfolk is Tydd St. Mary's, where Tydd Mary Nicholas Breakſpear afterwards Pope Adrian IV. was rector. Sutton St. James's chapel is built of a Sutton James large ſort of brick not Roman, nor above the common dimenſions. The only remains of it are the chancel wherein divine ſervice is now performed, and at the diſtance of about 21 yards from it to the weſt is a ſteeple built as the chapel of brick and ſtone. The foundations of the ſouth porch and of the ſouth and north walls of the nave remain level with the ground, and from them it appears to have been about 21 yards in length, and in width 14. Near it in a quadrivium is Ivy croſs, a curious ſtone[e]. At Lutton, Lutton alias Sutton St. Nicholas, was born 1606 Dr. Richard Buſby maſter of Weſtminſter ſchool, who beautified the church, and gave a pulpit, but did not, as Dr. Stukeley ſays, build a ſchool here. Sutton St. Sutton Mary's has a beautiful church, with an antient ſtone Mary ſteeple and a lofty ſpire covered with lead, and a freeſchool over the porch.

Gedney church is the lighteſt and moſt airy, and Gedney perhaps the loftieſt of any in this part of the county. It has in the nave, chancel, porch, and tower, 53 glazed windows. In thoſe of the north ailes are much remains of fine painted glaſs. Againſt the ſouth window of the nave is a monument with effigies and arms for Adlard Welby, eſq; of Gedney, who died 1576, and Caſſandra his wife, daughter of William Apryce of Waſhingleys in Lutton pariſh, in the county of Huntingdon, who died 1590. This monument was erected 1605 by ſir William Welbie, knight of the bath, and Robert Carr of Aſwerbye, who married the ſaid Caſſandra. The ſouth door has a curious copper lock with an antient inſcription, and over the door is cut in thick oak in very large Saxon letters gilt, Pax Chriſti ſit huic domui & omnibus inhabitantibus in ea: hic requies noſtra; and under four blank ſhields in capitals, In hope. In the chancel is a ſtone to the memory of Mr. Rich vicar here. A manor houſe, called the Abbot's hall, ſtands on the north ſide of the church, the road to which from Croyland is yet ſhewn by the inhabitants.

It has frequently been obſerved, as a very ſingular circumſtance, that no other part of the county to the ſame extent is furniſhed with ſuch large and handſome pariſh churches as are to be ſeen in this low part of it.

At Gedney hill, a chapelry in Gedney pariſh, ſeveral coins of Antoninus, &c. have been found. In the ſame hamlet, about two miles nōrth of Southea bank, is a paſture called the High doles, a ſquare, double moated, where antient foundations have been dug up, and ſome Roman coins. One acre here,

[a] Þeah is deep in the ſame ſenſe with altus in altiſſima flumina Curtius, VII. 4.
[b] Stukeley Itin. I. 11. In his Hiſt. of Carauſius II. 133. 136, 137, 138, he ſpells it Carſdike. Moreton Hiſt. of Northamptonſhire, p. 513, 514, Caer, or Cardike. Antiquaries have ſuggeſted the poſſibility of its having been called originally from Carauſius. Mr. King (Archæol. VI. 265) is the firſt who ventures to ſay that any place is called Carauſius' ditch.
[c] Spald. ſoc. min. [d] Stukeley I. It. 17. [e] See the plate of croſſes.

parcel of the abbey demeſne, formerly belonged to the almoner of Croyland. Another like ſquare ſo moated is in the pariſh of Sutton St. Edmund's, about the ſame diſtance from the ſaid bank, where like matters have been diſcovered. Here are ſome lands called Monks Dole, and 274 acres, being ſix ſcore to the hundred, as an old terrier expreſſes it, now called Prior's field, which antiently belonged to the priory of Spalding. Aſwic grange near Whaplode Drove chapel is a high piece of ground, ſquare and moated about, in and near which ſeveral Roman coins and urns have been dug up. This is near Catſcove, now Catch colt corner, and theſe have been ſuppoſed caſtella to ſecure the poſſeſſion of this country, lying as it were in a line on the moſt ſoutherly part of Elloe. At Anytoft in Holbech pariſh in a like moated ſquare were dug up foundations, urns, and coins. Mr. Johnſon had a ſpear head which he calls circulus quo pilo ſive ligno haſtæ affigebatur, found there with ſeveral Roman coins. See Pl. III. fig. 4. Many Roman coins at Giggleſhurn. In Whaplode were found clay pipes let into one another, and in the ſea dike bank between Flete and Gedney, a ſword which ſeemed Roman [f].

In proof of the richneſs of the land hereabouts, I ſaw 1762 an ox of eight years old who had been fatted till he weighed 140 ſtone at 16lb. to the ſtone. His owner had refuſed 70*l.* for him, and intended making a ſhew of him. Mr. Dymoke, the champion, 1731, killed a cow 33 inches high, weight 17 ſtone 8lb. and had a ſteer of his own breeding 73 inches high [g].

Flete gave name to an antient family. The ſteeple ſtands at a diſtance from the church [h]. Here near Ravenſclow, was found a large urn with letters round it, covered with an oak board, full of Roman coins of the lower empire, chiefly Gallienus, and the 30 tyrants [i].

"Oldbeche in Holand, otherwiſe called Oldbek, a "market town [k]."

Holbech has a large church and lofty ſteeple, and in it a monument of the Littlebury family. Here was an hoſpital founded by John de Kirkton 1351 [l], a freeſchool by George Tanner 1669. The croſs probably built by Thomas de Multon lord Egremont who obtained a market and fair here of Henry III. was taken down 1683 [m]. Here was born Henry de Randes alias Holbeche, one of the compilers of the Liturgy, bp. of Rocheſter and Lincoln, who died 1551 [n].

Whaplode has an antient church, built by the abbot of Croyland, to which abbey the vicarage was appropriated and endowed 1268 [o]. Here is a ſumptuous freeſtone monument for ſir Anthony and Elizabeth Irby, with their own and their children's effigies and arms, ſupported by ten compoſite columns.

The fens are far leſs extenſive than they were, many being drained, and will ſoon become the beſt land in the country. But ſtill much remains to be done. The fens near Revesby abbey, eight miles beyond Horncaſtle are of vaſt extent; but ſerve for little other purpoſe than the rearing great numbers of geeſe, which are the wealth of the fenmen. During the breeding ſeaſon theſe birds are lodged in the ſame houſes with the inhabitants, and even in their very bed chambers; in every apartment are three rows of coarſe wicker pens placed one above another, each bird has its ſeparate lodge divided from the other, which it keeps poſſeſſion of during the time of ſitting. A Gozzard, or Gooſe herd, attends the flock, and twice a day drives the whole to water; then brings them back to their habitation, helping thoſe that live in the upper ſtories to their neſts without ever miſplacing a ſingle bird. The geeſe are plucked five times in the year: the firſt plucking is at Ladyday for feathers and quills; the ſame is renewed for feathers only four times between that and Michaelmas. Goſlins of eight weeks old are not ſpared, for they are plucked to increaſe their ſucceeding feathers. If the ſeaſon proves cold, numbers of geeſe die by this barbarous cuſtom, which has not eſcaped Pliny's notice [p]. In N. Holland they pull their geeſe thrice a year, and I have ſeen them on Wildmore fen, between Tatterſall and Boſton, raw with the plucking, and their legs and wings frequently disjointed by rough hands, ſo that they fall a prey to crows.

Croyland.

Croyland, reduced almoſt to a village, ſituate on the ſouthern extremity of Lincolnſhire, and ſurrounded on every ſide by fens, is acceſſible only by cauſeways of gravel or clay caſt up between the fens, and in ſome parts ſupported by the roots of willows planted at their ſides, and by droves as they are called or gangways, made of the common ſoil of the country. In theſe fens ſubterraneous oaks are frequently found. The town is miſerably decayed, and has nothing that deſerves the name of an inn; and there was about 17 years ago an unſucceſsful attempt made to eſtabliſh here a market and a fair for cattle. The abbey was founded by king Ethelbald A. D. 716 for black monks to the honour of his chaplain Guthlac. After the deſtruction of it by the Danes 870, it was refounded by king Edred 948, at the perſuaſion of his chancellor Turketyl, who was abbot here. It was valued at the diſſolution at £.1083. per ann. [q] The eaſt part of the church with the tranſepts was then pulled down. It was uſed as a church till the cloſe of the laſt century; after which the north aile was fitted up for the uſe of the pariſh, with a heavy ſhort tower of modern date. The nave was intire 1661, and its roof and ſouth aile fell within this century; and the beautiful weſt front loaded with ſtatues and the legend of St. Guthlac over the door ſtands neglected and running faſt to ruin. Only the weſternmoſt lofty noble zigzag arch of the tower remains, which was cloſed up when the reſt with the choir part was pulled down. At the eaſt end have been taken up the maſſive oak planks on which th foundation was laid. On the ſouth ſide is an area called the abbey yard, which was defended during the civil wars by three baſtions caſt up by the townſpeople and ſtill remaining. Ingulphus gives a very particular and affecting account of the fire that deſtroyed this abbey 1091, while he was abbot, by the careleſsneſs of the plumbers [r]; at which time they loſt a library of above 700 books, and a curious ſphere or orrery [s]. It was rebuilt 1112 by liberal contributions under the adminiſtration of Ingulphus' ſucceſſor Joffrid [t]: but burnt and [f] Stuk. It. I. 11—12.

[g] Spalding ſociety's minutes.
[h] Stuk. Ib. 17, 18.
[i] G. Stuk. I. 11.
[k] Lel. VI. 60.
[l] Tan. 285.
[m] Stuk. 19, 20, 21.
[n] Ib. Godwin.
[o] Rot. de inſtitutionibus Graveſend epi. Linc. Stuk. 21, 22.
[p] X. 22. Stuk. I. 30. Pennant, Tour in Scotland, 1769. p. 9. Fuller could not find when feather-beds were firſt uſed in England. Worth. Linc. 145.
[q] Tan. 249.
[r] Ingulph. 96.
[s] Ib. 98.
[t] P. Bleſenſis Cont. p. 113. 118.

rebuilt

rebuilt again under abbot Edward between 1142 and 1170. The weſt front and turrets, and great part of the nave, which had been blown down, were rebuilt by abbot Merſke between 1253 and 1281, and the eaſt end was begun anew by his ſucceſſor Richard Croyland, native of the town. The cloiſters, together with the north and ſouth croſs ailes of the choir, and the weſt part of the nave with its ailes, appear to have been rebuilt in the time of abbots Overton and Upton by one William de Croyland, maſter of the works. The north aile, which had been erected by abbot Bardeney in the reign of Henry III. was repaired and new vaulted in the reign of Henry VI. by abbot Littlington, whoſe rebus is inſerted in the keyſtones together with the name of Aſhby one of his predeceſſors. Here was buried Waltheof the great earl of Huntingdon and Northumberland, beheaded by the Conqueror (whoſe niece he married), and after his execution canonized. The ſite with a farm or two belongs now to the widow of the late Mr. Searancke of Hatfield, under the will of her aunt, widow of the late Beverley Butler, eſq. but 6500 acres once belonging to the abbey were granted by Charles II. to ſir Thomas Orby, whoſe ſon aſſigned them to Robert Hunter, eſq: his ſon-in-law, whoſe ſon the late Thomas Orby Hunter, eſq; purchaſed the whole of the crown 1752, and left it to his eldeſt ſon. The profits of the rectory ariſe only from 24 acres of glebe, Eaſter offerings, mortuaries, and ſurplice fees, no tithes being paid to the incumbent. Twenty acres of land here were parcel of the abbot's demeſne, and bounded on the eaſt by the lands of the almoner of Croyland.

A little to the eaſt was Anchor church houſe, q. d. Anchorage houſe, where Guthlac lived and was buried: an old decayed building on the ſite with two rooms below and two above, was pulled down about 1720. There remains at preſent only the ſite, a ſmall hillock. In the fields to the north of this were dug up a number of ſculls, laid together as if after ſome battle. A piece of land, formerly moated, in Portſand near Doweſdale, ſtill bears the name of Place yard. In the centre of the town is the famous triangular bridge, rarely rode over, at the junction of the Nen and Welland, and by ſome authors erroneouſly ſaid to ſtand in three counties. At the ſouth-weſt wing ſits a figure of king Ethelbald holding a globe. This bridge is mentioned in Edred's charter 948 [u].

St. Guthlac's croſs is ſtill remaining between Spalding and Croyland near Brother houſe with the inſcription here given, from a more correct copy than that in our plate of croſſes fig. 1.

Page 230

[u] Ingulph. 42. Stuk. I. 32.

Governor

Fig. 7. p. 242.

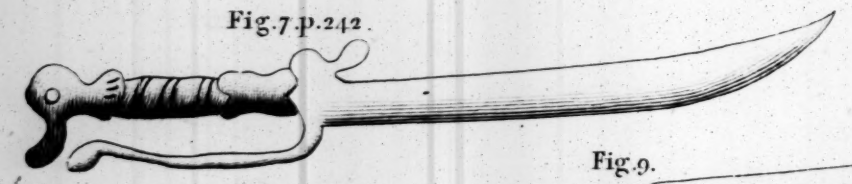

Fig. 8.

Fig. 9.

Fig. 10.

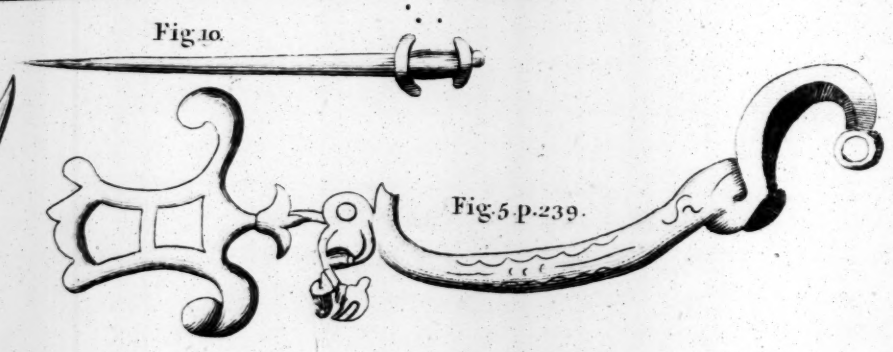

Fig. 3. p. 200.

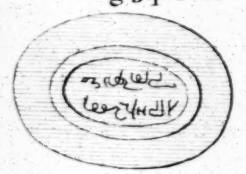

Fig. 11.

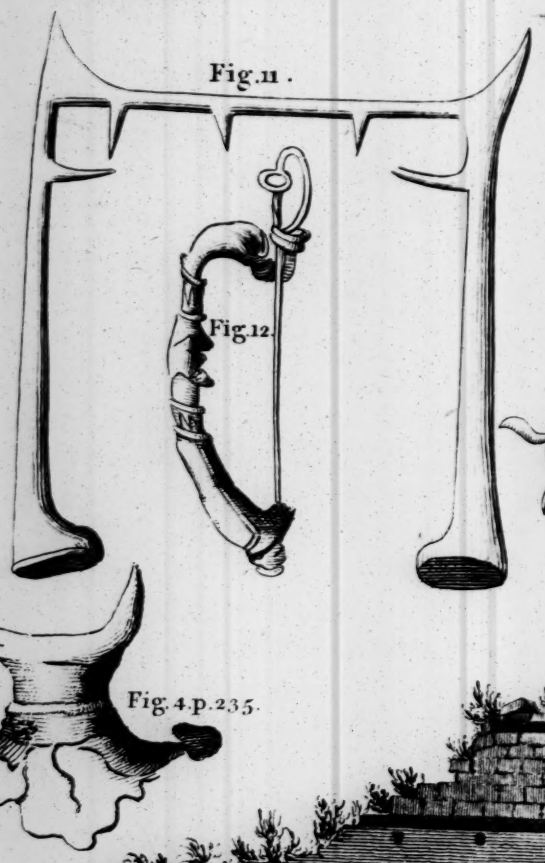

Fig. 12.

Fig. 4. p. 235.

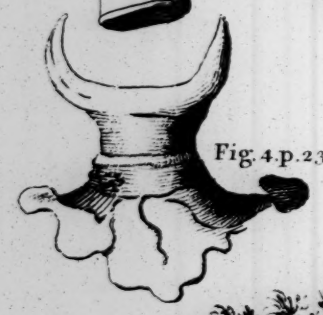

Fig. 5. p. 239.

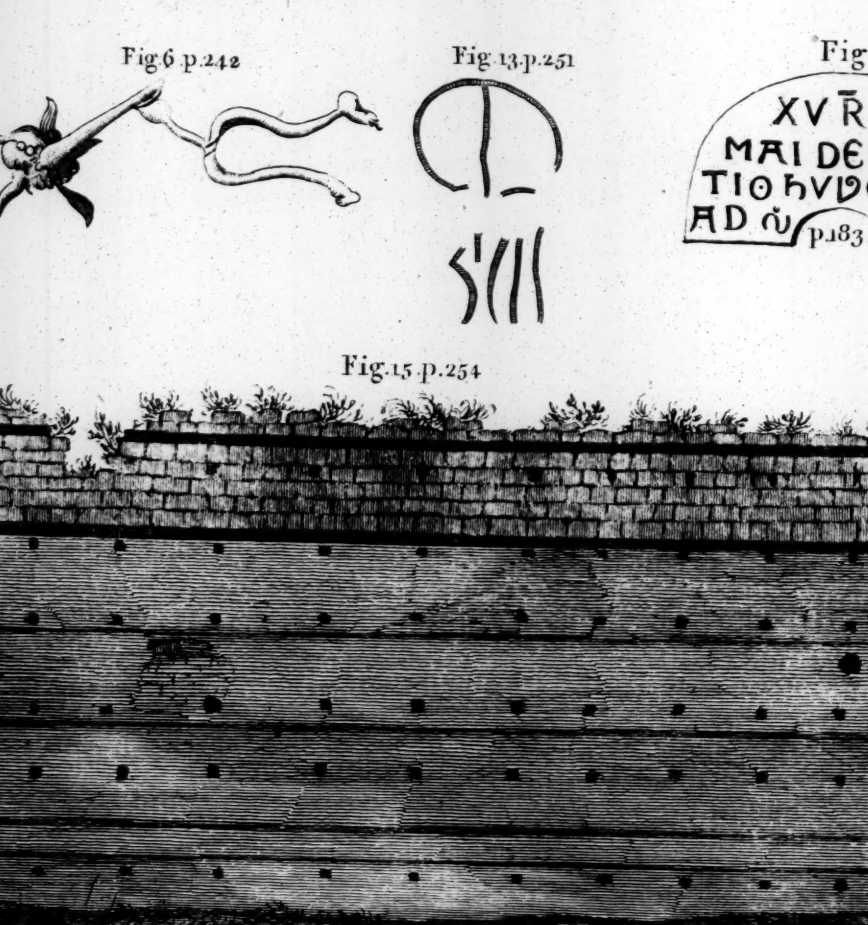

Fig. 6. p. 242

Fig. 13. p. 251.

Fig. 2.

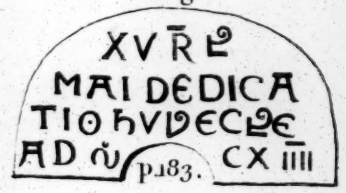

Fig. 15. p. 254.

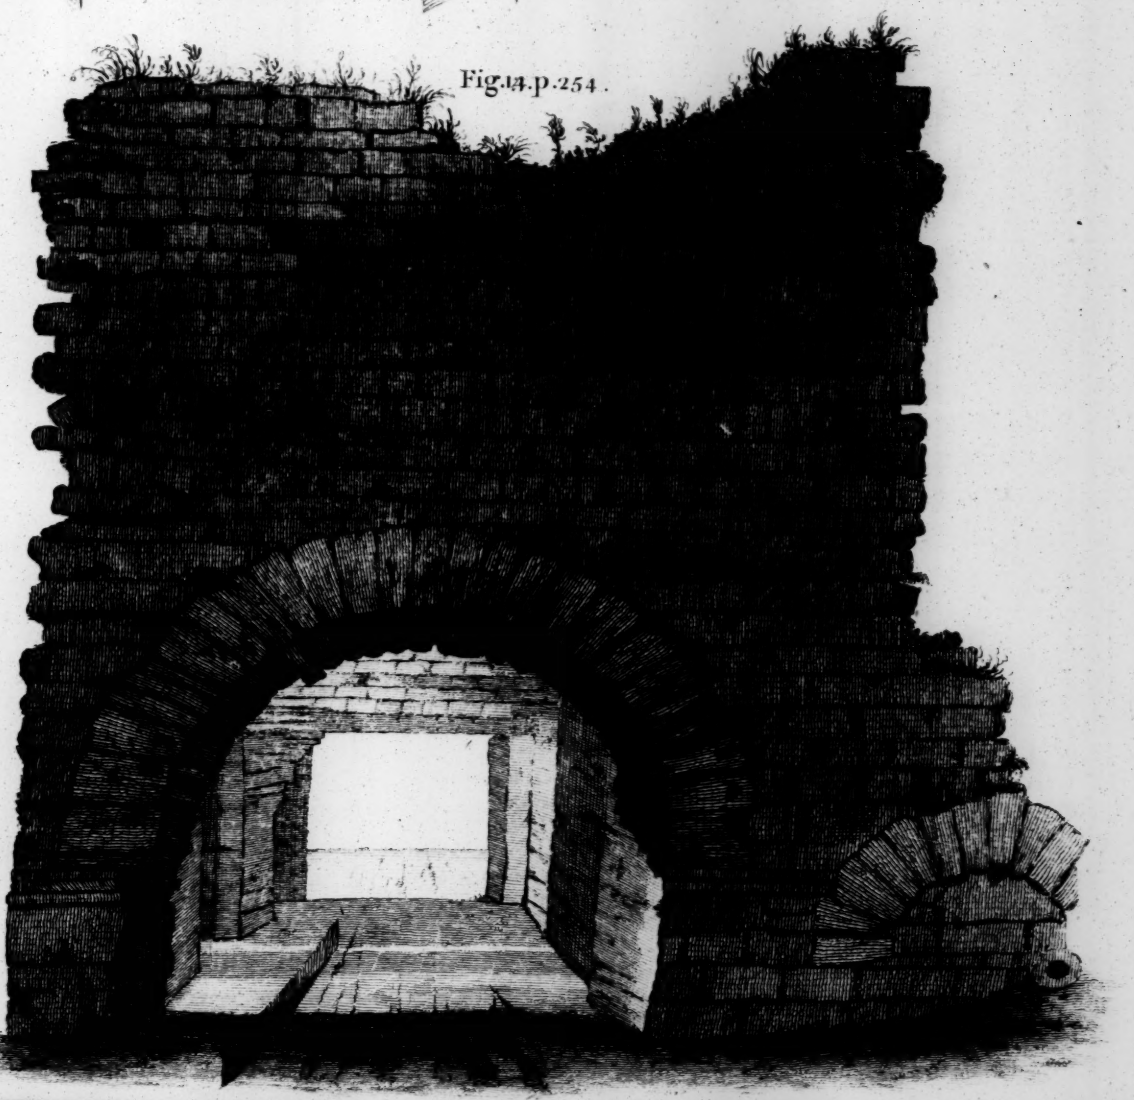
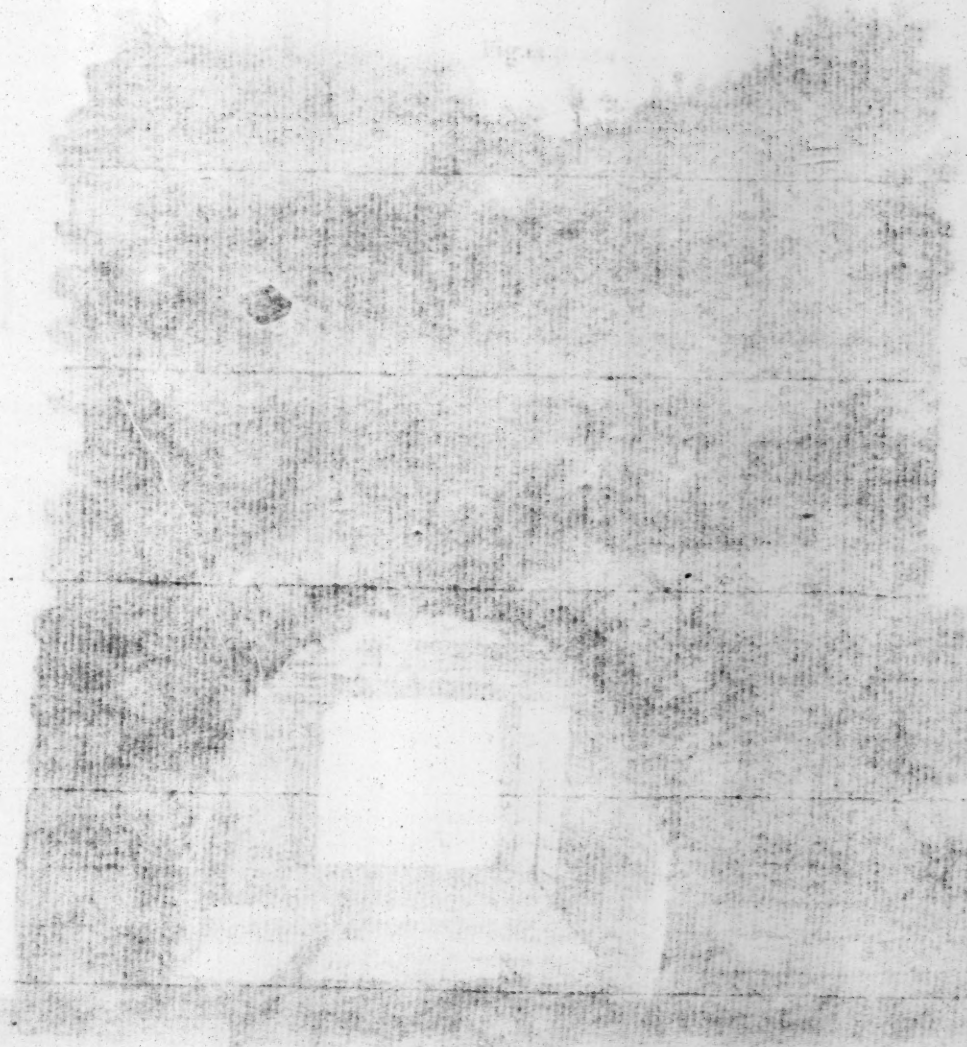
Fig. 12. p. 252.

Fig. 1. p. 157.

Fig. 14. p. 254.





Co
of one houſe bounc to me with t be do no roo
Thurg
obſerv raining from 1
not equ
ſouth, cut in half at
It ſtand
by Bro out of up, he under t
Choſt
Croylan
Spalding
Choſt hou
maining
Anot
from Cr about fo ground c land, dit
Gideon.
Anoth
the fouth piece of ea, cont fallen do rangular is ſides 2
8 inches
whole len baſe was ſ
and the pa
and in leng its top of 4 feet ſeve
10 inches was former the depth was origina the baſe to height. N
the baſe or
A fourth which only rangular at in length.
hollowed by corners. T foot 2 inche
hole 3 inche
ſouth ſide o charged with ſhield has t
and 4th on
The ſhaft no octagonal and the diameter

[1] Archæol. II
[2] Ingulph. 48
VOL. II.

Governor Pownal[x] ſuppoſes AIO to be the name of one of the five brethren who were left in this houſe when Turketyl refounded it, and ſettled its boundaries by this and another ſuch croſs. But not to mention that Aio taken as a verb better agrees with the words following which it governs, it cannot be doubted that the upper part of the ſtone had no room for the other names, Clarenbald, Swarting, Thurgar and Brun[y]; of whom it ſhould further be obſerved that Brun and Aio had no concern in aſcertaining the limits. The ſtone is pyramidal, tapering from 1 foot 4 inches at the baſe to 1 foot 1 inch, but not equilateral; the narroweſt ſides are the north and ſouth, the firſt 9 inches and an half at the top, and cut in three channels; the other 9 inches and an half at the baſe, and 8 inches and an half at the top. It ſtands on a baſe of brick work under the bank by Brotherhouſe turnpike on the Spalding road almoſt out of ſight. If Aio had any concern in ſetting it up, he may have conveyed his name to poſterity under the double meaning of the ſynonymous verb.

Cloot bar, diſtant one mile from the croſs towards Croyland, was taken down when the bank from Spalding to Peakirk was made a turnpike road. Cloot houſe, to which the bar belonged, is ſtill remaining.

Another croſs at the end of the fen in the road from Croyland by Thorney to Peterborough, being about four or five feet high, lies flat on a piece of ground of about a quarter of an acre, called Noman's land, ditched round, and belonging to ſir Sampſon Gideon.

Another ſtone called alſo St. Guthlac's croſs, forms the ſouth boundary of this pariſh, ſtanding on a piece of land called St. Guthlac's creaſt near Southea, containing about four acres. The ſhaft is fallen down and lies near its baſe which was quadrangular and of one ſtone one foot 10 inches high: its ſides 2 feet 9 inches ſquare, its ſocket in the centre 8 inches in depth and 1 foot 2 inches ſquare; the whole length of the ſhaft was 4 feet 7 inches; its baſe was ſquare and about 1 foot 3 inches in length, and the part above this baſe octagonal and tapering, and in length 3 feet 4 inches, having a diameter at its top of 10 inches and an half. Now by adding 4 feet ſeven, the whole length of the ſhaft, to 1 foot 10 inches the height of the baſe, in which the ſhaft was formerly inſerted, and then deducting 8 inches, the depth of the ſocket, it will appear that this croſs was originally in its upright ſtate from the bottom of the baſe to the top of the ſhaft 5 feet 9 inches in height. Not the leaſt inſcription appeared on either the baſe or ſhaft.

A fourth boundary ſtone was the croſs at Finſet, of which only the baſe remains, 2 feet in height, quadrangular at bottom, each ſide being 2 feet 4 inches in length. Above this bottom the four ſides were hollowed by a projection of about 5 inches of the corners. The top, excluſive of the corners, was 1 foot 2 inches ſquare, on which was at the centre a hole 3 inches ſquare and 5 inches deep. On the ſouth ſide of this baſe is carved in relief a ſhield charged with a croſs. On the weſt ſide a ſimilar ſhield has three knives ſomewhat defaced. A 3d and 4th on the north and eaſt had three whips. The ſhaft now fallen and lying on the ground was octagonal and tapering, and 4 feet 1 inch in length, the diameter of its baſe 1 foot 10 inches, and of its top 1 foot 6 inches. A hole in the centre of its top and bottom about 3 inches ſquare, wherein it may be ſuppoſed had been irons projecting and correſponding to the hole in the baſe already deſcribed, and the loſt top of the preſent ſhaft or theſe holes had received irons heretofore fixed in the ſaid parts. There are four holes at the corners of the top of the baſe and of the bottom of the ſhaft, wherein cramps had been undoubtedly fixed to tie and faſten the ſhaft on the baſe, as lead was ſtill remaining in ſome of them. There are likewiſe eight ſmaller holes on the top of the ſhaft for cramps, which without doubt formerly bound another ſtone, now loſt, to the top of the ſhaft. There is no inſcription remaining on any part of the ſtones. The part of the ſhaft now remaining was found by labourers many years ago in Pepper lake, now a mill-dam, when the ſame was cleanſed and improved.

Spalding.

Spalding exiſted before Croyland; for in Ethelbald's foundation charter of Croyland, part of the bounds of that monaſtery are ſaid to extend "uſque ad ædificia Spaldeling[z]." It is a conſiderable and flouriſhing market town, conſiſting of one principal ſtreet, with a good inn, the White hart, ſo named in the time of Richard II. It is ſurrounded by rivers and fens, and divided into two parts by the Welland, which is navigable hither, and the tide comes up to the town. The manor belongs to ſir Sampſon Gideon, bart. Here is another manor called Spalding cum Croyland. Algar, eldeſt ſon of Leofric and Godiva, encouraged Thorold de Bukenhale (from whom deſcended a numerous family that is and ever was an honour, ornament, and benefactors to this county) to compaſſionate the vaſt loſſes Croyland had ſuſtained by the Danes; and he accordingly at the inſtance of Wulfget, and attended by him and ſix moſt learned diſcreet monks, on Eaſter day 1051 founded here a cell for the ſaid ſix monks, one to be prior, and endowed it with a manor called in Domeſday Berewita, now Spalding Crowland, giving the ſite to God and St. Guthlac in frank almoigne, and making it a cell to Croyland; but the monks were ſoon obliged to quit it by the ill treatment of Ivo Talbois, earl of Angiers, who afterwards gave the church and manor to the Benedictine abbey of Angiers, to which it was an alien priory It was made denizon, and at laſt an abbey by Edward IV. and valued at £. 767. per annum.[a] All that now remains are ſome cottages with gothic windows, and part of the church and gateway. Mr. Johnſon had a diſcharge under the hand and ſeal of Thomas Kidbie, bailiff of the townſhip of Spalding, for the ſum of £. 4. 16*s*. 8*d*.½ for the charges of buying the abbey church of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, dated 34 Henry VIII. 1543. Edward VI. granted the ſite of the priory, with another in Suffolk, to ſir John Cheke, a. r. 3 Jan. 3.

The churches of Holy croſs and St. Mary Stokkys within the monaſtery being decayed 1284, and the conventual church though ſpacious crouded, the prior pulled down the latter, and built the preſent, but worſe, and requiring more frequent repairs, particularly the north ſide and the beautiful porch then added. St. Mary Stokkys was probably a wooden church. The church of Holy croſs ſtood in the market-place, and the ſtaircaſe tower of its weſt front probably remains in a paſſage leading to the abbey on the ſouth ſide of the market place. Biſhop Dalderby granted 20 days indulgence to thoſe who [x] Archæol. III. 99.

[z] Ingulph. 485.
[a] Tan. 251.
[y] See Mr. Pegge ib. V. 101—105.

out of their goods beſtowed on them by God relieved the lepers of St. Nicholas Spalding 1313. In 1403 a diſpute between the town and convent, whom the former diſturbed by ringing their bells, was determined by the biſhop of Lincoln.

The priors of Spalding were made perpetual t. Henry III. Littleport rebuilt the conventual church. Hatfield fortified the abbey. The top of a ſumptuous monument was dug out of a cellar at Blew hall by High bridge when repairing. Here were buried Ivo Tailbois 1104, and his wife Lucy 1141, and 26 priors, beſides benefactors of the families of Multon, Ayſcough, Gayton, Lambart, Pinchbeck, Aylwyn, Roſs, Ogle, Lemoyne, Thurgar, Pecbrig, Kedby, Holland, Fulwy, &c. In the ruins of the priory was found an ivory or horn carving of a monk looking out from under a monument, ſuppoſed a deſign for the monument of prior Littleport: now in the poſſeſſion of col. Johnſon. No relique of any ſaint was kept in this houſe.

Chaucer and his brother-in-law John of Gaunt were frequently at Spalding, and took a corrody on a viſit to the prior. Probably Chaucer alludes to it in his loſt ſatyre beginning

In Lincolnſhire faſt by a ſpacious fenn
Stands a religious houſe, who doth it ken.

From the velom regiſter of the manor of Spalding by ſir Laurence Myntling, librarian and illuminator of the abbey, it appears, that eighty felons were hanged from 41 Henry III. to 16 Henry VII. on the prior's gallows. Baillivus de Spalding ducebat felonem de monaſterio uſque ad furcas pro executione facienda: baillivus de Weſton portabat ſcalam uſque furcas pro executione facienda: baillivus de Pyncebecke inveniet cordam ad ſuſpendendum felonem: baillivus de Multon faciebat executionem in ſuſpencione felonis. The prior's oven, an old ſtrong vaulted building at the corner of the beaſt market by the Gore, was the priſon, and over it an arched chamber where refractory monks were kept, and ſuch as had benefit of clergy allowed at the prior's claim; and over that a lofty tower with a bell knelled at executions and on ſolemn occaſions. It was built or improved 1220 by prior Symon, and is the turris in Hollar's plan in the Monaſticon. It is of brick and ſtone, very ſtrong, the arch concentring and ribbed with Bernak rag, as alſo the door caſe and foundation. But now only the lower vault remains, converted into a cooper's workſhop, and a ſquare room lately built over it of brick. This place with moſt of the ſite of the abbey became the property of ſir Anthony Oldfield, bart. and his three daughters and coheireſſes, of whom Margaret the elder brought it in marriage to Beaupré Bell, eſq. The Oldfield manſion houſe here is converted into a workhouſe.

The ſtone coggs or froſtings of Spalding ſpire are ſo decayed by weather as to be eaſily broken off. The carved oak cornice of the ſcreen between the church and chancel has in the centre the Virgin's head on a ſhield nebulè (the arms of the Mercer's company) and woolbags, the common cognizance of all merchants of the ſtaple.

Spalding pariſh was antiently divided into twelve vyntyns, which Maurice Johnſon deſcribed. Two fairs were granted 1714 on September 14 and December 6. A theatre was built in Crackpole ſtreet 1753.

The liberties of Spalding were confirmed for fines paid to John and Henry III. by John of Spain and Ralph Maunſel, priors. The commons contain ſeveral thouſand acres, and belong to antient commonable meſſuages or tenements for all manner of cattle, aſſes, ſwine, goats, and geeſe ſans number. They are Spalding, Pinchbeck, and Deeping fens lying undivided. All the towns whoſe lands lie next adjoining are intitled to this right, and ſome more diſtant, comprehended in this old diſtich:

Uffington, Tallyngton, Barham, and Stow;
One houſe in Gretford, and ne'er an ene moe.

but they can only put on their own reſpectively, though ſtrays are not liable to be pounded or taken in drift by the fen reeves to prevent ſuits. The ſoil and game belong to the lords, though the tenants have right to the brorage[b], fodder, fiſhings, reed-gatherings, fowltakings, and other fen profits. The four fen reeves, two for Spalding and two for Pinchbeck, are choſen by the homage, and approved and ſworn by the ſteward, according to antient agreements between the lord and tenants made in the time of Robert Holland prior of Spalding and lord of the manor 1422-3.

The perambulation of Spalding boundaries to the croſſes was made by the miniſter, &c. The boys ſung part of a pſalm at each, viz. the croſs in the market place, St. Guthlac's croſs at Brotherhouſe, St. Nicholas' ſtone, the Spalding boundary called Crux in palude, now in the waſh overagainſt Whitehouſe, a triangular tapering fruſtum, whereon appeared very plain ſſ Spalding brand mark S. and N. conjoined for Spalding or St. Nicholas; Croſs in the flaggs, crux Sancti Guthlaci in ſegete prope Oggott, an octangular large baſis near Oggott alias Wodelode graynes between Croyland and Spalding lying eaſt and Keſteven weſt, in a watry place full of flags in the dryeſt ſeaſon: the inſcription in Roman capitals. "Hitherto the bounds of Croyland," and part of an octangular ſtone column fixed in the baſis; St. Nicholas' croſs at Eaſtcoat in Pinchbek overagainſt Tongue end; the boundary between Spalding manor in Elloe, Holland, and the Boſton manor in Neſſe, Keſteven, a quadrangular baſe, with one other ſtone of a ſtep which has been thereon: many years ago a cottage was erected over this, and the chimney placed on the very baſis: the reſt of the ſteps, and the ſhaft of the croſs, which was as ſeemed by the ſocket ſquare. This was gone 1742.

An urn was found at Spalding near the old bank of the river Lenda at its mouth by the ſea 1732[c]. Another like it of red coarſe earth, 12 inches round, had been found before under the root of an aſh tree. The upper part of a large coarſe earthen jug, with five ears or handles and a beak perforated, was dug up in the foundations of Mr. Everard's houſe in Herring and Crackpoll lane. Roman ciſterns ſuppoſed to be found at Spalding[d], and coins in the Welland here 1745. On an oak frieze over the window of Edward Brightman's houſe, called Old or Fair Fullney, or the Red houſe, formerly the abbey vachery, were carved the inſtruments of the paſſion, with ſhields held by angels.

In ſinking a well at the town hall and by the fiſh ſtone at four feet depth was taken up a ſtone coffin, in which was a corpſe looking freſh; and [b] i. e. browſing.

[c] A. S. min.
[d] Phil. Tranſ. N° 279. p. 1156. Stuk. Ib. p. 12.

another

another corpſe covered with a plank[e]. Three arches and other ruins of St. Nicholas' church in foro appeared after the great fire.

Sir Nicholas Aldwyn, knt. lord mayor of London 14 Henry VII. 1409, ſon of ſir Richard Aldwyn, merchant of the ſtaple, who built Ayſcoughfee hall, the ſeat of the Johnſon family, was of this county[f]. A Spalding token of Robert Riſhton bore a hart couchant: rev. of Spalding 1666, a lion rampant. He had been a ſoldier in Oliver Cromwell's war, and turned inkeeper, and kept the greateſt inn in the town known ſo long as Richard II. by the ſign of the White Hart, now rebuilt, having been burnt down with almoſt all that ſide of the market place about thirty years ago.

Out of the Welland was taken an image of latten of an armed man extending his arms to hold a leaden ſocket for a candle on a braſs pedeſtal and globe. In a triangular pit in St. Thomas's lane was dug up the ſpur. Pl. III. fig. 5.

The priors had a chapel next their own lodge within the priory.

Wyckham hall and chapel near Spalding were built by prior Hatfield about 1311, an exact parallelogram of beſt aſhler ſtone, 60 feet by 20, roof oak, leaded, three large oxeye windows on a ſide, and one larger at each end: the font octagon, the door arch ſupported by buſts of Edward I. and queen Margaret. Our kings then, and not long after, wore open crowns, and both women and men covered their hair with gold and ſilver nets with jewels. This ſtately chapel is ſtill remaining, and viſible at a diſtance[g]. There was a chapel at Fulney a ſlip of ground.

Tailbois' caſtle keep and moat are ſtill viſible in Coney garth part of the caſtle fields over againſt the park on the north road[h]. Its vaſt iron lock and key, very ſubſtantial and in form of a fetter lock, now hangs in Ayſcough fee hall, the ſeat of col. Johnſon.

Here was eſtabliſhed 1710 by Maurice Johnſon, eſq; an eminent barriſter at law and ſteward of the manor to lord Exeter, a ſociety of Antiquaries, cell to that of London, which flouriſhed during the life of the founder, who died 1755, and produced many curious diſcoveries and communications with the mother cell. To its minutes I am indebted for many curious particulars relative to this and the neighbouring counties.

Below the ſurface of the earth in Mr. Hudſon's garden in Spalding over againſt the White Hart inn in the market-place was found a white ſubſtance like gravel, under which a ſort of red gravel. This gravel ſeems to be the grit of freeſtone, and probably this was the place where the workmen cut the ſtones for the buildings of the priory and churches. There were ſeveral carved ſtones found among it. It lies about three feet under the ſurface, and then a bed of white plaiſter as pure as plaiſter of Paris. They then come to the grit or gravel, of which there ſeems to be plenty. Near the ſpot where this was found ſtood a church upon the abbey wall, the remains of ſome arches whereof were laid open by the diſmal conflagration of this town. There are now and then found veins of gravel in theſe parts and within this wapentake; particularly near the Welland between Spalding and Croyland, and in Deeping fen between Spalding and Deeping, and by tradition the Weland through Croyland town was bottomed with gravel[i].

Indenture of leaſe 1432 for 20 years, of a plot of ground with the buildings thereon in Spalding, between lands of the prior and convent South, Thomas Fale North, Halmergate Eaſt, and the common bank of Spalding (i. e. the river bank) Weſt, under the yearly rent of 20*s.* payable quarterly, 5*s.* at Eaſter, 5*s.* at Botulphmas, 5*s.* at Michaelmas, and 5*s.* at Chriſtmas, with a clauſe of re-entry on failure of any payment and of diſtreſs and retenier: "Et ad oēs convencōes p̄dcas ex utraq' p̄te bene & fidēlr obſervand' p̄tes p̄dce ſigilla ſua p̄ſentib̄s indent' alternat' appoſuerunt. Hiis teſtibus: Joh̄e Speck, Henr' Weſton, Joh̄e Swanno, & aliis de Spaldyng. Dat. ap. Spaldyng, die veneris p̄x' ante feſtum Aſſencōis Dñi, A° regni regis Henrici ſexto decimo;" i. e. 5 May 1432. On a label of the ſame thick velom drawn through the turn-up at bottom of this deed a round ſeal of red wax a capital ℞ crowned, the initial of the leſſor's name, or perhaps in honour of the Virgin Mary, a conceit not uncommon in thoſe times. By the words wrong bounded indorſed twice in a more modern hand, it ſhould ſeem it was imagined there was ſome miſtake in it as to that point. It is the earlieſt inſtance Mr. Johnſon had ſeen of the mention of its being ſealed alternately; the covenants for repairs mutually are worded in the ablative caſe with participles[k].

In the gardens of the manſion houſe of Pinchbeck, which formerly belonged to a family of the name, and afterwards to ſir Richard Ogle, a very antient manſion moated round, and very much improved by Baſil Berridge, eſq; its late owner, was found 1742 a large braſs Commodus, rev. a woman ſitting on a globe, her right hand extended, in her left a Victory. Several pipes of baked earth from the garden 1743[k]. Pinchbeck.

At Moulton, the antient poſſeſſion of the great family of the Moultons or Multons, barons of Gilleſland and Egremont in Cumberland, and from which they originally derived their name, was found an oblong priſmatic piece of beryl or river cryſtal in form of a cantharus, ſuppoſed by ſome an amulet, by Dr. Woodward a magical glaſs, by others a Britiſh ornament for horſe trappings when ſet in tin as ſir Hans Sloane had one. M. Johnſon ſhewed it to the Society of Antiquaries 1736[l], alſo a copper military ring divided into 11 oval diviſions, in the centre ihs to remind the wearer to ſay ten Pater Noſters, as a Malteſe ring had ten round knobs and a crucifix in the centre, found in the vicar's garden. Roman veſſels and urns of fine white and red earth were found in ploughing at Woods three miles ſouth of Moulton 1721, in South Holland; ſeveral of them in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Hardy of Nottingham. They were dug up near Ravenbank, a fine Roman way paſſing through the middle of this fine level from Ely to Wiſbech by Spalding over Bridgend cauſeway to Sleford. Dr. Stukeley had an urn found within ten yards of this bank[m]. He traces its courſe from Tid St. Mary to Cowbit ſtrait and broad. He ſays it is called in ſome writings Romans bank, and the Welſh pronounce Roman Rhuffain. He thinks the upper road running eaſt and weſt nearer the ſea banks, now called old Spalding gate, and in ſome places Moulton.

[e] Spalding Society's minutes.
[f] Stow.
[g] Stuk. It. I. 21, 22.
[h] Ib. 11. 22.
[i] Spald. ſoc. min.
[k] Ib.
[l] Ib. Such an one ſeems to be deſcribed by Aubrey, when he ſays, "The Magicians now uſe a cryſtal ſphere or pearl, which is inſpected by a boy, or ſometimes by the querent himſelf. Miſcellan. p. 129, where it is engraved.
[m] Itin. I. 12.

about Flete Haregate, is of Roman origin. He traced another from the northern high country about Bollingbrook by Stickford, Sibsey, and so to Boston river about Redstone gate, where it passed the river by a ferry to Kirkton, and just a mile from the river in a quadrivium is a large round stone called the mile-stone. Thence to Donington where it met the principal road of the county from Ely to Sleaford. Other Roman roads run from Grancheſter to Ely by Stretham, and across the depth of the fens by Upwell and Elme to Wisbich, where one crossed the river to Spalding, having on it the square forts before described; thence to Herring bridge over Surfleet river to the end of Brig end causey near Donington to Sleaford and across the heath to the great Hermen-street; thence to Crococolana on the Fos way across the Trent, and so perhaps to the Irish sea[n]. A considerable Roman road or bank is crossed between Sutterton and Gosberton, and several sea banks run parallel hereabouts ascribed to the Romans, though perhaps really the work of the several religious societies for defending their property from the encroachments of the sea.

The freeschool was founded by John Harox of Moulton yeoman 1561, endowed with lands to the amount of £. 80. per annum. others for the poor let for £. 19. 3s. and by the feoffees improved by purchase of others.

On a coarse slab in the nave is this epitaph on the founder in capitals;

Johes Haroxus funere dignus † ampliore hic in Domino requieſcit 1560.

Bishop Barlow was cited into the court of arches for permitting some pictures of the Apostles put up in this church without the consent of the majority of the parishioners to be defaced 1683, whereupon he published a breviate of the case, in which he absolutely condemns the practice of painting such pictures, and of representing Moses with horns.

Cowbit. An authentic certificate from bishop Russel 3 Richard III. 1486 sets forth, that May 11 that year 13 days before date, he consecrated Cowbit chapel and cæmitery, granting sacramentals to be performed there for the inhabitants of Cowbit and Pykhall, they paying one quarter of all church assessments to the mother church of Spalding, quodque inhabitantes predicti annis singulis futuris in quadrageſima eccleſiam ſuam parochialem & matricem de Spalding predictam adeant, inibique de ſacerdote parochiali & curato ejuſdem eccleſiæ ſacramentum penitentie recipiant. They to maintain and repair their chapel and chancel, hire a fit and able priest to perform divina, font, and all other insignia parochialia, and all this for the badness of the roads to Spalding in winter, with consent of the prior and convent under their conventual seal. Endorsed Compoſitio inter Cubyt & nos pro capella de Cubyt. Bishop Barlow decreed that they should pay to the repairs, &c. of Spalding an eighth part of their taxation Oct. 11. 1610. It is plain here was before a chapel for common offices of devotion, built by the prior and served by the monks of Spalding, to which the family of Alwyn of Ayscough-fee house, whose arms were in the east window, were benefactors. Richard Russel, gent. after the dissolution, added much to the endowment, and 7 Charles I. 1631, obtained confirmation by inspeximus shewn to the Spalding society out of Maurice Johnson's collections of charters and records mostly purchased of the duke of Suffolk by sir Richard Ogle of the Temple, and preserved from destruction at the dissolution.

Depinge market church is dedicated to St. Guthlake; the church of the other Deping to St. James. Richard de Rulos converted St. Guthlac's chapel built in the latter by the monks of Croyland into a parish church[o]. Here was a cell of Benedictines subject to Thorney 1139[p]. The manor descended by the marriage of Emma the granddaughter and heir of Richard de Rullos before-mentioned with Hugh Wac or le Wake to the family of the lords Wake of Liddell, who held it many centuries, and it came to the crown by the Black prince's marrying Joan daughter of Edmund of Woodstock earl of Kent, by Margaret sister and heiress to Thomas lord Wake the last of that line. It is remarkable that she had been twice before married, and twice divorced[r], and dying at Wallingford 9 Richard II.[q] was buried in the Grey-friars at Stamford. The priory and manor belong now to sir Christopher Whichcote, bart. The church of Market Deping is a neat building of ashler stone, with a leaded tower and six bells, the biggest broken. On the west front of the tower is cut in relief a saltire between two tassels, and on the south face a portcullis. The Wake chapel on the north side of the choir is entirely destroyed. Empty stone coffins have been dug up in its site. The parsonage house at the east end has some antient windows, and in a modern bow a coat of arms. The town has a small market and a wooden bridge over the Welland. The priory in the parish of Deping St. James, a mile distant, is a modern house inhabited by the steward of the manor[r].

Morcar de Breun, a valiant soldier, gave, and Beorred king of Mercia, by his charter dat. 8 kal. Aug. 860, confirmed to the abbey of Croyland the manor of Deeping cum 200 manſionibus & cotagiis 400 & 2 eccleſiis[s]. Beorred about ten years after seized on this manor, and gave it with its appurtenances to one Langfer, Panetarius regis[t], who lived to be extremely old, and dying without heirs male left it to his two daughters. Turketyl endeavoured to purchase it of them for the use of the abbey, but they would not part with it on any condition[u].

" Mr. Paynel, a gentleman of Boston, tolde me, Bo
" that syns that Boston of old tyme at the great
" famose fair there kept was brent, that scant syns it
" ever came to the old glory and riches that it had;
" yet sins hath it beene manyfold richer than it is " now. The staple and the stiliard houses yet there
" remayne; but the stiliard is little or nothing at all
" occupied. There were iiii colleges of freres mar-
" chauntes of the Stiliard cumming by all partes by
" est were wont greatly to haunt Boston, and the " Grey freeres toke them yn a manor for founders of " their house, and many Esterlinges were buried
" there. In the Blake freres lay one of the noble
" Huntingfeldes, and was a late taken up hole, and
" a leaden bull of Innocentius bishop of Rome about " his neck. There lay also in the Grey freres of the " Montevilles gentlemen, and a vi or vii of the " Withams gentlemen also. Ther remainith at Boston
" a manor place of the Tilneys by there name, and
" one of them began the great steple in Boston, and " lies in the church by the steple. It is by Boston to [n] Ib. [o] Ingulph. p. 78. [p] Tan. 259. [q] Sanford, 184.

[r] Spald. foc. min. [s] Ing. 491. [t] Ib. 494. [u] Ib. 500.

" the

"the ſandes of the waſche a ſix miles, and then by "the ſandes of the ſalt gutte a xii, and thens agayne "vi to Lynne. Ther is a certain feode paid at "Boſton called Cromwelles fee [x]."

The men of Boſton of the ſoke belonging to the honor of Richemunt in Holland paid £. 100. and two palfreys that no ſheriff nor his bailifs ſhould interfere, or have any thing to do with them, but that they might chuſe a bailiff from among themſelves, who ſhould anſwer at the Exchequer for pleas and outgoings as they were wont to anſwer to the earl of Bretagne while it was in his hands [y]. The king granted them a charter, dated 30 Jan. a. r. 5. [z] The ſeal of the gild repreſented biſhop Blaiſe with a wool pack and croſier.

"Botolphſtoune ſtandith hard on the river of "Lindis. The greate and chiefeſt parte of the "toune is on the eſte ſide of the ryver, where is a "faire market place and a croſſe with a ſquare "toure. The chief pariſh church was at St. John's, "where yet is a church for the toun. St. Botolph's "was but a chapel to it. But now it is ſo riſen and "adorned that it is the chiefeſt of the town, and "for a pariſh church the beſt and faireſt of all "Lincolnſhire, and ſervid ſo with ſinging and that "of cunning men as no pariſh is in all England. "The ſociety and brotherhood longing to this church "hath cauſid this: much land longith to this ſociety. "The ſteple being quadrata turris, and a lantern on it "is both very high and fair, and a mark both by ſea "and land for al the quarters thereabouts. There is a "goodly font, whereof part is of white marble, or of "ſtone very like to it. There be three colleges of "freres, Grey, Black, and Auguſtine: alſo an hoſpital "for poor men, and in the town or near to it the late "lord Huſe had a place with a ſtone tower. All the "building of this ſide of the town is fair, and mar-"chants dwell in it, and a ſtaple of wool is uſed there. "There is a bridge or wood to come over Lindis into "this part of the town, and a pile of ſtone ſet in the "middle of the river. The ſtream of it is ſometimes as "ſwift as it were an arrow. On the weſt ſide of Lindis "is one long ſtreet, and on the ſame ſide is the White "friars. The mayne ſea is ſix miles off Boſton. Di-"verſe good ſhips and other veſſels ride there [a]." The tower of the church was built 1309 on a bed of clay nine feet below the river. Its height is 300 feet, and it is aſcended to by 365 ſteps. The length of the church, as meaſured by Mr. Eſſex and myſelf July 14, 1783, is 245 feet in the clear, and it is 98 feet broad. Dame Margaret Tilney is ſaid to have given £. 5. to the building of the church, but not the leaſt memorial remains of her or her family among the many braſsleſs ſlabs with which the floor of this handſome church is compoſed. The font was new 1667. Here is an organ, but the ſinging is not extraordinary. On the north ſide of the church-yard ſtand ſome remains of St. Botolph's priory, a quadrangle inhabited by Mr. Pacy: over the door an old bearded buſt on a pedeſtal. It is not eaſy to determine which of the religious foundations mentioned by Tanner this was. Lord Huſſey's houſe was one of thoſe with a great ſquare tower of brick called Huſſey's tower [b]. There being no good freſh water in Boſton, a perſon has offered to dig a well 100 yards deep, but has already gone to the depth of 150 without ſucceſs. St. John's church, mentioned by Leland, has been long ſince down; but the burying ground is ſtill uſed. The croſs is ſucceeded by a town hall. The Witham is navigable hence to Lincoln. The town was incorporated 37 Henry VIII. Elizabeth gave it a court of admiralty, and founded a ſchool here. It has two markets and three fairs. Roman antiquities were dug up here 1716. Here was born George Fox the Martyrologiſt [c]. It gave title of earl to William III. [d] to Henry Naſſau lord of Auverquerque who died 1754, aged 92, without iſſue male, and ſince of baron to William Irby, ſo created 1761, and ſucceeded 1775 by his ſon Frederic 2d and preſent lord.

Surfleet. Creſſy hall.

In Surfleet pariſh is Creſſy hall the ſeat of the antient family of Heron deſcended from St. John Heron, knt. privy-counſellor to Henry VII. who was a younger ſon of the Herons of Ford caſtle, Northumberland; extinct by the death of Henry 1730. In this houſe Katherine, mother of Henry VII. was once entertained. The bed whereon ſhe lay was removed to a farm-houſe by the fen ſide called Wrigholt, where Dr. Stukeley ſaw it. It was very old-faſhioned, made of oak, with panels of old emboſt work. The houſe was handſomely rebuilt by ſir Henry Heron, knight of the Bath, who died 1695, and is buried in this church. It is at preſent the property of Mr. Heron, who having a conſiderable eſtate in Scotland has offered this to ſale. The chapel is old, built or licenſed at leaſt 1309, as an inſcription on the door tells us. In it was a braſs eagle with an inſcription round it [e].

Here is ſtill a vaſt heronry. The herons reſort hither in February to repair their neſts, ſettle there in ſpring to breed, and quit the place during winter. They are as numerous as rooks, and their neſts ſo crouded together that Mr. Pennant [d] counted 80 in one tree. The male or creſted heron made a moſt beautiful appearance with its ſnowy neck and long creſt ſtreaming in the wind. The family who owned this place being of the ſame name with the bird ſeems to be the principal inducement for preſerving them. In Drayton's time [c],

Here ſtalk'd the ſtately crane as tho' he march'd in warre,
By him that hathe the herne. —— ——

They have been conſiderably reduced by the preſent proprietor on account of the miſchief which they do to the land. This is not the only heronry in the county, there being one or two more in the neighbourhood of Spalding.

Donnington.

Donnington is a market town with a freeſchool, founded 1718 [f]. In digging foundations behind the ſchoolhouſe was found a vault two feet ſquare, of hewn ſtone, containing an urn full of red earth. Certain glazed earthen veſſels were found in ruins of an antient building here ſuppoſed ſpecimens of antient Bolingbrook pottery ſent to a merchant here. See Pl. IV. fig. 3.

Wiberton.

Wiberton, or Wilbarton, near Boſton, derived its name from one Wibert, knt. and ſteward [g], who valiantly aſſiſted earl Algar and the inhabitants in Hoyland and about Croyland againſt the Danes A. D. 870 [h]. This earl called the younger, who with his two ſtewards Wibert and Leofric, gave name to [a] Lel. VI. 36. 59, 60.

[b] Stuk. I. 29.
[c] Stuk. I. 16. 2d ed.
[d] Tour in Scotl. 1769, p. 13.
[e] Song 25.
[f] Stuk. I. 22.
[g] miles ſeneſchallus.
[h] Ingulph. 492.
[x] Rot. Cart. 5 Joh. m. 14. Both are printed at large in Madox's Hiſtory of the Exch. 280.
[y] Mag. rot. 6 Joh. rot. 6. b.
[z] Lel. VII. 49. Tan. 283, 284.
[a] G.
[b] G.

the three towns of Algarkirk, Wiberton, and Leverſton, obtained a great victory over the Danes 870[i], but were ſlain next day [k].

Algarkirk. Algarkirk has a handſome church, with a ſtone figure in the yard aſcribed to earl Algar, who fought ſo many battles with the Danes [l].

Sutterton. At Sutterton was found the ſpur engraved Pl. III. fig. 6.

Skirbeck. At Skirbeck was an hoſpital of the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem [m].

Swinſhead. Of Swinſhead abbey, founded for Ciſtertians by Robert Greſlei 1134, valued at £. 167. per annum [n], where king John died, remains only an yew tree and a broken figure of a knight in mail fixed in the wall of a new houſe, his ſhield blank, but he may be the founder or Albert his ſon.

Swinſhead abbey farm was the ſeat of John Cotton, eſq; 1733, the houſe built out of the ruins by one of the family of Locton, who were ſometime owners of the ſcite, as appears by the arms, a chevron in a bordure; creſt a griffin's head holding a padlock; and new fronted by an Orme or Oram, whoſe arms are over the door, a chevron between three eſcallops. The church a mile from the abbey in the town is a handſome ſpacious building with a lofty chancel in which is a monument of ſir John Lockton, knt. who died 1610.

The firſt author who ſays king John died of poiſon given him by a monk of this houſe lived near 100 years after the event. The king went from Lynne in October 1216 in his way into Lincolnſhire, and with his whole army croſſed the waſhes which part the two counties. The tide coming up the river Well-ſtream [o], which at high water overflows the waſhes, put him in ſuch imminent danger, that he hardly eſcaped with his life, having loſt all his baggage. He arrived on the night of October 11 at Swineſhed, and after ſtaying there a day or two, ſet out on horſeback for Sleford, the caſtle of which was at that time in his hands. He was forced to betake himſelf to a litter, and in Sleford was roughly handled by a dyſentery. Next day he was carried to Newark caſtle then alſo in his hands, where he died a few days after. M. Paris plainly aſcribes his death to a fever brought on by vexation and heightened by eating peaches and drinking new cyder. So alſo Matthew of Weſtminſter and Trivet [p].

Gilbert de Holland, abbot of Swinſhead, was a particular friend of St. Bernard, whoſe life he wrote, and died and was buried at Tolouſe 1280 [q].

Freſton. Freſton priory was a cell of black monks ſubject to Croyland, founded after 1114 [r].

Kirkton. Kirkton has a beautiful church, built cathedral faſhion, which induced ſome antiquaries to place here Sidnaceſter; but we ſhall ſee hereafter Mr. Pegge's reaſons for removing that antient ſee to Kirkton in Lindſey. On the pedeſtal of the font is Orate pro aia Alauni Burton qui fontem iſtum fieri fec. a. d. MCCCCV. Under the great upper window of the north aile, on a raiſed altar tomb is a ſtone figure with a dog at its feet, and round the verge Orate pro aia Johannis de Mezis, and on an oak pew door in the north ſide are theſe arms carved, a feſs erm. between three waterbougets, which belonged to the family of Meeres originally of Meeres, but for many ages ſeated at this place quartering three cinquefoils, Darcy and impaling a fleur de lis, Digby: Creſt on a torſe a peacock's tail expanded. On another pew door in the nave Party per bend A. and S. 3 maſcles in bend counterchanged; creſt on a torſe on a helmet a phœnix [with a bell over her, and from her beak Aprendre a mourir], for Francis Browne, eſq; of Boſon hall here. The windows were beautifully painted with ſcripture hiſtories, arms of England, earls of Lincoln, Orme, Meeres, Littlebury, Burton, Digby, Driby, Johnſon, Brown, Cerne, Bohun, Clifford, Beauchamp, and over the altar, in the eaſt window, this uncommon coat, Per flaſque, G. and V. a lion rampant, A. crowned O. with an annulet S. on his breaſt or vulned G. Bulbeck, or Boſon. In 1710 were alſo V. 3 bouquedeaus O. Another like field, the bougets erm. and on an oak pew a waterbouget, Johnſon, and a chevron between three eſcallops, Orme. All the hiſtorical paintings and many arms were gone, and the weſt window in part bricked up 1745, and not a ſingle fragment of painted glaſs remains now in the windows of this beautiful church, whoſe ſouth tranſept (which as well as the north has double ailes of three arches each) is with difficulty kept up from falling. A ſilver paten thin and antient, with a fine radiated head of Chriſt, was found in this church [s]. Kirkton pippins grow here. Fuller ſays he was informed that pippins grafted on a pippin ſtock are called Renates, bettered in their generous nature by ſuch double extraction [t].

The men of Ketſteven (Keſteven) gave 250 marcs Ke to have the king's charter for deforeſting the foreſt of Keſteven, according to the boundaries contained in that charter [u].

Where now are Deeping and other fens was antiently foreſt. The trunks of trees are frequently dug up in the ditches here at the depth of about two feet under a light black mold. Mr. Neale, to whom we owe this and other diſcoveries in the county, affirms that in a ditch of his own at the edge of the fens were found ſeveral trunks lying at bottom, and in another place was turned out of one hole a hatfull of acorns black but firm and hard, yet there is no tree within a mile of the place except here and there a willow newly ſet. He had by him a copy of the exemplification of the letters patents of James I. dated Weſtminſter, Feb. 1. ann. 5 Ang. & Scot. 41, reciting by way of Inſpeximus the letters patents of Henry III. dated Portſmouth April 23, r. 14. diſafforeſting the foreſt of Keſteven for ever, which was alſo confirmed by the letters patents of 20 Edward III. wherein the ſaid foreſt is deſcribed as extending from Swafton to Eaſt Deping, as Careſdike extends itſelf, which is a dike running croſs the top not only of Deping fen, but alſo of that great fen beyond the river Glen called Lindſey level, and on the other ſide to the diviſion called Holland. This Careſdike, or Caerdike, is a broad deep artificial channel, which formerly extended from the river Nen a little below Peterborough to the river Witham, almoſt three miles below Lincoln, being almoſt 40

[i] Chron. J. ab. de Petrib. ed Sparke, p. 15, from Ingulphus.
[k] Stuk. I. 24.
[l] Stukeley ib.
[m] Tan. 258.
[n] Stuk. 30. Tan 281.
[o] Fluvius qui dicitur Welleſtreme. M. Paris, p. 287. Dr. Brady, p. 516, from Dugdale's Hiſt. of Imbank. p. 256 and 300, ſays this was the river Ouſe.
[p] See Mr. Pegge in Archæol. IV. 29—46.
[q] Tan. Bib. Brit. 317.
[r] Tan. 257.
[s] Spalding Society's min. The articles in books were gone 1783.
[t] Worth. Linc. p. 150.
[u] Mag. Rot. 14 Henry III. Linc. m. 2. 6. Madox Hiſt. of the Exch. p. 288.

miles long, and ſuppoſed to have been the work of the Romans, and navigable [x]. It enters Lincolnſhire at East Deping, proceeding on an exact level between the high and low grounds all the way by Langtoft and Baſton, paſſing the river Glen at Highbridge, it runs in an unterrupted courſe as far as Lincoln. It is all the way 60 feet broad, having a large flat bank on both ſides for the horſes that draw the boats. Roman coins are frequently found through its whole length. Dr. Stukeley at firſt aſcribed it to Catus Decianus the procurator in Nero's time, and thought his name was preſerved in Catesbridge on the road, Catwick a ſtream derived from this artificial channel at the very place where it begins to the Nen at Doveſdale bar, where comes in another ſtream from the north from a place by Shepey bank called Catsgrove corner; to which may be added Catley near Walcot, and Catthorp near Stanfield upon the road. Even after the projection of the other branch which goes to Lincoln on the higher ground, the navigation here he ſuppoſes was continued till the Romans left the iſland [y]. The Dr. afterwards altered his opinion, and aſcribed it to Carauſius, whoſe name he fancied it bore, though he before more probably derived it from the Britiſh word Caer; Cardike being no more than fen dike.

In Deping fen in a deep vein of gravel were found 1740, the ſwords engraved Pl. III. fig. 7, 8, 9, 10; alſo an iron frame, ſuppoſed of a Vexillum, which was probably put on it for eaſy removal, fig. 11. Fig. 12 is a fibula, gilt and enamelled, with a ring to ſew it to the garment by, found in the ſame parts. A ſmall braſs ring lock was ploughed up in Deeping fields 1740, on opening which the letters on each ring were thus placed together E:R:C:O.

Stamford is a large and populous market town pleaſantly ſituated. "As much privilege was given "to it, ſaving the privilege for treaſon, as hath been "given lightely to any town in England. It was "privileged but in king Edward's days for a borough "as concerning a place in the parliament houſe, yet "it was a borow town in king Edgar's days, and "then and ſince it hath allway longed to the crown. "There were 7 principal towers, or wardes, in the "wall, to each of which were certain freholders in "the town allotted to watch and ward in time of "need. In the weſt ſuburb called Breedcroft be-"cauſe that bakers ſold bread in that part of the "ſuburb, is yet recourſe out of Rutlandſhire, and "there the ſeſſion be kept, ſo that the ſhire ground "of Rutland cometh to this ſuburb of Stamford "town. The northern men in one of the three "firſt king Edwards' days did ill to the town, and "brennid many writings of their antiquities and "privileges, and much of the town. It is not "ſince fully re-edified. A great voice runnith "that ſometime readings of liberal ſciences were at "Stanford, and the names of Peterborough hall, "Semplingham, and Vauldier [z] yet remain there as "places for thoſe houſes of men and religion that "ſent their ſcholars thither to ſtudy, except a man "will ſay that theſe houſes otherwiſe coming to them "kept their names [a]." "One fair ſpring conveyed "a quarter of a mile off into the heart of the town "has two or three caſtelles in the town [b]." A Benedictine priory cell to Durham was early founded here, dedicated to St. Leonard, valued at £25. per ann. now a farm of lord Exeter's [c]. Mr. Peck ſuppoſes it founded by Wilfred in the 7th century, rd, founded by William the Conqueror and biſhop Carileph [d]. Its chapel with a rich Saxon front is now a barn. A houſe of black friars founded before 1240 by William de Fortibus [e]; another of white friars by Edward I. or III. or Henry III. the weſt gate remaining without the town [f]. "One Fleming a "very rich man of this town was the firſt founder "as it is ſaid of the Auſtin friars hard by St. "Peter's gate in the weſt ſuburb; an archdeacon of "Richmond was the perſormer of it [g] before 1340." On the eaſt ſide of the town without Paul gate ſtood the grey friers houſe, founded before 48 Edward III. [h] The Black Prince's wife was buried here. In Stamford baron, which is in Northamptonſhire, William de Watervile, abbot of Peterborough, built t. Henry I. a Benedictine nunnery, ſubject to Peterborough, valued at £65. per ann. [i] In St. George's church David Sicelt or Sycil, having purchaſed a farm in Lincolnſhire, founded a chantry 22 Henry VII. [k] The hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt and St. Thomas the Martyr, founded t. Henry II. or Richard I. was ſucceeded by lord Burleigh's almſ-houſe [l], which maintains a warden and twelve poor men. Here was alſo a houſe of lepers belonging to Peterborough [m]. "In the ſouthern part of Stam-"ford within the walls, and by the market place is "an hoſpital omnium Sanctorum, founded by one "Broune of that town, marchant of very wonderful "richneſs, and he lived in hac ætate [n]." His monument, with his own and his wife's figure in braſs on a ſlab in All Saints chancel, are engraved in Peck's Annals of Stamford.

Not far from the town without Clement gate, ſtood a fair ſtone croſs, erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen Eleanor, but pulled down by the ſoldiers in the civil war.

Henry of Huntingdon [o], Florence of Worceſter [p], the Saxon Chronicle A. D. 942 [q], and Mr. Peck in his hiſtory of the town [r], mention Stamford as one the towns taken from the Danes by Edmund Ironſide. It is mentioned before in Wulfer's charter to Peterborough 656 [s]. A. D. 963, Athelwold, biſhop of Wincheſter, reſtoring Peterborough abbey among others, obtained a charter from Edgar that there ſhould be a market there and no other between Stamford and Huntingdon [t]. Ermingſtreet, which Leland I. 115. miſtakes for Watling ſtreet, runs within a mile of Scogate, or Mr. Camden miſtook for it the great hollow way juſt out of the gate [u]. It is ſtill called the High dike, and traces of it appear here and there between Stamford and Lincoln, and in particular very evidently without Peter gate Northward almoſt from the very gate, and ſo along to Brig Caſterton.

Joſſrid abbot of Croyland, who, in 1112, ſent profeſſors to Cambridge, ſent at the ſame time to his [x] Moreton North. 513. G. See before, p. 185.

[y] It. I. 7. 8. [z] Valdey. [a] Lel. VI. 28, 29, 30. VII. 21. [b] Le. VI. 30.
[c] Tan. 280. [d] Hiſt. of Stamford II. 13. IV. 4.
[e] Tan. 281. Peck VIII. 15. [f] Tan. 283. Peck VIII. 32. XI. 29.
[g] Lel. VI. 29. Tan. 285. [h] Tan. 285. Peck by Henry III. VIII. 56. [i] Tan. 382.
[k] Pat. 22 H. VII. and Collins' life of Burleigh. [l] Tan. 383. Peck V. 7. [m] Tan. 386.
[n] Lel. VI. 29. [o] V. p. 203. [p] p. 603.
[q] p. 114.
[r] III. 15. [s] Chron. Sax. 36. [t] Ib. 119.
[u] Peck I. 21. 26.

manor

manor of Wridthorp by Stamford, three monks[x], who may be ſuppoſed to have laid the foundation of the univerſity here[y], though it firſt figured in the reign of Henry III. when its foundation is aſcribed to the Carmelites who had a large ſchool here, pulled down by lord Exeter 1722[z].

The univerſity was prior to Wood's date 1290, when only a ſchool for the Gilbertines was founded, whereas other orders had their ſchools here before[a]. The Durham men, who had a foundation at Stamford, retired hither from Merton college Oxford, 1334[b]. The colleges were Brazen noſe, pulled down 1688, and ſucceeded by a ſchool, and the old gate, a pleaſing picce of plain regular Gothic architecture, ſet up again forwarder. Peterborough hall, Black hall, Sempringham hall, another in St.George's pariſh, and three more[c].

Biſhop Gibſon was miſled to imagine that Stamford is a county town, from the mention in Hoveden of Staenfordienſis provincia, which is only the country round Stamford: and from Leland's ſaying that the ſeſſions were held there. Here was a mint in Athelſtan's time[d], and much uſed by ſucceeding kings and Canute. It was in Stamford baron, which is a diſtinct pariſh and liberty in Northamptonſhire[e].

Its 14 churches were reduced in Mr. Camden's time to ſeven, now to five, beſides St. Martin's in Stamford baron, miſcalled by Mr. Camden St. George[e]: where are the monuments of William lord Burghley, his father and mother, and John earl of Exeter his great great grandſon who died 1700[f]. The porch of all Saints is a beautiful piece of rich Gothic architecture. By acts 2 and 3 Edward VI. ſeveral churches were united and a ſchool founded. William Ratcliffe founded a ſchool here 1530, and William Welles a freeſchool.

The town is governed by a mayor, &c. eſtabliſhed prior to the firſt charter 1460 1 Edward IV. The cuſtom of Borough Engliſh obtains here. After the death of William earl of Warren, the manor, borough, and caſtle were granted by John earl Warren to Edward I. who regranted them to the ſaid earl for term of his life, and on his death by agreement they reverted to the crown. After five or ſix grants from the crown to ſeveral of the principal nobility, and as many reverſions by forfeiture or want of heirs male, Elizabeth granted them to William Cecil firſt lord Burghley. From him they deſcended to Anne daughter and coheir of William earl of Exeter, his grandſon married to Henry Grey firſt earl of Stamford, advanced to that dignity 3 Charles I. He died 1673, and (his ſon dying in his life time) was ſucceeded by his grandſon Thomas[7] who dying $17\frac{19}{20}$ without iſſue, the title went to Harry ſon of John 3d ſon of the firſt earl who dying 1730, was ſucceeded by his ſon Harry 4th and preſent earl; but they have ſince been ſold back to the Exeter family. The caſtle at the north-weſt end of the town ſhews very inconſiderable remains of a ſtone wall under the ſide of a little mount. It was pulled down and the materials taken to repair the White friers.

The painted windows in St. George's church were taken away about 1733. The knights of the garter in the choir windows, one in each light towards the bottom kneeling in armour in a proper coat and over it the blue mantle and ſtar, all looking eaſt, were taken away in ſpring 1741; as in 1737 all the painted glaſs in St. Martin's to ſave the vicar from wearing ſpectacles[g].

A peſtilence began in Stamford at St. James' tide 1641 and ended in March following, whereof are ſaid to have died between 5 and 600 perſons[h].

Stamford gave birth to Robert Johnſon, miniſter of Luffenham c. Rutland, founder of the freeſchools of Oakham and Uppingham in that county, of which before, p. 219. 221. His father Maurice was chief magiſtrate of Stamford[i].

Uffington was the ſeat of a younger branch of the Uf Berties, and now of Brownlow duke of Ancaſter.

"Albeniacus lord of Bever caſtle was lord of "Uffington by Wiland river half a mile bynethe "Standforde on the farther ſide of the ripe of Lin- "colnſhire, and there remained grete token of a "maner place embatelid of his, the which by the "heir of Roteland now living, and having it by "Roſſe heir general hath been well repairid. And "at ſuch time as Albinies lay commonly at Uffing- "ton, one of them builded Newſteede a priory of "chanons; and there was buried, as I heard, the "2, 3, and 4 of the Albeneys. This Newſteede "is no leſs than a mile beneth Stanford, but not "hard upon the river[k]."

"Chater river comes into Weland about two miles Ch "above Stamford in ripa ſuper. It riſes in Rutland- "ſhire or the edge of Leiceſterſhire, 16 miles off by "weſt, and comes within a mile of Uppingham, be- "ing in Stamford of the hither ripe, and thens ſix "miles to Okam a mile of on the farther ripe, and ſo "to Keton a 5 miles in reſpect being in Stamford on "the hither ripe, and there is a ſtone bridge over "Chater of ſix arches and half a mile lower in "Towelande river[l]."

At Newſtede within leſs than two miles below N Stamford, William de Albini the 3d founded an Auſtin priory t. Henry III. valued at £.30.[m] The 2d, 3d, and 4th of the Albinies were buried there[n].

"Under a ſtone bridge a quarter of a mile from W "Stamford runnith a riveret called Waſch, riſing in "Leiceſterſhire and comes by Grithain in Rutland- "ſhire, the whole courſe from the head of it a little "beneath Waſch bridge, where it goes into Weland "river a litle below Stamford is 18 or 20 miles. "The common ſaying there is, that Waſch and "Wiland ſhall drown al Holand[o]." "A good mile "after I came out of Stamford I paſſed over a ſtone "bridge, under the which run a praty rivulet; I took "it for Waſch[p]. There come many ſmall rills into "this river of Waſh, which comes by Caſterton, ſome- "time longing to lord Huſſey[q]."

Horſley[r] places GAUSENNÆ or CAUSENNÆ at Ancaſter; Gale[s], who read it Cauſennis, at Nottingham, Stukeley[t] at Panton. The Dr. obſerves there has been a ſtation at Bridge Caſterton, two miles north from Stamford near an angle of the ſmall river that runs by it, but it is not named in the Iters, nor is there any diſtance between two ſtations anſwering that between this [x] Bleſenſis Cont. Hiſt. Croyl. 115. [y] Peck IV. 15. [z] Peck VIII. 32.

[a] Peck IX. 16. 2. [b] Wood Hiſt. and Ant. Ox. ſub hoc anno, Peck IX. 3.
[c] Peck IX. 7. [d] Peck from Stowe. [e] G. [f] The George inn is oppoſite to it.
[f] All engraved in Peck's Annals of Stamford. [7] G. [g] Stukeley in Spalding Soc. min.
[h] Biſhop Sanderſon's MS. [i] Fuller's Worth. Linc. p. 169.
[k] Lel. VI. 29. [l] Ib. 30. [m] Tan. 280. Lel. VI. 29. [n] Lel. Ib.
[o] Lel. VI. 30. [p] Ib. I. 26. [q] Ib. VI. 30. [r] P. 452. [s] Anton. p. 95. [t] I. 80.

and Caſter, which is but nine computed miles. It is moted on two ſides; many Roman coins have been found here, and one paſture is called Caſtle cloſe [a]. He derives the name of Keſteven from Cauſennæ, though Bridgeford is not in that diviſion [x]. Dr. Salmon [y] places Cauſennæ at Brough, of which hereafter.

South Witham is called alſo Poſt Witham, becauſe it is a ſtage for poſt horſes in the midway between Stamford and Grantham being equidiſtant from both, viz. eight miles. The river Witham or Wince riſes here, and running by Grantham and ſo to Lincoln, falls into the ſea below Boſton [z].

Between Stamford and Lincoln in Keſteven are many mineral ſprings; as at Bourne, Walcot by Folkingham, (of which two hereafter) Pickworth, Newton, Aunſby, Aſerby, and, as is ſaid, in the grounds of Dunsby hall three miles north of Sleford [a].

"Burne market is a three or four miles from "Grimeſthorpe. There appear great diches and "the dungeon hill of an antient caſtle againe the "weſt end of the priory, ſomewhat diſtant from it, "as on the other ſide of the ſtreet backward. It "longid to the lord Wake, and much ſervice of the "Wake ſe is done to this caſtle. I remember that "I once read in an hiſtory of the caſtle of Burne, "that S. Edmund, king of the Eaſt Angles was "crowned at Burne, but I cannot tell whether it "was this Burne [a]." This tranſaction was at Buers in Suffolk on the river Stour, which ſee p. 83. At Bourne was an Auſtin priory founded 1138, by Robert Fitz Gilbert, valued at £.197. 17s. [b] now entirely demoliſhed. The church is handſome, and had two large ſquare towers at the weſt end, but the northernmoſt is above half down. The caſtle oppoſite to it on the weſt has all its ditch and earthworks remaining. The area within the outer ditch is about eight acres, the inner about one, not like a keep, but flat, covered by a rampart within the ditch. Very large irregular works are on the north and weſt ſides between the two ditches: the earth raiſed about 20 yards in length and 10 in breadth, and a ditch between every one of thoſe pointing to the grand moat. Altogether they look like a piece of ground drained, and are pretended to be Oliver Cromwell's batteries againſt the town. On the inner ditch was a gatehouſe in a ſmall round tower [c], taken down by lord Exeter to build a barn. Near the baſe and ſteps of a croſs in the centre of the town was the ſhaft of a circular pillar about 10 feet high, out of which grew an aſh tree; but both the pillar and tree are now removed. Here is a medicinal ſpring, brackiſh, much frequented in ſummer, flowing through limeſtone; and another ſpring, which gave name to the town, ſo copious as to turn three mills at the town [d]. It riſes near the caſtle which it almoſt ſurrounds, then turning ſhort goes in a contrary courſe, and affords water enough to become navigable, carrying boats of ten tons, which ſerve the town from Boſton. Here was born 1521 William Cecil, who was created baron Burleigh by Elizabeth 1571, and died 1598. Mr. Camden in his Annals ſays, "he was one of thoſe few who lived and died with equal glory. Such a man as while others regard with admiration, I, after the antient manner, rather contemplate with ſilent and religious veneration [e]." This manor came to William lord Burleigh by his mother, Jane daughter and heir of William Heckington of Bourne, eſq. At Mr. Caldecote's, the Bull inn in this town, was a panel with a portrait of queen Elizabeth in black velvet and jewels, long white lawn veil, and on the rim of a wooden ſieve or colender in her left [f], in capitals a terra il ben,

Il mal dimora in ſella.

The town hall was built by treaſurer Cecil [g].

At Stanfield, a village a little more north, is a good chalybeat ſpring, and in Blackfield cloſe many coins are found [h]. Stanfield.

Near Bourne is Grimſthorp the ſeat of the duke of Ancaſter. Roman coins have been found in the garden near a tumulus at the end; perhaps the grave of Grime, a noble Saxon or Dane, who gave name to the place. Other tumuli are on the hills; one at Corby. An excellent kind of ſtone is dug up in the park, which is large and beautiful. Dr. Stukeley thinks the country hereabouts extremely delightful [i]. "The place of "Grimeſthorpe was no great thing afore the new "building of the ſecond court. Yet was all the old "work of ſtone, and the gatehouſe was fair and ſtrong, "and the walls of each ſide of it embattled. There is "alſo a great ditch about the houſe. There is a fair "park betwixt Vauldey and Grimeſthorp." Grimſthorpe, ſays Fuller [k], I may call an extempore ſtructure, got up on a ſudden by Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk to entertain king Henry VIII. in his progreſs into theſe parts. The hall therein was fitted to a fair ſuit of hangings which the duke had by his wife Mary the French Queen, and is now in the poſſeſſion of the right hon. Mountague earl of Lindſey. Grimſthorpe.

"It appears by the ruins of Vauldey abbey a "good half mile on this ſide Grimeſthorp that it "has been a great thing. There is in the wood "by Vauldey abbey a great quarry of coarſe mar-"ble, whereof much be likelyhood was occupied in "the abbey [l]." Vaudey or De valle dei abbey, in the park in Edenham pariſh, was founded for Ciſtertians about 1147, removed from Bitham, valued at £.124. per ann [m]. At the diſſolution Henry VIII. demiſed the ſite and manor to ſir John Harrington, of whom Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk bought it, and of him the earl of Lindſey [n], from whom it paſſed to the duke of Ancaſter. The ruins are now entirely removed [o]: the ſite is a horſe-courſe [p]. At Edenham, the eſtate and burial place of the Ancaſter family, was an octangular croſs nine inches diameter, four ſides twice as broad as the other four. The inſcription Priez: pur: le alme: Ranle: fiz: Rob: On the other ſide Priez: pur: almeis: des: tutz: It was demoliſhed in Dr. Stukeley's time, who gave the inſcription from ſome older copy [q]. Vaudy abbey. Edenham.

[a] Ib. [x] Ib. 84. [y] New Survey, p. 268. [z] Sanderſon MS. [a] G.
[a] Lel. I. 28. [b] Tan. 258. [c] Salm. 250.
[d] Salm. 249. G. [e] Ann. Eliz. in anno 1598.
[f] See this device in Blount's Jocular Tenures and Camden's Remains. In MS. Harl. 374. 24, is a letter from Thomas Cecil earl of Effex to Hugh Allington, eſq. dated London, Nov. 13, 1605, acquainting him that ſome had called his brother the earl of Saliſbury the grandſon of a ſieve-maker, which he thought a reflection on himſelf, and deſiring him to ſearch among his evidences at Burleigh-houſe for certain writings wherein his grandfather is called eſquire. Q. if this device relates to this reflection, and might be adopted afterwards.
[g] Spalding ſociety's minutes. [h] Stukeley, I. 8. Salm. 250. [i] Itin. I. 10.
[k] Worth. Linc. p. 151. [l] Lel. I. 26. [m] Tan. 265. [n] MS. Sanderſon.
[o] Stukeley, MS. [p] Ib. It. I. 10 [q] Stuk. It. I. Pl. XI. copied in our plate of croſſes.

Irnham.

" Thimbleby had by purchaſe the lordſhip of Irn-
" ham of the old ſir John Paynell, where Thimbleby,
" now living, hath built a fair place[r]," ſaith Mr. Leland; but he was miſtaken. The manor of Irnham, anciently Gerneham, belonged to Ralph de Paynell in the time of William the Conqueror, as appears in Doomſday Book[s]. Freternata, the daughter and coheir of William de Paynell his deſcendant, carried it by marriage in the reign of John to ſir Geffrey Luttrell. The heir of Lutterell married Hilton, the heir of Hilton married Thimbleby, the heir of Thimbleby married Conqueſt of Houghton-Conqueſt, co. Bedford, and Maria-Chriſtina the daughter and ſole heir of Benedict Conqueſt, eſq; wife of Henry VIIIth and preſent lord Arundel of Wardour is the preſent poſſeſſor of Irnham, and a large eſtate in this county[t]. Irnham gives title of an Iriſh baron to Simon Lutterell, created 1768, who took it on account of its having anciently had lords of his name.

Witham.

" The principal houſe of the Delalandes was at " North Witham in Lincolnſhire upon or by Witham
" water. The place is auntient, fair and ſtrong,
" and hath goodly commodities about it[u]."

Sempring-ham.

Gilbert de Sempringham, rector of the church there, having inſtituted a new religious order[x] called after him and the place, founded here about 1139, a priory for nuns and canons, which was the head houſe of the order, and the place where their general chapters were held. It was valued at £.317. 4*s*. 1*d*. per annum, and granted to Edward lord Clinton[y], whoſe ſeat here was entirely pulled down by the late duke of Newcaſtle before he ſold it to the preſent lord Forteſcue: the garden walls remain. The priory ſtood to the north-eaſt of the church: only a bare ſite remains, and a moated area. The chancel is ruined: the tranſepts gone: the doors have Saxon zigzag arches: the windows are lancet form: one ſtone coffin lid lies in a pew. This church ſerves the two pariſhes of Poyton and Billingborough, and is a donative of ſcarce £.20. per annum.

Near Sempringham was found a fragment of a large Roman urn or vaſe of fine light red earth, repreſenting Victory with a hare behind her, and part of a manipularius with a ſtandard, wreaths, &c. in bas relief, with many beads of divers colours: other Roman utenſils or ornaments given to Mr. Johnſon by the rev. Mr. Hardy.

Folkingham.

" From Grimſthorpe to Sempringham five miles
" and a mile thence ſomewhat inward is the caſtle
" of Fokingham, ſometime the lord Bardolfe's, ſince
" the lord Bellomont's, now longing to the duke of " Norfolk. It hath been a goodly houſe, but it now
" falleth to ruin and ſtandeth even about the edge of
" the fenns[z]."

Gilbert de Gant, ſon to Baldwin the ſixth earl of Flanders by Richildis counteſs of Hainault his wife, being alſo nephew to William duke of Normandy (Maud wife to the ſame duke being ſiſter of that Baldwin) came into England with him and was well rewarded; for at the time of the Conqueror's ſurvey[a] it appears that he was poſſeſſed of 130 lordſhips in Lincolnſhire, of which Folkingham was one where he ſeated himſelf, that being the head of his barony, beſides 41 other lordſhips in different counties. He was the reſtorer of Bardeney abbey in Lincolnſhire (utterly deſtroyed by Inguar and Hubba the Pagan Danes many years before). He married Alice daughter and heir of Hugh de Montfort, and dying in the time of William Rufus was buried at Bardeney. To him ſucceeded in this barony Walter his ſon and heir who further endowed the abbey of Bardeney. He likewiſe founded the abbey of Bridlington in Yorkſhire, and having married Maud daughter of Stephen earl of Brittany and Richmond, departed this life 4 Stephen, leaving iſſue Gilbert, Robert and Geffry. Gilbert in his youth being with king Stephen in the battle of Lincoln 1142 in the 6th year of his reign, was with him taken priſoner, and compelled by Ranulph earl of Cheſter to marry his niece Rohais or Hawiſe, daughter and heir to William de Romare earl of Lincoln, whereby he had the title of earl of Lincoln in her right. Afterwards he founded the abbey of Rufford in Nottinghamſhire A. D. 1148, and gave to the monks of Biham in Lincolnſhire all his lands called Braithwait, lying in Edenham, whereunto thoſe monks tranſlating their abbey called it Vallis Dei or Valdei. He died in 1156, leaving iſſue two daughters, Alice wife of Simon de St. Liz earl of Huntingdon and Northampton, and Gunnora; but neither of them having any iſſue, the inheritance of this great family devolved to his uncle Robert de Gant thereby lord of Folkingham, who died 3 or 4 Richard I. leaving iſſue by his firſt wife Alice daughter and heir of William Paganell, one ſole daughter his heir, named alſo Alice, who was the wife of Robert the firſt ſon of Robert Fitz Harding, from whom, through the heireſſes of Berkley, Gourney, and Dalamore, deſcends the preſent earl of Egmont, in whom are now centred the rights of this family.

This laſt mentioned Robert de Gant had by his ſecond wife Gunnora, who was niece to Hugh de Gourney, a ſon Gilbert, ſurnamed the Good, who had a ſon named alſo Gilbert, who being taken priſoner among the barons at Kenilworth, this eſtate was forfeited, though he redeemed it afterwards for 3000 marks. He died at Folkingham 1274, and was buried in the priory at Bridlington, leaving iſſue a ſon Gilbert, who married Lora, ſiſter to Alexander de Baliol. In 24 and 26 Edward I. he had ſummons to parliament among the barons. This Gilbert having no children conſtituted king Edward I. his heir to the lands of his barony, viz. Folkingham, Barton, Heckyngton and Edenham, and died 26 Edw. I.[b]

This manor of Folkingham was afterwards granted 1 Edward II. to Henry de Beaumont, anceſtor of the viſcounts Beaumont, and continued in that family till 27 Henry VI.[c] Their arms ſingle and quartering Jeruſalem were ſprinkled all over the church windows; over the ſouth door are carved 3 gerbes and a lion debruiſed by a bend. Folkingham is a market town, now the property of —— Winne, eſq. The church ſtands on the top of the hill, and in the market-place are a ſeſſions-houſe, baſe of a croſs, and two wells. On the eaſt ſide of the hill are the moats and mounds of the caſtle in the yard of a manſion houſe probably built out of its ruins.

At Walcot adjoining, near the edge of the fens, which gave name to a family who had ſome monuments in the church, is a purging water, ſomewhat ſtronger than that at Bourne, and much frequented[9].

The true name of Skrekingham is Trekingham, being ſo called from being the burial-place of three [r] Lel. I. 28. [s] Domeſd. fol. 363. a. [t] MSS. penes J. C. Brooke de Coll. Arm. [u] Lel. It. VI. 68.

[x] A mongrel order obſerving ſome ſelect rules of St. Benedict and St. Auſtin. Fuller, Church Hiſt. 258. [y] Tan. 259.
[z] Lel. I. 28. [a] Fol. 354—356.
[b] See Hiſt. of the Houſe of Yvery. [c] Dugd. Bar. II. 50. [9] G.

Daniſh kings, before which time it was called Laundon[d].

Aſwardby has a beautiful ſtone ſpire and tower. The ſeat of ſir Chriſtopher Whichcote, bart. here ſtands near it in a park; the ſituation rather flat. This eſtate was purchaſed of the Harveys.

Silk Willoughby adjoining has a ſimilar church, the tower more ornamented.

St. Saviour's chapel at the end of Brigend cauſeway is ſtill left, turned into a manſion-houſe, founded by George of Lincoln, endowed with lands to maintain the cauſeway; a legacy highly to be commended[e].

At Aſlackby two miles from Folkingham and ſeven from Bourne, was a preceptory or commandery of the Templars, founded at the manor here by John le Mareſchal, about the time of Richard I. They had the church and lands here by gift of Hubert de Ry before 1885, as appears by the rental made that year[f], but the preceptory might only commence from John le Mareſchall heir to Hubert de Ry giving them the capital meſſuage about 1194. It was afterwards given to the Hoſpitallers, and as part of their poſſeſſions was granted 33 Henry VIII. to Edward lord Clinton[g]. Here was a round church, now rebuilt as a farm houſe, and ſtill called the Temple. The embattled ſquare tower remains at the ſouth end, of two ſtories, the upper open to the roof till lately incloſed and fitted up as a chamber by Mr. Douglas the owner; the lower a cellar vaulted with groined arches, on whoſe centre are eight ſhields. The central one is charged with a croſs: the others are

A chevron charged with a creſcent between three ſquirrels: Lovell.

In a border engrailed a chevron between 3 ſpread eagles.

20 roundels, a dexter canton Erm. Zouch.

Barry of 8, in chief a greyhound. Skipwith.

In a bordure ingrailed a chevron Erm.

A chevron between 3 fleurs de lis.

3 gerbes quartering Semè de lis a lion rampart.

Ermine on a feſs 3 crowns.

At other joints of the ribs; Erm. a feſs fuſillee impaling a bend Erm. Hebden impaling Rye.

On a bend 3 ſtars impaling on a bend 3 birds.

2 bulls impaling the bend and birds.

A plain ſhield.

Over and under the ſouth window without are 3 ſhields: a croſs, and the two next to it, on a bend 3 birds.

The pariſh church at a little diſtance, on the oppoſite ſide of the road, is a handſome building with a ſquare weſt tower embattled.

Burton Pedwardine was part of the great eſtate of Alan de Creun. Roger Pedwardine the ſecond 1340, rebuilt the church and St. Mary's chapel on the north ſide, but the pariſh built the ſouth aile and St. Nicholas' chapel. By meſne conveyance the manor came to ſir Thomas Horſman, knt. and by his daughter to ſir Charles Orby, bart. whoſe ſon was cupbearer to Henrietta Maria, and dying without iſſue it came to his brother ſir Thomas Orby, bart. whoſe only daughter married Robert Hunter governor of Jamaica, in whoſe right he had this manor and Croyland, both which deſcended to his ſon Thomas Orby Hunter, eſq and his family.

" One Buſſey, coming of a younger brother of the " houſe of Buſſeys of Hougeham, dwellith in an old " place at Haider [Hather] that he and his parents " hath in a fee farm of the church of Lincoln[h]." It belongs now or lately to the Newtons[10], and is a prebend of Lincoln. Hather.

" About a mile from Hayder I ſaw the ruines of " Cattleby priory, now longing to one [Robert] Car of " Sleford, a proper gentleman, whoſe father was a " rich merchant of the ſtaple[i]." It was of the Sempringham order, founded by Peter de Belingay t. Steph. valued at £.33. 18s.[k] Iſabel, daughter and heir of ſir Robert Carr of Sleford, bart. the laſt of this family, married John Hervey, firſt earl of Briſtol, whoſe grandſon Frederick, now earl of Briſtol, and biſhop of Derry in Ireland, is poſſeſſed of Sleford, and a large eſtate in Lincolnſhire in her right. Cattleby priory.

" The town of Sleford is builded for the moſt " part of ſtone, as moſt part of all the towns of Keſ- " teven are: for the ſoil is plentiful of ſtone. The " church is large, and for houſes in the town I " marked but two very fair, the one longeth to the " parſonage as a prebend of £.16. in Lincolnſhire, " and ſtandith at the eaſt end of the church; and " Carre houſe ſtanding at the ſouth ſide of it. With- " out the town ſtandith weſt ſouth-weſt the propre " caſtle of Sleford, very well maintained, and it is " compaſſed with a running ſtreme coming by a cut " out of a little fen lying almoſt flat weſt againſt it. " In the gatehouſe be two portcullices: a high tower " in the middle of the caſtle, but not ſet upon a hill " of raiſed earth: the vaults of the caſtle by the " ground be fair. The houſe or manor place lately " almoſt new buildid of ſtone and timber by the " lord Huſey ſtandeth ſouthward without the town[l]." " The town nor market is of no price: the orna- " ments of it is the biſhop of Lincoln's caſtle and " the late lord Huſſey's houſe[m]." Many Roman coins have been found at Sleaford. It is probable biſhop Alexander built his caſtle on a Roman ſite ſituate in what is called Old Sleaford in Quarington pariſh. It is reduced to an inconſiderable maſs of ſtone at the north-eaſt corner. The other Roman road comes in from the fen country and at the interſection of the two roads the town ſtood[n]. It has a market and a good inn or two. Two croſs baſes are at entering the town from London. Its freeſchool and hoſpital were both founded by Robert Carre, eſq. 1603[o], and adjoin to the manſion houſe of the Carre family mentioned by Leland on the ſouth ſide of the church. The monuments of this family remain on each ſide the entrance into the chancel, for Robert Carre, chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter and privy counſellor, who died Nov. 14, 1682. Joſeph Carre, who died September 11, 1590, ſir Edward Oct. 1, 1618, and his ſon and heir ſir Edward, who died Dec. 28, 1683, being the fourth baronet of the family, and laſt heir male. From the Carres the eſtate and manor came by marriage to the preſent earl of Briſtol, who alſo preſents to the living, which is of exempt juriſdiction, and has archidiaconal viſitation within itſelf. The vicar is alſo maſter of the ſchool, which the preſent vicar has removed from the Carre Sleaford.

[d] Ingulph. 492. [e] Stuk. It. I. 10. [f] Mon. Ang. II. 532. 535. [g] Tan. 276.
[10] G. [h] Lel. I. 29. [i] Lel. I. 29. [k] Tan. 265.
[l] Lel. I. 29, 30. [m] Lel. VII. 48. [n] Stukeley, I. 8. Salmon, p. 252.
[o] Lel. Ib. Robert Carr, of Sleford, whoſe father was a rich merchant of the Staple, (Lel. I. 22.) had a grant of Cattley abbey 31 Henry VIII. Tan. 265.

manſion into the Veſtry on the north ſide of the church. The 12 bedeſmen have an allowance of 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly in money, beſides other advantages. On the water table at the eaſt end of the church is cut this inſcription.

" Orate pro aïab' Ricardi Dekke & Johanne uxor'
" ej' Johannis filii eor' et omnium benefactor' ej' quor'
" quor' aiaꝟs ꝑpiciet' ds. A. D. M° CCCC. III." and on that at the ſouth-weſt ſide,

" Here lyeth William Harebeter, and Elyſabeth his " wyfe.
" Cryeſt ihu graunte yem everlaſtyng lyfe."

An outer waall and part of the gate, arch, and poſtern at a farm at the ſouth entrance of the town are all that now remains of lord Huſſey's manſion.

" The chief ſpring of Sleford water riſith a little
" from Roſeby village, about a mile by weſt from
" Sleford [p]."

Near Sleaford were found 1748, a coin of Nero middle braſs, SECVRITAS AVGVSTI; of Commodus, figura militaris gradien: of D. N. Conſtantius Nob. Cæſ. SALVS D.N.N.AVG, the monogram with A. Ω. and in the ruins of the caſtle coins of Tetricus jun.

S.Leſſingham. South Leſſingham, about two miles from Sleford, is the ſeat of the earl of Briſtol, as formerly of the Carres.

Kyme. " Kyme; the goodly houſe and park is three miles
" from Sleford [q]." At Kyme was a priory of Black canons, founded by Philip de Kyme t. Henry II. valued at £.101. per annum [r]. The eſtate was anciently the property of the barons Kyme, whoſe heir married Robert Umfreville earl of Angus. His heir married Buroden who had an only daughter Eleanor married to Henry Talbois t. Richard II. In 21 Henry VIII. ſir Gilbert Talbois was created baron Talbois of Kyme, and lies buried in the church here, where is his tomb, and this inſcription in braſs on the marble: " Gilbert lord Tailboys, lord of Kyme,
" married Elizabeth the daughter of ſir John Blount,
" knt. of Kinlet in Shropſhire, and died 15 April
" 1530." His widow was the celebrated miſtreſs of Henry VIII. [s] Upon the death of his daughter Elizabeth counteſs of Warwick, Kyme went by deſcent to the Dimocks of Scrivelsby, and of late belonged to the duke of Newcaſtle, who ſold it to ſir Abraham Hume of Wormley bury in Hertfordſhire, bart. who had acquired a large fortune in the Eaſt Indies.

Haverholm. Haverholm, a houſe of Gilbertines, founded by biſhop Alexander after his Ciſtertians changed it for Louth park, valued at £.70. [t]

Temple bruer. Temple bruer was, before 1183, a preceptory of Knights Templars and Hoſpitallers, valued at £.184. per ann. [u] Here was when Mr. Buck drew it a round church after the model of the Holy Sepulchre, but now only the tower and ſome vaults. " There be " great and vaſt buildings, but rude, at this place,
" and the eaſt end of the temple is made opere cir-
" culari de more . . . [x]" Overagainſt this place Dr. Stukeley ſaw a croſs on a ſtone cut through in the ſhape of that borne by the Knights Templars, which he ſuppoſed a boundary of their demeſnes [y]. The like are to be ſeen on the heath about Snailwell and Fordham c. Cambridge, as boundaries of the poſſeſſions of the ſame order.

" Hereabout Hermen ſtreet is very bold and per" fect made of ſtone gathered all along from the ſu-" perficial quarries. It goes perfectly ſtrait from " Ancaſter to Lincoln full north butting on the " weſt ſide of Lincoln town. A tumulus ſome time
" upon the centre of it. It is about 30 feet broad,
" made of ſtone, piled up into an eaſy convexity.
" There is likewiſe generally a little trench dug in " the natural earth along both ſides of the road [z]."

Barlings or Oxeney a Premonſtratenſian abbey, Barl founded 1154, valued at £.242. [a] The centre tower of the church ſupported by four arches, was engraved by Buck 1726. It ſtands in Lindſey diviſion near Wragby. One Makerell prior here headed the commons of the county under the name of capt. Cobler, when they roſe 1536 at the beginning of the diſſolution of religious houſes. They diſperſed on an offer of pardon, but their leader was taken and executed [b].

" The caſtle of Belvoir ſtandeth in the utter part Bel
" that way of Leirceſterſhire, on the very knape of an " high hill ſteep up each way partly by nature partly
" by working of mens hands, as it may evidently " be perceived. Whether there were any caſtle there " before the Conqueſt or no I am not ſure, but " ſurely I think rather no than ye. Toteneius was " the firſt inhabiter there after the Conqueſt. Then
" it came to Albeneius, and from Albeney to Ros.
" The lord Ros took king Henry VI's part againſt
" king Edward, whereupon his lands were confiſcated,
" and Belever caſtle given in keeping to lord Haſtings,
" who coming thither on a time to peruſe the ground
" and to lie in the caſtle, was ſuddenly repelled by " Mr. Harrington a man of power thereabouts and " friend to the lord Ros. Wherupon the lord
" Haſtings cam thither another time with a ſtrong
" power, and upon a raging will ſpoiled the caſtle,
" defacing the roofs, and taking the leads off them.
" Then fell all the caſtle to ruin, and the timber of " the roofs uncovered rotted away, and the ſoil be" tween the walls at the laſt grew full of elders, and
" no habitation was there till that of late days the " earl of Rutland hath made it fairer than ever it
" was. It is a ſtrange ſight to ſe by how many
" ſteps of ſtone the way goeth up from the village
" to the caſtle. In the caſtle be two fair gates, and
" the dungeon is a fair round tower, now turned to " pleaſure as a place to walk in and to ſe all the " country about, and railed about the round wall,
" and a garden in the middle. There is a well of " a great depth in the caſtle, and the ſpring thereof
" is very good [c]." The caſtle is now much out of repair [d], the capital pictures removed to London. Among them were ſeveral by Salvator Roſa [e], and one of Charles I. as he ſat at his trial, falſely aſcribed to Vandyke who was dead ſome years before. Only the ſtables of this manſion are in this county. The priory was founded for black monks, a cell to St. Alban's, valued at £.104. per ann [f]. Dr. Stukeley 1726 ſaw the coffin and bones of the founder who died 1088, dug up in the priory chapel then a ſtable, and on a ſtone inſcribed in large letters with

[p] Lel. I. 30. [q] Lel. VII. 48. [r] Tan. 275.
[s] MSS. penes J. C. Brooke de Coll. Arm. [t] Tan. 260.
[u] Tan. 274. [x] Lel. I. 32. [y] It. I. 82. [z] Ib. [a] Tan. 270.
[b] Wood, Faſti Ox. I. 11. Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformation. Rapin VII. 540.
[c] Lel. I. 114. [d] Stukeley I. 49. [e] Walp. Cat. of Eng. p. 46.
[f] Tan. 256.

lead caſt in them ROBERT DE TODENE LE FVDEVRS. Another coffin and cover near it uninſcribed. "The vale of Bever barren of wood is "large and very plentifull of good corn and graſs "and lieth in three ſhires, Leiceſter, Lincoln, and "much in Nottinghamſhire[h]." Todeney's ſon William took the name of Albiny and ſtiled himſelf Brito to diſtinguiſh him from William de Albini pincerna. He won the battle of Tinchebray againſt Robert Curthoſe, and died t. Henry II. His ſon William died 14 Henry II. His grandſon William defended Rocheſter caſtle againſt king John, and died 1236, as did his ſon William before 32 Henry III. By the daughter of this Robert it came to the Rooſes[i], and by Eleanor daughter of Thomas Roos to the Manners, of whom Thomas was 17 Henry VIII. created earl of Rutland, and his lineal deſcendant John, duke of Rutland 1703, 2 An. which title is borne by his great great-grandſon Charles 3d and preſent duke. In the civil war Mr. Maiſon, rector of Aſhwell c. Rutland, defended this caſtle for the king. The parliament ordered it to be demoliſhed 1649, and ſatisfaction made to the earl, whoſe ſon rebuilt it after the reſtoration. Wolſtrop church on an adjoining hill was demoliſhed by the caſtle cannon pointed at a battery erected near it. The country between Belvoir and Grantham is full of beautiful hills, ſome covered with incloſures, others with woods ſheltering deer: the lands and roads between the hills bad and ſwampy, the vale, bating the ſpires, &c. which riſe about it, is flat and in ſome places marſhy, and affords no other pleaſure in the proſpect but from its extent. Moſt of the arable is common and unincloſed.

Alice, wife of Roger Bigot, 5 Stephen, fined to the king in £.198 10s. for her father's land or manor of Belvoir[k].

The Witham before it arrives at Paunton runs by Wolthorp, and afterwards by Stoke Rochford.

"Stoke, a four miles a this ſide Grantham, longith "now to maſter St. John[l]." Oliver St. John, eſquier to the dutcheſs of Somerſet, grandmother to Henry VII. who died 1503, is buried in the church, with others of that family[m], and likewiſe ſome of the Rochfords, from whom in all probability the place took the name of Stoke Rochford[n]. In 1654 ſir Edmund Turnor, knt. who was a younger ſon of the family of Turnor, of Milton Erneys, in the county of Bedford,) on which vicarage he ſettled the impropriate tithes of its pariſh, worth £. 100. per annum, and built an almſhouſe for ſix poor perſons,) became poſſeſſed of this manor in right of his wife one of the daughters of ſir John Harriſon of Balls c. Hertford, knt. He made it the place of his reſidence, and built an almſhouſe here for ſix poor perſons 1677, which he endowed with fee-farm-rents amounting to £.21. 10s. per ann.[o] The eſtate now belongs to his great grandſon and nameſake Edmund Turnor of Panton houſe near Wragby, eſq.

MARGIDUNUM is diſtant from Vernometum according to one Iter XIII, according to another only XII miles. Ward places it at Eaſt Bridgeford c. Nottingham, about which marle is found[p]. Stukeley[q], Gale, and Salmon[r] at Willoughby on the woulds.

"At Caſtelle Bitham yet remain great walls of "buildings. The lord Huſey was a late lord of "Bitham caſtle. Little Bitham, a village is hard "by, both in Lincolnſhire, as on the edge of it. "A little of Bitham riſeth of certain ſprings a broket, "and about a ford joineth the broke that divideth "the ſhires, and not far of is Robin Hudde's croſs, "a limes of the ſhires[s]." Here was a Ciſtercian priory from Fountains c. York, founded by William earl of Albini, removed to Vaudy[t]. Over a croſs on a grave-ſtone on the church wall, ÞOÞAN MASTEM.

Wolſthorpe, a hamlet to Coulſterworth, now a poſt town on the North road, gave birth 1643 to that great luminary in the Britiſh hemiſphere ſir Iſaac Newton. His great great grandfather John, ſon of John Newton of Weſtby in Baſingthorp in this county, purchaſed of the Cecil family the manor of Wolſthorp in Coulſterworth 1562, and was buried with his deſcendants in this church. The manor-houſe in which ſir Iſaac was born is ſtill remaining, and his ſtudy fitted up by himſelf in early life. He was educated at Grantham ſchool under Mr. Stokes, and after having held the wardenſhip of the mint and preſidency of the Royal Society, and publiſhed a variety of mathematical and philoſophical diſcoveries made by him, died in his 85th year 172$\frac{6}{7}$, and was buried in Weſtminſter abbey. His eſtate here deſcended to his uncle's family, whereof John the laſt of the male line ſold the manor of Wolſthorp to Edmund Turnor of Stoke Rochford, eſq. 1703. Wolſthorpe. Coulſterworth.

"Diſney alias de Iſenay he dwelleth at Diſeney, "and of his name and line be gentilmen of Fraunce. "Aileſham priory by Thorney Curtoiſe was of the "Diſeneys foundation, and there are divers of them "buried and likewiſe at Diſeney[u]." Leland, however ſeems to be under a miſtake in ſaying that Aileſham priory was of Diſeney's foundation. Dugdale[x] ſays that Elleſham in agro Lincolnienſi was founded by Beatrix wife of John de Amundeville[y], and recites the grants which were ſucceſſively given to the ſame by that family and by John de Dive (1277) who was ſon of ſir William de Dive who married Ermetrida the ſole heir of the Amundevilles, and which John de Dive dying without iſſue left his two ſiſters Elizabeth and Joan coheireſſes, the former marrying ſir Lambert Buſſy, knt. and the latter ſir William D'Eiſney, knt. Biſhop Tanner[z] alſo agrees with Dugdale, citing nevertheleſs Leland[a], who again ſays that "Aileſham priory was of the Diſſeneys "foundation," a miſtake which Leland probably fell into by not knowing or not diſtinguiſhing that the Diſneys had only married the coheir of the foundreſs and benefactors. Diſney.

In the chancel of Norton Diſney church are ſeveral very antient monuments of the Diſney family. The eſtate here was ſold by Molyneux Diſney, eſq. to the duke of Albemarle about 1674, was laſt the property of ſir Thomas Clarges, bart. deceaſed, and now of his ſon a minor. The manors of Swinderby and of the hamlet of Morton adjoining continue to belong to Lewis Diſney Ffytche, eſq. now of Danbury-place c. Eſſex.

At Eagle was a commandery and hoſpital of Templars and Hoſpitallers t. Stephen, valued at £. 124.[b] Eagle.

Boutheby belonged to a family of that name, whoſe Boothby.

[g] I. 49. and MS.
[h] Lel. I. 115.
[i] Dug. Bar. I. 111—115.
[k] Mag. rot. 5 Steph. rot 12. Madox Hiſt. of Exch. 216.
[l] Lel. V. 99.
[m] Harl. MS. 6129.
[n] Ib.
[o] Kennet's Caſe of Impropriations, p. 326.
[p] Horſl. Brit. Rom. 438.
[q] I. 100.
[r] P. 290.
[s] Lel. I. 26.
[t] Tan. 265.
[u] Lel. I. 29.
[x] Mon. Ang. II. 421.
[y] See Thoroton's Nottingh. p. 184.
[z] Not. Mon. 271.
[a] Collect. I. 94. and Itin. VI. 22.
[b] Tan. 263.

heireſs married Paynell, of whom ſir John was buried in this church 1420, and Elizabeth his wife and Richard lived there in Leland's time, and had a pretty ſtone houſe within a moat. It was from them called Boothby Pannel as was Newport Pannel in Buckinghamſhire. Biſhop Sanderſon was rector here [f].

Ropeſley. At Ropeſley was born Richard Fox founder of Grantham ſchool and Corpus Chriſti college, Oxford, ſucceſſively biſhop of Exeter, Bath and Wells, Durham, and Wincheſter; at which laſt place he died and was buried 1528.

Paunton. "Panton a village [g]." Baxter agrees with Mr. Camden in placing AD PONTEM here. Stukeley [d] makes it CAUSENNÆ, in which Salmon agrees with him placing Ad Pontem at Eaſt Bridgeford in Nottinghamſhire [e]. Horſley puts it at Southwell [f]. Many arched vaults about Great Paunton. Many Roman coins have been found here and in all the neighbourhood round, alſo Moſaic pavements, Roman bricks and urns. A ſilver Trajan was found by the high dike in ditching near the woodnoll in Little Paunton pariſh [g].

Great Paunton church, eſteemed one of the fineſt old buildings in this part of England, was completed 1519 at the expence of Anthony Ellis, eſq. merchant of the Staple, who lies interred in the chancel. The arms of Ellis G. on a feſs A between 3 creſcents O as many eſcallops Az. impaling thoſe of Ayſcough, are repeatedly carved on the tower with this ſentence, Thynke and thanke God of all.

Strawſton. At Strawſton near Paunton many Roman coins and vaults found [h].

The Foſſe way partly paved with blue flag ſtones laid on edge runs by theſe places from Newark to Leiceſter.

CROCOLANA Gale [i] places CROCOLANA at Collingham in Nottinghamſhire; Stukeley [k] and Horſley [l] at Brough near Collingham three miles from Newark; Salmon [m] at Newark.

Ancaſter. "Ancaſter ſtandeth on Wateling as in the high "way to Lincoln. It is now but a very poor ſtreet "having a ſmall church. But in times paſt it hath "been a celebrate town, but not wallid as far as I "could perceive. The building of it lay in length "by ſouth and north. In ſouth end of it be often "times found in ploughing great ſquare ſtones of "old buildings and Roman coins of braſs and ſilver. "In the weſt end where now meadows be are found "in ditching great vaults: the area right againſt "the eaſt end of the church where the caſtle ſtood is "large, and the dikes of it appear, and in ſome places "the foundations of the wall. In the higheſt ground "of this area is now an old chapel, dedicated to St. "Mary, and there is an heremite. The townelet is "divided into two lordſhips; the eaſt end of it, at "the ſouth end whereof the caſtle is ſet, is of the "lordſhip of Wilesforde, ſometime longing to the "lord Cromwelle, and after, as I heard, ſold with "other things to the performance of one of the lord "Cromwells wills, and after Burne priory in Keſtene "had it by the meane of Margaret mother to Henry "VII. The duke of Suffolk hath it now. The "weſt ſide of the town, where the pariſh church "ſtood, was the Veſcys, and the patronage of the "church with impropriation was given by one of them "to Malton priory in Rideſdale. The town hath "on each ſide of it a ſpring, and they coming to "one bottom anon after run into Willesford ſtream. "The heath of Ancaſter containeth in length about "14 miles and in breadth about .... and cometh "within two miles of the fens [n]." The caſtle ditch is in the Red Lion bowling green, the foundation in Caſtle cloſe. The church is a neat building with a lofty ſpire. In the yard two prieſts cut in ſtone, and this inſcription: Priez pur le alme ſire Jean Colman Chevalier. Plenty of Roman coins are found in the town and on the hills round it [o]. Mr. Sympſon of Lincoln had a fine denarius of Otho found here, now in lord Sandwich's cabinet. Rev. SECVRITAS P. R. Harriſon [p] mentions Moſaic pavements. Mr. Gale derived Ancaſter and Hunnington from onne an aſh tree, and Dr. Stukeley from onna a boggy valley [q].

"Harrington dwellith beſide Ankeſtre [r]."

Ancaſter gave title of duke 1715 1 George I. to Robert Bertie, who was ſucceeded 1723 by his ſon Peregrine, and he 1741 by his ſon and nameſake, who dying 1778, was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, and he 1779 by his uncle Brownlow 5th and preſent duke.

"The Veſies were lords of a caſtle called Cadorpe Ca "in Keſten, three miles north from Ancaſter. Since "it came to the lord Bellemont, and now the duke "of Norfolk hath it [s]."

At Hunnington near Ancaſter is a ſmall Roman Hu ſummer camp ſquare, double trenched, the entrance on the eaſt. (See Pl. V. fig. 6.) In 1691 a number of Roman coins and ſome bits of weapons and bridles, and two urns full of coins were found there.

Both Caythorp and Hunnington were ſeats of the two branches of the Huſſey family.

The Ermen ſtreet, now called the Highdike road, goes along the heath, which preſerves it from being worn away [t]. I have ſeen baſes of milliaries, and one or two fragments of milliaries on its ſides. Dr. Stukeley [u] ſays on this road there are many ſtones placed, but moſt ſeem modern and like ſtumps of croſſes, yet probably are mile ſtones. It would be of little uſe to meaſure the intervals, for one would find that the whole diſtance between two towns was equally divided by ſuch a number of paces as came neareſt the total. In the valley from Hunnington to Carleton is a large flat tumulus. There are many in this county, and the lower rich part of it has ſcarce a village without them. Two at Normanton, others at Ledenham in Harlaxton lane, at Denton, one between Frekingham and Briggend, and one on the heath among the goſs overlooking Saltersford. Theſe are probably Britiſh. An old man of Ancaſter told Leland [x] that at Ureſby or Roſeby (q. Harrowby) a plowman took up a ſtone, and found another ſtone under it, in which was a ſquare hole full of Roman coins, and another in Harleſton fields two miles from Grantham, a ſtone under which was a braſs pot and a helmet of gold ſet with ſtones, which were preſented to Catherine princeſs

[f] G. [g] Lel. VII. 51.
[d] I. p. 80. He derives the name of Keſteven from Cauſennæ, and ſays that Brigcaſterton is really not in that diviſion.
[e] P. 293. [f] I. 100. [g] Stukeley I. 84. 2d ed. [h] Ib.
[i] P. 102. [k] Stukeley I. 98. [l] P. 440. [m] P. 295.
[n] Lel. I. 30. [o] Stuk. I. 80. [p] Deſcription of Brit. II. 17. [q] Gale's letters, p. 141.
[r] Lel. VII. 52. [s] Lel. I. 30.
[t] Stukeley I. 80. Dr. Salmon contends that this is not the true Ermine ſtreet, one of the four chemini majores, but that it runs from London to the coaſt of Norfolk. New Survey, p. 240, 241.
[u] Stukeley MS. [x] It. I. 82.

dowager.

dowager. There were beads of ſilver in the pot and writings corrupted[y]. At Harlaxton, ſometime the ſeat of the family of De-Ligne, deſcended from Monſ. Jean de Ligne, baron de Barbaſon, and knight of the order of the Golden Fleece, and now the ſeat of George De Ligne Gregory, eſq. was found about 1740, an urn containing burnt bones and coins of Gallienus, Claudius Gothicus, &c. and a ſeal inſcribed S. Cantabrygg, and within it Hirſlyncſton. Roger Hirſlyncton or Hirlyncton of this place was ſheriff 47 Edward III. 1374[z], as was ſir Daniel De Ligne, knt. in 1631.

In Denton fields (the antient and preſent ſeat of the Welbys) was found 1727-8 a Moſaic pavement about one foot and an half under ground extending near 30 feet, the principal room 20 feet by 30, only one piece of red, white, and blue teſſelæ, ſeveral large pieces of Roman bricks in the foundations of the partitions that divided the rooms, and ſeveral human bones. Salters road adjoining may have been uſed by the Romans for bringing ſalt from Holland over Brigend cauſey to Leiceſter and the inland parts[a].

At Hough is a hill called Loveden, which gave name to the hundred, and had ruins on it.

At Ingoldſby pariſh is Round hills, a circular camp 500 feet diameter; large works by a wood ſide[b].

"Buſſey that was ſo great in Richard II's days, and "was beheaded at Briſtol, had his principal houſe "and manor place at Hougheham three miles from "Grantham. His wife lies at Howheham and divers "of the Buſſes in the ſaid pariſh church. Buſſey "that is now alive is the 5th or 6th from great "Buſſey that was beheaded, and is the laſt heir male "of this houſe, which came out of Normandy[c]."

Grantham 18 miles from Lincoln in Leland's time[d], now 28, is a large market town and corporation on the Ermine-ſtreet here made a turnpike road. The church was the ſee of a ſuffragan biſhop, but the church of Lincoln got the lands. North and South Grantham two prebends in Salisbury cathedral maintain the reſpective ailes of this church, and the middle between them. The church was endowed A. D. 1100 by Hugh biſhop of Lincoln, and the vicarages of North and South Grantham augmented by biſhop Sanderſon with 100*l.* towards a houſe for the vicars. It is dedicated to St. Wulfran biſhop of Triers who perfected the converſion of the Friſones, and died and was buried here, with St. Symphorian the martyr and St. Ebritha[e]. The church is ſpacious and elegant, and has a handſome eaſt aile with a vault under it, as are alſo the veſtry and a large charnel houſe. In the nave is a beautiful monument to ſir Dudley Ryder lord chief juſtice of the King's Bench who died 1756, and whoſe ſon Nathaniel was created lord Harrowby 1776. The font is adorned with ſcripture hiſtory in relief. The ſpire 100 feet high is beautifully froſted. A weekly lecture was founded here as at Wakefield by lady Camden. A freeſchool by biſhop Fox who was born here, as was alſo John Stil biſhop of Bath and Wells from 1592 to 1607. Here are two charity ſchools. Here was a houſe of Grey friars 1290[f]. The angel inn ſeems to have been a commandery[g]. In the houſe of Mr. Fiſher, ſhoemaker, is a neat little ſtone oratory, uſed as a parlour, covered with rude carving of ſcripture hiſtory, the crucifixion, apoſtles, ſymbols of the evangeliſts, and over the crucifixion ſomething like a date, ſee Pl. III. fig. 13. The caſtle was near the cloſe by the river eaſt of the church. Dr. Stukeley had a braſs Claudius found at this town: Rev. CERES AVGVSTA, and mentions a large braſs of Antoninus found 1726 near Slade mill. Queen Eleanor's croſs ſtood before Mr. Hacket's houſe, called Peter church hill, where ſtood a church dedicated to St. Peter, now demoliſhed. The town gave title of earl to William III. to Henry eldeſt ſon of Henry Naſſau lord d'Auverquerque[12] ſince extinct, and that of baron 1761 to ſir Thomas Robinſon, who died 1770, and whoſe ſon and nameſake now enjoys it.

Near Grantham was Neubo a Premonſtratenſian convent, founded 1198, valued at £.71[h]. Neubo.

A mile hence is Belton, a modern houſe of the Brownlows viſcounts Tyrconnel of Ireland[13], which paſſed by marriage to ſir John Cuſt, bart. ſpeaker of the Houſe of Commons, whoſe mother was ſiſter and heir of the laſt viſcount Tyrconnel, and whoſe ſon Brownlow was created baron Brownlow of Belton 1776. A large braſs of Trajan was found near four Roman urns on the Roman road by his lordſhip's grounds 1740[i]. In Grantham fields was found 1738, an oval ſeal of hæmatites or ſerpentine ſtone, mean work, with ſix figures at an inauguration or human ſacrifice[k]. Planks of foſſil wood two feet broad, feather edged, lying along ſide each other and after digging 100 yards at 15 or 16 feet deep neither end nor beginning to them, were found in Water Furrows in a field at Spittlegate near Grantham in digging for brick earth 1748[k]. Belton.

Overagainſt Belton is Sedgebrook, the lordſhip and burial-place of the Markhams, of which family was the famous and upright judge, who, being diſplaced on a very honourable account, for refuſing though deſired by king Edward IV. to give a charge contrary to his conſcience, retired here, and built this mauſoleum with a chamber over it, where he ſpent his days in devotion. His monument remains not much defaced[14], a marble tomb robbed of its braſſes, except one whereon Markham impales Leake. Sedgebrook.

On the Witham at Long Bennington was an alien Ciſtertian priory before 1175, valued at £.90[l]. Long Bennington.

The river Witham being almoſt ſilted up in ſome parts near its mouth, an act was obtained for incloſing certain fens in order to repay the expence of clearing it. Its original channel to the north-eaſt of the preſent has been long ſince filled up, and is now become the high road to Tatterſal, &c. Witham.

"The old buildings of Torkeſey were on the ſouth "of the new town, but there is now little more "than a chapel, where men ſay was the pariſh "church of old Torkſey, and on Trent ſide the "earth ſo balkith up that it ſheweth that there "be likelihood had been ſome walls, and by it is a hill "of earth caſt up, called the Wind-Mill hill, bu "I think the dongeon of ſome old caſtle was there. "There be two ſmall pariſh churches in new Tork-"ſey, and the priory of St. Leonard ſtandeth on the "eaſt ſide of it[m]," founded by king John for black canons, valued at £.13.[n] The prior and convent fined to king John in a palfrey for confirmation of their grants, and that they might not be put to plead except before the king[o]. The antient charter is ſtill preſerved here, and the village enjoys the privilege of a toll from ſtrangers bringing cattle or goods this way, and a conſiderable fair on Whitſun Torkeſey.

[y] Lel. I. 31. [z] Spalding Soc. min. [a] Stukeley MS. [b] Ib. [c] Lel. VI. 68.
[d] Lel. I. 32. [e] Ecton. Stukeley MS. Lel. Coll. I. [f] Tan. 213. [g] Stuk. I. 49.
[12] G. [13] G. [14] G.
[h] Tan. 277. [i] Tan. 280. [k] A. S. Min. [l] Spalding ſoc. min. [m] Lel. I. 35. [n] Tan. 278.
[o] Mag. rot. 3 Joh. 1. a. Madox, Hiſt. of the Exchеq. p. 81.

Monday [15]. Torkſey belongs to ſir Abraham Hume, bart. whoſe father bought it of the duke of Newcaſtle for £.30,000. It is worth £.200 per ann.

Foſſe. Dr. Stukeley travelling on the Foſsdike all the way to Torkſey ſaw not the leaſt doubt that this artificial canal was made by the Romans as a continuation of Caredike, which keeps company with the Ermine ſtreet on its weſt ſide all the way from the Welland, and about Catesbridge goes on the eaſt ſide the cauſeway beyond Sleford till it reaches the river Witham. Cardyke ſignifies no more than Fendike. The fens of Ankholme level are called Carrs [p]. "Torkſey was a Roman town, built at the entrance of the Foſs into the Trent to ſecure the navigation of thoſe parts and as a ſtorehouſe for corn, and was walled about. They dig up the foundations now and then, and we ſee thoſe of houſes as we walk along the ſtreets. They ſay here have been ſeven pariſh churches and two abbies; but there really were only three churches and the ſmall priory above-mentioned. The preſent caſtle is founded on the old Roman granary, which was much like Colcheſter caſtle with circular towers at the corners. A foundation ſtill viſible all along the edge of the original ſite. Trent undoubtedly in the Roman times ran cloſe by the caſtle. The country hereabout is a very ſtrong ſand, and on this declining ſhore it was that Paulinus baptized the Lindiſſians in preſence of Edwin king of Northumberland as Bede [q], and there was the long ſought Tiovulfingacæſtre [r] of that author. This ſhore all along the river hereabout is a ſand, and ſometimes they can ride acroſs the river, and I ſaw waggons laden with hay paſs over the Foſsdike near its mouth. St. Mary is the preſent name of the church: St. Peter's is at the north end of the town, St. Laurence eaſtward. The abbey was demoliſhed within memory: the priory ſtood near the Foſsdyke."

"Agelocum the Roman city at the paſs of the Ermine ſtreet over Trent is but two miles off: from that paſs runs a ſtrait road through this town parallel to the river leading to the bridge over Foſs and ſo to Crococolana. The Romans conducted the outlet of the Foſsdike between two little hills into an angle of the Trent. It went originally ſtrait forwards through the river into the marſhes which are chiefly made ſince that time by accretion of ſand. About 80 years ago, when the navigation was reſtored by Lincoln, they made a new crooked cut for the Foſs into Trent. The water at the ſluice is generally one yard and a half higher in Foſs than Trent [s]."

"By old Torkſey ſtandith ſouthely the ruins of "Foſſe nunnery hard by the ſtone bridge near Foſſe "dik, and there Foſs dike hath his entering into "Trent [t]." It was a Benedictine nunnery, begun by the inhabitants of Torkſey t. John, confirmed by Henry III. valued at £.7. [u]

"The Foſſe diche begynnith a quarter of a mile "above Lincoln, and ſo goith to Torkſey ſide a 7 "mile ſtrait in length. Biſhop Atwater began to "clenſe Foſſe dike and brought to the middle the "clenſing of it from Torkſey ſide in hope to bring "veſſels to Lincoln, but on his death ſoon after it "was intirely neglected [x]."

"The curſe of Lindis river from Lincoln to Boſ- "ton a 50 miles be water as the crekes go, and 24 "miles from Lincoln to Boſton to take way by ferry. "There be no bridges on Lindis river from Lin- "coln to Boſton, but Thorn bridge a little beneth "High bridge. High bridge hath but one great "arch, and over a piece of it is a chapel of St. "George [y]."

Two miles weſt from Lincoln is Skellingthorpe, the valuable lordſhip whereof worth £.520. per ann. was bequeathed to Chriſt's hoſpital, London, by Henry Stone, who gave his whole perſonal eſtate amounting to £.4000. to the ſame pious uſes [16].

"It is very likely that in old time the top of the hill "[at Lincoln] was walled and inhabited. The river of "Lincoln breaking into two arms a very little above "the town paſſeth thorough the lower part of "Lincoln town in two ſeveral parts of the ſouth "end of the town very comodiouſly, and over each "of them is an arched bridge of ſtone to paſs "the principal ſtreet. The leſſer arm lyith more "ſouthly, and the bridge over it is of one arch. "The bigger arm fert cymbas piſcatorias. Gote "bridge to paſs over the leſſer arm; High bridge "to paſs over the great arm. A little above Gote "bridge on the eſt ſide of the high ſtreet is a fair "guildhall longing to St. Anne's church, of the "foundation of Burton and Sutton merchants. A "very goodly houſe longing to Sutton is hard on "the north ſide of St. Anne's church yard. I heard "ſay that the lower part of Lincoln town was all "mariſch, and won by policy, and inhabited for "the commodity of the water. This part is called "Wikerford [Wikeford], and in it be 11 pariſh churches "[now three]; one there I ſaw in clene ruine, beſide "the other 11. The White friars were on the weſt "ſide of the high ſtreet in Wikerford. There be in "the reſidue of the town, as in the north part on the "hill, 13 pariſh churches yet uſed [now three]. I ſaw "a roll wherein I countid that there were 38 pariſh "churches in Lincoln. There goeth a common fame "that there were once 52 pariſh churches in the city "of Lincoln and the ſuburbs of it. Some hold that "eaſt of Lincoln were two ſuburbs, one towards St. "Beges, a late cell to St. Mari abbey at York, which "place I take to be Icanno, where was an houſe of "monks in St. Botolph's time, and of this ſpeaketh "Bede: it is ſcant half a mile from the minſter; the "other by E. ſtreatchid up toward Canwike village, "half a mile off from Lincoln. There was alſo a "ſuburb beyond the north gate, and ſtretched "toward Burton village, or more weſtward: king "Stephen deſtroyed much of it. There lay a "ſuburb alſo with the Barr gate by ſouth of the "town, and ſtreched toward a village called Braſe- "bridge. It is eaſy to be perceived that the town "of Lincoln hath been notably builded at three "times. The firſt building was in the very top of "the hill, the oldeſt part whereof, inhabited in the "Britans time, was the north-eaſt part of the hill, "directly without Newport gate, the ditches whereof "yet remain, and great tokens of the old town "walls, with ſtones taken out of the ditch by it: for "all the top of Lincoln hill is quarre ground. This "is now a ſuburb to Newport gate, in the which "now is no notable thing, but the ruinsof the houſe of "the Auguſtine friars on the ſouth ſide, and a paroch

[p] Salmon New Survey, p. 241. [15] G. [q] Lib. XI. c. 16.

[r] This has been ſuppoſed Southwell, c. Nottingham; but as Bede ſeems to place it in provincia Lindiſſi, Torkſey has a much better right to it. Southwell is on the north ſide and three miles off on the Trent; whereas Bede ſays this province was on the ſouth ſide Humber, between Lincoln and that river, and this baptiſm could not be on Trent at a town three miles from it.

[s] Stukeley's letter to Mr. Gale, Aug. 2. 1735.

[t] Lel. I. 35. [u] Tan. 279. [x] Lel. I. 32. [y] Ib. [16] G.

"church

"church on the eaſt ſide, and not far from the church "garth appeareth a great ruin of a tower in the old "town wall. Some ſay that this old Lincoln was "deſtroyed by king Stephen, but I think rather by the "Danes. Much Roman money is found in the north "fields beyond this old Lincoln. After its de-"ſtruction men began to fortify the ſouth part of the "hill, new ditching, walling, and gating it, and "ſo was New Lincoln made out of a piece of Old "Lincoln by the Saxons. The third building of "later times was in Wickesford for commodite of "water, and this part is enwallid where it is not de-"fended with the river and marſh ground. The "river of Lindis fleateth a little above Lincoln "town, and maketh certain pools, whereof one is "called Swann poole. Gualterus, as I heard, called "Dorotheus, dean of Lincoln, a Scotchman, firſt "founder of the White Friars. There lay in a "chapel at the White friers a rich merchant called "Ranulphus de Kyme, whoſe image was thens taken "and ſet at the ſouth end of the new caſtle of the "conduit of water in Wikerford. There is another "new caſtle of conduit head trans Lindim fl ; "and booth there be ſerved by pipes derived from "one of the houſes of [freres] which were in upper "part of Lincoln." Reginaldus Molendinarius "merchant of Lincoln founder of the Grey Friars, "Henry Lacy earl of Lincoln, and one Nunny "his almoner, were great benefactors to it[z]."

Both theſe conduits remain, and, at the new laying of the pipes 17--, the late Mr. Sympſon ſaw where the old pipe had been cut off that ſupplied the friary, and the other fixed to convey the water forward to the then new erected conduit.

Twyne[a] obſerved the name of Nichol in antient charters, and the records of the earls of Lincoln in French as low as Edward IV's time, and Caxton calls it ſo in his Chronicle, p. 141. 295[17]. It is not to be doubted that the preſent name of Lincoln is compounded of Lindum colonia. May one ſuggeſt a ſuſpicion that Nichol is owing to ſome miſreading of Incol, or Lincol, or to the imperfect pronunciation of the Normans, as the French have diſguiſed many Engliſh proper names in later times. The ſituation of this city is very ſingular; the cathedral and all the north part ſtands on a very high hill, whoſe ſouth ſlope is ſo ſteep that carriages and horſes are obliged to fetch a compaſs to get into the lower town, while the ſame hill on the north ſide riſes ſcarce diſcernibly. For the relief of the aged and weary travellers a convenient reſting place called the mayor's chair was fixed here at the city's expence 1732. The town below hill, as they call it, is ſo flat, that the river Witham, which runs through it within the walls, noted to a proverb for its pikes, frequently overflows the ſtreet. All the tract on the weſt ſide of the city below the hill is called Newland, probably from its being recovered from the water which overflowed all the grounds hereabouts, as well as the ſouth ſuburb, called Wyckford, which Leland ſays he heard ſay was "al mariſch, and won be policy, and inhabited for the "commodite of the water." Swanpool, in the parish of Botham, ſurrounded partly by Botham common, and partly by that part of Lincoln common called the Holme, has but little communication with this river. Carham, or Carholm, is on the north ſide of the foſs dike, where Stukeley[b] places the Britiſh city, and from this lyn, or lake, and dun the hill, ſuppoſes the Roman city above was named.

The part of the town now called the Bail was undoubtedly the old Roman Lindum, the veſtigia of whoſe walls are yet viſible on every ſide, and of its four gates anſwering to the four cardinal points the eaſt and ſouth remained till very lately; the north is ſtill entire. The form of this city was a parallelogram divided into four equal parts by the interſection of two great ſtreets at the right angle. The whole was ſurrounded with a prodigious ſtrong wall and deep trench, except on the ſouth ſide, and there the wall ſtanding on the very edge of the hill wanted no other additional ſecurity than the ſteepneſs of the aſcent to prevent any attack in that quarter. The length of the old Roman city from eaſt to weſt was 1300 feet, the breadth from north to ſouth 1200, containing about 38 acres. The ſouth gate, of ſimilar work with Newport or the north gate, ſtood about 90 feet north of the preſent Bail gate. It was pulled down about the beginning of this century by the proprietor of the houſe adjoining to it on the eaſt ſide of the ſtreet, in a chamber of which, now occupied by a barber, may be ſeen the eaſt poſtern intire; but of the principal gate nothing now remains except the foundation ſtones on each ſide of the ſtreet, and one jamb between the houſes on the weſt ſide, with two or three cuniform ſtones juſt above the ſpringing of the arch. It was not without great difficulty that this venerable piece of antiquity was demoliſhed. The workmen with a huge piece of timber ſhod with iron like a battering ram battered in pieces one of the ſtones in or near the crown of the arch, expecting that the whole would then fall together, but every ſtone being as it were a key, the reſt ſhrunk together, and fixed as firm as ever.

The north or Newport gate, though only the ſouth face of the original work now remains, is perhaps the nobleſt remnant of the ſort in Britain. The diameter of the great arch is 15 feet, compoſed of 26 large ſtones of coarſe grit, laid ſeemingly without any mortar, and no key ſtone, but a joint in the crown: height 22 feet and a half, 11 buried in the ground. On each ſide of the arch are laid ſeven courſes of horizontal ſtones called ſpringers, ſome of them ſix or ſeven feet long, intended to take off the ſide preſſure from the arch. The diameter of each ſide arch ſeven feet and a half, height in all 15 feet, buried to the impoſts, breadth of each pier 39; whole width of the front 22 feet and a half, and whole height 37 and a half. All the mouldings, except the upper member, are broken off, and the whole appears to have been almoſt ruined long before the parts above it and the outer front were erected, the antient work being diſtinguiſhed from the modern by the remarkable length of the ſtones, and the whole ſeems to be built without mortar[c]. See a view of it engraved from a drawing by Mr. Buck, Pl. III. fig. 14.

The eaſt gate was intire 1740, a little north of the preſent gateway, but walled up and making part of the gable end of a dwelling houſe, a ſtable belonging to the White Bear inn being built againſt the other part. This gate had been of the ſame dimenſions as the laſt, and built in the ſame manner, except that the arch had a keyſtone in the crown which Newport gate had not. The ground being [z] Leland. I. 32, 33, 34.

[a] Brev. of Brit. f. 24. b. [17] G.
[b] It. I. 83.
[c] Mr. Eſſex, Archæol. IV. 82, 83.

raiſed ten or twelve feet to the very ſpring of the arch, the poſterns were quite buried. About the year 1730, lord Burlington cauſed the rubbiſh to be dug up to the foundations of the jambs on each ſide, and had it quite opened for a better view of it, when it preſented a moſt venerable appearance. Near it was found a large braſs coin of Trajan [d]. It was taken down about 25 years ago by ſir Cecil Wray, when he built a new houſe now belonging to Mr. Thorold.

The weſt gate the late Mr. Sympſon apprehended to have ſtood whereabout is now the ſally port from the caſtle, and to have been probably demoliſhed when the Conqueror built the caſtle, which takes up near a fourth part of the old Roman city.

The cloſe of the cathedral takes in very near half of the old Roman city eaſtward. The weſt wall of the cloſe beginning at the ſouth gate on the brow of the hill runs northward almoſt up to the Newport gate, and leaves little more than the breadth of a lane formerly called the Eaſt Byght between it and the Roman wall from Newport gate to Eaſt gate. By the two walls running thus parallel round the whole north-eaſt corner of the Roman city, and within ſo ſmall a diſtance of one another, it may be imagined that the city wall was ruined before biſhop Sutton's time, who, by licence of Edward I. built the cloſe wall for the ſecurity of the canons and other miniſters of the church reſorting thither at midnight to ſay mattins; but the circuit of the cloſe reaches conſiderably beyond the old Roman city towards the eaſt; for the Roman wall went in a direct line from Eaſt gate ſouthward, through where the chapter houſe and upper tranſept of the church now ſtand, to the brow of the hill, from whence, at the enlargement of the Roman city, it was continued down by the Weredyke to the Tower garth at the water ſide.

The original magnificence of this city may eaſily be conceived from the vaſt number of beautiful Saxon and Norman door ways, and other fragments of architecture, conſtructed in the moſt finiſhed manner, and to be met with in almoſt every ſtreet and in the moſt private houſes, particularly within the centre of the enceinte of that æra [e].

South-weſt of Newport gate within the walls in the north-weſt corner of the Bail which is ſtill called Old Lincoln is a vaſt angular fragment of Roman work, full 30 feet high, and about 70 feet long, three feet and a half thick, compoſed of common rough ſtone, intermixed with courſes of Roman brick, each brick two inches thick by 11 inches wide and 17 long. The firſt is a double courſe lying about two feet above ground. About two feet above that is a triple courſe, and above that four more ſuch like, but each at five feet diſtant from the other. The ſcaffold holes which go quite through the wall are every where left open. In levelling a ſkittle ground belonging to the Falcon and Crown alehouſe, about 100 yards from the wall, they dug up the foundation of the ſouth-weſt angle of the ſaid building, as was judged from its direction to the Mint wall one way, and its running parallel to it the other. This wall, engraved Pl. III. fig. 15. from a drawing by Mr. Buck, is called the Mint wall, running parallel with the town wall. Dr. Stukeley [f] deſcribes the Mint wall 16 feet high, of ſquare ſtone, with three layers of brick, each one foot high, then three of ſtone for the ſame height, then three of brick, and 12 of ſtone, and then brick and ſtone to the top, 40 long, and turned with an angle, and having ſcaffold holes and marks of arches. It was probably the granary, as the prætorium was ſo near, which ſeems to have occupied the ſite behind it to the north-weſt. In taking up the remains of the old Roman wall here about 1776 many pieces and ſhards of old pottery were found in the fillings up of it. This circumſtance will prove the place to have been inhabited, and uſed as a pottery before the wall was built. The north ditch and bank may be traced from Newport gate, and maſſes of the wall remain. The eaſt wall of the city, for near 80 feet, is alſo Roman, but leſs intire except in one place, the ditch without being turned into a broad ſtreet called the Beaſt Market, and the gate pulled down about 25 years ago.

Newport, the northern ſuburb, has been antiently fortified with a deep and broad ditch on the eaſt, weſt, and north ſides, with a tower at the north-eaſt and north-weſt corners. Here are two pariſhes which are the only antient pariſhes in or about the city not united to ſome others; for whereas moſt of the preſent pariſhes contain two or three and ſome of them five or ſix of the antient ones, theſe though poor and ſmall, and without a church in either, continue ſeparate, having diſtinct officers and rates; they bury indeed in one church-yard, that of St. Nicholas, that of St. John, as well as the church, being long ſince deſecrated. On the weſt ſide of the ſtreet ſtood the Auſtin friars, now a farm houſe. Saſtangate, mentioned in St. Nicholas pariſh, Newport, in Libro de ordinatione cantariarum f. 111. a. may have ſome reference to a Saxon gate.

The following conjectures about the age of the walls and gates of the antient Lindum colonia, and of the 2d extenſion of the walls to the banks of the river Witham, and on the uſe of the building called the Mint Wall were drawn up by the rev. Mr. Sympſon, one of the Vicars choral.

"Mr. Eſſex, in his remarks on the antiquity of brick and ſtone buildings in England [g], ſpeaking of the gate called Newport gate at Lincoln, ſays, "in what "age this gate was erected is uncertain; but from "the plain and ſimple ſtile of it we may ſuppoſe it "was built at a time when architecture was not in a "flouriſhing ſtate in any part of the Roman empire. "The deſign, however, was not bad." Soon after I had read theſe remarks a gentleman informed me that a few coins had been lately found in the north-weſt wall of the old Roman city by the workmen who were employed to level the ground.

"The coins I ſaw were one of Fl. Veſpaſian, one of Nero, two of Carauſius, and a ſilver one of Julian the Apoſtate; only one of Carauſius R. SAECVLI FELICIT. and that of Julian VOTIS V. MULTIS X. were legible. They were found among the rammel or looſe ſtones which fill the middle of the wall.

"From conſidering them and the ſituation in which they were found, I conjecture that this wall was either built by Carauſius, or built or repaired after the time of Julian. When Carauſius aſſumed the purple, and bade defiance to the authority and power of Maximian Herculius, who was ſo exceedingly enraged againſt him that he had endeavoured to aſſaſ-

[d] A. S. min.
[e] Mr. King, Archæol. VI. 261.
[f] It. I. 86. 2d ed.
[g] Ubi ſup.

ſinate him, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that ſo vigilant and conſummate a general would fortify himſelf in the ſecureſt manner; and this colony being of the greateſt importance to him from its ſituation near to the banks of that part of the Witham, which continued the communication between the Carſdike, and another artificial canal called the Foſsdike to the Trent for the convenience of carrying corn and other commodities from the Iceni, &c. for the uſe of the northern prætenturas, it is not improbable that he built the walls and gates of the old city. This was about the latter end of the third century. As to the coins of Veſpaſian and Nerva they are of too early a date. The Romans paid but little attention to Britain from the time that Agricola left it in Domitian's time until Hadrian. The walls and gates being evidently built in the decline of the empire, Mr. Eſſex obſerves, "that the deſign, however, was not bad." This ſupports my conjecture; for we find that the workmen at this time excelled thoſe in Gaul ſo much that they ſent into Britain for them; which ſuperiority does not appear before or after this period. I do not find that Julian was ever in Britain, and as his reign was very ſhort he probably did nothing here; ſo that if theſe walls were built later it was probably by Theodoſius the elder who was ſent here by Valentinian I. to drive out the barbarians who had ſettled themſelves in many parts of Britain. He ſucceeded, and to prevent any future invaſions or ſettlement, he repaired many fortifications, and built others. I would add, that the great number of coins of Carauſius that have been found here evidently ſhew his affection and attention to this colony. I know not whether it will ſtrengthen this conjecture to add, that I had a coin of Dioclesian found here, rev. PAX AVGGG. which was ſtruck in honour of the peace made by him with Dioclesian and Maximian[h]. The ſtile of the wall extending from the brow of the hill to the bank of the Witham is ſo much like the firſt wall that I preſume it was built ſoon after the firſt.

"If then we fix the time of their building between A. D. 286 and 370, we may not be far from the truth.

"Another argument may be drawn from the little neceſſity there was for building ſuch fortifications much earlier in this mediterranean part of Britain, where two ways, the Foſs and Hermen-ſtreet, met, and where the colony was ſurrounded by ſtations innumerable within a day's march of Lindum, which were full of ſoldiers; for there were many legions here till a little time after Severus, when the Romans declined exceedingly in their power. From this period for almoſt half a century we find but little ſaid of Britiſh affairs. The negligent and ſcandalous conduct of Gallienus gave this province with many others an opportunity of revolting, nor was it ever after entirely ſubject to the Romans. It was not much more than twenty years after his reign that Carauſius ſeized this province, and being of a moſt engaging addreſs as well as of the greateſt abilities in peace and war, he gained the affections of all, and forced the emperor to acknowledge him an aſſociate in the empire, which dignity he kept for ſeven years, till murdered by his boſom friend Allectus.

"If it ſhould be imagined that Agricola began the Carſdike, and that Hadrian finiſhed it; and therefore that they might have built this fortification for the ſame reaſon Carauſius did: I anſwer that it is not improbable but that they might ſurround it with a vallum[i] and foſſa; but this part of Britain was ſo totally ſubdued, and there were ſo many legions as well as ſtations all over this country, that there could be no occaſion for ſuch walls and gates.

"But we are told by Camden[k], "that the Foſsdike "(ſeven miles in length) was cut by Henry I. be- "tween the Witham and the Trent for the conveni- "ence of carriage in theſe parts." He quotes Hoveden who has almoſt literally copied Simeon Dunelmenſis. Simeon's words are, "Eodem anno (1121) "Henricus rex facto longa terræ interciſione foſſato "a Torkſeie uſque Lincolniam per dirivationem "Trentæ fluminis fecit iter navium." Neither of theſe writers ever ſaw the Foſsdike, becauſe they aſſert that the Trent flows into the Foſsdike, which is only true in very great floods. The ſurface of the Trent is at a medium more than four feet below the bed of the Foſsdike; hence the neceſſity of a lock at Torkſey bridge near the outfall into the Trent. It is twelve miles long, and is undoubtedly Roman. Henry I. only ſcoured it.

That theſe walls were not built much later than A. D. 370, we may collect from the certainty we have that the Roman power expired in Britain before the middle of the 5th century under that puſillanimous, cruel, and truly deſpicable emperor Valentinian III. but my idea of its being repaired before or about A. D. 370, ſeems to be overturned by an inſcription upon a votive tablet lately found in the wall:

M LAETII
F MAX CT
Mi

which I read thus, "Marcus Lælius AETII Filius "MAXimo CT (et) Maximo Jovi;" and I ſuppoſe it dedicated to the emperor Maximus, who ſtimulated ſome ſoldiers of Ætius to revenge their beloved general's death by the murder of Valentinian III. A. D. 454[l]: but nothing can be concluded from this tablet, ſuppoſing my reading and conjecture about its meaning to be true, as I have not yet learnt in what ſituation it was found in the wall.

"There is no key ſtone in the middle of the great arch in Newport Gate. Is this any evidence of the declining ſtate of architecture?

"The N. W. N. and N. E. parts of the old Roman colony were, from the flatneſs of the country, more expoſed to the incurſions of the Barbarians than any other parts of it. Hence it is probable that the upper or principal diviſion of the camp was in that part, and the prætorium to the north-weſt. This conjecture is ſupported by the great number of beaſts' horns found here; the place called Augurale for ſacrifices being always within the prætorium. On this ground I am apt to think that part of the building called the Mint wall was the granary belonging to [h] A ſimilar coin now in Trinity college library Cambridge is deſcribed in Battely's Antiquitates Rutupinæ. Banduri.

[i] The uſual fences among the old Romans were a fence of ſtakes or parapet and a ditch.
[k] Brit. vol. I. p. 562. Gibſon's edit.
[l] Ætius was murdered by Valentinian. Paul Diac. L. 5. Jornandes de regn. &c. ſucceſſ. Pomp. Læt. in Valent.

the

the colony, being ſituated in a ſecure part, behind the prætorium eaſtward. It is a parallelogram whoſe longeſt ſides eaſt and weſt are 300 feet, the ſhorteſt about 70 feet. The length of the north ſide is entire, and there is a return at the north-weſt angle of ſome feet ſouthward; the height is above 30 feet, but it has been higher; the wall is about three feet thick. It is built of the ſtone found here with courſes of Roman bricks at certain intervals. There are at the foundation a double and a triple courſe of bricks at two feet aſunder, and four triple courſes above them at intervals of five feet. It is a building of great magnitude, encloſing by this menſuration almoſt half an acre of ground. Part of it alſo might be the Roman mint. The colonies who lived under the Roman laws had generally mints [m], witneſs the prodigious number of colony coins both in the eaſt and weſt to be met with in every conſiderable cabinet. If the learned are right in their explanations of the letters in the exergues of the coins of the lower empire, I have ſeen many ſtruck in this colony, as I have many Saxon coins which were undoubtedly coined here, having the name of this city on the reverſe, and they immediately ſucceeded the Romans in the poſſeſſion of this country." Thus far Mr. Sympſon.

Dr. Stukeley ſuppoſes a ſecond Roman city was afterwards added below hill, the wall appearing on the eaſt below Claſk gate in Broadgate 80 feet long and 18 high, and lower down a little piece 12 feet long and high, and between that gate and the old city upwards by the Greeſtone [n] ſtairs is the old ditch now called Weredyke, where the beaſt market is kept, ſome yards to the weſt, and the wall appears that length, and paſſing through Mr. Sympſon's garden joins the old city wall ſome yards on the ſouth ſide of the cathedral. To the weſt the ditch and foundation of the wall is left, though many times repaired and demoliſhed in the frequent ſieges this city has ſuſtained, eſpecially in the wars of Maud the empreſs. At the bottom of it towards the river is a round tower called Lucy tower, famous in her hiſtory [o]. To this correſponds a tower in the old town wall running down the weſt ſide of Broad gate, where is now the Green Dragon alehouſe, whoſe back yard is ſtill called Tower garth. The Ermine ſtreet and Foſs entered the city at the Stanbow or Stonebow where they parted, the firſt going up the hill north through Newport gate, the other along the eaſt ſide of the antient city without. Or this incloſure may be Leland's Saxon city. The town without Newport gate called Newport was Saxon work, fenced with a wall and ditch.

The Norman Conqueror built the caſtle in the ſouth-eaſt angle of the Roman city. On the pitch of the hill remains only the outer wall and keep. The gaol is within it, and to the weſt over againſt it on the outſide is an entrenchment, thrown up by Stephen [p].

The caſtle and bail of Lincoln ſeem to have continued in the crown till the reign of Edward I. when Henry de Lacy died ſeiſed of them, and they paſſed with his inheritance to the earl of Lincoln, and ſo became annexed to the dutchy. The liberty of the bail contains the pariſh of St. Paul and part of that of St. Mary Magdalen.

The Normans incloſed and took in an addition at the angle of the river, making a new cut called Sinſil dike, on the eaſt and ſouth ſide [p].

The caſtle conveys the ſame idea of original Norman architecture as that at York. The keep was half within and half without the caſtle wall, which aſcended up its hill, and joined to the tower. It had a portal within and another without the caſtle, and hence at the ſiege of this caſtle by Stephen the earl of Cheſter eſcaped into Cheſhire, from whence he ſoon brought back a force ſufficient to fight and defeat the king [q]. The caſtle itſelf was much improved by John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter, who made it his ſummer reſidence, having, according to the vulgar tradition of the place, built himſelf a winter one below the hill out of the city to the ſouthward, which was taken down 1783; but this was more probably a part of ſome religious houſe. The great entrance of the caſtle, with its two round towers, remains. In the north-eaſt corner is a remarkable ſtrong little building called Cobs hall, appearing on the outſide like a tower, and uſed as a dungeon. Mr. King, by its vaulted roof ſupported by pillars, the crypt underneath, and the ſmall ante-room, conceived it to have been a chapel. But as his plan of it in Archæol. vol. VI. Pl. XXX. was taken haſtily, we have annexed in our VIth plate, N° III. fig. F. a correct one taken by Mr. William Lumby, an ingenious artiſt of Lincoln, to whom we are alſo indebted for the plan of the caſtle, and plans and elevations of its weſt gate and other parts in the ſame plate N° I. and II. From hence it will appear that there are in reality no pillars in this little building; but that the piers between the loups give this appearance at firſt ſight. There is no reaſon for ſuppoſing it a chapel from the vaulted roof or groined arches which are common to all other buildings of the ſame date. In the weſt ſide not exactly oppoſite the great entrance is an other ſquare tower, built of the ſame ſtone uſed both in Newport gate, and in the more modern parts of the caſtle, with a ſemicircular arch 16 feet wide in the clear turned with 45 ſtones 2 feet 1 inch and a half deep, and over it a ſmall door with a like arch croſſed by a tranſom ſtone in the antient Saxon ſtyle. To this great arch led from without a flight of ſteps completely deſtroyed about 20 years ago, when a large thigh bone and an antient ſpur were dug up, and near the bottom of the ditch within the wall, among the ruins of buildings ſuppoſed to have been barracks, was found a room with a fire place, ſuppoſed to have been a blackſmith's forge, having aſhes and a rude piece of iron, of more than 100lb. weight. This piece of rude iron (ſuppoſed by ſome to have been the head of a battering ruin) and the other appearances were diſcovered on the inſide of the caſtle wall, where there may ſeem to have been formerly a range of barracks or buildings for the uſe of the garriſon. This tower does not ſtand in the line of the Roman wall, but makes a very evident angle with it, as may be ſeen in the plan annexed. The preſent wall is not of the ſame date as the tower, being carried up in a ſtrait joint on both ſides. If any perſon ſhould incline to think this an old gate of old Lindum, ſeveral remarkable differences in this from the north and [m] The municipia, who had ſtill greater privileges, living under their own laws, enjoyed this power in common with the colonies.

[n] or as vulgarly called Grecian, an evident corruption from greſs (a ſort of inclined platform or landing place) and ſtairs, or, by a repetition not unfrequent in the corruption of languages, two ſynonymous words are uſed together. Such ingeminations are common here, as Car-holm, Foſs-dyke.

[o] Stukeley I. 87.

[p] Ib. 84.

[q] Lyttelton, Hiſt. of Henry the Second, I. 283.

N°. I.

A Plan of the Castle
B Principal, or East Gate
C West Gate
D Cobb Hall
E South East Tower
F Remains of Roman walls
G A place discovered in which were found a quantity of ashes and smithy dust, also a piece of iron 2.d 6.vo long 8.th sq.r in shape the frustum of a pyramid
H Plans and Elevations at large of the two buildings joining the Keep a Springing of a vault
b Windows contracted towards the Castle
c Place supposed a Necessary from its sloping down into the hollow within d Fire place and flue
e Two Pillars remaining with a piece of the rib of the vault upon one at f By its diagonal direction and the arching appearance on the wall at g there has been another pillar at h and of course at i f Raking vaulting over the stairs

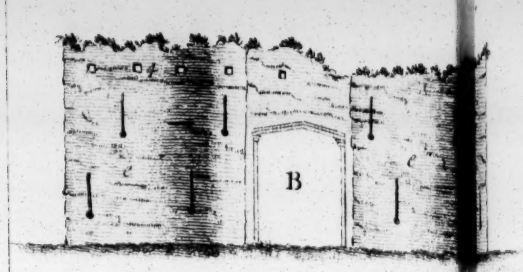
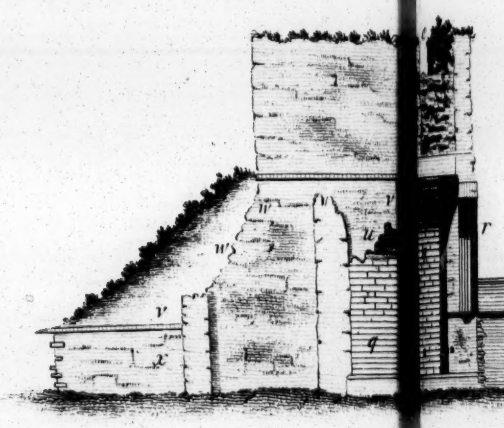
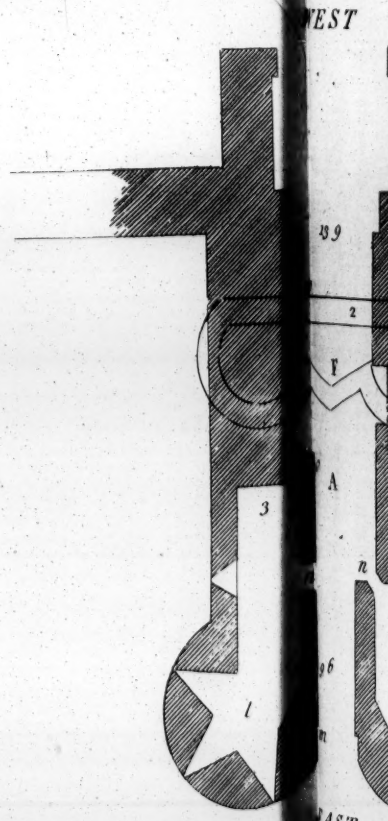
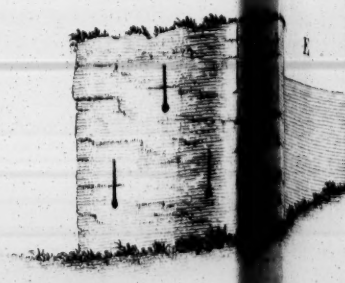
Wm Lumley del

N°. II.



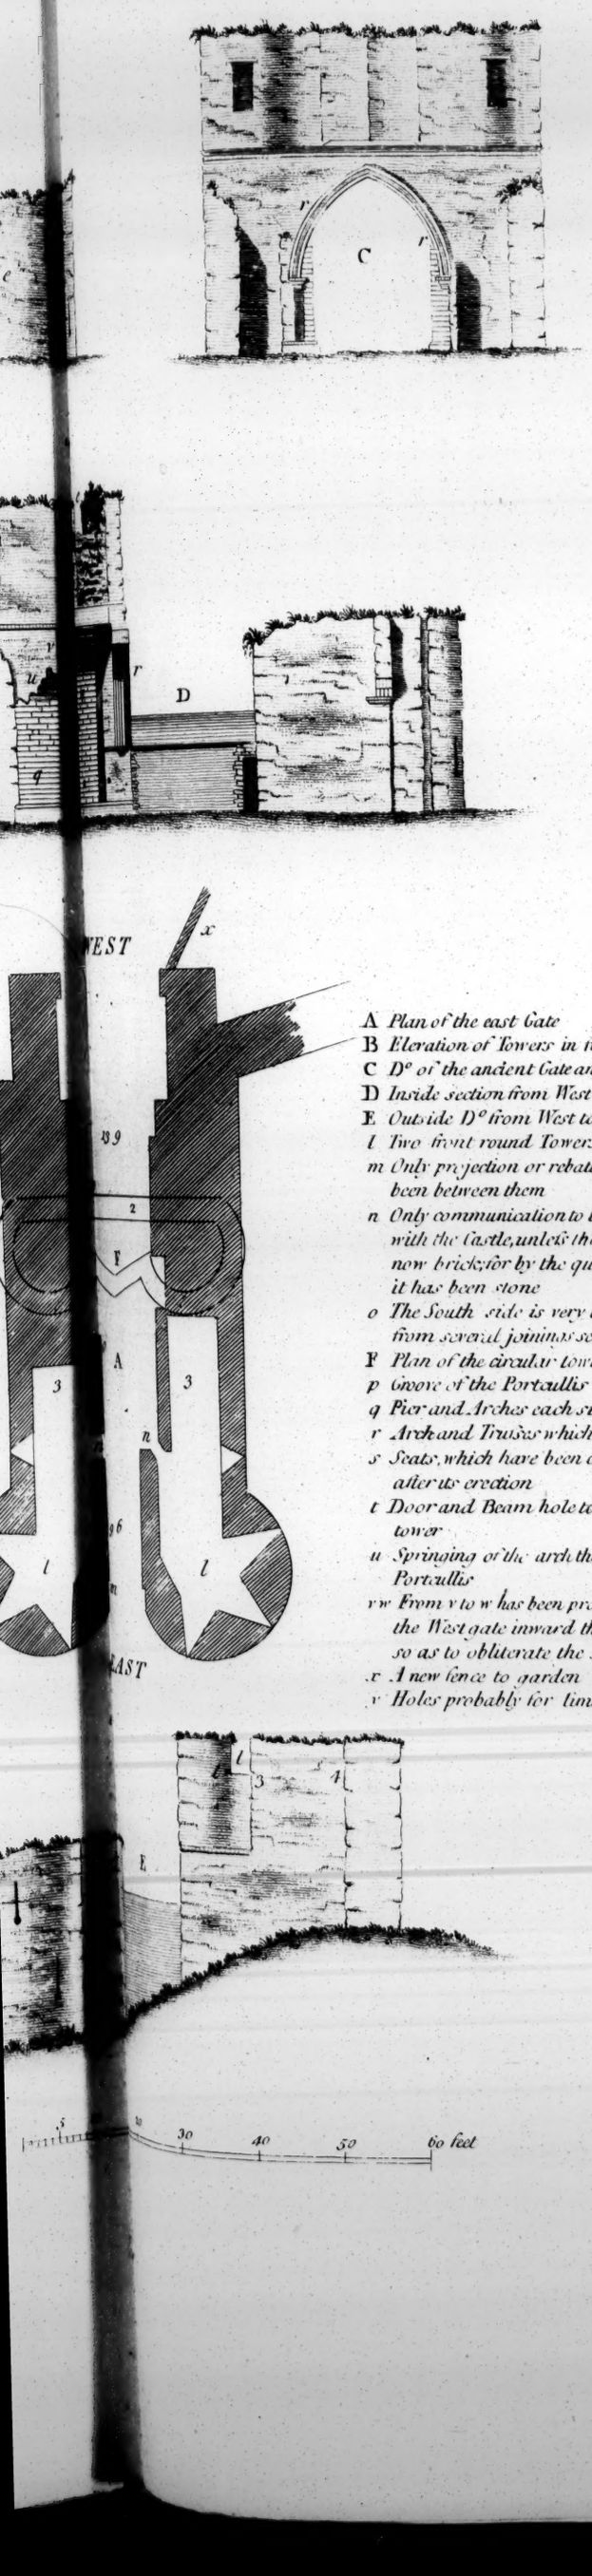






Vol. II. Pl. VI. p. 256.

N°. II.



A Plan of the east Gate
B Elevation of Towers in front
C D° of the ancient Gate and Towers over it
D Inside section from West to East
E Outside D° from West to East
l Two front round Towers
m Only projection or rebate where a Gate can have been between them n Only communication to the lower part of the tower with the Castle, unless there was another in the part now bricked, for by the quoins at the door and end it has been stone
o The South side is very unlike the opposite, and from several joinings seems to have been altered
F Plan of the circular towers and back wall p Groove of the Portcullis q Pier and Arches each side d° r Arch and Trusses which support the circular towers
s Seats, which have been cut out of the solid wall after its erection t Door and Beam hole to the North from the circular tower u Springing of the arch that formd the other side of the Portcullis v w From v to w has been probably archd over as was the West gate inward tho here it has been repaird so as to obliterate the springings x A new fence to garden
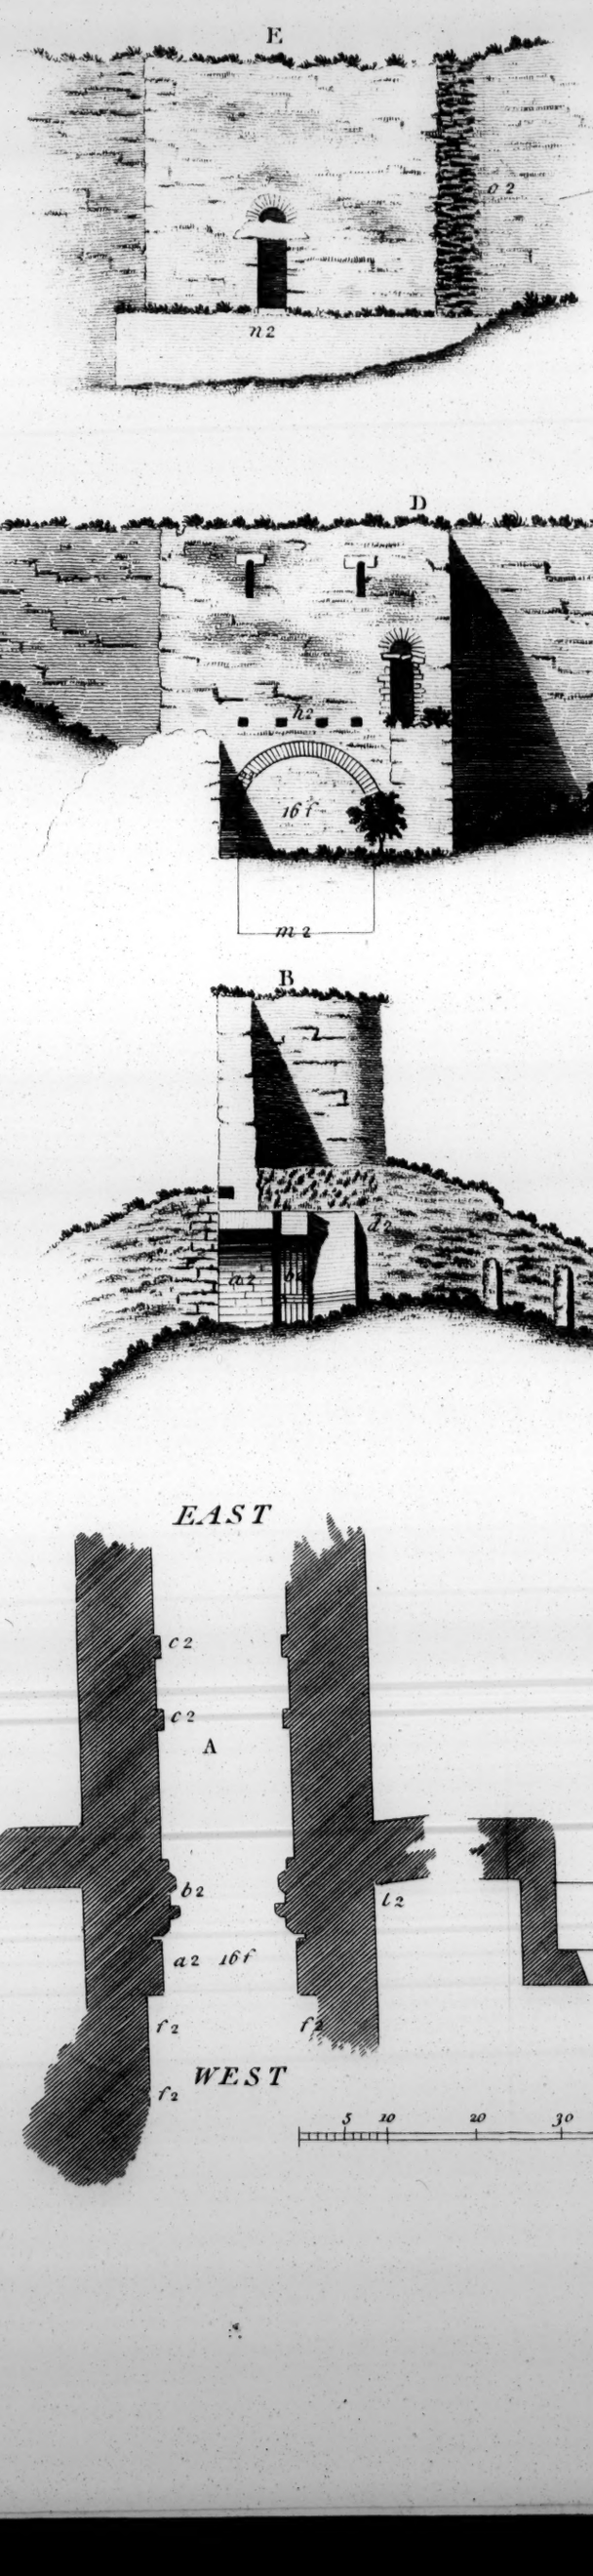
y Holes probably for timber barrs

F. Cary sculp.

N°. III.



A Plan at large of the West Gate
B Section of D° from West to East
C Plan of the upper part
D West Front
a 2 Piers and arch to original gate
b 2 D° to the newer inner Work
c 2 Projections seemingly for other arches and in the space from d 2 to e 2 are the springings in several places for arches as tho the whole had formerly been vaulted f 2 Advance Walls; that to the North running under the Hill g 2 Door that led from the upper part to the floor over the Beam holes h 2 Holes for Beams
i 2 Windows or loop holes which spread considerably within k 2 Hill which mounts to within about 8 ft of the top of the wall
l 2 Place where the room with ashes was found m 2 Depth of Rubbish
E Door in the South wall between the Keep & S.E. Tower of the same stile & materials as that in the West Gate n 2 Terrass
o 2 Ruin in the Wall
F Plan of Cobb hall at large p 2 Ante Room
q 2 Two doors to Terrasses on the outside r 2 The Lines (r 2) shew the manner of the vaulting
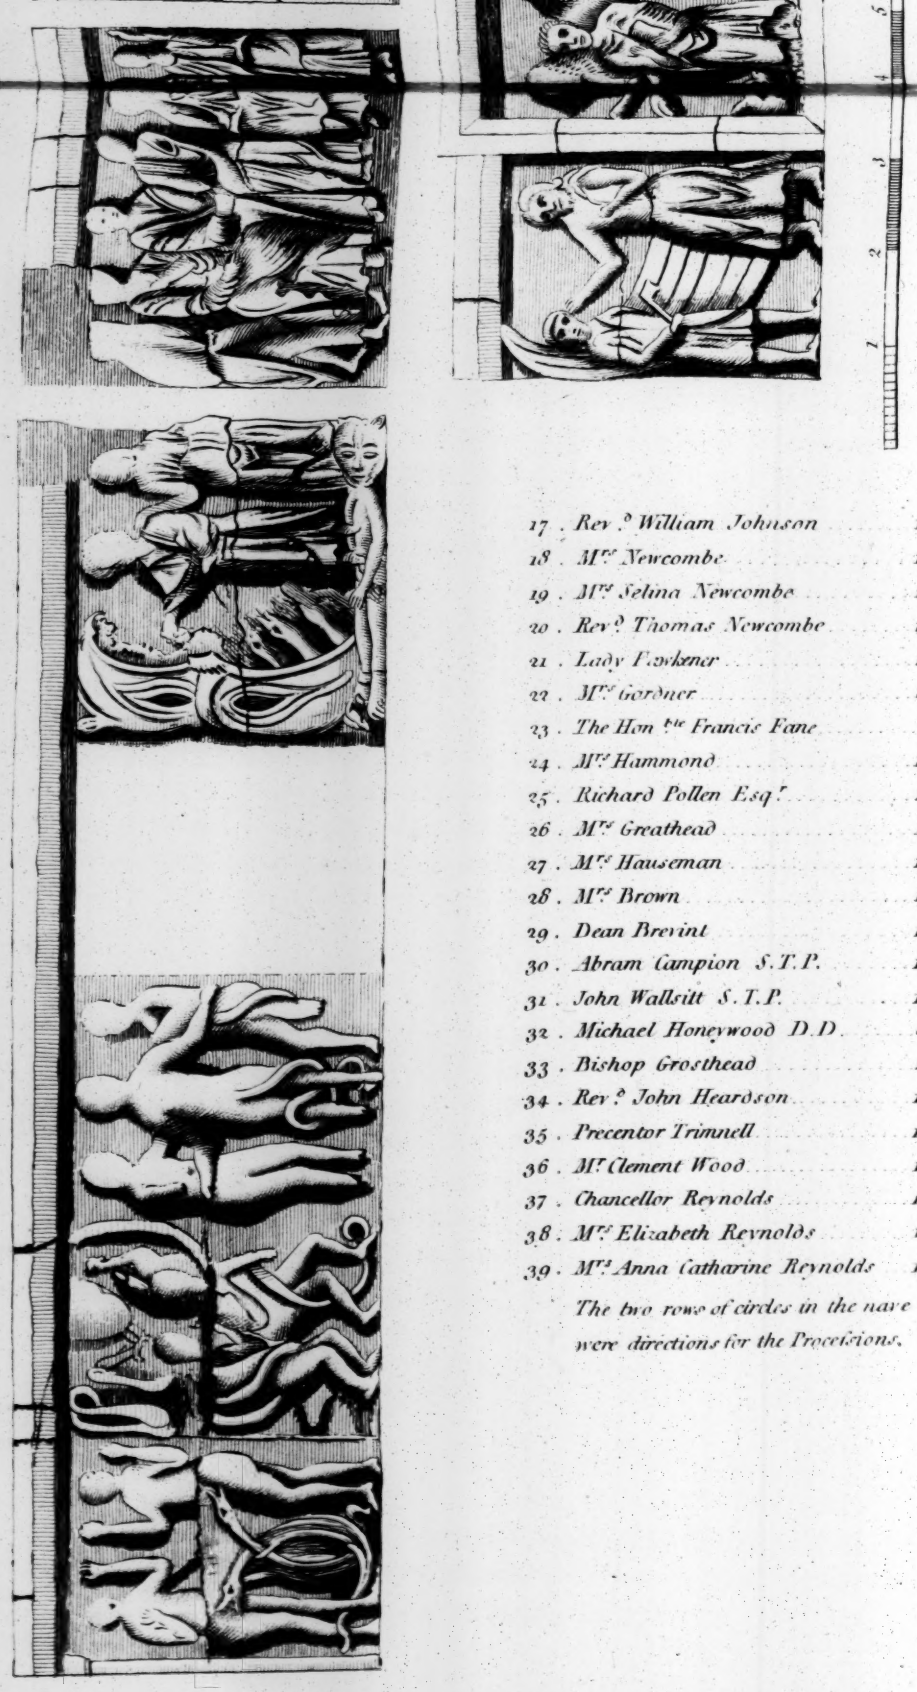
s 2 Trap door to the lower Room

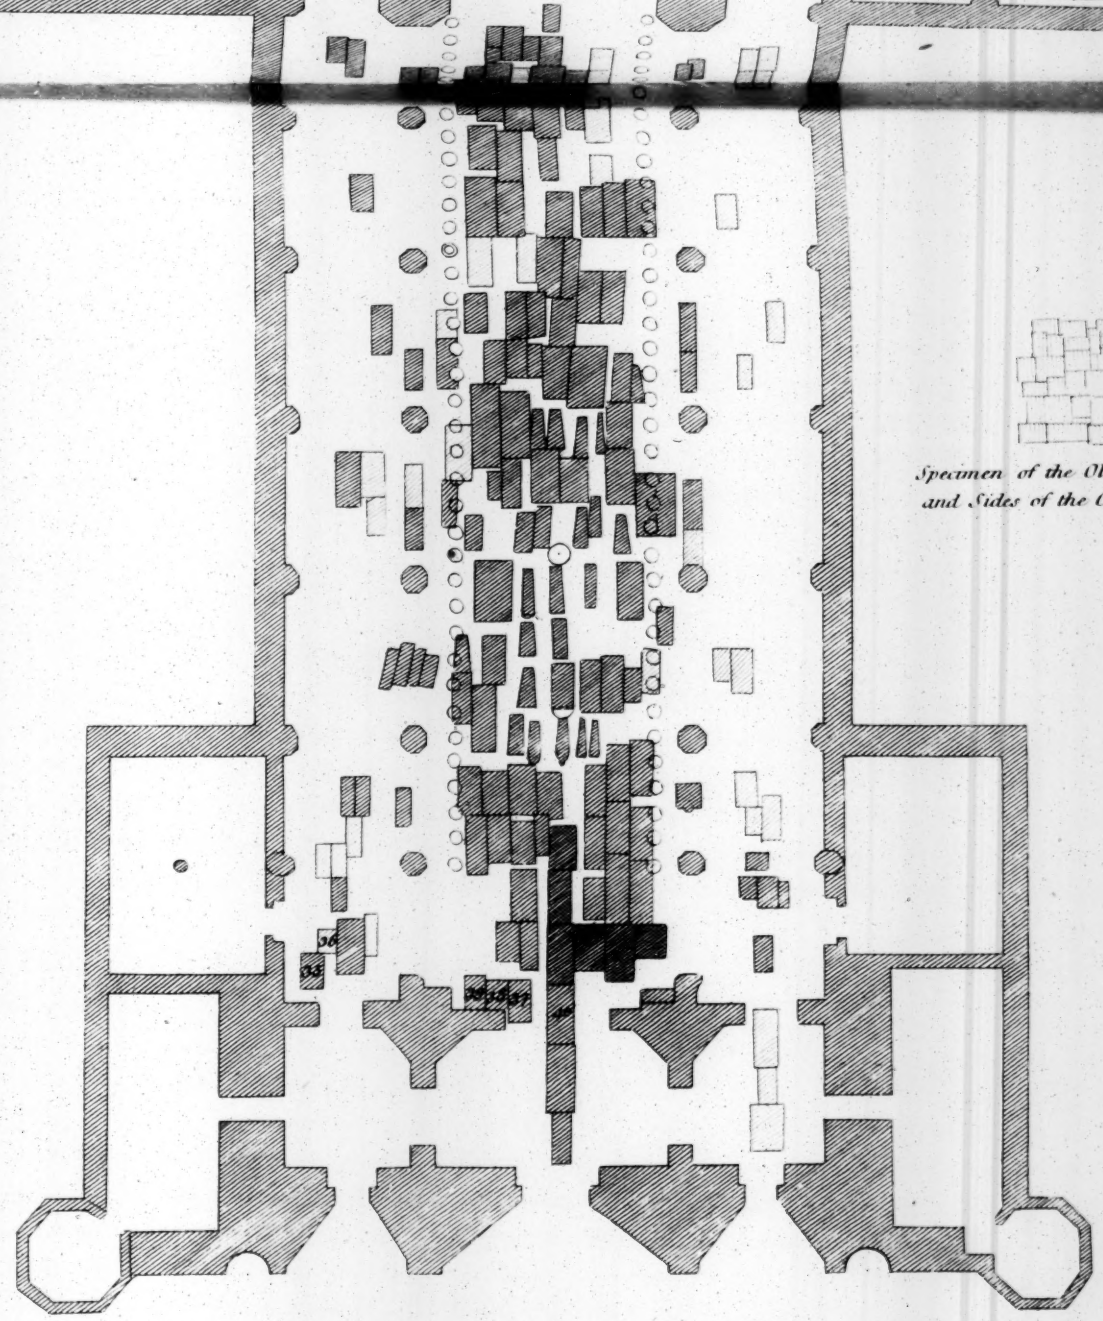
F. Cary sculp.

The ancient [illegible]

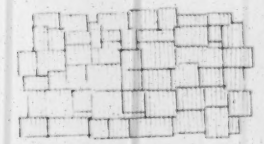


17 . Rev.d William Johnson 1764
18 . Mr.s Newcombe 1764
19 . Mr.s Selina Newcombe 1725
20 . Rev.d Thomas Newcombe 1749
21 . Lady Fawkener 1777
22 . Mr.s Gardiner 1683
23 . The Hon.ble Francis Fane .....
24 . Mr.s Hammond 1731
25 . Richard Pollen Esq.r 1702
26 . Mr.s Greathead 1737
27 . Mr.s Hauseman 1714
28 . Mr.s Brown 1720
29 . Dean Brevint 1695
30 . Abram Campion S.T.P. 1701
31 . John Wallsitt S.T.P. 1685
32 . Michael Honeywood D.D 1681
33 . Bishop Grosthead 1253
34 . Rev.d John Heardson 1661
35 . Precentor Trimnell 1756
36 . Mr.s Clement Wood 1759
37 . Chancellor Reynolds 1768
38 . Mr.s Elizabeth Reynolds 1740
39 . Mr.s Anna Catharine Reynolds 1751

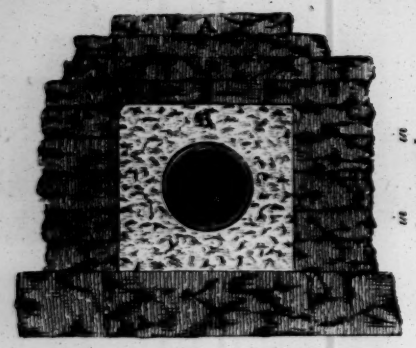
The two rows of circles in the nave were directions for the Processions.



Plan of Lincoln Cathedral

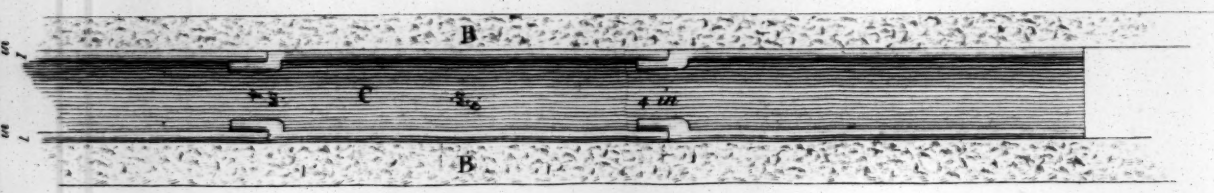


Specimen of the Old Flooring, in the Intervals of the Grave Stones, and Sides of the Church.



Transverse Section of the Pipe.

A. Walls
B. Cement
C. The Pipe



Longitudinal Section of the Pipes.

Fig. 1. p. 257.

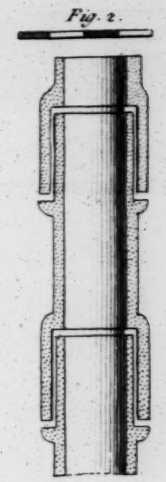


Fig. 2.

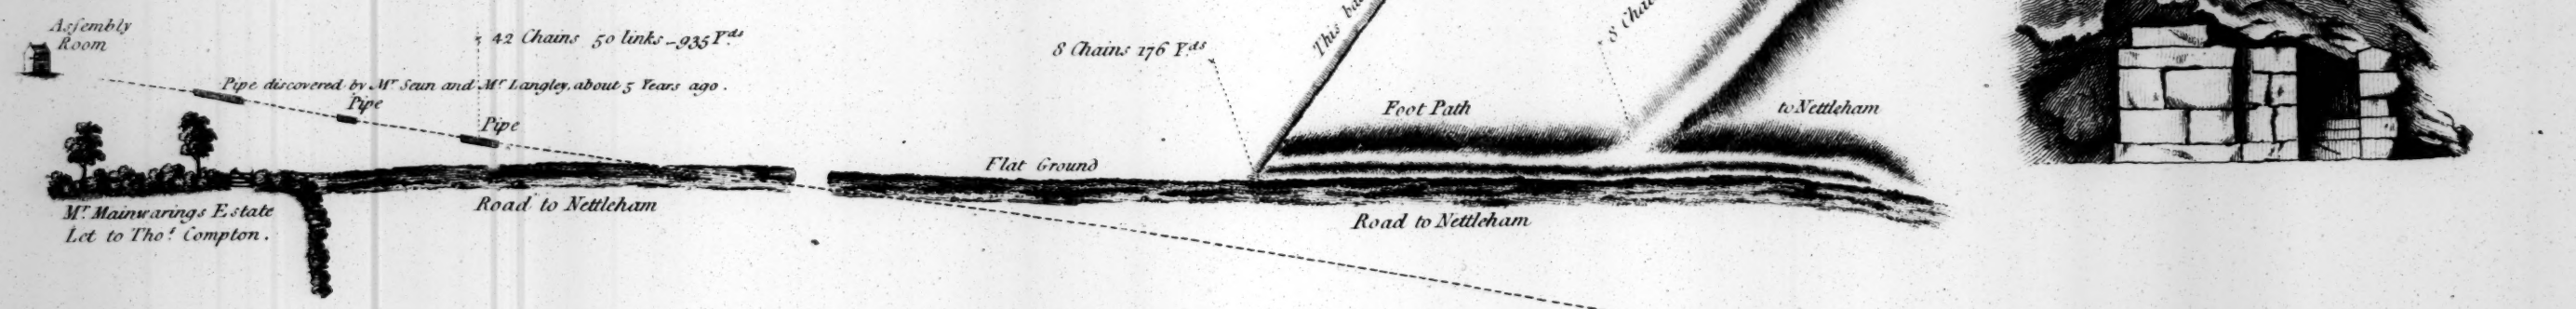

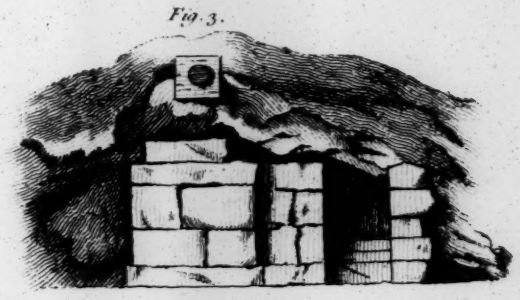

Fig. 3.

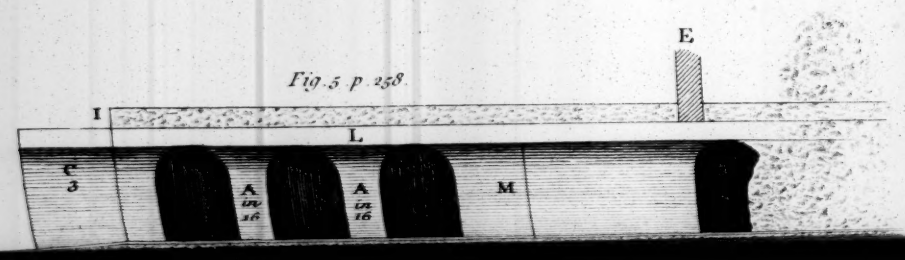

Fig. 5 p. 258.

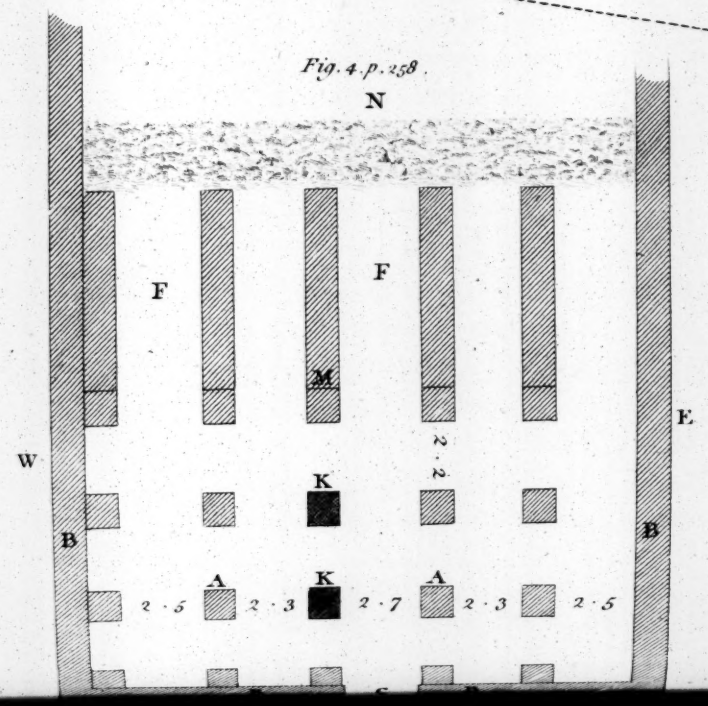

Fig. 4. p. 258.

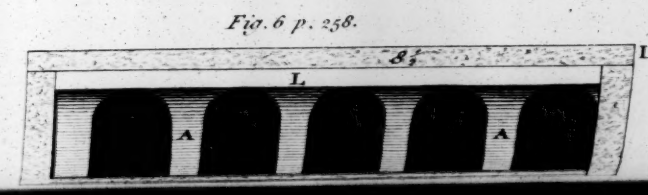

Fig. 6 p. 258.

fouth gates n ſuppoſition.
not, and are b
Sir Henry Eng
logia VI. 376.
to the Saxons to this arch, a
it is oppoſite
deſtroyed abou
that the gate it
joining walls th
Between the Carſdike lay long, and bet within, faſtened
in the high grou
and they migl thence[r]. But a been ſeen in the ground even a c
In the north-e covered another
About 14 yards was a well or was called the neglected wells, b feet diameter at partly filled up 3 40 feet about 17
a ſpring head at low ground wit
ſide the hedge o
where were ſome ſuppoſed the p
under a raiſed g
the only one in t run pipes to ano
obtuſe angle.
reſembles the ba
In the bank or pipes point, are bear a ſtrong reſe
a remarkable exc
vered in it ſome
loaded waggon, w
be a continuation
See the plan annex mound to the ſeco yards nearly. S
The pipes are abo
have no inſertions,
lar courſe of very which the pipes ar
actly ſuch an aqu
water, which ſome
the Roman times.
5 and an half in joints from 3 to 6
that which covers
This aqueduct afte
itſelf in the garden again in making th
ruins of the head
the pipe engraved
copied in our pl.
reſpond with the L

[r] King ubi ſup. p. 2
of them is there repreſe
[s] In this church was [t] Recueil d'Antiq. I

uth gates now remaining would diſcountenance the ppoſition. They have an impoſt, which this has ot, and are built with vaſt ſtones, this with ſmaller. ir Henry Englefield, from whoſe account in Archæo- gia VI. 376. 380. this is extracted, thinks it prior the Saxons and Normans, who added the tower this arch, and uſed it as a poſtern. But though is oppoſite to the eaſt Roman gate of the city, eſtroyed about 25 years ago, it is moſt probable hat the gate itſelf is Saxon, and the tower and ad- oining walls the work of the Normans.

Between the caſtle and Lucy tower on the ſide of Carſdike lay glazed earthen pipes near two feet ong, and between two and three inches diameter within, faſtened together by joints. There is a ſpring n the high ground between the caſtle and this tower, nd they might be part of ſome conduit from hence[r]. But as only a few yards of the pipes have been ſeen in the middle, it is by no means enough to ground even a conjecture of their beginning and end.

In the north-eaſt field, beyond the town, was diſcovered another conduit, ſuppoſed of Roman times. About 14 yards north-weſt from the Aſſembly-room was a well or ciſtern of ſingular conſtruction. It was called the Blind well, a common appellation of neglected wells, built with very neat walling. It was 18 feet diameter at the top narrowing to the bottom, partly filled up 30 years ago, and the remainder about 40 feet about 1772. From hence pipes were laid from a ſpring head at the diſtance of 42 chains. In a low ground with ſprings and drains, on the other ſide the hedge of Netleham[s] incloſure, is a mound, where were ſome traces of a tower or ſome building, ſuppoſed the place of a reſervoir, from whence under a raiſed ground or bank, parallel with a balk, the only one in the field, pointing to the ſpring head, run pipes to another ſuch bank forming with it an obtuſe angle. The foot path to Netleham much reſembles the baulk where the pipe has been found. In the bank or road, to which the firſt ſeries of pipes point, are here and there raiſed parts which bear a ſtrong reſemblance to a Roman rampart, and a remarkable excavation is ſaid to have been diſcovered in it ſome years ago, by the breaking in of a loaded waggon, which people at the time imagined to be a continuation of the paſſage from St. Giles' hole. See the plan annexed Pl. VII. Whole length from the mound to the ſecond pipe 63 chains, 46 links, or 1397 yards nearly. See alſo Stukeley's Itin. I. pl 88. The pipes are about one foot 10 inches long. They have no inſertions, but are joined by a ring or circular courſe of very ſtrong cement, like the bed in which the pipes are laid. Count Caylus deſcribes exactly ſuch an aqueduct which ſupplied Paris with water, which ſome ſuppoſe mineral, from Chailliot, in the Roman times. The pipes were 28 inches long, 5 and an half in diameter, and one inch thick: the joints from 3 to 6 lines filled up with a cement like that which covers or beds the pipes an inch thick. This aqueduct after croſſing les champs Eliſees looſes itſelf in the gardens of the Tuilleries. It was diſcovered again in making the new ſquare of Louis XV.[t] The ruins of the head of this aqueduct and the ſection of the pipe engraved in Pl. CXII. of his 2d vol. and copied in our pl. VII. fig. 2 and 3. perfectly correſpond with the Lincoln ones here engraved.

In 1739 ſome labourers digging a cellar belonging to the Chanter's houſe at the ſouth-weſt corner of the cloſe, adjoining to the Chequer gate, found two or three ſtone coffins, which probably had lain there ever ſince the demolition of the antient pariſh church of St. Mary Magdalen, which had been erected near the ſpot ſince the Roman times, but might probably be taken down to make way for the cathedral and its appendages. On going to the depth of about 13 feet, they broke through a teſſelated floor into a vault which afterwards proved a Roman hypocauſt. The præfurnium marked A in the Plan Pl. IV. fig. 4. covered with a large flat ſtone at entrance was three feet ſix inches ſquare, height uncertain from rubbiſh: the fornax, B, a brick vault, three feet ſix inches long, from three to four feet high, and from two feet to 19 inches wide: this had been much impaired by the violence of the fire, but might be taken down and rebuilt as often as neceſſary, being only built againſt the mouth of the alveus, and not united with it in building: bits of burnt wood were thrown out of it. The alveus, D, or body of the flue was 21 feet 4 inches long, eight feet four inches broad, two feet four inches high. The opening into it from the fornax at C is one foot ſix inches wide, two feet ſix inches high, its top turned with a ſemicircular brick arch. On the floor of ſtrong cement compoſed of lime, aſhes, and brickduſt, commonly called terrace mortar, ſtood four rows of pillars two feet high, made of brick, 11 in a row, in all 44 beſides two half pillars: the two outer rows round, 11 inches diameter jointed with mortar, the two inner rows eight inches ſquare; each ſtanding on a brick 11 inches ſquare and two thick, and covered with another of the ſame thickneſs, but from 17 to 19 inches ſquare. The round pillars being compoſed of 10 courſes of ſemicircular bricks laid by pairs, the joint of every courſe croſſing that of the former at right angles with ſo much mortar betwixt the two ſemicircles rather form an oval, making the pillars look at firſt ſight as if they were wreathed; the ſquare pillars are compoſed of 13 courſes of bricks, eight inches ſquare, thinner than thoſe of the red ones. The floor of the ſudatory reſting on theſe pillars is compoſed of large bricks 21 by 23 inches, which lie over the ſquare bricks on the pillars, the four corners of each reaching to the centres of the four adjoining pillars. On this courſe of bricks is a covering of cement, ſix inches thick, inlaid with a pavement compoſed of white teſſelæ. At the ſide were two tubuli or flues, E. F. 12 inches wide, and 14 deep, for carrying off the ſmoke, their bottoms even with that of the alveus, and they are carried upon the level about 15 feet under another room by the ſide of the hypocauſt, and then it is preſumed they turn upwards. The walls of this room were plaiſtered, and the plaiſter painted red, blue, and other colours, and its floor ſet with white teſſellæ, but no figures diſcernible in either painting or pavement. This pavement, which is on a level with the teſtudo of the hypocauſt, is about 13 feet below the preſent ſurface of the ground; ſo deep is old Lindum buried in its ruins. In digging up this pavement the workmen ſtruck into another flue, three feet from the north-eaſt corner of the hypocauſt, and before they reached the pavement they dug up the wall by pieces at the depth of 5 or 6 feet with the rubbiſh of a room, under which the tubuli ran on the east side of the alveus. It was found before Feb. 16, and closed before April 7, 1740, A second hole was dug at the entrance, by which Mr. Sympson was able to take the exact dimensions, as above given. But, by an error in his bearings, he found the mouth of the præfurnium to be under a stack of chimnies. It was cleared in May by Dr. Trimnell by digging 16 feet into the middle of the fornax, so that you enter into the præfurnium on one hand, and the alveus on the other. No coin or inscription was found in or near it, only a piece of lead about two ounces weight, like two wheels, each an inch $\frac{3}{10}$ diameter, joined by an axis about half an inch long, found on the pavement, as also some whitish shells, and some fragments of pots in the præfurnium[u]. It was drawn and engraved for the society of Antiquaries by Mr. Vertue, whose reduced view and plan is here copied Pl. IV. fig. 4.

[r] King ubi ſup. p. 265, 266. It is there conjectured that they may have ſerved to convey the ſound: and with this idea perhaps one of them is there repreſented Pl. XXX. with a ſwell in the middle, which is by no means the caſe.
[s] In this church was buried 1551 Henry Holbech biſhop of Lincoln. Richardſon on Godwin, p. 300.
[t] Recueil d'Antiq. II. p. 375, 376. Pl. CXII.

In 1782 was found under the yard of the rev. Mr. Laycock's house adjoining to the King's Arms inn another fouterain, which, from all appearances, one may fairly conclude to be a sudatory. On a floor composed of two courses of bricks, and two layers of terrace mortar composed of sand, lime, and pounded bricks, and the upper course again drawn over with terrace, stood a number of arches four feet high, their crown eight inches and a half thick, supported by pillars formed of bricks 16 inches by 12, and one and a half thick, which, as well as the arches, were drawn over with two coats of mortar or terrace, and supported a floor composed of terrace and bricks in an irregular manner. The intervals between the pillars were 2 feet 3 inches, 2 feet 5 inches, 2 feet 7 inches, and several of the pillars were gone, only the foundations remaining. North beyond two rows of these pillars, whose floors rise one inch and a half from south to north, were passages, at the end of which, the arches began again, and were perhaps equal in number to the other, but the discovery was pursued no further that way, for the external wall, which is six feet thick, of brick and stone intermixed, extends northward beyond the width of one arch, but how much further cannot be traced, the arches being broken in and filled with rubbish to the surface of the ground. Where this second set of arches begins was a hole that goes sloping up into the outer wall, and begins at the crown of the arches. It seems to have communicated with some place above. By some joints in the work it appears as though the place with the pillars or the passages which joined to them had been built one before the other. On the south was an entrance or outlet, whose floor falls five inches, and is continued beyond the jaumb. The surface of the floor is 13 feet 6 inches below the pavement of the street, and 17 feet 5 inches below the garden under which it is situate. A great number of fragments of urns, pateræ, and other earthen vessels, were brought out from the rubbish, but none remarkable for their ornamenting; also several earthen bottles which appeared to have no orifice, and terminated in a point. The external walls were built of stone intermixed with brick, &c. See the plan and sections Plate VII. fig. 4, 5, 6.

Of all the ancient fabrics now remaining, no one deserves the attention of a curious enquirer more than the cathedral of Lincoln; whose floor, says Fuller in his pleasant style, is higher than the roof of many churches, a building proportioned to the amplitude of the diocese[x]: a building justly esteemed, as one of the most extensive and most regular of its kind in England, notwithstanding it was erected at different periods, and has undergone various alterations since the first foundation. But as the times, in which the particular parts were built, are not well determined, Mr. Essex[y] endeavoured to trace them, by comparing the historical accounts with the fabric itself; and from various opportunities he had of examining the several parts of the church, and comparing them with the plans in Sir William Dugdale's and Mr. Willis's histories.

Remigius, the last bishop of Dorchester, and first of Lincoln, laid the foundations of his cathedral in the year 1088, the second of William Rufus; and it is probable, he, being a Norman, employed Norman masons to superintend the building. He covered in the eastern part of it, though he could not compleat the whole before his death, which happened in 1092, four years after he had laid the foundations, and was buried in the upper north transept. His monument is on the north side the choir. His successor Robert Bloet, chancellor to William Rufus, finished the church, and dedicated it to the Virgin Mary. He was bishop of this see thirty-one years, died in the year 1123, and was buried in the upper transept near his predecessor.

In plate IV. fig. 4. is the plan of the church, which Remigius began, and Bloet finished. It was built in the form of a double cross, according to the fashion of those times. At the west end there were two towers, and another upon the intersection of the nave and great transept; the first are yet remaining, the other was taken down when the present rood tower was built. In the west front there were three gates which opened into the nave and side ailes, over which there were three large windows, which gave light to the nave and ailes. Between the west end and the great transept there were eight arches on each side, supported by piers or pillars. Above the arches, which were semicircular, was a tier of windows with the same sort of arches. Within the thickness of the wall above the arches was a passage for a way to the windows round the church, and a communication between the rood tower and those at the west end. On the east side of the great transept there was a portico of six arches, three in the north and three in the south arm, designed for chapels. Between the great transept and the upper transept there were four arches on each side, the width of the upper transept included a fifth, and beyond that was another, from the eastern pillar of which the tribune ran in semicircle, with the ailes which were continued round the east end. In the upper transept there were four semicircular chapels, two in the north, and two in the south.

The west front and two towers of the old church are still remaining, and include one arch on each side of the present church. The west doors are highly ornamented and well executed for that time; the arches are all semicircular, and there seem to have been statues on each side the principal gate. On the outer piers there are two very large niches, with two more on the north and south; these probably were intended for statues. On the piers between the arches there are two small recesses with figures in [u] Phil. Trans. N° 461. p. 853. A model of this was preserved in the Museum of the Royal Society.

[x] Worth. Linc. p. 151. [y] See his Observations on Lincoln cathedral. Archæol. IV. 149—158.

them. Above theſe was a kind of broad faſcia or band carved in ſemi relievo, repreſenting ſeveral paſſages of ſcripture from the old teſtament, exhibited in pl. VIII.[z] The difference of the workmanſhip, and the irregularity in which they are placed, make it probable they were brought from ſome old church, and placed in this front when it was firſt built. This front was finiſhed with a range of ſmall pillars and ſemicircular interſecting arches, and with a triangular fronton raiſed over the center arch. Above theſe the towers were raiſed four ſtories higher; and every ſtory ornamented with pillars and arches. From theſe remains of Remigius's church, it appears to have been a large and elegant building; but it does not appear that any part of it was vaulted, though at the time it was built it was cuſtomary to vault the ſide ailes and tribunes with ſtone, and ceile the nave with wood painted, as it is in the cathedral of Peterborough, and was in the church of Canterbury before the fire in 1174.

In this ſtate Remigius's church ſtood but a few years; for in the year 1124, ſoon after the death of biſhop Bloet, it was burnt down, and "rebuilt by "biſhop Alexander, his ſucceſſor, with an arched "roof for the prevention of the like accident; and "he gave himſelf ſo much to the adorning of his ca-"thedral, that he made it the moſt beautiful church "in England at that time." But, notwithſtanding biſhop Alexander had made it the moſt elegant church in England, we find that "St. Hugh the Burgundian, "who was biſhop here in the reign of Henry II. "enlarged it, by building what is called the New "Work. He alſo built the chapter houſe with marble "pillars, and laid out a great deal on his palaces." After reading this account by Mr. Willis[a], it is natural to conclude, that the choir and upper tranſept, which are the oldeſt parts of the church, except the weſt end, were built by biſhop Alexander, and that St. Hugh enlarged it by adding the five arches from thence to the eaſt end. But, when we conſider that Alexander lived in the reigns of Henry I. and Stephen, and find nothing in the choir or tranſept agreeable to the ſtyle of building uſed in thoſe times, and that the city wall which ſtood near the end of the church was not removed until fifty-ſix years after the death of St. Hugh, we muſt ſuſpect ſome miſtake in the account; and, from what may be collected from the building itſelf, the true ſtate of the affair ſeems to be as follows.

Remigius's church was damaged by a fire which happened the year after biſhop Alexander was conſecrated; but it was not burnt down. This misfortune might be attributed to its not being vaulted; and, to prevent the like accident, he vaulted it with ſtone when he repaired it. Yet we muſt not ſuppoſe he vaulted it with ſtone throughout; for it was uſual at that time to vault the ailes only, leaving the roof over the nave naked or ceiled with wood. The vaulting of the ailes only was certainly an improvement to the church; and, if it did not make it the moſt beautiful in England, it was, as the antient hiſtorian obſerves, pulchrior quam in ipſa novitate ſui compareret. But, if Alexander improved the beauty of his church, he impaired the ſtrength of it at the ſame time; for the walls, which were made to bear a roof of timber, would give way to the preſſure of a vault: and although the builders might add pillars againſt them, and to the piers of the nave, which would ſupport the ſpringers, the walls themſelves muſt be too weak, without the aſſiſtance of external buttreſſes, to ſupport the lateral preſſure of the heavy vaults then in uſe. Theſe defects in Alexander's work muſt appear in leſs than 30 or 40 years, and probably were ſo much worſe when St. Hugh became biſhop, as to determine that prelate to rebuild it in the new manner (which was introduced about that time) with vaults over the nave as well as ſide ailes; but, as the ground would not admit of any addition eaſtward, he pulled down the choir and upper tranſept, and began his new church upon the foundations of the old one, adding the buildings A and B to the weſt ſide of the tranſept. When this work was finiſhed, he began the Chapter-houſe C on the north ſide of the church. The plan is a decagon; the vault is ſupported within by a ſingle pillar, and on the outſide by archbuttreſſes extending very near the wall of the city. The ſtyle of this building agrees with the time of Henry II. and is of the ſame age as the choir and upper tranſept; which confirms the common opinion that St. Hugh built it.

The next great work was to rebuild the remaining part of the old church as far as the weſt towers, including the great tranſept and rood tower. The ſtyle of this building agrees with the time of king John and beginning of Henry III's reign; whence Mr. Effex concludes it was begun and conſiderably advanced by Hugh de Wells, and finiſhed by biſhop Groſthead, who raiſed the rood tower as high as the bottom of the upper windows. The two chapels D and E with the porch F were built, and the additions to the width and height of the weſt front were made at the ſame time. By theſe additions the church was enlarged; and, as this new work was begun by biſhop Hugh de Wells, it was afterwards attributed to St. Hugh the Burgundian.

Biſhop Groſthead having compleated the nave and great tranſept, and carried the rood tower one order above the roof, Henry Lexington his ſucceſſor applied to Henry III. for leave to remove the city wall at the eaſt end[b], which was granted in the year 1256; and ſoon after they took down the ſemicircular end of St. Hugh's choir, and added the five arches beyond the upper tranſept. This Mr. Effex ſuppoſes was done in the latter part of Henry the Third's reign, while Richard de Graveſend and Oliver Sutton were biſhops. Theſe five arches are the moſt beautiful part of the church, and moſt perfect ſpecimen of the ſtyle of building which prevailed at that time in England. Dr. Stukeley, ſuppoſing this work much older than it is, ſays[c], "when Alexander the biſhop "projected a ſtructure of much larger dimenſions, "they carried the ſacred encloſure beyond the "eaſtern bounds of the city, and ſo built a new wall "farther that way, as it is now, with battlements "and towers." But the ſtyle of this building ſufficiently proves that it could be no part of Alexander's work; and the grant of Henry III. ſhews, that the boundary wall was not removed before the year 1256. This miſtake might ariſe from a charter of Henry I. to biſhop Alexander, De porta de Eſt-

[z] The blank is filled with three figures cut a few years ago to ſupply the place of older; and there are two more groupes too imperfect to merit copying.
[a] Hiſtory of Lincoln Cathedral, p. 49.
[b] Carta Henrici III. de remotione muri orientalis civitatis. Dugdale.
[c] Itin. I. p. 83.

gate, cum terris quæ ſupra ipſam ſunt[d]; but theſe grounds were not taken in before the year 1299, when biſhop Sutton obtained a charter from Edward I. to encompaſs the cloſe of the church with a wall. Here it may be proper to obſerve, that, before Remigius's church was built, the city was encloſed on the ſouth and eaſt, if not on the north and weſt ſides, with two walls; one was the old Roman wall, the other nearly parallel at ſeveral yards diſtant from it. To both walls there were gates; thoſe in the ſouth and eaſt were ſtanding not many years ago; the inner gates were like that on the north, called Newport gate; the outer gates were more modern. The church was built within the ſouth-eaſt quarter of this city, bounded on the ſouth by the Roman wall now running at the back of the ſubdean and chanter's houſes; on the weſt by the public way running from the ſouth to the north gate; on the north by another public way running from the weſt to the eaſt gate; and on the eaſt by the wall of the outer encloſure. Whether the Roman wall was removed before the ground was granted to Remigius is uncertain; but that it was removed before the church was built cannot be doubted, if that biſhop and ſeveral of his ſucceſſors were buried in the upper north tranſept, as hiſtorians relate; for the foundations which appear north and ſouth of the church ſhew the line in which it run muſt have paſſed through that tranſept near the line G H, which they now ſtrike upon in digging graves; but the wall, which was removed in Henry the Third's time, ſtood near the line I K. The ground lying on the ſouth, between the two walls, was given to biſhop Robert de Cheſney by a charter of Henry II.[e] but Henry I. by a former charter gave biſhop R. Bloet leave to make a way through the city wall ad ſua neceſſaria facienda ad domum ſuam[f]; by which it is probable he began the palace which Robert Cheſney finiſhed. Within this ſpace were likewiſe included the churches of St. Michael and St. Andrew, as appears by the charter of Henry II. to biſhop Cheſney.

The rood tower, which biſhop Groſthead raiſed one order above the roof, remained unfiniſhed until the reign of Edward II. but, ſoon after the year 1306, biſhop John d'Alderby raiſed it to the preſent height, and finiſhed it with a lofty ſpire of timber covered with lead; and about the ſame time the weſtern towers were raiſed, and ſpires of the ſame kind added to them, which until that time continued in the ſtate Robert Bloet had left them: but in the year 1547 the ſpire on the rood tower, equal in height to the tower[g], was blown down in a violent ſtorm of wind. It damaged the roof over the choir, and deſtroyed ſome of the battlements of the tower. The latter were not reſtored until the year 1775.

Mr. Eſſex imagines the ſcreen and rood loft, with the ſtalls in the choir, were made in the time of Edward II. and the ſouth end of the great tranſept, as low as the bottom of the great roſe window, in the time of Edward III.

Mr. Willis ſays, the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen without the north wall of the church was built in the ſame reign by biſhop Gynewell. If he means the chapel marked (D) in the plan (oppoſite the conſiſtory court, and now uſed for the morning prayers), he muſt be miſtaken; that chapel being the ſame which was built by biſhop Groſthead: but it is probable he rebuilt and lengthened one of the ſemi-circular chapels in the upper north tranſept (L), called ſometimes St. Mary's chapel, which a few years ago was reſtored to its original form[h].

Mr. Willis muſt be miſtaken likewiſe in ſaying that biſhop William Alnwick made the ſtately ſouth porch; for, if he means the beautiful porch on the ſouth ſide of the preſbytery, that is evidently part of the original building erected in the reign of Henry III. The two adjoining chapels M and N are more modern. One of them was built by biſhop Ruſſel in the reign of Henry VII. the other in imitation of it by biſhop Longland in the reign of Henry VIII; or, if he means the great porch (F) commonly called the Galilee, adjoining to the ſouth end of the great tranſept, that is as old as the tranſept itſelf. But, as much was done in the reign of Henry VI. at the weſt end of the church, particularly the vaulting under the ſouth and north towers, the three windows over the weſt doors, and other ornamental work on the inſide, with the tabernacles and ſtatues over the great door on the outſide; it is probable they were done in the time of biſhop Alnwick; and, as he was buried in the middle of the nave near the weſt door, he might have made the vaulting under the ſouth tower at his own expence, which being the entrance into the ſouth aile or portico might be called the ſouth porch.

Biſhops Ruſſel and Longland in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. built two chapels on the ſouth ſide of the preſbytery for their burial places. Biſhop Alnwic in the reign of Henry VI. or biſhop Gynewell in that of Edward III. added much ornament to the weſt front, and the 11 ſtatues of kings, from the Conqueror to Edward III. formerly painted and gilt over the great weſt door.

The compartment between the vaulting and the upper windows in that part which extends from the upper tranſept to the eaſt window is ſo richly adorned with figures of angels playing on a variety of muſical inſtruments, that ſome have given it the name of the Choir of Angels, though without any authority of records or tradition.

The whole fabric has been put into ſubſtantial repair, and an aukward ill-connected arch, which Gibbs threw acroſs the two weſt towers, removed under the direction of that great maſter of Gothic architecture Mr. Eſſex.

[d] Carta Henrici I. De porta de Eſtgata. Dugdale's Monaſt.
[e] Carta Henrici II. De foſſato & muro Ballii ad faciendam portam. Dugd. Monaſt.
[f] Carta Henrici I. De faciendo exitu in muro caſtelli ſui. Ib.
[g] E. Reg. D. &. C.
[h] "The uncertainty, whether it was the chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary, or St. Mary Magdalen, might, and I am certain did arise from the entries in two of the old books occaſioned by the miſtake of the tranſcribers, at different times; for in one (the Martyrology), the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen is ſaid to be "ad caput orientale Eccleſiæ." In the foundation book of Chantries, written in a much older hand, it is ſaid Robert de Laſcy founded a chantry in the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen ad caput occidentale eccleſiæ ex parte boreali. Now both being on the north, this addition of ſituation does not clear up the uncertainty; but I find, on looking into the antient Miſſal, pretended to belong to the Freeſchool, though undoubtedly borrowed from the Manuſcript Library, and which appears to have belonged to and been uſed by the prieſt of St. Mary's chapel, that this chapel was built or enlarged upon the foundation probably of the old ſemi-circular chapel, and dedicated in 1501. The entry is thus: "In honorem beate Marie Virginis Dedicatio hujus capellæ eſt, et in die Sanctorum Criſpini et Criſpiani fuit dedicata Anno Domini 1501." Now as the chapel lately pulled down appeared, I think, of a more modern ſtyle of architecture than that of the Morning chapel, which I call St. Mary Magdalen chapel, I conclude that Mr. Eſſex has rightly ſuppoſed it was the chapel of the Virgin Mary at the eaſt end of the church." Mr. Bradley.

The late earl of Burlington, who had a taſte for architecture, and was as capable as any perſon of deciding the queſtion of precedency betwixt the churches of York and Lincoln ſo long conteſted, accounted this by far the nobleſt Gothic ſtructure in England, and York in no degree comparable to it. He even preferred the weſt front of Lincoln to any thing of the kind in Europe; and ſays, that whoever had the conducting of it was well acquainted with the nobleſt buildings of Old Rome, and had united ſome of their greateſt beauties in that one work [i].

"Sepultures in Lyncolne. Henry Burherſte biſ-
"ſhop of Lincoln buried in the eſt ende of the "churche toward the northe. There is alſo buried
"at his fete Robart his brother, a knighte of greate
"fame in the warrs. And there alſo is buried Barp-
"toleme ſunn to Robert Burwaſche, and they foundyd
"five priſts and five pore ſcollars at gramar ſchole
"in Lyncolne. In ower Lady Chappell at the eſt
"ende of the northe ſyde of the churche is buried
"the bowells of queene Elianor. The armes of "Caſtle be on the ſyde of the tombe. In the ſouthe
"eſt chapell next to it is buried one of the lorde
"Nicholas Cantilupes. This Cantilupe founded a "maſtar and two or three cantuaries, after augmentyd
"to VII. Now the colledge is corruptely caulid
"Negem college. And thereby at his hed lyethe
"one of the Wymbiſches, a reſidenſary of Lincolne,
"in a fayre highe tombe. In S. Nicholas chapell
"is a merveylows fair and large pſaltar full in the "margin of goodly armes of many noble men. S.
"Hughe liethe in the body of the eſt parte of the "churche above the High Altare. Byſhope Flem-
"inge liethe in an highe tumbe in the northe iſle of "the upper parte of the churche in the walle, and "thereby under flate ſtones ly Oliver Sutton and "John Chadworthe, biſhope. Byſhope Ruſſel, and
"Longland, now byſhop, tumbes be in to chapells
"caſt out of the upper parte of the ſouth wall of "the church. Agayne this chapel is Fitz-Wil"liam, knt. buried. In the ſouth parte of the "preſbytery lyithe in two ſeveralle high marble
"tumbes in a chapell Catarine Swineforde the 3
"wife to John of Gaunt duke of Lanceaſter, and "Jane her daughter countes of Weſtmerlande.
"Byſhope Thomas lyethe in the higheſt croſs northe
"iſle. Robert Groſted lyethe in the higheſte ſouth
"iſle with a goodly tumbe of marble and an image
"of braſſe over it. Byſhop Repington lyethe under "a flate ſtone thereby. In the lower northe croſs
"iſle lyeth byſhop Thomas Weke. In the lower
"ſouth croſſe iſle lay byſhop Dalderby, but his "tumbe was taken away nomine ſuperſtitionis. John
"Multon, knt. lyethe in the body of the churche.
"Byſhop Gwyney [Gynwell] lyethe in the body of "the churche, and buyldyd a great chapel of St.
"Magdalene without the very north wall, but join"ing on the north ſide of the cathedral church, and "founded three cantuaries, and this church was after
"tranſlatid into the north ſide of the eſheker by the "peace of weſt area of the church yard, where
"the dean of Lincoln's howſe is in the minſtar cloſe,
"and thereabout was a monaſtery of nuns afore the "tyme that Remigius began the new mynſtar of "Lincoln, and of this howſe yet remain certain to"kens. The body of the church of Lincoln to the "firſt croſſe iſle hath VIII archys pilloryd with mar"ble on each ſide. The firſt croſſe iſle is greater
"and more in length than the ſecond croſs iſle is.
"The quiere betwixt the two croſſe iſles hath on "eche ſide four arches and pillors of marble. The "eſt ende of the church hath five arches on eche
"ſide with pillors of marble. On the north end of "the upper croſſe iſle is the cloyſter, and in the eaſt
"end of it is the chapter houſe, the eaſt end whereof
"is very fair opere circulari and the fornix is ſup-
"ported with a pillar of marble. There is a very
"fayre dore in the upper parte of the church ſouth-
"ward to go into the cloſe and again this lyith the "byſhops palace hanging in declivio. All the whole
"cloſe is invironid with an high ſtrong wawle hav"ing divers gats in it, whereof the principall is the "eſcheker gate. The paroche church of St. Mar"garet is within the cloſe by eaſt ſouth-eaſt [k]."

Biſhop Bloet who died 1122, Alexander a Norman 1147, Cheſney 1167, and Bleſenſis 1209, and were buried in the upper leſſer north tranſept, perhaps under the blue coffin faſhioned ſtones below, have only their pictures painted at full length on the wall above [l]. Other biſhops that had monuments are Remigius 1092 in the choir, Hugh the Burgundian 1200, Welles 1235, Groſthead 1254, Graveſend 1279, Burgwaſh 1340, Fleming 1431, Chadworth 1471, Ruſſel 1495, Smith 1530, Longland 1547, Fuller 1675. King John and king William of Scotland carried St. Hugh's corps to the church door, and it was lodged in a ſilver ſhrine to which biſhop Fuller ſubſtituted a marble table monument with an inſcription. The ſuppoſed ſhrine on the north ſide of the ſouth aile of the choir engraved as his by Dr. Stukeley [m] was really the niche in which the image of the Virgin Mary was placed [n]. Other monuments are for Nicholas lord Cantilupe 1371, John lord Welles (not as Dugdale ſir John Tiptoft, whoſe ſaltire ingrailed with Cantilupe's arms is on the tomb) Bartholomew lord Burgherſh, Wimbiſh one of the reſidentiaries or priors of Nocton, Catherine Swinford miſtreſs and third wife of John of Gaunt, and her daughter Joan counteſs of Weſtmoreland.

Biſhops whoſe monuments are defaced were Sutton, Chadworth, Thomas, Repingdon, Weke, Dalderby, Gwyney, or Gynewell, Smith. On the new paving of the nave and its tranſepts 1782 and 1783, theſe, with innumerable more which had loſt both figures and inſcriptions, were taken up, and are intended to be laid down in the ailes of the choir, or in the cloiſter. In digging a grave near the north door of the choir was found the inſcription cut on a leaden plate engraved by Dugdale [o] and Hearne [p], but more correctly in our pl. IV. fig. 5.

The old bell called Tom of Lincoln weighed 7807lb. the preſent 8883lb. coſt £.148 and will hold 424 gallons of ale meaſure, and is about ſeven yards and an half in compaſs.

The library over the north cloiſter was built by dean Honeywood, whoſe portrait by Hanneman is ſtill preſerved in it. At the eaſt end is the old MS. library.

[i] Extract from a letter of the late Mr. Sympſon of Lincoln to Mr. Precentor Trimnel, dated July 9, 1740. From Mr. Cole's MS. Collections.

[k] Leland VIII. 49.

[l] Theſe were painted by James Francis Damini a Venetian painter, who had £. 80. for them. He painted the altar in St. Peter's church at the Arches in the city 1728.

[m] Itin. I. pl. xxix.

[n] Ex libro ſic notato ⁂ 1520, 1559, penes D. & C. p. 135.

[o] Bar. I. 386.

[p] Pref. to Sprotti Chron. p. xxvi.

The close wall has been embattled quite round, and had several towers on it, but they are now ruined, and the battlements almost every where demolished. It has still five gates and a postern. The principal gate facing the Castle hill is called the Chequer. Here are two handsome stone gatehouses, with a large gate in the middle, and a postern on either side, all curiously vaulted, and their roofs till within the last 50 years leaded. On the south side of the chequer two or three dwelling houses reach from one gatehouse to the other. On the north side St. Mary Magdalen's church, built here after bishop Sutton removed the parishioners out of the nave of the cathedral which Remigius had built on the antient site of their church, completes the quadrangle. Here is a fine well in common to the inhabitants of this little square. The next gate is a little more north between the White Hart and Angel inns, facing the Bail. A third opposite to it facing East gate. The fourth faces North gate. These have all had double gates. A fifth is called Potter gate: and the postern is at the top of the Greestone stairs. The Deanry house was founded by dean afterwards bishop Gravesend 1254[q]; the gatehouse by dean Flemming, whose arms are on it; the front next the minster has the initials of Roger Parker, and the date 1616 over the bow window; the hall by Dean Fuller, whose arms are over the door. It has been since improved by dean Yorke. To it adjoins an antient building called the Works Chantry, the habitation of the four chantry priests, who celebrated daily for the foundation and benefactors of the fabric, but more antiently it was the chancellor's house till 1321, when the present house was assigned to chancellor Beke. Opposite to the south gate of the minster by the palace gate stands the chantry house of Nicholas lord Cantelupe, a stone building till lately leaded: on the north front are these coats carved in stone; G. a fess vairé between three leopards heads jessant fleurs de lis, O. Cantelupe, & G. bezanté, a canton erm. Zouch. The vicar's college, now called the Old Vicar's, formed a quadrangle, of which there remain only four good houses, which are sufficient for the present number of vicars. The gateway is adorned with these coats of arms. Old France and England quarterly between a cross botoné, Bishop Sutton, and a fess between six cross crosslets, Beauchamp. This college was begun by bishop Sutton, whose executors finished the hall, kitchen, and several chambers. The long building below the quadrangle, now divided into stables and haylofts, seems to have been built by bishop Alnwyck, and John Breton, prebendary of Sutton cum Bucks; the bishop's arms, A. a cross moline S. and the rebus Bre on a tun, being on the east end. To the chancellor's house adjoins that of the choristers, first assigned them by bishop Gravesend. The house of the poor clerks who lived together by a constitution of bishop Sutton is that where the residentiaries entertained their vicars and officers. Burgherst's chantry house and others are now leased out. Hard by, over the gateway of a private house, were, till within these few years, kept the bishop's and archdeacon's registers, the records of which begin earlier than those of either archbishopric, or perhaps any see in England, with Remigius the founder, and after an interval are resumed. From bishop Welles, 1209, to bishop Barlow, 1608, there is a series of registers in good preservation, those of the five eldest bishops in rolls, the others in large velom books down to the Reformation, after which the care of the registers here, as well as at York and other places, seems to have slackened a little. A book of the endowments of the vicarages throughout the diocese is written in the same small fair hand, full of observations, as bishop Welles' roll of institutions.

On the south side of the brow of the hill is the bishop's palace, hanging as Leland says in declivio, once a glorious and magnificent structure, built by bishop Chesney, to whom the site was granted by Henry II. being all the land with the fos from the wall of the bail of Lincoln by St. Nicholas' churchyard to that of St. Andrew, and thence east to the city wall free and quit of landgavel, parcage, and all other things, with free licence to break a gate through the bail wall for his passage to and from the church[r]. It was enlarged with great magnificence by Hugh and Bec, and put into complete repair by Williams, but ruined in the civil war except the gate, the work of bishop Alnwic, whose arms, a cross moline, are both on the spandrils and wooden door, and on the base of a bow window over the gate were the arms of France and England quarterly between those of bishop Alnwyk and the see. The shell of the hall, begun by Hugh the Burgundian[s], and finished by Hugh the second, is 84 feet by 50, supported by two rows of marble pillars, with three arches opening into the screen at the south end, and communicating by a bridge of one lofty pointed arch with the kitchen and principal apartments. This hall had four double windows on a side, and from its width was probably supported by two rows of pillars. Bishop Hugh the second built the famous kitchen which has seven chimnies in it. From the gate to the close wall, west of the old vicars, bishop Alnwick built a curious chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary, the walls and roof almost intire 1727, but since pulled down. In the window were lines commemorating the saint and the founder. The front of the palace next the city exhibits three stout buttresses probably the work of bishop Williams, who laid out much money on the repair of this stately fabric, which, when intire, was exceeded by few of our antient castles in situation, size, magnificence, and extent of prospect. The late Dr. Nelthorp obtaining a lease of the site built with the old materials a good stone house, since much enlarged, in which the bishop is at present accommodated during the short visits he pays to his see.

As the jurisdiction of this large bishopric was great, so the revenues were, before the Reformation, proportioned to it. Except the two archbishoprics and the principality bishoprics that had baronies belonging to them (viz. Winchester, Durham, and Ely,) no see in the kingdom was so well endowed, insomuch that we meet with no bishop translated from hence to any see except Winchester before the reign of Elizabeth, though since Mr. Willis observes[t] no less than 10 out of 17 have left this for other sees. Nor was it less remarkable for its many palaces or places of residence for the bishops within their diocese; for they had before 1547 eight furnished in the diocese besides others. In this county Lincoln, Sleaford, and Nettleham: in Rutland Lidington; in Hunting-

[q] Cart. Dec. f. 4. b
[s] Martlog. f. 2. b. f. 3. b.
[r] Monast. III. p. 267.
[t] Hist. of Linc. cath. 35.

donſhire Buckden; in Buckinghamſhire Woburn and Tinghurſt; in Oxfordſhire Banbury caſtle; and two more, at Newark c. Nottingham, and Lincoln-place in Chancery-lane, London. All theſe, except that of Lincoln, with about 30 manors, were given up 1 Edward VI. by Holbech, the firſt married biſhop, who, to gratify ſome courtiers and raiſe a family, exchanged every thing for impropriations[u], ſo that now ſcarce four manors remain of the antient eſtates; and biſhop Kennet obſerves this ſee above all others conſiſts in the propriety of rectories and tithes; and as Buckden palace reverted to the ſee after the duke of Somerſet's death, and a little before his own 1551, Mr. Willis obſerves, that in the firſt year of his promotion here, as a preſage of misfortunes to the church, the tall ſpire of his cathedral, reputed higher than that at Saliſbury, fell down, and the city pariſh churches went to rack, and were the greateſt part of them demoliſhed during the time he continued at Lincoln. He died at Nettleham Auguſt 6, 1551, and was buried there under a tomb of freeſtone with his arms carved on the ſides. Queen Mary reſtored the ſeveral eſtates to biſhop White, but queen Elizabeth took them all back on his deprivation 1559.

Biſhop Cooper, ſo gratefully commended by Mr. Camden, was dean of Glouceſter and Oxford, conſecrated biſhop of this ſee February 29, 1570. After refuſing the ſee of Norwich he was tranſlated to Wincheſter 1583, where he lies buried near the biſhop's throne, with this epitaph:

"Hic jacet Thomas Cooper, olim Lincolnienſis,
"nuper Wintonienſis epiſcopus munificentiſſimus,
"doctiſſimus, vigilantiſſimus præſul; qui religioſiſ-
"ſime in domino obiit. April 29, A. D. 1594.

"Theſaurus Chronicorum, Cooperi cetera ſcripta
"Dum remanent celebris Cooperi fama manebit.
"Oxonienſis erat Gloceſtrenſiſque decanus,
"Continuus primæ vice-cancellarius urbis,
"Tum Lincolnenſis fit præſul, & inde movetur
"Wintoniam, duos ubi ſedit epiſcopus annos.
"Summe doctus erat, ſummeque benignus egenis,
"Et ſummo ſtudio divina oracula pandit.
"Terra tegit corpus, ſed ſpiritus eſt ſuper aſtra.
"Celeſtes animæ celeſti pace fruentur."

At the bottom,

"In obitum Thomae Cooperi, ſacræ Theologiæ profeſſoris, W. S. δεκαεοχον."

At Tinghurſt c. Bucks, Henry de Burwaſh or Burgherſt biſhop of Lincoln and chancellor of England in the reign of Edward II. with whom he was a very great favourite, by meer might againſt all right and reaſon took in the land of many poor people without making the leaſt reparation therein, to compleat his park. However the canons of Lincoln, warned as ſome ſay by his ghoſt, which could not reſt after his death, but appeared to them in a hunting dreſs, telling them he was appointed keeper of this park, and beſeeching them to throw it open, reſtored the poor to their lands again[w].

To this noble cathedral belong, beſides the biſhop, a deah, precentor, chancellor, ſubdean, ſix archdeacons, 52 prebendaries, four prieſt vicars, five layvicars or ſingingmen, an organiſt, ſeven poor clerks, four choriſters, ſix Burghurſt's chanters, &c. The revenues were valued 26 Henry VIII. at £.1962. per ann. clear, now £.830. and the dividend money of the chapter £ 546.[x]

Dr. Stukeley conceived that the old church above hill in the centre of the Roman city, called St. Paul's, was the church built by Paulinus, when he converted Blecca the governor to the Chriſtian faith. He ſaw in many parts of it there had been more than one rebuilding of the church on the old foundation, and he fancied he diſcerned part of the very church built by Paulinus, which Bede ſaw in ruins[y], particularly of the north door where you deſcend into the church by ſix ſteps on the outſide: the capitals and nail work without are of the ſtyle of thoſe times. Above it the nail work was originally continued round the arch, now a more modern one, yet ſtill very antient, and this ſeems to have been the door by which Paulinus and Blecca uſed to enter the church: for oppoſite to it is that famous fragment of a very great Roman building, called the Mint wall, before deſcribed, probably the remains of the palace where Blecca reſided. Tradition ſays that it was a mint, and probably it has been uſed for that purpoſe ſince Blecca's time. This door is of the ſame kind of fabric as the north door of St. Peter's church, Stamford, now in being at a neighbouring houſe which was built in St. Wilfrid's time. Within the church were many very antient inſcriptions on tomb-ſtones of black marble in Roman characters. The Dr. obſerved that the older part of the walls on the outſide was made of very old cut ſtones, and of an old ſort of ſtones moſt likely the ruins of the firſt church. At the ſouth-eaſt corner on the outſide he ſaw a ſpring of an arch low in the ground, perhaps one of the original church. It is eaſy to conceive how the church came in later times to be called St. Paul's corruptly for Paulinus[z]. This church is at preſent much dilapidated. The arch here mentioned remains, but none of the inſcriptions, nor does the idea ſeem well founded as to the preſent church.

A curious ſilver coin in the Pembroke cabinet, and engraved in our Plate of Saxon coins, fig. 18.[a] having on one ſide a ſword and SCIM and on the other LINCOLIA CIVT round a croſs, ſeems to have been ſtruck by the prepoſitus or chief magiſtrate of this city in the Saxon times before the Conqueſt. The croſs and ſaint's name prove it to be Chriſtian, and would induce a belief that St. Martin was the tutelar ſaint of the city before the foundation of the cathedral, one of the principal churches here being dedicated to him, and antiently of royal patronage, till William I. granted it to Remigius[b]. It is ſtill prebendal, but the profits being gone, it has not been collated to for many years. Seman Grantham, whoſe family were long conſiderable in this city, and repreſented it from 12 Edward IV. to ... Charles II. bequeathed his body to be buried in the choir of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary in this church 1452. The Mint hall ſtood in or between Silver lane and Silver ſtreet a little below St. Peter's at Arches church. Many Jews inhabited this pariſh, and had a ſchool-houſe in [u] See Rymer's Fœd. XV. 166, 167. Godwin, p. 300. ed Richardſ.

ARTI

▽ I ▽

[w] Fuller's Church Hiſt. Cent. xvii. p. 107. Godwin, ed. Rich. p. 294. Pat 4. Ed. III. p. 2. m. 30 vel 31, pro imparcatione 6 acr. com. de Tinghurſt & ccc acr. in com. Buckingham de Luda, &c. Tan. Not. Mon. p. 354.
[x] Tan. 252. [y] Eccl. Hiſt. II. c. 16. eccleſiam operis egregii de lapide fecit.
[z] Letter from Dr. Stukeley to Mr. Gale concerning the church now called St. Paul's at Lincoln, &c. Aug. 2, 1735.
[a] See Introd. p. cxiv. [b] See Mon. Ang. III. 258. Pat. 8 Hen. VI. p. 2. m. 10.

it,

it, the ſite of which was quitclaimed by John de Thornhaugh to the dean and chapter 1324. Tradition ſays, that the child Hugh [c] was crucified here in the houſe now or lately leaſed to Mr. John Harvey. The Jew's houſe, as it is called, oppoſite to the end of the Bull ring lane, is much taken notice of by travellers of curioſity, the door which ſtands in the middle of the front being arched over, and a chimney built on it. It was in the poſſeſſion of Belaſet de Wallingford, a Jeweſs, hanged for clipping 18 Edward I. and by the king granted next year to William de Foleteby. His brother granted it to canon Thornton, and he to the dean and chapter, whoſe property it now is.

St. Swithin's church was united to ſome others, 1553, and burnt by the blowing up of ſome gunpowder 1644. By what one may judge from the ruins yet ſtanding it has been the beſt pariſh church in the town except St. Botulph's. Eaſt of this are the remains of the Greyfriars houſe, founded before 1230 [d], given to the city by Robert Monſon, eſq; for a grammar ſchool, which he fitted up at his own expence 1567. Under it is a ſpinning ſchool, and before it is the ſheep market: and a wool market was ordered by act of common council 1626, but that is a commodity never brought to market.

At Trinity church at the ſtairs, and at St. Andrew's in Wikford, was an anchoreſs at each, and an anchorite at St. Andrew's below the palace.

By ſtatute 2 Edward VI. the churches in Lincoln were united, ſo that the clear yearly value of any one benefice, whereunto ſuch union ſhould be made, exceed not upon ſuch union made the yearly profit to the incumbent of the ſame above 14*l.* This union reduced the number from 52 to 15. At preſent there are only ſix intire, and ſeveral in ruins.

Religious houſes here were Gilbertine canons founded 1148 by biſhop Bloet, valued at £.202. per ann. [e] St. Bege's, or rather St. Mary Magdalen (for it was dedicated to her) for Benedictines, cell to York, valued at £.23. 6*s.* 3*d.* [f]

The ſite of St. Mary's friery, or houſe of White friars, founded 1269 [g], was in Wykeford between the now dilapidated churches of St. Mary and St. Edward.

The houſe of Dominicans or black friars, founded 3 Edward I. [h] ſtood by the ſide of Potter-gate; the ſite now belongs to the fabrick of the cathedral.

Auſtin friars was founded 1291 [i], and here was an houſe of Sac friars de pœnitentia Jeſu [k]. Biſhop Tanner adds three hoſpitals beſides there of St. Leonard and St. Giles [l], and two colleges of prieſts [m].

The ſite of Friars preachers is oppoſite Spa cloſe in Butterwick. St. Mary Magdalen college of black monks is a farm-houſe on the other ſide the road; the chapel, made a barn, fired by the hay, and the ſhell only remaining. The demeſnes of it were incloſed 1584, and the monks' leys are a common for freemen's horſes in lieu of all common right. The priory mill was turned by a ſpring of a remarkable petrifying quality.

St. Leonard's hoſpital, founded by Henry I. for incurable lepers [n] of the city of Lincoln for a guardian, eight chaplains, and one prieſt [o], ſtood near St. Bartholomew's church on the weſt ſide of the caſtle, which church was decayed 1468, and a chapel built of its materials, the principal part of which is now called the chapel houſe, which was burnt 1644 by the royaliſts. On the hill where this church and hoſpital ſtood, William king of Scots ſwore fealty to king John November 22, 1200, on the croſier of archbiſhop Hubert, in the ſight of all the people, and in preſence of three archbiſhops, 12 biſhops, and the principal nobility of England, Scotland, Wales, and Normandy [p].

St Giles' hoſpital is now a farm houſe near Gretewell gate.

There are more remains of old buildings in this city than any other place in England. Without Barre gate (the ſouth gate now ſtanding) was a fair croſs and large [q], one of queen Eleanor's. It was demoliſhed about 1643. The place is yet diſcernable.

Upon the weſt wall of St. Mary's ſteeple is this Roman inſcription [r]:

DIS MANIBVS
NOMINI SACRI
BRVSCI FILI CIVIS
SENONI [s] ET CARSSo
VNAE [t] CONIVGIS
EIVS ET QVINTI F.

i. e.
Dis manibus
Nominii Sacri
Bruſci fili civis
Senonii & cariſſi
mæ conjugis ejus & Quinti filii.

and in the pediment above it a later Chriſtian inſcription, Pl. III. f. 12. This church bears great marks of antiquity. The epitaphs within it are all cut in white or blue ſlabs with various devices, but ſcarce any of them whole. Under the wall of the yard is the oat market, and on the wall is an antique conduit mentioned by Leland I. 34. with its caſtle, in Wikerford, and on it theſe arms:

A bend between 6 mullets.
A feſs cheque.
A feſs between 6 croſſes botonè.
Two chevronels between 6 croſſes botone fitche.
Three roſes, as ſeemed.

On the wall by it lie two figures, one probably Ranulph de Kyme mentioned by Leland, with a time-worn inſcription in capitals on the ledges; the other repreſents a female religious with a book in her left hand, her right on her breaſt.

South of St. Andrew's church-yard in Wykerford, is a houſe of a very antique ſtyle of building, vaulted over with ſtone. No tradition what it has been. This and ſome adjoining buildings called St. Andrew's rows are part of the fabrick eſtate. Adjoining to the ſame church northward remained the old palace of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter, whoſe arms curiouſly carved on a large block of freeſtone ſtood on the front of it till the year 1737. This is [c] Of whom ſee M. Paris, p. 912. [d] Lel. I. 26. Tan. 281. [e] Tan. 266. [f] Lel. I. 26. Tan. 273.

[g] Lel. I. 27. Tan. 282. [h] Tan. 282. [i] Tan. 283. [k] Tan. 285. Lel. ubi ſup.
[l] Tan. 256. 271. 282. 285. [m] Tan. 285.
[n] de ejectibus. Mon. Ang. II. 388. This is what is called Pat. 35 Henry VI. Mallardry. Pat. 7 Henry IV. Le Maladri. Malandy the true name explains the whole.
[o] Tan. 256. [p] Hoveden, 461. b. M. Paris. p. 204. [q] Lel. ubi ſup. [r] Horſley, Brit. Rom. p. 319.
[s] It ſeems ΦANONI and may as well be read Lincolni as Senoni. [t] or VME. Half the laſt line is cut off in the ſtone.

the

the goodly houſe that Leland ſays in his time belonged to the Suttons.

In this ſuburb on the weſt ſide of the ſtreet is an old houſe with a great round-arched gate (lord Huſſey's houſe, out of whoſe bow window he went to execution), and adjoining to it the other called John of Gaunt's, both which Mr. Buck engraved 1726. The latter being ruinous was taken down in the ſpring of 1783. Oppoſite to this is another antient building called John of Gaunt's ſtables, but more likely to have been his palace than the other. Both more probably belonged to ſome of the many religious houſes or foundations in this city and county.

The noble market houſe was built in the ſecond mayoralty of Mr. John Lebſey, 1736, by an act of common council, for applying for 10 years the £. 100. annually ſpent on the city feaſt. The church of St. Peter at Arches was rebuilt in his firſt mayoralty.

The town hall, where alſo the aſſizes are held, is over the Stonebow acroſs the high ſtreet, rebuilt about 13 Richard II. the ſouth front decorated with the ſtatues of the Virgin Mary and the angel Gabriel. The eaſt end is the common gaol, antiently called the kitchen, probably from having ſerved for the city feaſts.

Beaumont fee was a manor belonging to that noble family from the time of Edward III. in right of Iſabel, widow of John lord Veſci of Alnwick, and ſiſter of Henry de Beaumont; whence the manſion-houſe had the name of Veſci hall. It came afterwards to the Norfolk family, and has ſince been ſold more than once. It is exempt from the city's juriſdiction, and the bailiff is called at the aſſizes next after the ſheriffs of the city.

The high bridge of one arch over the main ſtream of the river Witham 21 feet, 9 inches diameter, and 11 feet high, is at leaſt 400 years old. From the main arch ſpring two others at right angles eaſtward, one on each ſide the river, which is vaulted over. Upon this vault ſtood the antient chapel of St. Thomas the Martyr, let for a dwelling-houſe 1549, in which was a chantry, founded by the corporation 32 Edward I. Running from the bridge down the chapel entry on the ſouth ſide of the river is Scotch hall, an antient building, whoſe windows were formerly full of painted glaſs. On one ſide of a door-caſe within the court and on other parts were carved in wood and ſtone the arms of Gegge, whoſe manſion it probably was, a chevron between two creſcents in chief, and a croſs patée fitché in baſe; alſo in the ſouth window of St. Benedict's church adjoining and quartered by the Granthams from the time of Henry VIII.

The fine ſpring, which at preſent ſupplies the city conduits, but antiently the Grey friars, riſes in this lordſhip. There is a ſmall building of brick over the ſpring head, from whence the water is conveyed by leaden pipes about a mile to the firſt conduit at the bridge foot, and from thence to the other before deſcribed at St. Mary's in Wikerford.

The cordwainers and weavers are the only companies now ſubſiſting here, as indeed they were the only companies incorporated by royal charter; the former ſo early as 2 Richard II. 1389.

Vine cloſe in Butterwick is the vinea ſua apud Lincoln granted by Henry I. to biſhop Bloet and his canons. This circumſtance of a vineyard ſo far north ſo long ago would induce one to believe the vine has been of longer ſtanding in this iſland than is commonly ſuppoſed.

Here were two ſchools, one in the cloſe maintained by the dean and chapter; the other in the city maintained by the corporation: both united 1583, the maſter elected and paid half by the dean and chapter; the uſher elected and paid by the corporation, who are to pay half the maſter's ſalary, and repair the ſchool-houſe, which is on the ſite of the Grey friars, and the biſhop to permit no other within three miles of Lincoln.

The city is a corporation governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, two ſheriffs, and not leſs than 45 nor more than 49 common council. It has four coroners and four chamberlains, and ſends two members to parliament.

It is a county of itſelf, including 20 miles round it, and ſome pariſhes without the town; but part of the town called the Cloſe is in the parts of Lindſey in the county, and the parts of Keſteven come within one mile of the bar gate.

The fee-farm rent which the city paid to the cathedral, 80*l.* for Burgh's chantry, was diſcharged 1543 with the plate of the great guild. The chapel on the bridge was converted into a dwelling-houſe 1548.

Lincoln was viſited with the plague 1549, 1586, and 1630; and between Holyrood day 1586 and 1587 were five mayors elected.

James I. made a progreſs here 1617, and aſſiſted at a great horſe-race on the heath for a cup. The lower town having been taken by the parliament's forces under the earl of Mancheſter, the caſtle was ſtormed May 1644.

In the ſtone quarries in a field about a mile eaſt from the cathedral great numbers of bones have been dug up ever ſince the ground was firſt opened for ſtone, though few have been taken up entire. There is commonly a bit of copper money among the bones and aſhes incloſed in the urn. Out of one the late Mr. Sympſon took 1736 a fair coin of Adrian of the 2d ſize, the head laureate, HADRIANVS AVGVSTVS P. P. Rev. a figure ſtanding holding a palm-branch and cornucopiæ; FELICITAS AVG. S. C. Beſides the fragments of bones in the urns there are abundance dug up that have been buried without burning, after the cuſtom ceaſed as may be ſuppoſed among the Romans. Some of theſe have had prodigious ſtrong coffins as may be judged from the great iron cramps and nails ſix, ſeven, eight, and nine inches long, which have been found among the bones, with ſome ſmall remains of wood not quite conſumed after ſo many ages.

On Friday May 14, 1731, ſome labourers digging for ſtone in this quarry diſcovered lying north and ſouth, the head to the north, about one foot and an half or two feet below the ſurface, two antient ſepulchres, compoſed each of four large ſtones ſet edgeways for the ends and ſides, and covered with a fifth; about ſix feet long within, the breadth three feet, the depth two feet and an half: the cover of one of them was in two pieces. The bodies had been incloſed in thick ſtrong wooden coffins, of which nothing remained ſave a ſmall matter that ſtuck to the huge iron ſpikes and cramps that had bound the planks together, and that was ſo much decayed that the ſort of wood was not to be diſtinguiſhed. In the north end lay a very thick ſcull (the teeth gone) and ſome pieces of thigh bones and many iron ſpikes full ſix inches long, thick as the little finger, but conſumed by ruſt, broken at the ends. On the right ſide of the coffin towards the head was a beautiful urn of fine red clay, broken among the nails and mouldy earth, with a little ſcroll or feſtoon round it: it was five inches deep, and might have held a quart. Near a yard ſouth from the feet of the tomb and at the ſame depth was a heap of black ſtrong ſmelling aſhes. Next day they found a ſimilar ſtone coffin, the cover of one ſtone, and the inſide of the eaſt ſide ſtone hewn ſmooth not ſo long as the other, and in it only a piece of a ſcull and bones. Many bones have been dug up in different parts of the hill as if thrown in from a field of battle: and in this quarry was found the braſs armilla mentioned by Dr. Stukeley[u], in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Pownall[x].

There were found ſeveral ſtone coffins in and about this city; at the head of one an earthen bottle which would contain about three half pints, made of an oker-coloured earth, not glazed, nor to appearance burnt like our bottles or pots. Several urns were alſo found with bones in them, but no coins[y].

The late Dr. Primroſe had a great collection of Roman antiquities found in and about this city. A fine glaſs urn found near Newport gate holding about two quarts, and covered within with a ſort of gliſtering ſubſtance as if it had been ſilvered, was given by him to Mr. Folkes: alſo a very large ſilver ſeal of Robert lord Fitz-Walter, in the hands of Nevil King, eſq. afterwards in thoſe of the rev. Richard Neate, and engraved in the fifth volume of the Archæologia, illuſtrated by Mr. Brooke. William Pownal eſq. had the fine bijugate Carauſius with the head of Apollo, his favourite deity, joined with his own, afterwards in the poſſeſſion of ſir Richard Ellys, bart. found in digging the new church by Stanbow, ſhewn to the Society of Antiquaries 1725, and engraved by Vertue 1734.

A branch of the Foſſe, very perfect juſt by St. Giles' hoſpital, and eaſily traceable in many places over the fields, turns off towards Horncaſtle the antient Banovallum. This and the other Roman roads round Lincoln occur in old deeds by the name of ſtreet. This is called Langworth ſtreet. The great north road from Newport, antiently the Hermen ſtreet, is called the Humber ſtreet, and once, by miſtake, Ykeling for Ikeneld ſtreet.

The country on the weſt and ſouth ſides of Lincoln was heath for 20 miles round, and on the ſouth ſide, where the courſe formerly was, it was ſo extenſive and the tracks ſo uncertain, that a large ſquare light-houſe was erected at the ſole expence of ſir Francis Daſhwood late lord Deſpenſer, about 1752, viſible at a diſtance all round both by night and day. It has almoſt all been lately incloſed both on the weſt and ſouth ſides, and turnpike roads are making.

Blankeney. Among ſome corpſes dug up on Lincoln heath near Blankeney, were found ſeveral caſt braſs rings flattiſh, which ſome ſuppoſed the old Britiſh money mentioned by Cæſar. Theſe, and alſo a very large bead pierced, and ſome coins of Maximinus, Conſtantius, and Magnentius, found at Strawſton, with a very fine cornu ammonis four feet deep in digging for coal, were ſhewn by capt. Hacket to Dr. Stukeley 1727[z]. At Strawſton is a good manſion houſe belonging to Andrew Hacket, of Moxhall, in the county of Warwick, eſq.

Spittle in the ſtreet conſiſts only of a farm houſe, a chapel, an almſhouſe or hoſpital for poor women, a good inn, and a ſeſſions houſe. Over the chapel this inſcription:

Fui anno Domini 1398
Non fui - 1594
Sum - 1616
} Domus Dei & pauperum.

Qui hanc Deus hunc deſtruet.

The hoſpital was founded t. Edward II. augmented t. Richard II.[a] On the ſeſſions-houſe:

Hæc domus dat, amat, punit, conſervat, honorat,
Equitiam, pacem, crimina, jura, bonos. 1620.

Arms of Ulſter. Over the door Fiat juſtitia, 1619. The eſtate belongs to ſir Cecil Wray, bart. whoſe anceſtor, lord chief juſtice of England, built the ſeſſions-houſe.

The Roman road 37 yards broad, and in many places firm and ſtrong, frequently diſcontinued and then beginning again, runs by Hibberſtowe, Gainſthorp, Scalby wood, Broughton, Appleby lane, Roxby, &c. to Wintringham. At the firſt are foundations of Roman buildings, with tiles, coins, and other marks of antiquity, alſo at Broughton, with foſſil fiſh; and near this is a petrifying ſpring and a barrow. At Sandton has been a Roman pottery: ſeveral ſand hills like barrows near the ſtreet: between Scalby and Manton is a Roman camp. In Appleby a place called Julian's bower[b].

At Roxby near the church was found a teſſelated pavement of red, blue, and white, ſix or ſeven yards long, by more wide, with ox bones, pieces of red and yellow plaiſter, and large ſtones[c].

In the fields on the great road at Oumby have been found Roman coins both ſilver and copper[17].

On an iſland at Tunſtall near Redburn was a Gilbertine nunnery, founded by the Crevequers t. Stephen, united to a houſe of the ſame order at Bollington, founded by the Kymes t. Stephen, valued at £.158.[d]

At Kirkton Lindſey John of Gaunt had a palace[e]. Biſhop Alexander built here a handſome church, cathedral form, on an older, whoſe weſt end remains. It is a market town. Here Mr. Pegge ventures to place Sidnaceſter and the IN MEDIUM of Richard of Cirenceſter. "IN MEDIUM is in the heart of Lindſey properly ſo called, and it was an undoubted Roman ſtation of eminence, being nearly in the mid way between Lincoln and Ad Abum, for which reaſon it was ſo named. Dr. Stukeley fixes it at Kirkton, whoſe name has a manifeſt reference to a church, which is uſually pronounced Kirk in the names of places in the northern parts, and particularly in Lincolnſhire. This is wanting to the other marks at Gainſborough, and yet ſeems a very eſſential one. It is extremely natural to ſuppoſe that when Sidnaceſter, which I preſume might be the firſt Saxon name given to this [u] It. I. p. 86. [x] Mr. Pownall's letter to Mr. Gale. Gale's Letters, p. 165.

[y] Joſh. Platt's letter to R. Gale, Lincoln, June 18, 1739, Ib. p. 185. where the bottle is engraved.
[z] A. S. min. [a] Tan. 284. Stukeley It. I. 89. [b] Stuk. Ib.
[c] Delapryme in Phil. Tranſ. 263. [17] G. [d] Tan. 266, 267. [e] Stuk. ib.

ſtation,

ſtation, was made a ſee, and a church built there, it would by degrees acquire the name of Kirkton, or the church town. It is not neceſſary to ſuppoſe the church of a grand or extraordinary ſtructure, ſince this being at firſt the only church in theſe parts, the place would of courſe obtain a name from it. This particular of the preſent name of the place is of conſequence, for Ad Abum being in Lindſey, and poſſeſſed alſo of the other circumſtance of its being a Roman ſtation, might otherwiſe, in the opinion of ſome, bid fair for being the place in queſtion. The ſame might be alledged in favour of Horncaſtle, and the other places mentioned by biſhop Gibſon hereafter; but there being ſo plain a reference to a principal church ſeems to give it the preference to all the reſt. The ſee being united or rather ſwallowed up in Dorcheſter, and biſhop Eadnoth afterwards building at Stow, Remigius alſo acquiring the poſſeſſion of that place, and rebuilding the church, and his ſucceſſors at Lincoln having a palace there, all theſe things conſpire to eclipſe and deface the memory of Kirkton and its once flouriſhing ſtate, and account for the ſituation of Sidnaceſter being loſt ſo early as to be totally unknown when Matthew of Weſtminſter wrote. The obſcurity of Kirkton in the later ages no doubt has been the reaſon why modern authors have fixed upon Stowe, which they ought to have diſregarded on account of its conſpicuouſneſs in the Poſt Normanic times; this being a weighty argument, if well attended to, that it could not be the place. Upon the removal or union of this ſee with that of Dorcheſter in Leofwine's time, Sidnaceſter no doubt began to decline, and the obſcurity of it after that, which was probably the caſe with it long before the Norman æra, might be the true reaſon that the place was ſo difficult to be diſcovered. The preſent church at Kirkton no doubt has been rebuilt ſince the removal of the ſee, if not ſince the Conqueſt; ſo that later writers wanted for their guide even the appearance of antiquity, or any venerable veſtiges of the church which belonged to the ſee of Lincoln from the firſt, and was appropriated to the ſubdean, to whom it now belongs[f]."

At Thornholm was an Auſtin priory, founded by king Stephen, valued at £.100. per ann.[g]

At Gokewell was a Ciſtertian nunnery, founded before 1185, valued at £.76. 2*s.*[h]

Near the Witham to the ſouth was Nocton priory of black canons, founded by Robert Darcy lord of the place in the reign of Stephen, valued at £.44. per ann.[i] "Wimbiſch hath Nokton park priory[k]," which that family got by the heir of Darcy. It was ſince the ſeat of ſir William Ellys[l], bart. who left it to the honourable George Hobart, brother of John the preſent earl of Buckinghamſhire, who is the preſent owner.

Arms cut in ſtone over the great window of the great chamber of Nocton abbey taken 1656 by P. C. (Philip Conſtable.)

First Row.

1 A cinqfoil. Poucher.
2 A feſs dauncette between 6 eſcalops. Engayne.
3 A lion rampant. Everingham.
4 Three double trefoils. (Query cinquefoils. Darcy.)
5 A ſpread eagle. Soothill.
6 A roſe. (Query cinquefoil, as before.)
7 A feſs dauncette between 6 eſcalops. Engayne.

Second Row.

1. 4. 6. 7. 10. Three double trefoils.
2. 8. A lion rampant. Everingham.
3. 5. 9. A croſs moline.

In the pariſh of Mere, Simon de Roppell, before 1246, founded an hoſpital for 13 poor perſons; the maſterſhip of which was in the gift of the biſhops of Lincoln. The church was appropriated 1392 to the priory of St. Katharine, and a vicarage endowed 1403[m]. Here ſeems to have been a houſe of Templars, afterwards of Hoſpitallers, ſo early as the reign of Henry II. and John[n]. Mere.

In the adjoining pariſh of Dunſton was an hoſpital for lepers in the reign of Henry III.[o]. Dunſton.

Wragby, which Leland[p] calls a village, on the high road from Lincoln to Horncaſtle, and a member of the barony, is a ſmall market town belonging to Edmund Turner, eſq. from whom it paſſed by marriage to Villiers duke of Buckingham, and was afterwards bought by ſir Edmund Turner, knt. who here founded 1647 an hoſpital for ſix clergymens' widows and ſix other poor men or women, endowed with a rent-charge of £.100. per ann. Here is alſo a freeſchool with a ſtipend of 30*l.* per ann. for the maſter. Three fairs and a market were granted here to George duke of Buckingham 1671. Wragby.

"Panton bek runnith by the north ſide of the "abbey of Bardeney. The monkes hold opinion "that the old abbey of Bardeney was not in the very "ſame place where the new is, but at a grainry or "dairy of theyrs a mile off[q]." Bardeney.

Bardeney or Beardana was a noble monaſtery before 647, to which Ethelred, king of Mercia, was a great benefactor, if not principal founder, and reſigning his crown turned monk and abbot in it. It is ſaid to have had 300 monks. William of Malmeſbury[r] aſcribes its reſtoration to biſhop Remigius. Oſwald's reliques, placed here by his niece queen Oſtrith, were, except his right hand, removed to Gloucester A.D. 909. It was valued at £.366. 6*s.* 1*d.* per annum[s]. Biſhop Tanner diſtinguiſhes Peartenei or Peoptanea from Bardeney, making it Partney in Candleſtow hundred on the coaſt, where was an hoſpital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen t. Henry I. and where Bede[t] ſays was both a monaſtery and a nunnery. Mr. Camden was probably miſled by the copy of Bede quoted by Leland[u], and his corrections of Bearteneig into Beardeneig.

"At Killeſthorp or Skelleſthorpe, three miles weſt "from Louth, riſes a great brook there called Bane, "ſo to Baumburge, perverted for Baneburg, a village "three miles off, thens to Hornecaſtle[x]." Skelleſthorp. Bane r. Bamberg.

Ban river riſes in the middle of Lindſey not far from Ludford, where Roman coins are frequently ploughed up in the fields near Sixhill or Sixle, a Gilbertine priory, founded by Greſlei t. Stephen, valued at £.135. per ann.[y] Edward I. confined in this houſe, 1306, Mary ſiſter of Robert Bruce king of Scotland and wife of Chriſtopher Seton[z]. Ban r. Ludford. Sixhill.

Linwood, in a dull ſituation, about two miles from Market Raſen, was the birth-place of the famous Linwood.

[f] Mr. Pegge's MS. paper on Sidnaceſter.
[g] Tan. 259. [h] Tan. 275. [i] Tan. 268. [k] Lel. VII. 52.
[l] G. Stukeley I. 80, 81. [m] Sympſon's MS. collections. [n] Tan. 274.
[o] Tan. 282. [p] VII. 51.
[q] Lel. VII. 51. [r] De geſt. pont. IV. [s] Tan. 248. [t] III. 16.
[u] Coll. II. 138. [x] Lel. VII. 51. [y] Tan. 267. [z] Hemingford, p. 224. ed. Hearne.

canoniſt

canoniſt of its name, of whoſe family there are two or three curious monuments in the middle aile, with the braſs figures and inſcriptions very perfect. The church has a decent ſpire, the only one to be ſeen in the round of 59 pariſhes hereabouts. William Lyndwood was educated at Gonville college, and elected fellow of Pembroke hall: admitted to the degree of doctor at Oxford 1411, chancellor to archbiſhop Chichele 1414, and dean of the arches, archdeacon of Oxford and of Stow in this county, keeper of the privy ſeal to Henry, and biſhop of St. David's 1442, and was ſent by Henry VI. to the council of Baſil. He died 1456, and was buried in the chapel of St. Stephen at Weſtminſter. His "Conſtitutions" or collection of the decrees of 14 archbiſhops of Canterbury, were printed at Paris 1505 fol. Lond. 1555 fol. 1557 8vo. Oxf. 1677 fol. and 1643 8vo. alſo in Engliſh [a].

East Raſen. Raſen Tupholm.

At Eaſt Raſen the vicar has the tithe of ale brewed in the pariſh. The church of Raſen Tupholm was pewed with oak by Harriſon a carpenter, brother to John Harriſon, who invented the time-piece for diſcovering the longitude.

Market Raſen.

At Market Raſen is a ſchool in the patronage of lord Brownlow, endowed with £. 25. per annum, but no fund to ſupport the ſchool-houſe which is running faſt to ruin.

Waleſby.

At Waleſby Dr. Gordon ſaw an old oak chair with the ſtory of Adam and Eve and the Prodigal Son carved out, with inſcriptions dated 1314; but the characters appear more modern.

Horncaſtle.

"Horncaſtelle, as far as I can learn, is now moſt "buildid within the circuit of an old walled town "or ſome huge caſtle as apperith from divers ruins "of a wall. It hath one fair pariſh church; the "market is very good and quick occupiers in the "town. Alluitur Bano & Verino qui paulo infra op. "Banum." Warig riſith of divers ſprings aliquot "paſſuum millibus ab oppido. Pons ibidem ſuper Verinum "fl." [b] Here are traces of the caſtle, which took up twenty acres, and incloſed near one half of the preſent town. Pieces of its wall remain all round in the church-yard and by the road ſide, in ſome places three or four yards high and four yards thick.

Bannovallum.

Stukeley [c] places here the BANOVALLUM of Ravennas, which Ward ſuppoſed the ſame with BENNAVENA or Daventry [d]. It is in a low ſituation in the angle of the two brooks meeting here, the Bane and Waring; whence the modern name Horncaſtle, which ſignifies an angle all over this country. Near the conflux of the two brooks was lately a place called Julian's bower much talked of. The Waring riſes but a mile or two off. The field acroſs it ſouth from the town is called the Thwong and Cagthorp, and probably was its pomerium. Roman coins have been found here. Near the walls on digging cellars, they ſometimes find bodies buried [e]. It is a ſoke of 13 lordſhips, of royal demeſne till beſtowed by Richard II. on the biſhop of Carliſle for his habitation and maintenance when driven from Roſe caſtle by the Scots. It appears, however, to have belonged to the biſhop of Carliſle earlier; for 17 Henry III. he fined for this manor in fee, but not to alienate without licence [f]. It was incorporated by Elizabeth [g], is a market town [h], and ſtill the property of the ſee of Carliſle, and tanners are very numerous here.

At Minting was an alien priory of black monks before 1129, ſubject to the abbey of St. Benedict on the Leyr [k].

Three miles ſouth-eaſt is Wineeby, where was fought a ſhort battle October 5, 1643, between the king's forces under col. Winderſon and lord Widdrington and the parliament's under col. Cromwell, in which the latter was victorious [i]. There is an epitaph in the church of Horncaſtle to the memory of ſir Ingram Hopton, who was killed in this battle, after having knocked down Cromwell as he was recovering himſelf after his horſe had been killed and had fallen on him.

"Dymoke dwelleth at Skrelleſby two miles from "Horncaſtle [k]." The houſe was plain and antique, and in the hall were the arms of all the champions and the kings in whoſe reign they lived, with three ſuits of armour for man and horſe. This part of the houſe being burnt down 17.. is not rebuilt. In the church are braſſes for ſir Robert Dymoke, knt. and bart. Henry VIII's general at Tournay, and a beautiful buſt of Lewis Dymock champion to George I. and II. who died 1760, aged 91.

The manor of Scrivelsby was formerly held by the Marmions of the crown by barony and the ſervice of officiating as champion of England at the coronation. Philip the laſt lord Marmion died 20 Edward I. leaving daughters his coheirs, of which Joan the youngeſt married ſir Thomas de Ludlowe, knt. and, upon the diviſion of the eſtate, had this manor. She had iſſue another ſir Thomas de Ludlowe, who had an only daughter Margery his heir married to ſir John Dymoke, knt. and died 4 Richard II.; they had iſſue ſir Thomas Dymoke, knt, who, in right of his mother, inherited Scrivelsby and the ſaid office, ſince which time it hath always continued in that ancient name and family [l].

Benningworth, or, as it ſhould be more truly written, Baneingſworth, q. d. an iſland or high ground incloſed by the marſhy land on the river Bane, is 16 miles from Lincoln, and five from Wragby, and belongs principally to George Heneage, eſq. The grange farm here is part of the diſſolved abbey of Kirkſtede. Another, the property of Mr. Scamblesby, is ſaid to have been the gift of queen Elizabeth to one of his anceſtors, who was her coachman. This pariſh is divided from Donnington by a rivulet commonly called the Bane, probably by abbreviation from Verbena, a goddeſs of rivers, from the firſt ſyllable of whoſe name the Wherf in Yorkſhire is called, where an inſcription to her has been found.

Mr. Wray ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1765, an antique ring of a ſingular form, found at Banningworth by a maid ſervant who had gathered it up with ſome clay in her pattens as ſhe was walking acroſs the fields. The hoop was formed of a bar of gold hammered round, a full eighth of an inch diameter, flattened at the extremities: a gold coin with a head inſcribed, PONT. SEPT. COS. II. reverſe, a figure ſtanding holding a croſs, without inſcription, ſerved as a ſetting. The whole weight leſs than £.3. 3s. [m] This ſingular exhibit was made

[a] TannerBib. Brit. p. 498.
[b] Lel. VII. 50.
[c] I. 28.
[d] Horſley, 493. 504.
[e] Stuk. ib.
[f] Mag. rot. 17 H. III. Madox's Collect.
[g] Stuk. Ib.
[h] Tan. 257.
[i] G. Ruſhworth Collect. part iii. vol. II. p. 281. Gent. Mag. Nov. 1782. p. 524.
[k] Lel. VII. 52.
[l] MSS. penes J. C. Brooke, de Coll. Armor.
[m] Ant. Soc. min.

at a meeting of the Society when Monſ. Groſley attended, who tells us, this medal was of Probus, worked in the ſame manner with the ring, and the more evidently counterfeit as on its reverſe within the collet there was a figure with a great croſs in its hand[n]. No ſuch inſcription occurs on any of this emperor's coins enumerated by Occo, nor in the diſſertation on the title of Pontifex Maximus aſſumed by the Roman emperors in Hiſt. de l'Acad. des Inſcriptions V. 180, 12.

At Stixwold, Lucy relict of Yvo de Tailbois, and others, founded a Ciſtertian nunnery, valued at £.114. diſſolved among the leſſer monaſteries 27 Henry VIII. but refounded by that king for Premonſtratenſians, who continued about two years[o]. The manor was late the property of George lord Anſon, ſince ſold by his heir to Edmund Turnor of Panton, eſq.

At Tupholm was a Premonſtratenſian abbey, founded by Alan and Gilbert de Nevill t. Henry II. valued at £.100. now the property of Robert Vyner of Gotby, eſq.[p]

At Stanfield Henry Percy t. Henry II. founded a Benedictine nunnery, valued at £.98. granted to the Tirwhits, whoſe ſeat it long was[q]. Sir John de la Fountain Tyrwhitt, of Stainfield, bart. left his eſtate by will to Thomas Drake, ſecond ſon of William Drake of Shardeloes co. Bucks, eſq. who in 1776 aſſumed the name and arms of Tyrwhitt.

At Kirkſted Hugh Brito ſon of Eudo lord of Tateſhal, founded another Ciſtertian abbey 1139, valued at £.286.[r] of which the eaſt end of the hall ſtill remains. This chapel, now the pariſh church, is thatched and mean: the bell hangs in an oak. There is a foſs round the ſite. This manor and lordſhip were part of the antient eſtate of the Clintons, earls of Lincoln, and deſcended to Daniel Diſney, eſq. in right of his wife Catherine, youngeſt daughter and coheir of Henry Fynes of Kirkſted eſq. eldeſt ſon of ſir Henry Fynes, knt.[s] eldeſt ſon of Henry Clinton Fynes, ſecond earl of Lincoln by his ſecond wife. This living is a donative, and being exempt from all epiſcopal juriſdiction was ſerved by a miniſter of the church of England. In the latter end of the laſt century the lord of the manor Mr. Diſney being a diſſenter gave it to a miniſter of his own perſuaſion, as the incumbents were paid and removed at pleaſure, and left certain lands now producing 30*l. per ann.* to preſbyterian truſtees for the uſe of the miniſter, whom they are to recommend. The celebrated Dr. John Taylor of Norwich held it 18 years from about 1715, and here compoſed his juſtly valued Hebrew Concordance in 2 vols. folio, 1754, and it has ſince been occupied by other proteſtant diſſenting miniſters, who bury by the eſtabliſhed forms.

"Tatersſhale upon Bane river, and the Aye or Rhe "a great river, a pretty ſmall market, five miles from "Horncaſtle and 3 from Bardeney[t]." This place was granted by William the Conqueror to Eudo one of his followers, whoſe deſcendants built the caſtle, were barons of parliament, and from this place aſſumed the name of Tateſhall. Robert the laſt lord Tateſhall died young, leaving three ſiſters his coheirs, of which Joan married ſir Simon de Driby, knt. The heir of Driby married Bernack, whoſe heir married the lord Cromwell. From the Cromwells the eſtate and caſtle came to the Clintons earls of Lincoln, of whom Edward and Francis lived and died here 1692, and 1693, and it is now the property of Matthew lord Forteſcue by deſcent from the Clintons. It was advanced by degrees to the modern magnificence thereof in Fuller's time[u]; but was demoliſhed in the civil wars[x]. It ſtands on a mooriſh level ſurrounded by two great foſſes, the outer of earth, the inner faced with brick 10 feet deep, ſupplied with water from the Bane. The principal gate was remaining lately. The tower with four turrets at the north-weſt corner of the keep above 200 feet high, the walls 15 feet thick, divided into three or four ſtories, was built by lord treaſurer Cromwell: the fire places are adorned with the treaſurer's bags as at Colliweſton c. Northampton, the Cromwell arms, the motto n'aime je droit, and other devices. The church, which ſeems to have ſtood on the eaſt ſide of the outer moat, is beautiful and ſpacious, built in form of a croſs; the magnificent choir neglected ſince the fine painted windows were carried to St. Martin's church in Stamford Baron, a preſent from lord Forteſcue to the earl of Exeter, who promiſed to ſupply their place with plain glaſs, for want of which and other neceſſary repairs the inſide of the choir is ruined, and the roof ready to fall in. Some beautiful fragments of painting yet remain in the tranſept windows, ſeveral of which are bricked up. Before the altar are braſſes for Ralph lord Cromwell the founder, lord high treaſurer 1455, his wife Joan 1469, and their kinſwoman and heireſs Maud wife of Robert lord Willughby 1497.

Henry VI. in the 17th year of his reign granted his licence to Ralph Cromwell, Henry biſhop of Wincheſter cardinal of England, William Alnewyke biſhop of Lincoln, John Scrope knight, Walter Hungerford knight, Walter Tailbois eſq; and William Paſtone, patrons of the pariſh church of Tateſhale, in the county of Lincoln, to convert the ſaid church in honour of the Holy Trinity, the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, St. Peter the Apoſtle, St. John Baptiſt, and St. John the Evangeliſt, into a collegiate church or college of ſeven chaplains, ſix lay clerks, and ſix choriſters, one of which chaplains to be maſter, and to erect a perpetual almſhouſe on their own ground being parcell of the caſtle and manor of Tateſhale, near the church-yard of the church aforeſaid, containing 10 acres of ground, for 13 poor of both ſexes, with manſion houſes, and buildings for the ſaid maſter, chaplains, clerks, choriſters, and their ſervants, with cloiſters, incloſures, gardens, orchards, and all other conveniences, and to aſſign the ſame to the ſaid maſter and chaplains, and they to be a body corporate, with power to ſue and be ſued, and to purchaſe lands, houſes, tenements, or other revenues eccleſiaſtical or ſecular to the value of £. 200. per annum, over and above the advowſon and yearly value of the ſaid church of Tateſhale, and of the houſes and 10 acres aforeſaid, without fine or fee to the king or his heirs[y].

This college was valued at £. 348. 5*s*. 11*d*.¼ per annum[z]. The almſhouſes are on the north ſide of the church-yard.

[n] London. II. 9.
[o] Tan. 264.
[p] Tan. 275.
[q] Tan. 275.
[r] Tan. 261. Stukeley I. 82.
[s] Of this ſir Henry Fynes lord of this manor, ſee ſome memoirs written by himſelf in Gent. Mag. XLII. p. 161, and Ann. Reg. 1771.
[t] Lel. VII. 50, 51.
[u] Worth. Linc. p. 151.
[x] Collins' Peer. II. 164.
[y] Mon. Ang. III. ii. 194.
[z] Tan. 286.

The parish chapel in the town built of brick is now a malthouse.

The rev. Mr. Dyer[a] rector of Coningsby adjoining, discovered two encampments as they are commonly called, on a flat moor bordering on the fens in Tattershal park: the northern one greatly overrun with heath: the banks seven feet wide, the inner trenches 12 and 13 feet, the outer 14 and 15 feet, depth two feet and an half, 60 paces from the south. The trenches of the southern six feet broad, two feet and an half deep: the three rounds for tents with banks and ditches 26 feet diameter[b].

" Robertus de Tateshal debet osturum bene sedentem, pulchrum, & manerum pro habendo uno mercato qualibet die Jovis apud Tateshal ita quod non fit ad nocumentum, &c.[c]"

Besides the liberties of the parks, chases, and free warrens belonging to the castle and manor of Tatteshall, stallage, tolls of fair and markets, all tenants and inhabitants of Tattershall were discharged of any tolls in fairs and markets abroad, and had sole right of fishing, fowling, hawking, and hunting in all the manors, chases, precincts of them; and suits of court baron, wastes, strays, treasure trove, goods and chattels of felons, fugitives, and men outlawed, felo de se, deodands, bondmen, villans, and wastes, with their suits, nor was the sheriff of the county or his bailiffs to arrest within the parish of the said manor, nor distress to be delivered upon the sheriff's or any justice's replevies within the said manor, but only upon the replevy of the lord's steward of the said manor, besides other liberties which appear in the several grants of Henry III. IV. VII. and VIII. and in the grant of the liberties of Richmond fee whereof the castle and manor of Tateshale is a part.

Henry III. in his 18th year did grant to Robert of Tateshale 'that he and his heirs should have free warren in all his demesne lands of Tateshale and Kirkby; and Richard II. in the 18th of his reign did confirm the said grant. The abbot of Kirkstead, in the 43d year of the reign of Henry III. did release by his fine to Robert of Tateshall and his heirs all his right of hawking and hunting, ruton and the sinkes, and so by the old dike to the water side with them, and so to the Bane, and so to ride on, excepting the inclosure of the abbot and his successors, that they might enclose certain closes about the abbey, and that Robert and his heirs should not hunt in them, nor in any other closes, so as the abbot would enclose them, so that the game of Robert of Tatteshall could not enter into the same.

I find in the Tower a grant of free warren, &c. in Tateshall to Robert de Tateshall, and his heirs, dated the 5th of September, in the 44th year of Henry III.

Constantinus Clyston consanguineus & unus heredum Roberti de Tateshall had a grant of confirmation of the former charter, the 20th of February, in the 18th year of Richard III.

Henry VII. in the second year of his reign, granted to Margaret countess of Richmond the castle and manor of Tateshall. The same king, in the third year of his reign, did grant the castle and manor of Tateshall, and the park, warren, and chases thereof to the duke of Richmond in tail. Henry VIII. by his letters patent, dated the 4th day of April, in the 8th year of his reign, the duke of Richmond being dead without issue, his letters patent bearing the same date, did grant the manor and castle of Tateshall, the parks, chases, and warrens thereof to the duke of Suffolk in tail. Edward VI. by his letters patent the 8th of September in the first year of his reign did grant his manor and castle of Tatteshall, and all his parks, chases, and warrens, and commons in keeping of deer, and all liberties of parks, chases, and all other liberties, such and the like and the same, to the duke of Suffolk; and finally the said lordship, castle, &c. were granted in fee to Edward lord Clynton and Saye, his heirs, and assigns, by letters patent dated the 5th of September, in the 5th year of Edward VI. under which grant the estate is held at this day.

At East Kirby was born Thomas Goodrick, bishop of Ely, and chancellor of England, who died 1554[d]. Ea

At Hagnaby was a Premonstratensian abbey, founded by Herbert de Orrebi 1175, dedicated to St. Thomas of Canterbury[e]. Hereabout are many tumuli[f]. Ha

At Revesby two large and high ones within one ditch by sir Joseph Banks' house. This monument of Celtic antiquity is by the broad road on the descent of the high country overlooking the vast level towards Boston. It is a very regularly formed oval with a large broad ditch, and the length east and west above 300 feet, equal to thrice the breadth: the entrance on the end of the south side; the tumuli high 100 feet diameter: that on the north side without the ditch of an odd figure, but perfectly similar to the other. It seems to have been a place of sepulture of some antient king or of religious worship, probably by its breadth and number of feet Celtic and a temple[g]. Re

At Revesby was a Cistercian abbey, founded by William de Romara earl of Lincoln 1142, valued at £.287. per ann.[h]

The fen called the West fen is the place where the ruffs and reeves resort in greatest numbers, and many other sorts of water fowl, which do not require the shelter of reeds or rushes, migrate hither to breed: for this fen is bare, having been imperfectly drained by narrow canals, which intersect it for many miles. Twenty parishes in the soke of Bollingbroke have right of common on it, but an inclosure of it is now in agitation. The East fen is quite in a state of nature, and exhibits a specimen of what the country was before the introduction of draining. It is a vast tract of morass intermixed with numbers of lakes, from half a mile to two or three miles in circuit, communicating with each other by narrow reedy straits. They are very shallow, none above four or five feet deep, but abound with pike, perch, ruffs, bream, tench, dace, eels, &c. It is observable, that once in seven or eight years immense shoals of sticklebacks appear in the

[a] Of whom see Hist. of Hinckley, p. 183, 184.
[b] Account communicated by Mr. Wray to the Society of Antiquaries.
[c] Madox Hist. of Exch. p. 279, and Mag. rot. 4 Joh. Rot. 17. a. Lincoln.
[d] Godw. 272. Bentham Hist. of Ely, 190.
[e] Tan. 273.
[f] Stuk. I. 27, 28.
[g] Stukeley Ib.
[h] Tan. 263.

Welland

Welland below Spalding, and attempt coming up the river in form of a vaſt column. They are ſuppoſed to be the collected multitudes waſhed out of the fens by the floods of ſeveral years, and carried into ſome deep hole. When, overcharged with numbers, they are obliged to attempt a change of place, they move up the river in ſuch quantities as to enable a man who was employed in taking them to earn for a conſiderable time 4*s.* a day by ſelling them at a half penny per buſhel. They were uſed to manure land, and attempts have been made to get oil from them. The reeds which cover the fens are cut annually for thatching not only cottages, but many very good houſes. The multitudes of ſtares that rooſt in theſe reeds in winter break down many by perching on them. A ſtock of reeds well harveſted and ſtacked is worth two or three hundred pounds. The birds which inhabit the different fens are very numerous. Beſides the common wild duck, wild geeſe, garganies, pochards, ſhovelers, and teals breed here. Pewit, gulls, and black terns abound here: a few of the great terns, or tickets, are ſeen among them: the great creſted grebes, called gaunts, are found on the eaſt fen: the leſſer creſted, the black and duſky and the little grebe, coots, waterhens, ſpotted waterhens, water rails, ruffs, redſhanks, lapwings, or wipes, redbreaſted godwits, and whimbrels, are inhabitants of theſe fens. The godwits breed near Waſhenbrough, the whimbrels only appear for about a fortnight in May near Spalding, and then quit the country. Oppoſite to Foſsdyke waſh during ſummer are vaſt numbers of Avoſettas, called there yelpers, from their cry as they hover over the ſportſman's head like lapwings. Knots are taken in nets along the ſhores near Foſsdyke in great numbers during winter, but diſappear in ſpring. The ſhort eared owl viſits the neighbourhood of Waſhenbrough along with the woodcocks, and probably performs its migrations with thoſe birds, quitting the country at the ſame time. It does not perch on trees, but conceals itſelf in old long graſs [i]. Michael Drayton [k] enumerates the following birds inhabiting the fens: the duck and mallard, the teale, the goſſander, the widgeon, the golden eye, the ſmeath, the coot, the waterhen, the water ouzel, the dabchick, the puffen, the wild ſwan, the ilke, the heron, the crane, the ſnipe, the bidcock, redſhank, bittern, and wildgooſe: among ſuch as flying feed, the ſeamew, ſea pie, gull, curiew, cormorant, and oſprey.

"The lord Willoughbie had a houſe at Hereſby "and a park of black deer two miles from Spilſby, "where, as I hear ſay, he intendith to build ſumptuouſly [l]." The houſe was burnt down a few years ago.

Richard Bertie (or as Dugdale calls him Bartie) married Catherine ſole daughter and heir of William lord Willoughby the laſt of the family of Eresby. She was widow of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk, and during her travels with her husband abroad for religion in Mary's reign, was delivered of a ſon, chriſtened Peregrine, eo quod, ſays the public regiſter of Weſel, in terra peregrina pro conſolatione exilii ſui piis parentibus a Domino donatus ſit; a copy of which was preſented under the common ſeal of that city to the honourable Charles Bertie envoy extraordinary to the Electors and Princes of Germany in his paſſage through it. Peregrine's ſon Robert was created earl of Lindſey 2 Charles I. being lord chamberlain of England, general of the king's forces, wounded and taken at the battle of Edgehill 1642, of which wound he died the ſame night. His ſon and ſucceſſor Montague died 1666, and his ſon Robert married Elizabeth daughter of Philip lord Wharton, by whom he had Robert [m] created marquis of Lindſey 1706 5 Anne, and 1715 1 George I. duke of Ancaſter, which title is now enjoyed by his grandſon Brownlowe 5th and preſent duke.

At the head of the nameleſs river ſtands Hareby, which biſhop Gibſon ſettles as the place where Edward I's queen Eleanor died 1290. It will hereafter appear that ſhe really died at Hereby c. Nottingham, in the houſe of Richard Weſton. So Sandford [n], Walſingham [o], and from him Hollinſhed [p], make her die at Herdebie by Lincoln. Her corpſe was conveyed from thence to Weſtminſter abbey, and at the places where it reſted were erected thoſe beautiful croſſes, of which only three now remain. Theſe ſtages were Newark, Leiceſter, Grantham, Stamford, Geddington, Northampton, Stratford, Dunſtaple, St. Alban's, Cheapſide, Charing croſs and Weſtminſter; but how Waltham came by this honour, being ſo much out of the road, is not eaſy to ſay. Hareby.

"Bullingbroke hath once a year a fair, but it has "no wekely market. The caſtle is metely well "maintained and moted about having a draw "bridge [q]. Gul. de Romara earl of Lincoln, was "lord and owner of Bullingbroke caſtle. Syns it "was told me that ther were two cantuaris of the "Romares foundation in the pariſh church, lately "ſuppreſſed [r]." Very little remains of the caſtle. It ſtood in a bottom commanded by hills to the north. It gave title of earl to Oliver St. John of Bletſo 22 James I. He died 1646, and was ſucceeded by his younger ſon's ſon Oliver [s], and he dying without iſſue, the title came to and ended in his brother Pawlet. Queen Anne 1711 conferred the title of viſcount Bolingbroke on Henry a deſcendant of the ſame family, who was attainted 1714, but reſtored in blood 1723, and dying 1751, was ſucceeded by his nephew Frederic 2d and preſent earl. Bolingbroke.

At Claxby near Bollingbrook is a new-built houſe, the ſeat of the late Markham family, ſituated near the church in a low part of the pariſh, but not unpleaſantly, with hanging woods on the ſide of the hill. The family were catholics. Mr. Pelham has purchaſed the eſtate, and is trying for coals on it. Claxby.

"Spileſby a mean market town, having houſes moſt "part thakkid and ſome redid. In it is one metely "fair place longing to Haſtings, a gentleman that "came from Suffolk. It ſtandith on the edge of "the middle marſh of Low Lindſey, five miles eaſt "from Horncaſtle, and about as much from the ſea "ſide as in the middle way [t]." Dr. Stukeley was told of an aqueduct of earth found here [u], probably like that before deſcribed at Lincoln, p. 257. The town conſiſts of one ſtreet, in the middle of which is a charity ſchool and market houſe, and at the weſt end the church, wherein are monuments for the Ereſbies, Berties, and Willoughbies. Spilſby.

"Sandon dwelleth at Aſhby half a mile from "Spileſby [x]." Aſhby.

[i] Pennant, Tour in Scotl. 1769, p. 11, 12.
[k] Song 25.
[l] Lel. VII. 50.
[m] Dugd. II. 408.
[n] P. 129.
[o] Hiſt. Ang. p. 55.
[p] P. 2285.
[q] Lel. VII. 50.
[r] Ib. 14.
[s] Dugd. Bar. II. 398, 399.
[t] Lel. VII. 52.
[u] Itin. I. 27.
[x] Lel. VII. 52.

Halton. In Halton church hard by is this inſcription on a flat ſtone:

+ Sire Water Bek giſt icy de ſa alme deu eit merci.

Another croſs-legged knight; in his ſhield a lion rampant [y].

Alford. "Alford 16 miles from Boſton, a mean market in "low Lindeſey marſh, thakkid and redid, and a "brooke cometh by it[z]." Here is a conſiderable ſchool, the governors of which preſent to the vicarage of Saleby.

Ulceby. A high hill in Ulceby pariſh adjoining called the Bull's head is a noted ſea mark; but one of the lofty trees on it was blown down 1783.

Totheby. Totheby by Alford was the ſeat of a family of that name in Leland's time [a].

Well. Near Well about three miles from Alford were found 600 Roman coins in two fair urns 1725 [b]. The church has been rebuilt in form of an elegant Grecian temple. The ſituation is pretty and highly improved. Near the town on a chalky heath are three Celtic barrows contiguous and joined one into another compoſed of chalk. The chalk in Lincolnſhire by Alford anſwers to that in Norfolk [c].

Leo lord Welles was 3d husband to Margaret Beauchamp Henry VII's grandmother, and was ſlain at the battle of Towton, and both his ſon Richard and grandſon Robert with two of the Dimocks who had married into the family were beheaded by Edward IV. Richard had the title of lord Willoughby, and his daughter and heireſs married lord Haſtings' brother. His brother had the title which ended with him 1498 [d].

Claxby. Claxby, four miles from Alford, is in a charming ſituation. The church is ſmall and in the chapel form, but without a church-yard; part of the manor houſe which is a ſort of dowager houſe for the Well family being built on it, and if the yard was fenced there would be no approach to the houſe.

Sutton. Sutton, ſeven miles eaſt of Alford, has a moſt wretched church of ſtud and clay with a wooden ruinous ſteeple. The ſea makes very alarming inroads, and has within a few years ſwallowed up eight acres of the ſmall glebe.

Maplethorpe. "Fitz Williams dwellith at Maplethorp by Sutton "on the ſea ſide [e]."

Huthoſt. Huthoſt, ſix or ſeven miles from Alford, has a large handſome church and tower, placed on high ground for a marſh ſituation, and ſeen at a great diſtance over the marſh. The living goes commonly along with Alford. Here is a curious regiſter containing a liſt of the boys at Alford ſchool for ſeveral years after the reſtoration.

"At Hutetoft marſch, four miles of Alford, come "ſhips in from divers places and diſcharge [f]."

Merkeſby. At Merkeſby or Markby near Hotoft creek three miles north-eaſt of Alford, was a priory of black canons, valued at £.130. [g] The church is partly tiled partly thatched. No traces of the church-yard fence, but many foundations and ſtones are frequently dug up.

Bil'eſby. "Billeſby dwellith by Billeſby within a mile of "Markby priory [h]."

Mumby. Mumby church about ſix miles from Alford has a very handſome tower in good preſervation, the ſtone caſing over the rubbiſh as entire as when firſt built. Mumby chapel is a poor place without any ſteeple, and likely to fall. No duty performed in it; the ſea bank very weak. It is uncertain if it be a member of Mumby, from which it is half a mile diſtant, or a chapel of eaſe.

Anderby about ſix miles from Alford towards the ſea, not ill ſituated for the marſh, on riſing ground, has a very neat church and ſmall tower, rebuilt 1762 by brief, but the arch opening into the chancel which was of the oven form, was made on ſo large a ſcale that it gave way very ſoon: the cracks it is ſaid do not increaſe, and there are 12 buttreſſes to ſupport it. An old inhabitant 1778 ſaid he remembered the ſea coming up to the parſonage though ſituated near the church and both on a riſing ground. Mr. Purkis, late fellow of Magdalen college, Cambridge, who are patrons of the living, rebuilt the parſonage in a very neat manner of red brick and tiled.

Bellew church of a flat compreſſed form with a low tower ſteeple, is of ſome antiquity, belonging to the neighbouring monaſtery of Ailby. A pretty run of water in the valley, whence probably the name.

At Haugh was a priory of Auſtin canons, cell to Cherburgh in France 6 Henry II. [i].

At Greenfield near Alford was a Ciſtertian nunnery, valued at £.63. [k]

At Langton is an ancient manſion houſe belonging to Bennet Langton, eſq; who is the proprietor of the pariſh, and on a hill near the turnpike road are ſeveral barrows. The family of Langton was here in Leland's time [l].

To the weſt lies Harrington, where a hall houſe, formerly the reſidence of the Amcotts family, preſents itſelf to the eye. In Leland's time [l] it belonged to Copledike. This pariſh is now become by marriage the property of Everard Buckworth, LL. D. whoſe lady was ſiſter and coheir of the late Charles Amcotts, eſq. as is alſo the greateſt part of Brinkhill, where a barren marcaſite is found lying near the ſurface amongſt blue clay, and is often ſeen in a ſmall rill which runs through the town after rain. Some of it was ſent to London about 40 years ago, under a miſtaken idea that it contained gold, of which it has not the leaſt particle in its compoſition.

To the weſt is ſituated Aſhby Puerorum, ſo called from an eſtate left here for the maintenance of the ſinging boys of Lincoln cathedral. Almoſt the whole of this pariſh belongs to William Wentworth earl of Strafford, and ſo does Holbeck, which is adjoining, and where formerly was a ſeat of that family. In this pariſh are rocks of ſand ſtone, and a great number of pits, which, from their ſize and depth, muſt have been the conſequence of vaſt labour and expence. There is no viſible reaſon for this appearance near the place, and it is difficult to account for it, unleſs the neighbouring churches (which for many miles round are built of this ſort of ſtone) were dug out of quarries formerly worked here. A ſmall rivulet runs from this pariſh to Salmonby, in which are numerous foſſils of various kinds, and at Tedford there is a ſpring, called Black hill Spring, much eſteemed for curing thoſe who bathe in it of the itch, the ſcrophulous and other cutaneous diſorders.

In South Ormeſby are the remains of an antient encampment, which Mr. Drake ſuppoſed was Roman.

[y] Stuk. I. 27. [z] Ib. 50. [a] Ib. 52.
[b] A. S. n in. [c] Stuk. I. 27. [d] Dugd. II. 12.
[e] Lel. VII. 50. [f] Lel. VII. 52. [g] Tan. 278. [h] Lel. VII. 51. [i] Tan. 272.
[k] Ib. 269. [l] VII. 52.

It is ſituated on the top of a hill cloſe to the ſouth ſide of the road leading to Caſtor, and covers almoſt three acres of ground. Although the plough has of late years rendered the lines ſomewhat imperfect, yet the following parts are ſtill viſible: o o o are hills about ſix yards in diameter.

At Nun Ormeſby was a Gilbertine priory, founded by William earl of Albemarle, t. Stephen, valued at £. 80.[m] The chapel was lately dug up: the floor deep under ground. The preſent church is a poor place deſcended into by five ſteps, and having no ſteeple. The pariſh is ſituate on the edge of the Wolds, with an extenſive proſpect over the marſhes; the ſea about ſix miles diſtant.

Several Roman coins have been found in this pariſh, chiefly of Conſtantine. In the church is a monument inlaid with braſs of ſir William Skypwyth, dated 1480, whoſe anceſtor ſir William Skypwyth acquired the eſtate t. Edward III. by marriage with the ſiſter and heir of ſir Simon de Ormesby, knt. This pariſh was purchaſed of that family during the uſurpation of Cromwell by the grandfather of W. B. Maſſingberd, eſq; the preſent poſſeſſor, who has a handſome manſion houſe here, and the patronage of the living; which is a valuable one. He is alſo the ſole proprietor of Driby, in the church of which is a monument inlaid with braſs of James Preſcot, gent. lord of the manor of Drybie, and of Alice his wife, daughter of ſir Rychard Mollyneux of Sefton, in the county of Lancaſter, dated 1581.

At Wyham, on the edge of the Wolds, is an old ſeat of the Ellys family. Cadeby, a hamlet of the pariſh, belongs to the Heneage family, whimſically ſet in a bottom between the hills, the lands pleaſant and agreeable.

Calceby alſo belongs ſolely to Mr. Maſſingberd. The church here is in ruins, and the living united to South Ormesby, as is alſo that of Keteſby, whoſe church is fallen down. This pariſh once belonged to the Skipwiths, but now to the heir of the late lord viſcount Irwin and C. A. Pelham, eſq. On the eaſt ſide of the turnpike road is a hill called Beacon hill, which appears to have had a conſiderable mount raiſed upon it in antient times, and commands a proſpect of the ſea.

Burwell was once a market town. The church is large and handſome, with a tower ſteeple, but in a neglected ſtate. The foundations of a priory which ſtood near the church, and was founded for Benedictines by ſome of the lords of Kyme as a cell to St. Mary ſilvæ majoris near Burdeaux[n], are ſtill viſible. Sarah dutcheſs of Marlborough was born here, at the houſe of M. Liſter, eſq; whoſe deſcendant is the ſole proprietor of this pariſh, and has a very handſome ſeat, built about 30 years ago in the midſt of a beautiful park, containing 300 acres, covered with oaks, and ſtocked with deer.

Adjoining is Haugham, remarkable for a hill called Skirbeck, from the ſide of which ſometimes ruſhes out a torrent of water large enough to fill a circle of 30 inches in diameter. This ſtream continues to run with great rapidity for ſeveral weeks together from places where at other times there is no appearance of a ſpring. This irruption happens after long and heavy rains, perhaps once in a year or two. Haugham.

At Tathwell on a high hill are ſix barrows in a line bearing eaſt and weſt, and alſo a large manſion houſe belonging to Charles Chaplin, eſq; of Blankeney, whoſe eſtate around it comprehends all Hallington, Rathby, Tathwell, and Haugham. Tathwell.

Thoreſby is a handſome ſeat, the reſidence of W. Wood, eſq; who is the chief proprietor of this lordſhip. The waters deſcending from a great number of the neighbouring hills join here, and form a conſiderable brook which rolls down to Belleau, ſo called from its ſprings of very clear and beautiful water which iſſue near each other from the bottom of a chalk hill, where ſtand the ruins of a ſeat belonging to the earls of Lindſey. After the civil wars it was ſequeſtered to ſir Henry Vane, who lived here, and on Sundays amuſed himſelf with calling in and preaching to his country neighbours. Sir Peter Burrel, knt. is now the proprietor in right of his lady, ſiſter and coheir of Robert late duke of Ancaſter. The great body of water which iſſues from the ſprings here being joined by the brook from Thoreſby, forms a river, which runs through Tothill, an eſtate belonging to lord Willoughby de Brook, to Withorn, from whence it might be made navigable to the ſea at a very ſmall expence, as the fall from hence to Saltfleet is only ſix feet. Robert Vyner and R. Stovin, eſqrs. are now the land owners of Withern. Near the church are four high ramparts, which form a ſquare called Caſtle Hills. It contains an acre and a half, and is ſurrounded by a moat 50 feet wide. This place was formerly a reſidence of a branch of the Fitz William family, who acquired it by marriage with the heireſs of Mablethorpe, whoſe arms, a chevron between three croſs croſslets, and a bordure charged with bezants, they ſometime aſſumed, and whoſe poſſeſſions once comprehended all Withern, Stane, and Mablethorpe. There is a tradition that in ancient times a French ſhip arrived on the coaſt, and landed a party of men, who, making a rapid march to Mablethorpe hall, ſuddenly ſeized and carried off the heir of the eſtate, and well knowing the value of their priſoner, forced from him ſo large a ranſom, that great part of the eſtate was ſold on this occaſion. Thoreſby. Tothill. Withorn. Mablethorpe.

Adjoining to Withern is Woodthorpe, where in a place encompaſſed with a large moat, formerly ſtood a hall houſe belonging to the Ballots. The heireſs of this family of late years married a Brereton. In the pariſh church is a monument of William Ballot, alderman, of London, late of Woodthorpe in the county of Lincoln, eſq; who died May 9th, 1648, aged 99 years. On a ſtone in the wall near the church door is the following inſcription, very difficult to be read, and, I ſuſpect, incorrectly taken: Woodthorpe.

" Attop the porch dor under the ſtone lyſſe the " body & bons of Balotts beryed in the yeyr of owr

[m] Tan. 268.

[n] Tan. 281.

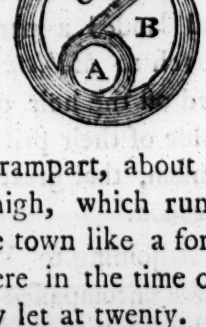
" lorde god 1531. The 1 day of January yerly to " be notid, wherfor frindys I pray you have me re- " minyd in your gud prayers that ſoner my ſall " may cum among the hevenly cumpany to be com- " fordyd afor the pat̄nal deite in the celeſtial kyng- " dum 41 me 1 comminge p̄dc̄e anno rrh oſtam."

In the middle of the chancel floor lies a ſtone figure of a prieſt circumſcribed in capitals,

" Hic jacet corpus magiſtri Ade Veſtram."

Caſtle Carleton.

Between Withern and Louth ſtands Caſtle Carleton, containing only nine wretched cottages of mud and ſtraw. But where the eye of the haſty traveller beholds nothing bur deſolation, the mind of the antiquary often meets with the moſt amuſement. This poor village was once a populous market town. In every part of it ſtone cauſeways and the foundations of buildings are frequently diſcovered. It had a church and a chapel, and was inveſted with great privileges by two charters obtained from Henry I. No juſtice, ſheriff, nor bailiff, could arreſt any freeman in it without the conſent of the lord of the manor. The tolls of the market were then worth forty ſhillings a year, and the mayor was to go yearly to the toll court of Louth to demand there freedom from all tolls for the tenants of this place and Great Carlton. Sir Hugh Bardolfe, who lived here in the time of Henry I. purchaſed theſe charters, and his eſtate comprehended the lordſhips of Burwell, Tothill, Gayton, Great Carlton, and Stewton. His hayward had a right to take his horn full of ſalt from every cart carrying that article through the town; and it is ſaid in a very old court roll, that, in the firſt year that ſir Hugh was lord of this place, " ther reigned at a toune called Wormeſgay [o] a dragon " in a lane in the feld that venomed men and beſtes " with his aire; ſir Hughe uppon a weddings daye " did fyght with thys dragon, and ſlew hym, and " toke his heade, and bayre it to the kynge, and " gave it hym, and the kynge for ſlaying of the " dragon put to his name this worde dolfe, and did " call hym afterwarde Bardolfe; for it was before " ſir Hughe Barde, and alſo the kynge gave hym in " his armes then a dragon in ſygne." There are now in this village three artificial hills A B C, called Caſtle Hills, which command an extenſive view of the ocean, and, together with the moats, occupy five acres of land. They ſtand in this form, and are ſurrounded with moats which in ſome parts are 22 yards wide. The circular hill A is 17 yards high, and riſes like a cone whoſe baſe is half an acre of ground. There is alſo an old rampart, about a mile long, 12 feet wide, and 5 high, which runs along the ſouth and eaſt ſides of the town like a fortification. Lands that were let here in the time of Henry I. at one ſhilling an acre now let at twenty.



Marſh chapel.

Marſh chapel has a handſome church well fitted up, and a very conſiderable tower. Over the ſouth porch is this motto in old characters on a ſcroll: " Orantibus " in loco iſto dimitte Dne peccata." Over the north porch this damaged: " Non eſt hic aliud niſi domus " Dei & porta celi." Mr. Lake of Lincoln has the impropriate tithes of corn, hay, wool, and lamb, and would be patron if the living were not held by ſequeſtration. Here was in Leland's [p] time a dock or creek.

" Lud, alias Louth, the fair market town, four " miles by Lude park [q]."

Louth is a corporation and market town, and has a freeſchool founded by Edward VI. a charity ſchool, and a large and beautiful church [19], with a ſteeple and ſpire 246 feet high, which is 42 feet ſhort of Grantham. It gives title to a prebend in the church of Lincoln, to which it was given by the Conqueror. Thomas de Luda, canon and treaſurer of Lincoln, who died 1329, founded a chantry of the Holy Trinity in the chapel of our Lady at Lowth 1317.

Alexander biſhop of Lincoln founded 1139 a Ciſtertian abbey in the park here, whence it had the name of Parcolude, valued at £. 147 [r]. Its MS. annals are much quoted by biſhop Tanner for aſcertaining the dates of other foundations.

North Elkrington ſtands on the Wold, commanding an extenſive proſpect over the marſhes to the ſea.

Alvingham, a Gilbertine priory, founded t. Henry II. valued at £. 128. [s] The houſe ſtood near the church, but no remains except banks or motes.

Maltby, near Louth, had a preceptory of Templars and Hoſpitallers [t].

At Legburne was a Ciſtertian nunnery, valued at £. 38. [u]

At Aſhby was an old ſeat of the Wrays, of which remain at preſent only mounds.

At Humberſton was a Benedictine abbey t. Henry II. valued at £. 42. [x]

Humberſton is the ſeat of a family of the ſame name, the firſt of whom is ſaid to have been a foundling from Homerton near London, educated in Chriſt's hoſpital, afterwards a rich merchant, who ſeeing this eſtate to be ſold purchaſed it, and accommodated the ſpelling of his name to it, and bequeathed it by will to every one of the name that could be found. The church has lately been rebuilt of brick by one of the family at the expence of £. 1000. very handſomely fitted up with oak, wainſcot pulpit, deſk, pews, &c. and two ſuperb monuments of the founder and his family. The tower is handſome, and the ſtone work good and perfect. The patronage of the living at preſent belongs to one of the ſame name by change of the name from the female line, the entail being cut off.

At Wellow was a houſe of Auſtin canons, founded by Henry I. valued at £. 95. 6s. [y]

Robert Whitgift, abbot of Wellow, and uncle to archbiſhop Whitgift, uſed to ſay that they (meaning the abbies and monaſteries) and their religion could not long continue; becauſe, ſaid he, I have read the whole ſcripture over and over, and could never find therein that our religion was founded of God [z].

The ſeal of Welhoe abbey was circumſcribed, S. coe abbis et convent monaſterii Sci Auguſtini de Grimeſby. On the back of the ſeal, in black letters, Dns Johes de Utterby xiiii Abbas [a]. On the ſeal in two niches a biſhop in pontificalibus with his croſier, giving the benediction, and a layman with a coronet and ax. Under the biſhop, quarterly England and France ſemée de lis; under the other the arms of England;

[o] Wormegay, c. Norfolk, where the Bardolphs had property.
[p] VII. 204. [q] Lel. VII. 51. [19] G. [r] Tan. 261. [s] Tan. 269.
[t] Tan. 266. [u] Tan. 277. [x] Tan. 276. [y] Tan. 257.
[z] Paul's Life of Whitgift, p. 3. Fuller, Church Hiſt. p. 300. [a] Spalding Soc. min.

England; under both between two large flowers on a chevron between a mural crown, a lion paſſant guardant, and a croſier, three fleurs de lis. This ſeal, found in Glouceſterſhire, was in the hands of Mr. Roger Gale.

Grimeſby is a market, corporation, and borough town. The church is ſpacious and handſome, in form of a croſs, the tower in the centre. Here was a Benedictine nunnery, founded before 1185, valued at £.9. 14s.[b] houſes of Auſtin friars about 1304, and Grey friars, t. Edward II.[c] The harbour is choaked up. John Whitgift, archbiſhop of Canterbury, was born here 1530, and died 1603-4; alſo Martin Fotheroy biſhop of Saliſbury 1618, 1619.

The men of Grimſby paid 55 marks and a palfrey for having the king's charter of their liberties, according to the tenor of the charter of Northampton[d]. The abbot and canons paid 30 marks, that their tenants reſiding on their farms in the town of Grimſby might not follow the court of the burgeſſes of Grimſby, but their own court, and that they might be no ways reſponſible to the ſaid court of burgeſſes, but ſo nevertheleſs that if the king ſhould talliage the burgeſſes the tenants of the canons ſhould be tallied by themſelves[e].

Blow wells are extraordinary fountains in and about Grimsby, even with the ſurface of the ſoil in pure water, and nearly circular, always full, never overflowing though embanked round for ſecurity of cattle[f], but falſely ſuppoſed unfathomable.

Clee, on the edge of the ſea, within two or three miles of Grimsby, has a very old church with a decent tower. It appears from an inſcription on one of the pillars that it was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and Saint Mary by Hugh biſhop of Lincoln 1192 temp. regis Ricardi.

At Hawerby, eight miles from Grimsby, the two bells hang in two little arches in the weſt gable; alſo at Stanton and Thoreſway.

At Aleſby Thomas Drake Tyrwhit, impropriator of the living under the dean and chapter of Lincoln, has a handſome houſe.

William Carileph, biſhop of Durham, founded a Benedictine priory at Covenham about 1082; a cell to Durham, afterwards given to Kirkſtede[g].

At Theddelſthorp St. Helen's is a ſeat of the Marſhal family, one of whom fitted up the church very handſomely, and gave a ſet of communion plate. He was ſo fond of an elder tree growing on the joints of the top battlements, that it was ſuffered to remain for his ſake. At N. Somercotes near Saltfleet a ſimilar tree growing on the top of the tower, above 50 years old, was ſo patronized by the pariſh that it would hurt them to remove it. There is another ſuch tree on the tower of Silk Willoughby in this county. Theddelſthorp All Saints church has been moſt handſomely fitted up by one of the Bertie family who lived in the pariſh, few country churches ſo genteel.

"Saltfleet haven[h]." John Watſon was maſter of one of the Saltflethys 74 years, during which time, as himſelf reported, he buried the inhabitants except three or four, three times over, and died 1693, aged 102[20]. The rectory of All Saints belongs to Magdalen college, Oxford. Over the ſouth door is an inſcription, one word of which is Sanctorum.

At S. Cockerington the family of the Scroops bury. S. Cockerington.

N. Cotes is in a ſituation not to be envied, quite at the extremity of the world. The church at Little Cotes is a miſerable place both within and without[i]. The country is open and expoſed; it is marſhy between this and Great Cotes where the river Freſtney runs. Great Cotes is in a decent country and very tolerable ſituation. The church has a handſome tower and leaded chancel handſomely pewed, with a good church-yard and garden. N. Cotes. Little and Great Cotes.

Heling is in a good country and ſituation, and has a handſome church lately rebuilt by faculty. The font curiouſly contrived by a country carpenter to be held in a pillar of the gallery. Heling.

Laſcby is a charming village and ſituation; a beautiful ſtream and many ſprings run through the ſtreet. The church and chancel are neatly fitted up. Laſeby.

Stallingborough church, being originally built of bad materials, notwithſtanding all the care and attention of the inhabitants, fell down with the tower in a very calm day 1746, ſo that only the chancel and a family burying place, built not long ago, remain. In it were ſeveral monuments of the Aiſcough family, who, in Leland's time, dwelled about Thornton Curtois[k]. Sir William in armour and his wife Margaret Hylyard. Sir Edward 1612; his ſon William 1610. Sir Francis. Stilling-borough.

On a pillar in Fetney church is this inſcription in old characters: Fetney.

> "Hoc opus finitum anno Domini 1363, Ro-
> "bertus Day tunc vic."

The ſituation of this village is beyond the good ones. The church has a good tower greatly neglected.

At Haynton, the ſeat of George Robert Heneage, eſq; 12 miles from Lincoln, and eight from Louth, was found in digging foundations for a dog kennel a large poſnet pot with three feet and a handle, full of various Roman ſilver coins, worth £.80. Mr. Heneage gave the finder £.10. A Roman road runs from Lincoln to Haynton[l]. "Henege dwellith at Haynton, where "he is lord and patron. Haynton is within three "miles off Rayſun Market, and ſeven from Horn-"caſtle. Sir Thomas Heneage hath done much "there in tranſlating and new building with brick "and abbay ſtone[m]. Haynton.

"Wainfleet, a pretty market town, ſtanding on a "creke near to the ſea. To this town long ſmall "veſſels. It hath been a very good town, and in "it two churches. The ſchool that Wainflete biſhop "of Wincheſter made and endowed with £.10. land "is the moſt notable thing. The ſhippelets in ho-"minum memoria came up to the ſchool. The haven "now decayith[n]. Wainfleet.

"Paynell faith that as he remembereth there is a "place called the Caſtle hill at Waynfleet[o].

"The haven of Waynfleet enterith into the lande "by a creke . . . miles, and aftir that it hath en-"tered a pratie waye it caſtith out croſſe of eche "ſide of the creeke but not far an armelet into the "fennes, and maketh a little moriſche lake at the but "hedde of it[p]."

Here Dr. Stukeley[q] places Ravenna's Navione (or, as Baxter corrects it, Vainona) and ſuppoſes it to have been a conſiderable harbour before Boſton.

The alabaſter monument in Wainfleet church, ſaid

[b] Tan. 274. [c] Ib. 284.
[d] Mag. Rot. 3 Joh. rot. 2—6. Madox Hiſt. of the Exch. 279. [e] Mag. rot. 9 Joh. rot. 3. 6. Madox Hiſt. Exch. 281.
[f] Spald. Soc. min. [g] Tan. 252.
[h] Lel. VII. 177. [20] G.
[i] Of Mr. James Guy who died miniſter there 1763, and his numerous family, ſee Gent. Mag. 1783, p. 464.
[k] VII. 52. [l] Spald. ſoc. min. [m] Lel. VII. 52.
[n] Ib. VII. 50. 204. [o] Ib. 204. [p] Ib. VI. 60. [q] I. 26.

to have been erected by William Patten bishop of Winchester, founder of Magdalen callege, Oxford, for his father, still remains, with his figure cumbent, a purse, dagger, and beads at his girdle, and scholars round the tomb bearing his arms in the garter, with an impalement, and those of Magdalen college, Oxford. The bishop himself founded a freeschool, 1459, and built a brick chapel in the town now made the freeschool house.

Burgh. Three miles north from Wainfleet is Burgh, a market town, and a Roman castrum to defend the coast. Here are two tumuli, one very high called Cock hill. Roman coins are often found in the deserted churchyard of St. Mary's demolished church. Here were two churches, now only one[r].

Skegnesse. "Skegnesse, sometime a great haven town, once "wallid, having a castle, the old town clean con-"sumed and eten by the sea. For old Skegnes is "now buildid a poor new thing[s]."

Cotham. Cotham, or Nun Cohun had a Cistertian nunnery t. Henry I. valued at £.46.[t]

Castor. "Castre standith on a clive side, half a mile off "from Ankholme river, four from Langford bridge, "and six miles east from Spitel. There come "springs from the hills by Castre. There is a "Saturday market, the town almost all thakkid, and "in hominum memoria often hurt by fire. There is "speking of a fortres that hath sometime been "there[u]." The Roman site of this town and castle is in the main preserved. A great piece of the Roman wall stands on the verge of the church-yard, and in different places from under the castle walls almost quite round rise many quick springs. But Syfer spring is most famous, having now four streams from between the joints of great stones laid flat together, and joined together with lead probably first by the Romans[x].

Some lands are said to be held at Broughton near Brig by the following tenure. Every year on Palm Sunday a person from Broughton comes into the church porch at Caister, having a green silk purse containing two shillings and a silver penny tied at the end of a cart whip, which he cracks three times in the porch, and continues there till the second lesson begins, when he goes into the church, and cracks it three times over the clergyman's head, and kneeling before him during the reading of the lesson, he presents the minister with the purse, and then goes into the choir, and continues there during the rest of the service. It is probable that the two shillings are substituted for twenty-four pence, as they are not easily procured at this time. The tenure also was probably antecedent to the coinage of shillings, which were not common till Edward VI's reign. This tenure is not mentioned by Camden or Blunt, but was communicated by the rev. Mr. Bransby to Spalding society.

At Castle hill many bodies have been dug up. Some labourers digging materials for repairing the roads took up a stone, about 18 inches broad, and nine deep, with the imperfect inscription here engraved, which the late Mr. Bradley of Lincoln read thus .... Cruci spolium quod Egbert rex in honorem. .....

He supposed it a memorial of Egbert's victory over Wiglaf king of Mercia gained A. D. 827 at or near Caistor, when he dedicated the spoils to some pious uses in the antient church there, the present being made up of fragments of an older one. Mr. Bradley placed Sidnacester here[y].

Dr. Stukeley derives the name of Theng from Thegn, Thane, whence perhaps Tong castle in Shropshire[z]. A like story of a hide and thongs is told of Thong castle at Sittingborn in Kent[a]. Thwong is the name of a field at Horncastle[b]. In the church are three stone figures of a cross-legged knight, another named Hundon, and a lady[c].

Not far from this castle is Thoresway, which 20 T Charles I. gave title of baron to sir John Colepeper, who had exposed himself for his sovereign in the battles of Edgehill, Newbury, &c. This title was borne by his two sons, and ended with the second 1692[d].

At Wyngall in S. Kelsey was an alien priory cell to W Sees abbey in Normandy t. Henry III.[e]

At one of the Kelseys, the seat of her father sir W William Askew, was born Anne Askew, who went, says fuller[f], to Heaven in a chariot of fire. He says William Ayscough, bishop of Salisbury, murdered by the rebels under J. Cade at Edingdon, c. Wilts, 1450, was of the same family, but Godwin[g] brings him from Yorkshire. Fuller misplaces Edingdon in this county, but see vol. I. p. 100.

At Osgodby was born of an antient family remaining there in Fuller's time William Aylmer, chancellor of England, and bishop of Norwich, from 1325 to 1336[h].

Six miles north of Caistor, on the right hand of the road, on the military way between the village of Croxton and Melton wood, five miles from Glanford Brig, is Brough, a small square Roman camp, single ditched, the whole, including the ditch, not exceeding three acres. Its pristine state remains, except what weather has worn away in length of time.

[r] Stuk. Itin. I. 27. [s] Lel. VII. 50. [t] Tan. 270.
[u] Lel. VII. 50. [x] Stukeley I. 96, 97.
[y] Letter to Mr. Turner of Caistor, in Antiquarian Repertory, vol. IV. p. 161, 162.
[z] Stuk. Ib. [a] Lel. VII. 144. Ap. See vol I. p. 234. [b] Stuk. Ib. 28. See before, p. 269.
[c] Stuk. Ib. [d] G. Dugd. Bar. II. 472. Le Neve MS. note. [e] Tan. 279.
[f] Worth. Linc. p. 155. [g] Godw. 433. [h] Ib. 350.

The rampart at every corner is twice as high as on the ſides; perhaps it being an exploratory camp. In the neighbouring village of Kirmington have been found ſome defaced coins of the lower empire with the wolf and twins on the reverſe [i]. Here Dr. Salmon inclines to place Cauſennæ [k].

by a bridge ſtanding oblique to the gate flanked with brick walls and arches with loopholes ſupporting a broad battlement and two round towers: the wooden gate of rich Gothic work remains in part. Over the gate are ſeveral ſtatues, and two rooms, and four hexagon towers at the angles. In one of the three laſt, whoſe door had been walled up, was found in the laſt century a ſkeleton ſuppoſed to have been immured, with a table, braſs candleſtic, and book. From both ſides of the gate ranges a ſtrong brick wall embattled with internal arches and towers. Within the area a row of prodigious aſh trees led to the church, cut down by ſir Robert Sutton, who bought the eſtate of the Skinners, and has a good modern houſe in this pariſh. The ſite, and ſome ruins of the abbey church, and other of the monaſtic buildings may be traced. Henry VIII. and his queen were ſplendidly entertained here at his return from Hull 1540. Before the college gate on each ſide the moor are three or four little hillocks oppoſite to each other called Butts, but probably tumuli [n].

At Wotton adjoining is a ſchool endowed with £. 5. per annum. The church has a handſome tower, the pariſh is lately encloſed, and the vicarage doubled.

If any attempt to imitate the example of Mr. Camden in enlivening proſaic with poetic deſcription may be admitted in theſe additions, the candid reader is deſired to accept the following grateful commemoration of refreſhment afforded in the humble village of Wotton to a traveller wearied in ſearch of Thornton college reſting on the banks of its clear pool 1763:

Gratitudini ſacrum.

Imitation of Horace Carm. III. 13.

Fountain of Wotton, clear as glaſs,
What traveller ſhall dare to paſs
  Thy ſtream unnotic'd by!
Here will I waſte the grateful hours,
Pouring out wine and ſcattering flowers,
  While on thy banks I lie.

When I return a ſportive kid,
Whoſe budding horns defiance bid
  To all the rival herd,
Tho' now he wantons o'er the plain,
Thy cooling ſtream with blood muſt ſtain
  In ſacrifice preferr'd.
What tho' no trickling murmurs ſound
To lull thy villagers around,
  No art confines thy ſtreams;
Thy ſtreams were form'd for real uſe,
And not deſign'd to give a looſe
  To poet's idle dreams.

Far from the din of arms and arts,
Fix'd in the unfrequented parts
  Of Lincoln's drier land;
Alike the Humber and the ſea
For uſefulneſs muſt yield to thee,
  Tho' thou haſt leſs command.

Thee the fierce dog-ſtar raging high
In flaming heat ſhall never dry;
  To thee the weary bull
Tir'd with long turning of the ſoil,
Soon as he leaves the ploughſhare's toil,
  Retires his thirſt to cool.

To thee the fleecy ſtragglers croud,
Their gratitude in bleatings loud
  Thy kind relief proclaim:
And pilgrim I who went aſtray,
Till Wotton's ſwains reſtor'd my way,
  Immortalize thy name.

Around thy brink the peaſants find
A length'ning life [o] and peace of mind,
  And fear nor death nor grief.
For ever flouriſh, gentle flood,
To future pilgrims prove as good,
  And yield them like relief.

Ulceby. The church at Ulceby has a fair ſpire a little bent towards the top. The family of Haſtings was here in Leland's time [p].

Gokewell. At Gokewell was a Ciſtertian nunnery founded by William de Alta ripa before 1185, valued at £. 76. [q] Here was ſometime ſeated the family of Guevara, deſcended from Nicholas Velez de Guevara of Segura, in the province of Guiapuſcoa in Spain. Francis, grandſon of this Nicholas, came into England with Philip II. of Spain, 1544, and marrying Anne, ſiſter of ſir Charles Egerton, of Willoughby, in this county, ſeated himſelf here, and was father of ſir John Guevara of Gokewell, whoſe ſon Francis was the great friend of Gondemar the Spaniſh ambaſſador. This family ſeems to have been the only one of Philip's ſuite who ſettled in England [r]. In this pariſh is Burham chapel now a farm houſe, and Verecourt a manſion of a family of that name [s].

Waleſby. At Waleſby near Market Raſen was born, 1683, Dr. Daniel Waterland, his father being rector. He was educated under Mr. Sykes maſter of Magdalen college, Cambridge, and died 1740.

Kelling-holme. A mile eaſt of Thornton are ruins of another great caſtle called Kellingholme [t].

Newhouſe. At Newhouſe or Newſam near Glanford brigg, was the firſt Premonſtratenſian houſe in England, founded 1143, value £.99 [u].

[i] Stuk. I. 95. [k] New Survey, p. 262, 263. 269. [l] Lel. VII. 52.
[m] Tan. 262. [n] Stuk. I. 95.
[o] The tomb-ſtones in the adjoining church-yard proclaim the longevity of the inhabitants.
[p] VII. 52. [q] Tan. 275. [r] MSS. penes J. C. Brooke de Coll. Arm.
[s] Stuk. ubi ſup. [t] Stuk. Ib. [u] Tan. 264.

to have been erected by William Patten bishop of Wincheſter, founder of Magdalen callege, Oxford, for his father, ſtill remains, with his figure cumbent, a purſe, dagger, and beads at his girdle, and ſcholars round the tomb bearing his arms in the garter, with an impalement, and thoſe of Magdalen college, Oxford. The biſhop himſelf founded a freeſchool, 1459, and built a brick chapel in the town now made the freeſchool houſe.

Burgh. Three miles north from Wainfleet is Burgh, a market town, and a Roman caſtrum to defend the coaſt. Here are two tumuli, one very high called Cock hill. Roman coins are often found in the deſerted churchyard of St. Mary's demoliſhed church. Here were two churches, now only one[r].

Skegneſſe. "Skegneſſe, ſometime a great haven town, once "wallid, having a caſtle, the old town clean con- "ſumed and eten by the ſea. For old Skegnes is "now buildid a poor new thing[s]."

Cotham. Cotham, or Nun Cohun had a Ciſtertian nunnery t. Henry I. valued at £.46.[t]

Caſtor. "Caſtre ſtandith on a clive ſide, half a mile off "from Ankholme river, four from Langford bridge, "and ſix miles eaſt from Spitel. There come "ſprings from the hills by Caſtre. There is a "Saturday market, the town almoſt all thakkid, and "in hominum memoria often hurt by fire. There is "ſpeking of a fortres that hath ſometime been "there[u]." The Roman ſite of this town and caſtle is in the main preſerved. A great piece of the Roman wall ſtands on the verge of the church-yard, and in different places from under the caſtle walls almoſt quite round riſe many quick ſprings. But Syfer ſpring is moſt famous, having now four ſtreams from between the joints of great ſtones laid flat together, and joined together with lead probably firſt by the Romans[x].

Some lands are ſaid to be held at Broughton near Brig by the following tenure. Every year on Palm Sunday a perſon from Broughton comes into the church porch at Caiſter, having a green ſilk purſe containing two ſhillings and a ſilver penny tied at the end of a cart whip, which he cracks three times in the porch, and continues there till the ſecond leſſon begins, when he goes into the church, and cracks it three times over the clergyman's head, and kneeling before him during the reading of the leſſon, he preſents the miniſter with the purſe, and then goes into the choir, and continues there during the reſt of the ſervice. It is probable that the two ſhillings are ſubſtituted for twenty-four pence, as they are not eaſily procured at this time. The tenure alſo was probably antecedent to the coinage of ſhillings, which were not common till Edward VI's reign. This tenure is not mentioned by Camden or Blunt, but was communicated by the rev. Mr. Bransby to Spalding ſociety.

At Caſtle hill many bodies have been dug up. Some labourers digging materials for repairing the roads took up a ſtone, about 18 inches broad, and nine deep, with the imperfect inſcription here engraved, which the late Mr. Bradley of Lincoln read thus .... Cruci ſpolium quod Egbert rex in honorem. .....

He ſuppoſed it a memorial of Egbert's victory over Wiglaf king of Mercia gained A. D. 827 at or near Caiſtor, when he dedicated the ſpoils to ſome pious uſes in the antient church there, the preſent being made up of fragments of an older one. Mr. Bradley placed Sidnaceſter here[y].

Dr. Stukeley derives the name of Theng from Thegn, Thane, whence perhaps Tong caſtle in Shropſhire[z]. A like ſtory of a hide and thongs is told of Thong caſtle at Sittingborn in Kent[a]. Thwong is the name of a field at Horncaſtle[b]. In the church are three ſtone figures of a croſs-legged knight, another named Hundon, and a lady[c].

Not far from this caſtle is Thoreſway, which 20 Th
Charles I. gave title of baron to ſir John Colepeper, who had expoſed himſelf for his ſovereign in the battles of Edgehill, Newbury, &c. This title was borne by his two ſons, and ended with the ſecond 1692[d].

At Wyngall in S. Kelſey was an alien priory cell to W
Sees abbey in Normandy t. Henry III.[e]

At one of the Kelſeys, the ſeat of her father ſir K
William Aſkew, was born Anne Aſkew, who went, ſays fuller[f], to Heaven in a chariot of fire. He ſays William Ayſcough, biſhop of Saliſbury, murdered by the rebels under J. Cade at Edingdon, c. Wilts, 1450, was of the ſame family, but Godwin[g] brings him from Yorkſhire. Fuller miſplaces Edingdon in this county, but ſee vol. I. p. 100.

At Oſgodby was born of an antient family remaining there in Fuller's time William Aylmer, chancellor of England, and biſhop of Norwich, from 1325 to 1336[h]. C

Six miles north of Caiſtor, on the right hand of the road, on the military way between the village of Croxton and Melton wood, five miles from Glanford Brig, is Brough, a ſmall ſquare Roman camp, ſingle ditched, the whole, including the ditch, not exceeding three acres. Its priſtine ſtate remains, except what weather has worn away in length of time.

[r] Stuk. Itin. I. 27. [s] Lel. VII. 50. [t] Tan. 270.
[u] Lel. VII. 50. [x] Stukeley I. 96, 97.
[y] Letter to Mr. Turner of Caiſtor, in Antiquarian Repertory, vol. IV. p. 161, 162.
[z] Stuk. Ib. [a] Lel. VII. 144. Ap. See vol I. p. 234. [b] Stuk. Ib. 28. See before, p. 269.
[c] Stuk. Ib. [d] G. Dugd. Bar. II. 472. Le Neve MS. note. [e] Tan. 279.
[f] Worth. Linc. p. 155. [g] Godw. 433. [h] Ib. 350.

The rampart at every corner is twice as high as on the ſides; perhaps it being an exploratory camp. In the neighbouring village of Kirmington have been found ſome defaced coins of the lower empire with the wolf and twins on the reverſe [i]. Here Dr. Salmon inclines to place Cauſennæ [k].

At Thornton or Thornton Curtois, about four or five miles from Barton, in Leland's time the property of Ayſcough [l], now of ſir Rowland Wynne of Noſtell priory in Yorkſhire, bart. who has a conſiderable ſeat here, and owns the whole pariſh, was a priory of black canons, founded 1139, afterwards made a monaſtery, valued at £.594. per annum. After the ſuppreſſion Henry VIII. reſerved the greateſt part of the reverſion for the college by him erected here for a dean and prebends, a.r. 33, but it was diſſolved 1 Edward VI. [m] It conſiſted originally of a large ſquare ſurrounded by a deep ditch and high ramparts to keep off pirates and robbers, and is one of the completeſt pieces of antient fortification, having been very magnificent and extenſive. The gatehouſe is ſtill entire, entered by a bridge ſtanding oblique to the gate flanked with brick walls and arches with loopholes ſupporting a broad battlement and two round towers: the wooden gate of rich Gothic work remains in part. Over the gate are ſeveral ſtatues, and two rooms, and four hexagon towers at the angles. In one of the three laſt, whoſe door had been walled up, was found in the laſt century a ſkeleton ſuppoſed to have been immured, with a table, braſs candleſtic, and book. From both ſides of the gate ranges a ſtrong brick wall embattled with internal arches and towers. Within the area a row of prodigious aſh trees led to the church, cut down by ſir Robert Sutton, who bought the eſtate of the Skinners, and has a good modern houſe in this pariſh. The ſite, and ſome ruins of the abbey church, and other of the monaſtic buildings may be traced. Henry VIII. and his queen were ſplendidly entertained here at his return from Hull 1540. Before the college gate on each ſide the moor are three or four little hillocks oppoſite to each other called Butts, but probably tumuli [n].

At Wotton adjoining is a ſchool endowed with £. 5. per annum. The church has a handſome tower, the pariſh is lately encloſed, and the vicarage doubled.

If any attempt to imitate the example of Mr. Camden in enlivening proſaic with poetic deſcription may be admitted in theſe additions, the candid reader is deſired to accept the following grateful commemoration of refreſhment afforded in the humble village of Wotton to a traveller wearied in ſearch of Thornton college reſting on the banks of its clear pool 1763:

Gratitudini ſacrum.

Imitation of Horace Carm. III. 13.

Fountain of Wotton, clear as glaſs,
What traveller ſhall dare to paſs
  Thy ſtream unnotic'd by!
Here will I waſte the grateful hours,
Pouring out wine and ſcattering flowers,
  While on thy banks I lie.

When I return a ſportive kid,
Whoſe budding horns defiance bid
  To all the rival herd,
Tho' now he wantons o'er the plain,
Thy cooling ſtream with blood muſt ſtain
  In ſacrifice preferr'd.
What tho' no trickling murmurs ſound
To lull thy villagers around,
  No art confines thy ſtreams;
Thy ſtreams were form'd for real uſe,
And not deſign'd to give a looſe
  To poet's idle dreams.

Far from the din of arms and arts,
Fix'd in the unfrequented parts
  Of Lincoln's drier land;
Alike the Humber and the ſea
For uſefulneſs muſt yield to thee,
  Tho' thou haſt leſs command.

Thee the fierce dog-ſtar raging high
In flaming heat ſhall never dry;
  To thee the weary bull
Tir'd with long turning of the ſoil,
Soon as he leaves the ploughſhare's toil,
  Retires his thirſt to cool.

To thee the fleecy ſtragglers croud,
Their gratitude in bleatings loud
  Thy kind relief proclaim:
And pilgrim I who went aſtray,
Till Wotton's ſwains reſtor'd my way,
  Immortalize thy name.

Around thy brink the peaſants find
A length'ning life [o] and peace of mind,
  And fear nor death nor grief.
For ever flouriſh, gentle flood,
To future pilgrims prove as good,
  And yield them like relief.

The church at Ulceby has a fair ſpire a little bent towards the top. The family of Haſtings was here in Leland's time [p]. Ulceby.

At Gokewell was a Ciſtertian nunnery founded by William de Alta ripa before 1185, valued at £. 76. [q] Here was ſometime ſeated the family of Guevara, deſcended from Nicholas Velez de Guevara of Segura, in the province of Guiapuſcoa in Spain. Francis, grandſon of this Nicholas, came into England with Philip II. of Spain, 1544, and marrying Anne, ſiſter of ſir Charles Egerton, of Willoughby, in this county, ſeated himſelf here, and was father of ſir John Guevara of Gokewell, whoſe ſon Francis was the great friend of Gondemar the Spaniſh ambaſſador. This family ſeems to have been the only one of Philip's ſuite who ſettled in England [r]. In this pariſh is Burham chapel now a farm houſe, and Verecourt a manſion of a family of that name [s]. Gokewell.

At Waleſby near Market Raſen was born, 1683, Dr. Daniel Waterland, his father being rector. He was educated under Mr. Sykes maſter of Magdalen college, Cambridge, and died 1740. Waleſby.

A mile eaſt of Thornton are ruins of another great caſtle called Kellingholme [t]. Kelling-holme.

At Newhouſe or Newſam near Glanford brigg, was the firſt Premonſtratenſian houſe in England, founded 1143, value £.99 [u]. Newhouſe.

[i] Stuk. I. 95.
[k] New Survey, p. 262, 263. 269.
[l] Lel. VII. 52.
[m] Tan. 262.
[n] Stuk. I. 95.
[o] The tomb-ſtones in the adjoining church-yard proclaim the longevity of the inhabitants.
[p] VII. 52.
[q] Tan. 275.
[r] MSS. penes J. C. Brooke de Coll. Arm.
[s] Stuk. ubi ſup.
[t] Stuk. Ib.
[u] Tan. 264.

Barton. Barton is a mean dirty town with one tolerable inn. The church of St. Peter, which is handſome and in good order, has a very ſingular tower with round and pointed arches alternately of old conſtruction. The arch of the ſouth door is Saxon.

Barrow. Barrow, two miles from it is an irregular large town, about a mile north-weſt of which, in a large tract of marſh land bordering on the Humber, is an earth-work which Dr. Stukeley [x] calls an alate Druid temple, but it is called on the ſpot the caſtle. It conſiſts of irregular ramparts of conſiderable height incloſing certain round hillocks and wet ground, and the ſite of two ſquare or oblong rooms at right angles to each other. Some tumuli on the north ſide below have been opened, and found to contain human bones and urns. In this town was ſeated in Leland's time the family of Turwithe [y].

Ferriby. The church at Ferriby, ſituated on the ſide of a hill overlooking the Humber to the Yorkſhire coaſt, is of an odd conſtruction from north to ſouth, and has a low tower.

Yarborough. Two miles weſt from Thornton is Yarborough, a very large camp which gives name to an antient family who derived their name from it, Charles Yarborough of Heſlington near York, eſq. being the preſent owner. It alſo gives name to the hundred, and commands the coaſt, and vaſt quantities of Roman coins have been found at it, as alſo at Ludford, probably a ſtation on the Foſs near Market Raiſin [z].

Ludford.

Melton Roſs. Melton Roſs, by Yarborough, belonged to the Rooſes by deſcent from Everard de Ros, who married Roſe, aunt and one of the coheireſſes of Robert lord Truſbut. 13 Henry IV. William lord Ros of Hamlake exhibited his complaint in parliament againſt ſir Robert Tyrwhitt, one of the juſtices of the King's Bench, for withholding from him and his tenants of this manor certain common of paſture and herbary in Wrawby, and lying in wait for him with 500 men, which ſir Robert confeſſing in the king's peace, and craving pardon for, had it upon terms ſet down at large in Rot. Parl. 13 Henry IV. m. 13. and the ſaid lord Ros, to forgive him and all others that in the array aforeſaid were aſſembled, except only four perſons who were ſent to Beauvoir caſtle there to aſk pardon. In terror of ſuch offences in future it is probable the gallows was erected, which is to this day kept up by the duke of Rutland on the confines of the lands belonging formerly to the Tyrwhits, and ſtill to the Manners, who derive themſelves from the Roſſes [a].

Aileſham. Aileſham priory by Thornton was founded by Beatrix de Amundevill for Auſtin canons, valued at £. 70 [b].

Irford. At Irford near Ludford Ralph de Albini t. Henry II. founded a Premonſtratenſian nunnery, valued at £. 13. 19s. [c]

Winterton. The Foſſe road ends at Winterton, a mile ſouth of Wintringham, and about three miles from the Humber, a peninſula between Humber and Ankham, half a mile eaſt of which ſtood the old Roman town, the foundations plowed up, the ſite encloſed by water, having only a ſlip of land towards the Roman road as an entrance. The valley weſt between it and the town is now called the Old haven, and its month Flaſhmire. This place is overagainſt Brough, the Roman town on the Yorkſhire ſide.

Wintringham is a poor dirty corporation. Its antient name, as well as that of the river, was Abontrus [d]. Wintringham.

In Winterton great corn fields near Roxby were diſcovered in plowing, 1747, three curious Moſaic Roman pavements now deſtroyed. Mr. Drake of York cauſed them to be drawn in their proper colours, one of them in perſpective, and ſhewed the drawings Jan. 7, 1750, to the Society of Antiquaries, who cauſed them to be engraved the ſame year. The largeſt 30 feet by 19, and ſuppoſed to have been the floor of a dining room, had in the centre Orpheus playing on his harp, ſurrounded by the beaſts, and at the corners four wine veſſels with handles. In the centre of another, which was 44 feet by 15, was Ceres with ears of wheat in her hand: and the third, which was very imperfect, had a ſtag galloping. As much as had been laid open of a ſmaller pavement at Roxby adjoining was engraved in the ſame plate. Mr. Drake ſaid, that at the ſame time a great quantity of Roman bricks, tiles, &c. were ploughed up all over Winterton field, but no coins; and that no ſtation had yet been diſcovered near this place. A large braſs eagle for a ſtandard was dug up at the ſame place and time [e]. Roxby.

At Glanford bridge, a market town in Wrawby pariſh, was an hoſpital founded t. John, ſubordinate to Selby abbey [f]. Glanford bridge. Wrawby.

At Elſham adjoining was an hoſpital for poor brethren, begun by Beatrix de Amundeville, completed by her ſon Walter, who committed it to the care of a prior and canons regular of St. Auſtin before 1166. It was valued at £.70. per ann. [g] The church has a tolerable tower: ſome carving at the entrance of the ſchool-room on the north ſide of the church, but ſeparated from it: ſome more at the weſt door defaced by the children. Elſham.

Newſtede, on Ancholme or Rucholm iſland near Glanford bridge, was a Gilbertine priory, valued at £. 38. 13s. [h] Part of Cadney church about a mile from hence is ſeparated by a curious old ſcreen, and called Newſtede chancel. Newſtede. Cadney.

Worlaby gave title of baron to John lord Belaſyſe, 20 Charles I. His ſon Harry married Suſan daughter and coheir of ſir Henry Airmine of Oſgodby, miſtreſs to king James, and being attainted on the Popiſh plot was confined ſome years in the tower, and died 1668. She was created baroneſs Belaſyſe of Oſgodby 26 Charles II. and died 1712, and her ſon Henry 1691, ſo that both titles are extinct [i], and the eſtate has deſcended to the preſent ſir John Webb of Canford Magna, co. Dorſet, bart. whoſe grandmother was daughter and at length ſole heireſs of John lord Belaſyſe. The old ſeat of the lord Belaſys remains here, and over the door the motto "Bonne & Belle aſſez." In the eaſt window of the chancel is a pretty ſmall piece of painted glaſs repreſenting the deſcent from the croſs, but damaged by an unſkilful glazier. Worlaby.

Stow or Marieſtow, q. d. St. Mary's place, had a church of ſecular prieſts, founded by Eadnoth biſhop of Dorcheſter, probably the ſecond of the name, [x] Abury, p. 76. It. I. 95.

[y] VII. 52.
[z] Stuk. It. I. 95. 2d ed.
[a] Spald. Soc. Min.
[b] Tan. 271.
[c] Tan. 276.
[d] Stuk. It. I. 90.
[e] A. S. min. Mr. Romiley in Spald. Soc. min.
[f] Tan. 279.
[g] Tan. 271. See before, p. 249.
[h] Tan. 273.
[i] Dugd. Bar. II. 456. 486.

about

about 1040, and augmented by Leofric and Godiva. Remigius ſubſtituted Benedictine monks under an abbot, and biſhop Bloet removed them to Eynſham c. Oxford, exchanging this eſtate for others. Huntingdon's words ſub promontorio Lincolniæ would lead one to think it was under Lincoln hill; but it is evident from Bleſenſis's continuation of Ingulphus, p. 127, that it was in the biſhop's manor near Trentſide[k], and under what Dr. Stukeley[l] calls the Lincolnſhire Alps, which he makes to end at Wintringham. The church is a large building, in form of a croſs, and very antient, built by Remigius, and made a biſhop's ſee. The abbey was afterwards the ſeat of the antient family de Burgh, and birth-place of St. John Borough, ſlain at the iſle of Rhee under the duke of Buckingham[m]. It is a prebend and curacy, and was augmented by Dr. Harcourt[n].

Sidnaceſter is generally placed at this Stow. Eadhed was the firſt biſhop A. D. 678, and had ſeven ſucceſſors through the 8th century. After Eadulf's death, when the ſee had been vacant about 80 years, it was by Leofwin before A. D. 949 united to Dorcheſter, as that of Leiceſter had been. The 6th from Leofwin was Eadnoth, who, as the intermediate biſhops, enjoyed the titles of Dorcheſter, Sidnaceſter, and Leiceſter, and built St. Mary's church at Stow, which Biſhop Gibſon obſerves greatly reſembles that of Dorcheſter, though Mr. Pegge denies the force of the argument, for the preſent church was built by Remigius a Norman. The ſee of Leiceſter is concluded to have been where St. Margaret's church now ſtands at Leiceſter, which, like Stow, is a peculiar prebend and an archdeaconry. The preſent privileges of Stow are greater than any hereabouts except Lincoln, and they have formerly exceeded even that. It was famous before Lincoln was a biſhop's ſee, and the tradition of theſe parts is that Stow was the mother church to Lincoln. The ſteeple has been much larger than it now is, and Alfric Putta, archbiſhop of York, 1023, giving two great bells to that of Beverly, which he had built, and two others of the ſame mould to Southwell, beſtowed two on this Stow. Theſe three churches were probably the largeſt in their reſpective counties[o]. The ſtrongeſt objection is that, in Girald's lives of the biſhops of Lincoln[p], it is ſaid that Remigius removing his ſee to Lincoln procured all Lindſey to be taken out of the juriſdiction of the archbiſhops of York, and added to that of Canterbury; and if all Lindſey belonged to the archbiſhops of York till the time of Remigius, who lived ſince the Conqueſt, the old Sidnaceſter, united afterwards to Dorcheſter, cannot be reaſonably placed within that diviſion[p]. I do not ſee the force of this argument; for Remigius by putting the ſee of Sidnaceſter into the province of Canterbury only prepared for its union with Dorcheſter, which was already in that province. A place called Gallowdale, though it has no relation with eccleſiaſtical matters, is brought by biſhop Gibſon to ſhew the eminence of Stow. Among the hills above Ley and Gainsborough have been found many Roman coins and pieces of urns, and the addition of Ceſter makes it probable that Sidnaceſter wherein it was was a Roman ſtation. The caſtle hill eaſt from Gainsborough church comprehends in its entrenchments above 100 acres[22]. The diſtrict round it is called Sidena, which is deciſive. Mr. Pegge in his memoir on the ſubject before referred to inclines to Kirkton. Mr. Johnſon[q] places it at Hatfield, which he put in this county, but which is really in Yorkſhire. Dr. Stukeley wrote a diſſertation in favour of Newark[r].

To Stow adjoins Stretton, ſo called from the Roman road; and in a field here are found Ophites, or Cornua Ammonis[23]. Stretton.

Knaith was held by William Willoughby, third lord Willoughby of Parham, who was buried there 15 James I. as was one of his ſucceſſors George[s]. Here was born 1532 Thomas Sutton, the munificent founder of the Charterhouſe in London, in which chapel he was buried 1611[t]. Knaith.

The Darcies, or D'Arcies, were ſettled firſt at Normanby, in this county. The male line of the elder branch ending in Norman, 14 Edward III. the barony paſſed to the iſſue of a younger brother of the ſaid Norman's father[u], from whom the preſent earl of Holderneſs is deſcended. It gave title of marquis to the duke of Buckingham[24]. It was named from and was the prime ſeat of Norman Adrecy, or Darcy, who poſſeſſed it and many other manors in this county and Yorkſhire t. William I.[x] See the pedigree of this family from him to Coigniers lord Darcy created by Charles I. earl of Holderneſs[y]. Normanby.

Heynings, two miles from Gainſborough near Knaith, had a Ciſtertian nunnery, founded about 1280, valued at £. 495.[z] Haynings.

"Gainſboro is a good market town, and is 12 miles "from Lincoln. I ſaw no thinges much to be marked "in it but the pariſh church, where lieth richly "buried ſir Thomas Boro, knight of the garter, "and dna de Botreaux his wife. He died 1408, and "was grandfather to the lord Borow that now is, and "made the moſt of the motid manor place by the weſt "end of the church yard. This lord Borow's fa"ther lies in the choir. In the ſame church lies D. "Edmundus Cornewaile, who died 1322, that had a "great motid manor place called Thonak in a wood "a mile eaſt from Gaineſborough. It longeth yet "to the Cornewailes. There is an old chapel of "ſtone in the ſouth part of Gaineſborough town, "where they of the town ſay that many Danes be "buried: alſo a chapel of wood on Trent ſide by S. "in Gaineſborow, now deſolated. There is a park "by Gainsborow longing to the lords Borow[a]." This family of Borough or Burgh derive their deſcent from a younger ſon of the famous Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent. But the firſt who occurs is ſir Thomas Burgh, who aſſiſted Edward IV. in his eſcape from Middleham caſtle, and joined him at the battle of Barnet. His ſon Thomas was elected knight of the garter t. Richard III. advanced to the dignity of a baron 3 Henry VII. and ſummoned to parliament. He founded an hoſpital at Gainſborough. His ſon Edward married Anne, ſole daughter and heir to ſir Thomas Cobham, knt. and left iſſue Gainſborough.

[k] Tan. 250. [l] It. I. 90. [21] G. [m] Ecton, p. 250. Kennet's Caſe of Impropr. p. 336-7.
[n] Mr. Pegge's MS. paper on Sidnaceſter. [o] G. Godwin, 280. [22] G. [p] Ang. Sac. II. 411.
[q] Canons, A. D. 802. Mr. Gale ſuppoſed it the Cadney of the Monaſticon I. 137. MS. n. G.
[r] Drake's Eborac. p. 39. [23] G. [s] Dugd. Bar. II. 89.
[t] Fuller's Worth. Linc. p. 168. [u] Dugd. I. 379. [24] G. [x] Domeſday, f. 361. a.
[y] Fuller's Church Hiſt. p. 324, 325. [z] Tan. 274.
[a] Lel. I. 36. VII. 52.

Thomas,

Thomas, ſummoned to parliament as lord Burgh 21 Henry VIII. He left iſſue Henry and William, of whom the former was killed, and the latter was one of the peers on the trial of Thomas duke of Norfolk, and by Catharine his wife daughter of Edward earl of Lincoln had iſſue John, who died in his life time, leaving Thomas, who was ambaſſador into Scotland 36 Eliz. governor of the Brill in Flanders, and lieutenant of Ireland, and died 1596, but left only three daughters, of whom ſee in Surry, I. 171[b].

The town has a good market, and the moſt flouriſhing trade in the county, and may rival even Hull and Boſton. It is ſuppoſed to have given birth to William de Ganeſborough, biſhop of Worceſter from 1302 to 1308[c]. The learned Simon Patrick biſhop of Ely was born here 1626, and died 1707. It gave title of earl 1683 to EdwardNoel, lord Noel of Ridlington and viſcount Campden, ſucceeded 1689 by his ſon Wriotheſley Baptiſt, who dying without iſſue 1690, the title paſſed to his couſin german Baptiſt, and from him to his ſon and nameſake 1714. He died immaturely and deſervedly lamented 1750, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and nameſake, and he 1759 by his brother Henry 6th and preſent earl. The inſide of the preſent church is fitted up in a ſtyle of elegant ſimplicity. Near it are the ruins of a fine old hall belonging to the family of Hickman, and inhabited 1742 by ſir Neville Hickman, bart. ſince deceaſed.

Near Gainſborough Cromwell defeated General Cavendiſh, who was ſlain in a quagmire by Cromwell's lieutenant 1643. The lord Willoughby had before taken the town and the earl of Kingſton's houſe in it, and ſent the earl to Hull; in his paſſage to which over Humber he was ſhot by the royaliſts by miſtake.[d].

Laughton. Laughton on Trent was from the Conqueſt the ſeat of the Dalyſons, but ſold by them in the laſt century. They purchaſed Gretwell; and came to Malmington, both in this county, by the Pelhams. William Dalliſon, judge of the King's Bench in the reign of Mary, died 1558, and was buried in Lincoln cathedral, as was Dr. Roger Dalliſon, precentor of the ſaid church, and others of the family. Sir Charles Dalliſon was recorder of Lincoln when Charles I. came thither 1642, and defended Lincoln as colonel in the king's army two years after. Hibbalſtow and Manton, between Lincoln and Glanford bridge, ſtill belong to the family.

Marton. At Marton, a little below Gainsborough, a Roman road enters this county, coming from DANUM, Doncaſter, to AGELOCUM, Littleborough, and ſo to Lincoln, and is much frequented by packhorſes from the weſt of Yorkſhire to Lincoln, Lynn, and Norwich. A quarter of a mile from Marton may be ſeen three conſiderable pieces of this paved cauſeway[25].

"From Torkſey to Marton village about a mile "by plain ſandy ground. At the north end of this "village by the common way of Watheling ſtreet "to Dancaſter, and thereby on the other ſide of "Trent is trajectus to Littleborough village, wherby "it is commonly called Litleborough ferry. A mile "above that northward is Stratton on the ſtreet, a "good thoroughfare toward Doncaſter that is 14 or "15 miles off it[e]."

At Cameringham was an alien priory of Premonſtratenſians, cell to Blancland abbey in Normandy, t. Henry II. granted at the diſſolution to Robert Tirwhit[f]. Camerin ham.

"From Wrangton to Oxholme the water is called Idille r. "Idille, yet it is the very ſame water that Bryer is, "and of certainty Idille is the antient name. The "iſle of Axholme is ten miles in length by ſouth and Iſle of holme. "north, and in bredth ſix miles by eaſt and weſt. "From the weſt point of Bikers dike up along to "the great mere the ſoil by the water is fenny and "moriſh and full of carres; the reſidue is merely "high ground fertile of paſture and corn. The "principal wood of the iſle is at Bellegreve park by "Hepworth, and at Melwood park not far from Hep"worth. There is alſo a pretty wood at Croole, a "lordſhip a late longing to Selby monaſtery. In "the iſle be ſeven pariſh churches. Hepworth is "the beſt uplandiſh town for building of any in "the iſle. Axey is a bigge pariſh, but the houſes be "more ſparkelid than at Hepworth. There was a "caſtle at the ſouth ſide of the church garth of "Oxtun, whereof no piece now ſtandith, the dike "and the hill, wher the arx ſtood yet be ſeen; it "was ſometyme called Kinard. By Hepworth, and "joining to Bellegreve park, remaineth yet a great "part of the manor place of lord Mulbray of Ax"holme, chief owner until late days of the whole "iſle. By Milwood park ſide ſtood the right fair "monaſtery of the Carthuſians where one of the "Mulbrays, dukes of Norfolk, was buried in a tomb "of alabaſter[g]. Mr. Candiſch hath now turned the "monaſtery to a goodly manor place[h]." It was valued at £. 237.[i] Great quantities of large oaks, with acorns, fir, and other trees, are found at the depth of three feet under the ſurface of the moors in this iſland, ſome of which appeared to have been burnt and others cut down[k].

Epworth, now the beſt in the iſle, is a long ſtraggling town[26]. The living was long held by Samuel Weſley, father of the two celebrated apoſtles of Methodiſm. Epw

At Crowle on the Dun was found the body of a woman ſtanding upright in a peat moſs at Althorpe, and two antient ſhoes[l]. Crow

At Hurſt was a cell of black cannons to Noſtell college, York, valued at £. 5. 10s.[m] Hurſt

At Aukborough Dr. Stukeley[n] places the AQUIS of Ravennas. He found a Roman caſtrum 300 feet ſquare, now called Counteſs cloſe, from a counteſs of Warwick; the entrance on the north, the vallum and ditch very perfect, before the north entrance a ſpot called the Green, whereon is a circular labyrinth called Julian's bower. The Doctor imagined theſe mazes Roman work for military exerciſes or dances. Roman coins have been found here[o]. Auk

"There was many years ſince an old manor place Bu "at Weſt Butterwick on Trent ripe. It longid to a "gentleman called Bellethorp, to whom came alſo by "heirs general Burnham's lands, a gentleman of the [b] Dugd. Bar. II. 288. and MS. n. Le Neve.

[c] Godw. 461. Leland de ſcript. Tan. Bib. Brit.
[d] Ruſhworth, Part iii. vol. II. p. 278.
[25] G.
[e] Lel. I. 35.
[f] Tan. 272.
[g] This muſt be John Mowbray ſecond duke of Norfolk, grandſon of the firſt, who died 11 Henry VI. Dugd. Bar. I. 130.
[26] G.
[h] Lel. I. 40, 41.
[i] Tan. 286.
[k] Phil. Tranſ. 67. Dugd. on the fens.
[l] Spald. ſoc. min. Phil. Tranſ. N° 484. Gent. Mag. May, 1749, p. 203.
[m] Tan. 258.
[n] I. 91.
[o] See alſo Hutchins's Dorſet I. 101. n. x. and hereafter in Nottinghamſhire, p. 288.

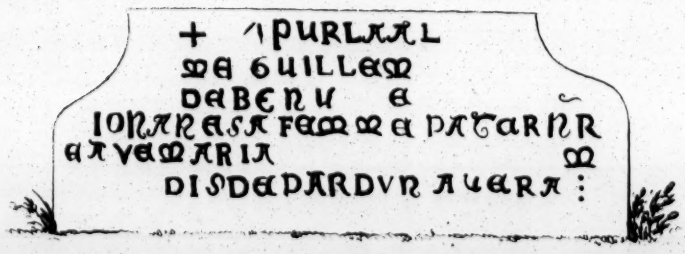
Ivy cross
II. p. 234.

Croyland
II. p. 236.

Ely
II. p. 141.

Found at S.r John Oldcastle's near the Barr

Edenham
II. p. 245.

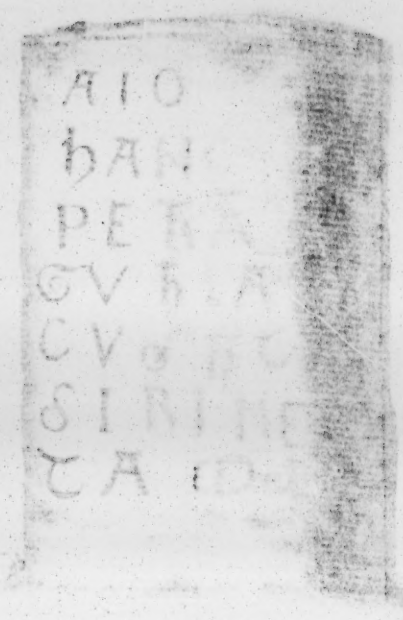


Drayton near Norwich.

Willughby on the Wold.
II. p. 283.

Fra.s Cary sculp.t

CROSSES.



1

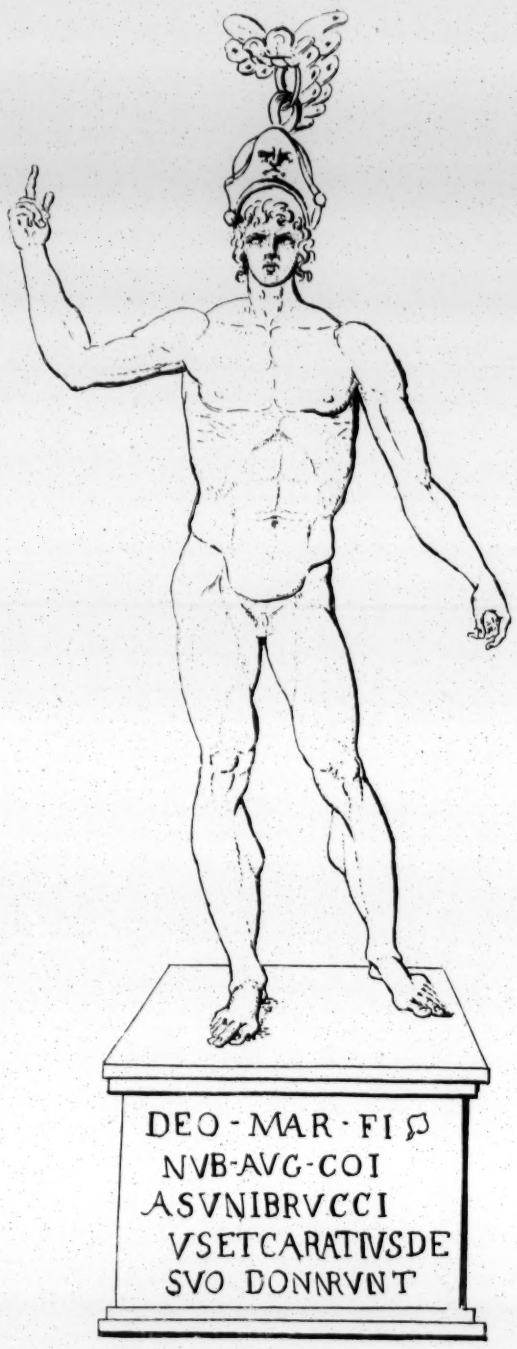


Fig. 1.

2

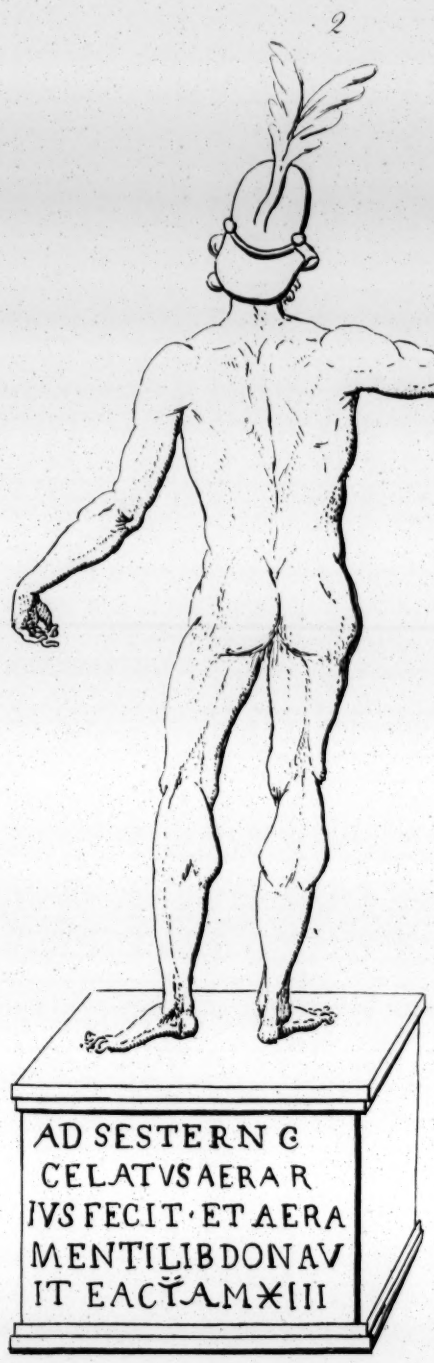

Fig. 3.

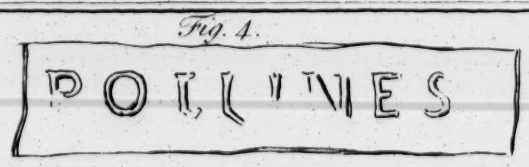
Fig. 4.



Basire fc.

That on the reverse,

Ad fellerem a.
erlatus arar
his fecere et Afra mi et liberto doce
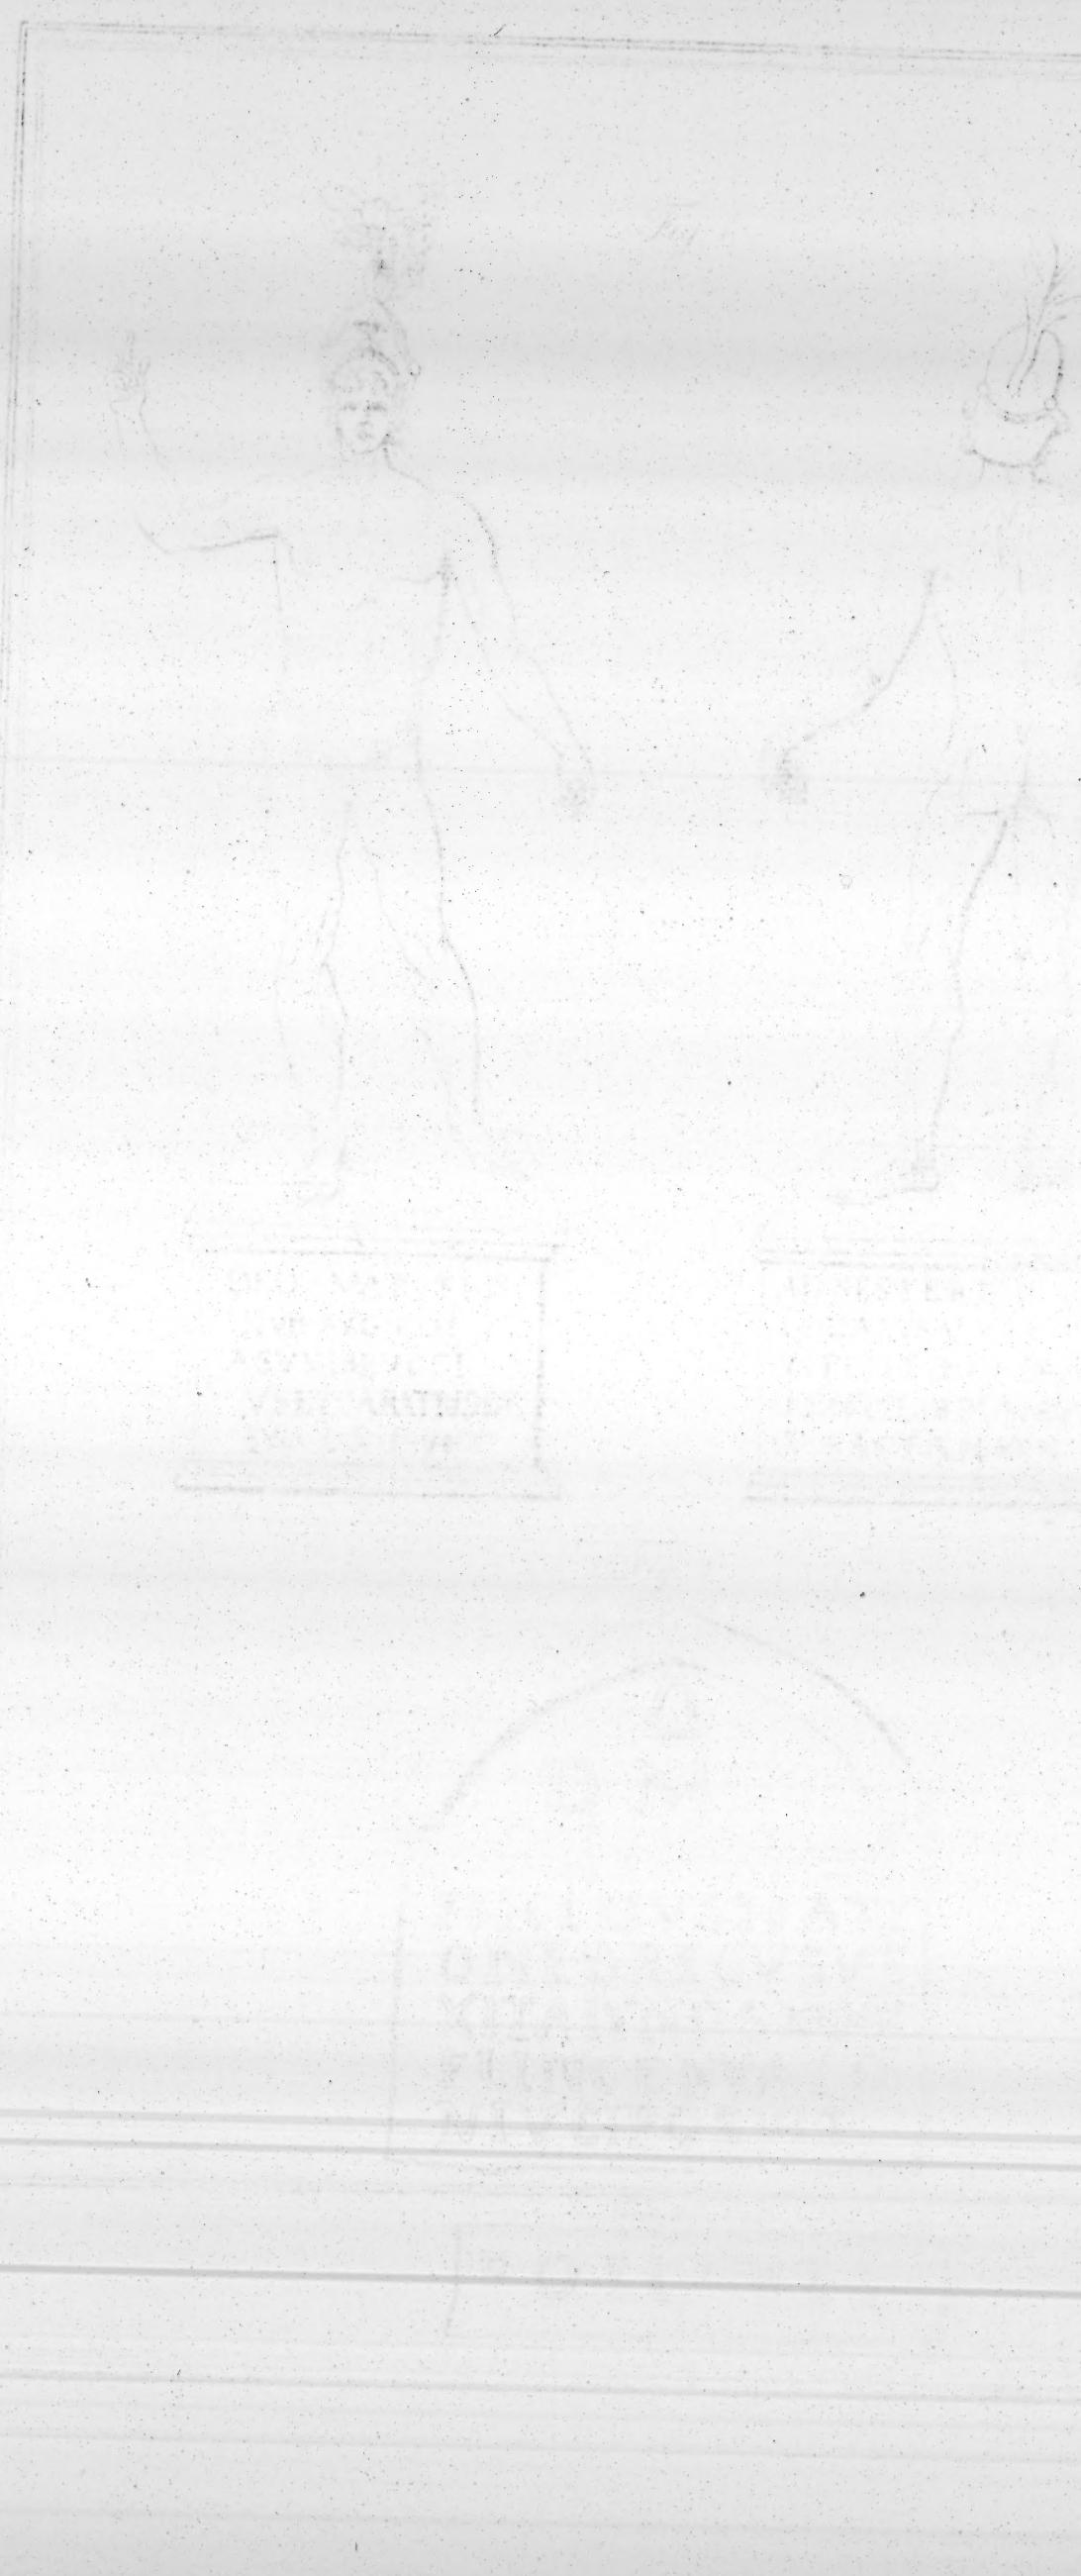
vir fatrath [illegible].

Q. if it should be read—Afer. I. or Afr. I. as in Gruter DLXII. 4. CCCLXXXIX. 5. CCCCLXV. 10. Dexter is not in Gruter, but he has Sextius, both as the name of a consul and a private person; the latter, Rufus, occurs on a Grecian inscription [illegible] DXXXIV. 2. and Curatus on an Attic, a one, DCXLIII. 1. and XXXVI. 1. nor, and Sabinus at Nifmes, DCCCLXXXI. 7. Mars is not [illegible] with the Martialis Lotharingus but he was the arverius of workmen who call the master Toledo by a name in Gruter. Gruter, [illegible] the [illegible] capellas too fybelas, as in Gruter I. 5. [illegible] pantheras ex argenti libris c. on a [illegible] deftal in Spain, also XXIV. 9. ex argentifodinis [illegible] the fame country. This is fomewhat like the [illegible] inpoted on Greek tombs on the vicinity of [illegible] places, but what it means here is not eafy to [illegible] [illegible] a clue near the north fide of [illegible] Ruined [illegible] Lincoln, not far to the weft of [illegible] gate, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]



"ſame iſle, and afterwards deſcended to Shefefeld, in "the which name it continued five or ſix deſcents; "for in the church yard of Oxton, half a mile from "Melwood park, I ſaw five tombs of the Sheffields. "Sheffield that was recorder of London and buried "in the Auſtin friars there, highly ſet up the name "of the Sheffields by marriage of the daughter and "ſole heir of one Delves, to whom beſides was de-"ſcended the lands of Gibthorp and Babington. "This recorder began to build ſtately at Butterwick, "as appears by a great tower of brick. The fenny "part of Axholm berith much gall, a low frutex "ſweet in burning. The upper part of the iſle hath "plentiful quarries of alabaſter commonly there "called Plaſter; but ſuch ſtones as I ſaw of it were "of no great thickneſs, and ſold for 12*d.* the load. "They lie in the ground like a ſmooth table, and lie "bedded one ſlate under another, and at the bottom "of the bed be rough ſtones to build withal [p]."

Mr. Johnſon had from Mr. Sympſon an indenture made between William de Cateby in this county, and Lucy his wife, and John de Cateby who had enfeoffed his ſon and daughter in the manor of Cateby, whereby they demiſed to him part of the manſion houſe, &c. to hold till he could conveniently clear the premiſes of his ſtock and perſonal eſtate. This deed, made t. Edward I. is cut through with the word Gyrographum, and has two ſmall round ſeals in green wax hanging on ſlips of the ſame velom drawn through the bottom: on one is written over the ſeal Willi, the impreſſion a man and woman's head (probably rhe parties), looking towards each other with a roſe at top and bottom, but the inſcription imperfect [q]. On the other label over the ſeal Lucia; the impreſſion an elderly man's head in a three cornered cap: the legend S. WILLAMI DE CATEBY. Amongſt the witneſſes, the firſt is Gilbert de Thorneton, who, within four years after, was conſtituted the king's atorney general [r], and proſecuted for the king in the Quo warranto here brought before John Vaux, and other juſtices itinerant in that reign [s].

At Aukley, on the ſouth edge of Axholme, but chiefly in Yorkſhire, was found 1746 a fine urn with aſhes and coins of Conſtantine in it, and 20 more under it [t]. In this manor grows plentifully that beautiful aromatic plant called Gall, or by the common people Engliſh tea.

Henry earl of Lincoln was ſucceeded in 1616 by his ſon Thomas, who died 1618, and was buried in the chancel at Tateſhall. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Theophilus [u], and he, 1667, by his grandſon Edward. He dying 1692 without iſſue, was ſucceeded by Francis ſon of his great grandfather Thomas, younger brother Edward, and he, 1693, by his ſon Henry, who died 1723. His ſucceſſor was his ſon George, who died 1730, a minor, and was ſucceeded by his brother Henry, 9th and preſent earl. He ſucceeded on the death of his uncle the late duke of Newcaſtle to the title of duke of Newcaſtle under Line conferred on the late duke by patent 29 George II.

Fig. 1. 2. pl. IX*. repreſent the two ſides of a ſmall bronze lar or figure of Mars, found ſome little time before the year 1774 in cleanſing the foſs-dike between Lincoln and the Trent, in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Elliſon of Thorn in Yorkſhire, and ſhewn to the Society of Antiquaries by Mr. Stuart, 1774. The inſcription on the face ſide was read by Mr. Bowyer:

Deo Marti et
Numinibus Auguſtis cohortis
Aſyri Brucc
ius & Caratius de ſuo donarunt or donaverunt.

That on the reverſe,

Ad ſeſtertia c.
celatus ærar
ius feceit et Afra
menti liberto dona
vit factam *111.

Q. if it ſhould be read coh. Aſtur. I. or Aſtyr. I. as in Gruter DLXII. 4. CCCCXXXIX. 5. CCCCLXV. 10. Bruccius is not in Gruter, but he has Bruttius, both as the name of a conſul and a private perſon; the latter, Broccius, occurs on a German inſcription Gruter XLI. 1. DXXXIV. 2. and Caratius on an African one, DCXLIII. 1. and XXXVI. not. and another at Niſmes, DCCCLXXXI. 7. Mars is no where elſe joined with the Numina Auguſtorum. Celatus may be the name of the ærarius, or workman, who caſt the image. Celadus is a name in Gruter. Quære, if the firſt line expreſſes 100 ſeſterces, as in Gruter, I. 5. "ſignum panthei ex argenti libris c." on a pedeſtal in Spain; alſo XXIV. 9. ex argenti libris L. in the ſame country. *111. is ſomewhat like the fines impoſed on Greek tombs on the violators of ſuch places; but what it means here is not eaſy to ſay.

In levelling a cloſe near the north ſide of the old Roman wall at Lincoln, not far to the weſt of Newport gate, 1785, on the ſouth or inſide of the wall about 10 or 12 feet from it, and about 4 feet or more under ground, was found an old ſepulchral ſtone, of the materials of the country, about 5 feet long and 2 broad, lying flat, though apparently formed to ſtand upright. See fig. 4. No urn, or remains of any kind were found near it. The inſcription is in an excavated ſurface, ſurrounded by a frame or moulding of the thickneſs of the ſtone, and about 8 inches wide. The upper part of the ſtone is formed into a pediment, with the like moulding round it, and contains the letters D. M. ſeparated from the lower half by another moulding. The letters are 2 inches high. The inſcription is to be read,

Dis Manibus
F. L. Helius nati
one Grecus vi
xit annos XXXX
F. L. Ingenua co
njugi poſuit.

Helius is a common name in Gruter, and generally in ſepulchral monuments, CXXVII. L. Gallus Helius, CXXIX. 14. M. Helius, CCXLI. CCLXXXVI. 4 not. DLXXIX. 10. DCXIV. 11. DCLXXI. 10. DCLXXXV. 5. DCCXIV. 3. DCCLV. 6. DCCLXXXVIII. 5. DCCCXL. 8. CMII. 7. CMXLVIII. 7.

The expreſſion natione Grecus occurs but once in Gruter DCLX. 5.

Fig. 3. is on the hollow moulding of a ſtone found on the eaſt ſide of the old Roman wall below the hill at Lincoln, on making the new road 1785, lying near a number of large ſtones, in a ſituation which ſeems to imply that they had been thrown down from a conſiderable building. They were, I think, 3 or 4 feet below the ſurf of the ground; ſome of them had mouldings not unlike that of the ſepulchral ſtone, but on none of them could be diſcovered any inſcription or letters. Theſe letters are 3 inches ¼ long; part of the ſtone at the beginning about 4 inches in length and the ſame in breadth was chipped off at the beginning of the line, large enough to have contained the letter A. Had the word been APOLLINI, the S might have been ſuppoſed to have begun another word, as Sacrum, and the ſtones to have belonged to a temple of Apollo.

[p] Lel. I. 41, 42. [q] Theſe ſeals were probably antique gems. Such an one with male and female heads regardant and a ſtar [r] Plac. de Quo Warr. Com. Banc. 13 E. I. Dugd. Orig. Jud. fol. 29.
[s] Roll of Waltham abbey. A. S. plates, Tab. C. [t] Ib. [u] Dugd. Bar. I. 535.
[w] Spalding Society's minutes.

Rare Plants found in Lincolnſhire.

Anemone pulſatilla. Paſque-flower; on Southrop common and elſewhere.

Anthyllis vulneraria. Kidney-vetch or Ladies finger; in chalky and limeſtone meadows and paſtures: at Grantham.

Artemiſia cæruleſcens. Bluiſh Mugwort; on ſea ſhores: near Boſton.

Atriplex pedunculata. Stalked Sea Orach; in the ſalt marſh juſt under the church-yard rails at Skirbeck near Boſton.

Bufonia tenuifolia. Baſtard Chickweed; on the ſea ſhore at Boſton.

Bupleurum tenuiſſimum. The Leaſt Hare's-ear; on the Withams bank juſt below the church-yard Skirbeck near Boſton.

Campanula glomerata. Leſſer Throat-wort or Canterbury bells; in hilly and chalky paſtures: at Grantham and elſewhere.

Carum carvi. Caraways; in Swafield dale ſeven miles ſouth of Grantham, and on the foreland of the new cut near Boſton.

Caucalis daucoides. Fine-leaved Baſtard Parſley; amongſt the winter corn at Sleaford.

——— latifolia. Purple-flowered great Baſtard Parſley; amongſt the corn in this county, eſpecially about Sleaford and Ancaſter.

Ceraſtium alpinum. Mountain Mouſe-ear Chickweed; on the bank ſide on the left hand of the road leading from the bowling-green at Grantham to Manthorp.

——— arvenſe. Long-leaved rough Chickweed; upon the heaths, plentifully.

Cicuta viroſa. Long-leaved Water Hemlock; by the ſides of the ditches in the water in the Eaſt fen.

Chlora perfoliata. Yellow Centaury; in Belton park at Grantham.

Cineraria paluſtris. Marſh Fleabane; in muddy places in the Eaſt fen.

Ciſtus Helianthemum. Dwarf Ciſtus, or Little Sunflower; in hilly meadows and paſtures, eſpecially of a lime-ſtone ſoil: at Grantham.

Dianthus Glaucus. Mountain Pink; on Lincoln heath.

Galeopſis tetrahit δ. A variety of Hemp-leaved Dead Nettle; amongſt corn and at the ſides of fields: at Grantham.

Gentiana Pneumonanthe. Calathian Violet; in meadows: at Tatteſall and in heathy paſtures near the wood at Tomby.

Geranium ſanguineum. Bloody Crane's-bill; on Lincoln heath and in the woods at Broughton near Brig.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cudweed or Cat's-foot; on Bernak heath.

Hedyſarum Onobrychis. St. Foin or Cock's-head; in chalky meadows and paſtures: at Grantham.

Hippophäe rhamnoides. Sallow-thorn or Sea Buckthorn; on the ſea banks at Linſey.

Hydnum repandum. Smooth Hydnum; on willows at Thorney.

Lathyrus paluſtris. Marſh Chickling-vetch; in the drier parts of the Eaſt fen.

Lithoſpermum arvenſe. Baſtard Alkanet; amongſt the corn about Sleaford and Grantham, abundantly.

Lycoperdon ſtellatum. Star Puff-ball; at Tomby on the bank of a ſandy lane leading to Tatteſall.

Mentha ſylveſtris. Long-leaved Horſe-Mint; in marſhy and watry places; at Burwelbec, plentifully.

Marrubium vulgare. White Horehound; on rubbiſh and by way-ſides: at Grantham.

Nepeta Cataria. Nep, or Cat-Mint; in meadows and hedges in a lime-ſtone ſoil: about Grantham.

Oenanthe pimpinelloides. Pimpernel Drop-wort; in ditches and marſhy places at Quaplod, not far from Spalding.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moon-wort; on Lincoln heath.

Polygonum viviparum. Small Biſtort, or Snake-weed; on Lincoln heath.

Poterium Sanguiſorba. Burnet; on the heaths about Grantham, Ancaſter, and Sleaford.

Reſeda lutea. Baſe Rocket; in corn fields, meadows, and paſtures, eſpecially of a limeſtone ſoil; at Ancaſter.

Rubus ſaxatilis. Stone Bramble; in the woods at Broughton near Brig.

Rumex maritimus. Golden Dock; in the marſhes at Crowland.

Salſola Kali. Prickly Glaſs-wort; on ſea ſhores: at Maplethorp.

Sanguiſorba officinalis. Wild Burnet, in damp meadows and paſtures: at Grantham.

Selinum paluſtre. Marſh Selinum; on the drier parts of the Eaſt fen.

Sibthorpia Europea. Baſtard Money-wort; in ſome meadows about Honnington.

Spiræa Filipendula. Drop-wort; in hilly meadows and paſtures of a chalky ſoil: at Grantham.

Stachys Germanica. Baſe Harehound; in hedges between Grantham and Colſterworth.

Statice Armeria. Thrift or Sea Gilly-flower; in meadows; about Grantham and Sleaford, and upon a heath not far from Belvoir caſtle.

——— reticulata. Matted Thrift, or Sea-Lavender; in the ſalt marſh between the bathing houſe and the ſea at Freeſton.

Stratiotes Aloides. Water Aloe, or Freſh Water Soldier: in ſhallow ditches in the Eaſt fen.

Thymus Acinos. Wild Baſil; on dry hills and in chalky and gravelly places at Grantham, and near Belvoir caſtle.

Trifolium fragiferum. Strawberry Trefoil; in damp meadows and paſtures: at Grantham.

——— ochroleucum. Yellow flowered Trefoil; in chalky meadows and paſtures: near Stamford.

Ulva incraſſata. Thick Laver; in ponds and ditches about Spalding.

ch; in the t; amongſt ham, abun-

at Tomby on Tatteſall.
e-Mint; in welbec, plen-

; on rubbiſh

meadows and Grantham.
rop-wort; in plod, not far incoln heath.

t, or Snake-

e heaths about

elds, meadows, ſtone ſcil; at the woods at the marſhes at ſea ſhores: at

, in damp mea-
.

; on the drier

-wort; in ſome

hilly meadows at Grantham.
nd; in hedges
orth.
y-flower; in mealeaford, and upon ſtle.
or Sea-Lavender;
bathing houſe and

or Freſh Water
the Eaſt fen.
dry hills and in
at Grantham, and

Trefoil; in damp
antham.
owered Trefoil; in
: near Stamford.
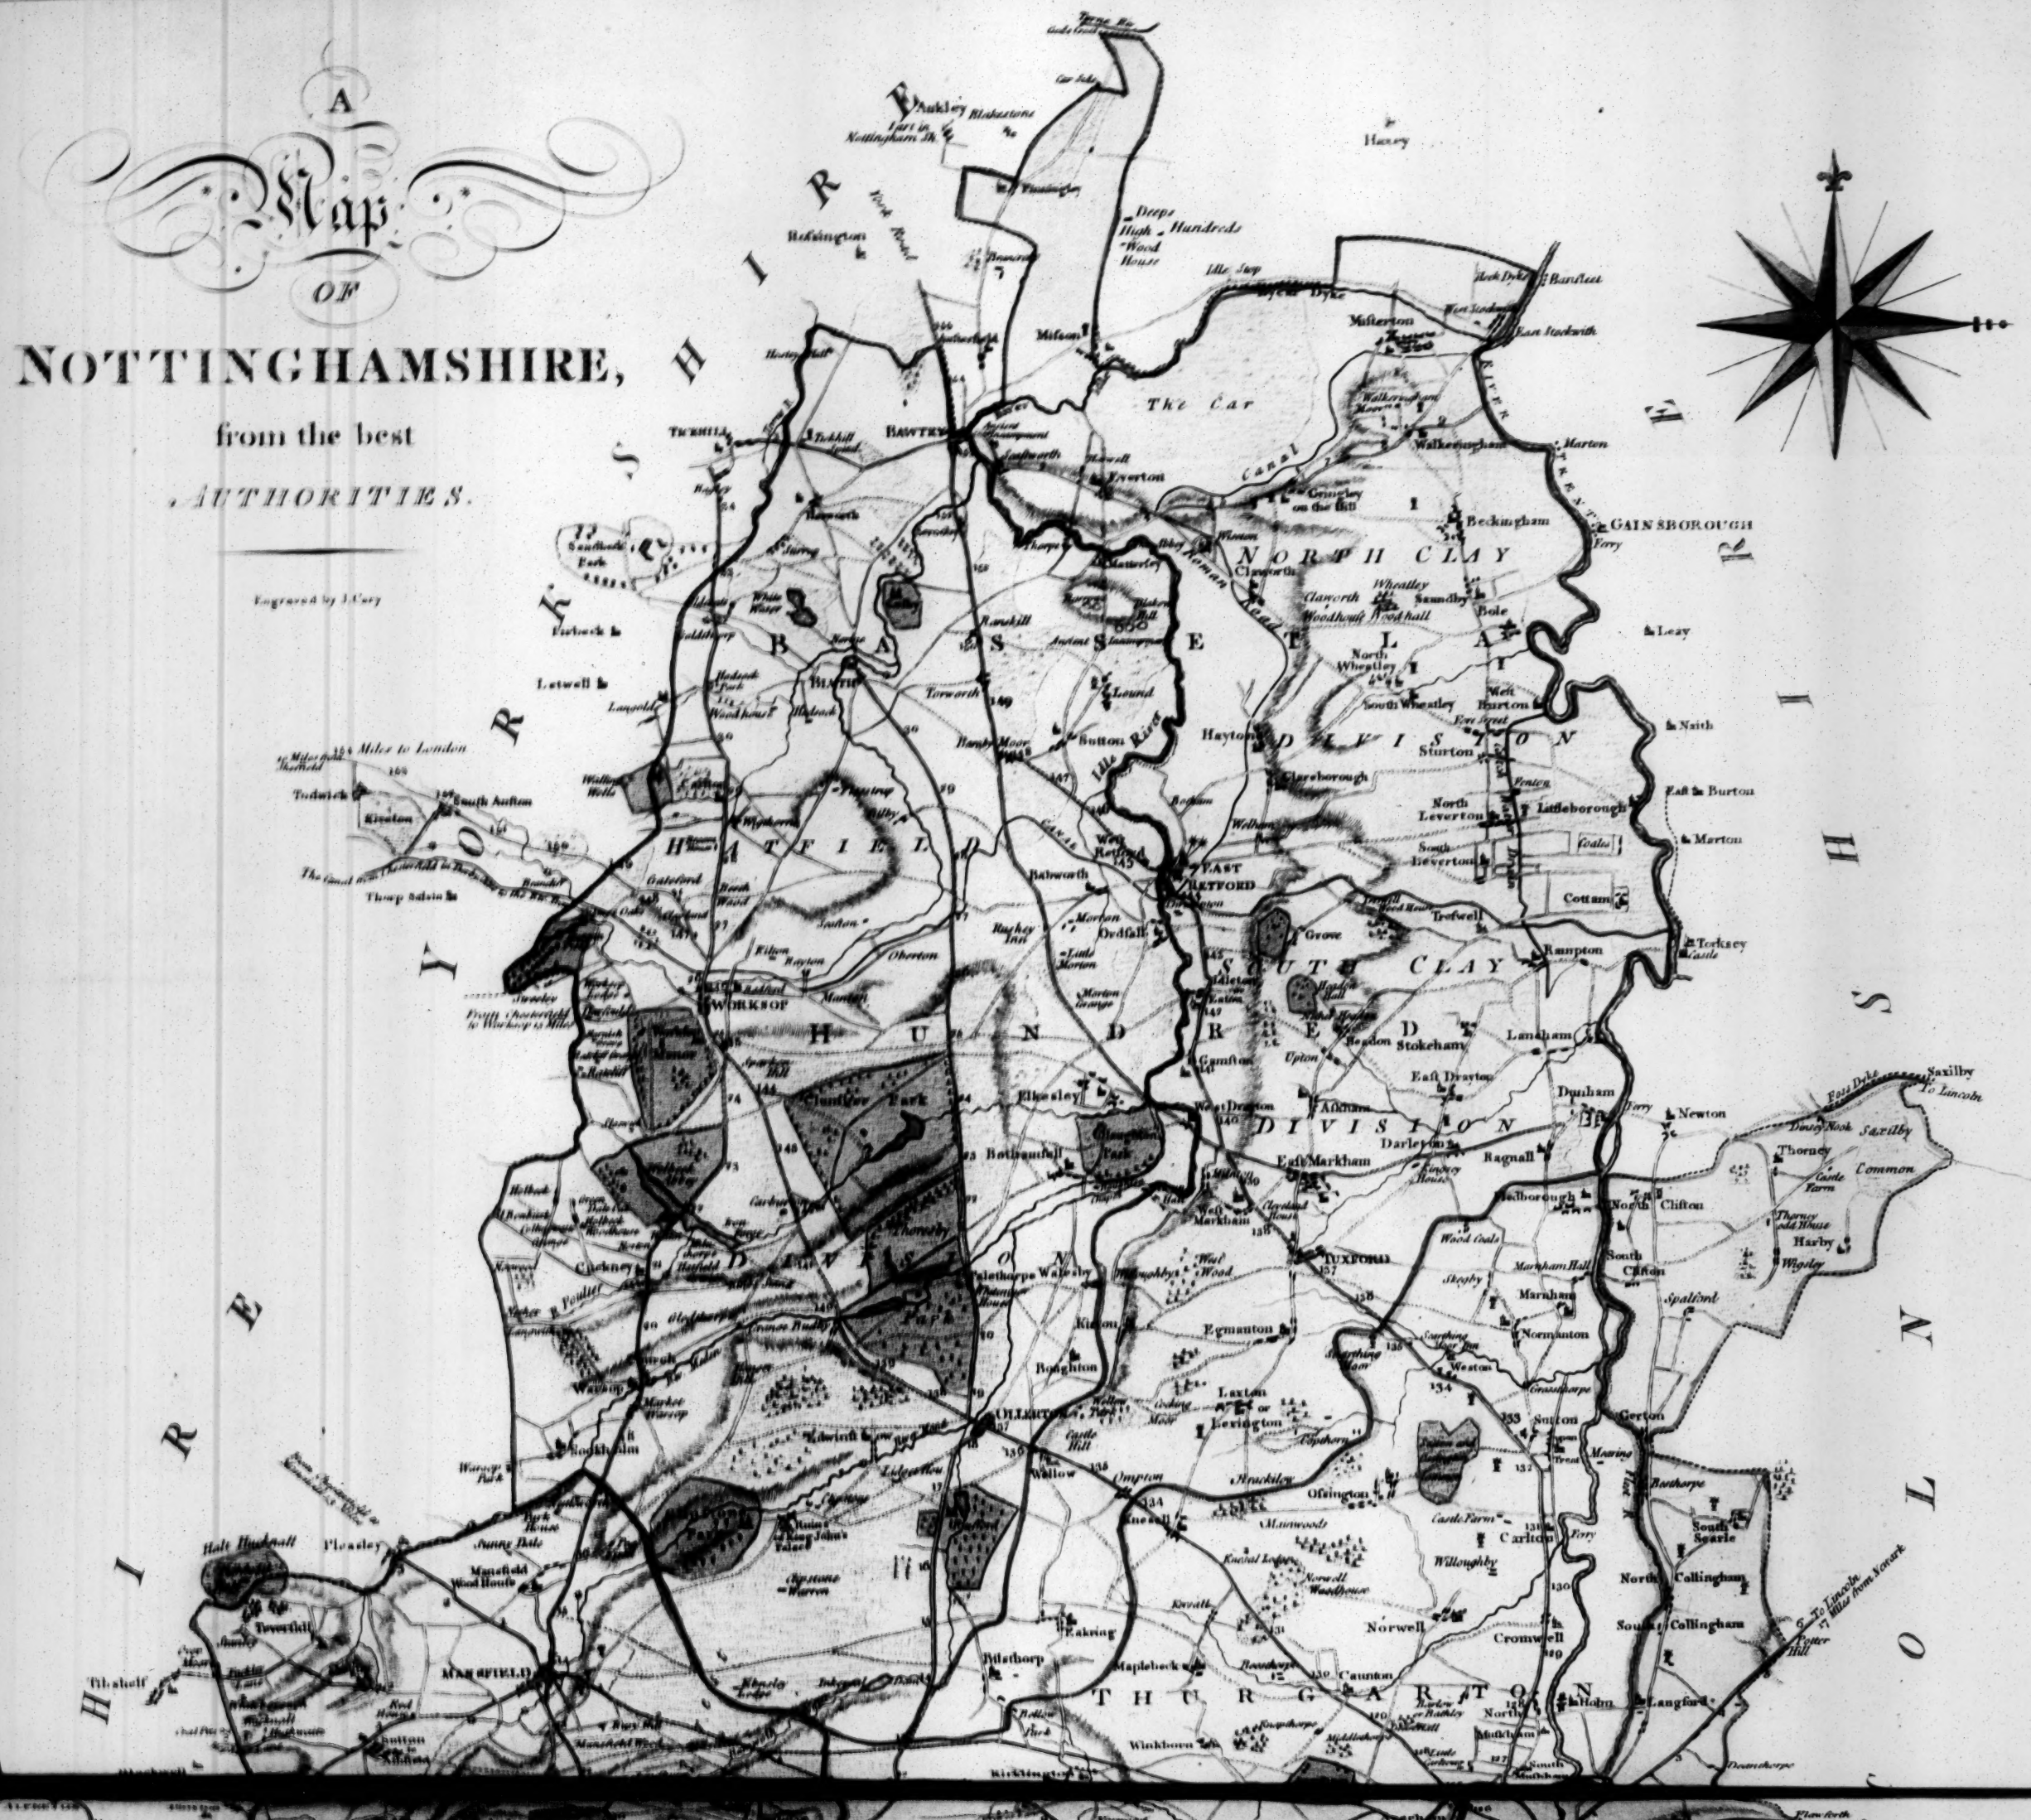
ponds and ditches

NOT-

A Map OF NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, from the best AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary



Miles to London
Retford
EAST RETFORD
WORKSOP
MANSFIELD
NEWARK
Tuxford
Southwell
Blyth
Tickhill
Bawtry
Misterton
Gainsborough
Beckingham
Leasy
Nuth
Burton
Marton
Torksey
Saxilby
Lincoln
Newton
Thorney
Harby
Wigsley
North Clifton
South Clifton
Spalford
Sutton
Carlton
Norwell
Cromwell
Caunton
Langford
Collingham
Coddington
Flowerth
Upton
Kirklington
Winkburn
Maplebeck
Bilsthorpe
Eakring
Kelham
Averham
Staunton
Orston
Hawksworth
Bingham
Radcliffe
Tythby
Cotgrave
Plumtree
Keyworth
Normanton
Egmanton
Laxton
Ossington
Markham
Ragnall
Darlton
Stokeham
Sturton
Littleborough
Cottam
Rampton
Lanham
Dunham
Grimsby
Clarworth
Wheatley
Bole
Scrooby
Bircotes
Blyth
Ranby
Hodsock
Torworth
Lound
Sutton
Hayton
Barnby Moor
Ordsall
Retford
Babworth
Grove
Tiln
Gamston
Eaton
Bevercotes
Elkesley
Bothamsall
Walesby
Kirton
Boughton
Ompton
Eakring
Maplebeck
Caunton
Norwell
Cromwell
Willoughby
Carlton
Sutton
Normanton
Markham
Darlton
Ragnall
Stokeham
Sturton
Littleborough
Cottam
Rampton
Lanham
Dunham
Newton
Saxilby
Thorney
Harby
Wigsley
North Clifton
South Clifton
Spalford
Gerton
Sutton
Scarle
North Collingham
South Collingham
Langford
Coddington
Upton
Kirklington
Winkburn
Bilsthorpe
Eakring
Kelham
Averham
Staunton
Orston
Hawksworth
Bingham
Radcliffe
Tythby
Cotgrave
Plumtree
Keyworth
Normanton
Egmanton
Laxton
Ossington
Markham
Ragnall
Darlton
Stokeham
Sturton
Littleborough
Cottam
Rampton
Lanham
Dunham
Grimsby
Clarworth
Wheatley
Bole
Scrooby
Bircotes
Blyth
Ranby
Hodsock
Torworth
Lound
Sutton
Hayton
Barnby Moor
Ordsall
Retford
Babworth
Grove
Tiln
Gamston
Eaton
Bevercotes
Elkesley
Bothamsall
Walesby
Kirton
Boughton
Ompton
Eakring
Maplebeck
Caunton
Norwell
Cromwell
Willoughby
Carlton
Sutton
Normanton
Markham
Ragnall
Darlton

L I N C O L N S H I R E
D E R B Y
H U N T I N G D O N S H I R E
N O R T H A M P T O N S H I R E
R U T L A N D
Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.
0 1 2 3 4 5 6
1° Longitude 55 West from 50 London
50
55 60
65
Stamford
Grantham
Newark
Retford
Worksop
Mansfield
Nottingham
Derby
Leicester
Oakham
Uppingham
Peterborough
Stamford
Grantham
Sleaford
Boston
Spalding
Lincoln
Gainsborough
Market Rasen
Louth
Horncastle
Alford
Spilsby
Skegness
Wainfleet
Gainsborough
Epworth
Crowland
Thorney
Wisbech
Ely
Cambridge
Huntingdon
St Ives
St Neots
Bedford
Kimbolton
Higham Ferrers
Wellingborough
Kettering
Thrapston
Oundle
Peterborough
Market Deeping
Bourn
Sleaford
Folkingham
Bourn
Corby
Rockingham
Uppingham
Melton Mowbray
Grantham
Newark
Southwell
Mansfield
Worksop
Retford
Gainsborough
Bawtry
Doncaster
Pontefract
Wakefield
Barnsley
Sheffield
Rotherham
Chesterfield
Matlock
Derby
Ashbourne
Burton
Tutbury
Uttoxeter
Stafford
Lichfield
Tamworth
Atherstone
Nuneaton
Coventry
Rugby
Daventry
Towcester
Northampton
Wellingborough
Kettering
Thrapston
Oundle
Peterborough
Stamford

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

TO the county of Lincoln on the weſt adjoins the much ſmaller county of NOTTINGHAM, Saxon Snottenȝahamȝcyne[a], by us called Nottinghamſhire, bounded on the north by Yorkſhire, on the weſt by Derbyſhire and partly by Yorkſhire, on the ſouth by Leiceſterſhire. The noble river Trent and the rivulets that run into it fertilize the ſouth and eaſt parts. The weſt is entirely occupied by the extenſive foreſt of Shirwood. This part, from its ſandy ſoil, the inhabitants call the Sand; the other, from its clayey ſoil, the Clay, and divide their county into theſe two parts.

The Trent, Saxon Tȝeonta (which ſome inferior Antiquaries have called in Latin Triginta, from its affinity to the French word of like import), after a long courſe[b], enters this county firſt at Steanford, where, I am told, are many remains of antiquity, and Roman coins are found: then paſſing Clifton, which gives reſidence and name to the antient family of the Cliftons[c], it receives the little river Lin from the weſt, which riſing near Newſted, q. d. New Place, where formerly king Henry II. founded a ſmall monaſtery, now a houſe of the antient family of the Byrons, deſcended from Radulphus de Byron in the early Norman times a man of great conſequence in this county and Lancaſhire, paſſes near Wollaton, where, in our time, ſir Francis Willoughby, at great expence, in a fooliſh diſplay of his wealth, built a magnificent and moſt elegant houſe with a fine proſpect. It then waſhes Lenton, once famous for the abbey founded in honour of the Holy Trinity by William Peverell baſtard ſon of king William the Conqueror, now only for its well frequented fair. On the oppoſite bank almoſt at the conflux of the Lin and Trent on the ſide of a hill ſtands the chief town Nottingham, which gives name to the county, and is ſoftened from the Saxon Snottenȝa-ȝam, a name given it on account of the ſubterraneous caverns and paſſages hollowed out in old time for houſes and retreats under thoſe craggy rocks on the ſouth ſide next the little river Lin. Hence Aſſerius[d] renders this Saxon name Snottenȝ-ȝaham in Latin Speluncarum domus, the houſe of caverns, and in Britiſh Tui ogo banc[e], which ſignifies the ſame. The town is pleaſant by ſituation, having ſpacious meads on one ſide next the river, on the other gentle hills, and well furniſhed with all the neceſſaries of life. On one hand Shirwood ſupplies it with wood for firing (though many prefer pit coal notwithſtanding its offenſive ſmell), on the other the Trent with fiſh in abundance. Whence that barbarous verſe is applied to it:

Limpida ſylva focum, Triginta dat mihi piſcem.

Fire the bright foreſt yields, Triginta fiſh.

The extent of its buildings, three handſome churches, a very handſome market place, and a ſtrong caſtle, give it a very beautiful appearance. This caſtle riſes on a bold rock on the weſt ſide of the town, where is ſuppoſed to have been antiently a fort which the Danes held out againſt Ethered and Alfred, till they were obliged to raiſe the ſiege without ſucceſs, and march off. For when the Danes had made themſelves maſters of this place, "Burthed, king of Mercia (as 868.
Aſſer informs us[f],) "and the Mercians, ſent meſ-
"ſengers to Ethered king of the Weſt Saxons, and "his brother Alfred, humbly intreating them to "come to their aſſiſtance, and give battle with them "to the aforeſaid army. This requeſt was readily "complied with. For the brothers, agreeable to "their promiſe, preſently gathered a prodigious army
"from all quarters, came to Mercia, and advanced
"to Snottenga-ham unanimouſly deſirous of battle.
"The Pagans ſecure in the caſtle declining an en"gagement and the Chriſtians not having means to "force the wall, a peace was made between the "Mercians and the Pagans, and the two brothers
"returned home with their troops." Afterwards Edward the elder built the oppoſite town of Bridgesford, and incloſed the town with walls, which are nearly ruined, though ſome remains are ſtill to be ſeen on the weſt ſide, and a few years after in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, as appears in Domeſday book[g], here were "reckoned 173 burgeſſes, and out "of two mints 40 ſhillings were paid to the king.
"The water of Trent the Foſs and the road to York
"were guarded, that if any perſon hindered the paſ-
"ſage of the ſhips, he ſhould be fined £.4."

The caſtle as it now appears is conſiderable both for its builder and prodigious work. William the Norman built it to bridle the Engliſh, and "it was ſo ſtrong by nature and art (according to William Newburgh[h]) that if properly defended it ſeemed as if nothing but famine could force it." Afterwards Edward IV. was at great expence to repair and embelliſh it with handſome buildings, to which Richard III. made additions*. Nor did it in the ſeveral revolutions of time undergo the common fate of great caſtles; having never been taken by ſtorm. It was once in vain beſieged by Henry of Anjou, at which time the garriſon burnt down the adjoining houſes. It was once alſo ſurpriſed in the barons' war by Robert earl Ferrars, who ſtripped the citizens of their goods. The people of the caſtle tell 1175.
many ſtories of David, king of Scots, who was confined here, and of Roger Mortimer earl of March ſurprized here by a ſubterraneous paſſage, who, for preferring Scotch money to his duty to his country, and other crimes, which his great ſpirit meditated, afterwards loſt his life on the gallows. Certain it is, that in the firſt court of the caſtle we deſcend with

* Rog. Hoveden, p. 307.

[a] Snotingahamȝcyne. Sax. Chron. 147. 171.
[b] And after it has received into its channel the river Soare running hither from the county of Leiceſter. Holland.
[c] Much enriched by one of the heirs of Creſſy. Id.
[d] Ed. Wiſe, p. 19.
[e] Tigguocobauc. Aſſer. Flor. Worc. A. D. 890, p. 30. Dui ogo vriic or Duiogoboco. Baxter.
[f] ubi ſup. Flor. ubi ſup.
[g] fol. 28c. Mr. Camden has omitted part of the laſt clauſe, which adds, "& ſiquis araverit vel foſſam fecerit in via regis infra duas perticatas emendare habetur per VIII libras." No mention of 4*ſ.*
[h] IV. c. 48.

lights down many ſteps into a ſubterraneous vault and arched rooms cut in the rock itſelf; on the walls of which are carved Chriſt's Paſſion and other things, by the hand, as they pretend, of David, king of Scots, who was there impriſoned. In the upper part of the caſtle, which riſes high on the rock, we came by many ſteps into another ſubterraneous cavern called Mortimer's hole, from Roger Mortimer's concealing himſelf in it when his conſcience gave him the alarm. This town ſtands in latitude 53°, longitude 22° 14″.

Mortimer's hole.

Holme Pierpoint.

The Trent runs hence gently by Holme, called Holme Pierpoint from its lords, whoſe family is antient and noble, and from which Robert de Petræ Ponte or Pierpount, was ſummoned to parliament among the barons of the realm by Edward III. to Shelford.

Shelford, the ſeat of the famous knightly family of the Stanhopes, whoſe ſplendor is great in theſe parts, and their name conſiderable[i]. It was antiently the barony of Ralph Hanſeline, by whoſe daughters it came to the Bardolphs and Everinghams. Thence it rolls its waters to Stoke. Battle of Stoke 1487.

Stoke, a very ſmall village, but remarkable for no ſmall ſlaughter, where John De la pole, earl of Lincoln, who was deſigned heir to the crown by Richard III. finding his way cut off by the claims of Henry VII. rebelliouſly here declared himſelf for a pretender againſt the lawful king, and fell bravely with his men. Not far off is Southwell.

Southwell, a collegiate church of prebends, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, not indeed ſplendid, but ſtrong, antient and famous. Paulinus, firſt archbiſhop of York, is ſaid to have founded it when he baptized the inhabitants of this country in the Trent. From that time the archbiſhops of York have had here a large palace and three parks adjoining well ſtocked with deer. This I the rather believe to be the city which Bede[k] calls Tio-vul-Fingaceſter, as what he relates of Paulinus' baptizing in the Trent near Tio vul-Fingaceſter the hiſtory of this church conſtantly refers to this place. From thence the little river Snite[l] falls into the Trent from the eaſt, which at its beginning waters

Langer. Wiverton.

Langer, famous for its lords the Tibetots or Tiptofts, afterwards earls of Worceſter, and Wiverton, which from Heriz a man antiently famous in theſe parts came by the Bretts and Caltofts to the Chaworths or de Cadurcis. Cahors in Quercy.

Chaworths, who derive their name from Cahors in France, and their deſcent from the lords of Walchervill.

The Trent now divides and waſhes the conſiderable town of Newark.

Newark, q. d. New work, from the new caſtle, which "ſhewey building in a moſt florid "ſtyle[m]," as Henry of Huntingdon calls it, was erected by Alexander that munificent biſhop of Lincoln, who, to borrow the words of an antient hiſtorian[n], being of a generous ſpirit built this and another caſtle at a vaſt expence; and becauſe ſuch kind of buildings ſeemed ill fitting the character of a biſhop, to obviate the reflection of ſuch works, and as it were wipe off the ſtain, he built as many monaſteries[o], and filled them with religious ſocieties." But this fooliſh profuſeneſs in a military biſhop brought with it its own puniſhment. For king Stephen, who wanted nothing ſo much to ſtrengthen his declining power as to get the ſtrongeſt fortifications in the kingdom into his hands, obliged this prelate by hunger and impriſonment to give up to him this and his other caſtle at Sleford. Nothing elſe remarkable happened here except that king John at this place cloſed the perplexed courſe of a troubleſome life. The river collecting itſelf runs from hence due north among a number of villages, and has nothing remarkable on its banks till it comes to Littleborough, a ſmall town ſtrictly anſwering to its name; where as the moſt uſual ferry is at preſent ſo it was formerly that famous ſtation or manſion mentioned more than once by Antoninus, and called in different copies AGELOCUM and SEGELOCUM[p]. This I had before ſought for in this neighbourhood without ſucceſs, but am now clear I have found it, both by its ſituation on the military way, and becauſe an adjoining field ſhews evident traces of walls, and daily in ploughing yields innumerable coins of Roman emperors, which being often turned up by the hogs, are called Swines Pennies by the country people, who, according to their notions, imagine their forefathers had built a ſtone wall round that field to keep off the inundations in winter.

In the weſt part of the county called the Sand, where the little river Erwaſh makes its way to the Trent, Strelley, antiently Strellegh, ſhews itſelf, which gave name and reſidence to the knightly family of the Strellies (commonly called Sturley), one of the oldeſt and moſt famous in the county. More inland is Shirewood, which ſome render the clear, others the famous, foreſt[q], antiently thick ſet with trees, whoſe entangled branches were ſo twiſted together that they hardly left room for a ſingle perſon to paſs. At preſent it is much thinner, but ſtill breeds an infinite number of deer and ſtags with lofty antlers, and has ſome towns, among which Mansfield claims the pre-eminence, a market town of good reſort, whoſe name ſome[r] bring in to confirm the claim of the German family of Mansfield to antiquity, aſſerting that the firſt earl of Mansfield, whom they fetch from hence, was one of king Arthur's Round Table. Our kings uſed to repair hither for the pleaſure of the chace, and to cite the words of an old inquiſition, "Henry Fauconberge held the manor of Cukeney in this county in ſerjeantry by the ſervice of ſhoeing the king's palfrey when the king came to Mansfield." From this foreſt flow many rivulets, which make towards the Trent; of theſe the principal is the Idle, at which near Idleton A. D. 616, the fortune of Ethered the moſt potent king of Northumberland received the firſt check. For having been very ſucceſsful in all his former battles he fell here by a reverſe of fortune, being defeated by Redwald king of the Eaſt Angles[s], who in his ſtead ſet up as king of Northumberland Edwin who had been driven out of his anceſtors' kingdom. This little river runs down not far from Markham a ſmall village, but which gave name to the family of the Markhams, once very conſiderable for antiquity[t] and valour, whoſe greateſt glory was J. Markham, who preſided in the ſupreme court of England with ſo much equity (for which it is worth the

[i] Since they matched with an heir of Mallovel. Holland.

[k] II. 16. and Smith's note.

[l] which Leland I. 113. ſeems to call Mite brook, afterwards V. 93. "Snite a brokelet that divideth Nottinghamſhire from Leiceſterſhire."

[m] vernantiſſimum florida conſtructione caſtellum. VII. p 223.

[n] G. Neubrig. l. 6. Malmeſbury, p. 102, ſays, he gave out that he built it for the ſecurity and ſplendor of the biſhop's, ad tutamen & dignitatem epiſcopis.

[o] Haverholm, Tame, and Dorcheſter. Godwin. Gale's MS. ap. Richardſon adds Sempringham, but this was only founded under his government.

[p] As Egeſta, Segeſta. Gale, MS. n.

[q] The wood of the county. Gale, MS. n.

[r] who delineate the pedigree of the greves of the great family of Mansfield in Germany. Holland.

[s] A. D. 616, Flor. Worc. p. 231.

[t] being deſcended from one of the heirs of Creſſy, and formerly from an heir of Lexinton.

reader's reader's while to turn to our hiſtories) that his glory will never die. Six miles weſt hence is Workenſop, remarkable for the great quantity of liquorice it produces, and for the houſe of the earl of Shrewſbury, built in our time by George Talbot earl of Shrewſbury, with a magnificence worthy ſuch an earl, and ſuperior to envy. It came with a fine eſtate to the Talbots from the Lovetofts, its firſt lords under the Normans, by the Furnivalls and Nevilles. Of theſe W. Lovetoft t. Henry I. founded a monaſtery here, whoſe ruins I ſaw on the eaſt ſide of the town among very pleaſant meads: the weſt end of the church ſtill remains with two lofty towers. A little higher up on the ſame river I ſaw Blithe, a famous market town, which I was told had been fortified with a caſtle by Bulley, or Buſley, a Norman nobleman, but ſcarce any traces of it appear at preſent; ſuch deſtruction does time make. A little monaſtery was founded here by Roger Buſly and Fulk de Liſicurs, and this is almoſt the laſt town of Nottinghamſhire to the north, except Scroby, a little town belonging to the archbiſhop of York, on the very edge of the county.

William ſurnamed the Conqueror, appointed his baſtard* ſon William Peverell governor of this county, with the title not of earl but of lord of Nottingham. He had a ſon who died before his father, and left a ſon of the ſame ſurname, whom Henry II. deprived of his inheritance for poiſoning Ranulph earl of Cheſter. About that time Robert de Ferrars who plundered Nottingham, in his grant to the church of Tutteſbury, aſſumes this title, "Robert the younger earl of Nottingham." But afterwards king Richard I. gave and confirmed the county and caſtle of Nottingham with the whole honour of Peverell to his brother John†. Long after Richard II.[u] conferred this title on John de Mowbray, who dying young without iſſue was ſucceeded by his brother Thomas[x] created by Richard II. earl marſhal [for life] and duke of Norfolk, and ſoon after baniſhed. He had Thomas earl marſhall beheaded by Henry IV.[y] and John Mowbray[z], who, as alſo his ſon[a] and grandſon[b], were both dukes of Norfolk and earls of Nottingham. But their male line failing, after Richard duke of York, infant ſon of Edward IV. had held the title of Nottingham with others a little while, Richard III. honoured with this title William marquis of Barkley[c], and Henry VIII. his natural ſon Henry Fitzroy, both of whom departed this life without iſſue. Lately in 1597 queen Elizabeth by ſolemn inveſtiture conferred the ſame title on Charles Howard high admiral of England, deſcended from the Mowbrays, for his gallant and faithful ſervices, as the patent of creation ſets forth, in the ſea fight againſt the Spaniards 1587, and at the taking of Cales 1596, where he had the chief command at ſea as the earl of Eſſex had at land.

In this county are 168 pariſh churches.

* Liber mon. Linton. M. Paris, p. 126.

† M. Paris, p. 204. Hoveden, p. 373. b. Inq. 6 R. II.

[u] On the day of his coronation. (Dugd. Bar. I. 128.) The patent of creation of John de Mowbray earl of Nottingham (1 R. II. 43.) has this remarkable grant in it, that the lands whereof he was then ſeiſed or ſhould afterwards purchaſe, ſhould be held ſub honore comitali, and as parcel of his earldom. (Selden's Tit. of Hon. Part II. c. 5. p. 665.) He died 6 R. II.

[x] He was created earl of Nottingham, and dying at Venice of the plague 1 Henry IV. was buried in York minſter. (Dugd. I. 128-9.) He was the firſt whom we find honoured by charter with the tile of marſhal, yet the title of comes mariſcallus frequently occurs in the records preceding that time. (ſee Selden ubi ſup. & pag. ſeq.) The king in parliament reciting this grant confines it to him and his heirs male by Carr. 20 R. II. m. 3. Cart. 9 R. II. n. 17. printed in Selden's Tit. of Hon. Part II. c. 3. p. 682.

[y] 6 H. IV. (Dugd. Ib. 130.)

[z] He died 7 Henry VI. and was buried in the Charterhouſe in the iſle of Axholme with his father, who was brought from Venice. (Ib.)

[a] John, who died 1 E. IV. and was buried at Thetford. (Ib. 131.)

[b] John, who died 15 E. IV. and was buried at Thetford. (Ib.)

[c] He died 7 H. VII. without iſſue, and was buried in the Auſtin friars, London. Vincent on Brook, p. 393.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Nottingham is 50 miles long from north to ſouth, 25 broad from eaſt to weſt, and about 140 in circumference; and contains 480,000 acres, four boroughs, and nine market towns, 168 pariſhes, and about 150,300 inhabitants. It is divided into eight hundreds, or rather ſix wapentakes, and two liberties.

The principal landholders in this county at the making of Domeſday ſurvey were, the king, earls Alan, Hugh, Moriton; the archbiſhop of York, biſhops of Lincoln and Bayeux; abbey of Peterburgh; Roger de Buſli, William Peverel, Walter de Aincurt, Goisfrid, Alſelin, Ralph Fitz Hubert, Ralph de Limeſi, Ralph de Burun, Roger of Poictou, Gilbert de Gand, Gilbert Tiſon, Goisfrid de Wirce, Ilbert de Laci, Berenger de Todeni, Hugh Fitz Baldric, Hugh de Grentmaiſnil, Henry de Fereires, Robert Malet, Durand Malet, Oſbern Fitz Richard, Robert Fitz William, and others.

Stanford. Stanford has a handſome church, rebuilt by the patron Thomas Lewes, eſq; [a] and a handſome manſion-houſe lately built by Charles Vere Daſhwood, eſq; the preſent owner.

Cliſton. The Cliftons have been ſeated at Clifton ever ſince Henry III. and held lands here long before. They have been eminent for above ſix centuries, and have many monuments in the church [a]. Of this family ſir Gervaſe was created a baronet 9 James I. Their deſcendants ſtill reſide here. A branch of this family, which ended in a daughter, were ſometime barons Clifton of Leighton-Bromſwold in Huntingdonſhire, where they had a ſtately houſe, now pulled down [b]. At Clifton was a ſmall college for a warden and three prieſts, founded by ſir Gervaſe Clifton, valued at £. 30. per annum [c]. The approach to this houſe is by a long avenue, one ſide of which is planted on a ſteep bank, at the foot of which runs the Trent. The preſent ſir Gervaſe had begun to moderniſe his houſe, but left off on the ſudden death of his lady 1780 [d].

Newſted. "A little or I cam to the end of Shirwood I left "on the right hand the ruines of Newſted priory "of canons [e]."

Henry II. founded a houſe of black canons at Newſtede about 1170, valued at £. 167 [f]. The ſite was granted at the diſſolution to ſir John Byron, whoſe grandſon John was created lord Byron 19 Charles I. and dying 1652, was ſucceeded by his brother Richard. He 1679 by his ſon William, and he 1695 by his ſon William: he 1736 by his ſon William, 5th and preſent lord. The family ſeat here had a good collection of old portraits and other paintings, which have been lately ſold, and the houſe diſmantled and left to decay, with the beautiful weſt front of the priory church adjoining. The park was once finely wooded, but the preſent owner, in ſpite to his ſon, has cut down all the oaks. There is a good piece of water with a caſcade, but ſtripped of its ſurrounding groves its beauty is gone.

Felle. At Felley was a priory of black canons, valued at £. 40. [g]

Anne. Anneſley, the ſeat of an antient family of that name from the time of Henry III. to that of Henry VI. when the heireſs of the family married George Chaworth, to whoſe deſcendants it belongs now [h].

Beau. In Greſley park was Beauvale Carthuſian abbey, founded by Nicholas Cantilupe 17 Edward III. valued at £. 196. [i] Greſley caſtle was embattled by the founder at the ſame time [k].

Hou. Houghton gave birth to John Hollis firſt earl of Clare of that name, who died 1637, and his 2d ſon and ſucceſſor born here 1597, died 1680 [l].

Wol. Wollaton came by marriage of ſir Francis Willoughby's daughter Bridget to ſir Percival Willoughby of Kent, whoſe grandſon Francis was our great ornithologiſt of S. Muſkam in this county, who died 1672, and his younger ſon Thomas was created lord Middleton 10 Anne, 1711. He died 1729, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Francis, who dying 1758, was ſucceeded by his ſon and nameſake: he 1774 by his brother Thomas, and he 1781 by his couſin-german, Henry Willoughby of Birdſall in Yorkſhire, eſq; the 5th and preſent lord, the owner of this ſtately manſion, which ſtanding on a knoll makes a magnificent appearance at conſiderable diſtances, being ſquare with a ſquare tower at each corner adorned with pinnacles [m]. Hemlock ſtone, on the road a little beyond it, is probably remains of a quarry [n].

Mr. Camden in his firſt edition rather pays this houſe and builder a compliment, but in his laſt cenſures his motive for building; for by the time the houſe was finiſhed it had ſunk three lordſhips [o]. Mr. Bray has branded the inhoſpitable refuſal of the preſent owner to let it be ſeen even in his abſence [p].

Li. "By Newſted runnith Line river that cometh after "to Lincton abbey, and thens to Notingham, and a "little beneth Notingham into Trent [q]."

L. Lenton abbey was founded before 1108 ſubject to the great foreign abbey of Cluny. The monks got it made denizon 16 Richard II. and it was valued at £. 329. 15s. 10d. [r]. Here was a houſe of Carmelites, and an hoſpital for ſuch as be troubled with St. Anthony's fire [s]. It is ſcarce worth obſerving that Talbot in Burton on Antoninus, p. 204, took this

[a] G. [a] G. Stukeley, It. Cur. I. 150. Deering's Hiſt. of Nottingham, 224. Thoroton, 52—62. where is a view of the houſe.
[b] Mag. Brit. IV. 26. [c] Tan. 412. [d] Bray's Tour, 2d ed. p. 358. [e] Lel. I. 110.
[f] Tan. 405. Thorot. 260. [g] Ib. 407. Thorot. p. 253. [h] Thorot. 251.
[i] Tan. 411. Thorot. 240. [k] Thorot. 239. [l] Ib. 443.
[m] A print of this beautiful and perfect manſion, erected in the reign of Elizabeth, may be ſeen in Thoroton, p. 222.
[n] Stukeley, I. 50. [o] Deering, Apx. 227. [p] P. 360.
[q] Lel. I. 110. [r] Tan. 402. [s] Tan. 410. 411.

place for LINDUM for no other ſhadow of reaſon than the ſimilarity of ſound in the names.

Barton belonged to the lords Grey of Codnor, from whom it paſſed to Henry Sacheverell, whoſe family ſold it 1737 to ſir Robert Clifton. Robert de Hoſe had granted to him in this pariſh by king John lands of the honour of Nottingham to be held by the ſervice of yielding to the king yearly one ſoar hawk [t].

On the oppoſite ſide of the river at Wilford was dug up in the fields a pot full of copper coins.

On the ſame ſide of the river [u] is Flawford, the mother church of Reddington, a large village half a mile weſt from it, which, having a large chapel, the church, which has a lofty ſpire ſteeple, and many antient monuments and croſs-legged figures, is now neglected [v].

Near this is Bunney park, the ſeat of ſir Thomas Parkyns, built by his nameſake a great wreſtler, and author of a treatiſe on that art, to which paſſion his monument and epitaph here alludes [x]. He alſo founded a ſchool in the church-yard, and four rooms at the end for as many poor widows, which his mother endowed, and augmented the vicarage.

North-eaſt from hence is Aſlacton, famous for the birth of archbiſhop Cranmer [y]. "The heir of the "Cranmers, a man ſcant of 40 markes landes by "the year, dwelt there" in Leland's time [z].

"Nottingham is both a large town and well builded "for timber and plaiſter, and ſtandeth ſtately on a "clyming hille. The market place and ſtreet both "for the building on the ſide of it, for the very great "widenes of the ſtreet, and the clene paving of it, "is the moſt fair without exception of all England. "There be three pariſh churches, but the church of "St. Mary is excellent, new, and uniform in work, "and ſo many fair windows in it, that no artificer "can imagine to ſet more there. Southward as to "the water ſide be great cliffs and rocks of ſtones "that be large and very good to build with, and "many houſes ſet on the tops of them, and at the "bottom of them be great caves, where many ſtones "hath been digged out for buildings in the town, "and theſe caves be partly for cellars and ſtorehouſes. "There hath been three houſes of friars as I remember, whereof two ſtood towards the weſt of the "town, and not far from the caſtle. The town hath "been metely well walled with ſtone, and hath had "divers gates. Much of the wall is now down, and "the gates, ſaving two or three. The caſtle ſtands "on a rokky hill on the weſt ſide of the town, and "the river Line goeth by the roots of it. There is "great likelyhood that it was buiided of ſtones taken "out of the rock, and the great ditches of it. The "baſe court is large and metely ſtrong, and a ſtately "bridge is there with pillars bearing beaſts and giants "over the ditch into the ſecond ward. Much part of "the weſt ſide of the inner wall as the hall, and other "things be in ruins. The eaſt ſide is ſtrong and "well toured, and ſo is the ſouth ſide, but the moſt "beautiful part and gallant building for lodgings is "on the north ſide, where Edward IV. began a "right ſumptuous piece of ſtone work, of the which "he clerely finiſhed one excellent goodly tower of "three heights in building, and brought up the "other part likewiſe from the foundations with ſtone "and marvellous fair compaſſid windows to laying "of the firſt ſoyl for chamber, and there left. Then "king Richard his brother, as I have heard, forced "up upon that work another piece of one loft of "timber making round windows alſo of timber to the "proportion of the aforeſaid windows of ſtone, "a good foundation for the new timbre windows. "The dungeon, or keep, ſtands by ſouth and eaſt, "is exceeding ſtrong & natura loci & opere. There "is an old fair chapel, and a well of a great depth, "and a cochlea, with a turret over it, where the "keepers ſay king Edward III's band came up "through the rock, and took earl Mortimer priſoner. "There is yet a fair ſtair to go down by the rock to "the ripe of Line. There be divers buildings "between this dungeon and the inner court of the "caſtle, and there goeth alſo down a ſtair into the "ground where Davy king of Scotts, as the caſtel-"lanes ſay, was kept a priſoner. I marked in all "three chapels in the caſtle, and three wells. The "little river of Line, and the great ſtream of Trent "come near together in the medow on the ſouth ſide "of the town, and when any land waters come down, "much of the vale and the medows there be over-"flown [a]." The only religious foundations in this town were St. John's hoſpital, t. John, valued at £. 4. 13*s*. [b] St. Leonard's t. Henry III. a third t. Richard II. [c] Grey friars, founded by Henry III. 1250 [d]. Carmelites about 1276 [e]. An hoſpital founded by John Plumptree t. Richard II. ſtill ſubſiſting [f]. An almſhouſe for 12 poor, built by Henry Stanley, eſq; and endowed with £. 40. per annum [g]. and ſeven others [h]. A freeſchool founded 1513 [i].

This town, which is fair, well-built and populous, once had a conſiderable woollen manufactory, and dealt much in malting and tanning; but its principal trade now is frame-work knitting of ſtockings, &c. firſt introduced in the cloſe of the 16th century, by one William Lee of this country, who not meeting with the encouragement he expected, went to France with ſeveral of his workmen on the invitation of Henry IV. But the death of that prince and the troubles that enſued preventing his ſucceſs, he died there, and moſt of his men returned to England [k]. It is an antient borough, governed firſt by a bailiff. Edward I. granted a mayor.

Mr. Camden, in relating this ſtory of Mortimer's being ſeized in the caſtle and condemned, ſeems to have taken much of it from hearſay, which led him into diverſe miſtakes. For, 1, he ſays that Mortimer's Hole was ſo called, becauſe Mortimer abſconded in it, being afraid of himſelf out of a conſciouſneſs of his guilt. But Mortimer could have no reaſon to hide himſelf in any den or hole under the caſtle, he being abſolute poſſeſſor of it, and was ſo cautious as to have the keys of the caſtle continually in his keeping. But 5 Edward III. ſir William Montacute, with ſir Humphry de Bohun, &c. found means in the dead of the night to get into the caſtle by a way under ground, which through a rock paſſes by ſtairs up to the keep, ever ſince called Mortimer's Hole; and entering a room next to the queen's lodging found the earl,

[t] Cartular. St. Edm. Burg. quoted in Jacob's Law Dict.
[u] Deering Appx. 288.
[v] G.
[x] Deering, 231.
[y] G. Thoroton, 137.
[z] I. 113.
[a] Leſ. I. 110. 113.
[b] Tan. 409.
[c] Ib.
[d] Ib. Deer. 52.
[e] Tan. 410. Deer. 53.
[f] Tan. 412. Deer. 145.
[g] Deer. 151.
[h] Ib. 152, &c.
[i] Ib. 154.
[k] Ib. 91. 99.

with

with Henry Burwaſh biſhop of Lincoln, and others, who for a while made reſiſtance; but were ſoon overpowered. Being thus in cuſtody, he was ſent up to London to be tried in parliament, which was to begin Nov. 27, and was condemned, 1, for procuring the death of Edward II. 2. That when he was ſent againſt the Scots, and might have ſubdued them, he ſuffered himſelf to be bribed by the lord James Douglas with twenty thouſand pounds to let the Scots eſcape, and conclude a peace with them, which is what Mr. Camden calls betraying his country to the Scots [i]. But the hole is nothing more than a private paſſage to the caſtle by a continued ſtair-caſe or deſcent to the foot of the hill without any room or ſitting-place, and with holes for light or as loops. It rather took its name from Edward III's entering by it and ſurpriſing Mortimer. The ſouth ſide of the rock on which the caſtle ſtands overhanging the river Leen, is 133 feet perpendicular [m]. Henry III. directed the ſheriff of Nottingham to cauſe the hiſtory of Alexander to be painted in the queen's chamber here [n]. Much of the caſtle was pulled down by the earls of Rutland, who were governors of it in the 16th century [o]. The ſtatute 27 Henry VIII. c. 1. is for re-edifying the town [o]. Charles I. ſet up his ſtandard Aug. 22, 1642, in a cloſe ſince called Nevil's cloſe without the caſtle to the north [p]. Shortly after it became a garriſon for the parliament, who, at the end of the war, gave orders to pull down the caſtle. At the Reſtoration George Villiers duke of Buckingham, whoſe mother was only daughter and heir to Francis earl of Rutland, ſold it to William Cavendiſh, marquis and afterwards duke of Newcaſtle, who, in his 82d year, 1674, began, and his ſon and ſucceſſor finiſhed, a noble houſe, at the expence of £. 14000. which is the ſeat of his ſucceſſors dukes of Newcaſtle [q]. His ſtatue on horſeback ſtands in the centre of the front towards the town, cut out of a ſingle block of white marble, bronght from Donington in Leiceſterſhire, by one Wilſon, who married lady Putſey, who having a conſiderable fortune got him a knighthood, but at her death left him to purſue his original trade again [r]. The late duke making ſome additional outbuildings 1720, cauſed the door of the dungeon to be opened, and the figures mentioned by Mr. Camden to be ſought for, but the place was too full of rubbiſh. To this ſeat adjoins a park of above 100 acres. In it are cut in the rock facing the river certain cells as of a hermitage, which Dr. Stukeley [s] would fain make Britiſh [t]. Dr. Salmon [u] ſuppoſes them Britiſh ſtore-houſes for grain. Many other excavations have been found in other parts of the rock. Dr. Gale [x] places GAUSENNÆ of Antoninus at Nottingham, and ſuppoſes the Picts caves Roman. Baxter puts it at Grantham, Stukeley [y] at Great Paunton, Horſley [z] at Ancaſter, Salmon [a] at Brough hill in Lincolnſhire, Deering [b] at W. Bridgeford overagainſt Nottingham near Wilford beforementioned. On the hill, eaſt of St. Anne's well is a kind of labyrinth cut in the turf called the Shepherd's race, which Dr. Stukeley ſuppoſes Roman, but which may be of later date [c]. It is eighteen yards ſquare, having at the angles four oval projections facing the four cardinal points, the diſtance from the extremes of which is 34 yards. There is another ſquare, and ſmaller at Clifton, four miles from Nottingham [d]. Both are engraved Pl. IX. fig. 1. 2. where fig. 4 is that behind the town of Saffron Walden in Eſſex.

Nottingham bridge was antiently called Heithebithe bridge [e].

Holme Pierrepont has belonged ever ſince the reign of Edward I. to the Pierreponts, whoſe ſeat here exhibited by Dr. Thoroton, p. 88. has been for the moſt part pulled down, but enough left to ſerve the family, whoſe monuments are in the church. Robert Pierrepont was created 3 Charles I. baron Pierrepont of this place, and viſcount Newark, and next year earl of Kingſton upon Hull. He was ſlain as he was conveying over the Humber by an accidental ſhot fired by the king's party, who purſued to recover him 1643. His ſon Henry was created marquis of Dorcheſter, 1645, 20 Charles I. and dying 1680, was ſucceeded in the earldom by his great nephew Robert, who dying 1682, was ſucceeded by his brother William, and he 1690, by his brother Evelyn, who was created duke of Kingſton, and dying 1725, was ſucceeded by his grandſon Evelyn, who dying 1773, the title is extinct. His ducheſs was, 1776, tried by the houſe of peers, and convicted of bigamy in marrying him during the life of her former husband the late earl of Briſtol. Another branch of this family had the title of baron Pierrepont of Ardglas in Ireland, 1703, and of Stanhope, co. Bucks, 1714, both which expired with him the year following. In the church here is buried the poet Oldham 1682 [f]. Holme Pierr

At E. Bridgeford Horſley [g] places the MARGIDUNUM of Antoninus. Here are the remains of a ſpring called the Oldwark ſpring. The field in which part of the camp lies is called Burrow Field weſt of the road, in which foundations, coins, urns, and bricks have been found. and here is Caſtle hill cloſe. A ſilver coin of Veſpaſian was ploughed up here, and others are often found. It is about eight miles from Willoughby [h]. Dr. Gale [i] and Stukeley [k] bring AD PONTEM here, and Salmon [l] entirely abandons it. Dr. Thoroton [m] controverts Mr. Camden's opinion of its being built by Edward the elder, and refers his buildings to ſome within Nottingham on the ſouth ſide of Trent. E. Bridgeford Margidunum

A Cotton MS. Tit. A. XXIV. ſays Bridgeford was built by the famous lady of Mercia to repel the violence of the Danes.

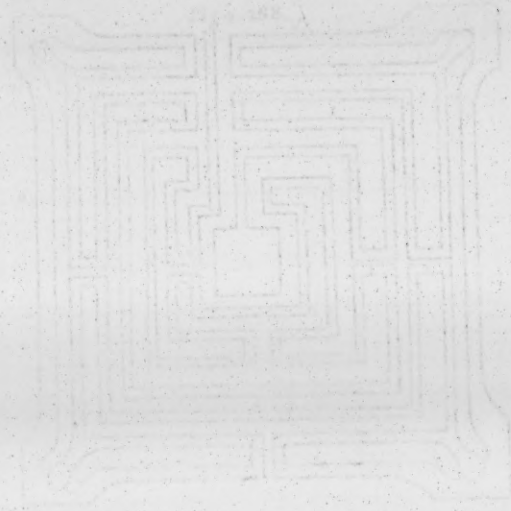
Willoughby on the Would is the VERNOMETUM, or VEROMETUM of Antoninus, according to Horſley [n] here being by tradition ruins of an old town called Long Billington. Gale [o] and Stukeley [p] place Margidunum here. On the Willoughby ſide of the road is a tumulus called Croſs hill. The old ſite is in a field called Herrings, or the Black field, and was very extenſive. Many coins, pavements, and other antiquities, have been found here. In the town is a handſome croſs five yards high, of one ſtone. Willoughby on the Would Vernometum

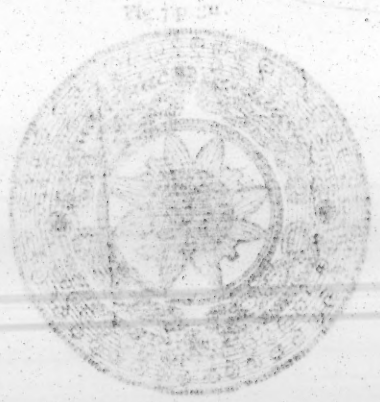
Mr. Welby of Rameby told Dr. Stukeley they often find urns there in digging for ſtone.

Shelford houſe the ſeat of the Stanhopes from the time of Henry VIII. was in the civil war made a garriſon for the king commanded by col. Philip Stan- Shelford

[i] Magn. Brit. p. 9. [k] Ib. [m] Deering, 171. [o] Deer. 247. [p] Ib. 177. [q] Ib. 185. 187. [r] Ib. 186, 187. [s] G. [t] Deering 188. 190. [u] New Survey, p. 304. [x] Anton. 95, 96. [y] It. I. 80. [z] Brit. Rom. 432. [a] New Survey, p. 259. [b] App. 286. [c] Deering, 75. [d] Hutchins I. 100. [e] MS. Cott. Tit. A. XXIV. [f] Deer. 233. [g] P. 438. [h] G. Stuk. I. 100. 103. [i] Anton. 100. [l] P. 294. [n] P. 437. [o] P. 101. [p] Ib. [s] P. 62.

hope,





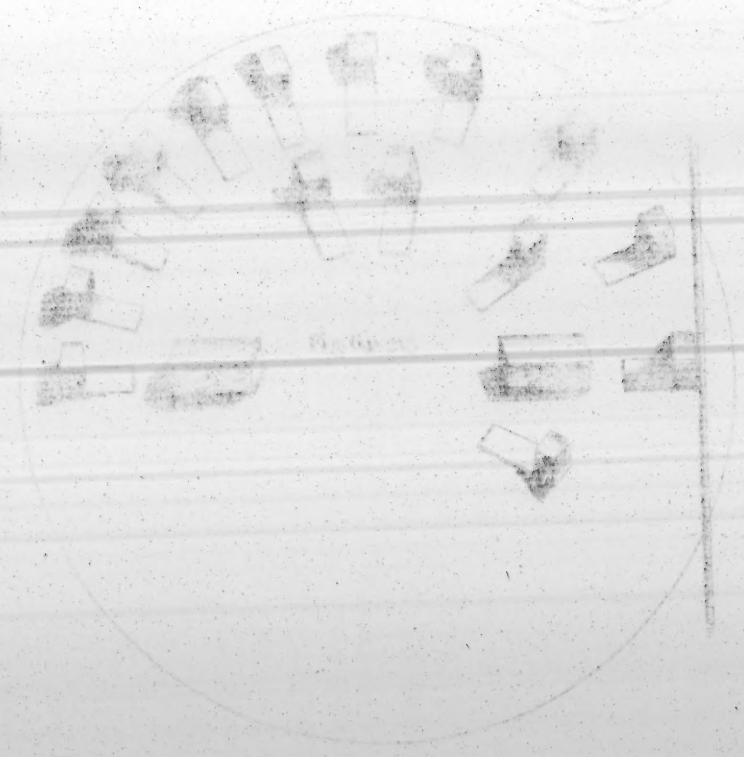


Fig. 8.

Fig. 9.

P. 334.

Fig.8.

Fig.9.

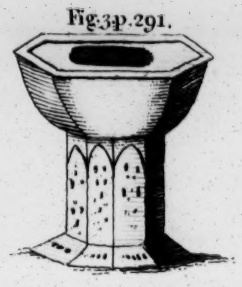

Fig.3.p.291.

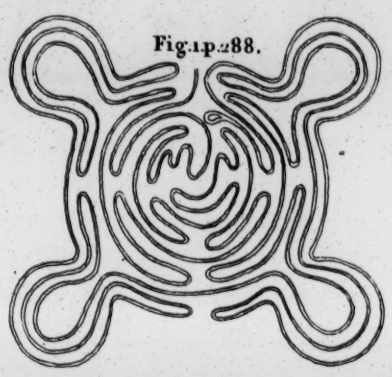

Fig.1.p.288.

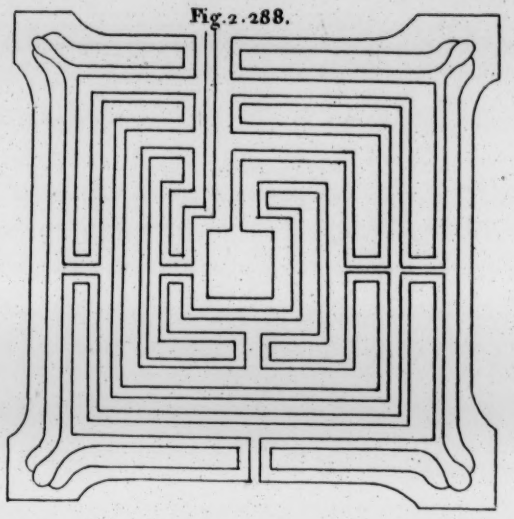

Fig.2.288.

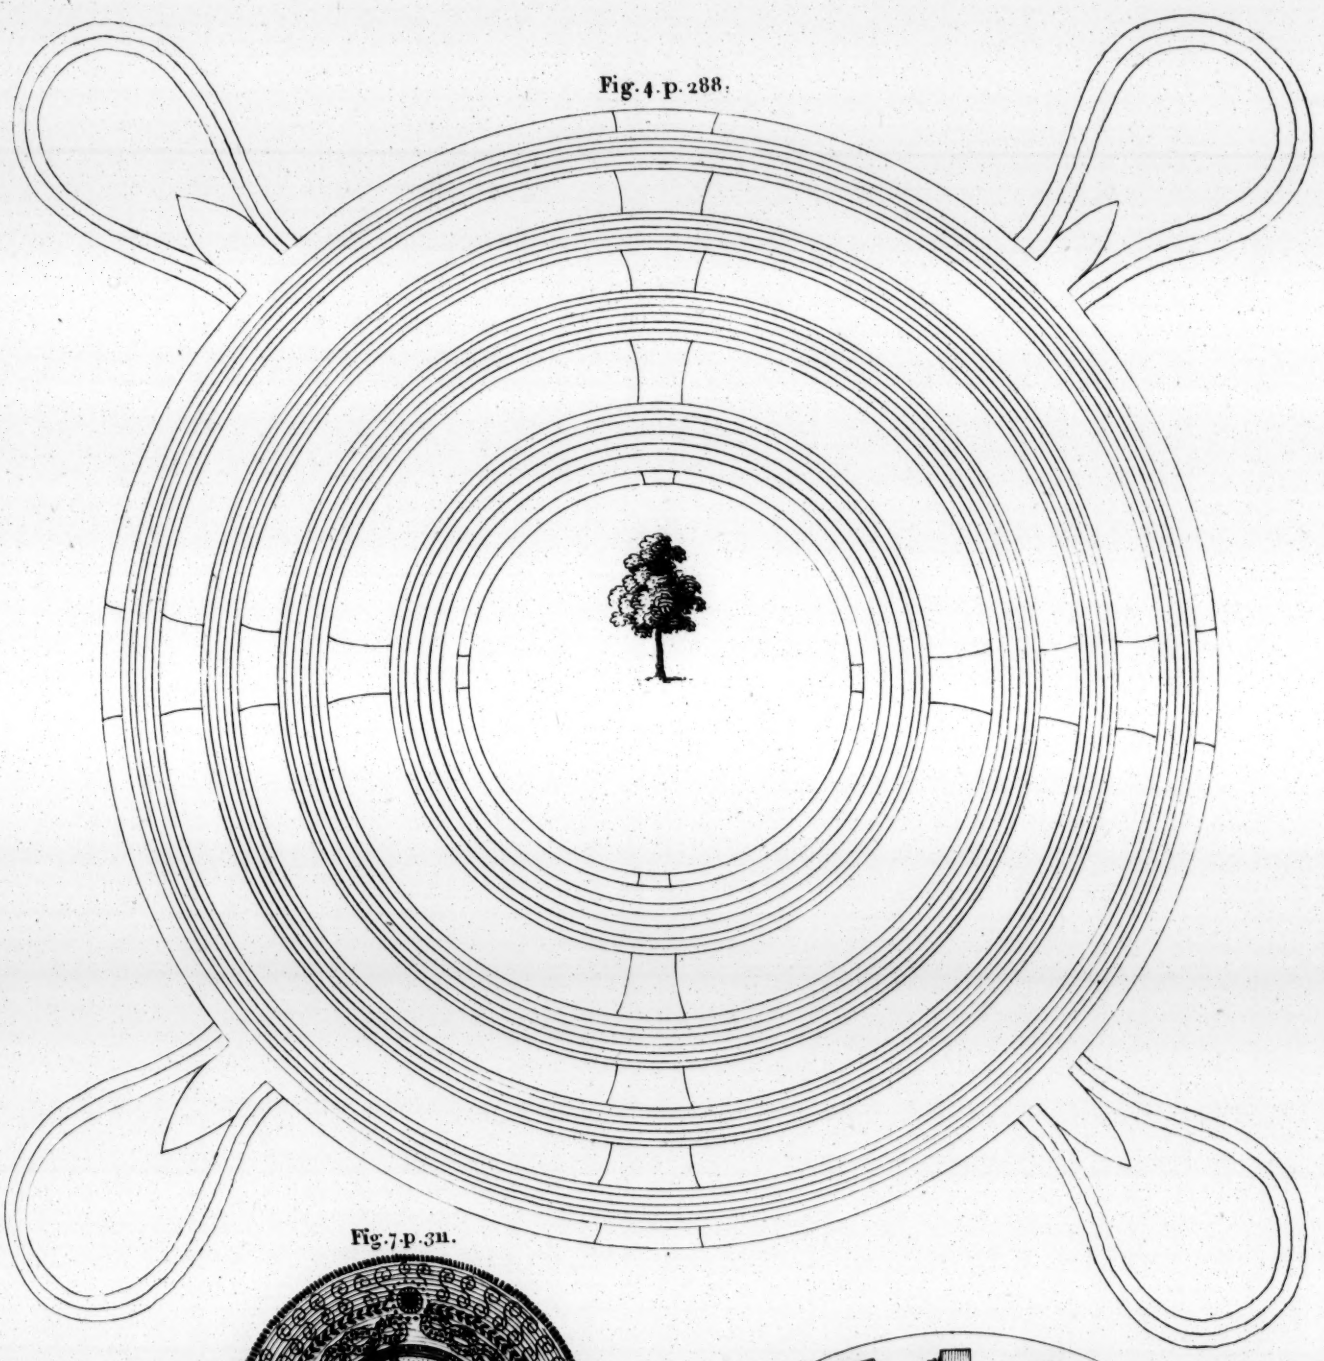

Fig.4.p.288.

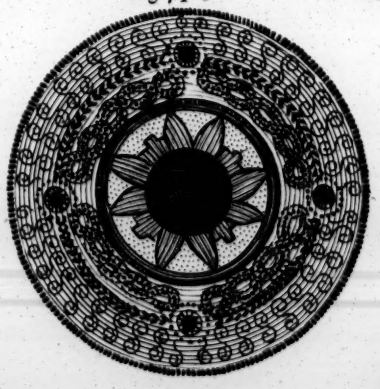

Fig.7.p.311.

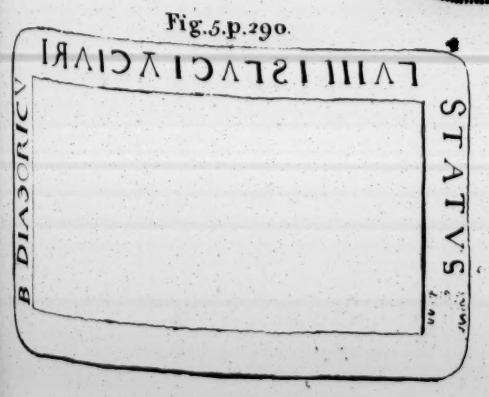

Fig.5.p.290.

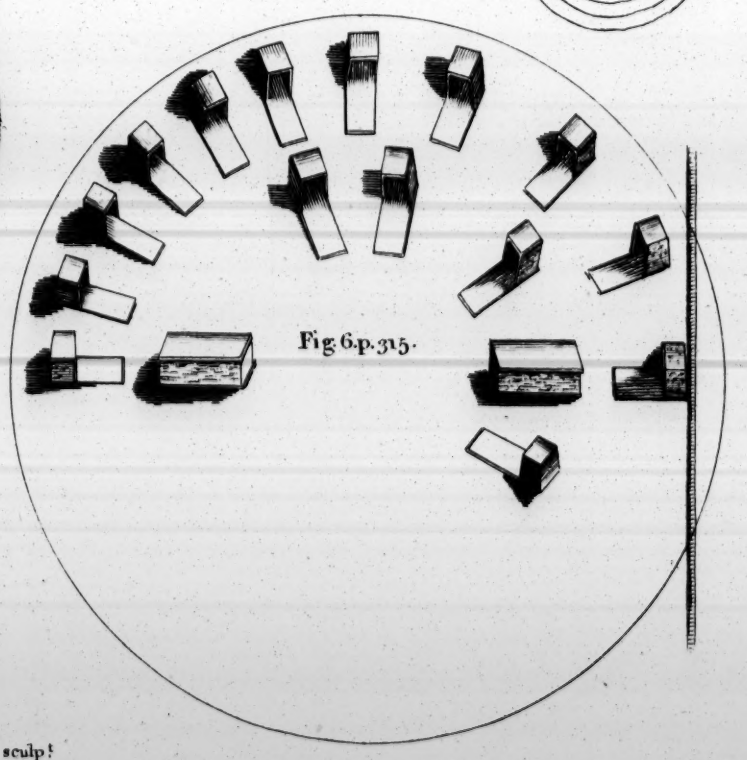

Fig.6.p.315.

F. Cary sculp!

hope, younger ſon of Philip firſt earl of Cheſterfield, and being taken by ſtorm, he and many of his ſoldiers were ſlain, and the houſe afterwards burnt[s]. It was rebuilt by one of the family, and is the property of the preſent earl of Cheſterfield, entirely out of repair, and inhabited by a farmer[q]. Here was a priory of Auſtin canons founded by Ralph Hanſelyn t. Henry II. valued at £. 116.[r] It was the ſeat of the lord Randolphs[s].

At Barton, four miles from Nottingham, is a camp, by Mr. Aubrey[t] ſuppoſed to be Britiſh. It is called Brent's hill. On the top of the hill were fortifications levelled long before his time. On the ſide of the hill the works appear like waves or ploughed lands one above another in number 14 or 15, about half a mile long. Theſe works croſs from the bottom of the hill. The fortification was on the top, where coins have been found. In another place he calls this camp Britiſh hill, and places it between Clifton and Barton.

At Sibthorpe was a college founded by Thomas de Sibthorpe, rector of Beckingham, co. Lincoln, valued at £. 25.[u] The late archbiſhop Secker was a native of this place.

At Flintham near to the Roman Foſs, have been found ſeveral urns and coins.

Flintham hall in the reign of Elizabeth was the ſeat of Hoſe, or Huſſey, afterwards of Hacker and Woolhouſe, from whom it came to the family of Diſney, and is now the property of Lewis Diſney-Fytche, eſq; of Danbury-place in Eſſex, to whom alſo belongs a great part of that fine planted cliff in this pariſh which adjoins to the Trent, and conſtitutes the moſt beautiful part of the greatly admired ride between Newark and Nottingham, and was the ſubject of biſhop Corbett's verſe in his Iter Boreale.

At Bingham, a ſmall market town, was a college, or gild, valued at £. 4.[x]

At Stoke by Newark, now the eſtate and reſidence of ſir George Smith-Bromley, bart. was a very antient hoſpital of St. Leonard, valued at £. 9. refounded 5 and 6 Philip and Mary, diſſolved t. Elizabeth[y]. Here was born the learned John Lightfoot 1602, who died 1675.

Francis viſcount Lovel, one of the moſt eminent perſonages of his time, is well known to have been with the earl of Lincoln and the reſt of that party at the battle of Stoke near Newark upon Trent, in the third of Henry the ſeventh, where it is ſaid by ſome that he was ſlain. But certain it is that he attempted to make his eſcape out of that fight, being ſeen endeavouring on horſeback to ſwim that river; after which the hiſtorians make no farther mention of him, but that there was a ſtrong rumour that he for the preſent preſerved his life by retiring to ſome ſecret place, where he was ſtarved to death by the treachery or neglect of thoſe in whom he confided. This report ſeems to be confirmed in a very particular manner. For the houſe of Minſter Lovel in Oxfordſhire, which belonged to this lord, being, not many years ago, pulled down, in a vault was found the body of a man, in very rich cloathing, ſeated in a chair, with a table and a maſs book before him. The body was entire when the workmen entered, but upon admiſſion of the air ſoon fell to duſt.

From hence we may reaſonably conclude, that it was the fate of this unhappy nobleman, to have retired to his own houſe after the battle before mentioned, and there to have truſted himſelf to ſome ſervant, by whom he was there immured, and afterwards neglected, either through treachery or fear, or ſome accident which befel that ſervant[z].

At Gonnalſton, an hoſpital founded by William Heriz t. Henry III. ſtill ſubſiſts[a].

Thurgarton. On the oppoſite ſide of the river to Stoke, at Thurgarton, was an Auſtin priory, founded by Ralph Deincourt about 1130, valued at £. 25. per annum.[b] "Thurgoton village and priory of black canons a late "ſuppreſſed[c]." Thurgaton is now the ſeat of John Gilbert-Cooper, eſq; as leſſee to Trinity college in Cambridge. Fiſherton adjoining had a priory of black canons from this houſe[d]. Fiſherton.

